what to buy: The compilation Precious Melodies ♪♪♪♪♪ (Ice, 1994, reissue prod. Eddy Grant) collects 20 of Melody's better-known hits, including some of the insults he traded with calypso great Sparrow during the mid-1950s. Melody has a warm, playful tenor, perfectly suited to his woeful tales of love.

what to buy next: Lola ♪♪♪♪♪ (B's, 1982, prod. Earl Rodney), one of Melody's last records, is a satisfying and soulful soca romp.

worth searching for: Melody passed early in the CD revolution, leaving his oeuvre currently awaiting large-scale reissue. Most of his work was put out in limited numbers by the indie calypso labels in New York, but Cook Records was recently acquired by the Smithsonian Institution, so his Cook albums, Calypso 1962, Again!! and Through the Looking Glass, may soon be available on CD. If you can't wait, the Smithsonian/Folkways office will make you a custom CD of these titles. Contact them at www.si.edu/folkways for details.

influences:
◀◀ Growling Tiger, Atilla, Roaring Lion ▶▶ Machel Montano, Taxi, Nelson

j. poet

Los Amigos Invisibles

Latin jazz/Brazilian dance/space-age bachelor pop

Formed 1995, in Caracas, Venezuela. Based in Venezuela.

Armando Figueredo, keyboards; Juan Manuel Roura, drums; Julio Briceno, vocals; Jose Luis Pardo, guitars; Jose Rafael Torres, bass; Mauricio Arcas, percussion. (All members are from Venezuela.)

The amazing thing about the Venezuelan sextet Los Amigos Invisibles is how cohesive it sounds, even when a hard-funk electric-piano dance song leads into a lounge-y instrumental with soft percussion and murmured vocals. A bunch of fun-loving young men who were frustrated when the Venuezelan discos closed after the oil-booming '70s, the Amigos like their funk tongue-in-cheek (or tongue-out-of-mouth: The cover photo of the band's debut has all six members unashamedly ogling a woman in a bikini near a hotel pool). Like fellow international lounge-funk artist Dimitri from Paris, the more disparate elements they mix together, the more everything fits into a tinkly, catchy sound. "Otra Vez" begins as a smoky bossa-nova ballad, and occasionally explodes as sharply as the James Brown–style opening song, "Ultra-Funk."

what's available: The band's debut, The New Sound of the Venezuelan Gozadera ♪♪♪♪ (Luaka Bop/Warner Bros., 1998, prod. Andres Levin), is primo space-age bachelor-pad music—complete with congas and bongos. Bands like Combustible Edison have been trying to achieve this sound, which attempts to capture the feel of The Jetsons in music, for years. But a Latin sense of humor is more effective than an American sense of kitsch, and the Amigos' party spirit turns "El Disco Anal" into the dance workout the title implies, and "Otra Vez" into a spacey, high-tech instrumental.

influences:

⏮ Combustible Edison, Antonio Carlos Jobim, Astrud Gilberto, James Brown, Juan Garcia Esquivel, Perez Prado, Xavier Cugat

Steve Knopper

Los Camperos de Valles

Sones de Huasteca

Formed 1972, in Ciudad Valles, San Luis Potosí, Mexico. Based in Huasteca, Mexico.

Heliodoro Copado, violin; Marcos Hernández, guitarra quinta, vocals; Gregorio Solano, jarana, vocals. (All members are from Mexico.)

Los Camperos de Valles play music for dancing. For years they made extra income by performing at various civic and private functions, but their recordings have spread their music around the world. Now they add to that local cash flow with tours that have taken them from their home base in Mexico's Huasteca region the United States and Europe. While it may be tempting to describe their music as a downsized version of mariachi, that would be doing a disservice to the listener as well as the band. Los Camperos de Valles play fiery huapango dance music, specifically a type of son (Mexican style) peculiar to Huasteca. It features Heliodoro Copado's violin riffs floating above the rhythms of Hernández's guitarra quinta (similar in size to the bajo sexto 12-string bass used in Tex-Mex groups) and Gregorio Solano's jarana, a smaller six-stringed guitar. Soaring with the violin are high falsetto vocals from Marcos Hernández and Solano telling tales grounded in myth and village realities.

what's available: At present there are only two albums available by Los Camperos de Valles, El Triunfo ♪♪♪♪♪ (Corasón/Música Tradicional, 1992, prod. Eduardo Llerenas) and The Muse ♪♪♪♪½ (Discos Corasón, 1995, prod. Eduardo Llerenas). Both are very well recorded and played; El Triunfo has a wider range of material while the music on The Muse is constructed around lyrics by local legend and spinner of tales, Serapio "El Güero" Nieto.

influences:

⏮ Serapio "El Güero" Nieto, Los Cantores del Pánuco

⏭ Perla Tamaulipeca, Los Caimanes

Garaud MacTaggart

Los de Abajo

Ska, rock en Español, worldbeat, salsa, cumbia, funk, Mexican Formed 1992, in Mexico City, Mexico. Based in Mexico City, Mexico.

Liber Terán, vocals; Yocupitzio Arrellano, drums; Carlos Cuevas, keyboards; Carlos Cortez, bass; Gabriel Elias, percussion; Vladimir Garnica, guitar; Damián Portugal, saxophone. (All members are from Mexico.)

Los de Abajo came together by way of both the musical fusion increasingly appealing to young Latin listeners and the ideological melange of contemporary Mexican politics. The name of the band—which it took from a modern novel about a footsoldier's political disillusionment—reflects its members' beliefs that change must come from below. After studies at Mexico's National University, the gang's first thought was simply to put together a ska/rock band. But their focus soon became using rhythm and lyrics as tools to comment on and help change what they see as a corrupt society and government. This led them to become involved in political theater as well as musical events. "We're not a mosaic but a kaleidoscope of Mexican life," says drummer Yocupitzio Arrellano.

what's available: Los de Abajo ♪♪♪♪½ (Luaka Bop, 1998, prod. Greg Ladanyi, Hans Mues) shows the group's ability to marry lyrics of pointed social commentary to highly danceable and listenable tunes. The subject matter puts it outside the mainstream of rock in Mexico itself, but this international release is exposing the group's music to a wider audience.

worth searching for: Before signing with Luaka Bop, Los de Abajo produced two self-released cassettes which it sold at concerts in Mexico.

influences:

⏮ Ruben Blades, Willie Colon

Kerry Dexter

los fabulosos cadillacs

Los Fabulosos Cadillacs

Ska, rock en Español

Formed c. 1984, in Buenos Aires, Argentina. Based in Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Gabriel "Vicentico" Fernandez Capello, vocals, accordion; Flavio Cianciarulo, bass; Sergio Rotman, sax; Ariel Sanzo, guitar; Daniel Lozano, trumpet; Fernando Albareda, trombone; Fernando Ricciardi, drums; "Toto" Rotblat, bongos, percussion; Mario Siperman, piano, organ. (All members are from Argentina.)

Los Fabulosos Cadillacs formed while most of the members were still in their teens to play a Latin version of ska, a style then sweeping the world thanks to the "two-tone" groups—the Specials, the Selector, and the Beat. They began touring outside of Argentina in the wake of their first album, Bares y Fondas, released in 1986. Since then they have become one of the leaders of the "rock en Español" movement, a style they may have created themselves with their wide-ranging approach. Unlike many rockers, they have an omnivorous aesthetic more in line with worldbeat bands. Albums have included rap, Brazilian Candomblé drumming, blistering guitar-driven punk, the norteño accordion of Flaco Jimenez, vocals by Celia Cruz, psychedelic pop with Debby Harry, and revolutionary funk with Mick Jones of the Clash and Big Audio Dynamite. After the implosion of the Argentinean economy in the early 1990s the band faced some tough times, but their growing international reputation has enabled them to carry on. In 1994 they took home the Latin Video of the Year award from MTV Latin for "Matador"; in 1998 they won the Latin Rock Grammy for their Fabulosos Calavera album.

what to buy: The band's Grammy signaled their former label to put out the comprehensive double-CD retrospective 20 Grandes Exitos ♪♪♪♪ (Sony Latino, 1998, prod. various). It includes "Matador," a worldwide hit, as well as rare B-sides, demo versions of early songs, and other stuff of interest to fans. The older, single-disc collection Vasos Vacios ♪♪♪♪½ (Sony Latino, 1994) is less comprehensive, but its 17 tracks have far less fat.

what to buy next: The Grammy-winning Fabulosos Calavera ♪♪♪♪ (BMG, 1997, prod. Karl Cameron Porter) shows a band that's willing to explore in any direction the music takes it—hardcore punk, lounge instrumentals, surf guitar, country & western, mariachi, son, blue beat, and more all rub elbows for an exhilarating musical blend.

the rest:

Bares y Fondas ♪♪♪ (Sony Latino, 1986)
El Satanico Dr. Cadillac ♪♪♪ (Sony Latino, 1989)
El Leon ♪♪♪♪ (Sony Latino, 1992)
Rey Azucar ♪♪♪♪½ (Sony Latino, 1995)

influences:

◀◀ Sui Generous

▶▶ Dance Hall Crashers

see also: Celia Cruz, Flaco Jimenez

j. poet

Los Incas /Urubamba

Andean folk music

Formed c. 1952, in Paris, France. Based in Paris, France.

Jorge Milchberg; Carlos Arguedas; Julio Arguedas; Emilio Arteaga Quintana; Jorge Cumbo; Juan Dalera; Alfredo de Robertis. (All members are from Peru.)

The zampoñas—Andean pan pipes—and the charango, the double-stringed Andean "mandolin" made from the shell of an armadillo, are familiar all over the world. The shrill, mournful sound of the pipes seems to touch something deep in the human soul, no matter what language one speaks, and is a perfect compliment to the muted tones of the charango. The roots of Andean music go back to the Inca Empire that once included most of Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, Chile, southern Colombia, and northern Argentina. Traditionally, each set of pipes had only a partial scale, which made any performance a cooperative venture, with a lot of musical give and take that produced interesting harmonies and overtones. Accounts from the time of the Spanish Conquest praised the hypnotic and soothing effects of the music, particularly the way the melody would bounce and shift as it was tossed back and forth between musicians. Stringed instruments were unknown before the arrival of the Spaniards, but the charango fit perfectly with the rhythms of the pan pipe, and since many songs are still composed in languages derived from the unwritten Inca tongue it's impossible to differentiate between Native and imported rhythms, although the influence of Latin jazz can be heard in most of today's professional groups.

During the '50s Paris became the center for a large community of expatriot Bolivians and Peruvians. After establishing themselves there, Jorge Milchberg y Los Incas achieved worldwide fame when the title track of their 1963 album El Condor Pasa became an international hit. In 1965 Paul Simon wrote English lyrics for the tune and invited the band to record it with Simon & Garfunkel. "El Condor Pasa" reached the top of the U.S. charts, and the group, then called Urubamba, after a river in their native Peru, later toured with Simon and played on his first solo album. After almost 50 years of music-making, Los Incas are still going strong and pushing boundaries. "La Chinita," from their recent Alegria album, is, according to musical director and composer Milchberg, "a continuation of an interior journey that explores the gods and demons that have filled the history of our people; an attempt to make music unlimited by frontiers."

what to buy: Even before Paul Simon discovered it, El Condor Pasa ♪♪♪♪♪ (Philips, 1963, prod. Jorge Milchberg) had been a massive seller. This is a beautiful recording of traditional tunes from Argentina, Peru, Bolivia, Venezuela, and even Cuba; an early world-music classic.

what to buy next: Urubamba ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1974, prod. Paul Simon) was recorded before the Paul Simon tour that introduced the band to a new generation of fans. It's just over 20 minutes in length, but every tune is a tiny, sparkling gem.

worth searching for: Alegria ♪♪♪♪♪ (Buda France, prod. Jorge Milchberg) is one of the few Los Incas discs that doesn't include repackagings of "El Condor Pasa" and other early hits. There is no information on the booklet, but it's a bright, compelling listen.

influences:

◀◀ Inca tradition

▶▶ Paul Simon, Susana Baca, Inti-Illimani see also: Paul Simon

j. poet

Los Lobos

Latin/rock fusion, experimental pop

Formed 1974, in Los Angeles, CA, USA. Based in Los Angeles, CA, USA.

David Hidalgo, guitar, vocals; Conrad Lozano, bass, vocals; Cesar Rosas, guitar, vocals; Louie Perez, drums, guitar, vocals; Steve Berlin, saxophone, keyboards (1984–present). (All members are from USA.)

One could argue that "La Bamba" was the best thing that ever happened to Los Lobos. Not because their spunky 1987 cover of the Ritchie Valens hit gave this Los Angeles act its 15 minutes of Top 40 fame, but because fear of being labeled a Chicano version of Sha Na Na challenged them to put their own weird, wobbly spin on the festive fusing of blues, R&B, rockabilly, and Mexican folk music that originally established them as roots-rock torchbearers. Such twangy T-Bone Burnett–produced efforts as By the Light of the Moon and How Will the Wolf Survive? introduced a tight garage band that would be happy if it never left the barrios or the bars. But in 1990, prodded by Larry Hirsch and Mitchell Froom, Los Lobos transformed into one of rock's most experimental acts. Fuzz, feedback, distortion, and dense percussion blended with lead singer David Hidalgo's soulful tenor and Froom's quirky production techniques to create the intoxicating cross-section of rhythms and textures behind The Neighborhood and 1992's jaw-dropping Kiko. The band that once amazed listeners by deftly handling a variety of genres now blurs the lines so much that it's hard to figure out where they're going next, which is something that can't be said about most roots-rock bands. Meanwhile solo projects for Hidalgo and Cesar Rosas, and band offshoots like the critically acclaimed Latin Playboys and the commercially phenomenal Los Super Seven, have multiplied the directions.

what to buy: Of the early efforts, How Will the Wolf Survive? ♪♪♪♪ (Slash/Warner Bros., 1984, prod. T-Bone Burnett, Steve Berlin) holds up the best. It's a roots-rock primer ranging from savage blues ("Don't Worry Baby") to engaging country-rock ("A Matter of Time," "Will the Wolf Survive?") and traditional Tex-Mex ("Serenata Norteña"). The band begins flexing its experimental muscles on The Neighborhood ♪♪♪♪ (Slash/Warner Bros., 1990, prod. Larry Hirsch, Mitchell Froom, Los Lobos), a rich, riveting effort driven by guest drummer Jim Keltner and a mesmerizing mix of the band's raunchiest ("Jenny's Got a Pony," "Georgia Slop") and prettiest ("Little John of God," "Be Still"). All rules go out the window on Kiko ♪♪♪♪♪ (Slash/Warner Bros., 1992, prod. Mitchell Froom, Los Lobos), an ambitious, atmospheric patchwork of the Beatles, Tom Waits, New Orleans jazz, country, and blues that never lapses into avant garde pretension. More important, Hidalgo and Louie Perez's songs—which tackle death (the lovely "Saint behind the Glass"), homelessness ("Angels with Dirty Faces"), child abuse ("Two Janes"), and domestic violence ("Reva's House")—are their hardest hitting to date.

what to buy next: La Pistola y el Corazon ♪♪♪♪ (Slash/Warner Bros., 1988, prod. Los Lobos) is a delightful Spanish-language romp through traditional Mexican music played on accordions, nylon-string guitars, upright bass, bajo sextos, and other folkloric instruments.

what to avoid: Once you make the album to end all albums with Kiko, what do you do for an encore? The bluesy, noisy Colossal Head ♪♪♪ (Slash/Warner Bros., 1996, prod. Mitchell Froom, Tchad Blake, Los Lobos) buckles under the pressure of topping its predecessor, sounding more contrived than created.

the rest:

. . . And a Time to Dance ♪♪♪ (Slash/Warner Bros., 1983)
By the Light of the Moon ♪♪♪ (Slash/Warner Bros., 1987)
Just Another Band from East L.A.: A Collection ♪♪♪♪ (Slash/Warner Bros., 1993)
This Time ♪♪♪♪ (Hollywood, 1999)

worth searching for: The soundtrack to Paul Bartel's black comedy Eating Raoul (Varese, 1982, prod. Scot Holton, Tom Null) features the then-unknown band rampaging through "Diablo con Vestido," a Spanish version of "Devil with a Blue Dress."

solo outings:
Latin Playboys:
Latin Playboys ♪♪♪½ (Slash/Warner Bros., 1994) Dose ♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1999)

Los Super Seven:
Los Super Seven ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1998)

Houndog (David Hidalgo and Mike Halby):
Houndog (Columbia Legacy, 1999)

Cesar Rosas: Soul Disguise (Rykodisc, 1999)

influences:
⏮ Ritchie Valens, Sir Douglas Quintet
⏭ The Blazers, rock en Español

see also: Latin Playboys, Los Super Seven

David Okamoto

Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

Traditional rumba

Formed 1952, in Matanzas, Cuba. Based in Matanzas, Cuba.

Jesus Alfonso; Gregorio Diaz; Agustin Diaz; Victoriano Espinosa; Israel Berriel Jiménez; Diosdado Ramos; Barbaro Ramos; Vivian Ramos; José Luis Montoya, drums, clave, percussion; Ana Paréz; Ricardo Llorca; Alberto Romero; Rafael Navarro Pujada; Israel Berriel Gonzalez; Luis Ramos, singing, percussion, clapping. (All members are from Cuba.)

Los Muñequitos de Matanzas play rumba—a rhythm that has become a building block of international music—but in a stripped-down form emphasizing rhythmic complexity and musicianship over show-biz flash. The band includes three drummers; five singers who double on congas, cata, and shakere; and five dancers; as well as Luis Ramos, the 10-year-old grandson of the group's director, Diosdado Ramos. Rumba was outlawed by the Spanish slave-masters who understood its power as a cultural tool. When they banned drumming, slaves began pounding out rhythms on packing crates to keep the music alive. When Los Muñequitos was founded in 1952 there was only one other group—Vive Bien—dedicated to preserving the traditional roots of the music. Originally called Guaguanco Mantancero, the band was an informal gathering of fathers, sons, and in-laws who played on weekends and at fiestas, but when "Los Muñequitos de Matanzas," a song about the characters in the comics section of the Sunday newspapers, became an unexpected hit, the band got a new name. Although the last original member died several years ago, Los Muñequitos remain vital, passing on the old songs and rhythms from father to son—and, since Vivian Ramos joined the band, to daughter as well.

what to buy: If you come to Vacunao ♪♪♪♪ (Qbadisc, 1995, prod. Ned Sublette) expecting salsa, you've come to the wrong place. This is raw, propulsive Afro-Cuban folk music, driven by sharp drumming and gruff, earthy vocals; it's music stripped down to its essentials, but full of a primal power.

what to buy next: Cantar Maravilloso ♪♪♪♪ (Globestyle, 1990, prod. Ben Mandelson) is the album that introduced Los Muñequitos to the world, recorded after their performance at the Suave Cuban Festival in London in 1989. Another disc full of bedrock drumming and relentless rhythm.

the rest:
Congo Yambumba ♪♪♪♪ (Qbadisc, 1994)
Oyellos de Nuevo ♪♪♪♪ (Qbadisc, 1994)

influences:
⏮ Vive Bien
⏭ Most of the Latin and West African bands since

j. poet

Los Pleneros de la 21

Plena, bomba

Formed 1983, in Bronx, NY, USA. Based in Bronx, NY, USA.

Miguel Barcasnegras, lead vocals; Alberto Cepeda, panderetas, bombas, cuá, percussion, vocals; Johnny Kenton, vocals; José Lantigua, piano, keyboards; Juan José Gutiérrez-Rodríguez, leader, panderetas, bombas, cuá, percussion, vocals; Aris Martinez, vocals; Ray Martinez, bass; Héctor Matas, panderetas, maracas, güiro, vocals; Edgardo Miranda, cuatro, guitars; Jose Rivera, lead vocals, panderetas, bombas, cuá, percussion; Nellie Tanco, lead vocals; Sam Charles Tanco, lead vocals. (All members are from USA.)

The plena is one of the main folkloric rhythms of Puerto Rico, a highly charged, often political and quite satiric musical form halfway between calypso and Dominican merengue. The rhythm in its current form is about a hundred years old, and came from the working-class barrios of San Juan where it was also known as el periódico cantando ("the sung newspaper"). Plena is an urban form, based on the bomba, which developed directly from the slave community's memories of Africa. Plena also includes traces of Taino (Native American) culture, jobaro (mountain music), Spanish-Arabic rhythm, mento (a Jamaican roots music), and European pop. Plena drums, or panderetas, are played in sets of three (seguidor, segundo, requinto) and are tuned to the major chord of the melody.

The name Los Pleneros de la 21 ("The Plena Players from Bus Stop 21") refers to Santurce, the San Juan barrio that includes Stop 21. The group was created by Juan José Gutiérrez after coming to New York City, as a way of preserving his roots. Gutiérrez had been a drummer in Puerto Rico, where the music scene—be it classical, salsa, or folkloric—is much more integrated. In New York classical drummers don't sit in with salsa bands, so Gutiérrez tracked down some of the older traditional players in his neighborhood to form Los Pleneros. In addition to playing their supercharged music in clubs and concert halls, the band also does quite a bit of outreach in the city's public school system, teaching children about Puerto Rico's rich combination of cultures—Native American, African, European, and refugees from other Caribbean islands.

Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

what's available: Somos Boricuas—We Are Puerto Rican ♪♪♪♪♪ (Henry Street, 1996, prod. Peter K. Siegel) is guaranteed to give you a blast of pure adrenaline. The group's four percussionist/drummers and five lead singers lay down a solid foundation for the improvisatory flights of cuatro (Puerto Rican folk guitar) player Edgardo Miranda and pianist José Lantigua. The lyrics (translations provided) are full of furious humor and serious social commentary.

influences:
◀◀ Marcial Reyes Arvelo

see also: Eddie Palmieri

j. poet

Los Super Seven

Tex-Mex, Tejano

Formed 1998, in Austin, TX, USA. Based in the western and southwestern USA.

David Hidalgo, vocals, guitar, drums, bass, percussion, requinto, hidalguera; Rick Trevino, vocals, guitar; Flaco Jimenez, vocals, accordion; Cesar Rosas, vocals, six-string bass, guitar, guitarron, jarana; Freddy Fender, vocals, acoustic bass; Ruben Ramos, vocals; Joe Ely, guitar, vocals. (All members are from USA.)

Inspired to record traditional Mexican music after a night of acoustic bliss at the 1997 South by Southwest festival with the likes of the Texas Tornados, Doug Sahm, Joe Ely, Rick Trevino, and Rosie Flores, talent manager Dan Goodman set out to assemble Tex-Mex devotees old and new. With original recordings by genre pioneers like Valerio Longoria and Lydia Mendoza in hand, Goodman and producer Steve Berlin brought living Tejano legends Freddy Fender, the Tornados' Flaco Jimenez, and Ruben Ramos together with Los Lobos bandmates David Hidalgo and Cesar Rosas, Texas bar-rocker Ely, country idol Rick Trevino, and guest players from north and south of the border to join in an exploration of seminal Mexican roots music.

los tigres del norte

The addition of the Lobos to the mix, Goodman hoped, would allow "the Super Seven" to transcend what easily could have been a Tex-Mex cliché. The pride of East Los Angeles, Los Lobos journeyed through the West Coast club scene with a mix of Mexican folk, electric blues, and accordion-laced norteña that won over punkers and roots-rockers alike. With 1988's La Pistola y el Corazon, a set of traditional Mexican folk tunes performed on authentic period instruments, and 1992's avant garde masterpiece Kiko, the "Wolves" have displayed an extraordinary range of influences—with an extraordinary range of audiences to match. Fender, whose surname "Huerta" was supplanted by one Freddy liked at the end of a fretboard, is to Tejano what B.B. King is to the blues—its best-known practitioner. Known on the U.S. charts for crossover hits like "Vaya con Dios," "Wasted Days and Wasted Nights," and "Before the Next Teardrop Falls," Fender and Jimenez—the multi-Grammy-winning accordion master whose playing has graced more than 40 albums including sessions with the Rolling Stones, Bob Dylan, and Linda Ronstadt—founded the Texas Tornados. Fellow Tornados Doug Sahm (Sir Douglas Quintet) and Lone Star rocker Augie Meyers play supporting roles on the debut disc Los Super Seven. Current country star Trevino, son of a Tejano player, and Texas favorite Ely provide ballast and some pop influences for this excursion in Mexican-American music.

The noble experiment Los Super Seven completed a brilliant but brief three-city tour (snapshot for posterity on two U.S. TV appearances) to launch its release. While no word has been forthcoming about the group's future, their American peers responded strongly to the effort, awarding Los Super Seven a 1999 Grammy for Best Mexican-American Music Performance. An additional track from the sessions, "Wildwood Flower," was expected to appear on an upcoming tribute to country/folk pioneers the Carter Family on Bob Dylan's label in late 1999. The Grammy win and its inevitable sales boost, coupled with a growing appreciation of Hispanic culture, could demand a "Super" return.

what's available: Like any journey, Los Super Seven ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1998, prod. Steve Berlin) has many fine moments. The ever-inventive Hidalgo inspires awe as an amazing vocalist and instrumentalist. Fender and Jimenez dazzle effortlessly; their collective and individual talents shine. Ramos sets the heart free with his own impassioned yet controlled vocal contributions. A proud and stellar effort.

worth searching for: Explore the worlds from which the Supers came. Los Lobos' La Pistola y el Corazon ♪♪♪½ (Slash/Warner Bros., 1988, prod. Los Lobos) offers a peek into the band's soul, while Just Another Band from East L.A.: A Collection ♪♪♪♪½ (Slash/Warner Bros., 1993, prod. various) is a broad brush that effectively portrays why they're one of America's most important units. Texas Tornados ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1990, prod. Bill Haverson, Texas Tornados) won the group their Grammy for best Mexican-American performance.

influences:

⏮ Lydia Mendoza, Valerio Longoria

see also: Flaco Jimenez, Los Lobos, Texas Tornados

Kevin Meyer

Los Tigres del Norte

Tejano, norteña

Formed 1969, in south TX, USA.

Jorge Hernandez; Raul Hernandez; Hernán Hernandez; Eduardo Lara; Oscar Lara.

Los Tigres choose particularly Mexican American subjects for their lively, often humorous, even cynical songs about modern-day working-class life along the Texas/Mexico border. Hispanic magazine's characterization of the Tigres as the inventors of "Tejano gangsta rap" is a bit overstated—the group has too much of a sense of humor for that comparison. The infectious sibling harmony and lively dance beat of their tunes often allow a more bittersweet commentary on the realities of life along the frontera than a straight-ahead ballad singer could get away with—and that accounts in part for the group's continuing popularity.

what's available: 30 Nortenas de Oro ♪♪♪♪ (Fonovisa, 1998) is a definitive three-disc set that includes upbeat dance tunes, songs about the realities of working-class life, and pieces featuring the group's wry humor and deft use of sound effects (bells, telephones, autos, and the like). The only thing missing from this otherwise comprehensive collection is the liner notes. For such an ambitious and useful archive of music, it's a disappointment that the printed material barely includes a list of the 30 tracks and their songwriters.

influences:

⏮ Mariachi Vargas

⏭ Mazz, Intocable, Los del Rio, Selena, Laura Canales

Kerry Dexter

Los Van Van

Songo

Formed December, 1969, in Havana, Cuba. Based in Havana, Cuba.

Juan Formell, director, bass, vocals; Cesar Pedroso, piano; Hugo Morejon, trombone, synthesizer; Alvaro Collado, trombone; Edmundo Pina, trombone, percussion; Angel Bonne, alto sax, vocals; Gerardo

Los Van Van

Miro, violin; Fernando Leyva, violin; Jesus Linares, violin; Orlando Canto, flute, maracas; Samuel Formell, drums, pallas; Jose "Changuito" Quintana, congas, tumbas; Manuel Labarrera, congas, tumbas; Julio Norona, guiro; Pedro Calvo, bongo, choruses; Mario Rivera, bongo, choruses. (All members are from Cuba.)

You can't funk with this: Los Van Van single-handedly changed the course of Cuban contemporary music history. Here's how it happened. . . . The legend of Los Van Van begins with the 1942 birth of Juan Formell in a Havana hospital. Somewhat of a guitar prodigy, Juan turned pro at the age of 16. His rising career as a bar-hopping troubadour was interrupted by his conscription into Fidel Castro's National Police Band. It was a blessing in disguise: as the Police Band mostly played state functions, Juan had to master all of the traditional Cuban songs and rhythms—mambo, bolero, rumba, son, danzon—very quickly. Ears wide open, the rookie would listen to the nightly R&B/rock/pop broadcasts emanating from Miami on the barracks short-wave. Back on the block, Formell gained more experience via gigs with the orchestras of Guillermo Rubalcaba, Peruchin, and Carlos Faxas. In 1967, he was hired to play bass in Elio Revé's Orquesta Revé. Encouraged by the leader, Formell soon rose to director/arranger by virtue of his mutating the band's rumbling changui (country son rhythm) into the hot salsa zone by simply throwing electric guitars and bass into the mix. When Orchestra Revé's "El Changui '68" sparked a new dance craze, Formell became a star. In 1969 he formed Los Van Van. Formell had un gran idea: if he took a traditional charanga band—flute, violin, piano, güiro (scraper)—and bumrushed in the horns/electric-bass/drums/chorus constellation, bits of jazz-improv, call-and-response Afro-Cuban conga breakdown, and R&B do-it-fluid, and immersed the whole cipher in hot, dripping sweat—he could create a totally new music. He was right. Los Van Van's new songo sound not only turned Cuba's beat around, it became the root from which three generations of big bands have sprung. Los Van Van continues to rock the Cuban soul and ram dancefloors worldwide.

what to buy: Both Los Van Van: La Colección Cubana ♪♪♪♪♪ (Music Club, 1998) and Dancing Wet ♪♪♪♪ (World Pacific, 1993) compile tracks Los Van Van recorded for EGREM Records during their absolute peak period (mid-'80s to early '90s). Two hour-plus albums, no duplicate tracks, all killah/no fillah. Know why the revolution was songo-ized.

what to buy next: A crisp recording of a 1994 performance at Havana's Salón Rosado de La Tropical, Lo Ultimo en Vivo ♪♪♪♪½ (QBadisc, 1995) is positively steamroller. Feel the molten timba (next-generation Cuban salsa) bubbling up in the middle of sweaty tracks like "Hierbero, Ven" and "Un Socio." Best of Los Van Van ♪♪♪½ (Milan, 1997) is mostly drawn from the band's early-'90s output for EGREM. Cohesive but relatively tame.

influences:

- Orquesta Aragón, Beny Moré, Orquesta Revé
- NG La Banda, Jesús Alemañy & iCubanismo!, David Calzado & La Charanga Habanera

see also: Juan Carlos Formell

Tom Terrell

Trevor Lucas

Folk, folk-rock

Born December 25, 1943, in Melbourne, Australia. Died February 4, 1989, in Epping, Australia.

Trevor Lucas had a deep, mellow voice that was featured to fine effect on several albums by Fairport Convention, but he made his greatest musical mark as a producer. He started out as a folk singer on the Melbourne club circuit before traveling to England, where he was prized for his ethnicity. He worked on two albums of traditional music with folklorist A.L. Lloyd, as well as his only solo album, Overlander (long out of print), before forming the aptly named Eclection with Mike Rosen, Georg Hultgren (later known as George Kajanus), Gerry Conway, and Kerrilee Male. He left that band in 1970 to join his girlfriend Sandy Denny in Fotheringay, a short-lived band that melded Fairport Convention–style English folk-rock with the North American roots-folk sound favored by Eclection. Fotheringay, featuring Lucas, Denny, Conway, Jerry Donahue, and Pat Donaldson, was a promising band that lasted scarcely a year. Lucas moved into production work and helped create Denny's finest album, Sandy. He married Denny in 1973, not long after joining Fairport Convention, the band she'd left three years before, as vocalist and rhythm guitarist. With Fairport, Lucas recorded Nine, Rosie, Fairport Live Convention (also known as A Moveable Feast), and Rising for the Moon before leaving the band. He produced his wife's last two solo albums. After her death, Lucas returned to Australia, where he went on to produce and work with a number of Australian bands, notably Redgum, the Bushwackers, and Goanna. He died of a heart attack, far too young, at 45.

what to buy: Lucas's fondness for the Band is much in evidence on Fotheringay ♪♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1970, prod. Joe Boyd), a fitting souvenir of a band with a very short life and a surfeit of talented members. Some of Sandy Denny's best-known songs are here, including "The Pond and the Stream" and "The Sea," but the album's greatest charms are in the songs led by Lucas, including Bob Dylan's "Too Much of Nothing" and "The Ballad of Ned Kelly," a Lucas composition often mistaken for a traditional Australian ballad.

worth searching for: Rock On ♪♪♪½ (Carthage, 1972, prod. Trevor Lucas) by the Bunch was Lucas's first foray into production work. Prized among fans of Fairport Convention, it includes various members of the Fairport family (Lucas, Denny, Richard Thompson, Ashley Hutchings, etc.) covering classic rock 'n' roll songs. Lucas provides lead vocals on "Don't Be Cruel." The album can be found on vinyl, but don't hold your breath for a CD release. Credited to "Sandy Denny, Trevor Lucas & Friends," The Attic Tracks 1972–84 ♪♪♪♪½ (Raven, 1995, prod. various) includes an alternate take of "The Ballad of Ned Kelly" and Lucas's cover of Bob Dylan's "Forever Young." A portion of the proceeds from this album goes to Lucas's heirs.

influences:

- Bob Dylan, the Band, Sandy Denny, Ralph McTell, Gordon Lightfoot
- Redgum, Goanna, the Bushwackers

see also: Sandy Denny, Fairport Convention, Ashley Hutchings, A.L. Lloyd, Richard Thompson

Pamela Murray Winters

Luciano

Roots reggae

Born Jepther Washington McClymont, December 20, 1964, in Clarendon, Jamaica. Based in Kingston, Jamaica.

Luciano is being hailed as the savior of roots reggae. In 1994, with producer Fattis Burrell, he cut four of the strongest roots tunes to hit the market since the heyday of Bob Marley: "Forward to Africa," "Black Survivors," "One-Way Ticket" and "Jah Is Alive." These singles, along with other album tracks, were rushed out in the U.S. on a variety of small labels, leading to a worldwide deal with Island Records. Luciano grew up in a single-parent family with his mother and eight siblings. To help support the family he dropped out of high school, moved to Kingston, and worked at various odd jobs until he became an apprentice to an upholsterer. His early experience with a singing group composed of himself and his sister and brother-in-law went nowhere, and when he got a finger caught in a crosscut saw he gave up playing guitar. But music was always on his mind. In 1992 he recorded his first singles (as "Luciana") for Mau Mau Productions, and also worked with New Name Records' Castro Brown as well as Freddie McGregor before signing on with Burrell's Xterminator Productions. With the Xterminator crew—Sly and Robbie, Dean Frazier, and other session heavies—and Burrell's 1990's approach, Luciano clicked and began turning out the hits that have sparked a rebirth of interest in spiritual roots reggae, a welcome trend after decades of carbon-copy dancehall hits full of sex and gunplay.

what to buy: On The Messenger ♪♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1997, prod. Fattis Burrell) Burrell and Luciano are a perfect pair; Burrell produces slamming riddim tracks without all the blurps and buzzes of the dancehall, and Luciano's pure, straightforward tenor infuses each tune with soul and sufferation.

what to buy next: One-Way Ticket ♪♪♪♪ (VP, 1995, prod. Fattis Burrell) contains the early singles that made Luciano a force to be reckoned with, produced by Burrell and featuring guests like Cocoa Tea, Charlie Chaplin, and Lady G. The set includes hits like "Raggamuffin" and "Turn Your Life Around."

the rest:
Moving Up ♪♪♪½ (RAS, 1993)
Where There Is Life ♪♪♪♪½ (Island, 1996)

influences:
Bob Marley, Garnett Silk, Dennis Brown, Burning Spear

see also: Cocoa Tea, Sly & Robbie

j. poet

Dónal Lunny

Celtic

Born in Ireland. Based in Ireland.

Guitar and bouzouki player Dónal Lunny has been called "the Quincy Jones of Irish music" for his multiple roles as musician, producer, organizer, presenter, and catalyst for high-quality musical collaborations. After beginning his career as the drummer in a high school rock band, Lunny discovered the guitar and got hooked on music in earnest. A couple of years ahead of him at school in Newbridge was a young man named Christy Moore, with whom Lunny teamed up to form a singing group, the Rakes of Kildare. The music they played, he says, was a pretty close copy of the Clancy Brothers, but they had the advantage of a nearby pub where real traditional music was played. Before long the idea of combining the ballad-group sound of singing and guitar with the traditional tunes he heard in the pub began to dawn on him. When he finished school, Lunny went to Dublin to study art. There he met up with new friends, some of whom shared his musical ideas. He played in a group called the Emmet Folk with Mick Moloney, who later joined the Johnstons. Lunny then ran a folk club with Andy Irvine, who had played with Sweeney's Men. All of these groups had one thing in common: the desire to blend the more accessible style of the ballad groups with the lyrical beauty of real traditional music. All of them were successful to an extent, but none fulfilled this dream as thoroughly as Lunny's next group, Planxty. Planxty grew out of the sessions for Christy Moore's 1972 LP, Prosperous. Moore was returning to Ireland after a stint on England's folk club circuit, and he wanted this album to be a celebration; he asked eight musical friends to come to Downing's Pub in Prosperous, the same pub where Lunny first experienced traditional music. There they arranged and recorded the LP. When it was done, Lunny, Moore, Irvine, and Liam O'Flynn, who had worked out many of the arrangements together, decided to form Planxty, a new kind of Irish band. At the time Lunny was supporting himself by making jewelry, but he quit this job to pursue his musical career with Planxty. In 1975 he left the band to join another group that never got off the ground. His career, however, bounced back nicely, in an outfit that was first known as Seachtar and then as 1691. After Lunny joined, they changed their name to the Bothy Band, and quickly gained a reputation as the most phenomenal group ever on the Irish folk scene. While Planxty had delivered sweet lyricism, the Bothy Band traded in pure power; the combination of driving flute, fiddle, and uilleann pipes accompanied by guitar, bouzouki, and keyboards left audiences absolutely stunned. Lunny toured with the Bothy Band and recorded four albums with them. When the Bothy Band broke up, Planxty took the opportunity to reunite, and several tours plus three more albums ensued. From the last version of Planxty, Lunny and Moore built Moving Hearts, an Irish traditional/rock fusion group. Moving Hearts also involved Declan Sinnott (later Mary Black's musical director), Declan Masterson, and Davy Spillane. Lunny remembers it as a time of powerful performances as well as a great learning experience, combining bass and drums with traditional music in new ways. Since Moving Hearts broke up in the early 1980s, Lunny has been more active as a producer, organizer, and presenter than as a musician. He has produced records by many of the top groups in Ireland and Scotland, including Altan, Capercaillie, and Sharon Shannon. He has served as musical director for many television series, including two documentary series about traditional and contemporary Irish music. He has in recent years put together a group and toured, while recording under his own name only sporadically. Lunny's name as a musician, compiler, or producer, however, virtually assures a high-quality album.

what's available: Dónal Lunny ♪♪♪ (Gael-Linn, 1987, prod. Dónal Lunny) is really not a solo album, but a live ensemble record of Lunny's 1987 band. Lunny's collaborators include Arty McGlynn (guitar), Nollaig Casey (fiddle), Cormac Breatnach (flute), and Sean Og Potts (uilleann pipes). It's all great, high-energy music, expertly played and produced. There's only one problem: it's just 27 minutes long, and priced like a full album. If you're willing to pay, it's a fine set. If not, you're better off exploring Lunny's exemplary work as a band member and producer—or picking up the recent return to solo-billed recording, Coolfin ♪♪♪½ (Emd/Blue Note, 1998), which continues in just as musically satisfying—and more chronologically acceptable—fashion.

influences:

⏮ Christy Moore, Andy Irvine, Mick Moloney

⏭ Planxty, Bothy Band, Moving Hearts, Altan, Capercaillie, Sharon Shannon see also: Altan, Bothy Band, Shaun Davey, Paddy Glackin, Andy Irvine, Matt Molloy, Mick Moloney, Christy Moore, Moving Hearts, Liam O'Flynn, Sean Ó Riadà, Patrick Street, Tommy Peoples, Planxty, Tommy Sands, Sharon Shannon, Sweeney's Men

Steve Winick

Baaba Maal

Worldbeat, traditional and modern African folk, experimental pop

Born in Podor, Senegal. Based in Podor and Dakar, Senegal.

Baaba Maal has been a new sensation for over 15 years, and there's no end in sight. One of the most charismatic and adventurous performers in any genre, he has introduced many to world music with a sound that is unshakably indigenous in character while embracing a staggering range of other influences. The intricate rhythms and keening vocals of Maal's style may be an acquired taste for some Western ears, but it's acquired quickly and irreversibly, especially if it's first encountered at one of his not-infrequent North American concerts; kinetic, colorfully garbed events almost shamanic in their intensity. Maal's style is based around the crystalline notes of the kora (African harp-lute), the compelling rhythms of the human voice–like talking drum, and the rich reverberations of the hodu (an ancestor of the banjo)—not to mention deft and delicate guitar, Celtic pipes, Latin brass ensembles, and high-tech synths. The sounds of his homeland are mixed with those of the West in an infectious but never ingratiating way.

Maal has been crossing lines and winning converts all his life. Born into the Hapulaar ethnic minority (better known to English-speakers as the Fulani), his acceptance as a performer was by no means assured—and within his own people it was barely even allowed. Born outside the caste of griots (musical oral historians who exalt great figures and events, and reflect on the weighty issues implicit in their stories), Maal's talents might have gone decisively unencouraged if not for support from his mother, who had also defied tradition as a musician. Maal's ambition came from her, and his voice itself came from his father, a fieldworker who called the Muslim faithful to prayer, and who can no doubt be heard echoing in Maal's inspirational, clarion-like vocals today. The broader world was taking note of Maal's gifts from early on, as reflected in musical scholarships first to the Senegalese capital, Dakar, and then to Paris. Between the two moves, Maal and Mansour Seck, his family's griot and his own best friend from childhood, went on a year-long odyssey to absorb the village music of Hapulaar people from Maal's birthplace in northern Senegal, to southern Mauritania, and beyond to Mali. In France, Maal and Seck entertained the immigrant Hapulaar community and booked various small recording studios to cut the tracks that would become the classic Djam Leelii album. Upon returning to Senegal they formed the band Daande Lenol ("Voice of the People") and built on that album's phenomenal success.

With determination and sincerity, Maal would then continue an unbroken upsurge in popularity, critical acclaim, and cultural significance—a new kind of griot who extols not just the glories of the past but the possibilities of the future. An emissary for the culture of his home region Fouta Toro (where the world-traveling Maal still resides), he is also a ceaseless advocate of African and global unity and a vocal supporter of women and youth, making him that rare artist who has not just an audience, but a constituency. With a higher international profile than ever and a new label of his own (Yoff) to promote other Senegalese artists and become the kind of benefactor he sings about, Maal is a bona fide giant of 21st century music—a fact for which we already have ample recorded evidence today.

what to buy: Restlessly creative, Maal is a different artist with each release, so you can take your pick and you can't go wrong. Djam Leelii: The Adventurers ♪♪♪♪♪ (Palm Pictures, 1998, prod. Baaba Maal, Mansour Seck) is the long-awaited reissue of what is perhaps Maal's most-loved work, a haunting session recorded in Paris with Mansour Seck (who shares billing) in 1984, which made the pair transcontinental stars upon their debut. Stylistically, this unforgettable evocation of Maal and Seck's homeland is resolutely traditional, although sonically, electric if not electronic instruments have always been part of the plan. Distinguished with the subtitle The Adventurers to denote the addition of three essential contemporaneous bonus tracks to the original version, this is a bolt to the brain cells and a balm to the blood pressure, a warm and rootsy soundscape that feels like a homecoming no matter how unfamiliar you may be with its style. The best artists are creative gamblers who attain a certain level of mastery and then venture into a new state of uncertainty. Before Maal embarked on the creative gamble of a rapidly accelerated dialogue with Western forms, Baayo (The Orphan) ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mango, 1991, prod. Baaba Maal) was just such a plateau—the pinnacle of his mostly acoustic, strictly folkloric phase. Reflective in tone but vigorous in delivery, this album offers one joy after another, from the striking asymmetrical guitar harmonies on the title track, to the stunning asymmetrical a cappella vocal ones on "Diahowo," to the mesmerizing Malian tinge of "Mariama" and "Yero Mama" and beyond. With a remarkable freshness to the arrangements and confidence in the vocals, you'll need a 12-step program to stop listening to this one. Lam Toro (King of Toro) ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mango, 1993, prod. Baaba Maal, Simon Booth, Eric Clermontet) was Maal's first crack at the international market on its own terms as well as his own, and the experiment paid off in immediate worldwide stardom without impoverishing his African core. It's easy to see why—a blast of optimism and energy, this album speaks in a musical language that everyone can understand and no one could resist. The indestructible beat of Fouta Toro comes through loud and clear, and what Westernizations there are, are sparing, well-selected, and dynamic. (Astute ears will not be surprised by the presence of Joe Galdo, an early Angélique Kidjo producer, among the credits for many of the songs.) The album is brilliantly sequenced between moving laments like "Daniibe" and dead-waking celebrations like "Toro" and "Olele"; ominous dramas like "Daande Lenol" and pastoral ballads like "Sy Sawande." Maal is in astoundingly joyous, booming good voice throughout. The decision to bookend the set with two mixes of the somewhat pointless "Hamady Bogle/Hamady Boiro" (in which, at record-label suggestion, Maal's vocal track is overpowered by a B-level reggae toaster) makes it easy to avoid both without even touching the program button. On the much-admired Firin' in Fouta ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mango, 1994, prod. Simon Emmerson) Maal's music explodes into several continents' worth of new stylistic landscapes, while quite literally maintaining ties to the homeland with field-recorded vignettes of Senegalese village life woven through the mix. On the feminist anthem "African Woman" Maal and band convincingly evoke the Latin sounds that are beloved throughout West Africa as the New World's rhythmic cousin to the mother continent's culture—and as confirmation of the influence and indomitability of the African voice. On the brooding yet sultry "Sama Duniya" Maal beats moody European trance-pop at its own game. A global African style summit is staged in "Salimoun," a jubilantly jazzy, hip-hop-driven and kora-sweetened song of praise to the mother Maal reveres. The epically orchestral "Tiedo" ends the set on the last of many high points. The album's commercial production touches occasionally seem to get the upper hand, but what's a gamble without something being risked? Nomad Soul ♪♪♪♪♪ (Palm Pictures, 1998, prod. various) is perhaps Maal's most ambitious project yet—nearly 70 minutes of stylistic sojourning that befits the title. "Souka Nayo (I Will Follow You)" is a landmark in the already-burgeoning Afro Celt genre and a prime example of Maal's uniquely transcendental pop, in which the hits are not just upbeat but uplifting. The solo-kora concert fave "Cherie" is given a dynamic Latin/rap/choral makeover, and '70s retro reaches its peak with the almost mystically groovy "Douwayra." Meanwhile, the dream-like "Guelel" achieves an effect similar to Djam Leelii, albeit through far-removed electronic means. Some of the most arresting moments in Maal's career have been provided by his near–a cappella readings, and the sparsely accompanied Maal/Brian Eno/Howie B/Jon Hassell improv "Lam Lam," which closes the album, is no exception. Maal's concerts are hard-core organic jams that burn away his music's studio sheen to the raw essence of its roots, and Live at the Royal Festival Hall ♪♪♪♪♪ (Palm Pictures, 1999, prod. Trevor Wyatt) presents enthralling documentation. The phenomenal voice you hear on those studio recordings is proven here to be the real thing, and the band is as tight in musicianship as it is sprawling in number. This disc's version of "African Woman" will make you forget all about the original—no mean feat—with the intensity and authenticity of its Latin chops and the audacity of its melodious, live-electronica denouement. Only musical masters can navigate from a workout like that track to a laid-back stretch like "Koni," and Maal, Daande Lenol, and guest-soloist Ernest Ranglin (the legendary guitarist and ska innovator) are up to it. The latter song's stunning delicacy, complete with nutritious solos by Ranglin and bassist El Hadji Niang, gives way to a radical—and priceless—reworking of "Douwayra," metamorphosized from its techno-dance origins to a rhythmically complex showcase for the percussionists and hodu soloist Barou Sall that's just as compelling. Live is marketed as an EP, but at some 42 minutes it's only not a full-fledged album by CD-era standards, and by any measure is an essential purchase.

what to buy next: "Souka Nayo" is an instant classic, but it's up to you to decide whether you need to buy it six times. If so, you get your chance on the maxi-single Souka Nayo (I Will Follow You) ♪♪♪ (Palm Pictures, 1998, prod. various), which includes five remixes of varying essentiality. Maal's such a stylistic shape-shifter to begin with that the laboratory treatment is kinda redundant; the main attraction of this release is the insight into the bare bones of his process offered by occasional unadorned vocal tracks that either didn't appear or competed with thick arrangements in the original.

worth searching for: Like many world-music artists, Maal's career has more than one history—different releases aimed at the homeland and international markets, as well as specific continents abroad, can show a fascinatingly divergent stylistic progression than the one traced in the artist's major-label canon. Maal's African and European releases offer just such fascination; a particularly good one, Wango ♪♪♪♪♪ (Syllart, 1985/Stern's, 1988, prod. Ibrahima Sylla), is a relaxed, jubilant, live-in-the-studio-sounding set that will come as a surprise but not a disappointment to listeners familiar with the grandeur and gravity of his international recordings. Other import-onlys that reward a search are Taara (Syllart/Melodie, 1987), Tono (Studio 2000-Dakar, 1994), Sunagal (Studio 2000-Dakar, 1995), and Nouvelle Generation (Studio 2000-Dakar, 1991). Casting his eyes on another new tradition, Maal's DVD Live at the Royal Festival Hall—the entire concert from which the EP of same name was excerpted—presents one of the first live shows documented with this medium in mind. Until you can see him in the flesh, this does a good job of catching his spirit. On the George Gershwin centennial tribute/AIDS benefit disc Red Hot + Rhapsody ♪♪♪♪ (Antilles/Verve, 1998, prod. various), Maal joins the many generations of great black artists who've made historic music out of Gershwin's fantasy of black life, Porgy and Bess, with an out-of-this-world rendition of "Bess, You Is My Woman Now." On Ernest Ranglin's In Search of the Lost Riddim ♪♪♪♪ (Palm Pictures, 1998, prod. Ira Coleman, Ernest Ranglin, Bart Fermie) Maal lends vocals to "Minuit" and "Haayo," two of his compositions that are otherwise unavailable Stateside, while Ranglin jazzes up "Cherie" and various members of Daande Lenol beautify the soundscape throughout the album. Maal makes a superhuman vocal contribution to Daande Lenol kora player Kaouding Cissoko's solo debut, Kora Revolution ♪♪♪♪♪ (Palm Pictures/Yoff, 1999, prod. Ira Coleman), a landmark recording for Maal's Yoff label that also features the Next Voice of World Music, 15-year-old phenomenon Cisse Diamba Kanoute (who made her debut on the Ranglin album). Maal's other guest appearances are numerous, and can be tracked through the web discography "Africa" at http://biochem.chem.nagoya-u.ac.jp/~endo/africa.html; log on and have fun trying to figure out where he finds the 25th hour in a day!

influences:

- Mansour Seck, Omar Tall, Ahmadou Bamba, Orchestra Baobob, Youssou N'Dour
- Afro Celt Sound System, every succeeding generation of Senegalese musicians see also: Afro Celt Sound System, Ernest Ranglin, Mansour Seck, Spearhead, Tarika

Adam McGovern

Mabsant

See: Robin Huw Bowen

Sipho Mabuse /Harare

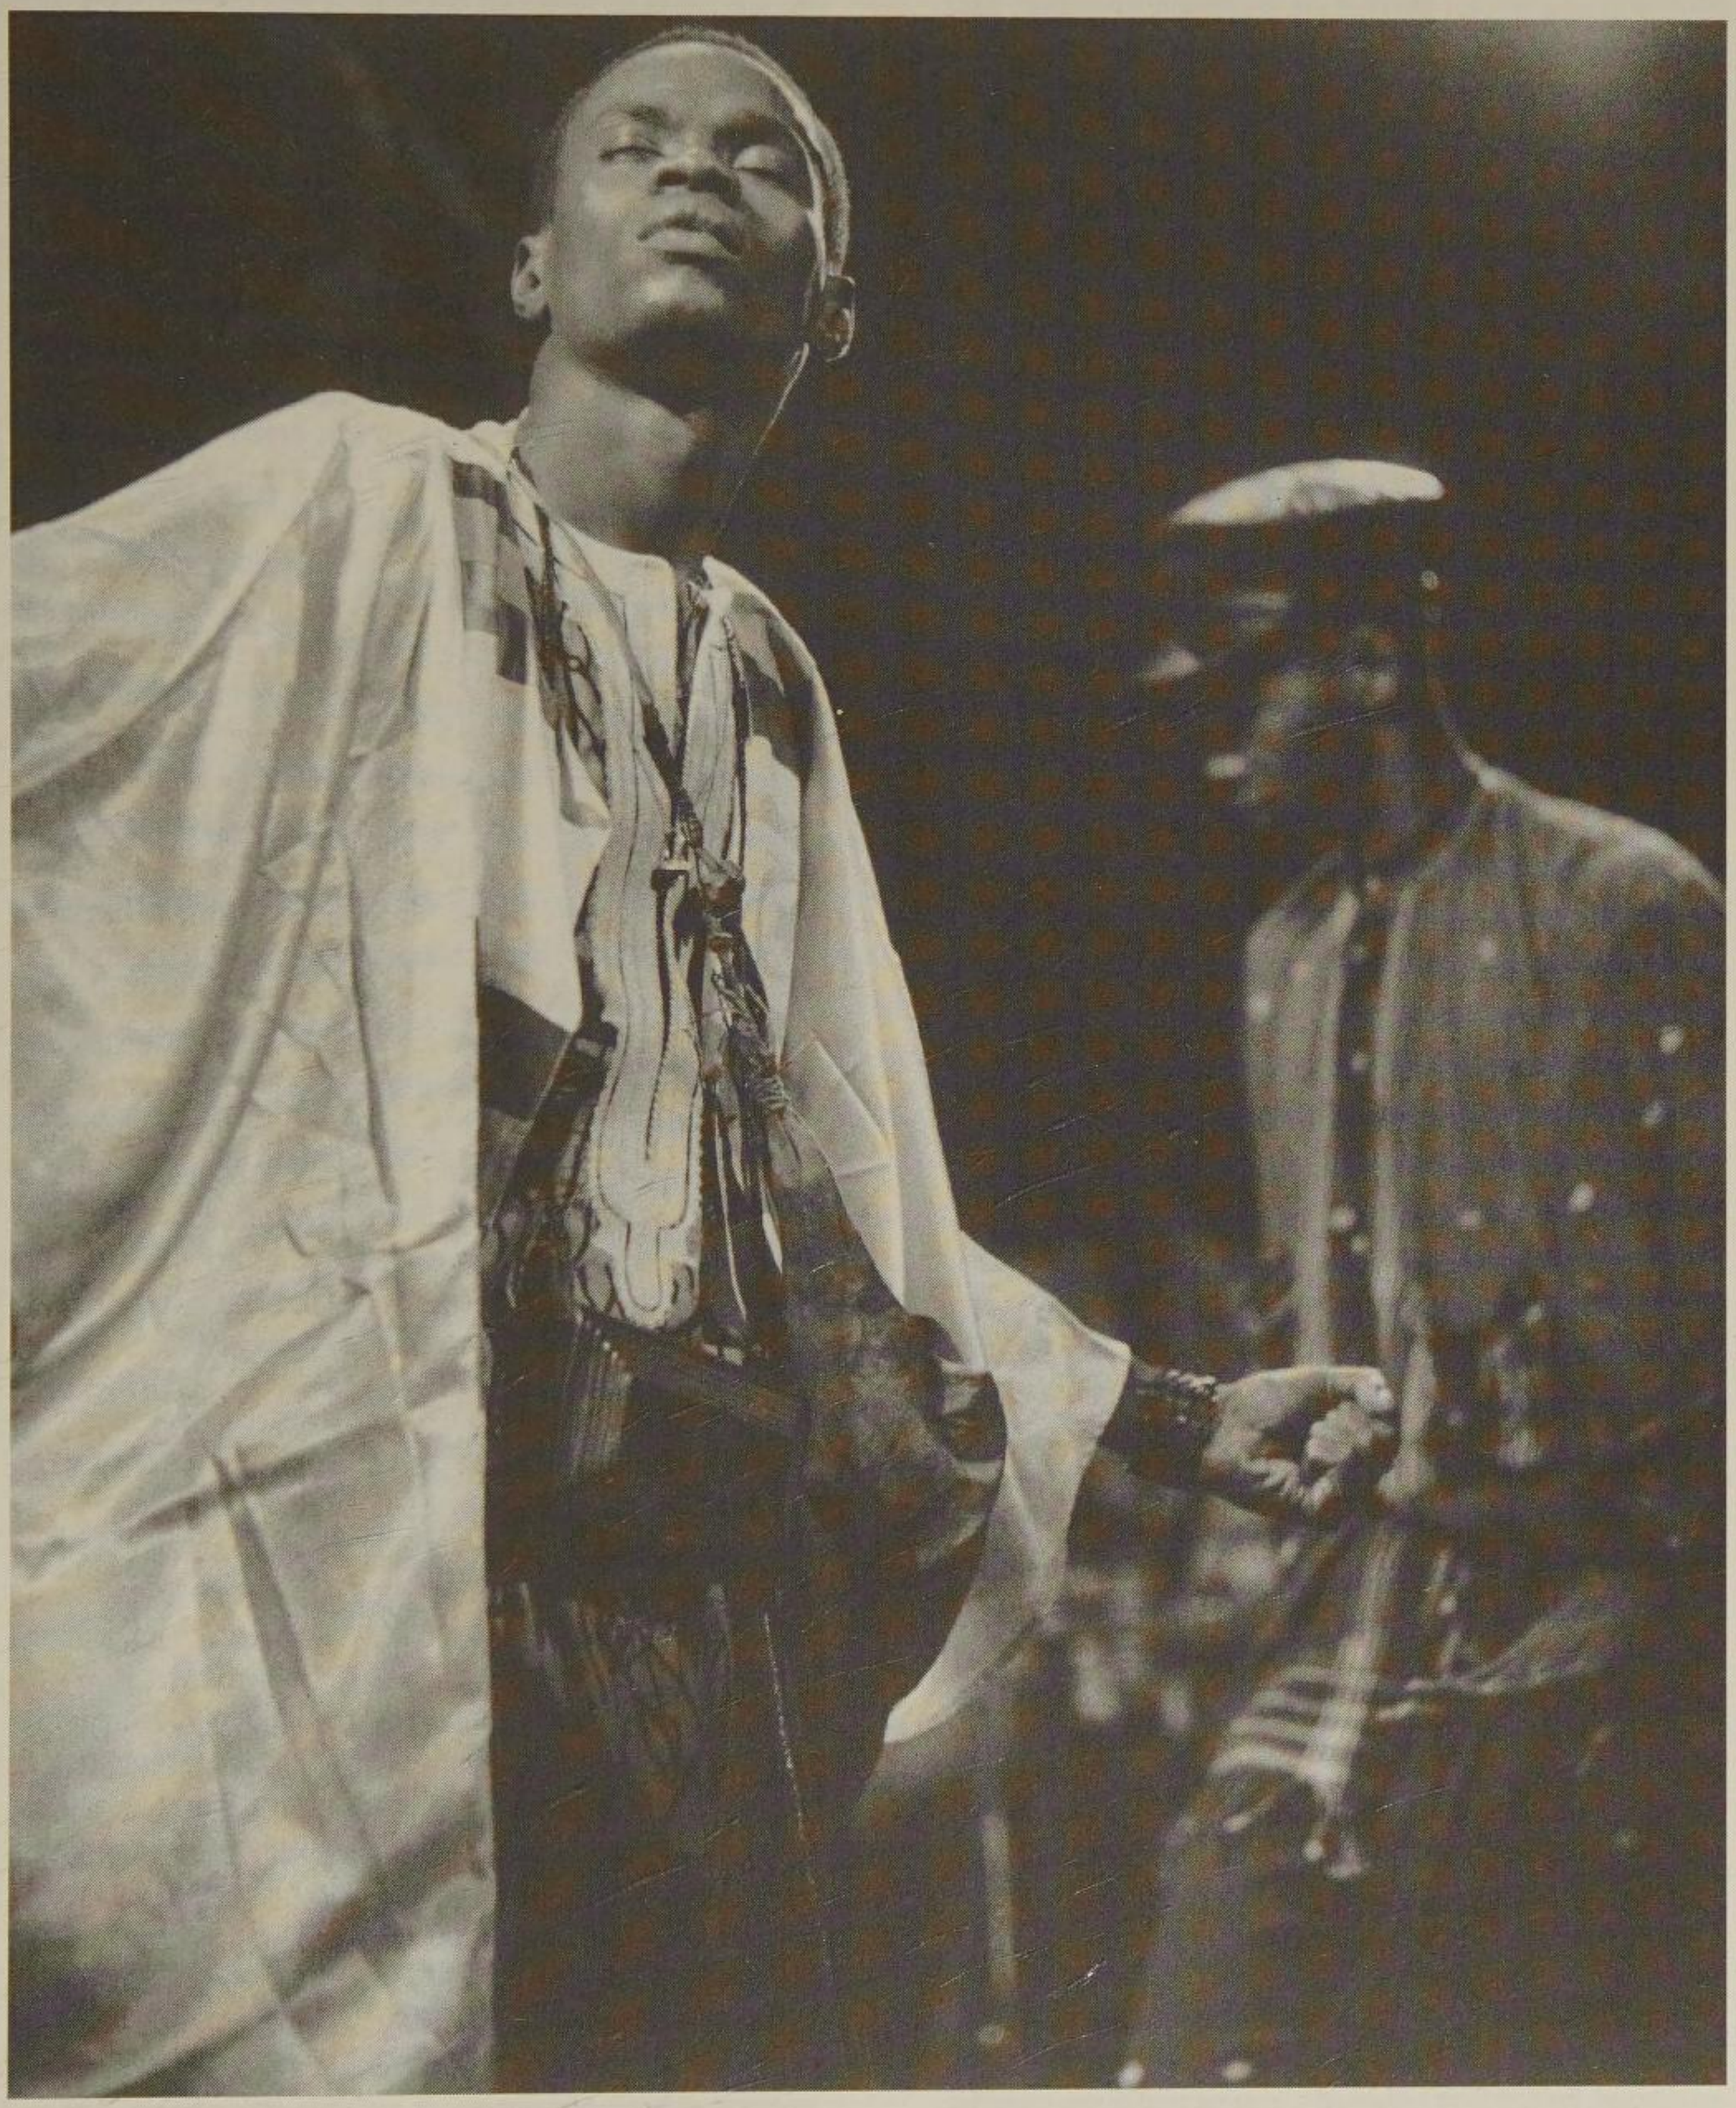
Afropop, worldbeat

Born c. 1945, in Soweto, South Africa. Based in Johannesburg, South Africa.

Mabuse—a singer, composer, producer, drummer, and keyboard player—has been making strong, Afrocentric crossover music for more than 30 years. With his 1984 album for South Africa's Gallo label, Burn Out, he achieved superstar status in his homeland, becoming one of the first African musicians to create international pop that still retained a deep connection to the kwela, mbaqanga, and African soul music he grew up on. Mabuse was born in Soweto, one of South Africa's poorest yet most culturally vital townships. He was musically omnivorous from an early age, soaking up the sounds of the Beatles and Stones along with that of local groups like the Skylarks and Manhattan Brothers, both of which featured the young Miriam Makeba. Mabuse started out as a drummer, and by high school was leading his own band, the Beaters, through sets that included tunes by the Beatles and other Anglo/American rockers. When soul music hit South Africa, Mabuse added that element to his band and began writing original tunes that combined rock, soul, and South African music. The Beaters eventually recorded an album called Soul a Go Go, but Mabuse wasn't satisfied with it and moved the band to Harare, in Zimbabwe (then Rhodesia). In Rhodesia, Mabuse became more serious about his Afropop vision. He changed the band's name to Harare, and although the music was still heavily influenced by American funk, tunes like "It Takes Time" and "Party" showed a growing interest in Pan-African rhythms. Harare cut two well-received albums before breaking up in 1984.

After Harare, Mabuse returned to school to study law, but music called him back, this time as a solo artist/producer. His first single, "Rise," fused African music with international club beats and became a hit. This led to his first album under his own name, Burn Out, which spawned two monster singles, the title track and "Jive Soweto," which sounds remarkably like the music Paul Simon would be making on Graceland soon after. "Burn Out" was so successful that CBS licensed the track abroad (along with "Jive Soweto" and "Zanzibar") and rushed out an EP, hoping to make the tune an international club hit. While the Burn Out EP didn't become the success the label had hoped for, it did pave the way for Sipho Mabuse, one of the first genuine Afropop albums. Unluckily, Sipho Mabuse came out almost a year after Simon's Graceland and went largely unnoticed despite its pumping rhythms and Mabuse's excellent songwriting and production skills. By the time Chant of the Marching came out in 1989, South African music was "dead" as far as the international press was concerned, and the album

sipho mabuse



Baaba Maal

sank without a trace, though it did respectable business back home. Mabuse continues to record and produce other artists but hasn't had an international release in over a decade.

what to buy: Sipho Mabuse ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1987, prod. Sipho Mabuse) is an uneven album, but the high points are as good as anything on Graceland. Mabuse's smooth international blend of funk, pop, kwela, and mbaqanga still sounds fresh today, and his vocals have a gritty authority that Simon lacks.

what to buy next: Chant of the Marching ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1989, prod. Nick Patrick) could have been an international hit for Mabuse, if anyone had given it one-tenth the airplay Simon got. The strong tunes, slick production, and masterful playing mark it as one of the lost masterpieces of South African music.

worth searching for: Mabuse and Harare have many African recordings that never saw international release but may be available from import services or African specialty shops. Best of Sipho Mabuse ♪♪♪♪ (Gallo, South Africa) includes the big hits from the late 1980s. Vinyl junkies may be able to track down some of his LPs; try Harare ♪♪♪ (A&M, 1981) and the EP Burn Up ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1985).

influences:

⏮ Miriam Makeba, Hugh Masekela, Soul Brothers, Stimela

⏭ Yvonne Chaka Chaka, Splash, Brenda Fassi

j. poet

Ewan MacColl

English and Scottish folk

Born Jimmy Miller, 1915, in Auchterarder, Perthshire, Scotland. Died October 22, 1989.

Ewan MacColl was one of the main forces behind the folk revival that swept Britain in the 1950s and '60s. Born Jimmy Miller in Scotland, he was brought up in Salford, greater Manchester. At the age of 15 he changed his name to Ewan MacColl, memorializing a little-known 19th-century Lallans poet. He became a poet himself, as well as a laborer, working at various menial jobs while indulging in his first love, the theater. In 1931 he founded a street theater company called the Red Megaphones, and in 1934 he formed the influential Theatre in Action. MacColl's activities in this field continued through the postwar period. In 1945 he wrote his first full-length play and was ultimately hailed by George Bernard Shaw as "the only significant post-war British dramatist."

However, he was also becoming more and more interested in folk music. Both of his parents sang traditional Scottish songs, exposing him to the form at an early age. By the time of his adulthood, he had long collected and sung traditional material, and the success of jazz clubs in the 1950s gave him a new venue for the songs he loved. He began to appear at them, a practice that accelerated during the skiffle craze of 1956–57. Because of the skiffle bands' reliance on American material, MacColl felt there was not enough native British music being sung among the younger generation. He began to advocate a policy whereby English singers would sing English songs, Scottish singers would sing Scottish songs, and so forth. MacColl found many ways to spread his ideas about folk song during the 1950s. In 1953 he began a venue—the Ballads and Blues Club—that became the model for the English folk-club phenomenon. He later founded the Singer's Club, which was organized on socialist principles, and the Critics Group, a collection of young singers who met regularly to discuss folk songs and who also performed and recorded. This group nurtured many important performers of the younger generation, including Sandra Kerr, John Faulkner, Frankie Armstrong, and Brian Pearson. During the same period, MacColl created a series of radio programs that utilized folk songs, under the rubric The Radio Ballads. These programs and others frequently teamed him up with singers including A.L. Lloyd. They were a great success and made MacColl relatively famous despite the same socialist politics that had harmed Lloyd's radio career. For these programs, he began to write songs, becoming accomplished at that trade as well. Throughout the 1960s, '70s, and '80s, MacColl was an influential force. He provided encouragement and advice to all manner of performers, from folk-rock stars like Maddy Prior, whose band Steeleye Span performed many songs she learned from MacColl, to Elvis Costello, whose first public appearance was a floor spot at a Ewan MacColl concert. MacColl continued to perform and record, releasing over 150 albums in his lifetime. He provided both traditional songs and ones of his own to generations of folk performers, from the Johnstons and the Dubliners in the '60s to the Pogues in the '80s. In the '70s, "The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face," which MacColl wrote for his third wife and musical partner Peggy Seeger, was recorded by Elvis Presley and also by Roberta Flack. Flack's version topped the U.S. pop charts and won a 1972 Grammy. MacColl continued to perform until shortly before his death on October 22, 1989.

what to buy: The Real MacColl ♪♪♪♪½ (Topic, 1993, prod. Tony Engle) was compiled from five original albums recorded for Topic between 1958 and 1966. The songs it presents reflect MacColl's varied relationships with song traditions. Selections include older Child ballads, Jacobite ballads, modern songs of industrial disasters, and original MacColl compositions. Notable tracks include a detailed version of "Van Dieman's Land," an excellent "Minorie" (a.k.a. "The Two Sisters"), and a wonderful take on Hamish Henderson's World War II song "Farewell to Sicily." MacColl's wife, Peggy Seeger, accompanies him on many numbers, playing guitar and five-string banjo. The accompaniments are generally subtle, tasteful, and unobtrusive, and many of the most effective tracks—like the devastating "Bramble Briar"—are sung unaccompanied in MacColl's supple and unique voice. Of MacColl's original songs, the best-known included on The Real MacColl is "Dirty Old Town," his ode to Salford, which has been covered by a whole stable of folk artists including the Pogues. The traditional material includes the original recordings from which Steeleye Span learned "Rogues in a Nation," "Sheepcrook and Black Dog," and "Come Ye o'er Frae France," testifying to MacColl's influence on the generation that followed him.

what to buy next: Black and White ♪♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1991, prod. Neill MacColl, Calum MacColl) is a CD compiled by MacColl's family from privately owned studio and live tapes. It gathers together a good number of MacColl's favorite traditional songs, such as the "Highland Muster Roll," which he used at the beginning of concerts to test the hall's acoustics and his own voice. It also features many of his best-known originals, including "Dirty Old Town," "The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face," "The Ballad of Accounting," "The Shoals of Herring," and "Kilroy Was Here." One of his first songs, "The Manchester Rambler," is given a particularly spirited arrangement by MacColl and many of his friends and family, including his daughter, pop star Kirsty MacColl. This is an excellent and unusual album—qualities matched by Ewan MacColl and Peggy Seeger: Folk on Two ♪♪♪♪ (Cooking Vinyl, 1996, prod. Geoffrey Hewitt). The latter is not primarily an album of MacColl's singing. Instead, it is better seen as an album about MacColl, featuring some vocals by him and many more by his friends and disciples. The first six tracks come from a 1986 concert in honor of MacColl's 70th birthday. Singers include Ian Campbell, Belle Stewart, Ray Fisher, Peggy Seeger, and MacColl himself, who sings only one of these tracks. The other five songs are from another concert honoring MacColl, this one from 1987. Here, Seeger sings two songs and MacColl three. "Joy of Living," the closing number, is a loving farewell to the world from a man nearing the end of his life; the fact that MacColl died only a few years later makes it a poignant moment. The album concludes with a fascinating 10-minute interview in which MacColl speaks about the origins of the British folk revival. Classic Scots Ballads ♪♪♪♪ (Tradition, 1997, prod. Anton Glovsky), a reissue of a 1959 LP recorded by MacColl and Seeger, contains another fine selection of songs from the duo; MacColl sings and Seeger provides vocal harmonies and guitar, banjo, concertina, and Appalachian dulcimer backup. This album focuses exclusively on traditional songs, and on ones sung in the Lowland Scots tongue; selections include "Aikendrum," "The Maid Gaed Tae the Mill," "Hughie Graeme," and "I Loved a Lass." The arrangements are tasteful and low-key, and allow MacColl's expressive voice as much freedom as it needs. Although it is short, this CD has the advantage of state-of-the-art sonic restoration, which makes it sound bet-

west african drumming and the soul of rock 'n' roll

Think rock 'n' roll is the devil's music? Blame it on the drums. The roots of rock can be traced all the way back to the throbbing tribal percussion of the Yoruba and Dahomean peoples, whose traditions stretched several hundred miles along the West African coast, from western Nigeria into Benin and Togo. As the natives of this region were sold into slavery, their traditions spread throughout the "new" world, with Haitian Vodou, Brazilian Candomblé, Cuban Santería, and Trinidadian Shango all originating from the same sources and all connected via the transatlantic slave trade. Though each of these religions developed its own instruments and styles of rhythmic syncopation, all had in common the ritualistic use of hypnotic percussion as the basis for transcendental (and often trance-inducing) songs of praise. As frightened slave-owners in the Americas began to recognize the role of the drums in non-Christian forms of worship and illicit means of communication (after all, they don't call it the "talking drum" for nothing!), the slaves were largely forced to abandon both their religious practices and the use of the drums. But even as they developed a totally new form of praise-song—the spiritual—the enslaved Africans found ingenious ways to hold on to their ancient musical traditions, with the swing of an ax or a hammer done in time to the singing to keep the ever-important beat. With the abolition of slavery, African Americans soon added instruments like the guitar to turn the spiritual into the blues, the blues into jazz, then R&B, then rock 'n' roll, and later hip-hop. Now, several hundred years after its importation, still the beat goes on.

see also: The Kora and West African Griot (sidebar), the Talking Drum (sidebar)

Bret Love

ter than most of the duo's reissues. The Jacobite Rebellions ♪♪♪½ (1962) was one of the albums from which The Real MacColl was compiled; it has also been reissued as a stand-alone CD, and features many stirring performances not found on The Real MacColl. Most of the well-known Jacobite ballads appear on this album—unsurprisingly; they are well known partly because they appeared on this album. MacColl's rich voice was one of the revival's defining sounds, and his sense of drama informs such songs as "Come Ye o'er Frae France" and "Donald MacGillivray." The deep loss and unfulfilled longing of much of the form is expressed beautifully here, as on "Wae's Me for Prince Charlie" and "Bonnie Moorhen." MacColl is, in customary fashion, accompanied by Seeger on guitar and banjo and also sings many songs unaccompanied. Bothy Ballads of Scotland ♪♪♪½ , on the other hand, is an entirely unaccompanied affair. It contains songs of the rural laborers of the 19th century, which were sung in the "bothy" or farm barracks. Most of the songs are therefore about farm life, farm work, and love among the fields. Many of them show hired laborers in direct conflict or at least disagreements with their employers, a frequent theme of the genre. Others treat the classic themes of folk song in general: unrequited love, premature death, good whiskey, and bawdy fun. MacColl is in fine voice on this disc, which suffers only from being relatively short and rather lo-fi.

the rest:
(With Peggy Seeger) Lover's Garland ♪♪½ (Pye, 1962)
(With Peggy Seeger) At the Present Moment ♪♪½ (Rounder, 1973)
Songs of Robert Burns ♪♪♪ (Ossian, 1996)
Scottish Traditional Songs ♪♪♪ (Ossian, 1996) Traditional Songs and Ballads of Scotland ♪♪♪ (Ossian, 1996) worth searching for: MacColl made more than 150 LPs, so used record bins are bound to have some of his material. One set that was particularly important was the nine-LP The English and Scottish Popular Ballads (Riverside, 1956, prod. Kenneth Goldstein), which was produced and annotated by folklorist Kenneth S. Goldstein and featured both MacColl and A.L. Lloyd. MacColl is also the main performer on about 20 Folkways albums, all of which are available as custom cassettes or CDs from Smithsonian Folkways Records at the Smithsonian Institution.

influences:
- Betsy Miller, Jeannie Robertson, Belle Stewart
- Dolores Keane, John Faulkner, Sandra Kerr, Brian Pearson, Frankie Armstrong, Mick Moloney, the Johnstons, the Dubliners, the Clancy Brothers, Steeleye Span, Archie Fisher, Ray Fisher, Cilla Fisher, the Tannahill Weavers, Dick Gaughan

see also: Frankie Armstrong, Ian Campbell Folk Group, John Faulkner, A.L. Lloyd, Steeleye Span

Steve Winick

Laurel MacDonald

Avant-garde multiculturalism

Born in Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada. Based in Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

A distinctive vocalist/composer whose tremendous range and experimental approach invite stylistic comparisons to Laurie Anderson and former Dead Can Dance chanteuse Lisa Gerrard, this Nova Scotia native is perhaps best-known for co-producing Suas e!, the Wicklow Records debut of singer/songwriter Mary Jane Lamond, who is not only MacDonald's label-mate but also her cousin. However, even before MacDonald's own Wicklow debut, Chroma, was released in early 1999, she was a favorite on the Canadian music scene. Soon after her first album, 1995's Kiss Closed My Eyes, gained widespread critical acclaim, her songs found their way onto the Here & Now: A Celebration of Canadian Music anthology, British journalist David Toop's Crooning on Venus compilation, and the soundtrack to the film The Hanging Garden. Her music has also been incorporated into a number of ballet and modern dance performances in Canada, New York, and Paris, and the singer's inroads in the Lower 48 proceeded with a recent profile on the Bravo! TV network.

what's available: Chroma ♪♪♪ (Wicklow, 1999, prod. Philip Strong), MacDonald's first U.S. release, is a compelling mixture of haunting lullabies, hypnotic chanting, and existential excursions into avant-garde surrealism. At times a little too reminiscent of Laurie Anderson's alien artistry, MacDonald occasionally seems to be trying too hard, her eclectic mannerisms and stylistic eccentricities coming off as contrived rather than improvised. But for the most part, the album is filled with ethereal, lushly layered soundscapes that perfectly match her intensely evocative vocal style. From the medieval influences of "Agnus Dei" to the throbbing tribal percussion of "Òran na h-Eala" to the genteel Irish balladry of "Seek Ye the Lambs," MacDonald's aural experiments are always intriguing, even when they don't quite work. Wingspan ♪♪♪ (Wicklow, 1999, prod. various) is a six-song EP featuring versions of MacDonald's single "A Wing and a Prayer" remixed by techno luminaries including Bill Laswell, Transglobal Underground, and Canadian groove collective Mo Funk.

worth searching for: MacDonald's first album, Kiss Closed My Eyes, was a Canadian release praised as "densely textured and exquisitely woven" by Billboard, so you may still be able to track it down in new-age record stores here in the U.S.

influences:
- Laurie Anderson, Lisa Gerrard, Kate Bush, Steve Reich, Celtic folk
- Mary Jane Lamond

see also: Mary Jane Lamond

Bret Love

Machito

Cuban jazz

Born Frank Grillo, February 16, 1915, in Havana, Cuba. Died April 15, 1984, in London, England.

In 1937 Machito arrived in New York City, where he sang and played with Las Estrellas Habaneras, Noro Morales, Xavier Cugat, and Orquesta Siboney. By 1940 he had formed his own band, Machito's Afro-Cubans, and when his brother-in-law, Mario Bauzá, joined the group as musical director, the foundation for one of the greatest Latin bands of all time was laid. Bauzá worked with arrangers like A.K. Salim, John Bartee, and Rene Hernandez to blend Cuban percussion and rhythms with jazz for a sound that revolutionized Latin music. One of Machito's young percussion players from this time, Tito Puente, later took these innovations and polished them still further, but he was probably the only "name" musician to develop from the early 1940s-era bands. Most of the players were originally hired as ensemble members, not spectacular soloists, and the emphasis was on the aggregate, not the individual. The music of Machito's band became a major influence on Stan Kenton and Dizzy Gillespie, while other jazz players like Charlie Parker, Johnny Griffin, Herbie Mann, and Cannonball Adderley either played or recorded with Machito at one point in their careers. During the 1950s Machito's popularity started to slide with the general public, although he continued to make albums through the early '80s.

what to buy: Mucho Macho Machito ♪♪♪♪ (Pablo, 1991, prod. various) is a fine collection of Machito's material from the cusp of the '50s with one of his best bands. The sound has been cleaned up considerably, and songs like "Babarabatiri" and "Asia Minor" cook from beginning to end. Machito is aided by his stalwart trio of arrangers (Bauzá, Salim, and Hernandez) and the addition of jazz players Doc Cheatham, Joe Newman, and Adderley in producing Kenya ♪♪♪♪ (Palladium), some of the finest playing ever released under Machito's name. Their cover of "Tin Tin Deo" is superb, and the underrated Salim's charts for "Oyeme" and "Conversation" are a real treat. The percussion work of Jose Mangual, Candido, and "Patato" Valdes follows the tradition laid down by Chano Pozo and precedes efforts by Ray Barretto and Giovanni Hidalgo, among others. This album has been released under other names, including Latin Soul Plus Jazz on Tico and, most recently, Afro Cuban Jazz on La Mejor Musica. The latter album is a mid-price release that changes the sequencing, gets the writing credits wrong, eliminates any liner notes, deletes "Tururato," and adds four tunes from other sessions, including Chico O'Farril's "Mambo Parts 1 & 2."

what to buy next: Other than not having any liner notes or personnel listings, This Is Machito and His Afro-Cubans ♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1978, prod. various) is a fine collection of Machito's more jazz-oriented recordings. "Christopher Columbus" is a classic Chuck Berry riff that benefits from the Cubop treatment, while mambo cuts like "Sentimental Mambo," "Relax and Mambo," and the fun if slightly cheesy "Dragnet Mambo" show why Machito's band was such a hit at legendary dance halls like New York's Palladium.

the rest:

1983 Grammy Award Winner ♪♪♪½ (Impulse!, 1983)
Cubop City (1949–50) ♪♪♪½ (Tumbao Cuban Classics, 1992) Tremendo Cuban (1949–52) ♪♪♪½ (Tumbao Cuban Classics, 1992)

influences:

Arsenio Rodriguez

Dizzy Gillespie, Stan Kenton, Herbie Mann, Tito Puente

see also: Ray Barretto, Mario Bauzá, Patato, Tito Puente

Garaud MacTaggart

Ashley MacIsaac

Celtic/Canadian fiddle

Born February 24, 1975, in Creignish, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, Canada. Based in Nova Scotia, Canada.

Young Ashley MacIsaac's success in the music industry shouldn't come as much of a surprise. The fiddle phenomenon has been exposed to music all his life; his father, another fiddler, would play around the house, and MacIsaac himself got a rather early start, learning to stepdance at age five and beginning formal fiddle instruction at age nine. A fast learner and then some, he began touring Canada as well as U.S. cities like Detroit and Boston by the time he was 13 and has filled venues ranging from local Cape Breton sites to New York's Carnegie Hall. Does the term "prodigy" come to mind? MacIsaac has won numerous honors, including Best Live Act at the 1995 East Coast Music Awards and both Best New Solo Artist and Best Roots and Traditional Album/Solo at the 1996 Juno Awards. He was the subject of a major-label feeding frenzy while still in his teens. A&M won out.

what to buy: MacIsaac's major-label debut megahit, Hi How Are You Today? ♪♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1995, prod. Michael Phillip Wojewoda, Pete Prilesnik), reflects both his Celtic/Canadian heritage and his youthful exuberance in its driving, aggressive instrumentation. It is a perfect, if unlikely, combination of ancient Celtic folk songs with punk-rock arrangements and attitude.

the rest:

Fine Thank You Very Much ♪♪♪♪ (Unisphere, 1998)

worth searching for: MacIsaac's fiery fiddle does a funky slow burn on "Bòg a'Lochain" from Mary Jane Lamond's Suas e! ♪♪♪♪½

(A&M, 1997/Wicklow, 1998, prod. Philip Strong, Laurel MacDonald), the breakout album from the vocalist who shared MacIsaac's acclaim on Hi How Are You Today?'s "Sleepy Maggie." The fiddler shows traditional chops as riveting as his experimental ones on "My Home/The Contradiction/Julia Delaney" from the Chieftains' all-star Canadian Celtic revue Fire in the Kitchen ♪♪♪♪ (BMG Classics, 1998, prod. Paddy Moloney). MacIsaac's Canadian releases, Close to the Floor (Unisphere, 1992) and A Cape Breton Christmas (1993), are available as imports.

influences:

⏮ The Chieftains, the Clash, Charlie Daniels

⏭ Leahy

see also: Mary Jane Lamond

Christopher Scanlon

Talitha MacKenzie

Celtic, Scottish, worldbeat

Born April 3, 1956, in Oceanside, NY, USA. Based in Edinburgh, Scotland.

Talitha MacKenzie first heard traditional Gaelic singing at the age of seven and has been fascinated by it ever since. In order to perform it herself, MacKenzie studied field recordings and a "Teach Yourself Gaelic" textbook. She was interested in other cultures as well and studied French, Russian, Spanish, German, and Italian in school and still more languages on her own. But her future career path became clear during her college years. She started out as a Russian major at Connecticut College, but then switched gears and actually graduated from the New England Conservatory of Music with a degree in Music History/Ethnomusicology. During the 1970s MacKenzie was involved with various dance troupes (Renaissance, Baroque, Balkan, Celtic) and also worked as a "shantyman" and deckhand on "tall ships" where she developed an appreciation for heavily rhythmic work-related music. In the early and mid-1980s MacKenzie recorded an album with the Boston-based Irish band St. James Gate and then made her solo debut, Shantyman. She also toured across America for several years performing "mouth music" (unaccompanied vocals to accompany Scottish dances) with Scottish bands. In 1987 MacKenzie took the leap of moving to Scotland itself, where she immediately began working with the folk ensemble Drumalban. In 1988 she founded an outfit of her own with Scottish film and TV director Martin Swan: Mouth Music, which experimented with traditional Gaelic songs given high-tech Afro-pop dance-beat arrangements. MacKenzie kept developing that concept under her own name after resuming her solo career. Her first recording thereafter, Sòlas, featured original arrangements of mouth music and waulking (washing) songs, along with a lullaby and a sea chantey. For her next album, Spiorad (Spirit), MacKenzie broadened her focus by including material from Brittany, Serbia, and Bulgaria. She also wrote original texts for several of the traditional selections adapted for the album. Currently MacKenzie is teaching voice and has begun working on her fourth solo CD, Global Sequence. This next work will cast an even wider range than MacKenzie's earlier recordings; she plans to include adaptations of ethnic material from Cherokee, Sephardic, Persian, Brazilian, African American, and Australian Aboriginal cultures as well as her trademark Celtic sources.

what to buy: Mouth Music ♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1991, prod. Chic Medley) can be viewed as the first installment of a trilogy focusing on modern treatments of traditional Gaelic songs. The high-tech arrangements—utilizing keyboards and electronic percussion—that supported MacKenzie's straightforward singing style were actually fairly sparse and abstract. By the time she came to record Sòlas ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1994, prod. Iain McKenna, Chris Birkett, Talitha MacKenzie), she'd developed a more organic style. Although electronic instruments still predominate on most of the arrangements, the album's sound has more of a band feel, with instrumental support more sympathetic to MacKenzie's voice. And the traditional Gaelic pieces truly adapt well to their modernizations. The waulking songs are inherently rhythmic; the electric instruments only sharpen their already-strong beats. Traditional instruments like fiddles and pipes join in on several tracks to add even more colors to these fascinating arrangements. On Spiorad ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1996, prod. Chris Birkett) MacKenzie's voice takes on more of a pop sheen and exuberance, particularly on the opener "Fill Iu O," a waulking song for which MacKenzie wrote timely new lyrics. Then she sounds like a Gaelic reggae toaster (rapper) on "Fionnaghuala." A taste of MacKenzie's forthcoming multi-ethnic Global Sequence project is provided by her treatments of the Bulgarian dance tune "Hopa!" with its nifty accordion-like synth part; "Ajde Jano," a Serbian dance song whose approach here is reminiscent of the Finnish band Värttinä; and "Changerais-Tu?" a Breton (French Celtic) dance song given a jaunty reggae-fied rhythm. It fits! The dense poly-ethnic groove then opens out into "Fear A' Bhata," a lament in which MacKenzie's voice is supported only by recorder and keyboard drone. Beautiful. MacKenzie is one of those performers who takes traditional folk styles and updates them without losing the sources' soul—along the way revealing refreshing relationships between seemingly unrelated traditions.

influences:

⏮ Field recordings of Mary Morrison (Barra), Calum Johnston (Barra), and Mrs. Archie MacDonald (South Uist), printed sources, Incredible String Band, Steeleye Span, Harry Belafonte

Mary Jane Lamond, Afro Celt Sound System, Shooglenifty, Peatbog Faeries, Loreena McKennitt, Paul Mounsey/Nahoo, Capercaillie, Massive Attack, Angélique Kidjo

see also: Mouth Music

Ken Roseman

Dougie MacLean

Scottish folk

Born 1954, in Perthshire, Scotland. Based in Scotland.

Heralded as Scotland's premier folk-singing troubadour, Dougie MacLean writes finely crafted songs that are inspired by self-discovery, nature, love, and Gaelic history. Whether he's singing about the Australian outback in "Singing Land" or coming to grips with self-doubt in "Ready for the Storm," his lilting melodies are bright and beautiful lullabies in these troubled times. An exceptional performer who tours the world, MacLean's concerts are highlighted by his enthusiasm and knack for storytelling between songs. Born a gardener's son in a family where his father played fiddle and his mother mandolin, MacLean was busking around Scotland in his teens when he was picked to be a member of the Tannahill Weavers, a popular traditional folk group. MacLean, anxious to perform more of his own compositions, teamed up with Alan Roberts, a Scottish guitarist, for two albums, Caledonia and C.R.M. (the latter also with Alex Campbell). Looking to broaden his playing skills further, MacLean joined Silly Wizard, another notable Scottish folk group, and spent six months touring Europe and America with the band. Since 1983 he has been releasing his own songs on his own label, Dunkeld Records, and enjoying immense popularity as a consummate performer who champions issues such as Scottish independence and protecting the environment. Dunkeld Records can be described as promoting Scotland's "new heritage" music, and the roster of folk musicians signed to the label include Hamish Moore, Sheena Wellington, Freda Morrison, Gordon Duncan, and Blackeyed Biddy. In 1989 and '90, MacLean toured the States and did concerts for the popular public radio series Thistle & Shamrock. He also played the Shetland and Orkney music celebrations and was a featured performer at the Edinburgh Festival. In 1993 the BBC presented The Land: Songs of Dougie MacLean on television. In the last few years he has made Nashville an important spot on his itinerary, performing in concert with country star Kathy Mattea and co-producing her Time Passes By album. At the other extreme, 1996 saw one of his songs, "The Gael," given the techno/dance treatment by Galleria and played in discos in Europe. MacLean shows a special knack in drawing large crowds and devoted fans to his concerts who seem to know every word of every song he's written, and his live appearances are memorable events for all. With the release of the highly successful Riof in 1997, MacLean's popularity only seems to grow. Just about all of his albums since 1983 are now available in stores or can be mail-ordered through Dunkeld Records, Cathedral Street, Dunkeld, Perthshire PH8 OAW Scotland; telephone: (01350) 727686; fax: (01350) 728606. His website, www.dunkeld.co.uk, is divided into "The Studio," "The Gallery," "The Office," and "The Store," with other sites that explain his guitar tunings, tour dates, and guitar and fiddle preferences. There is also an excellent newsletter called Contact (available at the address above), which keeps Dougie fans updated with news and album information.

what to buy: The best sampling of MacLean material can be found on Putamayo Presents the Dougie MacLean Collection ♪♪♪♪♪ (Putamayo, 1995, prod. Dan Storper), which surveys songs from seven MacLean albums. Singing Land ♪♪♪♪♪ (Dunkeld Records, 1986, prod. Dougie MacLean, Jennifer MacLean) is the ultimate MacLean experience; it best represents his stylistic brilliance with songs teetering between pure joy ("This Love Will Carry") and destruction ("Guillotine's Release"). Another heavy hitter for best MacLean album would be Riof ♪♪♪♪½ (Dunkeld, 1997, prod. Dougie MacLean, Graeme Hughes, Jennifer MacLean), a fine mix of haunting instrumentals, finely crafted traditional songs, and contemporary numbers that whisk you away to the Scottish Highlands in the blink of an eye. Also quite good and highly recommended are Real Estate ♪♪♪♪ (Dunkeld, 1988, prod. Dougie MacLean, Jennifer MacLean), Indigenous ♪♪♪½ (Dunkeld, 1991, prod. Dougie MacLean, Graeme Hughes), and Whitewash ♪♪♪½ (Dunkeld, 1990, prod. Dougie MacLean, Jennifer MacLean).

what to buy next: The Plant Life Years ♪♪♪ (Osmosys, 1995, prod. Nigel Pegrum) is a compilation of songs taken from MacLean's early records Caledonia, C.R.M., and Snaigow, and demonstrates MacLean's fondness for traditional tunes. If you're looking for mainly instrumentals with the MacLean magic touch, then you can't go wrong with Fiddle ♪♪♪ (Dunkeld, 1984, prod. Dougie MacLean, Jennifer MacLean), The Search ♪♪♪ (Dunkeld, 1990, prod. Dougie MacLean, Graeme Hughes), and Sunset Song ♪♪♪ (Dunkeld, 1993, prod. Dougie MacLean, Graeme Hughes). All three are rooted in traditional Scottish folklore, and provide plenty of opportunities for MacLean's masterfully played guitar and fiddle to shine. If you like Scottish poets Robert Burns, Neil Gow, and Robert Tannahill, then you'll enjoy MacLean's wonderful song interpretations on Craigie Dhu ♪♪♪ (Dunkeld, 1983, prod. Dougie MacLean, Roy Ashby) and Tribute ♪♪♪ (Dunkeld, 1995, prod. Dougie MacLean, Graeme Hughes, Jennifer MacLean). Don't forget to wear the tartan! Then again, if you want to hear more of Dougie's own passionate early songwriting in the style of what to avoid: If you're thinking of hearing a lot of MacLean on the soundtrack of The Last of the Mohicans (Morgan Creek, 1992, prod. Michael Mann), forget it. With only 10 minutes of music by MacLean, there's far too much symphonic trembling to contend with to make it worth the money.

Riof, you should buy yourself Butterstone ♪♪♪ (Dambuster, 1989, prod. Richard Digance) and Marching Mystery ♪♪♪ (Dunkeld, 1994, prod. Dougie MacLean, Graeme Hughes, Jennifer MacLean).

worth searching for: Four MacLean albums are rare and quite worth the treasure hunt. The wonderful Caledonia ♪♪♪ (Plant Life, 1978, prod. Nigel Pegrum) features the original version of the title song, which was later made into a megahit by Frankie Miller and which is the nearest thing to a new Scottish national anthem in the last 20 years. This early edition uses the swirling sounds of the Delme String Quartet to offset MacLean's homesick longing for the mother country. The album is firmly rooted in tradition but has the familiar MacLean trademarks: jangling guitar and passionate voice. Ace guitarist Alan Roberts is featured throughout. C.R.M. ♪♪♪ (Plant Life, 1979, prod. Nigel Pegrum) is a spirited and rollicking romp with Scottish music legends Alex Campbell and (again) Alan Roberts. More of a Celtic hootenanny than other MacLean efforts, C.R.M. has a pub-like feel on numbers like "Rattlin' Roarin' Willie" and "Leis a Lurighan." Snaigow ♪♪½ (Plant Life, 1980, prod. Nigel Pegrum) and On a Wing and a Prayer ♪♪½ (Plant Life, 1981, prod. Nigel Pegrum) showcase MacLean's early songwriting talents as he refines his personal style.

influences:

- Jackson Browne, James Taylor, Joni Mitchell, Cat Stevens, Frazer McGlen & His Scottish Country Dance Band
- Kathy Mattea, David Wilcox, Martin Simpson, Dick Gaughan

see also: Silly Wizard, Andy M. Stewart, Tannahill Weavers

TJ McGrath

Natalie MacMaster

Cape Breton Scottish fiddle music

Born June 13, 1972, in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, Canada. Based in Nova Scotia, Canada.

Natalie MacMaster is at the top of a talented class of young musicians bringing the traditional Scottish fiddle music of Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, to the world. An excellent young fiddler and dancer with undeniable charisma and stage presence, MacMaster is well known to audiences in the United States from frequent performances at festivals and on tours. She has appeared with the Celtic Fiddle Festival, the Chieftains, Carlos Santana, and others. She grew up in a musical family, getting her first fiddle at age three and learning to play from some of the greats of Cape Breton music, including her uncle, legendary fiddler Buddy MacMaster. She recorded her first album at age 16 and soon after was performing at major festivals in Canada and the States. MacMaster's career has continued to develop over countless concert appearances, more albums, and several awards from the Canadian music industry. She is among Canada's best-known traditional performers and has a great future ahead of her.

what to buy: What you want from MacMaster's small catalog depends on your tastes. For someone just beginning to explore Cape Breton's music, No Boundaries ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1997, prod. Chad Irschick) would serve as a fine introduction. A mixed bag of instrumentals and songs from Cape Breton and beyond, set in both traditional and contemporary settings, this record was released in Canada by Warner Bros. and was designed to bring Natalie's music to as wide an audience as possible. As with all of her recordings the playing is flawless and filled with energy, particularly when she works with long-time partners Dave MacIsaac and Tracey Dares. Although some of the contemporary arrangements strain a little too hard at a Sharon Shannon-ish crossover style, Natalie's good taste keeps things pretty well under control. Rounding out the collection are two songs, one sung by Cookie Rankin of the Rankin family, and one by Cape Breton songwriter Bruce Guthro, that provide a nice change of pace from the fiddle tunes. For those music fans who like their coffee black, their scotch neat, and their fiddle music straight, Fit As a Fiddle ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997, prod. Glen Meisner, Dave MacIsaac) is the recording to choose. MacMaster powers through a solid set of traditional Cape Breton dance music, accompanied by MacIsaac and Dares. The arrangements are simpler than on No Boundaries and the forays into outside styles less adventuresome. This is a simple, powerful album showcasing Natalie at what she does best, Cape Breton fiddling with a lot of drive, swing, and power; an awesome technique wedded to great taste and a thorough understanding of the tradition.

what to buy next: Previously available only in Canada, A Compilation ♪♪♪½ (MacMaster Music, 1996/Rounder, 1998, compilation prod. Paul MacDonald) is a reissue of selected tracks from MacMaster's first two albums, Four on the Floor and Road to the Isle, both originally on cassette and now out of print. Natalie was just a teenager when she made these strong, self-assured recordings. Her playing is excellent as always, with great swing and lift on the dance tunes and a solid touch on the slow airs. Although she has since matured as a musician, the qualities that make her stand out were all there from the beginning, as this fine CD shows.

the rest:

In My Hands N/A (Rounder, 1999)

influences:

◀◀ Buddy MacMaster, Brendan Mulvihill, Jerry Holland

▶▶ Ashley MacIsaac, Richard Wood

Tony Ziselberger

Mad Lion

Ragga/hip-hop

Born in London, England. Based in Brooklyn, NY, USA.

Like a fierce jungle cat, Mad Lion has a roar that can be heard for miles. The London-born, Jamaican-raised, Brooklyn-living ragga (digital reggae) MC sprang up from the Boogie Down Productions camp and quickly captured the hip-hop scene with the song "Shoot to Kill" (which so aptly used the slick backing track from KRS-One's "Black Cop"). Originally called Medallion, Mad Lion got his new name from ragga forbear Super Cat, whom he met while visiting Super Power Records in Flatbush, Brooklyn. It was at that same store where Mad Lion met KRS-One, which led to his BDP membership. Even while releasing albums and underground singles, Mad Lion also found time to earn his Certified Public Accountant's degree—just in case his career as a musician roars to a close.

what to buy: After the B-side single "Shoot to Kill" infected the underground rap-club scene, Mad Lion released the dark and menacing "Take It Easy" (another KRS-One production), and it looked as if he could do no wrong. Unfortunately, his debut album, Real Ting ♪♪♪ (Weeded, 1994, prod. KRS-One), couldn't sustain that same raw energy for its entirety, though Mad Lion did come through with notable songs like the title track and "Double Trouble."

the rest:

Ghetto Gold and Platinum Respect ♪♪♪ (Nervous, 1997)

worth searching for: Mad Lion is in full growl on "Friends," an all-star ragga-hop track with Queen Latifah on Salt 'n' Pepa's Brand New ♪♪♪♪ (London, 1997, executive prod. Cheryl "Salt" James, Sandra "Pepa" Denton).

influences:

◀◀ Super Cat, Nicodemus, Shabba Ranks, KRS-One

Jazzbo

Mad Professor /Neil Fraser

Dub, dub poetry, reggae, lovers' rock

Born in Guyana. Based in London, England.

Jamaican producers have not released many dub treatments (the studio-manipulated, often-instrumental versions of reggae recordings) since the heyday of the 1970s, but dub has maintained a strong following in London, where a trio of prolific producers—Adrian Sherwood, Jah Shaka, and Neil Fraser, a.k.a. Mad Professor—have been releasing new spins on traditional dub techniques since the early '80s.

Neil Fraser concocts heavy roots dub mixes, while moonlighting as a producer of lovers' rock, a British phenomenon that floats romantic soul vocals over a reggae bass line. His Ariwa Sound studios in Peckham, South London, are home to roots acts like Macka B, the current output of the legendary Lee "Scratch" Perry, and also the sweet love songs of Sandra Cross and Kofi. Alongside Adrian Sherwood's modern On-U Sound and Jah Shaka's traditionally rootsy Shaka Music, Fraser's Ariwa Sound is the heart of British dub.

Fraser's in-house team of session players includes some of London's finest reggae musicians, all of whom are multi-instrumentalists, including Black Steel, William the Conqueror, Errol the General, Dennis Nolan, and Mafia. They each seem equally adept at keyboard, guitar, bass, drums, and vocals. Most recordings—particularly the more recent efforts—have featured guest appearances by titans in the industry like the late Augustus Pablo, Yabby You, Lee "Scratch" Perry, Jah Shaka, and Horace Andy. In 1995 Fraser experimented with the state-of-the-art electronic "jungle" style, working with Douggie Digital and Juggler to remix their fast breakbeats with heavy dub rhythms—check out Mazaruni: The Jungle Dub Experience (Ariwa/RAS 1995); Rupuni Safari: Steaming Jungle (Ariwa/RAS 1995); and (with Lee Perry) Super Ape Inna Jungle (Ariwa/RAS 1995).

While it is as a producer that Fraser will continue to have the most profound effect on British reggae (he remains a magnet for talent from Bristol, Birmingham, Kingston, and London), his own recordings both set standards for new mixing techniques and reflect the changing socio-political concerns at the heart of London's Jamaican community—a role for which Fraser is paradoxically but perceptively positioned as a sympathetic but South America–born outsider.

what to buy: For career overviews check out It's a Mad, Mad, Mad Professor ♪♪♪♪ (RAS, 1994) or the slightly more up-to-date RAS Portraits ♪♪♪♪½ (RAS, 1997). Mad Professor's Dub Me Crazy series is currently on Part 12, but the highlights are the zany debut Dub Me Crazy ♪♪♪♪½ (Ariwa 1982) and Who Knows the Secret of the Master Tape? Dub Me Crazy Part Five ♪♪♪♪♪ (Ariwa, 1990). Professor's remix of Massive Attack's Protection is perhaps his greatest work: No Protection ♪♪♪♪♪ (Circa/Gyroscope, 1994, prod. Massive Attack, Nellee Hooper), a labor of love with cascading beats and rippling reverb for the group that spawned electronic trailblazer Tricky.

mad pudding

what to buy next: Fraser works in a variety of prolific series. The aforesaid Dub Me Crazy is the longest running in dub, with at least 12 diverse volumes recorded over 16 years. Most of these releases work from loosely defined concepts that serve as his central themes: black politics, Rastafarianism, Africa, love, Vodou, the Caribbean, psychedelia, and the Bible. But Fraser does not stick rigorously to the concept and can freely mix his pet subjects on any one album. The Black Liberation series is more overtly political and features samples of speeches by Jesse Jackson and Louis Farrakhan. These and other recordings are detailed in the following section; let the ratings be your guide in navigating a body of work with much of worth to discover. The list, not comprehensive for such a fertile artist even at this length, focuses on solo albums rather than Fraser's excellent collaborations with Perry and Macka B, or his vast catalog of production work on lovers' rock records.

best of the rest:

Beyond the Realms of Dub: Dub Me Crazy Part 2 ♪♪♪ (Ariwa/RAS, 1982)
Jah Shaka Meets Mad Professor ♪♪♪ (Ariwa/RAS, 1984)
Negus Roots Meets Mad Professor ♪♪½ (Ariwa/RAS, 1984)
Escape to the Asylum of Dub: Dub Me Crazy Part 4 ♪♪♪ (Ariwa/RAS, 1990)
Schizophrenic Dub: Dub Me Crazy Part 6 ♪♪♪ (Ariwa/RAS, 1990)
Adventures of a Dub Sampler: Dub Me Crazy Part 7 ♪♪½ (Ariwa/RAS, 1990)
Experiments of the Aural Kind: Dub Me Crazy Part 8 ♪♪♪ (Ariwa/RAS, 1990)
Science & the Witchdoctor: Dub Me Crazy Part 9 ♪♪½ (Ariwa/RAS, 1990)
Psychedelic Dub: Dub Me Crazy Part 10 ♪♪ (RAS, 1990)
A Feast of Yellow Dub ♪♪♪ (RAS, 1990)
Mad Professor Captures Pato Banton ♪½ (Ariwa/RAS, 1990)
Mad Professor Recaptures Pato Banton ♪ (Ariwa/RAS, 1990)
Hi-jacked to Jamaica: Dub Me Crazy Part 11 ♪♪♪ (Ariwa/RAS, 1991)
Dub Maniacs on the Rampage: Dub Me Crazy Part 12 ♪♪♪ (Ariwa/RAS, 1992)
True Born African Dub ♪♪♪ (Ariwa/RAS, 1992)
The Lost Scrolls of Moses ♪♪♪ (Ariwa/RAS, 1993)
The African Connection: Dub Me Crazy Part 3 ♪♪♪♪ (Ariwa/RAS, 1995)
Black Liberation Dub Chapter One ♪♪♪½ (Ariwa/RAS, 1995)
Anti-Racist Dub Broadcast: Black Liberation Dub Chapter Two ♪♪♪ (Ariwa/RAS, 1995)
In a Rub a Dub Style ♪♪½ (Ariwa/RAS, 1995)
Evolution of Dub: Black Liberation Dub Chapter Three ♪♪♪♪ (Ariwa/RAS, 1996)
New Decade of Dub ♪♪♪ (Ariwa/RAS, 1996)
Dub Take the Voodoo out of Reggae ♪♪♪½ (Ariwa/RAS, 1996)
Caribbean Taste of Technology ♪♪♪½ (Ariwa/RAS, 1996)
Under the Spell of Dub: Black Liberation Dub Chapter Four ♪♪♪½ (Ariwa/RAS, 1997)
Dub You Crazy with Love ♪♪♪ (Ariwa/RAS, 1997)
At Checkpoint Charlie ♪♪♪½ (Ariwa/RAS, 1998)

influences:

◀◀ King Tubby, Lee "Scratch" Perry, Bob Andy, Marcia Griffiths

▶▶ The Orb, Massive Attack, Tricky, Bush Chemists, Dub Syndicate, New Age Steppers, Renegade Soundwave

see also: Lee "Scratch" Perry

David Poole

Mad Pudding

Anglo-Celtic folk-rock, Canadian folk

Formed 1989, in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada. Based in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada.

Amy Stephen, vocals, accordion, pennywhistle; Andy Hillhouse, vocals, guitar, mandolin, bouzouki; Cam Wilson, fiddle, vocals; Richard Ernst, fretless bass, vocals (1989–96); Boris Favre (France), electric bass, piano, vocals, pieds (feet) (1996–present); John Hildebrand, drums, percussion (1993–97); Allan Dionne, drums, percussion (1997–present). (All members are from Canada except where noted otherwise.)

Mad Pudding revolves around Andy Hillhouse, Amy Stephen, and Cam Wilson, who met as college students at the University of British Columbia in the late 1980s. Hillhouse and Stephen had begun playing as a duo but expanded when they met Wilson, who brought with him Ottawa Valley fiddle tunes he'd learned from his father. Original bassist Richard Ernst joined in 1989, but the band really decided to "get serious" when drummer Hildebrand completed the quintet in 1993. With Hildebrand, Mad Pudding became a full tilt Anglo-Celtic/Canadian-roots folk-rock band whose repertoire included traditional and self-penned material. That lineup completed two albums and toured throughout Canada, also visiting the U.S. and Great Britain. Eventually Ernst left the band and was replaced by French-born Boris Favre, whose interest in the folk music of his culture is reflected on Mad Pudding's third album, Rattle on the Stovepipe, which includes his original song "Le Beaujolais Nouveau"—a celebration of the arrival of the new Beaujolais wine. It's not essential, but you may enjoy the music more with a glass of same in hand.

what to buy: Mad Pudding's eclectic tastes are well showcased on Rattle on the Stovepipe ♪♪♪♪½ (Iona, 1997, prod. Bill Vorndick), which includes hot fiddle- and accordion-led instrumentals, Amy Stephen's "Punjabi Marker"—which sounds like a centuries-old British ballad—and even two catchy pop-country numbers, "Rowena" and "Where Were You." Favre and Hildebrand form a swingin', funky rhythm section, and Stephen's and Hillhouse's vocals are more assured than before—great harmonies. This album also proves that Mad Pudding is a band whose exuberant live presence can be captured in the studio!

the rest:
Bruce's Vegetable Garden ♪♪♪♪▽ (Fiendish Records, 1994)
Dirt & Stone ♪♪♪♪▽ (Fiendish Records, 1995)
Grand Hotel N/A (Sliced Bread, 1999)

influences:
◀◀ Capercaillie, Stan Rogers, Silly Wizard, Spirit of the West, Moving Hearts

▶▶ Seelyhoo, James Keelaghan, Sharon Shannon, Kathryn Tickell

Ken Roseman

Joanie Madden

Irish whistle and flute

Born May 26, 1965, in NY, USA. Based in NY, USA.

Best known in her role as leader of the group Cherish the Ladies, Joanie Madden is rapidly developing a reputation as a fine solo artist as well. Her strong and compelling Irish whistle and flute performances have inspired many to take up the instruments, her outstanding energy and creative improvisation earning her plaudits as one of the leading flute players in the Irish canon. Born to Irish parents in America, Madden has called on her heritage when creating her own sense of musicality. She studied whistle with Jack Coen and had soon earned the title of World Champion on both whistle and concert flute. In 1984 she won the Senior All-Ireland Championship, the first American ever to do so. Despite her youth, she is already recognized as a prime mover in preserving Irish heritage in America and has won the Wild Geese award and been inducted into the Irish-American Musicians Hall of Fame. She has appeared as a guest on numerous recordings, including ones by such artists as Sinéad O'Connor, Sheila Noonan, Pete Seeger, and Eileen Ivers.

what's available: Song of the Irish Whistle ♪♪♪♪ (Hearts of Space, 1996, prod. Brian Keane) is an exciting collection of Irish tunes performed with passion by Madden. Filling the album with a wide variety of textures, she is joined by fine musicians Jerry O'Sullivan on uilleann pipes, Carol Thompson on Celtic harp, Brian Keane on guitars and keyboards, and others. From the evocative "Women of Ireland" to the fantastically rhythmic "The Legacy Jig/Tar Road to Sligo," Madden has created a picture of Ireland as varied as the landscape itself. Though this is predominantly a whistle recording, Madden does pick up her flute for a lilting Turlough O'Carolan tune. Song of the Irish Whistle 2 ♪♪♪♪ (Hearts of Space, 1999, prod. Brian Keane) is the continuation. On her earlier album A Whistle on the Wind ♪♪♪▽ (Green Linnet, 1994, prod. Joanie Madden, Gabriel Donohue), Madden's flute and whistle front a wide array of instruments, including accordion, guitar, cello, and fiddle. The title track, "A Whistle on the Wind/The Jug of Punch/The Dogs among the Bushes," combines three terrific tunes into one exciting medley. Madden's personal version of O'Carolan's "Blind Mary" is quite inspired. She ends the album accompanying a touching story-poem recited by Liam Clancy.

influences:
◀◀ Joe Madden, Jack Coen, Mike Rafferty

▶▶ Emer Mayock

see also: Cherish the Ladies, the Clancy Brothers, Steve Gorn, Paul Winter

Jo Hughey Morrison

Madness

Two-tone, ska, pop

Formed 1978, in London, England. Disbanded 1986.

Lee Thompson, saxophone; Chris Foreman, guitar; Mike Barson, keyboards; Dan Woodgate, drums; Mark Bedford, bass; Graham "Suggs" McPherson, vocals; Chas Smash (born Cathal Smythe), emcee, trumpet; others.

Maybe it's the fashions, or maybe the music itself, but there are some trends that Americans just seem destined not to get. Thus is was with the ska revival that swept England in the late '70s and early '80s. Purists by no means, Madness crossed all sorts of musical boundaries, from ska and gritty R&B to contemporary pop and near-novelty music for a mix that was anarchic and endlessly entertaining. All of Europe thought so, anyway, making Madness the toast of the Continent for a while, and rightfully so, considering how throughly the group broke down barriers of race, age, and attitude among audience members. Alas, the band's U.S. fortunes were much more modest. Here it's remembered as a new wave one-hit wonder for its pleasant pop song "Our House." The group disbanded in 1986, though some members later tried a comeback as the Madness, but by then the group had run its course. Now, a decade later, with another ska revival in full swing, Madness is finally being appreciated for the groundbreaking act it was. what to buy: Total Madness: The Very Best of Madness ♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1997, prod. various) offers a good introduction to the band, with "Our House," "One Step Beyond," and "Michael Caine," but it suffers for lack of the band's early Stiff singles. The compilation Madness ♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1983/1993, prod. various) fills in a little more of the story, but there are still some essential tracks missing, and both sets could be longer.

the rest:
Keep Moving ♪♪♪▽ (Geffen, 1984/1997)

Mad Not Mad ♪♪ (Geffen, 1985/1997)

worth searching for: Currently unavailable, the group's first two albums, One Step Beyond (Stiff, 1979/Sire, 1980) and Absolutely (Stiff/Sire 1980), set a very high entertainment quotient for the band to maintain.

influences:

⏮ Prince Buster, the Skatalites

⏭ No Doubt, Save Ferris, Hepcat, Barenaked Ladies

Daniel Durchholz

Madredeus

Portuguese pop-folk

Formed 1987, in Lisbon, Portugal. Based in Lisbon, Portrugal.

Pedro Ayres Magalhães, guitar; Teresa Salgueiro, vocals; Rodrigo Leão, keyboards (1987–94); Gabriel Gomes, accordion (1987–97); Francisco Ribeiro, cello (1987–97); José Peixoto, guitar (1993–present); Carlos Maria Trindade, keyboards (1994–present); Fernando Júdice, bass (1997–present). (All members are from Portugal.)

According to the group's founder Pedro Ayres Magalhães, Madredeus expresses the mood summed up by the Portuguese expression "saudede": "Saudede is a state in which a person allows himself to experience contradictory feelings or cultivate non-linear thoughts about love, life, and time. For Madredeus saudede is the key and the reason we make music." Magalhães and Leão started the group as a guitar-and-synthesizer duo. They decided to expand the sound, and so accordionist Gomes and cellist Ribeiro were recruited. The inaugural lineup was complete when Magalhães and Leão discovered Salgueiro singing fado (a kind of cabaret urban folk-blues from Lisbon) in a bar and asked her to join. Throughout the spring of 1987 the band rehearsed in an old church in the Lisbon neighborhood of Madre de Deus, from which they would take their name. Os Dias da MadreDeus, their debut CD, was recorded live in the church several months later. Existir, the follow-up, was released in the spring of 1990 and included the #1 Portuguese hit "O Pastor." Next to come was the double live set Lisbon, recorded at the Coliseu Dos Recreios in that city on April 30, 1991 (though actually released in 1992). Then there was O Espirito da Paz. Madredeus's subsequent project, Ainda, came about because German director Wim Wenders decided to use their music in his on-location film Lisbon Story; the band not only recorded new songs for the soundtrack, but members also appeared in the film itself. No more recordings followed until 1997's O Paraíso. The personnel had shifted; accordionist Gomes, cellist Ribeiro, and keyboardist Leão had all left and were replaced by new keyboardist Carlos Maria Trindade and Fernando Júdice on acoustic bass guitar. The ensemble sound became a little sparser and more guitar-based, with Salgueiro's remarkable voice even further to the fore. In early 1999 Madredeus released another double-CD live set, O Porto, featuring selections from O Paraíso along with five previously unrecorded songs.

what to buy: O Paraíso ♪♪♪♪½ (Metro Blue, 1997, prod. Pedro Ayres Magalhães) is the only studio recording to date by the present Madredeus lineup, and showcases the group's current vocal-and-guitar-oriented sound. Teresa Salgueiro contributes more of her effortlessly beautiful singing, a sound that has the grandeur but not the stylization of operatically trained voices. O Paraíso also includes several of Magalhães's most unforgettable songs—"Os Dias são à Noite," "O Fim da Estrada," and the graceful "A Praia do Mar." O Espirito da Paz ♪♪♪♪½ (metro blue, 1994, prod. Pedro Ayres Magalhães) is arguably the most confident of Madredeus's earlier recordings. With accordionist Gomes, the instrumental arrangements are a little more colorful. The album also includes a moving anti-war lament, "Os Senhores Da Guerra (The War Lords)."

the rest:

O Dias da MadreDeus ♪♪♪♪ (Metro Blue, 1987/1997)
Existir ♪♪♪♪ (Metro Blue, 1990/1997)
Lisbon ♪♪♪♪ (Metro Blue, 1992/1997)
Ainda ♪♪♪♪ (Metro Blue, 1995)
O Porto ♪♪♪♪ (Metro Blue, 1999)

influences:

⏮ Pentangle, fado, Amália Rodrigues, Ofra Haza

⏭ Cassandra Wilson, Yosefa

Ken Roseman

Magnum Band

Compas

Formed 1976, in Miami, FL, USA. Based in Miami, FL, USA.

Rotating membership centered around Andre "Dadou" Pasquet and Claude "Tico" Pasquet.

After playing with the influential Haitian outfit Tabou Combo from the age of 16, guitarist Andre "Dadou" Pasquet and his brother Claude "Tico" Pasquet put together this veteran compas (Haitian dance pop) group in 1976. The band recorded many albums in the ensuing years and became a tremendous live attraction both in the Caribbean and among expatriate Caribbeans—not to mention fans of more exotic music everywhere.

what to buy: At once funky, spunky, and soooo Caribbean, the Magnum Band could stretch out on record, though not nearly as relaxed and sprawled as they could play live. Anthology 3 ♪♪♪♪ (Antilles Mizik, 1997, prod. various), the third volume of Antilles Mizik's retrospective of the band—which comprises the only recordings in print by this diverse and deep-rooted outfit—captures them at their most paradoxical: While regarded as the standard-bearers of compas, they toss Latin salsa, Antillean zouk, and even reggae into the mix. Though known among Haitians as being in the front rank of their genre's lyric-writing, one of the best tracks here, "Cosmic," is an instrumental. "Libete" (in a much better mix than the one known from the groundbreaking anthology Konbit: Burning Rhythms of Haiti) has some of the most amazingly varied horn charts ever recorded, yet the band's leader plays guitar. All the juxtapositions create some remarkable artistic tension.

what to buy next: Rife with strong grooves and cool tropical melodies, tracks like "Best in Town" on Anthology 1 ♪♪♪♪ (Antilles Mizik, 1997, prod. various) define the sound of modern compas. Dadou's guitar leads the way—though the horns and percussion are not far behind. At times he sounds as if he's playing soukous (Congolese rumba); at others the guitar parts would not sound out of place on an album by the '70s Stateside dance band Chic. Nonetheless, some songs, like the variegated "Moun Sa," just don't match the level of the Magnums' strongest material. While still a wonderfully played album, the songs on Anthology 2 ♪♪♪ (Antilles Mizik, 1997, prod. various) seem to exacerbate some of the excusable flaws of the other volumes; for instance, "Ashadei" is marred by out-of-tune vocal harmonies and horn sections that would have sounded better if they'd been recut. But when the parts gel, as on the sexy, jazzy "Aux Cayes" and the guitar-driven "Adoration," it doesn't come much better.

influences:

⏮ Nemours Jean-Baptiste, Tabou Combo

⏭ Rara Machine

see also: Tabou Combo

Hank Bordowitz

Taj Mahal

Blues, world music

Born Henry St. Claire Fredericks, May 17, 1942, in New York, NY, USA. Based in USA.

Although he grew up in Brooklyn and went to college in Massachusetts, Taj Mahal extends his hands to other musical cultures and soaks them up like a sponge. His father was a jazz musician, his mother a gospel singer, and his 30-plus years of exploring blues, ragtime, and Caribbean rhythms show those and many other influences. If his music seems like a history lesson

brazil: bahia

Known as "a little piece of Africa," the state of Bahia and its capital Salvador are places of cultural profusion and musical riches. The slave trade made Bahia home to diverse ethnic groups, the most numerous being the Yoruba and Ewe peoples from what is today Nigeria, Mali, and Ghana. Identification with Africa continues strongly through the religion Candomblé, the martial-art/dance capoeira, and the drums that are ever-present in Bahian music. Carnival has always been a showcase for the best of that music. As early as 1895, groups called afoxés paraded through the streets beating out dense polyrhythms and wearing African costumes. After decades of repression, Afrocentric organizations like Ilê Ayê, Filhos de Gandhi, Muzenza, Malé de Balé, and dozens of others returned to prominence in Carnival and in the life of Salvador.

The Afro-Brazilian rhythms of afoxe, ijexá, and samba-de-roda spawned the heavy, captivating samba-reggae sound. The group Olodum crossed over from roots into pop and laid the samba-reggae foundation for today's stylistically expansive axé phenomenon. That movement's other major influence was the trios eletricos. Dodo and Osmar, two guitarists in the Northeastern frevo style, got up on top of a moving truck with their amplifiers in the Carnival of 1950, and the crowd followed behind—as they did the next year, when an accordion completed the "trio." Now trios eletricos are multimillion-dollar ventures, huge sound trucks that lead hundreds of thousands of partiers, keep them dancing for upwards of 12 hours, and exceed the absurd in decibel output. Artists and bands like Margareth Menezes, Daniela Mercury, Chiclete com Banana, Banda Mel, É O Tchán, and Carlinhos Brown's community-based Timbalada keep Carnival cooking with ever-new music drawing on international as well as indigenous sources. This trademark blend is epitomized by PercPan, a global percussion festival conceived by Brazilian pop icon Gilberto Gil and master percussionist Nana Vasconcelos, which every year rallies the people around the drums and stirs new ideas into the great melting pot that is Bahia.

Mara Weiss and Nego Beto

taj mahal

at times, these didactic leanings are offset by his boundless enthusiasm and a formidable instrumental versatility. Mahal's journey began during the mid-1960s with the equally eclectic Ry Cooder in a short-lived assemblage called the Rising Sons. Mahal's first albums dug into standard blues in a manner that presented him as a guardian of tradition, after which he promptly swerved toward African rhythms, reggae, and even children's music before venturing into the then-untested waters of worldbeat. Uncharacteristically quiet during the 1980s, Mahal has returned to a blues-based approach since the turn of that decade. Whether he's with a full band playing pop arrangements or on his own playing stripped-down roots, Mahal has asserted himself yet again as both a keeper of the faith and a still-vital force that heads past the horizon.

what to buy: In the alterna-capitol of Athens, Georgia, Mahal merges the musical forces of Mississippi and the Motherland on Kulanjan ♪♪♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1999, prod. Joe Boyd, Lucy Duran), a historic collaboration with kora (African harp-lute) master Toumani Diabaté—not the first time either man has crossed cultural borders to bring back artistic gold. This album marks a fuller fruition of the Mali to Memphis collection (see below), on which Mahal appears and which drew a fascinating but more side-by-side than syncretic comparison between the blues' branches and its roots. The disc starts out assured and perhaps a mite too relaxed, but from the menacing third track "Ol' Georgie Buck" onward, the delicate but never ephemeral interplay between kora and guitar, honky-tonk piano and African balafon (xylophone), and soaring jali and jalimuso (male and female oral historian/troubadour) tones of Diabaté's vocalists and Mahal's own elemental smolder-and-growl makes this not only one of the most important albums of the turn of the century, but also one of the most satisfying. The groundbreaking American/African ensemble recorded here shared their landmark moment with Stateside crowds on the 1999 Africa Fête festival tour. Mumtaz Mahal ♪♪♪♪ (Water Lily Acoustics, 1995, prod. Kavichandran Alexander), a jam session with master Indian string musicians V.M. Bhatt and Narasimhan Ravikiran, offers more strong evidence that all blues didn't come from the Delta. The comfort with which Mahal slips into third-world·rhythms is disarming, as the easy-fitting reggae beats of World Music ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia Legacy, 1993, prod. Lawrence Cohn) demonstrate. Since it contains nearly all of the Mo' Roots album plus other tracks in remastered form, this gets the slight edge over Mo' Roots itself. Sacred Island ♪♪♪♪½ (Private, 1998) hops Mahal's blues from one tropics to another, with the roots of the American South, Hawaii, and the Caribbean intermingling elegantly.

what to buy next: Two albums on one disc, Giant Step/De Old Folks at Home ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1969, prod. David Rubinson) toss up distinctively different sides of the blues coin, the former lightly rocking with a down-home band while the rural solo blues of the latter reveal a surprisingly adept multi-instrumentalist and vocalist. For a harder-edged entry into Mahal's early work, Taj's Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia Legacy, 1992, prod. David Rubinson, Taj Mahal) is a handy sampler of some of his more celebrated moments, such as the classic stomper "Statesboro Blues" and "Dust My Broom." In a welcome paradoxical twist, the Grammy-winning Phantom Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Private Music, 1996, prod. John Porter) deserves the attention it received. Save for the rolling country soul of the opening cut, Mahal didn't pen a single tune, instead paying a charging homage to mentors like Fats Domino and Ray Charles, his vocals as muscular as ever and his clear love for the material giving an extra shot of energy.

the rest:

Mo' Roots ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1974)
Best of Taj Mahal, Vol. 1 ♪♪½ (Columbia, 1981)
Shake Sugaree—Taj Mahal Sings and Plays for Children ♪♪½ (Music for Little People, 1988)
Like Never Before ♪♪♪½ (Private Music, 1991)
Mule Bone ♪♪½ (Gramavision, 1991)
Dancing the Blues ♪♪♪ (Private Music, 1993)
The Rising Sun Collection ♪♪½ (Just a Memory, 1994)
Taj ♪♪♪ (Gramavision, 1994)
(With Cedella Marley Booker) Smilin' Island of Song ♪♪♪♪ (Music for Little People/Warner Bros., 1994)
An Evening of Acoustic Music ♪♪♪ (Ruf, 1996)
Live at Ronnie Scott's, London ♪♪½ (DRG, 1996)
Senor Blues ♪♪♪ (Private Music, 1997)
(With Eric Bibb, Linda Tillery, and the Cultural Heritage Choir) Shakin' a Tailfeather ♪♪♪½ (Rhino, 1997)
(With Howard Johnson & Gravity) Right Now! Featuring Taj Mahal ♪♪♪½ (Verve, 1998)
An Evening of Acoustic Music ♪♪♪½ (House of Blues, 1998)
In Progress & In Motion: 1965–1998 ♪♪♪♪ (Sony, 1998)
Blue Light Boogie ♪♪½ (Private, 1999)

worth searching for: Mahal is part of the American delegation on one-half of the compelling compilation Mali to Memphis: An African-American Odyssey ♪♪♪♪½ (Putumayo, 1999, compilation prod. Dan Storper), which surveys the musical conversation between bluespeople at two ends of the diaspora. (The disc is also reviewed in this book's Compilations section).

influences:

◀◀ Robert Johnson, Fats Domino, Howlin' Wolf, Ray Charles

▶▶ Robert Cray, Eric Clapton, Ry Cooder

see also: V.M. Bhatt, Cedella Marley Booker, Ry Cooder, Toumani Diabaté, Ali Farka Touré, Vinx

Allan Orski and Adam McGovern

Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens /Makgona Tsohle Band

Mbanqanga, Zulu jive

Mahlathini born January 1, 1937, in Alexandra Township, South Africa; died July 28, 1999, in Johannesburg, South Africa. Mahotella Queens formed c. 1960, in Alexandra Township, South Africa. Makgona Tsohle Band formed 1965, in Pretoria, South Africa. Based in Johannesburg, South Africa.

Mahlathini (Simon Nkabinde), lead vocals. Mahotella Queens: Hilda Tloubatla, lead and harmony vocals; Nobesuthu Shawe, lead and harmony vocals; Mildred Faith Mangxola, lead and harmony vocals. Makgona Tsohle Band: West Nkosi (died 1998), sax, pennywhistle, leader; Marks Mankwane, lead guitar; Joseph Makwela, bass; Lucky Monama, drums; Vivian Ngubane, rhythm guitar. (All members of all bands are from South Africa.)

The Makgona Tsohle Band, led by the late, legendary sax player/record producer West Nkosi, was formed in 1965 when the band members quit their day jobs in hopes of becoming famous musicians. They struck it rich soon afterward by hooking up with Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens on a hit single called "Orlando Train." The single went gold, and Nkosi and his band became one of the country's most important session groups and an internationally known touring band. "Makgona Tsohle means 'Jack-of-all-trades,'" West Nkosi once said. "We know everything, we can do anything. Our mbaqanga is a blend of traditional style with modern instruments, a music anyone can relate to." Nkosi was born in Nelspruit, a township about three miles east of Johannesburg, and he grew up in "a very poor Swazi family with lots of brothers and sisters, but I was the only one with music in me." Nkosi's uncle was the famous sax jive player "Zacks" Nkosi, one of the musicians who moved mbaqanga toward a more urban sound while retaining its folkloric roots. "My uncle didn't give me music lessons," West Nkosi said, "but he did introduce me to the record company people who gave me my first recording contract. There were no music books available in my country, and no schools to go to if you're poor and black. I got my start playing on street corners, and in the musical theaters in the black neighborhoods. It was just a collection of shacks where people went to have a good time and try to relax, not theaters like you have in the States, but it was a place where we could play and meet other musicians." The musicians in Makgona Tsohle had been playing together "since we were boys on the street corner. We are like brothers." So when Nkosi got signed by Gallo Records he brought the rest of the band along.

Luckily, the band was teamed with Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens, and the rest, as they say, is history. Mahlathini, a.k.a. King of the Groaners and the Lion of Soweto, began singing professionally when he was 15, with Aaron Lerole's Alexandra Black Mambazo, an mbube (a cappella) choir. (This group was a big influence on Joseph Shabalala, who later formed Ladysmith Black Mambazo.) When he was 17, Mahlathini's voice began to deepen, eventually settling into his unique baritone growl. "At first, my mother thought there might be something wrong with my throat, so she took me to the doctor, but he said it was my normal tone, so everyone relaxed." In the late 1950s, after Miriam Makeba left South Africa for a self-imposed exile, the mbaqanga style she had championed, a more jazzy and less rootsy form of the music, was replaced by a more traditional one, with hard-driving rhythms and vocals that were closer to rural tribal styles. Mahlathini's rumbling basso became the trademark of this new sound and many singers began emulating him in hopes of cashing in on his success. He first sang with the Dark City Sisters, but when he was teamed with the Mahotella Queens and Makgona Tsohle in 1965, the resulting unit became one of South Africa's most popular black dance bands. The Mahotella Queens retired to raise families in the mid-1970s, but Mahlathini continued on with a new group dubbed the Queens and the Mahlathini Guitar Band. In the 1980s, discoized versions of mbanqanga began to dominate the charts, but Mahlathini stayed his course. "Some record company people suggested that I try to make a hit, but I stuck to my roots. If my children came to me in 10 years and asked me what I had contributed to the [anti-apartheid] struggle, what would I say if I had done that kind of music? Our culture has no price."

Meanwhile, the Makgona Tsohle Band had become a force on their own. After a few years in the studio working for others, Nkosi took over as producer and from that time on had a hand in the careers of over 300 groups including Ladysmith Black Mambazo and Paul Simon. Taking stock of this accomplishment, he described his philosophy: "In our culture there is no difference between a traditional player and a 'professional' musician. We don't have those categories for music. We see it as cultural music, even if it has electric instruments. Some people think that mbaqanga sounds like soul music, or rock music, but that's mostly because the bass and guitars are [suited to] the European market. You're familiar with the way they sound, but the way we use them is our own. I hear some similarity in the rhythms, but that's the feeling that every African person has inside of themselves. Black Africans, no matter where they were born, no matter how long they've been away from home, have that feeling when they play. I hear it in reggae music too."

In 1986, in the wake of Paul Simon's Graceland, Mahlathini reunited with the Mahotella Queens and the Makgona Tsohle Band and began playing the burgeoning world-music circuit. Once again people heard the roar of the Lion of Soweto (a rumbling tone that many critics compared to the primal growl of Howlin' Wolf), the heavenly harmonies of the Mahotella Queens, and the relentless rhythm of Makgona Tsohle. Their international recognition ignited homefront fans and their reunion album, Thokozile, became a major hit both at home and abroad. Despite the untimely death of West Nkosi in a 1998 auto accident, Mahlathini and his cohorts maintained a grueling touring schedule up until Mahlathini's death in mid-1999. Though back in South Africa their roots-rock style of mbanqanga would give way in people's favor to the more international beat of "bubblegum" artists like Dan Tshanda, and the surviving musicians' professional future was unknown at presstime, their legendary status is assured.

Mahlathini (r) and Mahotella Queens

what to buy: The Lion of Soweto ♪♪♪♪♪ (Earthworks, 1987, prod. C.B. Matawane), a compilation of hits from the mid-1970s, was put together by Trevor Herman and Jumbo Vanrenen, the white South Africans who started Earthworks to gain black South African music the worldwide attention it deserved. Despite the lengthy liner notes, there is scant information on the backing musicians, but Mahlathini's bone-chilling moan is in fine form, and every track explodes with primal energy.

what to buy next: Thokozile ♪♪♪♪♪ (Earthworks, 1988, prod. West Nkosi) reunited Mahlathini, the Mahotella Queens, and the Makgona Tsohle Band for the first time in a decade and propelled them to international stardom. The recording is crisp and clear, and the music combines the best mbaqanga of the 1950s, 1960s, and 1980s for a mini-history of the style. Mahlathini and the Queens have never sounded this exuberant.

best of the rest:

The Lion Roars ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1989)
Mbaqanga ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1989)
Rhythm & Art ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1989)
Best of Mahlathini and the Mahotella Queens ♪♪♪♪ (Kaz, 1990)
King of the Groaners ♪♪♪♪ (Earthworks, 1993)

Mahotella Queens

Izibani Zomgqashiyo ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1989)
Marriage Is a Problem ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1990) Women of the World ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1993)

influences:

◀◀ Manhattan Brothers, Skylarks, the Queens, Dark City Sisters

Johnny Clegg, Paul Simon, Stimela

see also: Dark City Sisters, Miriam Makeba, Daniel Tshanda

j. poet

Boncana Maiga

West African, Central African, and Afro-Cuban pop

Born 1943, in Gao, Mali. Based in Paris, France, and Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire.

Boncana Maiga is a pioneer in the arts of music production and arranging in Africa. He was born in Gao, in remote northern Mali. After that country's independence in 1960, the new government began sponsoring official local bands around the country, and Maiga, a young saxophonist at the time, found himself leading Le Negro Band de Gao. In 1963 he was selected for an exchange program in which he would study music in Havana, Cuba. During what became a nine-year stay in that country, Maiga switched from sax to transverse flute and played everything from Mozart to classic Cuban charanga. He started another band, Las Maravillas de Mali, playing Cuban music.

Maiga returned to Mali in 1974 and for a while continued with Las Maravillas. Within a few years, however, he left the band and went to work in Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, the blossoming center of music production for all of West Africa. There he flourished as an arranger, helping to shape the sounds of many path-breaking African artists, including Alpha Blondy and Aicha Koné (both from Côte d'Ivoire), Tata Bambo Kouyaté, Abdoulaye Diabaté, and Nahawa Doumbia (all from Mali). He also recorded and released music of his own, though it was never as successful as the work he arranged for others.

Then, in 1992, Maiga teamed up with West Africa's most powerful record producer, Ibrahima Sylla of Senegal, to create his most successful project to date: Africando. The idea was to take the great surviving singers of Senegal who had made their careers doing adaptations of Cuban music, and put them together with the top Latin session players in New York. Four sensational releases and a number of tours on three continents followed over the next five years. The project expanded to include singers from Togo and Guinea and the music has remained excellent, a multi-lingual reaffirmation of the classic Cuban sound with lots of room for adventurous updates.

what to buy: Nahawa Doumbia's Didadi ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1989, prod. Ibrahima Sylla) is a fine example of Maiga's ability to arrange rootsy Malian music and give it a pop sheen, as is Ami Koita's Songs of Praise ♪♪♪♪ (Stern's Africa, 1993). Africando: Volumes 1–4 ♪♪♪♪½ (Stern's Africa, 1992–97, prod. various) encompasses several trailblazing classics.

what to avoid: Despite some hot playing, a sampling of Maiga's own work, Boncana Maiga: Jingles Danses et Musiques Instrumentales ♪♪ (Melodie/Celluloid 1990), is extremely commercial—everything from drippy ballads to hyperactive Caribbean zouk. The collection embodies the apex (or nadir) of the programmed pop sound that flourished in Paris and Abidjan during the 1980s.

influences:

The great arrangers of Cuba, producers of American pop in the '60's and '70s

Many producers and arrangers working in African pop music today see also: Africando, Tshala Muana

Banning Eyre

Pandit Kamalesh Maitra

North Indian classical

Born 1928, in East Bengal, India. Based in Berlin, Germany.

Pandit Kamalesh Maitra is widely acknowledged as the last living virtuoso of the tabla tarang, a rare instrument used in the classical music of North India. A relatively recent addition to the myriad Indian percussion instruments, the tabla tarang consists of 10 to 16 tablas (a double-headed drum prominent in Indian music itself), each tuned to the particular notes of the classical raga's scale and set up in ascending order in a semicircle. The word "tarang" means "waves," and that aptly describes the instrument's characteristic sound in the hands of an accomplished performer. Maitra, already a well-known tabla player, was first introduced to the tabla tarang in 1950 when, after boasting that he could learn to play any instrument within six months, he was accepted into the orchestra of the Uday Shankar Ballet on the condition that he learn this unusual melodic instrument. Later, after living up to his word and becoming multiply proficient, Maitra was named the group's musical director. Over the course of his lifetime, Maitra has studied and performed with a number of legends in the Indian music community, including Ustad Ali Akbar Khan and Pandit Ravi Shankar (Uday's younger brother), as well as a variety of jazz, folk, rock, and pop groups. In 1980 he formed the Ragatala Ensemble, in which both Indian and Western instruments were integrated, and he has taught Indian classical vocal and instrumental music in Berlin since 1982. But his personal mission remains to keep the tabla tarang from dying out completely, by inspiring younger musicians to take up this rare and valuable art.

what's available: Although probably not recommended for those without a passion for rhythm, Tabla Tarang—Melody on Drums ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian Folkways, 1996, prod. Walter Quintus) is a fascinating recording that shows how tabla tarang masters can combine rhythm, melody, and harmony into one free-flowing whole. Mind-blowing exchanges between Maitra and Trilok Gurtu, especially on the 45-minute "Raag Mia Ki Todi," make this a must-have for fans of virtuosic drumming.

worth searching for: Maitra recorded a number of albums between 1967 and 1994, but nearly all of them are out of print or available only on extremely hard-to-find import labels. Suffice it to say, with the rarity of these recordings, if you find 'em, snap 'em up . . . quickly!

influences:

- Uday Shankar, Ravi Shankar, Vishnudas Shirali, Pandit Jnan Prakash Ghosh
- Trilok Gurtu

see also: Trilok Gurtu

Bret Love

Miriam Makeba

African vocals

Born on March 4, 1932, in Johannesburg, South Africa. Based in South Africa.

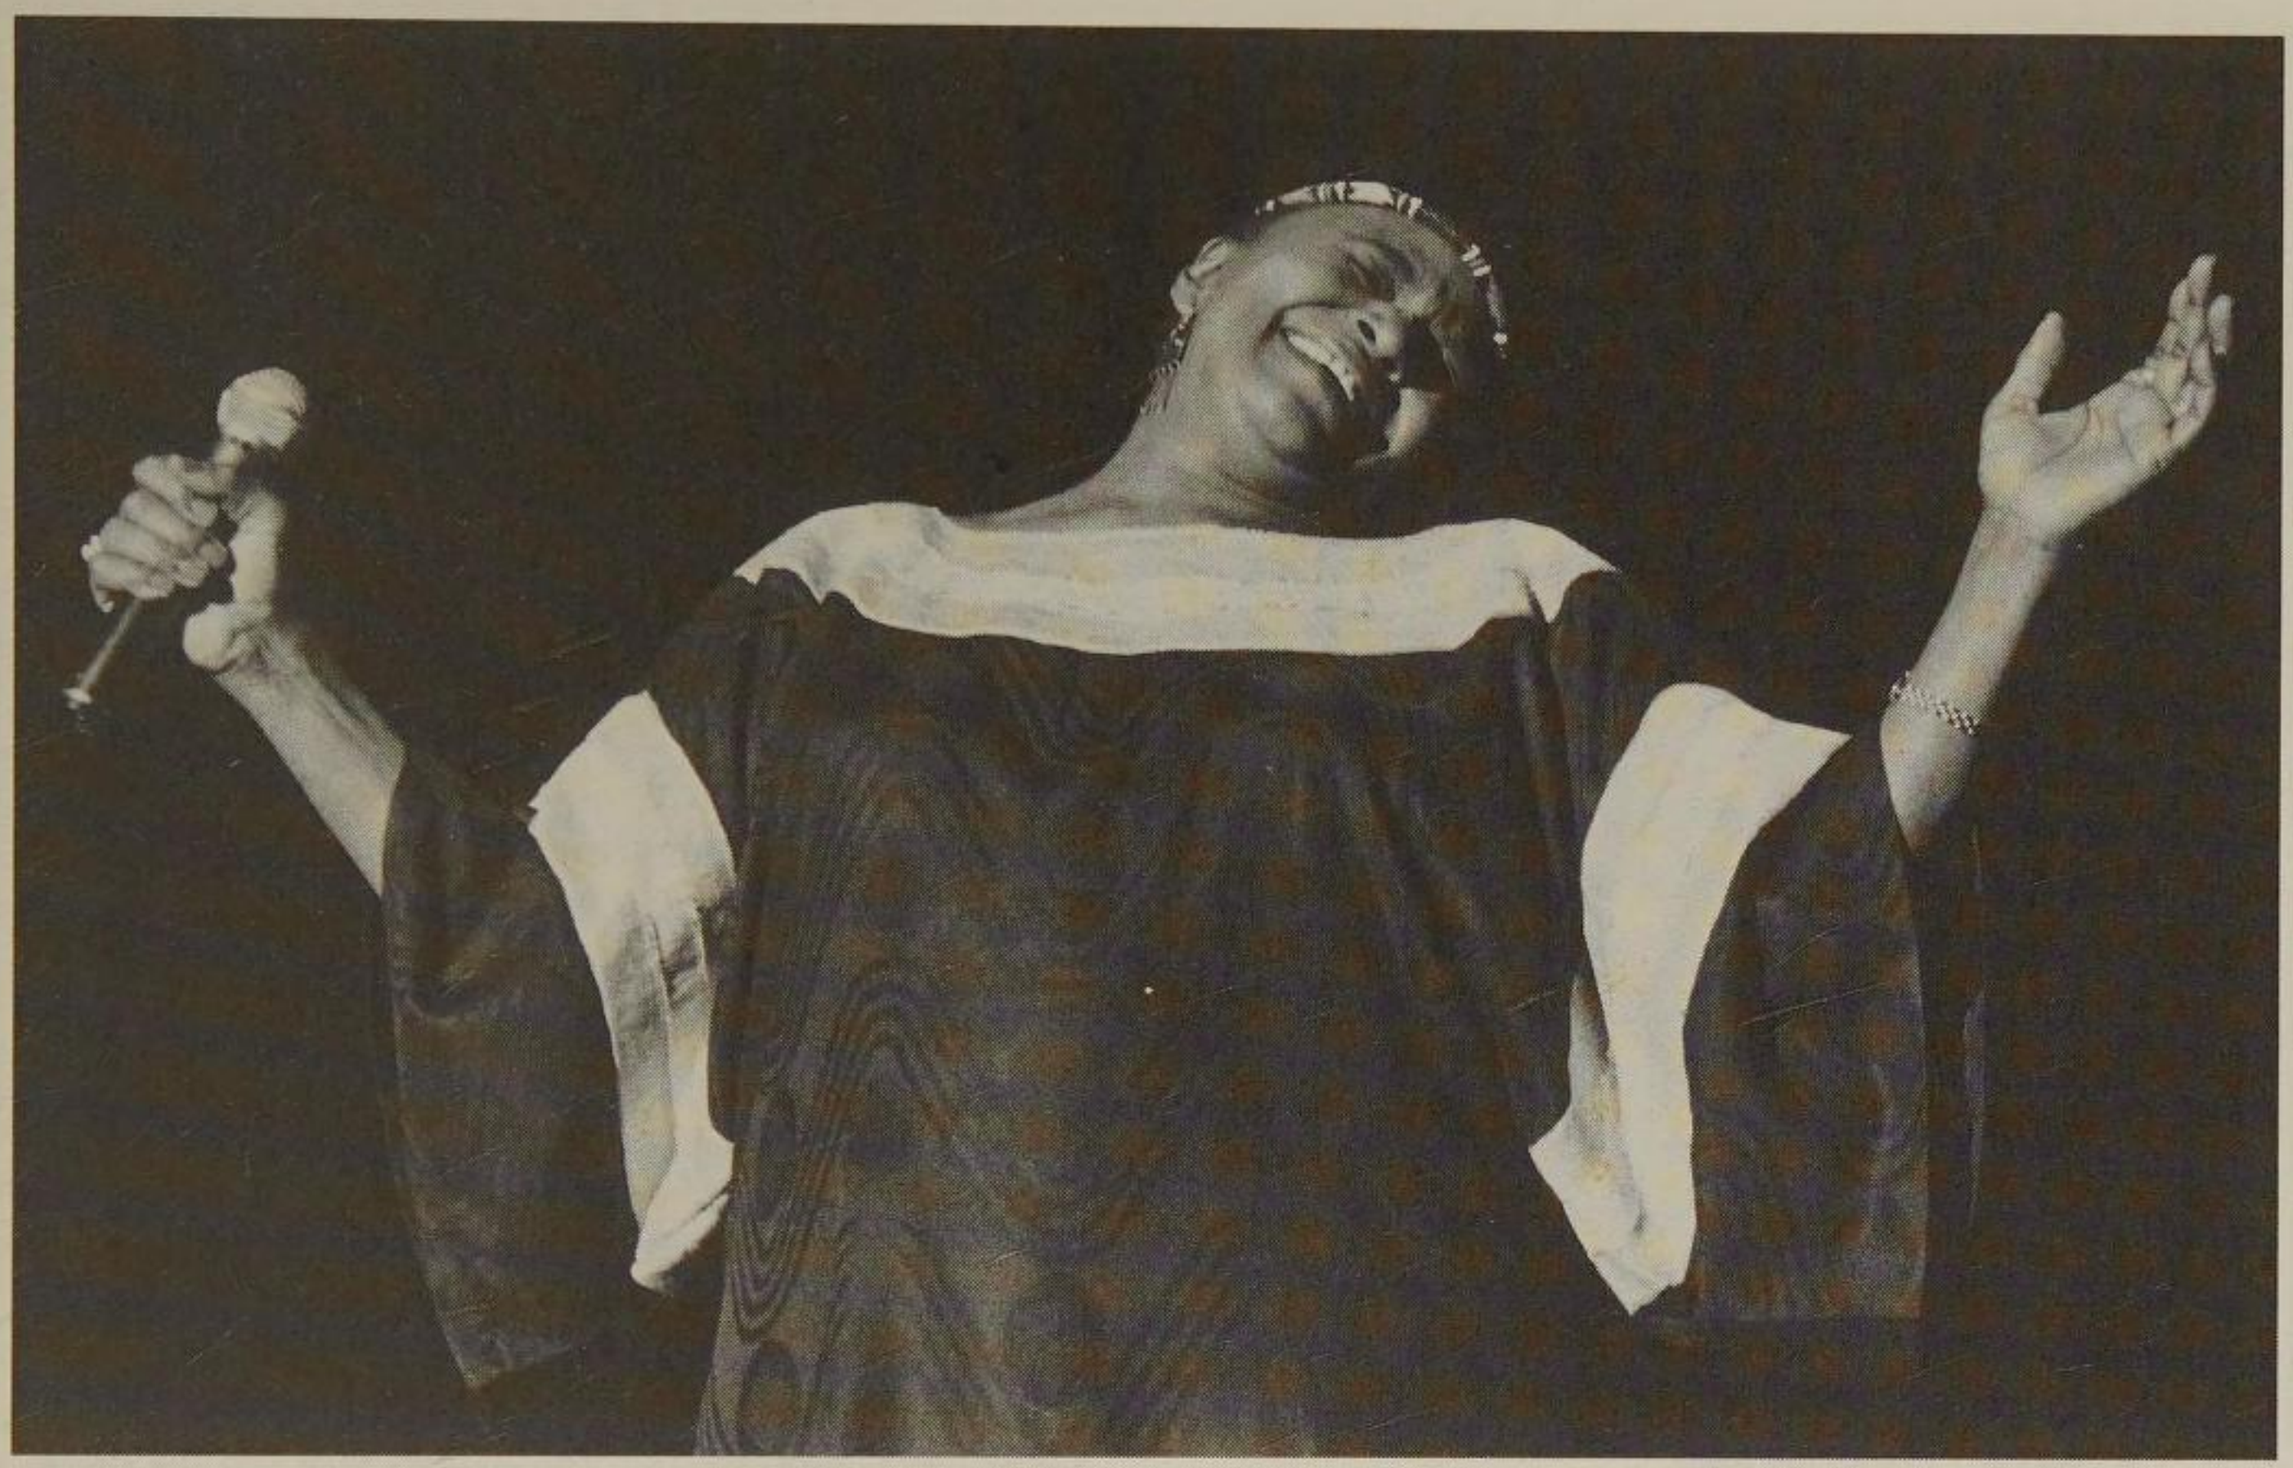
Miriam Makeba is the queen of her country's vocalists. The first South African to be awarded a Grammy—for her participation on Harry Belafonte's 1960 album An Evening with Belafonte — Makeba is best known for her million-selling pop single "Pata Pata," recorded in 1959 and released in the U.S. in '67. For much of her career, Makeba was exiled from her birthplace; an April 1991 concert marked the first time she had performed in South Africa in three decades. Makeba's professional singing debut came with the Manhattan Brothers, a popular South African group with whom she performed from 1952 to 1957. After appearing in the documentary Come Back Africa in 1959, Makeba came to the attention of Harry Belafonte, who invited her to perform with him during his groundbreaking Carnegie Hall concert the following year. Banned from recording in South Africa the same year, Makeba left her homeland with her then-husband, trumpeter Hugh Masekela, and made a temporary home in New York. Although "Pata Pata" became an international hit, Makeba continued to encounter political problems; following her breakup with Masekela and her subsequent marriage to black activist Stokely Carmichael, many of Makeba's concerts were canceled and her recording contract was dropped. Makeba and Masekela continued to work together musically, with Masekela producing many sessions for his ex-wife. Leaving the United States in 1968, Makeba settled in the West African country of Guinea at the invitation of its president, Sekou Touré. As the Guinean delegate to the United Nations, Makeba twice addressed the General Assembly on the evils of apartheid. She was awarded the Dag Hammarskjöld Peace Prize in 1986. The following year, Makeba was a featured performer on Paul Simon's worldwide Graceland tour. In 1988 her autobiography, Makeba—My Story, was published in the U.S. and England, and has subsequently been translated into German, French, Dutch, Italian, Spanish, and Japanese. In December 1990, both Makeba and Masekela returned to South Africa; in 1992 Makeba appeared in the filmed apartheid drama Sarafina! as the title character's mother. Geographically and artistically, Makeba had come full circle as a leading voice for her people and both a teller and maker of history—come full circle, but certainly not yet come to rest.

what to buy: The Best of Miriam Makeba ♪♪♪♪ (Castle, 1993, prod. various) is a memorable retrospective of Makeba's career and includes her original 1959 recording of "Pata Pata."

what to buy next: Africa ♪♪♪½ (Jive/Novus, 1991) presents 23 of Makeba's best-known songs recorded with sparse arrangements featuring guitar, percussion, and background vocalists.

the rest:

The Many Voices of Miriam Makeba ♪♪♪ (Kapp, 1958)
The Voice of Africa ♪♪♪ (RCA Victor, 1962)
The Magnificent Miriam Makeba ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1964)
All about Miriam ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1965)
Keep Me in Mind ♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1966)
The Magic of Makeba ♪♪♪ (RCA Victor, 1966)
Pata Pata ♪♪♪½ (Esperance, 1970)
Miriam Makeba in Concert! ♪♪♪½ (Reprise, 1983)
The World of Miriam Makeba ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1985)
Sangoma ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1986)
Makeba Sings ♪♪♪ (RCA Victor, 1988)
Comme Une Symphonie D'Amour ♪♪♪ (Stern's Music, 1991)
Eyes on Tomorrow ♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1991)
Kilimanjaro—Live in Conakry ♪♪♪½ (Goya, 1994)
A Promise ♪♪♪ (Sonodisc, 1994)
Pata Pata, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪ (Sonodisc, 1994)
Le Monde de Miriam Makeba ♪♪♪ (Sonodisc, 1994)
Click Song, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪ (Sonodisc, 1994)
Sing Me a Song ♪♪♪ (DRG, 1994)
Live Au Palais Du Peuple De Conakry ♪♪♪ (Stern's Music, 1994)
Miriam Makeba & the Skylarks, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪ (Gallo, 1996/1999)
Country Girl ♪♪♪ (Esperance, 1996)
Live from Paris and Conakry ♪♪♪½ (DRG, 1996)
Pata Pata—Live in Paris ♪♪♪ (Goya, 1996)
Meet Me at the River ♪♪♪ (Goya, 1996)
Malaisha ♪♪♪ (Goya, 1996)
Best of Miriam Makeba & the Skylarks ♪♪♪½ (Camden, 1997)
Miriam Makeba & the Skylarks, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪ (Gallo, 1997/1999)
Folk Songs from Africa ♪♪♪½ (A World of Music, 1997)
Click Song N/A (Sonodisc, 1999)
World of Miriam Makeba N/A (Sonodisc, 1999)



Miriam Makeba

influences:

◀◀ Harry Belafonte, Dudu Pukwana, Hugh Masekela

▶▶ Mahotella Queens, Ladysmith Black Mambazo

see also: Harry Belafonte, Hugh Masekela

Craig Harris

Tommy Makem

Irish traditional folk

Born 1932, in Keady, County Armagh, Ireland. Based in Ireland.

In the annals of folk, Tommy Makem is generally associated with the Clancy Brothers, the group that gave Irish and Celtic music a face on U.S. soil. However, Makem is an accomplished performer in his own right, a singer and multi-instrumentalist who plays banjo, pennywhistle, piccolo, and guitar. Makem has also embraced several areas of the entertainment world, starring in theatrical productions in New York and even dabbling in management for a time. By the time he was 15, he had already formed his own Irish county dance band. Around the time of the early 1950s, Pat Clancy had asked his brother Liam to collect material for Tradition Records, a label he was starting. That led Liam to Makem, and, in 1953, the two new-found friends came to the United States. Makem began as a solo act, securing an early break by playing at Greenwich Village's famed Circle in the Square. He also supported himself with theatrical roles on Broadway, A Hatful of Rain and the musical Finian's Rainbow among them. In 1961, with brothers Liam, Pat, and Tom Clancy all living in New York, Makem was asked to join the Clancy Brothers band. That same year he performed on two albums, the first a solo effort on the Tradition label titled Songs by Tommy Makem. The second, The Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem, was made for a much more prestigious label, Columbia, which had signed the Irish boys to a contract. Makem appeared with the Brothers on several more Columbia albums, including Hearty & Hellish (1962), In Person (1963), First Hurrah (1964), and The Irish Uprising (1966). The act forged its success through performances on American television, mainly the weekly folk series Hootenanny and the Ed Sullivan Show. They were also featured in concerts all over the world. From the late 1960s to the early '70s, Makem returned to

makgona tsohle band

solo performing and released one album, Tommy Makem, Love Is Lord of All, on GWP Records. For a brief period during the late '70s Makem and Liam Clancy formed a duo that reunited for a pair of albums during the mid-'80s. Makem's more recent recordings have been with the Shanachie label. Both on his own and as a member of the Clancy Brothers, Makem has been a welcome, unique addition to the American folk scene; he is certainly among the best-known purveyors of traditional Irish and Celtic music. By helping introduce audiences to the Celtic legacy quite early in the modern era, Makem forged a strong contribution.

what to buy: Songs of Tommy Makem ♪♪♪♪ (Tradition, 1997) is the obvious starting point. It's particularly admired for the depth and quality of recording, considering that Makem was playing most of the instruments in a small studio.

the rest:
(With Liam Clancy) Tommy Makem & Liam Clancy ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1987)
(With Liam Clancy) Two for the Early Dew ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1987)
Rolling Home ♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1990)
Songbag ♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1991)
Live at the Irish Pavilion ♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1993)
Lonesome Waters ♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1993)
Evening With . . . ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1993)
From the Archives ♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1995) Tommy Makem's Christmas ♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1997)

influences:
Clancy Brothers
Irish Rovers, the Chieftains

see also: The Clancy Brothers

Bob Paxman

Makgona Tsohle Band

See: Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens

The Ilyas Malayev Ensemble

Classical Uzbeki music, sung in Persian

Formed 1992, in New York, NY, USA. Based in New York, NY, USA.

Ilyas Malayev, vocals, tanbur; Iskhak Katayev, violin; Izra Malakov, vocals; Muhabbat Shamayeva, vocals; Osher Barayev, vocals; Ilyau Khavasov, vocals; Rushel Rubinov, vocals; Abokhai Aminov, vocals; Roman Narkolayev, vocals. (All members are from Uzbekistan.)

The maqam is a conceptual and organizational framework for the development of melody and improvisation in a host of musical styles of the Muslim world—Arabian, Turkish, Persian, Egyptian, and North African music included. One of the system's wellsprings was 16th-century Central Asia, where music historian Kaukaba made a definitive analysis of the shash maqam, six lengthy maqams that formed a repertoire of 200 songs and instrumental pieces. These in turn served as the core repertoire of Uzbek and Tadjik classical music—a body of work that was suppressed by the Soviet government during the 20th century. Whereas the music was traditionally performed by individuals, it was now "collectivized"; that is, it had to be performed in ensembles. The lyrical content was "ideologically cleansed"; references to religion or overly sensual sentiments were erased in favor of the correct Marxist doctrine. The original music was heavily ornamented; these "wrong notes" were eliminated to conform with the approved styles of Soviet music—which often sounded suspiciously like 19th-century Russian Romantic music. As state-supported folk orchestras and choruses became the only mode of transmission of Uzbeki music, the shash maqam lost nearly all of its traditional texture. Musician Ilyas Malayev, though Jewish, had long dreamed of reviving the genuine shash maqam, and when he moved from Tashkent, Uzbekistan, to New York in 1992, he gathered a group of professional and amateur players from the Bukharian émigré community in Queens to realize this dream with the recording At the Bazaar of Love. Ironically (if miraculously), one of the most important contributions to the performance and preservation of Central Asian classical music is being made in Queens, New York.

what's available: Western sensibilities may find the monophonic musical texture and exotic melodic pitches of the classical shash maqam to be a bit abrasive. Approach the material on At the Bazaar of Love ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1997, prod. Theodore Levin) in small doses at first. Begin with the "Ufar" and the "Ufarcha." Compare and contrast the maqams to other classical Muslim melodies. The music may not be easily accessible, but it is authentic.

influences:
The Uzbeki classical tradition

Aaron Howard

Malika

Tarabu

Born Asha Abdo Suleiman, in Lamu, Kenya. Based in Mombasa, Kenya.

On the East Coast of Africa "Malika" means "Queen," which is fitting, for this artist is the Queen of tarabu music (a blending of Arab, African, Indian, and Latin sounds). Malika's specialty is setting the works of the great poets of her region. Her expressive vocal style is as flexible as the sound of a sitar, and she picks the finest musicians in her region to set the exotic rhythmic pace on drums, organ, and bass. Malika began her singing career after her family moved to Somalia during the 1960s. Benefiting from sponsorship by both the Somali and Tanzanian governments, her fame quickly spread and led to well-received appearances on Somali television and radio. Upon her return to Kenya during the '70s she began recording with many of the best-known artists in her field, such as Zein L'Abdin and Maulidi. With a whole scene growing around her sound, Malika soon became the most popular artist in Kenya. Her songs of spirituality and political awareness are joyfully embraced and sung by the people of her country, and her recognition has begun to spread worldwide.

Ilyas Malayev

what's available: On Tarabu ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997, prod. Dieter Hauer), Malika sets the poetry of Bakari Omari Abdi, Mjomba Mokte, and Tahareni Bwana Ali to music and brings them to vivid rhythmic life. Aided by darabouka drummers Anasi Sheembwana Muhaji and Omar Saleh Al-Abdi, organist Bakari Salim, and Lali Mwalimu Mzamin on bass, Malika sings songs of spirituality ("It Is Not Vain," "Think About It Man," "I Have Seen a Sign," etc.), and the contradictory nature of the human spirit ("Rebellion Will Not Give You Peace," "Darling You Trouble Me"). Though this 10-song disc is recorded entirely in Swahili, English translations and key story points are included in the booklet. The slick production values and percussive verve should make this outing appeal to Western fans as well as genre purists.

worth searching for: In her U.S. debut, Malika performs "Sibure Nambo" on Holding Up Half the Sky: Voices of African Women ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997, compilation prod. Randall Graff), a disc also reviewed in this book's Compilations section.

influences:

⏮ Bakari Omari Abdi, Zein L'Abdin

⏭ Them Mushrooms

Ken Burke

The Mallet Playboys

See: Terrance Simien

Mama Sana

Malagasy folk music

Born c. 1922, in Antanimora, Madagascar. Died 1998.

Mama Sana played the valiha, a zither constructed on a tube of

cheb mami

bamboo and played with both hands. Sonically, it suggests a cross between the zither known to the West and the African harp-lute or kora. But it's the picking technique used by Malagasy musicians that gives the instrument its unique sound, a combination of rippling arpeggios, slurred bluesy notes, and lightning-fast single-note runs. Mama Sana, once one of the few female musicians in Madagascar, played the instrument from childhood onward. Mama Sana believed she was born around the time the French came to Madagascar in 1882, which would have made her 110 at the time she recorded her only album for Shanachie. That album's notes say differently, but that doesn't make her any less an elder stateswoman of her culture. Mama Sana's songs are all traditional tunes she picked up during her long life, though like most folk musicians, the interpretations are definitely her own.

what's available: The Legendary Mama Sana ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1992, prod. Henry Kaiser, Dama Mahaleo, Bernhard Ramroth) preserves raw, uncompromising music from one of Madagascar's national treasures. The artist's powerful vocals and technical prowess bring to mind the early Delta Blues 78s made in the U.S. at the dawn of the recording industry. The liner notes, by Kaiser and Mahaleo, give a bit of background, but Mama Sana and her music need no interpretation.

influences:

⏩ Tarika Sammy, Tarika, D'Gary

j. poet

Cheb Mami

Rai

Born July 11, 1966, in Saïda, Algeria. Based in Paris, France.

Cheb Mami, born Khelifati Mohamed, has been singing rai—a combination of Bedouin traditional music and Spanish, Moroccan, French, and black Arabic styles—since he was a teenager. Saïda had a large Bedouin population, and Mami schooled himself in their bedrock traditional styles, which continue to give his music a folksy edge. Mami ("the Mourner") got his stage name because of the soulful quality of his singing, and he made his early reputation by performing at weddings, circumcisions, and other community functions. When he was 15 he won second prize in a talent competition sponsored by Ihan Wa Chabab, a popular radio program in Oran. He was immediately deluged with offers from various record companies, including Disco-Maghreb's Boualem, one of the most successful rai labels of the 1980s. Mami began recording cassettes, which sold well although he himself never saw much money. After a brief tour of France, during which he met his future manager Michele Levy, Mami returned to Algeria to fulfill his military duty. After his discharge, he relocated to Paris and began his international career, touring Canada, the United States, England, and Europe. Mami's band is one of the finest rai outfits extant, a group of young talents who can pace their frontman in his desire to make rai truly international by adding accents of flamenco, Greek and Turkish pop, hip-hop, funk, reggae, and Latin music. Fans have dubbed him "the Prince of Rai," and his popularity is second only to Khaled's.

what to buy: Saïda ♪♪♪ (Tinder, 1998, prod. Bobby Summerfield, Nicholas Fiszman, Christian Boissel) is a solid modern rai outing, with about half the tracks sporting smooth, crossover grooves that should appeal to fans of "modern rock" if any of them take the time to listen. The rest of the tracks lean toward the traditional side and will be a bit more appealing to world-music fans. On "Alache Alache," Mami's keyboards mimic the sound of an Arabic string orchestra, while the Afro-Arabic rhythms of "Hay Wadi Hay Galbi" and "Bent Bareh" are guaranteed to put your feet in motion.

what to buy next: The early Prince of Rai ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1989, prod. Clement Haufman, Bruno Barre) is mostly acoustic, and while traces of reggae-ized funk show up in the basslines, the focus stays on Mami's passionate vocals and the band's fierce groove.

the rest:

Let Me Rai ♪♪♪ (Rhythm Safari, 1990)

influences:

⏪ Cheikha Remitti, Khaled, Chaba Fadela

⏩ Cheb Abdelhak

see also: Khaled

j. poet

The Mandators /Victor Essiet

African reggae

Formed 1979, in Lagos, Nigeria. Based in Lagos, Nigeria.

Victor Essiet (born c. 1960, Akwa Ibom State, Nigeria), vocals; Frank Martins, guitar; Clement Amarchi, guitar; Peter Freeman, bass; Kwust Ewang, bass; Lemmy Jackson, keyboards, percussion; Lizoma, keyboards; Etienne Kaston, DX7; Mannars Itiene, drums. (All members are from Nigeria.)

The Mandators are the brainchild of Victor Essiet, a guitar player and singer from the Ibibio tribe of southeastern Nigeria. Torn from his comfortable family existence during Nigeria's civil war in 1975, Essiet relocated to Lagos for his high school years. He learned guitar on an instrument he made himself and decided on a career in music when he heard Bob Marley and local reggae stars like Cloud Seven, Sweat, and Sonny Okosun. After two albums for the Tabansi label, Sunrise and Imagination, Essiet went on tour. His lead guitarist for that first, unsuccessful sojourn was another reggae fan named Majek Fashek. Like Essiet's, Fashek's would one day be a name associated with African reggae stardom. But this would have to wait, as Essiet went from record shop to record shop, self-distributing his first two albums, just to survive. Soon after, he dropped out to meditate and rethink his career. He returned in 1986 with Crisis, hailed as a turning point for Nigerian reggae. The album sold 500,000 legitimate copies (and millions of bootlegged albums and cassettes), making Essiet a force to be reckoned with. Since then he has added a bit of dancehall to his basic roots reggae sound and gone from success to success.

what's available: On Power of the People ♪♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1994, prod. Victor Essiet, Lemmy Jackson), Essiet has a gritty tenor that's halfway between Bob Marley and Peter Tosh, and he writes love songs and protest tunes that would do the master proud. The backing band is solid, with a deep one-drop groove that makes their riddims sparkle. This compilation collects tracks from three albums Essiet cut between 1988 and 1992, and it includes a wonderful reworking of Dolly Parton's "Coat of Many Colors."

worth searching for: If the Power of the People compilation is any indication, the full albums should be worth tracking down. They include Storm, Rat Race, and Rebel.

influences:

⏮ Bob Marley, Sonny Okoson, Storm

⏭ Majek Fashek

j. poet

Ahdri Zhina Mandiela

Dub poetry

Born in Kingston, Jamaica. Based in Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Mandiela is a talented second-stringer in the thriving Caribbean arts scene in Toronto that's also home to fellow wordsmiths Lillian Allen, Clifton Joseph, and Michael St. George. But the label "dub poetry" is—as in so many cases these days—simply inadequate to describe her style of performance; her diasporan approach owes as much to Sweet Honey in the Rock, Sonia Sanchez, and Gil Scott-Heron as it does to reggae music and Jamaican Creole. Mandiela's voice is full and confident, intimate and melodic. Her delivery and phrasing favor slow syncopation and internal rhyme; she likes to tease and stretch and stylize natural speech rhythms in a diction that only occasionally slides into artsy affectation.

worth searching for: To date, Mandiela has released only one CD, Step into My Head ♪♪♪½ (bushooman rag, 1995, prod. Orin Isaacs, Quammie Williams), available on import from Canada. It's a strong collection of poems, backed by a tight band and wonderful arrangements that draw not just on reggae and ska, but (more often) on jazz and P-Funk, heavy metal and Fulani drumming, hand-clap and tap-step. The subject matter rarely strays from earnest Afrocentrism, lesbian-feminist sisterhood, and the slings and arrows of immigrant life in the wilds of what Mandiela wryly calls the "Toronto bush." Two cuts give those themes a particularly sophisticated spin: "In the Canefields," a sultry but powerful elegy for a plucky immigrant aunt whose early death from diabetes ultimately foils her flight from the canefields of the colonial past; and "Afrikan by Instinct," a brilliant, vibrant, jubilant celebration of the black diaspora that name-checks everyone from C.L.R. James to Ntozake Shange, all in steel-pan/highlife/township-jive double-time. Mandiela's earlier cassettes, first & last and barefoot and black, are available directly from her independent label, bushooman rag, Box 292, Station B, Toronto, Ontario, Canada M5T 2W2. She is also active as a video producer, theater director, and page poet; her published collections are Speshal Rikwes (Sister Vision, 1985) and dark diaspora . . . in dub (Sister Vision, 1991).

influences:

⏮ Lillian Allen

Michael Eldridge

Kanté Manfila

Guitar-based Manding pop

Born 1946, in Farabanah, Guinea. Based in Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, and Paris, France.

Kanté Manfila was born a Manding griot or hereditary oral historian/troubadour—in other words, a person with ancient music literally in his blood. He spent his early years living the village life, surrounded by the fabulous melodies and rhythms of the kora (African harp-lute), the balafon (xylophone), and the all-powerful djembe drum. Once he left the village, he worked a brief stint with Guinea's Ballets Africains, one of the foremost traditional performance ensembles Africa has produced. By the late '50s Manfila had begun to take an interest in the guitar, which, in the hands of pioneers like Sekou "Docteur" Diabaté, was emerging as a major player in modern griot music.

Manfila mostly learned guitar while living in Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, which was becoming a major music center during the '60s. In 1971, he was invited by the great Malian singer Salif Keita to move to that country's capitol of Bamako and form a new band, Les Ambassadeurs du Motel. Keita was leaving the legendary Rail Band de Bamako at the time, and ironically, Manfila's cousin Mory Kanté then took Keita's place as the Rail Band's lead singer. The cousins remained close, but their respective bands entered a period of intense competition. That rivalry came to a dramatic head some years later when Les Ambassadeurs had moved on to Abidjan and Mali's arts-loving dictator, Moussa Traoré, invited the two bands to play back-to-back in a stadium show. Though there was no definitive winner, the concert marked a watershed event in the history of Manding pop.

In 1982, Manfila and Keita parted ways. Keita went on to Paris to begin a solo career that would soon rocket him to international fame. Manfila also moved to Paris for a time and began his own solo career, and though he never matched Keita's achievements, he continued to do pioneering work. His all-acoustic release Tradition reunited him with Mory Kanté on kora and paved the way for a period of excellent acoustic recordings of Manding griot music by a number of artists. Manfila has stayed active in a variety of settings and remains a powerful force in this music.

what to buy: Salif Keita & Les Ambassadeurs: Seydou Bathily ♪♪♪♪½ (Stern's Africa, 1997) is perhaps the best of the fine reissues of music from this classic band of the '70s. N'na Niwalé (Merci les Mères) ♪♪♪♪♪ (popular african music, 1990) is a prime acoustic session highlighting Manfila's guitar mastery.

what to buy next: Ni Kanu ♪♪♪♪ (Hemisphere, 1995, prod. Patrick Papineau) blends a few acoustic tunes into a mostly electric production showcasing Manfila's contemporary band sound.

worth searching for: Tradition ♪♪♪♪♪ (Celluloid/Melodie, 1989, prod. Tangent, Kante Manfila) is Manfila's seminal back-to-roots recording, well worth tracking down.

influences:

◀◀ Sekou "Docteur" Diabaté, Sekou "Bembeya" Diabaté

▶▶ Ousmane Kouyaté, Mory Kanté

see also: Mory Kanté, Salif Keita, Rail Band

Banning Eyre

Sam Mangwana

Soukous

Born 1945, in Kinshasa, Zaire (now Congo). Based in Paris, France.

Mangwana's parents were from Angola, but he was born and raised in the Congo. He sang from childhood and learned formal music during a stint in a Salvation Army choir. By 17 he was fronting Tabu Ley Rochereau's African Fiesta, as well as arranging some of the band's music. Mangwana also moonlighted frequently with other top soukous (African rumba) outfits including Negro Band, L'Orchestre Tembo, Vox Afrique, and Tabu Ley's main rival, Franco's TPOK Jazz. In 1976 Mangwana decided to form his own band, which was made easier because of his connections to the top names in Congo's music business. That band, the African All Stars, toured endlessly, touching down all over Africa, Europe, and the Caribbean. In 1982 he recorded "Maria Tebbo," one of the biggest soukous hits of all time. Mangwana has always been an adventurous composer, adding bits of West African highlife as well as beguine, zouk, and other Caribbean rhythms to his melodies. In the past few years he's also been experimenting with the sounds of Cape Verde, Mozambique, Angola, and Cuba.

what to buy: On Galo Negro ♪♪♪♪½ (Putumayo, 1998, prod. Christian Polloni), Mangwana moves closer to his goal of international domination, with an exciting, eclectic sound. The band, as always, is in top form, shifting easily across numerous geographical and musical boundaries. The title tune is a Cape Verdean morna with a zouk backbeat; "Nakupenda" has a pleasing touch of semba (Angolan samba); and "Gossip" sounds like the Buena Vista Social Club in Cape Verde and is as sweet as any soukous ballad Mangwana has ever recorded.

what to buy next: Two of Mangwana's early albums go digital for the first time on a single CD, Maria Tebbo ♪♪♪♪♪ (Stern's Classics, 1995, prod. Sam Mangwana). He was already experimenting with other African rhythms as you can tell from such self-explanatory titles as "Tchimurenga Zimbabwe" and "Bana ba Cameroon," and the compilation's own title track was his first Pan-African hit.

best of the rest:

Georgette Eckins ♪♪♪♪ (SAM, 1979/Celluloid France, 1984)
Affaire Video ♪♪♪♪ (Celluloid, 1982)
Les Champions ♪♪♪♪ (Celluloid, 1984)
Aladji ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1989)
Rumba Music ♪♪♪♪♪ (Stern's, 1994)

influences:

◀◀ Tabu Ley Rochereau, Franco, Le Grande Kalle

▶▶ Ray Lema, Kanda Bongo Man

see also: Franco, Tabu Ley Rochereau, Rigo Star

j. poet

Herbie Mann

World jazz

Born Herbert Jay Solomon, April 16, 1930, in Brooklyn, NY, USA. Based in New Mexico, USA.

Jazz-style improvisation is at the core of Herbie Mann's music. However, a world-spanning range of influences has given it its distinct flavor. Over the past three decades, the New York–born flute player has incorporated everything from African rhythms and Brazilian bossa novas to Memphis-style R&B and Top 40 pop tunes. Mann's childhood dreams to play the drums were altered when his parents took him to see swing clarinet player

Benny Goodman at the Paramount Theater in 1939, hoping to change his mind. Their scheme worked. Two weeks later, Mann had a clarinet of his own. Not long afterwards he was playing saxophone as well. Following a stint in the U.S. Army, Mann planned to become a professional saxophonist. Instead, he found that most of the jobs in jazz bands for sax players were already filled by the likes of Al Cohn, Zoot Sims, and Stan Getz. Switching to the flute, Mann recorded an album with jazz accordionist Matt Mathews and the rhythm section of bassist Percy Heath and drummer Kenny Clarke of the Modern Jazz Quintet. With no previous jazz flute players to serve as models, Mann took his own approach, using the flute more like a trumpet than a classical instrument. Though his playing was initially treated as a novelty, Mann was taken more seriously when he began adding Latin rhythms to his arrangements. With a band that included Chick Corea, Herbie Hancock, Steve Gadd, Tony Levin, and Nana Vasconcelos, Mann became an international success.

In the early 1960s, he toured South America with an all-star jazz band featuring Coleman Hawkins, Roy Eldridge, Al Cohn, Zoot Sims, Wildman Jo Jones, Ronnie Ball, Ben Tucker, David Bailey, Chris Conner, and Kenny Durham. During the tour, Mann's inclusion of a passage from a Brazilian tune during his solo one night earned him a standing ovation and showed him the power of inter-cultural music. Mann later became one of the first American musicians to record with Brazilian ones, including Sergio Mendes and Antonio Carlos Jobim. At the close of the decade, Mann switched to American music and released a jazz-meets-R&B album, Memphis Underground, with Muscle Shoals studio musicians including the late Duane Allman. Although his interpretations of songs by the Beatles and Creedence Clearwater Revival upset many jazz traditionalists, the album became an FM hit and introduced his music to a younger audience. Mann's stylistic expeditions abroad were not over, though; the same year he toured with a band that featured jazz greats Cornell Dupree, Chuck Rainey, David Newman, and Les McCann (1992), he launched his own record label, Kokopelli, with the album Jazil Brazz, recorded with his Brazilian band of the same name.

what to buy: Recorded during a week-long celebration at the famed New York jazz club in April 1995, 65th Birthday: Live at the Blue Note ♪♪♪♪½ (Lightyear, 1995, prod. Herbie Mann) showcases the full spectrum of Mann's legacy. In addition to ultra-funky treatments of "Memphis Underground" and "Dippermouth," Mann leads more than 30 past and present members of his band— including Dave Valentin, Randy Brecker, Tito Puente, and David "Fathead" Newman—through bossa novas like "Sonhos" and reworkings of Ellington's "Jeep's Blues" and Parker's "Au Privau."

what to buy next: Mann upset many of his old jazz fans with his exploration of late-'60s soul music and R&B, Memphis Un-

brazil: the northeast

For over 100 years Quilombo dos Palmares—now the Northeast of Brazil—was an independent nation, formed in the 17th century by escaped slaves. Here the people farmed, practiced the religions of their African ancestors, and ruled by consensus. Their resistance against repeated offensives by the Portuguese and Dutch armies illustrates the gritty strength of the nordeste (Northeast) culture.

Luiz Gonzaga (1912–89) was the voice of the nordeste for more than half a century, popularizing his rollicking baião style and flaunting clothes reminiscent of bandit folk-hero Lampiao. His best-known song "Asa Branca" tells of a nordestino boy who leaves his drought-plagued rural home and goes to the big city to try and earn a living, a story that mirrors millions of lives in Brazil.

Carnival is also a big part of life in the coastal regions (Recife and Olinda in Pernambuco state are especially known for it). Brass bands playing the irrepressible frevo music wind through the streets, trailing groups of revelers. The deep, earthy rhythm of maracatú pounds out from where the circle dances are taking place. And exhibitions of caboclo, or Indian heritage, are theatrically expressed.

Since the 1970s singers Elba Ramalho, Zé Ramalho, Alceu Valença, and Geraldo Azevedo have churned out music with a northeastern twang, heightening the popularity of forró (a catch-all term for the myriad northeastern dance-music genres, typically incorporating tambourine, triangle, and accordion). In the '90s the traditional cóco and maracatú rhythms have propelled Chico Science and his band Nação Zumbí into funk, acid jazz, and hardcore, resulting in one of the most original sounds to come out of Brazil for some time. The embolado, a remarkable rapid-fire improvisational song (which can become an exciting duel of the spoken word if two people are involved), has seen a resurgence through recordings by Chico Science, Daude, and Gilberto Gil. Meanwhile the folkloric heritage of the Northeast has found its champion in Antonio Nobrega, who digs deep to reveal gems of the popular culture.

Mara Weiss and Nego Beto

Manolín, El Médico de la Salsa

derground ♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1969, prod. Herbie Mann). But the album's funky rhythms and pop-minded melodies became a college-radio hit and established Mann with a more youthful following. The album remains a powerful summit meeting of jazz players—including flautist Mann, vibraphonist Roy Ayers, and guitarists Larry Coryell and Sonny Sharrock—and Memphis studio players including the late Duane Allman.

best of the rest:

Bongos, Conga and Flute ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1959)
African Suite ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1959)
At the Village Gate ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1962)
Latin Fever ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1962)
Brasil, Bossa Nova & Blues ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1962)
Returns to the Village Gate ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1963)
(With João Gilberto and Antonio Carlos Jobim) With Gilberto & Jobim ♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1966) Push Push ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1971)
Mississippi Gambler ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1972)
Evolution: Anthology ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1992) America/Brasil ♪♪♪♪ (Lightyear, 1997)

influences:

◀◀ Miles Davis, Dizzy Gillespie, bossa nova, African rhythms, the Beatles

▶▶ Jethro Tull, Hubert Laws

see also: Maya Angelou

Craig Harris

Manolín, El Médico de la Salsa

Timba

Born Manuel Gonzales Hernandez, in Havana, Cuba. Based in Havana, Cuba.

In modern Cuba, the only people who (relatively speaking) make big bank legally are musicians. That said, save for OGs Los Van Van, NG La Banda, and the fluky Buena Vista Social Club, new jack timba bands like Bamboleo, David Calzado, and Azucar Negra are the top-dollar choices of the people. Though rooted in traditional Cuban son, timba's refreshing exuberance, unpredictability, earthiness, and in-ya-grill immediacy come from a worldly synthesis of reggae, '70s funk, electric jazz, hip-hop, and street-smart realness. For certified physician Manuel Hernandez, forming a timba band was a no-brainer: $2,000 annual government salary vs. $40,000-plus rock-star take. Today, smooth-operator tenor pipes intact, white-on-white ensembles in full effect, the re-christened, 30-something Manolín, El Médico de la Salsa is one of Cuba's biggest pop heartthrobs—stage, radio, and television.

what's available: Signed to EMI's Spanish subsidiary Caribe, El Medico's most available release in America is De Buena Fe ♪♪♪½ (Metro Blue, 1997, prod. Dagoberto Gonzales Jr.). A slightly underwhelming timba album padded with too many mid-tempo ballads (especially when compared with solo timba mack daddy Issac Delgado), De Buena Fe does flash sufficient lightning with killer tracks "Yo Tengo Mi Mecánica," "Que Le Llegue Mi Mano," "Pegaito, Peqaito," and "El Que Este Que Tumbé."

influences:

◀◀ NG La Banda, Los Van Van

▶▶ Adalberto Alvarez, Issac Delgado

see also: Bamboleo

Tom Terrell

Machanic Manyeruke /Machanic Manyeruke & the Puritans

African gospel

Born in Zimbabwe. Based in Harare, Zimbabwe.

Manyeruke is a gospel singer and guitarist from Zimbabwe with a unique style that's part Pops Staples, part Jonah Sithole. With his backing group, simple piano, and two powerful female singers, he makes a mighty noise unto the Lord, one that's powerful enough to motivate unbelievers too.

what's available: Like many albums released in the early days of the world-music boom, Machanic Manyeruke & The Puritans ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1986, prod. Bothwell Nyamhondera) has no liner notes, no personnel, no nothin', except for incredible music, great picking, and a big, fat, inspirational vibe.

influences:

◀◀ Ngwara Mpundu, Ephat Mujuru & The Spirit of the People

j. poet

Samba Mapangala & Orchestra Virunga

East African rumba/soukous

Formed 1980, in Nairobi, Kenya. Based in Nairobi, Kenya; Paris, France; London, England; and USA.

Rotating membership in recent years; original lineup featured: Samba Mapangala (born early 1950s, in Matadi, Congo), lead and backing vocals; Risa-Rissa, lead guitar; Mikili Sesti, rhythm guitar; Bavon Masudi, bass guitar; Juma Kachenchy, drums; Rama Athumani, alto sax.

Samba Mapangala epitomizes a major 1970s phenomenon of African pop music—the exodus of talented musicians from the competitive scene in Kinshasa, Zaire (now Congo), and the subsequent spread of the Kinshasa sound to other African cities. Mapangala was born in the Zaire River city of Matadi, but after his parents died, he came to Kinshasa as a teenager and naturally fell into the evolving rumba-rock community there. Mapangala sang with a group called Les Kinois, and in 1975 he took them on the road to East Africa. After a tough run in Uganda, the group landed in Nairobi, Kenya, where they lasted a few years before disbanding. Bringing some Kenyans on board, Mapangala went on to form Orchestra Virunga in 1980. The name referred to a volcano in eastern Zaire, and the music remained loyal to Mapangala's African-rumba roots (a hybrid subsequently known to the world as soukous). But now Swahili lyrics sidled up alongside Zairean Lingala, the lingua franca of the form; Virunga had a special identity as a Kenyan rumba outfit. In 1982 they scored an enormous hit with the song "Malako Disco," and their star rose steadily. The music centered around Mapangala's sweet, strong voice and the guitarists' classic, tangling interplay, but Mapangala also used a small saxophone section, which gave his group a unique sound. The band gained worldwide acclaim with the release of Virunga Volcano in 1990, and as the new decade wore on they toured in Europe and America, making more fine recordings along the way. The lineup has shifted some, but by now the band has made its mark and their sound keeps steady despite all the changes. Dependably tasty, Virunga's music has held up very well as modernizing trends continue to undermine the impact of recent rumba.

what to buy: Virunga Volcano ♪♪♪♪½ (Earthworks, 1990, prod. Justus Musyoka Kasoya) defines the original Virunga sound and includes the classic "Malako Disco." Feet on Fire ♪♪♪♪♪ (Stern's Africa, 1991, prod. Charlie Hart) presents the slightly more produced sound of their first U.K. recording, with shorter, more hard-hitting arrangements.

worth searching for: Vinja Mifupa ♪♪♪♪ (Disc Makers, 1997, prod. Clifford Lugard) is an excellent, independently produced American recording of the group.

influences:

◀◀ Franco, Zaiko Langa Langa

Banning Eyre

Thomas Mapfumo

Chimurenga

Born 1945, in Marondera, Zimbabwe. Based in Zimbabwe.

"The Lion of Zimbabwe," Thomas Mapfumo is one of his country's most influential musicians, with hard-driving rhythms, politically tinged lyrics, and gutsy vocals. A graduate of a British colonial school in Zimbabwe, Mapfumo was initially inspired by the rock and pop music of Europe and the United States. As a youngster, he performed a version of Elvis Presley's "A Mess of Blues," accompanied by a white band, the Bob Cyclones, in a local talent show. After continuing to sing cover tunes in the short-lived band Cosmic Four Dots, Mapfumo began incorporating the indigenous rhythms associated with Zimbabwe's mbira (thumb piano). Accompanied by the Acid Band, a group that he met at a local bar, Mapfumo recorded his first singles in the early 1970s. Inspired by Zimbabwe's move away from the colonial rule of Great Britain, Mapfumo increasingly used his songs to address political issues. Mapfumo's debut album with the Acid Band, Ho Koyo, was so politically edged that he was arrested and placed in a prison camp. Although he agreed to perform a concert in exchange for his release, Mapfumo stuck to his political repertoire. In 1976 several of the Acid Band's less talented musicians were replaced by guitarist Jonah Sithole and a new horn section, and the group's name was changed to Blacks Unlimited. In 1978, Mapfumo and Blacks Unlimited celebrated Zimbabwe's independence with the album Gwindingwe Rine Shumba. The band's first internationally distributed album, Corruption, was released in 1989. Mapfumo's electrically charged style of mbira music is called chimurenga, the Shona word for "struggle."

4/8/2 mariachi cobre

Thomas Mapfumo

what to buy: Chimurenga Singles ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1984, prod. Thomas Mapfumo & Blacks Unlimited) samples tracks from the band's early albums and documents Mapfumo's updating of the traditional mbira sounds of Zimbabwe.

what to buy next: Focusing on Mapfumo and Blacks Unlimited's early- and late-1970s recordings, Shumba: Vital Hits of Zimbabwe ♪♪♪½ (Earthworks, 1991, prod. Thomas Mapfumo & Blacks Unlimited) picks up where Chimurenga leaves off.

best of the rest:
Ndangariro ♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1983/Shanachie, 1991)
Corruption ♪♪♪½ (Mango, 1989)
Chamunorwa ♪♪♪ (Mango, 1991)
Chimurenga Forever: The Best of . . . ♪♪♪♪ (Blue Note, 1996) Chimurenga: Africa Spirit Music ♪♪♪ (WOMAD, 1997)
Hondo ♪♪♪ (Zimbob, 1998)
Chimurenga '98 ♪♪♪♪ (Stern's USA, 1999)

influences:
⏮ King Sunny Adé, Stella Chiweshe, Ephat Mujuru & the Spirit of the People

⏭ Oliver Mtukudzu, Comrade Chinx

see also: Ephat Mujuru

Craig Harris

Mariachi Cobre

Mariachi, Tejano, son jalisco

Formed 1971, in Tucson, AZ, USA. Based in Tucson, AZ, USA.

Randy Carrillo, guitarron, guitar; Steve Carrillo, trumpet; Adolfo Roman García, violin (former member); Francisco Grijalva, guitar; Roberto Juan Martínez, vihuela; Israel Gálvez Molina, violin, congas; Antóñio Hernandez Ruíz (Mexico), violin; Mack Ruíz, violin; Carlos Figueroa, violin; Hector Gama (Mexico), violin; Javier Trujillo, guitarra de golpe; Mario Trujillo, violin. (All members are from USA except where noted otherwise.)

In the mid-1960s a young priest in Tucson, Arizona, began encouraging the young people of his church to learn and sing the music of their Mexican heritage. In 1971 Randy Carrillo, a longtime member of the church group, organized Mariachi Cobre with his younger brother Steve, his friend Mack Ruiz, and guitarist Frank Grijalva. The band expanded, concentrating on the traditional mariachi instrumentation of violin, trumpet, and several types of guitar, to bring the sound of Jalisco (the Mexican state from which some members hail) to the world. They founded the first International Mariachi Conference in Tucson in 1981, and since 1982 have played for visitors to EPCOT Center at Walt Disney World in Orlando, Florida. The band members have been able to learn from the seminal Mariachi Vargas, and they've appeared on stage with Linda Ronstadt, Lucha Villa, Lola Beltran, Ana Gabriel, Julio Iglesias, Jose Luis Rodriquez, and other Latin-music leaders.

what's available: Este Es Mi Mariachi ♪♪♪♪♪ (Kuckuck, 1995, prod. Brian Keane) shows the vitality and musicianship that attracted Ronstadt and others to the group. Mariachi Cobre ♪♪♪♪ (Kuckuck, 1991, prod. Brian Keane) captures the band at an earlier stage of evolution, though they'd been playing together for a number of years when it was recorded. XXV Aniversario ♪♪♪♪ (Black Sun, 1996, prod. Brian Keane) is a retrospective celebration of the Mariachi Cobre style.

influences:

◀◀ Mariachi Vargas, Mariachi Reyes del Assaredero

Kerry Dexter

Bob Marley /Bob Marley & the Wailers

Reggae, ska, rocksteady

Bob Marley born Robert Nesta Marley, February 6, 1945, in St. Ann, Jamaica. Died May 11, 1981, in Miami, FL, USA. The Wailers formed 1963, in Kingston, Jamaica. Disbanded 1981.

Bob Marley, vocals, guitar (1963–81); Peter Tosh (born Winston Hubert McIntosh; died September 11, 1987), vocals, guitar (1963–74); Bunny Wailer (a.k.a. Neville O'Riley Livingston), vocals (1963–74); Junior Braithwaite (died June 2, 1999), vocals (1963–65); Beverley Kelso, vocals (1963–65); Cherry Smith, vocals (1963–65); Constantine "Dream Vision" Walker, vocals (1966); Norma Fraser, vocals (1966); Rita Marley (Cuba), vocals (1966, 1974–81); Aston "Family Man" Barrett, bass (1969–81); Carlton Barrett (died 1987), drums (1969–81); Al Anderson (USA), guitar (1972–76; 1979–81); Earl "Wire" Lindo, keyboards (1972–74); Bernard "Touter" Harvey, keyboards (1974–81); Judy Mowatt, vocals (1974–81); Marcia Griffiths, vocals (1974–81); Julian "Junior" Marvin, guitar (1975–81); Tyrone Downie, keyboards (1975–81); Donald Kinsey (USA), lead guitar (1976). (All members are from Jamaica except as noted otherwise.)

Born in the rural parish of St. Ann to Cedella Malcolm, an 18-year-old black woman, and Captain Norval Marley, a white quartermaster in the British West Indian Regiment, Bob Marley became the Third World's first truly international recording artist and an inspirational Rasta lightning rod—a conduit for "sufferahs" everywhere who let humanity and faith course through him and direct his vision.

As a boy, Marley grew up in the impoverished hamlet of Nine Miles, a country village suffused with the heterodoxy of obeah sorcery and myal magic. At a very early age he developed a reputation as an eerie, spiritually connected boy—a genuine "natural mystic"—primarily due to his fiercely penetrating gaze, unsettling palmistry skills, and uncanny ability to read and feel "the vibe" of those around him. Barely into his teens, he and his mother moved to the notorious Trenchtown ghettos of Kingston. There Marley became fast friends with fellow youths Peter Tosh and Bunny Wailer. As a teen, Marley was dubbed "Tuff Gong" for his ferocious street-fighting skills, and he eventually earned renown as a fine boxer as well. His first musical instrument was a banjo.

The original Wailers initially coalesced in 1961 as the Teenagers and included Marley, Tosh, Wailer, Junior Braithwaite, Beverley Kelso, and Cherry Smith. The group was then intensively tutored by the great Trenchtown wiseman Joe Higgs. Marley's first solo singles were released by Leslie Kong's Beverley label in 1962: "Terror," "Judge Not," and "One Cup of Coffee," a loose cover of a 1961 Claude Gray country song; all three sold inauspiciously. "Simmer Down" was the Wailers' first release and its popularity was a harbinger of things to come. The record soared to #1 on the Jamaican charts within weeks of its December 1963 issue and remained there for two months, though pre-release sound-system (mobile deejay unit) dub plates had made it a local dancefloor-filler as far back as late 1962. Often backed by the Skatalites, the band recorded numerous tracks for Coxsone Dodd's esteemed Studio One between 1963 and '66, including ska cover versions of U.S. soul and doo-wop songs as well as original pre-rocksteady (proto-reggae) groovers, among them such stand-out singles as "Wings of a Dove," "Destiny," "Freedom Time," "Who Feels It, Knows It," and "Rolling Stone," an adaptation of the Bob Dylan epic. The group also issued the first versions of Marley-penned future sure-shots "One Love" and "Put It On." All of the band's Dodd-produced singles bore the legend "Scorcher!" emblazoned on the labels.

On February 10, 1966, Marley married Rita Anderson, at the time a member of the Soulettes. The next day Marley flew to Wilmington, Delaware, where he worked to earn enough money to finance his own record label and lived with his mother, who had remarried and relocated there. He returned to Jamaica in October of 1966. Early the next year the Wailers, pared down to a Marley/Tosh/Wailer trio, recorded the superb singles "Bend Down Low," "Nice Time" (a nickname for Marley's first child, Cedella), "Hypocrites," and "Stir It Up," a tune written for Rita while Marley was in America that is still one of reggae's most sensual and seductive love songs. Marley's Stateside monetary mission a success, all these tracks were proudly released on the band's own Wail 'N' Soul 'M imprint.

bob marley

During this period, the Wailers recorded their first Rastafarian hymns, including "Selassie Is the Chapel." However, the group's momentum briefly subsided when Bunny was arrested and imprisoned for marijuana possession. Upon his release in 1969, the band recorded a slew of stellar singles for producer Leslie Kong, who eventually released a compilation album in 1970 called The Best of the Wailers. Yet the group continued to struggle financially, and in the summer of '69 Marley again sojourned to Wilmington, where he obtained a job at the city's Chrysler plant.

When he returned to Jamaica later that year, the Wailers' crucial collaboration with Lee "Scratch" Perry began. The songs from this period—1969–71—represent some of the boldest, most inspired reggae music ever made. Rebellion-stoked underdog anthems like "Small Axe," "Duppy Conqueror," "Soul Rebel," and a shamanistic cover of Richie Havens's "African Herbsman," in addition to divinity-imbued remakes of some of the band's Studio One material, were all backed by Perry's organic roots-funk band the Upsetters, which included in its ranks the relentless rhythm section of Aston "Family Man" Barrett (bass) and his "one drop"–wielding brother Carlton (drums). Perry helped convince the Wailers of their status as soul-powered mavericks not only for their shantytown brethren but for oppressed people the world over.

After these stirring sessions, the band was signed by Chris Blackwell's Island Records and released Catch a Fire, a brawny reggae/blues/rock album that ignited a crossover Wailers wildfire. The record included organ overdubs by "Stevie" Winwood and a clever Zippo-lighter sleeve, a hip adornment that was targeted toward hippies and white rockers but one which was heedless of the true meaning of the album title—a Jamaican term for "catching hell," not an entreaty to smoke ganja as the marketing implied. The 1973 follow-up Burnin' shed all the rockist trappings and is a defiant roots-reggae masterpiece. English rock wanker Eric Clapton's cover of the album's "I Shot the Sheriff" was a #1 U.S. hit, though the Wailers' version is immensely more trenchant and provocative, as Marley testifies with the anger and fear of a real fugitive from (in)justice.

In retrospect, the Wailers' committed and creative triple-threat of Marley, Tosh, and Wailer was both a blessing and a curse, a dynamic that inevitably resulted in the impact of strong personality upon strong personality—a collision that led to the unfortunate implosion of the boyhood triumvirate in mid-1974. Tosh and Wailer decided to pursue solo careers and were replaced with the gorgeous gospel-styled harmonies of the I-Threes—Bob's wife Rita Marley, Marcia Griffiths, and Judy Mowatt. The women lent an exhilarating vocal and visual presence to Marley's live act, with at-once dazzling and dignified dance moves choreographed by Mowatt. In the following years, Marley attained hard-earned international success with the militantly arrayed Natty Dread and Rastaman Vibration, as well as Live!, an astonishing performance recorded at London's Lyceum Ballroom.

On December 3, 1976, on the eve of a much-publicized free Kingston concert, gunmen broke into Marley's home in a blitzing assassination attempt. Marley was shot but survived the hail of bullets; the motive for the shooting is unclear to this day. Undeterred, Marley performed for the massive crowd the following evening, and later released "Ambush in the Night," a song of survival (from the LP also named Survival) that entwined calls for brotherhood and integrity among the poor with lyrics that effectively exposed the machinations behind divide-and-conquer political agendas.

Still shaken from the incident, Marley jetted off on an 18-month international tour, which, along with the multi-continent popularity of the Exodus LP, further entrenched his image as a revolutionary mystic, an edifying seer, and a contemplative emissary of Rastafari. In July of 1977 Marley entered a hospital in Miami and had surgery to remove cancer cells from his right toe. In 1978, he was awarded the United Nations' Medal of Peace after he brushed off numerous death threats from warring, politically funded tribes to play the One Love Peace Concert in Kingston, where he persuaded Jamaica's bitterly opposed party leaders to clasp hands on stage in a dramatic gesture of national unity and goodwill.

In 1980, Marley's legendary concert in newly liberated Zimbabwe made him forever an apostle of Pan-Africanism. Toward the end of the year, Marley began to grow increasingly frail as his body was ravaged by liver, brain, and lung cancer. In April of 1981, he received one of Jamaica's highest honors, the Order of Merit, for his everlasting gifts to the country's culture. A month later, on May 11th, Marley died in a Miami hospital at the age of 36. He was buried with his time-worn Gibson guitar and a Bible opened to the 23rd Psalm in a sepulcher carved out of hilltop rock high in the Nine Miles countryside. Marley will be remembered as a phenomenon of conviction, rebellion, and conciliation—a man who consistently created inspiring songs alive with gritty, searching cadences, infinite soul, and unwavering hope. His music's unassailable devotion to the downtrodden used the patois, lore, and idioms of Jamaica, yet always strove to establish "One Love"—Marley's term for the space in all of us that is receptive to empathy and redemption. His life, his personality, and his art together are the embodiment of the animating force of reggae music.

what to buy: Possessing a potent amulet's continuous surge of spiritual energy, Songs of Freedom ♪♪♪♪♪ (Island/Tuff Gong, 1992, prod. various) is a truly essential reggae compilation and by far the finest and most comprehensive anthology of Marley's sweeping, sultry body of work. From the very first Leslie Kong singles and kinetic Studio One ska cuts, to the rugged Wailers material with Lee Perry, to the best of the timeless Island classics, all the way to revelatory unreleased tracks, this thoughtfully annotated 4-CD collection captures the essence of the man and the heart-nourishing substance of his legacy. The set also includes a terrific live version of "Redemption Song" and a tremendous collection of photographs that is nearly as revealing as the music. Burnin' ♪♪♪♪½ (Island, 1973, prod. Chris Blackwell, the Wailers) is a firebrand of closely rising, helix-like three-part harmonies, spellbinding shantytown stories, and unadulterated, utterly arresting roots-reggae music. It includes "I Shot the Sheriff" and "Burnin' and Lootin'," both graphic tales of the ruthlessness of martial law and unmitigated police power. Add tough, distinctive recuts of "Small Axe" and "Duppy Conqueror" and you have one of the Wailers' strongest albums. Natty Dread ♪♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1974, prod. Chris Blackwell, the Wailers) is the first album featuring the transcendent gospel-esque harmonies of the I-Threes, but is ultimately catalyzed by the incipient movement-of-Jah-people power of the songs—the title cut, "Them Belly Full (But We Hungry)," "Rebel Music (3 O'Clock Roadblock)," and "Talkin' Blues" emanate both the aura of insurrection and the balmy feel of tropical heat. There are also the definitive versions of "No Woman, No Cry" and "Lively Up Yourself," the latter rendered with a totally wild and unrestrained passion including an ululating war-cry/yodel at the song's outset. Exodus ♪♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1977, prod. Bob Marley & the Wailers) is one of Marley's most widely beloved albums and one that successfully commingles songs of exotic cultural convocation ("One Love/People Get Ready" "Natural Mystic," "Jamming") with those based on sweet, imagistic proverbs ("Three Little Birds," "Turn Your Lights Down Low") and beguiling Rasta ritual and history ("Exodus," "The Heathen"). The I-Threes are at their most magical on the title cut's epic tale of exile, and the Barrett brothers' battle-tested rhythms roll, boom, and echo like siege cannons throughout the album. What's more, the sad, serene longing expressed on the beautiful "Waiting in Vain" is an unforgettable moment in the Marley discography.

what to buy next: African Herbsman ♪♪♪♪♪ (Trojan, 1973, prod. Lee "Scratch" Perry) and Soul Revolution I & II ♪♪♪♪♪½ (Upsetter, 1970/Trojan, 1988, prod. Lee "Scratch" Perry) together contain the best of the Wailers' collaborations with the man who made the recording of reggae an art. Herbsman mixes the Wailers' gripping unison harmonies with the Tuff Gong's evocatively echoing lyrics on such proverb-wise stone-cold classics as "400 Years," "Duppy Conqueror," "Kaya," "Lively Up Yourself," and of course, "Small Axe," which courageously cuts big, powerful oppressors down to size. The rites and incantations on Soul Revolution mix African communion and Babylon-conquering conjury into a potion to rejuvenate the soul; Volume II contains the raw, unceasingly tough dub versions, which accentuate just how mighty and nuanced the Barrett brothers' rhythms truly are.

the rest:

The Wailing Wailers ♪♪♪ (Studio One, 1965)
Marley, Tosh, Livingston & Associates ♪♪♪ (Studio One, 1965/1980)
The Best of the Wailers ♪♪♪½ (Beverley's, 1970)
Soul Rebels ♪♪♪♪ (Maroon JA/Trojan U.K., 1970)
Catch a Fire ♪♪♪♪½ (Island, 1973)
The Best of Bob Marley & The Wailers ♪♪♪½ (Studio One/Coxsone, 1974)
Rasta Revolution ♪♪♪½ (Trojan, 1974)
Live! Bob Marley & the Wailers ♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1975)
The Best of Bob Marley & the Wailers ♪♪♪ (Studio One/Buddah, 1976) Rastaman Vibration ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1976)
Kaya ♪♪♪♪½ (Island, 1978)
Babylon by Bus ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1978)
Survival ♪♪♪♪½ (Island, 1979)
Uprising ♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1980)
Chances Are ♪♪½ (Cotillion, 1982)
Marley ♪♪♪ (Phoenix, 1982)
Jamaican Storm ♪♪ (Accord, 1982)
Bob Marley Interviews ♪♪♪ (Tuff Gong, 1982) Confrontation ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1983)
In the Beginning ♪♪♪ (Trojan, 1983)
Legend ♪♪♪♪½ (Island, 1984)
Reggae Greats—Wailers ♪♪♪♪ (Mango, 1984)
Mellow Mood ♪♪ (Topline, 1984)
Bob Marley and the Wailers/Bob, Peter, Bunny & Rita ♪½ (Jamaica, 1985)
Rebel Music ♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1986)
The Birth of a Legend 1963–1966 ♪♪♪½ (Epic, 1990)
One Love at Studio One ♪♪♪½ (Heartbeat, 1991)
Talkin' Blues ♪♪♪♪ (Island/Tuff Gong, 1991)
All the Hits ♪♪♪ (Rohit, 1991)
The Never Ending Wailers woof! (RAS, 1993)
Return to Dunn's River Falls ♪♪ (Compose, 1993)
Natural Mystic–The Legend Lives On ♪♪♪♪ (Island/Tuff Gong, 1995)
Power ♪♪½ (More Music, 1995)
The Rarities, Vol. I & II ♪♪♪ (Jamaican Gold, 1996)
(With Bill Laswell, posthumously) Dreams of Freedom: Ambient Translations of Bob Marley in Dub ♪♪½ (Axiom/Island, 1997)
The Best of Bob Marley woof! (Madacy, 1997)
The Complete Wailers, 1968–1972: Part I ♪♪ (JAD, 1998)
Mr. Chatterbox ♪♪½ (Culture Press, 1998)
Going Back to My Roots ♪♪♪ (M.I.L. Multimedia, 1998)
Simmer Down at Studio One ♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1998)
Destiny: Rare Ska Sides from Studio One ♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1999) 1970–71: Upsetter Years ♪♪♪½ (Cleopatra, 1999)

worth searching for: Several video testaments give you the best way of experiencing Marley's presence in the only way you now can. A Jamaican bush-parish aphorism holds that "when the roots are strong, the fruit is sweet"; on Live at the Rainbow, 1977 (Island Visual Arts, 1991), the downright invincible roots-reggae music reaches fruition in Marley's singularly possessed performance. Though there are no known quality live videos of the original Wailers, this I-Threes-fortified show is a frenzied yet liberating spiritual spectacle, and the performances of classic Marley meditations are so vital and vivid they make even the outstanding original studio incarnations sound like they were based on tentative charcoal rubbings. Recorded in London just as Exodus was entrancing British youth, the atmosphere is decidedly supernatural. Legend (Island, 1991) is produced by Big Audio Dynamite's Don Letts—who bites a hefty portion of footage from the Rainbow video. Still, there's a lot of concert imagery here that cannot be found elsewhere. As for documentaries on Marley's life as well as work, Caribbean Nights (BBC/Island Visual Arts, 1986) and Time Will Tell (Island, 1992) will still be rustless a century from now. The former may be familiar from public television, as it was produced by the BBC and won the 1988 ACE Award for programming excellence. The latter is special primarily for its unflinching fidelity to the task of revealing Marley's persona through his own words. There is no narration, just rare, enlightening interviews, fascinating rehearsal footage (which offers insights into the creative impulse behind a number of Marley compositions), and of course, a revolutionary's bandolier of solidarity songs—all performed with the Natural Mystic's mythically healing ardor.

influences:

- Joe Higgs, Curtis Mayfield and the Impressions, Lee "Scratch" Perry, Fats Domino, the Drifters, Brook Benton, James Brown, Jackie Mittoo, King Sporty, Coxsone Dodd, Bob Dylan, the Skatalites
- Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers, Mighty Diamonds, Alpha Blondy, Aswad, Junior Byles, Luciano, Tony Rebel, Culture, the Meditations, the Gladiators, Israel Vibration, Majek Fashek, Johnny Nash, Eric Clapton, Misty in Roots, Itals, Lucky Dube, Apache Indian, Anthony B., UB40, Oku Onuora, Wailing Souls, Linton Kwesi Johnson, Third World

see also: Cedella Marley Booker, Marcia Griffiths, Joe Higgs, Rita Marley, Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers, the Meditations, Judy Mowatt, Augustus Pablo, Lee "Scratch" Perry, the Skatalites, Peter Tosh, Bunny Wailer

Todd Shanker

Rita Marley

Reggae

Born Alpharita Constantia Anderson, 1947, in Cuba. Based in Jamaica.

Rita Marley is one of the most important women in the history of reggae music. The widow of the late Bob Marley and the mother of six of his children including David (Ziggy), Sharon, and Cedella of the Melody Makers, Marley has garnered acclaim for her expressive vocals since the mid-1960s when she led the Soulettes, a light ska trio that was featured on many of the early recordings produced at the storied Studio One in Kingston, Jamaica. As a member of the I-Threes, Marley's vocals were essential to her husband's recordings and performances from the mid-'70s until his death in 1981. A native of Cuba, Marley grew up in Jamaica's Trenchtown. After meeting her future husband in 1964 at the age of 18, Rita fell under the reggae master's influence when she persuaded him to supervise the Soulettes. The Marleys were married on February 10, 1966. Working as a nurse in Delaware in the early '70s, Marley was lured back to music in 1974, when she joined with Marcia Griffiths and Judy Mowatt to form the I-Threes. Although she was at first skeptical of the Rastafarian faith central to reggae, Marley became devoted to the religion after a visit to Jamaica by Ethiopian emperor Haile Selassie I. Marley was working on her debut solo album when her husband died in 1981. Although she completed the album, Who Feels It Knows It, and had a minor hit with the single "One Draw," she withdrew from the limelight for most of the 1980s to manage and produce her children's group, the Melody Makers. The absence of a will left by her husband led to a lengthy period of court battles. The situation remained unsettled until 1991, when the Jamaican Supreme Court ruled that control of Bob Marley's multimillion-dollar estate should go to his family. After releasing the album Harambe (Working Together for Freedom) in 1983, Marley didn't return to the recording studio until 1990, when she recorded the aptly titled We Must Carry On.

what to buy: Marley's debut solo album, Who Feels It Knows It ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1981, prod. Rita Marley, Grub Cooper), remains a reggae masterpiece. Accompanied by many of her late husband's sidemen, including Aston Barrett (bass, guitar), Carlton "Carlie" Barrett (guitar, drums), Tyrone Downie (synthesizers, keyboards), and Julian "Junior" Marvin (guitar), Marley celebrates her commitment to Rastafarianism with such songs as "Jah Jah," "Thank You Jah," "Good Morning Jah," and "Jah Jah Don't Want," and pays homage to the joys of sensimilla with the hit tune "One Draw."

what to buy next: We Must Carry On ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1991, prod. various) includes a reggae-ized version of the Bee Gees' "To Love Somebody" and four Bob Marley tunes, including two that were previously unreleased—"Who Colt the Game" and "So Much Things to Say."

the rest:

Harambe (Working Together for Freedom) ♪♪♪½ (Ultrasonic, 1983/ Shanachie, 1987) worth searching for: A bootleg of a Marley performance with the Melody Makers, Montego Bay ♪♪♪½ (Clinton), was recorded during a November 1992 concert and demonstrates the soulful excitement of her live shows.

Ziggy Marley

influences:

◀◀ Bob Marley, Peter Tosh, Bunny Wailer

▶▶ Marley's Girls, Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers

see also: Bob Marley, Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers, Pablo Moses, Judy Mowatt, Lee "Scratch" Perry

Craig Harris

Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers

Contemporary reggae

Formed 1979, in Kingston, Jamaica. Based in Jamaica.

David "Ziggy" Marley, vocals, guitar; Stephen Marley, vocals, percussion; Cedella Marley, vocals; Sharon Marley Prendergast, vocals. (All members are from Jamaica.)

Bearing a striking resemblance, both physically and vocally, to his father—reggae icon Bob Marley—has likely been as much a burden as a boon to Ziggy Marley. But he's borne it amazingly well, leading a long-lasting and successful group that includes his brother and two sisters. Early on, their father wrote and produced a single for them, "Children Playing in the Streets," but the Melody Makers' first two albums suffered from the band's general lack of seasoning and from their record company's focus on making Ziggy a solo star. After moving to Virgin, Ziggy was still out front, but his family's influence grew on each successive album. While the group leans decidedly toward the pop side of reggae, with considerable influence from American R&B and hip hop, their lyrics continue in the vein of their late father—cautionary, righteous, but ever optimistic. Still, business is business, and these days the group is perhaps better known for appearing in a Cover Girl makeup commercial and performing the theme song for the cartoon show Arthur.

what to buy: The band's years on Virgin, certainly their most fertile period, are well summed up on The Best Of (1988–1993) ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1997, prod. various), a 17-track compilation. In terms of individual releases, though, Conscious Party ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1988, prod. Chris Frantz, Tina Weymouth) fulfills both parts of its title, with lyrics extolling Rastafarianism and liberation, and grooves that just won't quit. The title track and "Tomorrow People" promote awareness and uplift, while "Lee and Molly" recounts the strife encountered by an interracial couple. The production by Weymouth and Frantz doesn't get in the way of the songs, and the Talking Heads–style keyboard textures—on "Have You Ever Been to Hell," for instance—certainly make some of them more palatable to American ears. The group's reggae/hip-hop/rock synthesis continues on Free Like We Want 2 B ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1995, prod. the Melody Makers), which finds the family's involvement at an all-time high. Backup vocalists Cedella and Sharon (along with Erica Newell) take the lead on "Today," and Stephen steps to the fore on a number of tunes, including "Tipsy Dazy," "Keep On," and "Bygones." Ziggy's presence is still strong, though, especially on the title track and "Power to Move Ya."

ricky martin

what to buy next: Jahmakya ♪♪♪½ (Virgin, 1991, prod. the Melody Makers, Glenn Rosenstein) was perhaps the group's first truly mature album, with a nod to reggae's past but an eye more on creating a sound of their own, incorporating riddim-heavy hip-hop and dancehall influences and adding a harder rock edge to boot. "Raw Riddim," "Kozmik," and "So Good So Right" are standouts.

what to avoid: Time Has Come . . . The Best of Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers ♪♪ (EMI America, 1988, prod. Rita Marley) captures the best of a formative period, a treat for the devout fan but non-essential for casual listeners.

the rest:
One Bright Day ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1989)
Joy and Blues ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1993)
Fallen Is Babylon ♪♪½ (Elektra, 1997) Spirit of Music N/A (Elektra, 1999)

worth searching for: Die-hard fans or collectors can scour the used-LP racks for the original Melody Makers releases: Children Playing (EMI America, 1984, prod. Steve Levine), Play the Game Right (EMI America, 1985, prod. various), and Hey World (EMI America, 1986, prod. various). Stephen covers his father's "Rebel Music (3 O'Clock Roadblock)"—with rapper Michael Franti as special guest toaster—on the latter's band Spearhead's Chocolate Supa Highway ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1997, prod. Michael Franti).

influences:
⏮ Bob Marley, the Wailers, Curtis Mayfield, Earth, Wind & Fire ⏭ Fugees, Spearhead, Big Mountain

see also: Cedella Marley Booker, Bob Marley, Rita Marley, Spearhead

Daniel Durchholz

Ricky Martin

Latin pop, dance, cumbia, norteña

Born Enrique Martin Morales, December 21, 1971, in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Based in USA.

Ricky Martin first came to the public eye amid the rotating roster of teenage Latin bubblegum institution Menudo, becoming its lead singer and helping bring the group to international celebrity. After Martin outgrew the ensemble he returned to Puerto Rico to finish high school and later spent a brief time in New York. Resuming a childhood enthusiasm for acting, he appeared in small stage roles there and then joined the cast of a Mexican soap opera. Next he turned to the U.S. side of daytime drama, as bartender Miguel Morez on General Hospital. This led to the part of Marius in the Broadway production of Les Miserables, in which he stayed for about a year. During this time, Martin built a following for his own music with four dance-infused Spanish-language albums, which sold better with each release. His conquest of el Norte was already well underway with these albums and his show-stealing 1999 Grammys performance; his first English-language record clinched it with a reign at the top of the singles charts, on the cover of Time magazine, and seemingly everywhere else as the new face of Latin pop.

what to buy: Vuelve ♪♪♪½ (Sony, 1998, prod. Desmond Child) sees Martin fusing the dance-pop, flamenco, cumbia, norteña, and rock styles that interest him into a Pan-Latin dance mix that has proved enormously popular to Latin and non-Latin audiences alike. A Medio Vivir ♪♪♪½ (Sony, 1995, prod. Ian Blake), produced by Martin's fellow Menudo alumnus Ian Blake (a.k.a. Robi Rosa), shows Martin reaching for a harder rock edge than on his two earlier, heavily pop-oriented outings.

what to buy next: No relation to an identically titled predecessor, Ricky Martin ♪♪♪ (Sony, 1999, prod. Robi Rosa) was the star's historic crossover dream-come-true, sung mostly in English and featuring the pop-ska mega-seller "Livin' La Vida Loca," a reprise of the career-making 1998 World Cup theme song "The Cup of Life" (which turned the world's head during the '99 Grammys broadcast), and more platinum vouchers where those came from. Critics caveated that ballads weren't really his business, and he may have made more new fans than kept old ones, but overall the album was one of those moment-defining events for which you don't begrudge the messenger.

the rest:
Ricky Martin ♪♪♪ (Sony Discos, 1991)
Me Amarás ♪♪♪ (CBS Discos, 1993)

influences:
⏮ Los Tigres del Norte, Ricardo Montaner ⏭ Menudo

Kerry Dexter and Adam McGovern

Narciso Martinez

Conjunto

Born October 29, 1911, in Reynosa, Mexico. Died June 5, 1992, in San Benito, TX, USA.

Though Narciso Martinez was born in Mexico, his family soon moved to the Rio Grande Valley of Texas, where as a young man Martinez took up the accordion and with bajo sexto (Tex-Mex 12-string bass) player Santiago Almeida invented the conjunto sound, playing lively accordion-led dance tunes with the bajo sexto for rhythm. He became known as "El Huracan del Valle," or "the Hurricane of the Valley." His unique style, his choice to use the accordion as a melodic rather than a rhythm instrument, his willingness to experiment, and the wide distribution of his records over his long career all mark Narciso Martinez as a powerful influence on accordion players and on border music in general.

what's available: The Father of Tex-Mex Conjunto: El Huracan del Valle ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie/Folklyric, 1993, prod. Chris Strachwitz) collects 26 tracks from Martinez's extensive and mostly out-of-print catalog. His work often shows up on compilations of accordion, conjunto, and other border music as well.

influences:

R. de Leon, Santiago Almeida, Lydia Mendoza

Flaco Jimenez, Santiago Jimenez, Tony de la Rosa see also: Don Santiago Jimenez

Kerry Dexter

John Martyn

Folk

Born Iain McGeachy, September 11, 1948, in Surrey, England. Based in Scotland.

Growing up in both Scotland and England, John Martyn was strongly influenced by Scots folkie Hamish Imlach before hitting London in the mid-'60s with a formidable guitar technique already in place. He quickly became the first white solo artist signed to Chris Blackwell's Island label and in 1967 released his first record, London Conversation. It was fairly standard singer-songwriter material for the time, tossing in the obligatory blues and Dylan cover, but, considering he was only 19, showed hope for the future. That went some way to being fulfilled the following year on The Tumbler, which brought in jazzer Harold McNair on flute and went further to showing Martyn's increasing guitar prowess.

Then came the sidetrack—two albums with his new wife Beverly (née Kutner, who'd been groomed for a solo career and sung uncredited backup on Simon and Garfunkel's "Fakin' It"). Influenced by the rootsiness of the Band, they went to Woodstock to record and came up with a disc, Stormbringer, which alternated songs by the pair—Beverly's rather twee, but John's writing skills accelerating by leaps and bounds. Their next excursion, Road to Ruin, was much more English and at the same time jazzier, with saxes and percussion, and altogether more satisfying.

It set the stage for the next (and possibly best) stage of John's solo career, Bless the Weather, pairing his guitar with Danny Thompson's bass as an instrumental foil, his voice gone all smoky like a tenor sax. He was also experimenting with an Echoplex unit, the first fruit of which was "Glistening Glyndebourne." This was more a preface than a full work, with everything coming to perfect fruition a couple of years later on Solid Air. The title track, written for Nick Drake, was pure night music, connecting the dots between folk and jazz, while his version of Skip James's "I'd Rather Be the Devil" used the Echoplex to weave and repeat lines, offering a very new kind of blues. As far as writing went, Martyn was at the top of his game, with little gems like "May you Never" (later covered by Eric Clapton). Then there came another step sideways: Inside Out, more experimental and electric, with the traditional Scots pipe lament "Eibhli Ghail Chiuin Ní Chearbhaill" reproduced on guitar.

Later Martyn became more reflective and in touch with his roots, as he covered both the Copper Family's "Spencer the Rover" and the traditional "Satisfied Mind." The writing, however, remained inspired, as it would through One World, which found him diversifying his sound, becoming a little ambient with Steve Winwood and down-and-dirty with reggae producer Lee "Scratch" Perry ("Big Muff"). In between, on the road with Thompson and free-jazz drummer John Stevens, he issued the live disc Live at Leeds under his own auspices, immediately selling out the initial pressing of 10,000 copies.

Personal trauma can be good for the creative soul, and when John and Beverly split it resulted in the album Grace and Danger, recorded with good friend Phil Collins, himself undergoing a divorce. It was a mix of pleading and anger, with music that veered from the heavily electric to the achingly acoustic and seemed to look in a slightly different direction. Just how different became apparent when he signed with Genesis' Duke label and began his '80s MOR phase. It wasn't that the music was bad, just that the fretless bass and jazz-lite arrangements removed all the fangs, turning it more toward easy listening for the well-heeled. Two albums (Glorious Fool and Well Kept Secret) began the decline, which continued even when he returned to Island after putting out another live album, Philenthropy, which suffered gravely in comparison to its predecessor. Sapphire offered his take on "Somewhere over the Rainbow" (a Top Ten single in Sweden), but little more, and a third live record (Foundations) served to document the way he was squandering his talent (in part due to ongoing alcohol problems). Perhaps the lowest points came at the beginning of the '90s, with records as mushy and squishy as anyone could imagine. It was his back catalog that saved him. Reinterpreting his old work for money probably wasn't his first choice, but it seemed to offer inspiration and a whole new audience, as did a two-CD compilation of his best Island Records work (Sweet Little Mysteries).

The creative juices were obviously flowing again. A new record (And.) saw him back in good voice, offering some cutting guitar and experimenting with trip-hop, a genre perfectly suited to his deep velvet vocals. Then a live EP (Snoo)—what is it about Martyn and live records, anyway?—was more of a holding action, keeping the name out there until 1998's The Church with One Bell. The latter may be all covers but each has a distinct Martyn stamp; whether Randy Newman, Rev. Gary Davis, or Ben Harper, each sounds like a John Martyn tune. Across the years, from blues to jazz to "trad. arr. by," he's pulled the strings together into a whole. And at his best, a very splendid whole it is.

what to buy: Sweet Little Mysteries ♪♪♪♪ (Island Chronicles, 1994, prod. Bill Levenson) rounds up music from his most fertile period. Disc one is perfect; disc two has enough of the later fluff to make a good coaster. The individual albums from 1971 to '73 are the best choice. Bless the Weather ♪♪♪♪½ (Island Records, 1971, prod. John Martyn, John Wood) stretches acoustic foundations and is nothing less than pure joy. That it could be eclipsed by Solid Air ♪♪♪♪♪ (Island Records, 1973, prod. John Martyn, John Wood) is incredible, but true—the perfect John Martyn album, though The Church with One Bell ♪♪♪♪ (Thirsty Ear, 1998, prod. Norman Dayron, John Martyn) is such a return to form you have to love it.

what to avoid: Glorious Fool ♪♪ (WEA, 1979, prod. Phil Collins) and Well-Kept Secret ♪♪ (WEA, 1981, prod. Sandy Robertson) find him falling under the Phil Collins spell, a dangerous thing for any human being. It continued throughout the '80s. Sapphire ♪♪ (Island Records, 1984, prod. John Martyn) and Foundations ♪♪½ (Island Records, 1987, prod. Rob Fraboni) suffered from that syndrome, while The Apprentice ♪½ (Permanent, 1990, prod. John Martyn, Brian Young), Cooltide ♪½ (Permanent, 1991, prod. John Martyn, Brian Young, Spencer Cozens), and Live ♪ (Permanent, 1995) were the nadir.

the rest:
London Conversation ♪♪♪ (Island Records, 1967)
The Tumbler ♪♪♪ (Island Records, 1968)
Stormbringer ♪♪♪½ (Island Records, 1969)
Road to Ruin ♪♪♪½ (Island Records, 1970)
Inside Out ♪♪♪½ (Island Records, 1973)
Sunday's Child ♪♪♪½ (Island Records, 1975)
Live at Leeds ♪♪♪♪ (Self-released, 1975)
Grace and Danger ♪♪♪ (Island Records, 1977)
BBC 1 Live in Concert ♪♪♪ (Windsong, 1992)
No Little Boy ♪♪♪ (Mesa, 1993)

worth searching for: And. ♪♪♪½ (Go!Disc, 1996, prod. John Martyn, Stefon Taylor, Spencer Cozens) offers John as trip-hopper, and it works, while Snoo ♪♪♪ (Blueprint, 1997) is one of his best live offerings.

influences:
◀◀ Hamish Imlach, Archie Fisher ▶▶ Ben Watt, Gomez

see also: Lee "Scratch" Perry

Chris Nickson

Masada

Klezmer-influenced jazz

Formed 1993, in New York, NY, USA. Disbanded 1997.

John Zorn, alto sax, composer; Dave Douglas, trumpet; Greg Cohen, acoustic bass; Joey Baron, drums. Masada Chamber Ensembles (1994–97) also include: Mark Feldman, violin; Erik Friedlander, cello; Marc Ribot, guitar; Anthony Coleman, piano; David Krakauer, clarinets; John Medeski, organ and piano; Mark Dresser, bass; Kenny Wollesen, drums; Chris Speed, clarinet.

Masada (the place and symbol) is the fortress in Israel where besieged Jews chose to commit communal suicide rather than submit to captivity. Masada (the group) is the peak of John Zorn's involvement with jazz. Combining Yiddish music (including but not limited to klezmer) with jazz had been done before. But by specifically emphasizing the parallels between Ornette Coleman's early style and the older, modal Eastern/Central European music of Zorn's Jewish ancestors—and by letting the latter dominate rather than treating it as an ingredient to be added for exotic effect—Zorn came up with something new and distinctive. The band exhibits many jazz aspects not specifically traceable to Coleman, of course; that's just a handy comparison. There are moments when Joey Baron's steady four-beat drumming recalls Tony Williams's pulse on Miles Davis's In a Silent Way, and some of the freer explorations suggest the Art Ensemble of Chicago. And Douglas's presence is perfect: his work with Balkan scales and rhythms had him on a parallel path in some of his own music.

what to buy: The extreme coherence of the style Zorn has created—not to mention the incredible artistic consistency of the performers—seems to resist the sort of critical parsing that allows for definable gradations of quality. But certainly many fans retain a special fondness for One/Alef ♪♪♪♪♪ (DIW, 1994, prod. John Zorn, Kazunori Sugiyama), where the new amalgam first struck them with its startling rightness. "Jair," the opening track, alternates klezmer licks and Ornette phrases in a lead-off that's the perfect proclamation of the new style. Other highlights are "Tzofeh," with its ticking insistence; "Ashnah," with its brooding spontaneity, almost-absent pulse, and focus on subtle instrumental textures; the brief "Delin," with what seem like pure Ornettisms framing a biting bass solo; and the cool-strutting "Janohah." Zorn fans looking for his more extreme playing are directed towards Five/Hei ♪♪♪♪♪ (DIW, 1995, prod. John Zorn, Kazunori Sugiyama) for the intense "Hobah," which, in the minimal materials of its theme, draws not from early Coleman, but instead sounds like a translation to acoustic instruments of one of the harmolodic themes of his Prime Time period—and which then explodes into collectively improvised energy playing straight out of the post-Coltrane school, with Zorn wailing in the altissimo register and Douglas darting sinuously around Zorn's line, while Baron thunders underneath.

what to buy next: The leader of the Jews at Masada was named Bar Kokhba. The music on the two-CD set Bar Kokhba ♪♪♪♪♪ (Tzadik, 1996, prod. John Zorn) is performed not by the quartet but by a number of chamber ensembles, sometimes without drums and with Zorn acting as composer and leader but not playing. "Tannaim," for instance, is a contemplative string trio with Mark Feldman, Erik Friedlander, and Greg Cohen. Practically its opposite, the following tune "Nefesh" is swinging piano-trio bop—a lament penned by a depressed Horace Silver, perhaps—with John Medeski (sounding rather Monkish in his solo, with touches of early McCoy Tyner in the second half), Mark Dresser, and Kenny Wollesen. This music is more low-key than the quartet, with a corresponding increase in restful beauty during the strings-only numbers and in plaintive soulfulness when the clarinetists wail.

the rest:

Masada:

Two/Beit ♪♪♪♪♪ (DIW, 1994)
Three/Gimel ♪♪♪♪♪ (DIW, 1994)
Four/Dalet ♪♪♪♪½ (DIW, 1994)
Six/Nav ♪♪♪♪♪ (DIW, 1995)
Seven/Zayin ♪♪♪♪♪ (DIW, 1995)
Eight/Het ♪♪♪♪♪ (DIW, 1997)
Nine/Tet ♪♪♪♪♪ (DIW, 1997)
Live in Jerusalem 1994 ♪♪♪♪½ (Tzadik, 1999)
Live in Taipei 1995 ♪♪♪♪½ (Tzadik, 1999)

The Masada String Trio/Bar Kokhba Sextet:

The Circle Maker ♪♪♪♪½ (Tzadik, 1998)

worth searching for: Rumor has it that there will be more live Masada albums, and a boxed set of all the studio recordings. The group occasionally reunites.

influences:

⏮ Ornette Coleman, Yiddish music, Don Byron

⏭ Hasidic New Wave

see also: Arto Lindsay

Steve Holtje

Hugh Masekela

African jazz

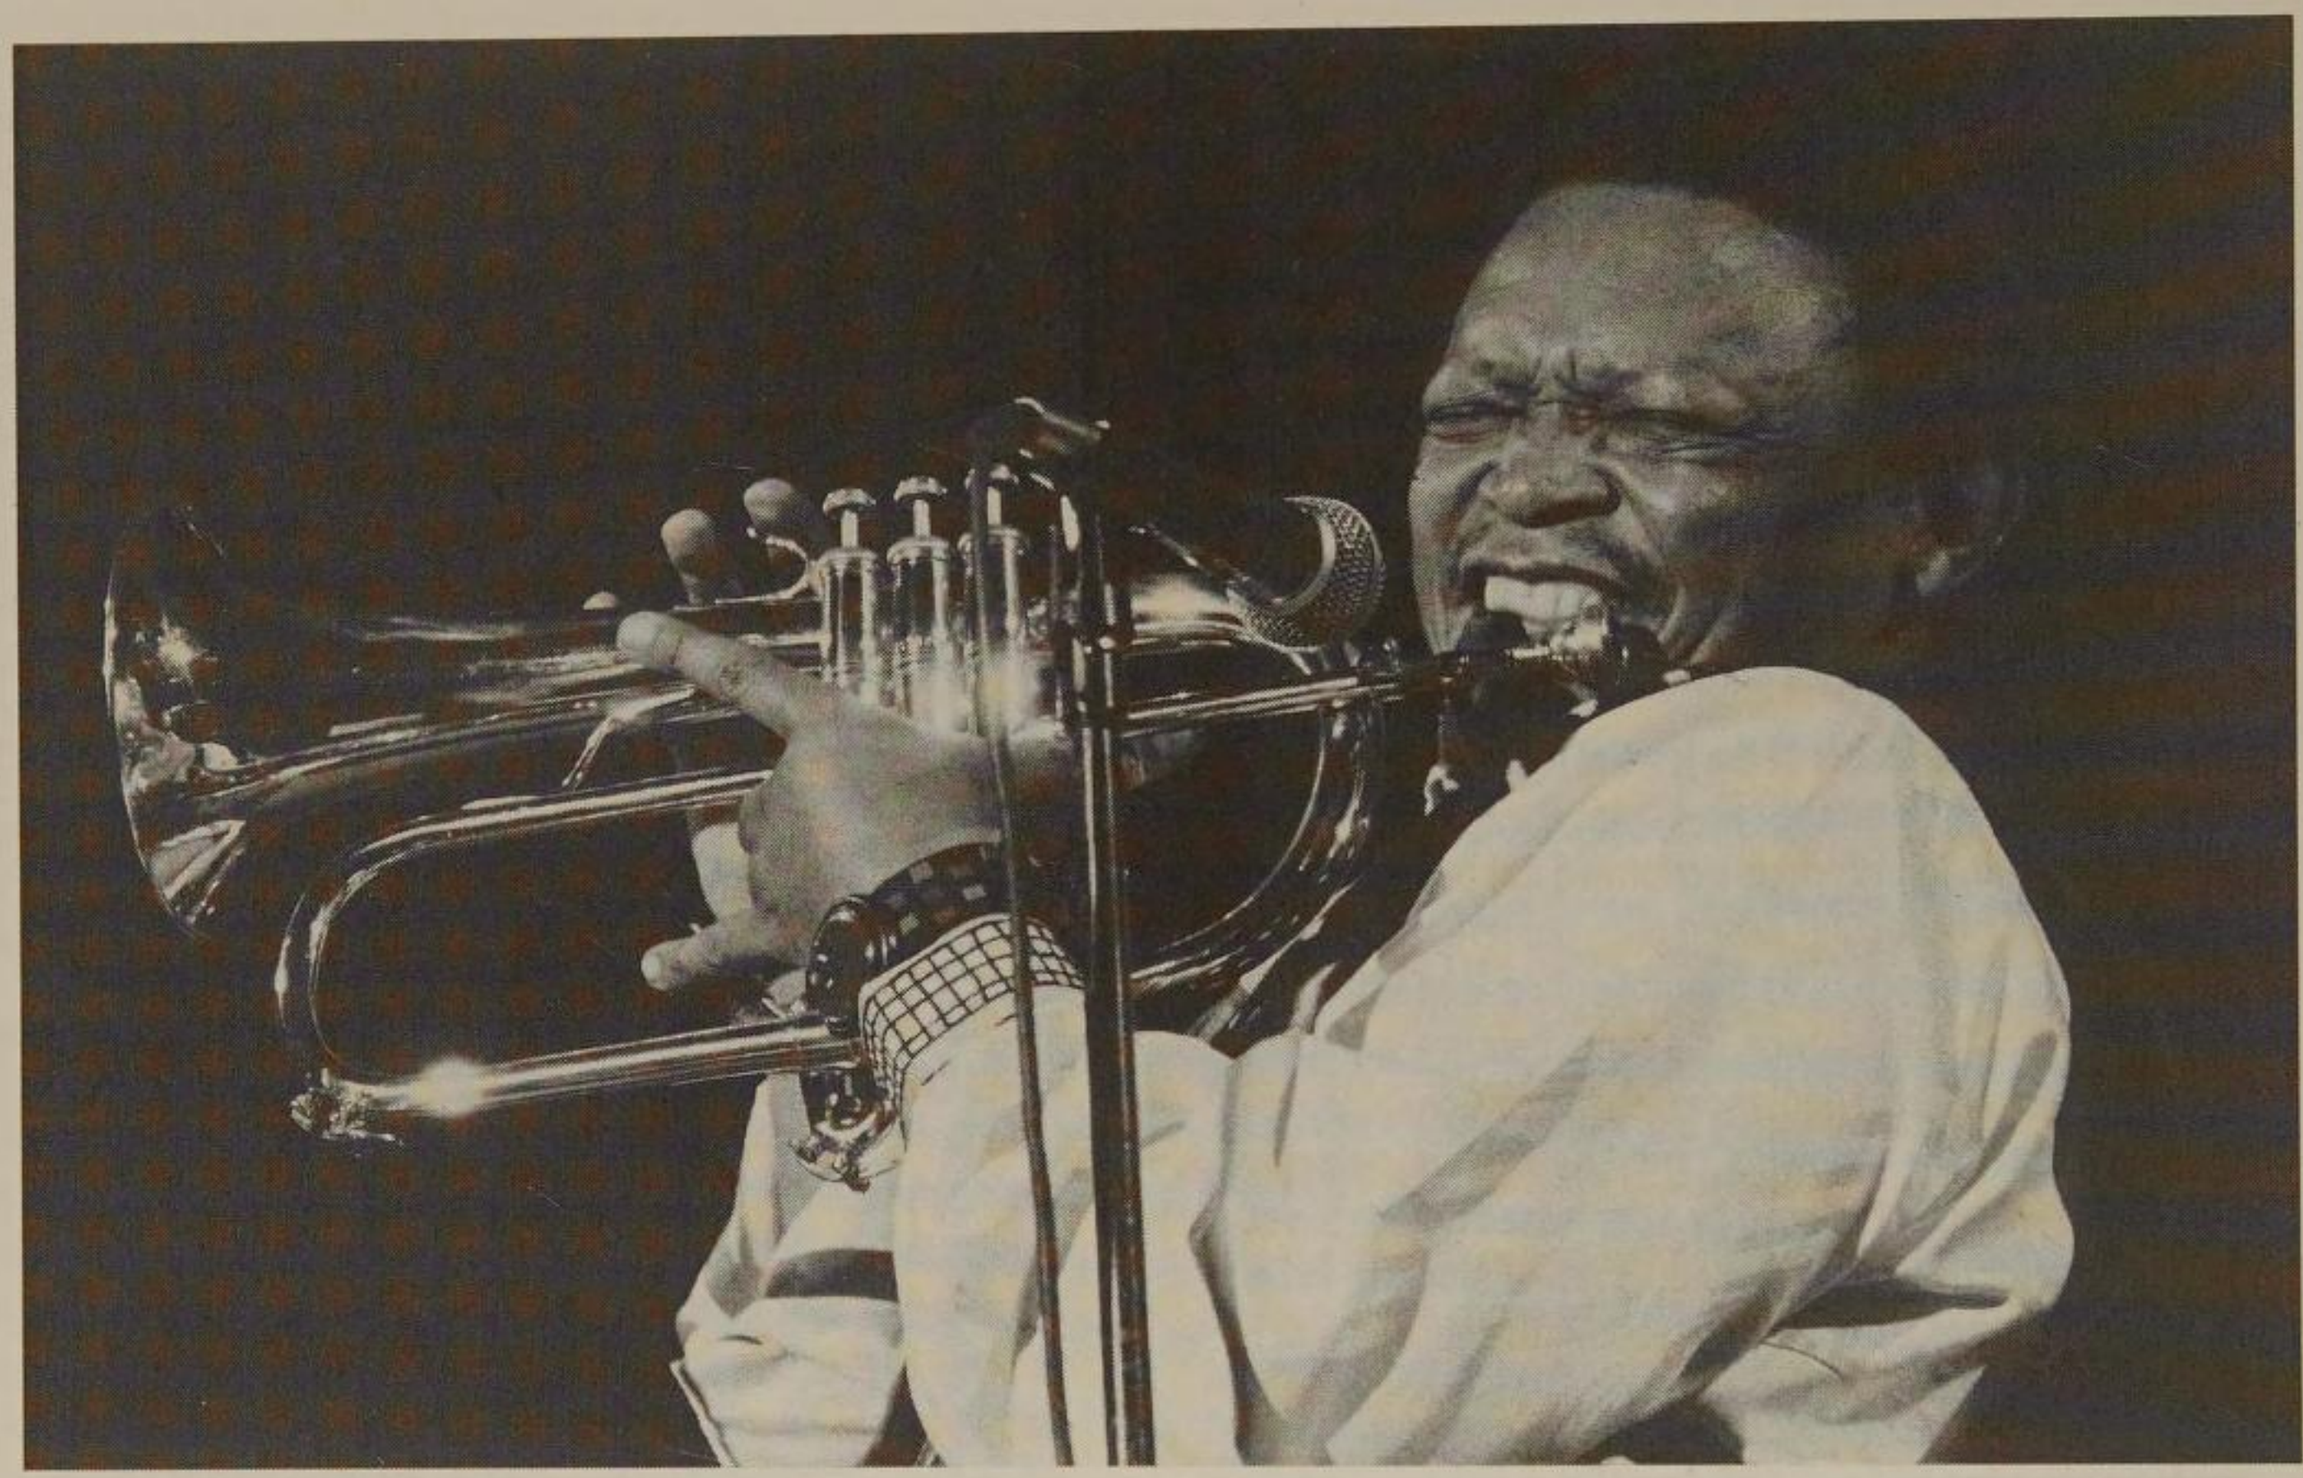
Born Hugh Ramapolo Masekela, April 4, 1939, in Witbank, South Africa. Based in South Africa.

Voluntarily exiled from his homeland for 31 years, South African–born trumpet player Hugh Masekela returned in 1991. Masekela's subsequent album, Hope, marked the first time he'd worked with South African musicians in three decades.

Masekela was born in Witbank, a small coalmining village 100 miles east of Johannesburg. Although his grandmother was descended from a royal family, her land had been confiscated, and she was forced to live in the township ghettos, where she ran an underground speakeasy. The speakeasy provided Masekela with an understanding of the black South African struggle. Masekela's early memories include listening to Glenn Miller and Benny Goodman records played by sailors stationed in South Africa. By the age of four, he sang along even though he didn't understand the English lyrics. At the age of six, his parents sent him for piano lessons. After seeing the movie Young Man with a Horn, featuring Kirk Douglas as influential trumpet player Bix Beiderbecke, Masekela switched to that instrument. By the time he was 15 he was totally absorbed in African American music. Though he initially had only a mild interest in jazz, a turning point came when he heard the playing of Clifford Brown and Miles Davis. Studying for a while at London's Guildhall School of Music, Masekela transferred to the Manhattan School of Music in New York in 1960. He got his greatest encouragement from performers including Harry Belafonte, Louis Armstrong, and Dizzy Gillespie. Vocalist Miriam Makeba, whom he met at the age of 13, had emigrated to America the previous year and provided much support in Masekela's transition. Although they were married only from 1964 to '65, their friendship has remained strong.

Masekela continued to miss his friends and home in South Africa. In 1965 he considered returning and got as far as London; a phone call from Harry Belafonte urging him to remain in the U.S. changed his mind. Belafonte had earlier provided Masekela with one of his first musical jobs in the States, hiring the young trumpet player for several tours and recording sessions. Together with people like Muhammed Ali, Masekela formed a coalition with the civil rights movement and a universal objection to some of the excesses of the Western industrial complex. He performed many anti-war concerts in California with the Doors, the Jefferson Airplane, the Grateful Dead, Janis Joplin with Big Brother and the Holding Company, the Mamas and the Papas, the Byrds, and Buffalo Springfield. At the Monterey International Pop Festival in 1967, Masekela provided an African connection.

hugh masekela



Hugh Masekela

A throw-away instrumental provided Masekela with his greatest success the following year. Recorded as an afterthought, "Grazin' in the Grass" reached the top of the charts and sold more than four million copies worldwide. Masekela returned to Africa in 1972. Within 10 years, he had moved to Botswana and founded the Botswana International School of Music. The experience, however, proved heartbreaking when his life was threatened by death squads. Masekela performed for his largest audiences when he joined Paul Simon's Graceland tour in 1986. The tour was extremely successful and concerts sold out all over the world. Masekela has remained one of Africa's most outspoken activists. His tune "Mandela (Bring Him Back Home)" become a rallying cry for supporters of the then-jailed African National Congress leader and future South African president.

what to buy: Recorded during a concert at Washington, D.C.'s Blues Alley during the summer of 1993, Hope ♪♪♪♪½ (Triloka, 1994, prod. K.D. Kael, Hugh Masekela) marked the first time Masekela had worked with South African musicians in 30 years. A retrospective covering his entire career, the album included ex-wife Miriam Makeba on a number of tunes.

what to buy next: Home Is Where the Heart Is ♪♪♪♪ (Blue Thumb, 1972, prod. Hugh Masekela) is a groundbreaking blend of African, jazz, and pop sensibilities.

the rest:

Grrr ♪♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1966)
The Promise of a Future ♪♪♪ (One Way, 1968)
Masekela ♪♪♪♪ (UNI, 1968)
Uptownship ♪♪♪½ (Jive/Novus, 1971)
Tomorrow ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1987)
Stimela ♪♪♪ (Connoisseur Collection, 1994/1999)
Hugh Masekela & the Union of South Africa ♪♪♪♪ (Motown, 1994)
The Lasting Impressions of Ooga Booga ♪♪♪♪ (Verve, 1996)
The Boy's Doin' It ♪♪♪ (Verve, 1998)
Black to the Future ♪♪♪♪½ (Sony, 1998/Shanachie, 1999)
Home N/A (Stern's, 1999)
The Best of Hugh Masekela N/A (BMG/RCA Victor, 1999)

influences:

Miles Davis, Dizzy Gillespie, South African music

Randy Weston

see also: Harry Belafonte, Abdullah Ibrahim, Miriam Makeba

Craig Harris

Master Musicians of Jajouka

Jibli

Formed in antiquity, in Morocco. Based in Jajouka, in the Jibala hills of Northern Morocco.

Variable, intermittently identified membership over centuries.

An ancient Berber musical clan from a desert village in Morocco, the Master Musicians of Jajouka were first introduced to the outside world by writer, artist, and adventurer Brion Gysin. Gysin had been traveling Morocco with author Paul Bowles in 1950. At a village festival, Gysin was awestruck by the sounds of a local music ensemble, and took the trouble to trace its origin to the village of Jajouka in the hills south of Tangier. Before long, they were playing at his own club in the latter city, the 1001 Nights, which he had established in large part as a means to indulge his infatuation with the group's music.

Morocco had long been a mecca for intellectuals, bohemians, artists, and stoners; notables as diverse as Mark Twain, Henri Matisse, and Jack Kerouac had visited at one time or another. When Brian Jones of the Rolling Stones showed up there in 1970, Gysin accompanied him to Jajouka, where, between generous helpings of the local kif, Jones conducted a recording session capturing the Master Musicians. The resulting album, Brian Jones Presents the Pipes of Pan at Jajouka, vaulted the group into international prominence.

The music of the Jajoukans is a blend of Berber (indigenous North African) and Arabic influences. Its potent rhythmic component is provided by double-headed drums, while the main vocal or instrumental melodic line is almost always accompanied by hypnotic drones on rhaita double-reed horns, flutes, or gimbri three-stringed lutes. A hereditary clan, the Jajoukans have passed their role as musicians from father to son for centuries, playing an important part in the spiritual life of the region through their performances at religious festivals—most notably the ritual of Boujeloud, the "Father of Skins," an awesome half-goat/half-human creature whose story traces its lineage to the Greek myth of Pan and the Roman fertility festival of Lupercalia.

what to buy: The Master Musicians of Jajouka ♪♪♪♪ (Delphi, 1972/Genes, 1995, prod. Joel Rubiner), a charming follow-up to the Jones trek, records the group simply, dispensing with the strange effects in favor of an intimate sound. The accompanying text from Robert Palmer's 1971 Rolling Stone article, while useful, is amusingly garbled in its translation to liner notes. A more recent release, Apocalypse across the Sky ♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1992, prod. Bill Laswell), boasts clean digital multi-track recording and a satisfying sampling of music. It in-brazil: samba

Samba, a polyrhythm which forms the base of bossa nova and much of Brazilian popular music, has had an enormous impact on jazz and continues to find its way into contemporary music forms worldwide. It is best known as Brazilian Carnival music. Africans who were brought to Brazil during the 17th, 18th, and 19th centuries remembered tribal drum circles and reproduced the rhythms on improvised instruments in their new land. The word samba, according to The Brazilian Sound (Temple Univ. Press, 1988), may have originated in Angola as the word semba, meaning an invitation to dance. Samba de roda, a rhythmic predecessor to today's samba, figured heavily into ceremonies of the Afro-Brazilian spiritist religion Candomblé. Samba, as a true musical genre, evolved in Rio de Janeiro around the turn of the century. Free blacks flooded into Rio from Bahia. Music was played at informal gatherings and in bars and dance halls in the growing cosmopolitan city. Legendary composers like Pixinguinha, Donga, Sinho, and Ismael Silva began recording sambas in early sound studios, alongside chorinhos, maxixes, and marchas, other early forms of popular music. Donga's "Pelo Telefone" (1916) is widely considered to be the first samba ever recorded. By the 1930s and '40s, middle-class whites were embracing samba, and composers Noel Rosa and Ary Barroso, among others, popularized the samba-canção, a more refined style, emphasizing melody over rhythm. The escolas de samba (samba schools) developed as a Carnival establishment, responsible for lavish parades and general merriment during Carnival week every year, featuring the thunderous samba-de-enredo dominated by the bateria, or drum section. Today samba is more alive in Brazil than ever before. Popular bands and vocalists enjoy strong record sales, and samba is becoming increasingly popular in Bahia and the Northeastern region. Internationally samba has carved a strong foothold, thanks to thriving escolas in cities throughout Europe, the U.S., and Japan.

Mara Weiss and Nego Beto

The Master Musicians of Jajouka (with Mohamed el-Attar, dancer)

cludes a haunting version of "The Clapping" and a rousing "Boujeloud."

what to buy next: Brian Jones Presents the Pipes of Pan at Jajouka ♪♪♪♪½ (Rolling Stones, 1971/Point, 1995, prod. Brian Jones), while not the most accurate musical document, perfectly captures the aura of the music from a stoned perspective. The heavy phasing and echo effects are intense and absorbing, at times like hearing music from the center of a tornado. Jajouka Black Eyes ♪♪♪½ (Sub Rosa, 1995) is a good collection with some well-known Jajouka tunes heard in relaxed, informal versions and cut with brevity in mind, for those who prefer modest puffs rather than deep drags, as it were.

the rest:
Jajouka between the Mountains (RealWorld/WOMAD)

influences:
◀◀ Centuries of their own tradition

see also: Bill Laswell

Jeffrey Muhr

Dave Matthews Band

Cosmopolitan roots rock

Formed 1991, in Charlottesville, VA, USA. Based in USA.

Dave Matthews (born January 9, 1967, in Johannesburg, South Africa), vocals, guitar; Boyd Tinsley, violin; LeRoi Moore, saxophone; Stefan Lessard, bass; Carter Beauford, drums. (All members are from USA except where noted otherwise.)

A transcontinental childhood and a bar-band apprenticeship combined to make Dave Matthews one of the biggest if least likely success stories of '90s rock. There is no precedent for a band as popularly revered in America that draws such a proportion of its influences from outside of rock—including the funky jazz stylings of saxophonist LeRoi Moore, the Celtic/Appalachian fiddle frenzy of Boyd Tinsley, the skipping, almost-soukous (African rumba) rhythms of drummer Carter Beauford, and the striving vocals of Matthews himself, who has of late been getting closer and closer to the melisma of Middle Eastern singing and the emotive, non-verbal vocables of the Indian subcontinent. Matthews actually started out on the African continent, a native of racially divided Johannesburg, from which his family moved when he was two. Growing up in the New York City suburb of Yorktown Heights, he relocated to Charlottesville, Virginia, as an adult, eventually picking up Beauford and Moore (regular performers at Miller's, a jazz club where Matthews tended bar), then-16-year-old bass prodigy Stefan Lessard, and Tinsley. The Dave Matthews Band played its first gig in front of 40 people on May 11, 1991, on the roof of a Charlottesville apartment building. After performing as part of an Earth Day Festival that same year, they found regular homes first at the small Eastern Standard restaurant and then a club called Trax—steady work tragically interrupted by world-touring mega-stardom. Ambitious but unpretentious, Matthews's open-minded music found its moment with later-'90s youth's peace-craving outlook and genre-crossing tastes, and the band has been turning arenas and stadia into the intimate clubs of their ascension ever since.

what to buy: Before These Crowded Streets ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1998, prod. Steve Lillywhite), grimmer and more overtly political than the band's previous output, tackles issues of white invasion and rampant progress, but always from a personalized viewpoint that hasn't driven away any of their ardent mass following. Neither has their most challenging compositional effort to date, with Middle Eastern rhythms, jazz intricacies, the well-deployed banjo of Béla Fleck, and singing from Matthews that ranges from anguished vocalese to an almost death-metal hoarseness. A nervy gamble that got the usual chart gold.

what to buy next: The breakthrough album Under the Table and Dreaming ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1994, prod. Steve Lillywhite) shows an earlier stage of blending worldbeat, jazz, folk, and pop styles with the group's fierce jamming skills. As would become customary, the experiment yielded a string of hits, including the sweet, acoustic "Satellite," the funk-driven "What Would You Say," and the sprightly "Ants Marching."

the rest:
Crash ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1996)
Live at Red Rocks 8.15.95 ♪♪ (RCA, 1997)
(With Tim Reynolds) Live at Luther College ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1999)

influences:
- The Grateful Dead, Phish, the Samples
- Agents of Good Roots

Christina Fuoco and Adam McGovern

Maxwell Street Klezmer Band

Klezmer

Formed 1983, in Chicago, IL, USA. Based in Chicago, IL, USA.

Core members: Lori Lippitz, vocals; Lisa Fishman, vocals; Alex Koffman (Russia), violin, balalaika, musical director/arranger; Don Jacobs, clarinet; Shelly Yoelin, saxophone, flute; Ivo Braun, trumpet; Sam Margolis, trombone, vocals; Gail Mangurten, piano; David Rothstein, bass; Steve Hawk, percussion. (All members are from USA except where noted otherwise.)

Maxwell Street is one of the few klezmer groups led by a woman; Lori Lippitz started the outfit as part of a mission to bring Yiddish culture back to Chicago. Like many of the first-generation klezmer revival bands, Maxwell Street learned their repertoire from old Yiddish recordings and films. However, this group has gone much further, with Lippitz's recruitment of Russian Jewish immigrants like Alex Koffman (and acquisition of the first-hand old-country perspective they bring); her teaching of Yiddish dances at the band's concerts; and the incorporation of traditional rituals, including the reenactment of a Russian-Jewish wedding, in the band's performances. In addition to her duties with "Max," as it is affectionately known, Lippitz maintains an amazing schedule of community outreach activities, among them an annual regional klezmer festival and Yiddish music institute, and the Chicago Jr. Klezmer Orchestra, a group of a dozen dedicated kids aged 10–18 who perform locally as school permits. Lippitz and Max have done much to make the perhaps-unlikely American midwest a capitol of the klezmer renaissance.

what to buy: The repertoire on You Should Be So Lucky ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1996, prod. Lori Lippitz, Alex Koffman, Paul Smith) is heavy with well-worn Yiddish theater and popular songs, but elevated by inventive orchestral arrangements and strong brass. The group's multiple arrangers are able to find new ways to juxtapose choral structures and different types of ensembles in consistently imaginative ways. Both the core band and its customary guest accomplices distinguish these selections: Jeff Jeziorski's clarinet solo on "Firn Di Mehetonim Aheym" is one of the few that successfully challenges the Naftule Brandwein original, while the Russian flavors added by Alex Koffman and Yuri Bokov enhance the position of the band as keepers of the Eastern European Yiddish tradition.

the rest:
Maxwell Street Days ♪♪♪ (Global Village, 1986)
Maxwell Street Wedding ♪♪♪ (Global Village, 1991)

worth searching for: Maxwell Street is featured on Jiddisches Lied & Klezmer 4th Internationales Festival, a recording made at the 1994 German fest of same name and available on the Swiss Pan label.

influences:
- Abe Schwartz's Orchestra, Dave Tarras, Mickey Katz, the Klezmorim
- The Cincinnati Klezmer Project, Chicago Jr. Klezmer Orchestra

Aaron Howard

Mazz

Tejano

Formed 1977, in Brownsville, TX, USA. Split into Jimmy González y Grupo Mazz and Joe López y Nuevo Imagen Mazz, 1998. Based in San Antonio, TX, USA.

Original members: Joe Manuel López, vocals; Jimmy González, guitar. (All members are from USA.)

A group of Hispanic teenagers was playing high-energy rock in Spanish in South Texas in the late 1970s. They were good enough to attract the attention of the founders of the fledgling Tejano (modern Tex-Mex) label Lado/A Cara, which also soon signed another San Antonio teen, Tish Hinojosa, to a contract. Hinojosa went her own way (and eventually on to stardom) after two now-impossible-to-find recordings, but Mazz stayed and solidified its Tejano chops through the decades and the sale of the record company to EMI Latin. They were a long-lived favorite in the genre, and remain so in two rival incarnations formed by their founding duo in 1998.

what to buy: Over the years, Mazz produced more than 40 CDs, most still in print and most on the EMI Latin label. A good introduction to their evolving sound is the hits retrospective Reconciliation: 14 Super Exitos ♪♪♪♪ (EMI Latin, 1997). They also did a Christmas disc, Regalo de Navidad ♪♪♪♪ (Tejano, 1994), which is an accessible introduction to their style for those who aren't familiar with the Tejano scene.

best of the rest:
Para Nuestra Gente ♪♪♪ (EMI Latin, 1990)
Live! Una Noche Juntos ♪♪♪ (EMI Latin, 1992)
Ten Years of Tejano Music ♪♪♪ (Sony International, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Tony de La Rosa, Los Tigres del Norte, Laura Canales ▶▶ Chris Perez, Pete Astudillo

see also: Tish Hinojosa

Kerry Dexter

Prince Nico Mbarga

Highlife

Born 1950, in Nigeria. Died June 24, 1997.

Prince Nico was perhaps the greatest of the latter-day band leaders in highlife (an influential cosmopolitan dance music). His early-1970s anthem "Sweet Mother" sold over 13 million copies (not counting bootlegs), all over the African continent, making it one of the biggest-selling African records of all time. Mbarga was born in Eastern Nigeria to a Nigerian father and Cameroonian mother, and grew up listening to highlife, soukous (African rumba), makossa (Cameroonian pop), regional tribal music, and Western pop. In his desire to reach a Pan-African and perhaps international audience, Mbarga wrote his lyrics in pidgin English, and brought many outside influences to a sound based on the panko rhythms of Eastern Nigeria. His guitar playing was always inventive and his rhythms leave no option but to dance. Despite the growing interest in African music in the 1980s, and his large fan base in West Africa, little of Prince Nico's music was ever available in the West. He was killed on June 24th, 1997, when another vehicle smashed into his motorcycle.

what's available: Mbarga's resourceful guitar playing and the non-stop groove of his band make every selection on Aki Special ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987) sparkle.

influences:
◀◀ Victor Olaiya, Rex Lawson, African Brothers International, City Boys

j. poet

Jimi Mbaye

Mbalax

Born September 8, 1961, in Dakar, Senegal. Based in Dakar, Senegal, and Paris, France.

Mbaye learned to play on makeshift guitars he built himself and has become internationally known for the guitar licks he's contributed to Youssou N'Dour's Super Étoile band.

what's available: Dakar Heart ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997, prod. Jimi Mbaye, Thomas Rome, Brian Cullman), Mbaye's solo debut, is remarkably low-key, bringing to mind a singer/songwriter as much as a guitar god out to strut his stuff. The mid-tempo grooves have a hint of reggae and funk, and Mbaye's guitar work is impressive, as much for its restraint as for its prowess; he never tries to upstage the rest of the band or his own pleasing vocals.

influences:
◀◀ Youssou N'Dour, Touré Kunda, Lamine Konte

see also: Youssou N'Dour

j. poet

Mzwakhe Mbuli

Mbanqanga poetry

Born c. 1958, in Sophiatown, South Africa. Based in Johannesburg, South Africa.

Mzwakhe Mbuli is one of South Africa's most outspoken and popular poets—and, since adding music to his presentations in 1986, is also the country's foremost "dub poet" (a form pioneered by Linton Kwesi Johnson that Mbuli's hybrid recalls). Mbuli was introduced to the power of music and the spoken word by his father, who sang mbube, the Zulu a cappella style made famous by Ladysmith Black Mambazo. Mbuli's father took the boy to all-night mbube sessions, where he learned traditional singing and dancing. In grammar school Mbuli got interested in drama, and his first role in a school play was as God, perhaps because of his powerful, rumbling baritone. A member of Khuvhangano, a performing troupe that was using poetry and drama to organize resistance to the apartheid government, saw him in the play, and asked him to join; for the next five years Mbuli added his talents to their productions. At that time, Mbuli began writing his own poems, and in 1981, at a funeral for a fellow activist, he recited two of them. The response was overwhelming, and Mbuli began reciting his poems at political rallies and cultural events. In 1985, Mbuli was banned and went underground, staying one step ahead of the security police. He would appear at meetings, weddings, and funerals, recite a few poems, and vanish again. In 1988, in-between detentions, Mbuli recorded his first album Change Is Pain. Although backed by session musicians and under intense deadline pressure, the power of Mbuli's voice makes these tracks crackle with energy. Change Is Pain was immediately banned, although it was released outside of South Africa to almost universal acclaim. The material on his second album, Unbroken Spirit, was composed while he was in prison (Mbuli doesn't write his poems down; he recites them all from memory), and although it too was banned, it went gold. In 1990 a book of his poems entitled Before Dawn was published with a foreword written by Nelson Mandela, who was still in prison. At that time Mbuli also organized a band, so that the music and his singing, chanting, and rapping could be honed to a fine point. The first album by the new unit was Resistance Is Defense. The end of apartheid hasn't slowed Mbuli down or weakened his outspoken stance. He continues to record regularly, speaking the truth and celebrating the lives of the common people. Recently the Mandela government arrested him for speaking out against government corruption.

Mzwakhe Mbuli

what to buy: Mbuli's first album with his own band, Resistance Is Defense ♪♪♪♪ (Earthworks, 1992, prod. Trevor Herman), is full of forceful poetry and kick-ass music. It's easy to see why Mbuli was cast as God; his potent vocals rumble like an earthquake, and his mixture of singing and spoken-word interludes gives his lyrics extra power. The band sizzles and their blend of South African kwela, marabi, and jive, as well as Africanized R&B, both supports and amplifies Mbuli's messages.

what to buy next: Change Is Pain ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1998, prod. Lloyd Ross), Mbuli's debut, is a masterpiece of militant fire.

the rest:
Umzwakhe Ubonga Ujehova ♪♪♪ (CCP South Africa, 1997) Kwazulu Natal ♪♪♪ (CCP South Africa)

influences:
Moses Mchunu, Linton Kwesi Johnson, SWAPO Cultural Group

j. poet

Andy McGann

Irish traditional

Born 1928, in the Bronx, NY, USA. Based in New York, NY, USA.

Born to parents with roots in Ireland's County Sligo, McGann began playing the fiddle at the ripe old age of seven. His early training came at the hands of fiddler Katherine Brennan, who was a student of Michael Coleman, arguably the most influential figure ever to have played Irish music. A fine fiddler herself, Brennan also had a background in classical music, which influenced McGann as well. Growing up in 1930s New York, the young McGann encountered Irish music everywhere, and he basked in its presence. By the time the '40s rolled around, the city's Irish traditional music scene was flourishing. The Central Opera House became a weekly gathering place for Irish musicians and McGann was more than prominent there. Out of the regular Central Opera House sessions formed the famed New York Ceili Band, of which McGann was a central figure. It also featured fiddlers Paddy Reynolds and Larry Redican, pianist Felix Dolan, Paddy O'Brien on accordion, and Jack Coen on the flute. The music that came from this group is legendary, though they never formally recorded. Even now McGann remains quite active in the New York scene, and if you get lucky and drop by Kate Kearney's on a Saturday night you may hear the sweet strains of his brilliant fiddling first-hand.

what to buy: It's a Hard Road to Travel ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1995, prod. Richard Nevins, Daniel Michael Collins), with Paul Brady on guitar, is a tour de force of Irish traditional fiddling. McGann's use of rolls and triplets is masterful, and his sweet tone is to die for. One listen is all you'll need to understand why McGann has influenced an entire generation of renowned Irish American musicians.

what to buy next: Originally recorded in 1965, A Tribute to Michael Coleman ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, prod. various) brings McGann together with button accordionist Joe Burke and pianist Felix Dolan, in a now-classic remembrance of arguably the most influential Irish fiddler of all time. Andy McGann & Paddy Reynolds ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1994, prod. Richard Nevins, Daniel Michael Collins) is a great collection of music by these two fine friends and fiddlers that was recorded and originally released in 1977. Their awe-inspiring duets along with Paul Brady's guitar accompaniment will raise the hair on the back of your neck. The music is simple in its presentation but brilliant in its results.

worth searching for: Irish Fiddle & Guitar ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1992, prod. Richard Nevins, Daniel Michael Collins) is a cassette-only release of McGann and Paul Brady that is well worth seeking. McGann is also prominently featured in the brilliant documentary film From Shore to Shore (Cherry Lane Productions, 1993), which examines the vibrant traditional Irish music scene in New York City past and present. It is a must-have for any fan of this music and paints an extraordinary picture of the social context from which McGann emerged and which he subsequently influenced.

influences:
⏮ Michael Coleman, Katherine Brennan, Paddy Killoran, James "Lad" O'Bierne

⏭ Eileen Ivers, Tony Demarco, Brian Conway

see also: Felix Dolan

Cliff McGann

Eileen McGann

Celtic/Canadian folk

Born 1959, in Calgary, Alberta, Canada. Based in Canada.

In an age when "folk singers," male or female, tend to be more and more idiosyncratic, postmodern, and unpolished, Calgary's Eileen McGann is that rarest and most welcome of exceptions—a young singer with a keen sense of and pride in the traditional music of her Celtic and British ancestors; an ability to write movingly about the beauties of life and nature around her; and a strong, crystal-clear soprano voice that stops people in their tracks and commands attention. Following the path blazed by fellow Canadian singer/songwriters like Stan Rogers and Gordon Lightfoot, McGann has established herself in the last decade as one of the finest singers, songwriters, and interpreters of traditional music on either side of the Atlantic. A first-generation Irish Canadian, McGann was captivated by the music of Rogers, Lightfoot, and Don McLean in her teenage years. While working toward a degree in medieval history, she was asked by one of her professors to perform at a St. Patrick's Day banquet, and the (by her own description) embarrassing realization dawned on her that despite her Celtic heritage, she didn't know a single Irish song. In listening then to her mother's records of Irish operatic singers doing traditional material, she was drawn to the underlying beauty of the music and the stories it was telling.

Since emerging on the folk scene during the late 1980s, McGann's recordings and live performances have highlighted her stunning ability to deliver traditional fare as well as her own intelligent, finely honed songs. While her melodies are beautiful, she excels at writing thoughtful, well-crafted lyrics that, as clearly as she sings them, express her thoughts on the environment ("Requiem for the Giants"), politics ("Too Stupid for Democracy"), social justice ("Reservations"), and many other contemporary themes. She can also write ballads ("Isabella Gunn," "The Knight of the Rose") that have a timeless sound, as if they have been around for hundreds of years—the mark of a superior minstrel. Her first three albums feature a solid mix of both traditional and original music, while newer releases have responded to her fans' many requests for an all-traditional recording. More than most singers in the world of folk music today, though, her entire catalog is of top-level quality, making it very difficult to pick favorites. These days, McGann spends much of her time on the road away from her beloved Calgary on the slope of the Canadian Rockies. Traveling and performing as a duo with her long-time musical (and life) partner, David K. (Knutson), she continues to win rave reviews and new fans wherever she goes, still in the early years of what should be a long and fulfilling career. As she sings in one of her most popular songs, "I See My Journey."

what to buy: It's a close call between Turn It Around ♪♪♪♪½ (Dragonwing, 1991, prod. Eileen McGann) and her 1995 effort Journeys, and either will be immensely satisfying. Turn It Around features "Requiem for the Giants," "The Knight of the Rose," and the title track, but the real head-turner is her version of the traditional "The Fair Flower of Northumberland." Overall, the album matches four traditional cuts with seven original songs.

what to buy next: Journeys ♪♪♪♪½ (Dragonwing, 1995, prod. Eileen McGann) opens with "I See My Journey" and includes "Reservations," "Too Stupid for Democracy," and "In the Silence." Traditional songs include "Braw Sailin' on the Sea," "Bonny Portmore," and "Jock O'Hazeldean," and an added bonus is a rendition of Pete Morton's "Another Train."

the rest:
Elements ♪♪♪♪ (Dragonwing, 1987)
Heritage ♪♪♪♪ (Dragonwing, 1997)

worth searching for: Two Thousand Years of Christmas ♪♪♪♪ (Dragonwing, 1996, prod. Eileen McGann) features McGann, David K., and Cathy Miller performing as Trilogy, harmonizing on a variety of songs from the Celtic and British Yuletide traditions. This is something unique and a worthwhile addition to the Christmas section of the record collection.

influences:
⏮ Stan Rogers, Gordon Lightfoot

⏭ Joan Baez, Janet Russell, Trilogy

John Lupton

Chris McGregor

South African jazz

Born December 24, 1936, in Umtata, South Africa. Died May 26, 1990, in Ager, France.

When Nelson Mandela walked out of South Africa's notorious Robben Island Prison in 1989, that nation's heinous governmental policy of apartheid (institutional racism) was flushed down the toilet. But back in the day—1962—when white South African pianist Chris McGregor put together a band of black countrymen for a gig at the Johannesburg Jazz Festival, the nation was under full-effect apartheid lockdown. The son of a devout Scottish missionary, McGregor was exposed early on to the humanity and spirituality of black folk via Xhosa hymns. Bucking the law, McGregor formed a permanent sextet the following year. The Blue Notes—Mongezi Feza, trumpet; Dudu Pukwana, alto sax; Nick Moyake, tenor sax; Johnny Dyani, bass; and Louis Moholo, drums—were the absolute fiercest simbas in South African jazz. Straight Art Blakey & the Jazz Messengers (circa Lee Morgan/Wayne Shorter) with a refreshing township-jive chaser, the Blue Notes were only able to record one album (Live in South Africa 1964) before leaving—one step ahead of the law—on a European tour. After that, the band woodshedded for a year in Switzerland. In late '65, the Blue Notes (minus Moyake) flipped to London, where they turned jazzbo heads around big-time.

McGregor's rococo blend of Ellingtonian swing, Monkesque spatial dissonance, Cecil Taylor–like clusters of pointillistic abstraction, near-ascetic discipline, business acumen, and leadership skills made him the new Don of London's underground hard-bop/avant-jazz scenes. In addition to the Blue Notes, there was the Chris McGregor Group (trio and quartet), and in 1968, McGregor formed a somewhat twisted big band. Extremely short-lived (six performances!), it nonetheless placed second in Melody Maker's jazz poll (under Duke!). In 1970 McGregor got it even righter with the Mingus Workshop–cum–Sun Ra Arkestra, Limey/Jo'Burg wild-style aggregation Brotherhood of Breath. An inspired pairing of Blue Noters and eight of England's prime players (including Harry Beckett, John Surman, and Alan Skidmore), McGregor's new idea followed up a month of legendary weekly gigs at London's famed jazz club Ronnie Scott's with a debut recording for RCA U.K. (Chris McGregor's Brotherhood of Breath). Though this edition of the band split up four years later (final LP: Live at Willisau), McGregor was able to cash checks from crucial shots with folk icon Nick Drake (Bryter Layter, 1970) and Brit blues godfather Alexis Korner (Bootleg Him!, 1972). McGregor then became a permanent resident of southern France in late '74. Between '75 and '88, he pursued a sporadic career of live solo gigs, occasional revivals of the BoB (culminating in '88's Country Cooking), and a session date or two. He died of lung cancer in 1990.

worth searching for: Nothing to do with Chris McGregor—be it solo or Brotherhood of Breath—is currently in print in America, though there have been record-store sightings of the excellent Chris McGregor/BoB Country Cooking ♪♪♪♪♪ (Venture/Virgin, 1988). The masterpiece they'd always been hinting at, Country Cooking is simply loverly. From the exalted jubilance of the title tune (check Annie Whitehead's bumptiously insouciant muted trombone solo) to the Oliver Nelson–by-way-of–James Brown "Thunder in the Mountain," this is one of the best albums you've (probably) never heard. But it's got competition. Recorded by McGregor and the remaining Blue Notes in a nonstop session the week after an impoverished and despondent Mongezi Feza died of pneumonia, Blues for Mongezi ♪♪♪♪♪ (Ogun, 1975) is one of the most harrowing and mournful instrumental records ever recorded. An epic, spontaneously improvised outpouring of collective grief, Blues for Mongezi is eerily life-affirming.

influences:

⏮ The Epistles, Sun Ra, Albert Ayler, Art Ensemble of Chicago

⏭ Centipede, George Gruntz, Jazz Warriors, Pierre Doerge

Tom Terrell

Freddie McGregor

Roots reggae, dancehall reggae

Born 1955, in Clarendon, Jamaica. Based in Kingston, Jamaica.

Freddie McGregor's blessed voice, sophisticated sense of melody, and relentless work ethic have made him one of reggae's most respected artists. From age seven, when he stood on beer crates and tip-toes to voice tracks for the ska band the Clarendonians, he has reached heights seemingly just beyond his grasp. His first full-length record was not released until he had been in the music business for nearly 16 years, despite an excellent series of singles from the late '60s into the '70s with Studio One and producer Coxsone Dodd—including such heavyweight tracks as "Rastaman Camp," "I Am a Revolutionist," "Go Away Pretty Girl," and a cover of the Ethiopians' first hit, "Gonna Take Over Now." All were eventually collected on the extraordinary, faith-endowed Bobby Bobylon in 1980. However, before he even released his first full-length record, McGregor was widely respected for his rootsman's vision and lover's heart and was asked by Bob Marley to co-produce and co-write Judy Mowatt's seminal Black Woman, the first LP recorded at Marley's Tuff Gong label's Kingston studio. Soon after, a collection of his outstanding singles with the Soul Syndicate band and eccentric producer Niney the Observer finally resulted in his mighty debut, Mr. McGregor. Equally as impressive was his work with producer Linval Thompson, which culminated in 1982's Big Ship, one of the greatest and most influential albums in reg-gae's "dancehall" style ever made. McGregor started the Big Ship imprint in 1984 and negotiated an American distribution deal with RAS Records. Though his initial releases with RAS were decidedly overburdened with cheesy synthesizers and an ultimately eye-crossing "worldbeat" vision, McGregor still managed to influence a whole generation of youth when he teamed with Dennis Brown on one of the first ragga (digital reggae) hits, the aptly titled "Raggamuffin." In addition, both "Africa Here I Come" (for Studio One) and "Don't Hurt My Feelings" (for George Phang's Powerhousel label) are bedrocks of the dancehall era. In the late '80s, McGregor toured the world with the Studio One band and scored a huge hit in Colombia with a reggae version of the Sandpipers' "Guantanamera," sung in Spanish. In the '90s, McGregor's best work has been in collaboration with producer Gussie Clarke (Carry Go Bring Come and "Rumours," the latter featuring deejay Daddy Rings) and ragga visionaries Steely and Clevie (Now). McGregor's catalog is vital in tracing every major change in modern Jamaican music, from ska and rocksteady to roots reggae, all the way to dancehall and ragga. His is truly a voice of Jamaica, past and present.

what to buy: Bobby Bobylon ♪♪♪♪½ (Heartbeat, 1980, prod. Clement "Coxsone" Dodd) is a masterpiece, even though its encompassment of nearly a decade of singles doesn't afford the most seamless flow. Still, the selection is flawless, ranging from McGregor's dread roots-Rasta anthems (recorded after he became a member of the Twelve Tribes organization in 1975) to some of the earliest examples of the soulful and romantic "lover's rock" style (the moving "Go Away Pretty Girl"). Big Ship ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1982, prod. Linval Thompson) may be his best-sounding album, as his profoundly melodic voice carries killer cuts like the title tune, "Holy Mount Zion," and the riveting "Roots Man Skanking," all backed by the foundation-shaking Roots Radics.

what to buy next: Reggae Rockers ♪♪♪♪ (Jamaican Authentic Classics, 1979, prod. Winston "Niney the Observer" Holness) is a budget reissue of the debut, Mr. McGregor. The brash and exciting Soul Syndicate band (headed by guitarist Earl "Chinna" Smith) provides a wonderful bottom-end to a string of classics, from "Natural Collie" (which integrates Norman Collins's soul opus "You Are My Starship"), to "Rasta Have Faith" (one of the most dazzling versions of the oft-used "Satta Massa Gana" riddim), all the way to McGregor's surprisingly sincere cover of "Brandy," which is now considered one of the earliest and best lover's rock joints. Of his most recent material, Sings Jamaican Classics, Volumes 1–3 ♪♪♪½ (VP, 1991/1992/1996, prod. Freddie McGregor, Dalton Browne) features his top-notch covers of songs from the island's golden age and collects some of his best-received albums of the '90s. McGregor's renditions of the Gaylads' "Joy in the Morning," the Abyssinians' "Declaration of Rights," and Alton Ellis's "Can I Change My Mind"—to name just one song from each volume—are heartfelt and sublime.

the rest:
Showcase ♪♪♪½ (Observer, 1980)
I Am Ready ♪♪♪½ (Studio One, 1982)
Come On Over ♪♪♪½ (RAS, 1983)
Across the Border ♪♪ (RAS, 1984)
All in the Same Boat ♪½ (RAS, 1986)
Freddie McGregor ♪♪ (Polydor, 1987)
Live at the Town & Country ♪♪♪ (VP, 1990)
Now ♪♪♪ (VP, 1991)
Hard to Get ♪♪ (Pow Wow, 1992)
Early Days ♪♪♪ (Sonic Sounds, 1993)
(With Dennis Brown and Cocoa Tea) Legit ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1993)
Carry Go Bring Come ♪♪♪ (Pow Wow, 1994)
Zion Chant ♪♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1994)
Push On ♪♪½ (VP, 1994)
Forever My Love ♪♪½ (RAS, 1995)
Masterpiece ♪♪ (VP, 1997)
RAS Portraits ♪♪♪ (RAS, 1997)
Rumours ♪♪ (Gone Clear, 1997)

worth searching for: Jah Jah Dreader Than Dread ♪♪♪♪ (Munich, 1997) is an exceptional document of the early dancehall recordings produced by Linval Thompson and includes the long-lost McGregor classic "Jah Help the People," along with its even rarer dub counterpart. This is a fabulous compilation loaded with hits from the Wailing Souls, Freddie McKay, and Triston Palmer, plus a trailer-load of deejay versions from the likes of U Brown and Welton Irie.

influences:
◀◀ Ernest Wilson, John Holt, Alton Ellis
▶▶ Judy Mowatt, Triston Palmer, Maxi Priest, Cocoa Tea, Tony Gold

see also: Dennis Brown, Cocoa Tea, the Ethiopians, Judy Mowatt, the Roots Radics, the Wailing Souls

Todd Shanker

Loreena McKennitt

New-age folk

Born February 17, 1957, in Morden, Manitoba, Canada. Based in Stratford, Ontario, Canada.

Loreena McKennitt isn't so much a folk artist as a swirling, ethereal musician who uses elements of folk and Celtic to enhance the atmosphere. Though the singer-harpist is more rooted in traditional songcraft than her new-age contemporary Enya, McKennitt's music aims for the spiritual much more than the straightforward. She initially planned a career as a veterinarian but wound up performing in folk clubs and working as a composer, actor, and singer at the Shakespearean Festival in Stratford, Ontario. (This would account for her dabbling in 19th-century poetry, such as the version of Alfred Lord Tennyson's "The Lady of Shalott" she set to music in 1992.) Soon, she began producing and distributing her own albums, finally catching on during the late-'80s stirrings of new age as a commercial force. McKennitt's soaring voice, and her ability to turn any sort of traditional folk tune into an angelic hymn, launched subsequent albums past gold and platinum level with very little radio or video play. Though she uses her considerable talent to mix all kinds of lofty musical legacies together, McKennitt's music is best experienced while sleeping, having sex, or otherwise trying to avoid distractions.

what to buy: "All Souls Night," the opening track of The Visit ♪♪♪ (Quinlan Road/Warner Bros., 1992, prod. Loreena McKennitt), is a spooky Celtic-based and Eastern Europe–tinged tune propelled by rolling percussion and McKennitt's voice blending with a tambura, balalaika, cello, and accordion. The album is impeccably crafted and well thought out (including a version of the traditional "Bonny Portmore"), with nary a bump in the road.

what to buy next: McKennitt can sing with emotional power, as on the soft, fragile folk song "The Dark Side of the Soul," which is a nice break from the new-age-isms that otherwise immerse The Mask and Mirror ♪♪½ (Quinlan Road/Warner Bros., 1994, prod. Loreena McKennitt).

what to avoid: "Over a number of years spent ruminating on the distinctive characteristics of the Celts . . . " begins McKennitt's introduction to The Book of Secrets ♪♪ (Quinlan Road/Warner Bros., 1997, prod. Loreena McKennitt), which despite the airy affectations manages to sound pretty good for background music.

the rest:

Elemental ♪♪½ (Quinlan Road, 1985)
To Drive the Cold Winter Away ♪♪½ (Quinlan Road, 1987)
Parallel Dreams ♪♪½ (Quinlan Road, 1989)
A Winter Garden: Five Songs for the Season ♪♪ (Quinlan Road/Warner Bros., 1995)

influences:

◀◀ Lao Tzu, Johnny Clegg, Peter Gabriel, Alfred Lord Tennyson

▶▶ Enya, Yanni, Erykah Badu, Deep Forest

Steve Knopper

Susan McKeown

Irish singer-songwriter folk

Born February 6, 1967, in Rathfarnham, Dublin, Ireland. Based in New York, NY, USA.

With numerous guest appearances on stage and CD and a deafening buzz in folk circles, Irish chanteuse Susan McKeown gained attention as a singer and songwriter before she recorded her first solo album. Her success is due in part to her collaborations with other gifted musicians. McKeown's voice has a startling dynamic range that's more evident in concert than on recordings. In composing and covering songs, she is drawn toward stories of women and mysticism, but she doesn't quite fit the "women's music" pigeonhole, nor is she a new-age artist. While she has covered traditional material, including songs in Irish Gaelic, elements of jazz and rock strongly flavor her style. Of late, McKeown has appeared in Johnny Cunningham's production of Peter and Wendy and toured as a vocalist with Natalie Merchant's band for several highly successful shows, including an appearance on the PBS series Sessions at West 54th. She's done vocal work on albums by rockabilly humorists Five Chinese Brothers, dance-trance project Arthur Loves Plastic, and pop-spiritual writer Thomas Moore. She's adept at slipping into the backing-singer role, but when she's up front, she rules the room.

what's available: McKeown's work is available under various billings, and she hasn't made a bad album yet. Bones ♪♪♪♪½ (Sheila-na-Gig, 1995/PRIME CD, 1996, prod. Jimi Zhivago), credited to Susan McKeown and the Chanting House, is an extraordinary debut, a superb blend of originals and covers that grows in power over time. Traditionally oriented listeners will be drawn to "Westron Wynde/Westlin Winds," which combines a ninth-century anonymous poem with Robert Burns's paean to hunting; and "Gorm," a chilling Gaelic lament. The more adventurous will be tantalized by the erotic "Curiouser" and the spooky title track. "Jericho" and "Snakes" are toe-tappers with spiritual guts, and "I Know I Know" would make Billie Holliday applaud. Augmented by the artful sounds of cello, fiddle, hurdy-gurdy, percussion, bass, guitar, and pipes, McKeown's voice sails, moans, murmurs, and rings through it all like she's been at it for centuries. Bushes and Briars ♪♪♪♪♪ (Alula, 1998, prod. Jamshied Sharifi, Akira Satake, Susan McKeown) again gives traditional music the McKeown touch, with brooding vocals and moody instrumentation. Through the Bitter Frost and Snow ♪♪♪♪½ (PRIME CD, 1997, prod. Lindsey Horner, Susan McKeown, David Seitz), a collaboration with Lindsey Horner, is a fine seasonal offering with the Celtic folk-jazz style found on much of Bones. The same duo's Mighty Rain ♪♪♪♪½ (Depth of Field, 1998) is a real departure. McKeown's voice and Horner's various bass instruments (bass clarinet, acoustic bass, bass guitar) are the only constants in this spare, haunting collection with more than a hint of torchy blues. "Black Is the Color" will make you shiver.

worth searching for: McKeown's CD single Snakes ♪♪♪♪ (PRIME CD, 1997, prod. various) contains an in-concert recording of "Daddy's Little Girl" that suggests the passion of her live performances.

influences:

- Sandy Denny, Fotheringay, Pentangle, Mary Black, Johnny Cunningham
- Loreena McKennitt, Sarah MacLachlan, Tori Amos, October Project

see also: Johnny Cunningham, Cathie Ryan, Jamshied Sharifi

Pamela Murray Winters

Russell Means

"Rap-ajo"

Born 1939, on the Pine Ridge Reservation, SD, USA. Based in USA.

Russell Means is an American Indian renaissance man with a legendary resume (he hates the term "Native American," saying that everyone born in North or South America is a native American). He's an actor (Last of the Mohicans, Natural Born Killers); writer (his autobiography Where White Men Fear to Tread lays out his personal and political evolution); an activist and founder of the American Indian Movement (AIM); a Libertarian Party spokesperson; founder of KILI (the first radio station owned and operated by Native Americans, located on the Pine Ridge Reservation); and a tireless cultural worker. The New York Times once called him "the most famous Indian since Sitting Bull."

what to avoid: In an effort to get his message out to young people, Means created a style he dubbed "rap-ajo," and recorded Electric Warrior woof! (Warrior, 1993) with the help of vanguard Native rockers Tom and Robby Bee. In July of 1980, Means had spoken at the Black Hills International Survival Gathering, delivering what is considered one of the greatest Indian speeches of the later 20th century, "For America to Live, Europe Must Die." Sad to say, little of this passion and eloquence is in evidence on Electric Warrior, a collection of generic music and heavy-handed lyrical clichés that's hard to sit through.

influences:

- Robby Bee, Xit
- Natay, Litefoot

j. poet

Meditations

Roots reggae

Formed 1974, in Jamaica. Based in Kingston, Jamaica, and USA.

Ansel Cridland, vocals; Winston Watson, vocals; Danny Clarke, vocals.

One of the all-time great vocal trios, Cridland, Watson, and Clarke first got together in 1974 following the breakup of Cridland's band the Linkers. All three members write, and like their early champion Bob Marley, the Meditations' music imparts the true Rastafarian message of racial harmony and unity. In listening to the trio's sweet tones you can pick up on their inspirations and influences—chief among them American R&B vocal groups the Impressions and Temptations. The Meditations' first hits, "Woman Piabba" and "Babylon Trap," were stand-alone 45s. This success lead to their first album in 1976, Message from the Meditations. It contains the roots standards "Running from Jamaica," "Woman Is Like a Shadow," and "Tricked." A second album, Wake Up, followed in 1977. Both records deserve their classic status and further qualified the group for backing work with such legends as Marley, Jimmy Cliff, Gregory Isaacs, and the Congos. In the late '80s the Meditations made an amicable split, with Cridland moving back to Jamaica from the United States and Watson and Clarke remaining a duo and retaining the band name. Cridland made several recordings under different identities including Ansel Meditation, Scandal, and the Linkers (again), while Watson and Clarke produced a Meditations album entitled For the Good of Man. Cridland rejoined the band in the mid-'90s for the album No More Friend and a subsequent tour. The great vocal legacy of groups like the Wailers, the Mighty Diamonds, and Culture once again was living on through the Meditations as well.

what to buy: Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1984/1991, prod. various) has it all, the hits and the classics, showcasing the group at their best with albums cuts and singles such as "Rasta Shall Conquer," "Woman Is Like a Shadow," "Fly Your Natty Dread," "Wake Up," "Running from Jamaica," "Standing on a Corner," and "Tricked." Reggae Crazy ♪♪♪♪ (Nighthawk, 1998, prod. various) contains many of the same tunes, plus some cuts from Guidance, an album cut with the Wailers in 1979 that never saw the light of day. Ansel Cridland made the selections for this CD.

what to buy next: Deeper Roots: The Best of the Meditations ♪♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1994, prod. various) is basically a collection of tracks from the Meditation's first two records, Message from the Meditations and Wake Up. Worthwhile listening, because the originals, both roots classics, are out of print.

the rest:

No More Friend ♪♪♪ (Greensleeves, 1983)
For the Good of Man ♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1987) Return of the Meditations ♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1992)

influences:

- The Impressions, the Temptations, Jimmy Cliff, Winston Jarrett, the Wailers, Bob Marley
- Gregory Isaacs, the Congos, Culture

see also: The Congos, Bob Marley

Andrew BeDell

Doris "D.L." Menard

Cajun

Born April 14, 1932, in Erath, LA, USA. Based in Erath, LA, USA.

Known as the "Cajun Hank Williams," singer and songwriter D.L. Menard has penned some of the most enduring numbers in his genre's canon, including "The Back Door," his biggest hit, which has been covered by countless bands both in and out of Louisiana. Menard's vocal style is nasal, intense, and immediately identifiable. Another of his sobriquets is "the Cajun rhythm machine," referring to his crisp, driving style of rhythm guitar playing.

Menard still lives in Erath, the small town where he was born and raised, and where he and his wife Louella run a chair factory, producing handmade rockers with caned seats. His father Ophy played Cajun music on the harmonica, and, at age 16, D.L. ordered his first guitar from Montgomery Ward. A few months later he began to play in Cajun dancehalls with Elias Badeaux's band, the Louisiana Aces. During the postwar era, Menard says, "Country music was pretty popular and a Cajun band that couldn't play country music with the Cajun music didn't have too many jobs." So the teenage D.L. made a specialty of singing the popular hits of Lefty Frizzell and Hank Williams in addition to traditional Cajun songs.

In the early '50s Menard began to write his own songs in the latter category, starting with "The Jolly Roger Waltz"—a moderate seller directly followed by the huge regional hit "The Back Door." In the '60s Menard began traveling outside southwest Louisiana, eventually touring on five continents. His outgoing, wisecracking performance style combines humorous Cajun anecdotes with excellent traditional music, making him a favorite of festival and concert crowds. In addition, Menard continues to attract brilliant younger musicians as sidemen, including many of the finest accordion and fiddle players in Cajun music: Horace Trahan, Eddie LeJeune, Marc Savoy, Paul Daigle, Dewey Balfa, and Ken Smith. In 1994, Menard won a National Heritage Fellowship, the National Endowment for the Arts' highest honor for a traditional artist.

what to buy: Under the Green Oak Tree ♪♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1976, prod. Chris Strachwitz) is a model of traditional Cajun music by three undisputed masters of the genre. Marc Savoy's ornate accordion stylings and Dewey Balfa's haunting, soulful fiddling are anchored by Menard on Cajun standards, including great versions of "Lake Arthur Stomp" and "Un Gros Erreur." In addition, Menard sings several of his own hits, including "The Back Door" and the lovely title cut, a beautiful waltz. Relaxed yet intense, this is highly recommended as an introduction to Cajun traditional music. Cajun Memories ♪♪♪ (Swallow, 1995, prod. Floyd Soileau) is a compilation of Menard's earliest Swallow recordings, including influential, classic versions of "The Back Door," "Jolly Roger Waltz," and "She Didn't Know I Was Married," as well as many more of his originals.

what to buy next: No Matter Where You Are, There You At ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1989, prod. D.L. Menard, Ken Irwin) offers another traditional treatment of Cajun standards and a few non-Cajun ones as well (such as "Wildwood Flower," usually a guitar showcase but here presented as an exuberant Cajun two-step!). Eddie LeJeune and Blackie Forestier take turns on the Cajun accordion, combining with Ken Smith's Texas-tinged fiddling to provide a perfect foil for Menard's unique vocal style. Le Trio Cadien ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992, prod. Eddie LeJeune, Ken Irwin) is a second excellent outing featuring the Menard-LeJeune-Smith triumvirate, which unfortunately ended shortly after this album was released. LeJeune's pyrotechnic accordion playing has to be among the hottest in Cajun music, and Smith, with his background in Texas contest-style fiddling, has the chops to match him in speed and virtuosity. As always, Menard provides rock-solid rhythm guitar, requiring neither bass nor drums to be strong and thoroughly danceable.

what to avoid: Out of all Menard's albums, Cajun Saturday Night ♪♪ (Rounder, 1989, prod. Jerry Douglas) is probably the least Cajun-influenced. Produced by Nashville whiz Jerry Douglas, the album features Cajunesque honky tonk numbers, sung entirely in English and backed by Nashville sessionmen Buck White, Ricky Skaggs, and Douglas himself. Although Cajun Saturday Night is not by any means as traditional as the title suggests, it might serve as a good introduction for those timid listeners reluctant to dive into the heady and strange gumbo that is real down-home Cajun.

influences:

- Hank Williams, Harry Choates, Iry LeJeune, Marc Savoy, Balfa Brothers

see also: Eddie LeJeune, California Cajun Orchestra, Savoy-Smith Cajun Band, Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys, Balfa Toujours

Balfa Brothers, Eddie LeJeune, Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band

Suzy Rothfield Thompson

Sergio Mendes

Bossa nova, Latin pop, samba, jazz, lounge

Born February 11, 1941, in Niteroi, Brazil.

Mendes might be considered one of the poster boys of loungedom, so involved was he with the "Blame it on the bossa nova" musical wave that swept through America in the early '60s. But one of his biggest hits was a 1968 easy-listening cover of a Beatles tune, "Fool on the Hill," recorded with his band Brasil '66 (originally named Brasil '65; the year would be updated occasionally). Pianist Mendes first gained fame as the leader of the Bossa Nova Trio. He moved to the States in 1964 and began collaborating with fellow Brazilian Antonio Carlos Jobim and American Art Farmer before creating the band that became Brasil '66, with Jose Soares on vocals and percussion, Bob Matthews on vocals and bass, Jao Palma on drums, and Janis Hansen and Lani Hall on vocals. Hall was the wife of A&M Records co-founder Herb Alpert—no slouch in the area of Latin music reprocessed for the Stateside market himself. The band's debut release—on A&M, naturally—Sergio Mendes and Brasil '66, contained the Top 10 hit "Mais Que Nada." With an airy, Latin-laced jazz-pop sound and no pretensions toward making socially relevant or politically pointed music, Mendes and company provided a bit of light escapism during a turbulent time. They released a series of albums filled with catchy originals and savvy covers, including Simon and Garfunkel's "Scarborough Fair," Otis Redding's "(Sittin' On) the Dock of the Bay," and even the Jimmy Webb tune that hit for Glen Campbell, "Wichita Lineman." The band's first few A&M albums fared well, then the Brasil star began to sputter out. By 1975, Mendes had released his first solo disc on Elektra; in 1977, he tried Sergio Mendes and the New Brasil '77, to no one's interest. But he did engineer a comeback with 1983's Sergio Mendes on A&M, reaching the Top 40 (if abandoning any vestiges of stylistic connection to his old band's title country) with "Never Gonna Let You Go," sung by Joe Pizzulo and Leza Miller. He dropped below the music-world radar again after 1984's Confetti, but resurfaced with Brasil '99, another soon-to-be-outdated moniker.

what to buy: Much of Mendes's signature lounge work is no longer in print, but most to the point of this book anyway, you might try Brasileiro ♪♪♪½ (Elektra, 1992, prod. Sergio Mendes), his percussion-drenched exploration of his own musical roots. "Magalenha" is quite catchy in its post–bossa nova way (samba-reggae, to be precise). The disc truly evokes the balmy breezes and intricate rhythms of Brazil, and "Kalimba" is rather funky. Oceano ♪♪♪ (Verve, 1996) puts Mendes firmly on Latin soil, musically speaking, with some very nice cuts. But for some reason he felt the need to venture into rap-like territory with "Maracatudo," which proves that genre-jumping is not always a good thing.

what to buy next: Fool on the Hill ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1968, prod. Sergio Mendes) is the quintessential post–"Girl from Ipanema" sound, using light bossa nova beats and laying lilting female vocals over big strings and Mendes's piano. Greatest Hits of Brasil '66 ♪♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1970, prod. Herb Alpert) showcases Mendes and the band with what's been described as his "winningly sexy blend of American female voices, simplified bossa nova rhythms, and lavish Dave Grusin orchestrations." It contains versions of three Beatles compositions ("Day Tripper," "Fool on the Hill," and "With a Little Help from My Friends") alongside Cole Porter ("Night and Day") and Burt Bacharach/Hal David ("The Look of Love"). Also included are "Going Out of My Head," "Scarborough Fair," and other cuts destined for dentists' offices everywhere.

brazil: tropicalismo

The samba-rock of Tropicalismo (a.k.a. Tropicalia) coincided with the Brazilian military regime of the late 1960s and early '70s. As the younger generation rebelled against the oppressive government, the electric-guitar-and-Bahian-rhythm mix of Tropicalismo framed their rallying cries, with Caetano Veloso's "Tropicalia" as their anthem. Founders Veloso and Gilberto Gil shrouded their political protest in double entendres; nonetheless considered a threat to the state, they were soon thrown in jail and later forced into exile in England. (This anti-establishment wave converged with an international interest in protest music in the same period, from kindred Latin American movements like the socially conscious nueva cancion ["new song"] trend and its Cuban variant nueva trova ["new ballad"], to American folk phenoms like Bob Dylan.)

Other Tropicalismo greats include Jorge Ben (now Jorge Ben Jor), Maria Bethânia, and Gal Costa; two good surveys are the Luaka Bop label's Brazil Classics 1 and Beleza Tropical 2. One of the most eccentric and playful of the Tropicalismo bands was Os Mutantes, who received the full reissue treatment in 1999 with a retrospective also on Luaka Bop (World Psychedelic Classics I: Brazil: The Best of Os Mutantes: Everything Is Possible!) and the it's-about-time Stateside release of their first three albums (Os Mutantes, Mutantes, and A Divina Comédia Ou Ando Meio Desligado) on Omplatten.

David Poole

best of the rest:
Four Sider ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1966)

worth searching for: Because many of the albums of Mendes's heyday, such as Classics ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1986) and Crystal Illusions ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1969), are either out of print or difficult to find, the best way to hear Brasil '66 in the CD era is on a variety of recent compilations. Cocktail Mix, Vol. 2: Martini Madness ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1996, compilation prod. Janet Grey) stacks Mendes's "Mais Que Nada" in context with other Latin-style tinkly instrumentals, including Perez Prado's "Why Wait" and Cal Tjader's "Soul Sauce (Guacha Guaro)." For something completely different, "Mais Que Nada" also shows up on the excellent, rock-heavy soundtrack I Shot Andy Warhol ♪♪♪♪½ (Tag/Atlantic, 1996, prod. Randall Poster).

influences:

⏮ Antonio Carlos Jobim, Herb Alpert, Astrud Gilberto, Henry Mancini, the Beatles, Stan Getz, Charlie Byrd, João Gilberto

⏭ Michael Sembello, Gilberto Gil, David Byrne, Paul Simon

see also: Antonio Carlos Jobim, Perez Prado

Lynne Margolis

Mendes Brothers

Funana, morna, coladeira, bandera, Cape Verdean pop

Born early 1950s, in Palonkon, Cape Verde. Based in Brockton, MA, USA.

João Mendes, guitar, vocals; Ramiro Mendes, guitar, keyboards, baixo, drum programs, electric viola, cavaquinho. (Both members from Cape Verde.)

The Mendes Brothers, João and Ramiro, are part of a new generation of U.S.-based Verdeans that have become doctors, lawyers, and professionals in many fields, as comfortable with American culture as with their own. (There is, in fact, a bigger Verdean population in the New England states than in Cape Verde.) In the best spirit of the American dream, the Mendes brothers have gone from penniless immigrants to owners of MB Records, a small label that's recently drawn offers from majors interested in manufacturing and distributing their growing list of Verdean titles. "We were born in the town of Palonkon, on the [Verdean] island of Fogo [fire], where we lived until I was 13," João Mendes recalls. "Our parents had come to the United States a few years before, and we joined them in 1978. We'd never seen snow before and barely spoke the language, so it was quite a shock. The older kids went to work, and I went to school, but right off Ramiro and I had a band that played Cape Verdean and Angolan music all over the East Coast. If we could drive a van there and be back for classes on Monday, we'd go." In 1981 the brothers Mendes added a Haitian keyboard player named Nono to the lineup. Nono "took over" the band, composing most of the original music and directing the other players. The syncopated Haitian compas influence made them a favorite with dancers, and that same year they recorded a Haitian album entitled Um Novo Metodo, which João describes as "a blend of compas and Cape Verdean coladeira (dance music) with a lot of Angolan influence." The record did well, despite its lack of distribution outside the Verdean community, but the senior Mendeses were not impressed. "To them, music was not an honorable profession." Like parents all over the world, the Mendes' wanted their sons to have "real jobs," even though Ramiro had been taking classical guitar lessons at night while working full-time in a boot factory to support the band. When João finished high school he did get a "real job." Ramiro took his savings and went to Boston to attend the Berklee School, where he graduated with a degree in film scoring and commercial arranging.

Before leaving for Berklee, Ramiro had produced an album entitled Andorinha Debolta for Sãozinaha, a woman who sang the traditional style of morna ("Cape Verdean blues") that had been popular 100 years before. On the strength of the recording, Sãozinaha was invited to compete in Cape Verde's annual international song contest, "The Whole World Sings." When she won the title, Ramiro's production credentials got a big boost. During his years at Berklee, Ramiro produced more than 20 albums for Verdean, Angolan, and Haitian artists, including Angola Minha Namorada (Angola My Sweetheart) for Waldemar Bastos on EMI, and Cesaria Evora's breakthrough album Mar Azul, although Ramiro's producing credit didn't make it to the completed CD jacket.

In 1991 the brothers used their savings to buy a 16-track recording studio in Brockton, Massachusetts, and opened the doors of MB Records. "The first thing we did was the title track from our own album Palonkon. We wanted to make sure everything worked, so we went in and started playing. We finished it in one day." Their first year of operation saw MB Records putting out Paranoia by Mirri Lobo, one of Cape Verde's most popular coladeira singers, and Simpatia by Djosinha, the leader of Contratempo, one of the hottest bands in the North American Verdean community. In 1993 the brothers finished Palonkon, named in honor of the village of their birth. "Ramiro played most of the instruments on the album, and I sang," João says. "Since we like so many kinds of music, it's more diverse [than most Verdean albums]. 'Helena' and 'Xandinha' are coladeiras; 'Vida' is a mazurka with some touches of funana [an older dance rhythm]; 'Angola Beliza Natural' is a coladeira with some Angolan-style samba. The violin and ukulele parts are typical of Angolan music. 'Angola Na Paz' is a morna, and 'Fidju Koitadu,' which means 'Son of the Needy,' is a funana that talks about the political situation back home; how the political system was set up with the settlers owning everything and the workers having nothing. Workers [have to kick back] 50 percent to the landowners, as well as paying a tax out of their share. The song measures the moral integrity of the workers against the owners of the land. The lyrics say 'I am the son of a farmer who was the son of a farmer,' tracing my family line in the African manner. 'We are the people with heart; the people with money and power have no heart.'" Although they've only been in business for a few years, João Mendes is amazed at the impact MB Records has had both in America and back home. "A friend wrote to us from Angola and said that Palonkon is a huge seller there. Although it's mostly on pirated cassettes, it's still good to know that people like the music. But the biggest surprise was how open Americans have been. The Boston Globe gave us three-and-a-half stars in their music section. I'm beginning to realize that this music isn't just for Verdeans any more. The cliché is true; music is a universal language and everybody wants to learn how to speak it."

what to buy: Bandera ♪♪♪♪½ (MB, 1995, prod. Ramiro Mendes) is pure pop in a Cape Verdean stylee, heavy on the bass and percussion and featuring the soulful vocals of João Mendes. Every track is strong, and the overall sound will appeal to lovers of Brazilian music, although the Mendes Brothers are funkier and a good deal less slick.

what to buy next: Like Trinidad, Cape Verde has a tradition of taking political leaders to task in song. A suite of such pieces with lyrics by Verdean poet Alberto Alves, Diplomadu ♪♪♪♪½ (MB, 1996, prod. Ramiro Mendes) was released just before the 1996 elections in Cape Verde. Some Verdeans hailed it as a masterpiece of political music, others criticized the brothers for "meddling" in Cape Verde's politics, but you don't have to understand the lyrics to catch the album's infectious groove.

the rest:
Palonkon ♪♪♪♪ (MB, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ B. Leza
▶▶ Mirri Lobo, Djosinha, Cesaria Evora

j. poet

Margareth Menezes

Axe, samba-reggae

Born in Salvador da Bahia, Brazil. Based in Salvador da Bahia, Brazil.

Margareth Menezes's life changed with one phone call. A struggling actress and singer, she had finished a short tour with Gilberto Gil, visiting Rio and Sao Paolo for the first time, when David Byrne called. The former leader of Talking Heads wanted Menezes to perform with him on his 1989 solo world tour. Menezes's charismatic performance endeared her to American audiences and she soon recorded her debut on Mango Records in 1980, Elegibo. Menezes's larger-than-life stage presence, however, belies her in-person shyness. In one interview, she recalled that she was so nervous and homesick rehearsing with Byrne that she could not sing and cried herself to sleep that night. Her sudden success outside of Brazil never quite paralleled her reception within it, and her career has since wobbled. By the time of Luz Dourada, her record company barely marketed the album in the United States. Some have said that Menezes's career problems stem from the subtle racism against dark-skinned performers in Brazil. Indeed, Daniela Mercury's subsequent superstardom only highlights the lack of market enthusiasm for Menezes, who performed percussive samba-reggae and axe music similar to that of the light-skinned Mercury.

what to buy: Elegibo ♪♪♪♪ (Mango, 1990, prod. Nestor Madrid) shows off Menezes's rich alto and infectious energy in a variety of Bahian styles, from samba-reggae to lambada. While this is certainly a pop album, it consistently has more heft and soul than her later releases.

what to buy next: Luz Dourada ♪♪♪½ (PolyGram, 1995, prod. Nestor Madrid) has a high-energy pop sheen, but there are strong songs and great examples of updated percussive Bahian genres. Kindala ♪♪♪ (Mango, 1991, prod. Nestor Madrid) is her sophomore effort and, though it has some great tunes, it also has some lackluster pop cuts.

the rest:
A Novidade Do Movimento (1998)

influences:
◀◀ Olodum, Ile Aiye, Gilberto Gil, Clara Nunes

Marty Lipp

E.T. Mensah

Ghanaian highlife

Born Emmanuel Tettey Mensah, May 31, 1919, in Accra, Ghana. Based in Ghana.

There are few musicians who have almost single-handedly shaped the evolution of a genre, but trumpeter E.T. Mensah is among that select group. Highlife, the Ghanaian pop music that was to have such a big impact on the way Nigerian musicians played, owed its popularity to Mensah and his band the Tempos, who relentlessly toured West African venues. The "highlife" music played by the Tempos had its roots in the formal balls held by the Westernized Ghanaian elite, where tangos, waltzes, and other "high society" dances were performed. Mensah and the Tempos brought African and Caribbean rhythms to the mix, sang in various tribal dialects, and started using electric guitars, modifications that enabled them to attract a wider demographic than the tuxedo-and-gown set.

Margareth Menezes

Although his father was a guitarist, the young Mensah's musical career actually began in 1924 as a member of his school's band. There he learned how to play fife and flute under the guidance of teacher/bandleader Joe Lamptey. In 1932 Lamptey reorganized the band, making it into a larger ensemble with a new name, the Accra Orchestra. Mensah started out as a roadie for the group before joining its saxophone section. From the late '30s into the mid '40s Mensah and his older brother Yebuah had a spin-off band called the Accra Rhythmic Orchestra. The next group on E.T.'s resume was Jack Leopard's Black and White Spots, an interracial ensemble led by a Scottish sergeant that generally played for foreign troops stationed in Accra. It was during this stint that Mensah picked up the rudiments of playing the alto saxophone and the trumpet.

In 1947 he joined the Tempos, then a seven-piece group with a revolving leadership. Other important members in the initial lineup included Joe Kelly, a tenor saxophonist who had also played in the Accra Orchestra, and Guy Warren, a jazz-oriented drummer later known as Kofi Ghanaba. Warren was particularly important within the fledgling group; he had spent some time in the U.K. and become acquainted with calypso music, a genre that interested some in the band because of its easy adaptability to highlife. Nonetheless, Warren and most of the original Tempos left in 1950 after a dispute over the group's direction in which Mensah (who owned the band's instruments) wanted to blend calypso and Latin rhythms into their highlife, while the dissenting musicians were more interested in jazz and Afro-Cuban music.

As undisputed leader of the Tempos, Mensah made moves that were to further impact other African bands. First of all, he started paying the players, making them the first professional musicians in Ghana. His tours of West Africa (especially the frequent stops in Nigeria) further popularized highlife music and influenced future African greats Victor Olaiya and Rex Lawson to start their own groups modeled on the Tempos. Mensah also became the first chairman of the Ghana Musicians Union in 1961, and under his leadership the union forced the record companies to increase the royalties paid on each record sold. He went on to be a prominent member of the Musicians' Union of Ghana after a government coup forced the previous incarnation to disband because of its ties to the former regime.

Highlife's popularity started to wane in the mid-'60s and Mensah put his career on hold to become a pharmacist for most of the following decade. A resurgence of interest in highlife in the late '70s brought him back into the musical fold. In 1986 a biography of Mensah written by musicologist John Collins, E.T. Mensah: King of Highlife, was published by Off the Record Press in London and the Ghana State Publishing Corporation in Accra. At the end of 1988, Mensah received an honorary Ph.D. and retired from performance once again.

what's available: Mensah's releases from the '50s and early '60s are necessarily cramped by the limitations of 78 rpm records, but they are important documents for understanding the evolution of modern African pop music. All for You ♪♪♪½ (Retroafric, 1990, compilation prod. Noel Sidebotham) and Day by Day ♪♪♪♪ (Retroafric, 1991, compilation prod. Bunt Stafford-Clarke) afford a look at a West African music scene in flux. In addition to instrumentals there are vocals sung in English, Spanish, and pidgin as well as tribal languages (Twi, Fante, and Ga). Amidst entertaining songs like "Tea Samba" and "Day by Day" there are a handful of topical pieces commenting on issues of the day, including "Inflation Calypso" and "Ghana Freedom." Mensah's favorite calypsos and highlife rhythms fill the bulk of these discs but jazz and the Cuban clave rhythm have made notable inroads, foreshadowing the styles developed by Victor Uwaifo, Fela Kuti, King Sunny Adé, and other West Africans.

influences:

⏮ Kwame Asare, Eddie Calvert, Lord Kitchener

⏭ Victor Olaiya, Rex Lawson, Victor Uwaifo, Jerry Hansen

Garaud MacTaggart

Daniela Mercury

Axe

Born 1965, in Salvador da Bahia, Brazil. Based in Salvador da Bahia, Brazil.

Anyone who has seen Daniela Mercury perform live knows that she has enough energy to light a mid-sized city. With her big voice, indefatigable spirit, and sexy good looks, Mercury is the perfect ambassador for her beloved home state of Bahia. Though Mercury's high-energy repertoire has broadened, it is focused on the exuberant, drum-driven music of Bahia, sometimes called axe ("ah-shay"). Indeed, Mercury has done more than anyone to popularize Bahian music, even within Brazil itself, which is why she is sometimes called the "Queen of Axe." Her first connection to music was as a dancer, but it was as a teenager that the former Daniela Mercuri de Almeida Povoas began to recognize her singing ability. Performing in bars she wasn't even old enough to enter otherwise, Mercury soon graduated to belting out crowd-rousing numbers from the back of large flatbed trucks: the trios eletricos of Bahia's Carnival celebration. As a solo artist, she scored a hit in 1991 with "Swing Da Cor (Color Swing)," which was one of the first popular songs in the samba-reggae style, a style that built on the drum-corps street music of afros blocos such as Olodum and Ile Aiye. Mercury's second album, O Canto Da Cidade (Song of the City) was Brazil's first diamond record, with sales surpassing one million copies. With a heavy road schedule, Mercury became one of the top draws in Brazil, and in her wake other Bahian groups such as Banda Eva and E O Tchan have come to post sales that rival her own. For Mercury, Bahia is an inextricable part of her music. "The Bahiano knows how important happiness is," she says. "The human being has to chase happiness. It's necessary for life. Amid all the hardship you have in life, music can bring positive energy—especially when the music is good to dance to—and that is my intention." Further explaining the aim of her relentlessly high-energy music, Mercury says, "When one of us dances, it's beautiful to see. But when we dance together, the earth moves, the ground shakes and we can make a revolution. And today the revolution is to be happy."

what to buy: Feijão Com Arroz (Beans with Rice) ♪♪♪♪♪ (Sony, 1997, prod. Alfredo Moura) is Mercury's most accomplished album to date, one on which each song is done in a different style—from a Rio-style Carnival samba enredo to reggae to Northeastern rhythms such as galope—and she makes perfect use of many guest artists. A non-stop pace, but every track is excellently arranged.

what to buy next: O Canto Da Cidade ♪♪♪♪ (Sony, 1993, prod. Liminha) has many great cuts too, but some are not as spell-binding.

the rest:
Daniela Mercury ♪♪♪ (Eldor, 1991)
Musica da Rua ♪♪♪½ (Sony Discos, 1994) Eletrica ♪♪♪♪ (Sony Discos, 1999)

influences:
⏮ Carmen Miranda, Clara Nunes, Olodum, Gilberto Gil ⏭ Banda Eva, Marcia Freire, E O Tchan, Cheiro De Amor

see also: Olodum

Marty Lipp

The Mighty Diamonds

Roots reggae

Formed 1974, in Kingston, Jamaica. Based in Kingston, Jamaica.

Donald Shaw, lead vocals; Bunny Simpson, harmony vocals; Lloyd Ferguson, harmony vocals. (All members are from Jamaica.)

The Diamonds were one of the premier vocal trios of the mid-1970s roots reggae boom, and their first album, Right Time, is one of the high water marks of the era. Led by singer/songwriter Donald Shaw, and backed by Sly & Robbie and other Studio One heavies, the first album's brilliant mixture of militant lyrics and smoky, soulful vocals has seldom been matched. The Diamonds have recorded steadily, with the same lineup, for more than two decades now, though they have never equaled their opening salvo.

what's available: The Go Seek Your Rights ♪♪♪♪♪ (Frontline, 1990, prod. various) compilation, issued during the major-label frenzy of digitalization, contains the entire Right Time album, along with tracks from Deeper Roots and Planet Earth.

worth searching for: As of this writing, there is no plan to release Planet Earth ♪♪♪♪½ (Virgin, 1978, prod. Karl Pitterson) on CD, although it rivals Right Time for its soul and sufferation. It was never officially released in the U.S. either, so if you can find an LP or cassette, snap it up.

influences:
⏮ Pioneers, Wailers, Heptones

see also: Sly & Robbie

j. poet

The Mighty Sparrow /Sparrow

Calypso, soca

Born July 9, 1935, in Grenada. Based in Jamaica, NY, USA, and Port of Spain, Trinidad.

Slinger Francisco, the Mighty Sparrow, is the greatest living singer of calypso, and perhaps the greatest singer and composer the genre has ever produced, although he's extremely modest about his accomplishments. "Your calypso name is given to you by your peers, based on your style," Sparrow says. "In the old days they tried to emulate British royalty; there was Lord Kitchener, Lord Nelson, Duke. When I started, the bands were using acoustic instruments and the singers would stand flat-footed, making a point or accusing someone in the crowd with the pointing of a finger. When I sing, I get excited and move around, and this was new. The older singers said 'Why don't you just sing instead of jumping around like a little Sparrow.' It was said as a joke, but the name stuck." Sparrow had the last laugh, going on to become the most successful calypso singer of all time. If you combined the Beatles' gift for melody, Elvis Presley's hip-shaking showmanship, the lascivious sexuality of Prince, the politically astute observations of Phil Ochs, and the verbal pyrotechnics of Gilbert & Sullivan, and crammed them all into a single compact body, you'd have some idea of Sparrow's impact on the history of Caribbean music. Sparrow's sexually and politically charged compositions and dynamic performances have made him a superstar throughout most of the world, but despite the fact that he lives and works in Jamaica, New York, for six months of every year, he's largely unknown in the United States outside of the West Indian community.

Sparrow was born on the island of Grenada, but his family moved to Trinidad when he was still an infant. Sparrow attended a Catholic grammar school and traces his love of music to his days as a head choirboy at Newtown Boy's School. A teacher named Carl Jaggermauth held classroom singing contests and rewarded the winner with an extra carton of milk. It may be those early experiences that honed Sparrow's competitive spirit. "I also sang all kinds of American pop music, especially the tunes of Nat 'King' Cole. When I was around 14 I joined a steel band put together by the neighborhood boys for Carnival. That's when I got interested in Calypso." Calypso mixes the rhythmic drive of the West African rhythms the slaves remembered from their homeland with the folk and popular music they heard from their masters on the sugar plantations. Trinidad was conquered by the Spanish and British, and also boasts large populations of French, Indian, Chinese, Portuguese, and Syrian immigrants, so the musical melting pot is brimming over with Latin, Arabic, Asian, and European strains. The West African griot tradition of topical song, which granted singers "immunity" for their barbed verses, as well as the tradition of ridiculing rivals or people in positions of power (which may also be the root of the African American practice of "the dozens" or "snaps"), certainly played a part in the evolution of calypso. "It goes back to slavery days," Sparrow explains. "People weren't allowed to learn how to read or write, so the only way the people had to address the issues of the day and find consolation was through music."

Daniela Mercury

Calypso, or kaiso as it was called in the early days, was accompanied by drums until the Spanish outlawed the drum. Trinidadians then invented "rhythm sticks," bamboo canes of varying lengths and pitches, to take the place of the drums, but the masters saw the canes as potential weapons and banished them, too. Eventually the music began to integrate European instruments—guitar, bass, piano, etc.—and began a long, slow transformation to respectability. "Under British rule [Trinidad has only been independent since 1961] calypso was considered outlaw music," Sparrow continues. "They called it the 'mouthpiece of the poor,' and since calypsonians were always stepping on the corns of the bigwigs and exposing things that they didn't want exposed, they wouldn't play it on the radio. In the early days there was some risk involved to the singers, but nonetheless, they would stand up and sing out about the problems of the day." Despite, or perhaps because of, official displeasure, calypso became one of Trinidad's major exports, and in the '30s and '40s tourists began flocking to the island each year at Carnival time to hear the latest from Lord Melody, Growling Tiger, and Atilla.

Inspired by these great singers, Sparrow taught himself to play guitar and started writing songs. As a teenager he'd sneak into clubs to sing and play, often missing the last bus home and sleeping on the floor of places like the Dirty Jim Swizzle Club. In young adulthood he entered the yearly calypso competition and won first place with "Jean and Dinah." The prize was the magnificent sum of 40 dollars. "In those days the competition was corrupt. If you cut a record you didn't get royalties. They acted like they were doing you a favor by letting you record a song." To protest this, Sparrow wrote "Carnival Boycott" and led a strike of about half the singers. "We weren't mad at the strike breakers," Sparrow said. "We understood they were just trying to make a name for themselves, but it would have gone better if we'd all stood together." During the boycott, Sparrow wasn't idle. He cut the first long-playing album of calypsos in 1957, and while he didn't officially compete, songs like "Russian Satellite," "Theresa," and "Post Card to Sparrow" were huge favorites with the crowd.

Despite the lack of unity around the strike, things improved and in 1960 Sparrow returned to the competition. By the end of the decade he had won Calypso King six times, Road March King five times, and both titles three times, making him the most popular calypso performer of all time. So popular, in fact, that in 1974 he formally resigned from competition so "the younger singers would have a chance for exposure." Despite the fact that he didn't enter the yearly calypso jousts, Sparrow's performing and composing skills never got rusty. His world tours were usually sell-out affairs, and he still grappled with the social issues of the day in a forthright manner that combined keen political insights with a bawdy sense of humor. And notwithstanding his hiatus from the annual Carnival competitions, he did compete in the King of Kings show in 1985, a contest between 11 of the performers who'd won the King of Carnival crown including legends like Melody, Kitchener, and Stalin. Sparrow won the grand prize of 100,000 Trinidadian dollars and the title. He has also been awarded an honorary Yoruba title in the wake of his triumphant FESTAC (World Festival of Black Arts and Culture) tour of West Africa in 1977, and in 1988 received an honorary Ph.D. from the University of the West Indies, in observance of all the doctoral candidates who've earned their degrees annotating and deconstructing the lyrics and melodic structure of the master.

For the past 20 years, due to the poor quality of the studios and the high price of recording in Trinidad, most calypso singers, including Sparrow, have spent at least half of their time in Brooklyn, where a large West Indian population supports the music and the artists. The influences of New York City's hip-hop, funk, Haitian, and Salsa scenes have also helped calypso to mutate into its latest incarnation as soca (SOul and CAlypso), a wrinkle that has taken the music into the '90s and kept it vital. "We jumped up the tempo, and simplified the beat somewhat," Sparrow said. "Unfortunately, a lot of the social and political impact of the music has been forgotten. Today most singers talk about dancing and having a good time. In the old days you had to have a large vocabulary, your lyrics had to rhyme, and the words often added a syncopated element to the composition as a whole. With a few exceptions, all you get now is 'wine an' grine.'"

The Mighty Sparrow

Except for a couple of mini-crazes (Harry Belafonte spawned one in the early '50s, and Bing Crosby and Rudy Vallee created a sensation in the mid-'30s by inviting Atilla, Growling Lion, and Gerald Clarke to appear on their NBC Network shows), calypso has kept a remarkably low profile in the United States. While reggae has slowly gained recognition in North America, calypso is still largely unknown even though many of its greatest practitioners live in the States and sing in English. "I think it's mainly a question of promotion," Sparrow says. "Calypso people are eager to embrace all kinds of American music, but they don't realize that their own music is still in its embryonic stages, at least in this market. They want to be assimilated, and sometimes they're oblivious to their own culture. They don't realize that travelers, both musically and culturally speaking, don't want to go where tourists go. They want to see what the natives enjoy. Soca is very infectious music and if you brag about your music, and boast about it, then the Americans will take a chance with it."

what to buy: One of the high points of Sparrow's career, 25th Anniversary ♪♪♪♪♪ (Charlie's, 1980, prod. Slinger Francisco) celebrated his longevity in calypso and includes "Dead or Alive," a worldwide hit that decried the ruthless dictators of the Third World.

what to buy next: The Mighty Sparrow, Volume One ♪♪♪♪♪ (Ice, 1992) compilation gives you 13 early hits, including several tunes that won Sparrow Carnival King titles, like "Jean and Dinah," "Dan Is the Man (in the Van)" and "Congo Man."

the rest:
Mighty Sparrow, Volume Two ♪♪♪♪ (Ice, 1992)
Mighty Sparrow, Volume Three ♪♪♪♪ (Ice, 1992)
Sparrow's Dance Party ♪♪♪½ (BLS, 1992)
Dancing Shoes ♪♪♪♪ (Ice, 1993)
Mighty Sparrow, Volume Four ♪♪♪♪ (Ice, 1994)

worth searching for: Any Sparrow album, cassette, or CD will be worth the price; even his "weaker" sets have a classic or two in them, but he hasn't really written a bad song in his entire career.

influences:
⏮ Growling Tiger, Duke, Melody, Attila the Hun ⏭ Harry Belafonte, Stalin, Explainer, Shadow

j. poet

Pablo Milanés

Nueva trova, nueva canción

Born 1943, in Bayamo, Cuba. Based in Cuba.

Pablo Milanés uses his music as commentary on revolutionary Cuba and on the emotional life of the Cuban people. Like Silvio Rodríguez and other Cuban artists interested in the politics of change, he studied at film school in Havana in the mid-'60s. With Rodríguez, Milanés is considered by many to have taken on the role of national poet of Cuba, whose work will provide a roadmap to the ideological development of the nation when Fidel's revolution is judged by history.

what's available: Classicos de Cuba ♪♪♪½ (Simitar Latino, 1997, compilation prod. Thomas Cochran) is a recent example of Milanés's thoughtful originals and covers. Milanés has an extensive discography on Spanish labels, most of which aren't well distributed in the United States. He contributes one track, "Identidad," to the easier-to-find Cuba: I Am Time, reviewed in the Compilations section of this volume.

influences:
⏮ Leo Brouwer, Sindo Garay, Carlos Puebla
⏭ Carlos Varela, Silvio Rodríguez, Lourdes Perez

see also: Silvio Rodríguez, Chucho Valdez

Kerry Dexter

Milladoiro

Spanish folk, Celtic

Formed 1978, in Santiago, Galicia, Spain. Based in Spain.

Rodrigo Romani (1978–present), harp, trompa, ocarina, guitar, bouzouki, vocals; Antón Seoane (1978–present), teclados, accordion, guitar, zanfona; Xosé V. Ferreirós (1978–present), gaita, oboe, bouzouki, mandolin, pandereta, castañolas, uilleann pipes, vocals; Fernando Casal (1978–present), gaita, clarinet, tin whistle, pandereta, vocals; Ramon "Moncho" García Rei (1978–present), percussion, vocals; Xosé A. Fernández Méndez (1978–present), flute, piccolo; Michel Canadá (1981–91), violin, viola, mandola; Laura Quintillén (1979–80), violin; Antonio Seijo (1992–present), violin. (All members are from Spain.)

The University at Santiago de Compostela was a hotbed of music playing and research during the mid-1970s. Xosé A. Fernández Méndez, a jazz musician, was working amongst historical archives, exploring old manuscripts and scores, looking for interesting music. Xosé V. Ferreirós, Fernando Casal, and Ramon García Rei were members of a band of wandering minstrels devoted to playing traditional Galician (Spanish Celtic) music at parties and other functions. Meanwhile Antón Seoane and Rodrigo Romani were playing and researching medieval music, finally recording some of their results on a 1978 album titled Milladoiro. The name of their release was taken from the piles of stones left by religious pilgrims on their treks through Galicia. By the end of 1978 all of these musicians had banded together (with violinist Laura Quintillén) to form Milladoiro, the group. After months of practice they unveiled the results in concert and, with the exception of a transient series of violinists, have been performing together as the same unit ever since. The music of Milladoiro has Celtic roots and their biggest initial inspiration was Ireland's pioneering Chieftains, but they also looked to the Celtic music of Brittany in France and the living tradition of their own Galician homeland. Over time Milladoiro have taken their folk sources and blended them with elements lifted from classical music to form a distinctive hybrid. They have toured all over Europe and also traveled to Japan, North America, and South America. They have released 14 albums, counting the one by Seoane and Romani from which they take their name. These include soundtracks and incidental music for various arts-oriented events, but only three of their discs are available in the United States. Milladoiro have also recorded with Paul Winter (on Solstice Live) and with their original role models, the Chieftains (on Celebration).

Pablo Milanés

what to buy: The band's first American release was Castellum Honesti ♪♪♪♪ (Ion Musica/Green Linnet, 1989/1991, prod. Milladoiro), their eighth album overall. While nine of the ten songs are traditional melodies, the arrangements and instrumentation bring the tunes into the modern age even though nary an electric guitar is present. A truer representation of the band as a concert act can be found on As fadas de estraño nome ♪♪♪♪½ (Discmedi/Green Linnet, 1995/1997, prod. Milladoiro), recorded in Buenos Aires, Argentina, and in Ortiqueira, Spain. One would never suspect the band's academic background because the performances lack any trace of ivory-tower stiffness. The band bounces, it swings, it can cause uninhibited dancing in the aisles and then, turning on a psychological dime, it can bring tears to the eye with melodies that tug at the heartstrings.

what to buy next: Galicia no Tempo ♪♪♪½ (Discmedi/Green Linnet, 1991/1992) was written as music for an art exhibition in the band's hometown of Santiago de Compostela, and has a certain restraint that isn't found on their other American releases. It's still a very pleasant project, though it might sound a bit too close to Celtic-influenced new-age music for some listeners.

worth searching for: Probably their most available import, Iacobus Magnus ♪♪♪½ (Discmedi, 1994, prod. Milladoiro) is a fully realized example of Milladoiro as folklorist/neo-classicists. Recorded with the English Chamber Orchestra and the Orquesta Sinfónica de Galicia, the music is a suite written for the Cathedral of Santiago de Compostela. The body of St. Jacob, one of Jesus's disciples, is supposedly buried there, hence the title.

influences:

⏮ The Chieftains, the Bothy Band, Alan Stivell, Os Campaneiros

⏭ Trisquel, Leixaprén, Berroguëtto

see also: The Chieftains, Bill Whelan, Paul Winter

Garaud MacTaggart

Bill Miller

Native American, folk, rock

Born 1940, in Wisconsin, USA. Based in USA.

Don't trouble yourself trying to label the music of Native American singer-songwriter Bill Miller; he's happy to do it himself. It's not alternative, he's fond of saying: it's altered-Native. Miller can shift gears rapidly between Neil Young–style folkie reveries and tradition-based Native American chants. On the third hand, his 1996 release was a full-bore rock album, much of which draws on the kind of energy Miller saw when he shared a concert bill with Pearl Jam. Having grown up on a northern Wisconsin reservation, Miller was exposed to the vagaries of racism and all its attendant violence. And while his music occasionally gives in to bitterness and a thirst for revenge, it is mostly about hope, dignity, and compassion. Miller's is an important and genuinely wise voice.

what to buy: On Raven in the Snow ♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1995, prod. Richard Bennett), Miller switches from his gentle folk stance to explosive rock arrangements—a good idea since, for the first time, the music reflects the fury behind such songs as "The Final Word" and the title track. Others—such as the defiant "Brave Heart" and "Listen to Me," which pleads for understanding between generations—are more reflective and have an ethereal quality. Altogether, Raven is Miller's most fully realized work.

what to buy next: The Red Road ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Western, 1993, prod. Richard Bennett) combines acoustic-based folk music with Native American flutes and chants. It includes the haunting instrumental "Dreams of Wounded Knee" plus "Praises," which is based on a Menominee prayer to the Creator, and "Reservation Road," a gritty memoir of Miller's birthplace.

the rest:

(With Robert Mirabal & the Smokey Town Singers) Native Suite ♪♪♪½ (Warner Western, 1996)

Ghostdancer N/A (Sol, 1999)

worth searching for: Miller's earlier, self-released albums, which he sells at shows and by mail order, include a pair of folk outings—Old Dreams and New Hopes ♪♪½ (Rosebud, 1987) and The Art of Survival ♪♪♪ (Rosebud, 1990)—as well as the Native/new-age-leaning Loon, Mountain and Moon: Native American Flute Songs ♪♪½ (Rosebud, 1991).

influences:

⏮ Neil Young, Dan Fogelberg, XIT

see also: Robert Mirabal, Kongar-ool Ondar

Daniel Durchholz

Áine Minogue

Celtic, harp, new age

Born in Borrisokane, County Tipperary, Ireland. Based in Boston, MA, USA.

Áine Minogue grew up in a musical family, and she found her own instrument at the age of 12 when she began to play the harp. As a teenager she performed with the Bunratty Castle singers and with tenor Sean O'Shay as part of the duo Legacy. In 1990 Minogue moved to the United States, where she became a professor in Boston College's Irish Studies program.

what to buy: Though she plays the harp and sings ethereal vocals, Circle of the Sun ♪♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1998, prod. Áine Minogue) shows how Áine Minogue differs from Enya. For one thing, Minogue has opened up her sound, albeit with a subtle touch, to music from other sources. There's a didgeridoo (Australian Aboriginal drone instrument) on one song, for example, and on another a hymn to Saint Brigid is interwoven with a chant in honor of a Buddhist goddess. Minogue doesn't stop her search at ancient roots, though—on Between the Worlds ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1997, prod. Áine Minogue) there's the Beatles tune "Across the Universe." Minogue is also interested in exploring the diverse sources of spirituality. Though her Christmas album To Warm the Winter's Night ♪♪♪♪ (Evergreen, 1996, prod. Áine Minogue) includes Christian songs as well as winter favorites, and she has a gospel-tinged album, Were You at the Rock ♪♪♪ (Beacon, 1994, prod. Áine Minogue), she has a more Celtic view of the interconnection of man and nature, as is shown on Mysts of Time ♪♪♪ (North Star, 1996, prod. Áine Minogue).

influences:
Turlough O'Carolan

Kerry Dexter

Sugar Minott

Reggae, dancehall, ragga

Born Lincoln Minott, May 25, 1956, in Kingston, Jamaica. Based in Kingston, Jamaica.

In the early 1980s, reggae cognoscenti—both critics and hardcore fans—were ready to anoint Sugar Minott as the next big thing. A pioneer of the dancehall style—bringing DJs to the front to rap (or "toast") over the music—Minott's destiny seemed secure. A star on the reggae horizon in England and the U.S. as well as at home, Minott nevertheless declined to make the jump to superstardom. In the '70s Minott had made the scene as one of the African Brothers, along with Tony Tuff and Derrick Howard. They worked around Kingston and finally ended up at the famed Studio One. With talent as a producer, singer, drummer, and guitarist, Minott quickly rose to the top. He became a celebrity in Britain with his first record, Hard-Time Pressure. At this point Minott started a label of his own, Youth Promotion, with the idea of developing the musical talent from the ghettos of Kingston. When major labels came calling, he would not sign without deals for the Youth Promotion acts. Minott's altruism, though admirable, cost him. While many of the talents he nurtured went on to their own successes, Minott continued recording independently for a variety of producers and labels. Minott still makes good and sometimes excellent records, and to fans and neophytes alike, this versatile artist should rightfully be known as one of the true reggae innovators.

what to buy: Buyer beware: like many reggae artists, throughout his career Minott recorded for a variety of labels, which continue to repackage, remix, and otherwise mess around with the artist's back catalog. Slice of the Cake ♪♪♪♪ (PGD/Heartbeat, 1989, prod. Sugar Minott) is arguably Sugar's most solid recent record. His versatility shines through, making the rounds of roots, rockers, dancehall, dub, and more, with Sly and Robbie on rhythm and the Roots Radics in support. This disc includes some of his best: "Nice It Up," "Inna Dance Hall Style," "Slice of the Cake," and "How Could I Let You Get Away." Musical Murder ♪♪♪½ (VP, 1996, prod. Sugar Minott) is more dancehall, even more dub, a little bit of culture, and some of what feels like filler. Highly danceable, however. There's a good take on the minor hit "In the Ghetto," in addition to the grooves of "Slow Rub-A-Dub" and "Ram Jam Session." 20 Super Hits ♪♪♪½ (Sonic Sounds, 1993, prod. various), while not exactly a "greatest" hits collection, finds Sugar in a rootsier mood and is not a bad choice if you were to buy only one of his discs. Included are the tasty fun of "Dread Upon Your Head," "Sensimilla," and "Leave Dreadlocks Business," as well as the message songs "Loving Jah," "Stop Fight Rasta," and "Herbman Hustling."

what to buy next: Ghetto Child ♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1989, prod. Sugar Minott) ranges all over the place from the light ("This Is Reggae" and "Cool and Easy") to the heavy ("Dreadlocks Chalice" and the title track). Dub fans should take note that the second half of the disc—some nine tunes—is a dub version of the first half.

the rest:
Smile ♪♪♪ (VP, 1977)
Good Thing Going ♪♪½ (Heartbeat, 1981)
Inna Reggae Dance Hall ♪♪♪½ (Heartbeat, 1987)
Sufferer's Choice ♪♪½ (Heartbeat, 1988)
Sugar & Spice ♪♪♪ (RAS, 1990)
Happy Together ♪♪♪½ (Heartbeat, 1991)
Run Things ♪♪½ (VP, 1993)
Breaking Free ♪♪½ (RAS, 1994)
Herbman Hustling ♪♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1994/1998)
Showdown, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪ (Channel One, 1995)
With Lots of Extra ♪♪½ (Channel One, 1995)
International ♪♪ (RAS, 1996)
Collector's Collection ♪♪½ (Heartbeat, 1996)

RAS Portraits ♪♪♪ (RAS, 1998)
Best of Sugar Minott ♪♪♪½ (VP, 1998)
Mr. Fix It ♪♪ (VP, 1998)
Ghetto Youth Dem Rising ♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1998) African Soldier ♪♪½ (Heartbeat, 1998)

influences:
⏮ African Brothers, Lee "Scratch" Perry, Sir Coxsone Dodd, Bob Marley, Burning Spear, Toots Hibbert, King Tubby ⏭ Beenie Man, Yellow Man, Augustus Pablo, Mikey Dread, Buju Banton, Cocoa Tea, Apache Indian

see also: Mikey Dread, Jackie Mittoo, the Roots Radics, Sister Carol, Sly & Robbie, Super Cat

Andrew BeDell

Robert Mirabal /Mirabal

Native American, rock, flute

Robert Mirabal born in Taos Pueblo, NM, USA; Mirabal formed 1995, in Taos Pueblo, NM, USA. Based in Taos Pueblo, NM, USA.

Robert Mirabal, vocals, flutes, didgeridoo, keyboards, percussion, harmonica; Reynaldo Lijuan, Native drums and percussion, vocals; Mark Andes, electric and acoustic guitar, bass, percussion, backing vocals (album only); Kenny Arnoo, drums, percussion, loops (album only); Andy York, electric guitar (album only); Matt Andes, slide guitar (album only); Jeff Penderson, keyboards (album only); Michael Wanchic, backing vocals (album only); Eliza Gilkyson, backing vocals (album only); Sue Medley, backing vocals (album only); Bill Miller, backing vocals (album only); Pura Fe Crescioni (a.k.a. Pura Fé), backing vocals (album only); Soni Moreno, backing vocals (album only); Jennifer Kreisberg, backing vocals (album only). (All members are from USA.)

Robert Mirabal has been one of the leaders of the Native Flute renaissance, with a style that's more "traditional" and less commercial than many of his contemporaries. Mirabal came of age in a traditional family that was broken apart by government relocation policies, but he stayed in Taos to help care for his aging grandparents and went to the Indian school at the pueblo. "They had a band there and I learned clarinet, sax, piano, drums, anything I could get my hands on," Mirabal recalls. At 18 he got a flute from Adam Turjillo, a Pueblo flute-maker. "The flute changed my life. As soon as I began playing, people asked me to perform. Since that day I've spent most of my time traveling and playing music."

Mirabal went on to make traditional flute albums for several labels; compose "Land," a suite for the Japanese dancers Eiko and Koma; and have an exhibit of his own handmade flutes at the Smithsonian Institution's National Museum. His music has taken him all over Europe, North America, Russia, and Japan. These travels, and the exposure to the rhythms of other cultures they afforded him, had a profound effect on Mirabal's own musical vision. He studied West African drumming, Vodou rhythms from Haiti, and Celtic music, as well as immersing himself in rock, blues, and hip-hop. Those diverse influences came to a head in 1995, when Mirabal met Mark Andes, former bass player for the '60s rock band Spirit. Mirabal and Andes began jamming several times a week, and creative sparks flew. As the melodies came together, Mirabal adapted the poems and stories in his journal for the lyrics. "There was a traditional drummer I knew, Reynaldo Lujan, who has a wide knowledge of indigenous styles from all over the planet," Mirabal says. "We invited him in, and the songs really took shape."

When Mirabal played Warner Bros. (for which he'd done work before) the demo tapes he'd made with Andes and Lujan, they flipped and let him record his new band, playing in a style Mirabal jokingly calls "alter-Native." People familiar with Mirabal's mellow flute work will be surprised, if not shocked, by the sounds he wrenches from the instrument on Mirabal. He makes the flute scream with anger, cry with loneliness, shriek with pain. "I wanted to make an album that explores all of the things people experience; love, hate, fear, confusion, and especially the loneliness that seems to be so pervasive in modern society. And I wanted it to have a rock 'n' roll edge. I guess you could say the seed for Mirabal was planted when I was living in New York City. For a while I was in a multi-culti band. The keyboard player was from Haiti, the drummer was from Cape Verde, the guitarist from Senegal, and we were surrounded on all sides by hip-hop, funk, and R&B, which really educated me about the groove. With my newest band, what we do is try to create enough syncopation to let my language ride the groove, like a surfer riding the waves."

what to buy: Mirabal ♪♪♪♪♪ (Warner Western, 1997, prod. Michael Wanchic) breaks down every American pop and folk style of the last several decades—rock, funk, techno, hip-hop, blues, and singer/songwriter impulses, accented by touches from Aboriginal Australia, Africa, and Celtic music—and reassembles them from a distinctly Native American perspective. It's Robert Mirabal's masterpiece, and may be the best Native rock album ever recorded.

what to buy next: After this collision of many worlds, you can explore some of the others Mirabal has visited in the past. Two of the most hospitable are: Native Suite ♪♪♪ (Warner Western, 1996), a mix of classical, traditional Native, and pop impulses; and Land ♪♪♪ (Warner Western, 1993), a suite composed for Eiko and Koma (flute without the usual new-age trappings).

influences:
⏮ R. Carlos Nakai, Tom Ware, Woodrow Hainey, Doc Tate, Neil Young, Bob Dylan, Spirit

see also: Pura Fé, Bill Miller

j. poet

Carmen Miranda

Brazilian pop and musicals

Born Maria do Carmo Miranda Da Cunha, February 9, 1909, in Lisbon, Portugal. Died August 5, 1955.

With considerable stage, screen, and radio exposure in Brazil, Miranda was already a popular South American entertainment personality when she came to the States in 1939 to appear in the Broadway musical revue The Streets of Paris. A year later, she signed to 20th Century Fox as a contract player. Miranda's timing was nearly perfect—during World War II, American films were not often shown in Europe, and South America dominated the foreign market. As a singer or a dancer, Miranda overpowered any shortcomings in technique with a nearly boundless charisma, not to mention a tolerance for absurd get-ups. In the 1943 musical The Gang's All Here, she performed "The Lady in the Tutti Frutti Hat" while wearing said hat—her signature cranially mounted fruit bowl. After the war, Miranda moved out of movies onto the nightclub circuit, and appeared on television regularly. A bad marriage and an exhausting schedule sapped her energy, and a dependence on drugs to make up the difference forced a short retirement in Brazil in the early '50s. Miranda recovered, returned to the States, and continued as a popular performer until 1955, when she died of a heart attack only hours after an appearance on the Jimmy Durante Show. Four decades later, Miranda was the subject of an acclaimed 1994 documentary, Carmen Miranda: Bananas Is My Business.

what to buy: Anthology ♪♪♪½ (One Way Records, 1994) collects 20 of the Brazilian Bombshell's most famous performances, including "Bambu-Bambu," "Rebola A Bola," "Chattanooga Choo-Choo," "Chica Chica Boom Chic," and "O Passo Do Kanguru (Brazilly Willy)."

what to buy next: Harlequin Records has released a pair of CDs, The Brazilian Recordings ♪♪♪ (Harlequin, 1994) and Vol. 2: Carmen Miranda, 1930–1945 ♪♪♪ (Harlequin, 1994), which give a good overview of Miranda's entire recording career.

the rest:
South American Way ♪♪♪ (Jasmine, 1993)
Brazilian Bombshell—25 Hits ♪♪♪½ (ASV, 1998) worth searching for: Maracas, Marimbas, and Mambos: Latin Classics at MGM ♪♪♪♪ (WEA/Atlantic, 1997, prod. Will Friedwald, Bradley Flanagan) demonstrates the influence of Latin music on the movies during and just after World War II, with a collection of performances by Xavier Cugat and other bandleaders. Miranda is featured vocalist on three tracks: "Cuanto Le Gusta," "Caroom Pa Pa," and the immortal "Yipsee-I-O."

calypso

Calypso, the national music of Trinidad and Tobago, has grandparents in several folk and popular sources, and cousins in similar topical song-forms throughout the Caribbean. Its deepest roots are in Afro-Caribbean slave culture (the name "calypso" seems to point back to an interjection of approval and encouragement in the Hausa language), but its crucible was the barrack-yards of 19th-century Port of Spain, Trinidad, home of poor and working-class Carnival bands. There it bubbled and stewed for decades in relatively raw form until, under pressure from the image-conscious middle and upper classes, it got strained and refined into a more modern and urbane form just before 1900. Since then it's adopted more complex literary structures, absorbed cosmopolitan pop-music influences, and experimented, sometimes wildly, with melody, meter, rhyme, and phrasing. In all its stages of evolution, however, calypso has retained a primary emphasis on verbal ingenuity and virtuosity; calypsonians are equal parts poet, storyteller, and comedian; orator, satirist, and social commentator. The genre's commercial possibilities weren't widely explored until the mid-1930s, when the formal innovations and hard-hitting politics of that decade, as well as the old-fashioned grandiloquence of the era just past, were put on wax in great quantity. The calypsonians of this "Golden Age"—Executor, Atilla (sic), Lion, Tiger, Radio, Invader—are represented on CD by several excellent historical compilations. A younger generation, including Melody, the much beloved Kitchener, and calypso's only real international superstar, the Mighty Sparrow, rose to prominence between World War II and independence. Since the mid-'70s, calypso has been increasingly eclipsed by its livelier stepchild soca, much to the chagrin of high-minded purists. But their perennial predictions of calypso's imminent demise have not been borne out by events; Trinidad's annual National Calypso Monarchy competition continues to attract a broad following: though calypso is most closely identified with Trinidad, it is strong in Antigua, Grenada, and Barbados as well.

Michael Eldridge

520 marlui miranda

influences:

Edith Piaf, Al Jolson, Cole Porter

Patti LaBelle, Madonna

Ben Greenman

Marlui Miranda

Folk, MPB (Brazilian Popular Music)

Born in Brazil. Based in Saõ Paulo, Brazil.

"Brazilian Indian music is a cultural secret, nobody knows it." Marlui Miranda, a singer, musician, and ethnomusicologist, knows the culture she speaks of. Although she lives in Saõ Paulo, her family is descended from a Jesuit priest and his Indian wife, and she's been interested in the indigenous culture of the Amazon basin her whole life. In 1978, she began sorting through compendiums of Indian music and collecting songs on her own, with the idea of producing a series of albums that would introduce this "hidden music" to Brazil and the world. "Compared to Indians in the United States, the Amazon people live in the Stone Age," Miranda has said in many interviews. "They still have their own culture, but they're surrounded by settlers who want their land, so they've had to learn Portuguese, and are struggling to come to terms with the whites. In some areas, with the help of the government, they've been able to hold onto their land, but in other places they were virtually enslaved, until recently, to work the rubber plantations." Miranda's recordings are based on traditional Amazon Indian songs, although, as the artist herself points out, they are the result of "years of attempts, experiments, arrangements, presentations [and] powwowing, until I had a final draft."

what to buy: Miranda's experiments with traditional Indian music will grab your attention from the first track of Ihu: Todos os Sons ♪♪♪♪♪ (Blue Jackal, 1997, prod. Marlui Miranda). The percussion (quite different from Native North American powwow drumming), the vocal stylings of Groupo Beijo (a Brazilian Native women's ensemble), and the arranging of Gilberto Gil take the music in many exciting and unexpected directions. This disc has won several Album of the Year awards, and it's easy to hear why.

what to buy next: The follow-up, Ihú 2—Kewere: Rezar: Prayer ♪♪♪♪♪ (Blue Jackal, 1998, prod. Marlui Miranda), is a slight departure. This time Miranda combines the indigenous music with liturgical music as well as pop to create a mass celebrating the survival of the Amazon's original inhabitants. Once again the music is startling and compelling.

influences:

Gilberto Gil, Gal Costa, Maria Bethânia

see also: Gilberto Gil

j. poet

Jackie Mittoo

Reggae, rocksteady, ska, dub, dancehall

Born Donat Roy Mittoo, March 3, 1948, in Kingston, Jamaica. Died December 16, 1990, in Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Jackie "Soul" Mittoo was the fount from which much of Jamaica's culturally distinctive, post-independence music flowed, and the most commanding keyboardist the island has ever known. At age four the gifted Mittoo was already conversant on the piano, thanks to the tutelage of his grandmother, a music teacher. In elementary school he practiced and jammed in a chemistry lab with future reggae luminaries Augustus Pablo and Tyrone Downie, a trio that became known as the Jackie Mittree. At age 13, his music-focused after-school activities included nightclub gigs with bands such as the Vagabonds, the Vikings, and the Rivals. A year later, in 1962, Mittoo earned island-wide recognition as the bantam-sized leader and arranger of the Sheiks, a band that included future Skatalites Johnny "Dizzy" Moore (trumpet) and Lloyd Knibb (drums), as well as singer Dobby "The Loving Pauper" Dobson and the great Lynn Taitt (guitar). After a short hiatus, in August 1963 the Sheiks reemerged as the Cavaliers Orchestra with soon-to-be-Skatalite Lloyd Brevette added on double bass. Producer Clement "Coxsone" Dodd was so impressed with Mittoo's musical gifts that he hired him two months later as his session director for the grand opening of the famed Studio One at 13 Brentford Road. This prestigious position allowed Mittoo to rub elbows with many of Jamaica's finest musicians, including saxophonist Tommy McCook; together they assembled the all-star cast of the Skatalites. At age 16, Mittoo was the youngest member of what is now regarded as history's greatest ska band. He and trombonist Don Drummond quickly became the chief arrangers of the Skatalites' fiery music. Mittoo's pumping piano and groove-oozing organ were featured on some of the band's classic hits, including "Killer Diller" and "Hanging Tree." In 1965, the Skatalites imploded after the mentally ill Drummond stabbed his girlfriend to death during an acute psychotic episode. Mittoo and saxophonist Roland Alphonso broke off on their own under the direction of Dodd and formed the Soul Brothers, who scored immediately with "Dr. Ring A Ding" and "Miss Ska-culation." After a year, this group transmogrified into the unstoppable Studio One house band, the Soul Vendors. In 1966 and '67, as a part of Dodd's Rock Steady Revue, the group became the first to tour beyond the island in support of Jamaican music. Their ambassadorship concluded with the simmering On Tour and Jackie Mittoo in London LPs.

The self-effacing Mittoo is largely responsible for Studio One's classic rocksteady (proto-reggae) and reggae output from 1966 to 1971, when he was the outfit's chief composer, arranger, talent scout, and keyboardist. His instrumental hits and bone-rattling, earth-tilling rhythms with the Soul Vendors, Sound Dimension, Invaders, New Establishment, and Brentford All-Stars—"Death in the Arena," "Real Rock," "Full Up" (the template for the Mighty Diamonds' "Pass the Kouchie"), "Frozen Soul," "Hot Milk," "Darker Shade of Black" (the rhythm for Frankie Paul's "Pass the Tu-sheng-peng"), "Rockfort Rock," "Peenie Wallie," "Heavy Rock," "One Step Beyond," "Drum Song," and "In Cold Blood," among many others—defined the mid- to late-'60s Brentford Road sound, and provided the accompaniment to hits by the Wailers, the Cables, the Heptones, Burning Spear, and just about every other record emblazoned with the Studio One label. With the help of underrated drummer Bunny Williams, Mittoo constructed the ever-popular "one drop" rhythm for Alton Ellis's "I'm Just a Guy"—the "skanking" beat that ripened into ubiquity during the roots-reggae era. Mittoo also composed the oft-"versioned" (remade in dub) "Ram Jam" rhythm for the Heptones' massive hit "Fatty Fatty," and taught Leroy Sibbles, the group's lead vocalist, how to play bass. During Sibbles's apprenticeship, he and Mittoo gigged in Kingston nightclubs as a jazz trio whenever time permitted. Sibbles is now considered one of Jamaica's greatest bassists.

In the mid-'70s, Mittoo emigrated to Canada and modeled his own Stine-Jac label after Studio One. With producer Bunny "Striker" Lee, he issued a series of dub/instrumental records bolstered by the heavy-duty alloy of Mittoo disciples Sly Dunbar and Robbie Shakespeare as rhythm section. He contributed hot-blooded music and cool-headed sagacity to Sugar Minott's influential Youth Promotion posse—the sound system that created the first music dubbed "dancehall." In the '80s, he imparted his special groove to Labour of Love, UB40's homage to reggae's golden era. And toward the end of the decade, he toured with a reconstituted version of the Skatalites.

Mittoo's depth-charged rhythmic instrumentals provided the foundation for the Revolutionaries-led "rockers" era of roots reggae in the mid-'70s and the dancehall era of '79–'85. Even today, his rhythms are endlessly recycled in many of the digital ragga hits that currently dominate Jamaican music. Though he succumbed to cancer in 1990, Mittoo's is a vivid and vibrant memory kept alive by the power and inspiration of work that will resound in perpetuity. Befitting the man who composed "Death in the Arena," an ode to valor, Mittoo was eulogized as a hero of Jamaican music before a jam-packed National Arena in Kingston, where his funeral was transformed into a rousing celebration of his life.

what to buy: The double-disc Tribute to Jackie Mittoo ♪♪♪♪½ (Heartbeat, 1995, prod. various) is the most outstanding overview of his sometimes volcanic, always insinuating instrumentals, with the added bonus of Mittoo's collaboration with Alton Ellis on the mesmerizing "Black Man's Pride" and a few exceptional previously unreleased cuts—"Jackie's Mood," "Ska Matic," and "Fireball Rock," an inspirational instrumental version of the Gaylads' "There's a Fire." The focus, however, is on legendary hits like "Drum Song," "Ghetto Organ," "Race Track," and "Got My Boogaloo." Also included are funk jewels such as "Hot Tamale," a spicy fusion of New Orleans R&B, spy-flick soundtracks, and greasy Booker T.–influenced grooves; and the amazing "Mission Impossible" and "Freak Out"—both free-flowing conduits for the philosophy that life is intended to be enjoyed rather than endured. "Jericho Skank" is the glaring omission that lops off half a bone. Downbeat the Ruler: Killer Instrumentals, The Best of Studio One, Volume 3 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1988, prod. Coxsone Dodd) is technically not a Jackie Mittoo album, but substantively his magic handiwork is all over this collection, an essential document of the music that moved and grooved the crowds at sound-system (mobile deejay unit) dances throughout the '60s. It includes some of Mittoo's most potent work with Sound Dimension and the Brentford All-Stars (with ska-rhythm inventor Ernest Ranglin on guitar!), including the aforementioned "Rockfort Rock" (a.k.a. "Psychedelic Rock"); the original 10" mix and a surprisingly scorching 1987 remix of "Throw Me Corn"; "Real Rock"; "Heavy Rock"; and "Baby Face"—a cut so damned good the Law of Mittoo dictates you'll wanna hear it at least "(Mit)twice" in a row. "Race Track" and "Freak Out" are the only overlaps with the Tribute album. The compilation also includes Tommy McCook's extraordinary "Tunnel One" and Don Drummond's ska-thartic "sufferahs" anthem, "Man in the Street."

what to buy next: Evening Time ♪♪♪♪ (Studio One, 1968, prod. Coxsone Dodd) is all elegant, beautiful rocksteady masterpieces like "One Step Beyond" (the prototype of Freddie McGregor's "Bobby Bobylon"), "Drum Song" (versioned on Burning Spear's "Joe Frazier"), "Hot Milk," "Full Charge," and Mittoo's pulse-pounding homage to the '60s spy show Man from U.N.C.L.E., "Napolean Solo." It also includes a compelling cover of Booker T. & the MG's "Hip Hug Her," as well as "Dancing Groove"—the instrumental bed for Delroy Wilson's celebrated "Dancing Mood." Macca fat is a tasty Jamaican fruit that nonetheless can't even touch the flavor of Mittoo's Macka Fat ♪♪♪♪ (Studio One, 1970, prod. Coxsone Dodd). The title cut and "Good Feeling" bear the essence of freedom and both "Fancy Pants" (a cover of Marvin Gaye's "What's Going On") and "Ghetto Organ" are quintessential "dread" reggae instrumentals with grooves as deep as Atlantis.

the rest:
On Tour ♪♪♪½ (Studio One, 1966)
Jackie Mittoo in London ♪♪♪½ (Studio One, 1967)
Keep On Dancing ♪♪♪½ (Studio One, 1969)
Now ♪♪♪♪ (Studio One, 1969)
Reggae Magic ♪♪♪½ (Studio One, 1971)

Hot Blood ♪♪♪ (Third World, 1977)
The Myestro in Cold Blood ♪♪♪ (Third World, 1978)
Keyboard King ♪♪♪ (Weed Beat, 1978)
Show Case ♪♪♪ (Sonic Sounds, 1979)
The Original Jackie Mittoo ♪♪♪♪ (Third World, 1979)
Show Case, Volume 3 ♪♪♪ (Abraham, 1980)
Showcase ♪♪♪♪ (Studio One, 1982)
Wild Jockey ♪♪♪½ (Wackies, 1989)
Sly & Robbie Present: The Late Great Jackie Mittoo ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino U.K., 1998)
Keyboard King ♪♪♪½ (Sonic Sounds, 1998)
In Africa ♪♪♪½ (Quartz, 1999)

worth searching for: The tough-but-not-impossible-to-find 100% Dynamite ♪♪♪♪♪ (Soul Jazz, 1998, prod. various) fulfills the promise of its title. This is a terrific compilation of intensely soulful reggae music that includes three blazingly funk-aaay Mittoo performances with Sound Dimension and the Brentford All-Stars that are otherwise rare as hens' teeth. To come across "Stereo Freeze," "Granny Scratch Scratch," and "Greedy G" is to discover long-lost Mittreasures, but add the Upsetters' "Popcorn," the Maytals' "Night and Day," Tommy McCook's lush "Green Mango," and Willie Williams's "Armageddon Time" (which versions Mittoo's "Real Rock" in cool and deadly fashion), and, well, it's time to get your map and compass ready, Magellan.

influences:
- Jimmy Smith, Thelonious Monk, Booker T. & the MG's, Art Blakey, the Meters, Oscar Peterson

» The Revolutionaries, Leroy Sibbles, the Heptones, Augustus Pablo, the Cables, the Wailers, Soul Syndicate, Steely & Clevie (Wycliffe Johnson and Cleveland Brown), the Roots Radics, Third World, Foundation, John Holt, Judy Mowatt, Annette Brissette, Mikey General, Marcia Griffiths, Dennis Brown, UB40, Little Roy, Sugar Minott see also: Burning Spear, Alton Ellis, Freddie McGregor, Sugar Minott, Lee "Scratch" Perry, Ernest Ranglin, the Skatalites, Sly & Robbie, the Techniques, Toots & the Maytalls

Todd Shanker

Mlimani Park Orchestra

East African big-band dance music

Formed 1978, in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania. Based in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania.

Large, mostly undocumented membership; founding members include: Cosmas Tobias, lead vocals; Hassani Bitchuka, lead vocals; Michael Enoch, lead guitar, alto saxophone.

Tanzania's big-band tradition dates back to the 1960s when large dance outfits, complete with guitar sections, horn sections, and a front line of harmonizing singers, were the norm in the more cosmopolitan African cities. Unfortunately, poor economic conditions and an abundance of state control have more recently prevented the tradition from developing. Mlimani Park represents the cream of the remaining Tanzanian crop, a gorgeous, swinging ensemble specializing in tightly interacting horns and guitars; long, generous arrangements; and sensuous vocals. At its prime in the late '80s, the band had 26 members.

Mlimani Park started out as the house band at the Mlimani Club in Dar es Salaam. Star singers Hassani Bitchuka and Cosmas Tobias had two very different styles, the former aggressively passionate and the latter controlled and sweet. That contrast and the band's astounding instrumental chemistry helped to make it one of the strongest forces in Tanzanian pop, perhaps rivaled only by the older Juwata Jazz—in which many Mlimani players began their careers.

The band calls its music mtindo, an informal synonym for dancing. While the sound clearly owes something to the rumba-based style that flowed out of the Congolese capitol Kinshasa beginning in the 1950s, there is a distinct Tanzanian character. It has to do with the melodies, the comparatively gentle grooves, and the democratic interaction between the instruments. In all, it is a majestic and seductive sound that, sadly, is disappearing from Africa.

what to buy: Sikinde ♪♪♪♪ (Africassette, 1994, prod. Radio Tanzania) offers a generous sampling of tracks from the band's golden years.

the rest:
Tanzanian Dance Bands, Volumes 1 and 2 ♪♪♪♪½ (Line Records, 1991)

influences:
- Franco, Juwata Jazz

Banning Eyre

Tony Mola

International dance music

Born in Salvador, Brazil. Based in Salvador, Brazil.

Percussionist Tony Mola grew up in Salvador in the Bahia region of Brazil. Moving to New York in 1990, he quickly developed an audience for his percussion-heavy dance music, which also absorbed such non-Brazilian influences as rap, hip-hop, Cuban, and Jamaican flavors. Returning to Brazil, Mola founded Bragadá, a large rotating ensemble that features piano and accordion in addition to percussion and vocals. The group's first performance was a triumphant appearance at the Bahian music festival Lavagem do Bomfim.

what to buy: Quebra-Mola ♪♪♪♪ (Blue Jackal, 1998), Mola's second CD with Bragadá, solidifies his distinctive blend of the urban and tribal, with powerful, sweaty dance music driven by Mola's athletic drumming. Augmented by talented Brazilian guests like saxophonist Leo Gandelman and bassist Arthur Maia, the disc's grooves leap from the CD player. Memorable tracks include the raucous opener "Braga Boy" and "Barabai," which blends a slinky dance groove with the group's always-frenetic wall of percussion.

what to buy next: Mola's first album, Bragadá ♪♪♪ (Blue Jackal, 1996), is a strong effort that bursts with energy. The driving blend of smooth vocals, accordion, and drums on "Tribal" is irresistible, as is the Cuban-Bahian fusion of "Abracadabra."

influences:

◀◀ Olodum, Reflexú

▶▶ Daniela Mercury

Michael Parrish

Matt Molloy

Irish traditional

Born January 12, 1947, in Ballaghadreen, County Sligo, Ireland. Based in Westport, County Mayo, Ireland.

Both as a solo artist and a member of the Bothy Band, Planxty, and currently the Chieftains, Matt Molloy has been at the center of Irish traditional music for over 25 years. His instantly recognizable sound, a combination of power and elegance wedded to incredible control of his instrument, has graced many of the most influential recordings in traditional Irish music. Molloy grew up in County Roscommon, an area noted for producing outstanding flute players. He learned his craft from his father, progressing rapidly until he won the senior All-Ireland title at age 17. After a stint with the Siamsa Ceili Band, and a few years as a jet mechanic for Aer Lingus, Molloy helped to found the legendary Bothy Band. Made up of some of Ireland's finest (and wildest) young musicians, the Bothy Band brought a no-holds-barred, rock 'n' roll sensibility to their music both on and off the stage, producing some of the most ferociously beautiful Irish music ever recorded. The lifestyle that went with it came to a halt for Molloy when he contracted tuberculosis in 1977. After a stint in the hospital and the demise of the Bothy Band, he was invited to join a new version of Planxty. He stayed with that band for one album, After the Break, and then joined the Chieftains, replacing veteran flute player Michael Tubridy. Molloy continues to tour and record with the Chieftains, while occasionally cutting solo albums and operating his pub in Westport, County Mayo.

what to buy: Matt Molloy ♪♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1976, prod. Matt Molloy, Dónal Lunny, Mícheál Ó Domhnaill) is one of the greatest Irish recordings ever made. Cut before his bout with tuberculosis, the album shows a young, driven master at the height of his power. From the first notes of the old favorite "The Boys of the Lough," Molloy demonstrates just how much music can be pulled out of a flute. Highlights include an absolutely killer version of "The Bucks of Oranmore" and the haunting "Lament for Staker Wallace." Molloy's fervid, uninhibited playing is backed by the awesome guitar and bouzouki of Dónal Lunny, his fellow Bothy Band alum and one of the finest accompanists in Irish music.

what to buy next: Stony Steps ♪♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1987, prod. Dónal Lunny), along with Matt Molloy, is required listening for anyone wanting to hear or play Irish flute music. While the latter is a solo tour-de-force, this album finds Matt sharing the stage with his impressive friends Kevin Burke, Sean Keane, and James Kelly, among others. He lets things stretch out a little further, and explores some more progressive accompaniment under the watchful eye of producer Lunny. Contentment Is Wealth ♪♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1985, prod. Brian Masterson) finds Molloy and fellow Chieftain Sean Keane showing off their tasty duet playing. This is a sparse, old-sounding album, with solid, discreet accompaniment by guitarist Arty McGlynn.

what to avoid: Although Molloy's name is in the title of Music at Matt Molloy's ♪♪½ (RealWorld, 1992, prod. Martin Murray, Matt Molloy, Arty McGlynn), he appears on only seven of its 20 tracks. On the rest of the material the performers range from the legendary (Peter Horan, Paul McGrattan) to the competent. A better document of a live Irish session is the import album Maiden Voyage, recorded in Clare during the early '90s and released by Celtic Music in England.

the rest:

Matt Molloy, Paul Brady, Tommy Peoples ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1977)
Heathery Breeze ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1982)
Matt Molloy, Sean Keane, Liam O'Flynn ♪♪♪ (Claddagh Records, Ireland, 1992) Shadows on Stone ♪♪½ (RealWorld, 1996)

influences:

◀◀ Fred Finn & Peter Horan, Michael Coleman, James Morrison

▶▶ Kevin Crawford, Paul McGrattan, Chris Norman

see also: The Bothy Band, Kevin Burke, the Chieftains, James Keane, Dónal Lunny, Liam O'Flynn, Planxty

Tony Ziselberger

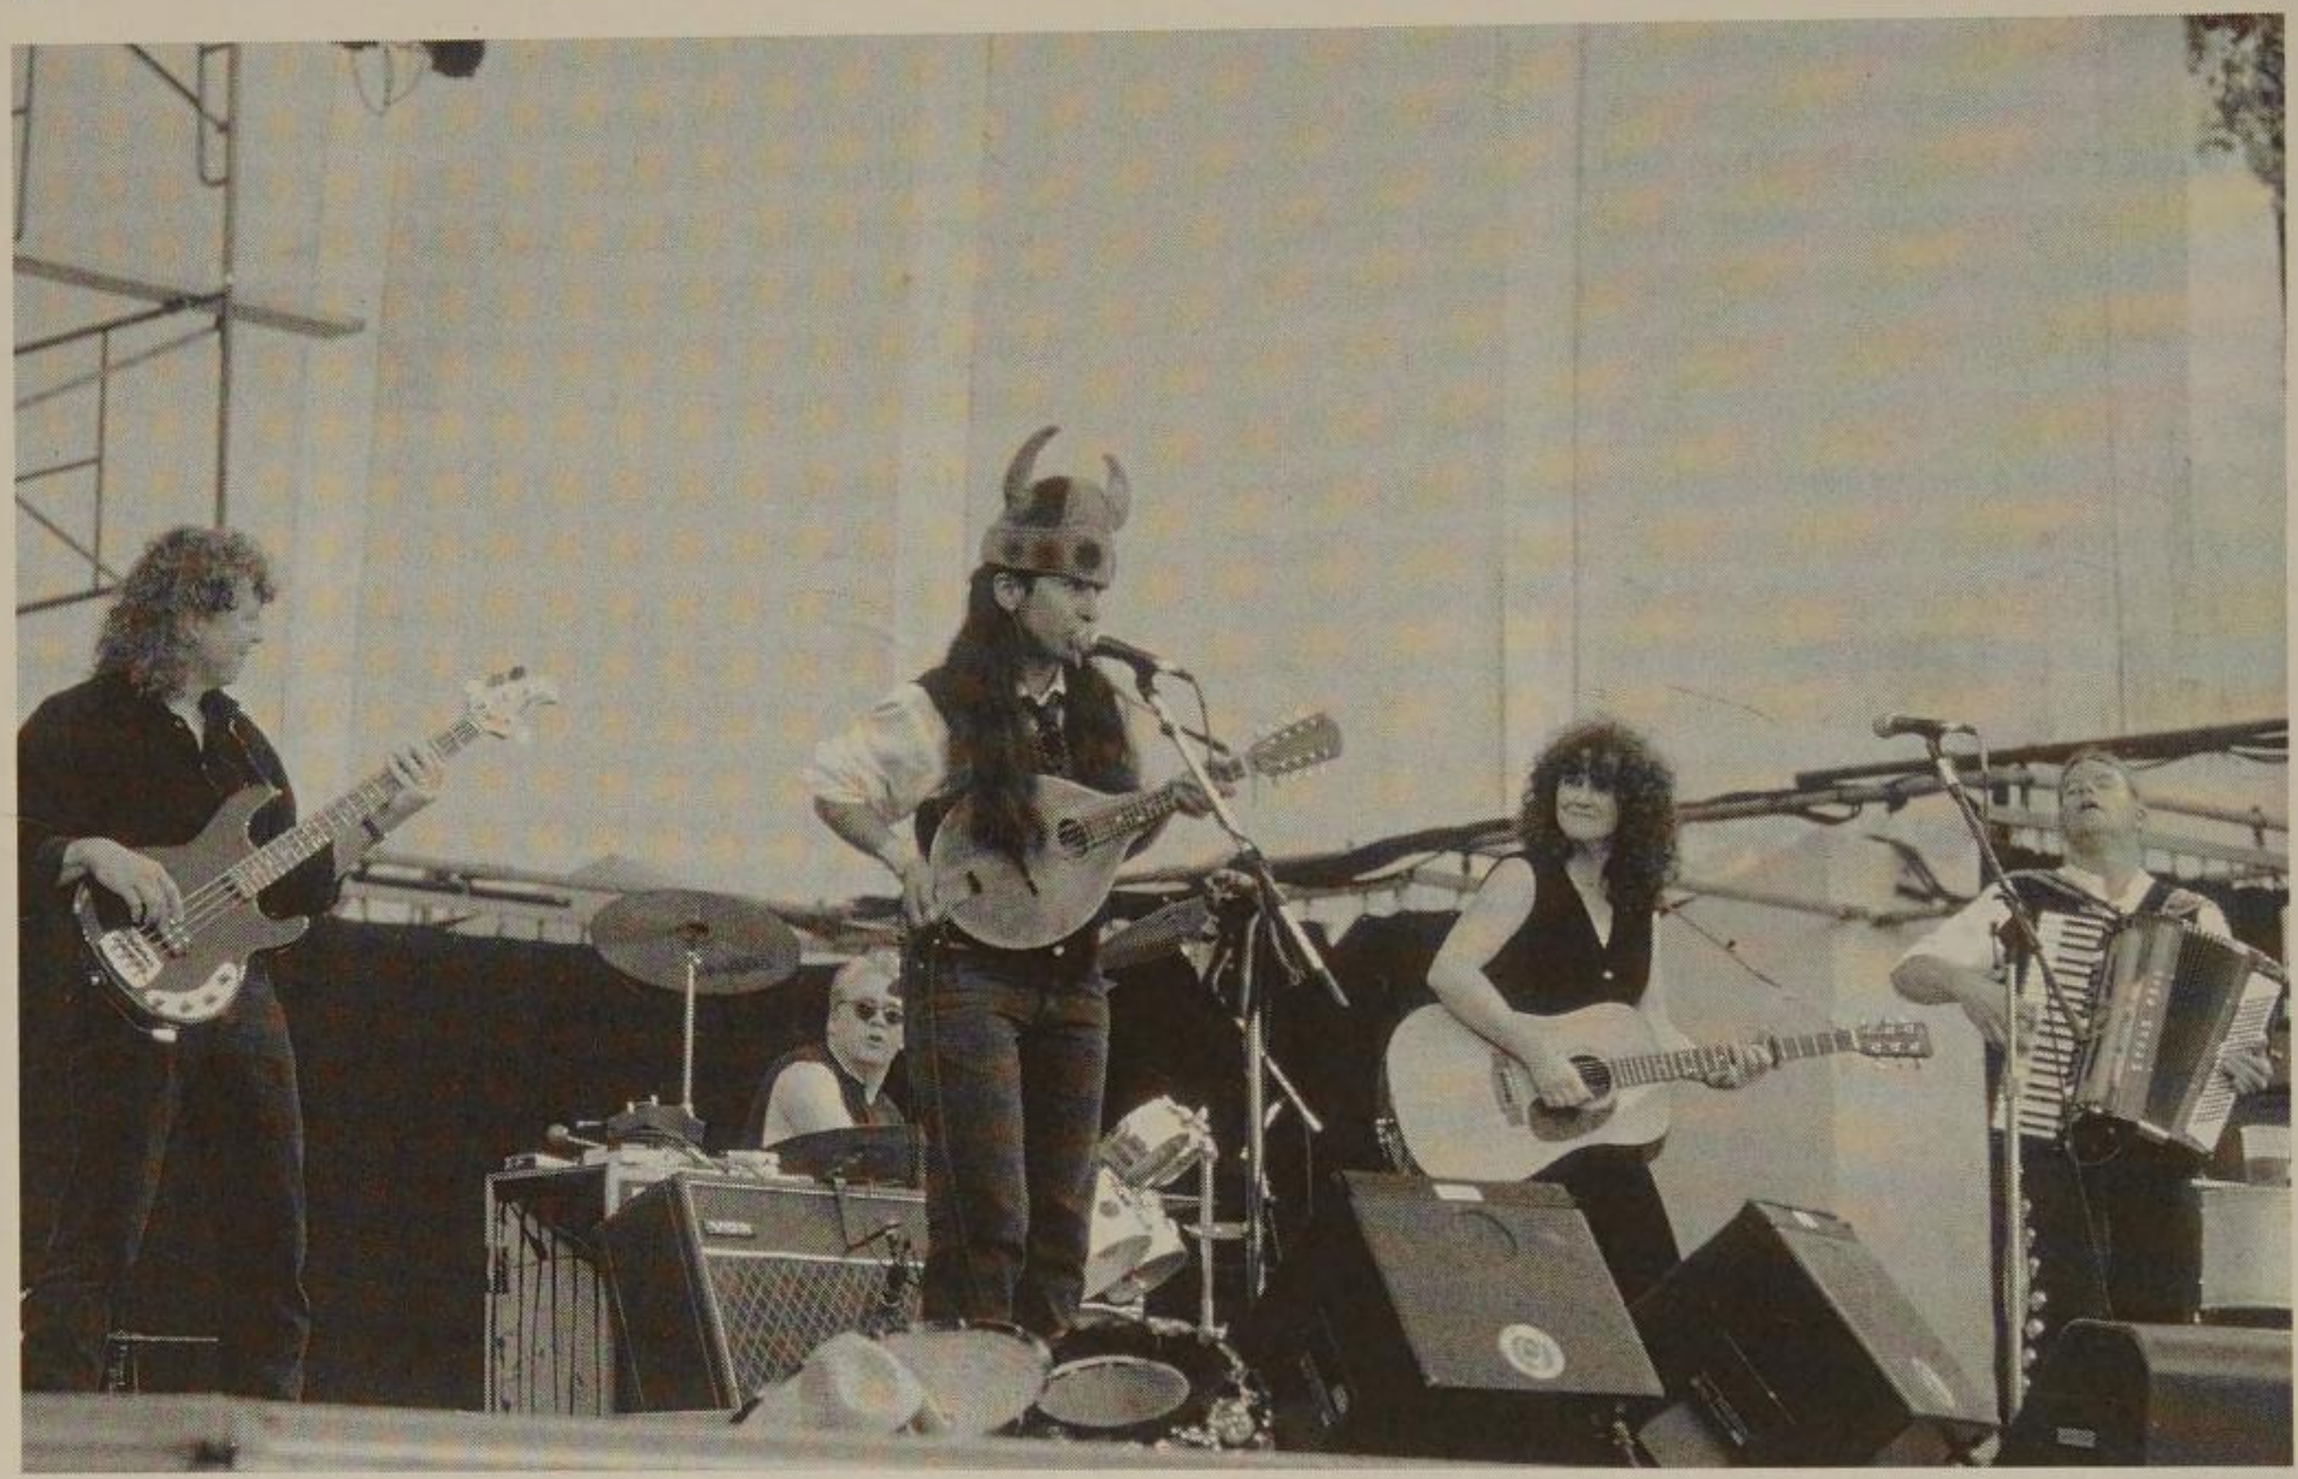
The Mollys

Celtic conjunto

Formed 1990, in Tucson, AZ, USA. Based in USA.

Catherine Zavala, vocals, mandolin, bodhrán, guitar; Nancy McCallion, vocals, guitar, pennywhistle, harmonica, melodion; Kevin Schramm, accordion, guitar, banjo, bouzouki, vocals (1993–present); Gary Mackender, drums, percussion, vocals (1994–present); Dan

5 2 4 the mollys



The Mollys

Sorenson, bass, guitar (1992–present); Linda Winkleman, flute (1990–91); Nathan Sady, accordion (1991–93); Michael Faulkner, drums (1991–94).

The Mollys are an unlikely fusion of Celtic and conjunto (Tex-Mex) music from the unlikely town of Tucson, Arizona, where they release their albums on their own label, Apolkalips Now. Implausibility notwithstanding, the band boasts a terrific Irish American songwriter in Nancy McCallion, a great Mexican American singer in Catherine Zavala, a relentless punk 'n' soul rhythm section, and a wild accordionist in Kevin Schramm, who holds the divergent strains together. The result resembles Wynonna Judd singing the Lucinda Williams songbook backed by the Pogues and Los Lobos. McCallion and Zavala met in high school, led Tucson new-wave band Nadine & the Mo-Phonics after graduation, and casually formed the Mollys as a folk trio for a St. Patrick's Day gig. The success of said Pogues and Los Lobos, however, convinced them they could whip up their rootsy traditions into boisterous, bawdy rock 'n' roll, and they became one of the most impressive folk-rock bands of the mid-'90s.

what to buy: This Is My Round ♪♪♪♪½ (Apolkalips Now, 1995, prod. Nancy McCallion, Catherine Zavala) served notice that the Mollys were a major new band. Irish folk stars Mick Moloney and Eugene O'Donnell are on hand, but the best songs share the raucous, non-conformist spirit of their protagonists: a Donegal lad in London who does not suffer anti-Irish prejudice quietly, an abused wife who takes imaginative revenge on her husband, and another woman who refuses to apologize for marrying a wealthy older man. Even better is Hat Trick ♪♪♪♪♪ (Apolkalips Now, 1997, prod. Mollys), which proved that McCallion had blossomed into a major-league songwriter on the order of Gillian Welch or Iris DeMent. She takes much more of a wise-cracking, off-color approach to the world than those two peers, but her songs are no less substantial for it. Just as Welch and DeMent use hillbilly music for their personal stories, so does McCallion use Celtic and Tejano (modern Tex-Mex) music for her distinctive take on love and work.

the rest:

Moon over the Interstate ♪♪♪♪½ (Apolkalips Now, 1999)

worth searching for: The Mollys' out-of-print first CD, Tidings of Comfort and Joy ♪♪♪ (Apolkalips Now, 1992, prod. Nancy McCallion, Catherine Zavala), features an earlier lineup and tilts the folk-rock equation more to the traditional folk side. Welt the Floor! ♪♪♪♪ (Apolkalips Now, 1995, prod. Kevin Schramm) and Wankin' Out West ♪♪♪♪½ (Apolkalips Now, 1997, prod. Mollys) are live albums sold only at the band's gigs. They both capture the irrepressible spirit of the Mollys in action, but the latter especially illustrates how fast and how far they've grown.

influences:

- The Pogues, Los Lobos, Mick Moloney, Christy Moore, Steve Jordan
- Gillian Welch, Iris DeMent

see also: Mick Moloney, Simon Thoumire

Geoffrey Himes

Mick Moloney

Irish traditional and contemporary

Born November 15, 1944, in Limerick, Ireland. Based in USA.

A Limerick-born singer and player of the guitar, mandolin, and banjo, Mick Moloney got his start doing skiffle songs at about age 14. It wasn't until his exposure to Irish music as a college student in the early '60s, however, that he became a serious musician. After starting on the guitar, he picked up a tenor banjo and seemed to automatically know where his fingers should go. He quickly began attending music sessions in County Clare, an important locus where traditional players from all over Ireland congregated. He devoted a couple of years of his life to fanatical playing and practicing, and tried to incorporate what he learned from each model into his own technique. The end result was a unique style that, years later, would earn him multiple victories as best tenor banjoist in Frets magazine's prestigious readers' poll.

During the early '60s, Moloney became a part of the Dublin folk-music scene as a student at University College, Dublin. By 1964, records by the Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem were forever changing Irish music, and bands of singers with guitars—called "ballad groups"—were becoming the norm. Moloney, who now also played the mandolin, fell in with another student named Dónal Lunny, who would later be a member of both Planxty and the Bothy Band. Armed with mandolins and banjos for playing lead, guitars for accompaniment, and Mick's store of instrumentals and songs, Moloney and Lunny, along with Brian Bolger, formed the Emmet Folk Group. Taking a cue from the Dubliners, they tried to incorporate both ballad group–style singing and traditional playing into their music. Although the band was neither long-lived nor commercially successful, Moloney was soon able to put his talents to work again. In 1966 he was asked to join a family group from County Meath called the Johnstons. Another future member of Planxty, Paul Brady, joined up with him, and the two applied some of Moloney's ideas from the Emmet Folk Group in their new setting. The Johnstons became one of the most popular groups in Irish music during the 1960s and early '70s, and Moloney was able to tour the world. During a 1971 tour of the United States he met Kenneth S. Goldstein, then-chairman of the department of folklore and folklife at the University of Pennsylvania. With Goldstein's encouragement, Moloney decided to come to the U.S. to get a doctorate in folklore. When he arrived in America, Moloney began to realize what a vast and relatively untapped storehouse of Irish musicians the country was. He took on the role of organizer, putting together festivals and concerts where Irish musicians from different cities could meet and play together. He formed a lasting musical partnership with fiddler Eugene O'Donnell, trained younger players like Seamus Egan, and organized bands including the Green Fields of America; Moloney, O'Connell & Keane; and Cherish the Ladies.

Moloney finally earned his Ph.D. in 1992, 20 years after he moved to the States. He continues to play, both as a solo act and in various groups. He has also become a popular tour guide, organizing and hosting several tours of Ireland every summer that are specifically geared toward traditional music and folklore.

what to buy: Moloney and O'Donnell's Uncommon Bonds ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1986, prod. Mick Moloney) may be the best introduction to this artist. Moloney's interest in Irish traditional songs is represented by the moving numbers "Bay of Biscay" and "Bonny Blue-Eyed Nancy." His fascination with the representation of Irishness on the Vaudeville stage compelled him to include such quirky and wonderful songs as "Muldoon the Solid Man" and "Miss Fogarty's Christmas Cake." His love of contemporary material in the Irish tradition is demonstrated by his inclusion of songs by Robbie O'Connell, Tommy Sands, and Seamus MacMathuna. Moloney's mandolin and banjo are perfectly complemented by O'Donnell's sensitive fiddle playing, and the two play their hearts out on several sets of rousing tunes. Also of interest to folk fans is the long list of guest artists on this CD, which includes Norman and Nancy Blake, the Clancy Brothers, and Saul Broudy, as well as some of the top names in Irish instrumental music.

what to buy next: Mick Moloney with Eugene O'Donnell ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1978, prod. Mick Moloney) is still one of Moloney's greatest pieces of work. It includes some of Moloney's most appealing songs, including "The Limerick Rake," "The Irish Maid," and "The Bantry Girl's Lament," but it is more focused on instrumentals; numerous sets of jigs and reels show off Moloney's prowess to the fullest. Moloney, O'Connell & Keane's

There Were Roses ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1985, prod. Mick Moloney) teams Moloney with guitarist and singer Robbie O'Connell (also of the Clancy Brothers & Robbie O'Connell) and piano accordion player Jimmy Keane. Fiddler Liz Carroll guests on many tracks as well. The title track, one of Tommy Sands's most moving ballads about the Northern Irish troubles, is a classic, and the rest of the album contains a lot of fine instrumentals and songs. The same band's follow-up, Kilkelly ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1988, prod. Mick Moloney), contains a few absolutely indispensable tracks, particularly the title song, which is the definitive version of the most popular recently penned emigration ballad. "Peter Pan and Me," a song about the Northern Irish troubles, is equally affecting. The album's drawback is that half of it is taken up with a single 20-minute medley about the Irish in America that combines serious and silly material. It might have seemed like a good idea at the time, but it doesn't produce a very listenable result. Another quite noteworthy album is Live in Concert ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1989, prod. Mick Moloney) by Moloney's all-star Irish American band the Green Fields of America, featuring Moloney, O'Connell & Keane, Seamus Egan, Eileen Ivers, and Donny and Eileen Golden. This contains an alternate version of "Kilkelly" and many more stirring instrumentals and lovely songs. Particularly moving is the tribute to Ed Reavy, one of the greatest composers of Irish traditional tunes.

the rest:

(With Eugene O'Donnell and Seamus Egan) Strings Attached ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1980)

(With Eugene O'Donnell and Seamus Egan) Three Way Street ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1992)

(With Eugene O'Donnell and Seamus Egan) Out of Ireland Original Soundtrack ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1995)

influences:

◀◀ The Clancy Brothers & Tommy Makem, the Dubliners, the Flanagan Brothers, Tulla Ceili Band, Willie Clancy, the Johnstons

▶▶ Planxty, Dónal Lunny, Cherish the Ladies

see also: Liz Carroll, Cherish the Ladies, the Clancy Brothers & Tommy Makem, Eileen Ivers, James Keane, Dónal Lunny, the Mollys, Solas

Steve Winick

Monks of the Dip Tse Chok Ling Monastery

Tibetan Buddhist prayer chants and songs

Formed in Tibet. Based in Dharamsala, India.

Members unidentified.

The original Dip Tse Chok Ling Monastery was built in the 18th century in Tibet, a few kilometers south of Lhasa and the Potala Palace (residence of His Holiness the Dalai Lama). In 1959, when Tibet was "liberated" by the Chinese army, Dip Tse Chok Ling and over 6,000 other sacred sites were destroyed. A monastery-in-exile was set up in Dharamsala, India. Decades later, in 1992, work commenced on the rebuilding of the original structure. Local volunteers, including the remaining monks, made a request for assistance from the monastery-in-exile, and in September 1992 the site was 25 percent complete and was reopened. Funds are being raised for its full completion, as there has been no assistance from the local Chinese government.

what to buy: Sacred Ceremonies—Ritual Music of Tibetan Buddhism ♪♪♪♪½ (Fortuna Records/Celestial Harmonies, 1990, prod. Ven. Thupten Nyandak, David Parsons, Kay Parsons) is a straight-up field recording of various notable chants of offering ("The Offerings for General Protectors"), prayer ("Prayer of Kala Rupa"), and praise ("Praises for Guyashamaya"). The monks have the uncanny ability to produce a three-toned chord in their larynxes, and are known for being able to sing at an extremely low pitch—lower than what is normally created by the human voice. A variety of drums, Tibetan oboes, and a pair of dung chen (those 12-foot-long horns) accompany the chants. This is approximately an hour's-worth of devotions, recorded during a religious rite.

what to buy next: Sacred Ceremonies 2—Tantric Hymns and Music of Tibetan Buddhism ♪♪♪♪ (Fortuna Records/Celestial Harmonies, 1992, prod. Ven. Thupten Nyandak, David Parsons, Kay Parsons) continues the series with hymns and songs of enlightenment. There is wider range of instrumentation this time, including bells and cymbals. Many of the titles explain a lot: "Sounds of the Conch Shell for Remembering Death," "Invocation of Deities through Ritual Instruments," "Hymns & Music for Inviting Deities & Dharma Protectors," "Emanations of Buddha," and "Dissolving the Visualization of the Field of Merit" are a few of the more fascinating examples. Sacred Ceremonies Volume 3 ♪♪♪♪ (Fortuna Records/Celestial Harmonies, 1996, prod. Ven. Thupten Nyandak, David Parsons, Kay Parsons) includes yet more songs (e.g. "Dham-Chen Choegyal Kala-Rupa") and prayers (e.g. "Neten Chudurk 16 Arahat Prayers") from Dip Tse Chok Ling's busily reverent activities. As with its predecessors, this recording captures quite a bit of the spirit and intensity generated (or is it channeled?) by the monks.

worth searching for: If you prefer a single set, Sacred Ceremonies' three volumes are packaged as one on a German import by the same title from Fortuna Records. The monks also appear on the soundtrack Baraka (Milan Entertainment, 1992).

Machel Montano

influences:

- Centuries of Tibetan tradition
- David Parsons

Stacy Meyn

Machel Montano

Soca

Born 1975, in Trinidad. Based in Trinidad.

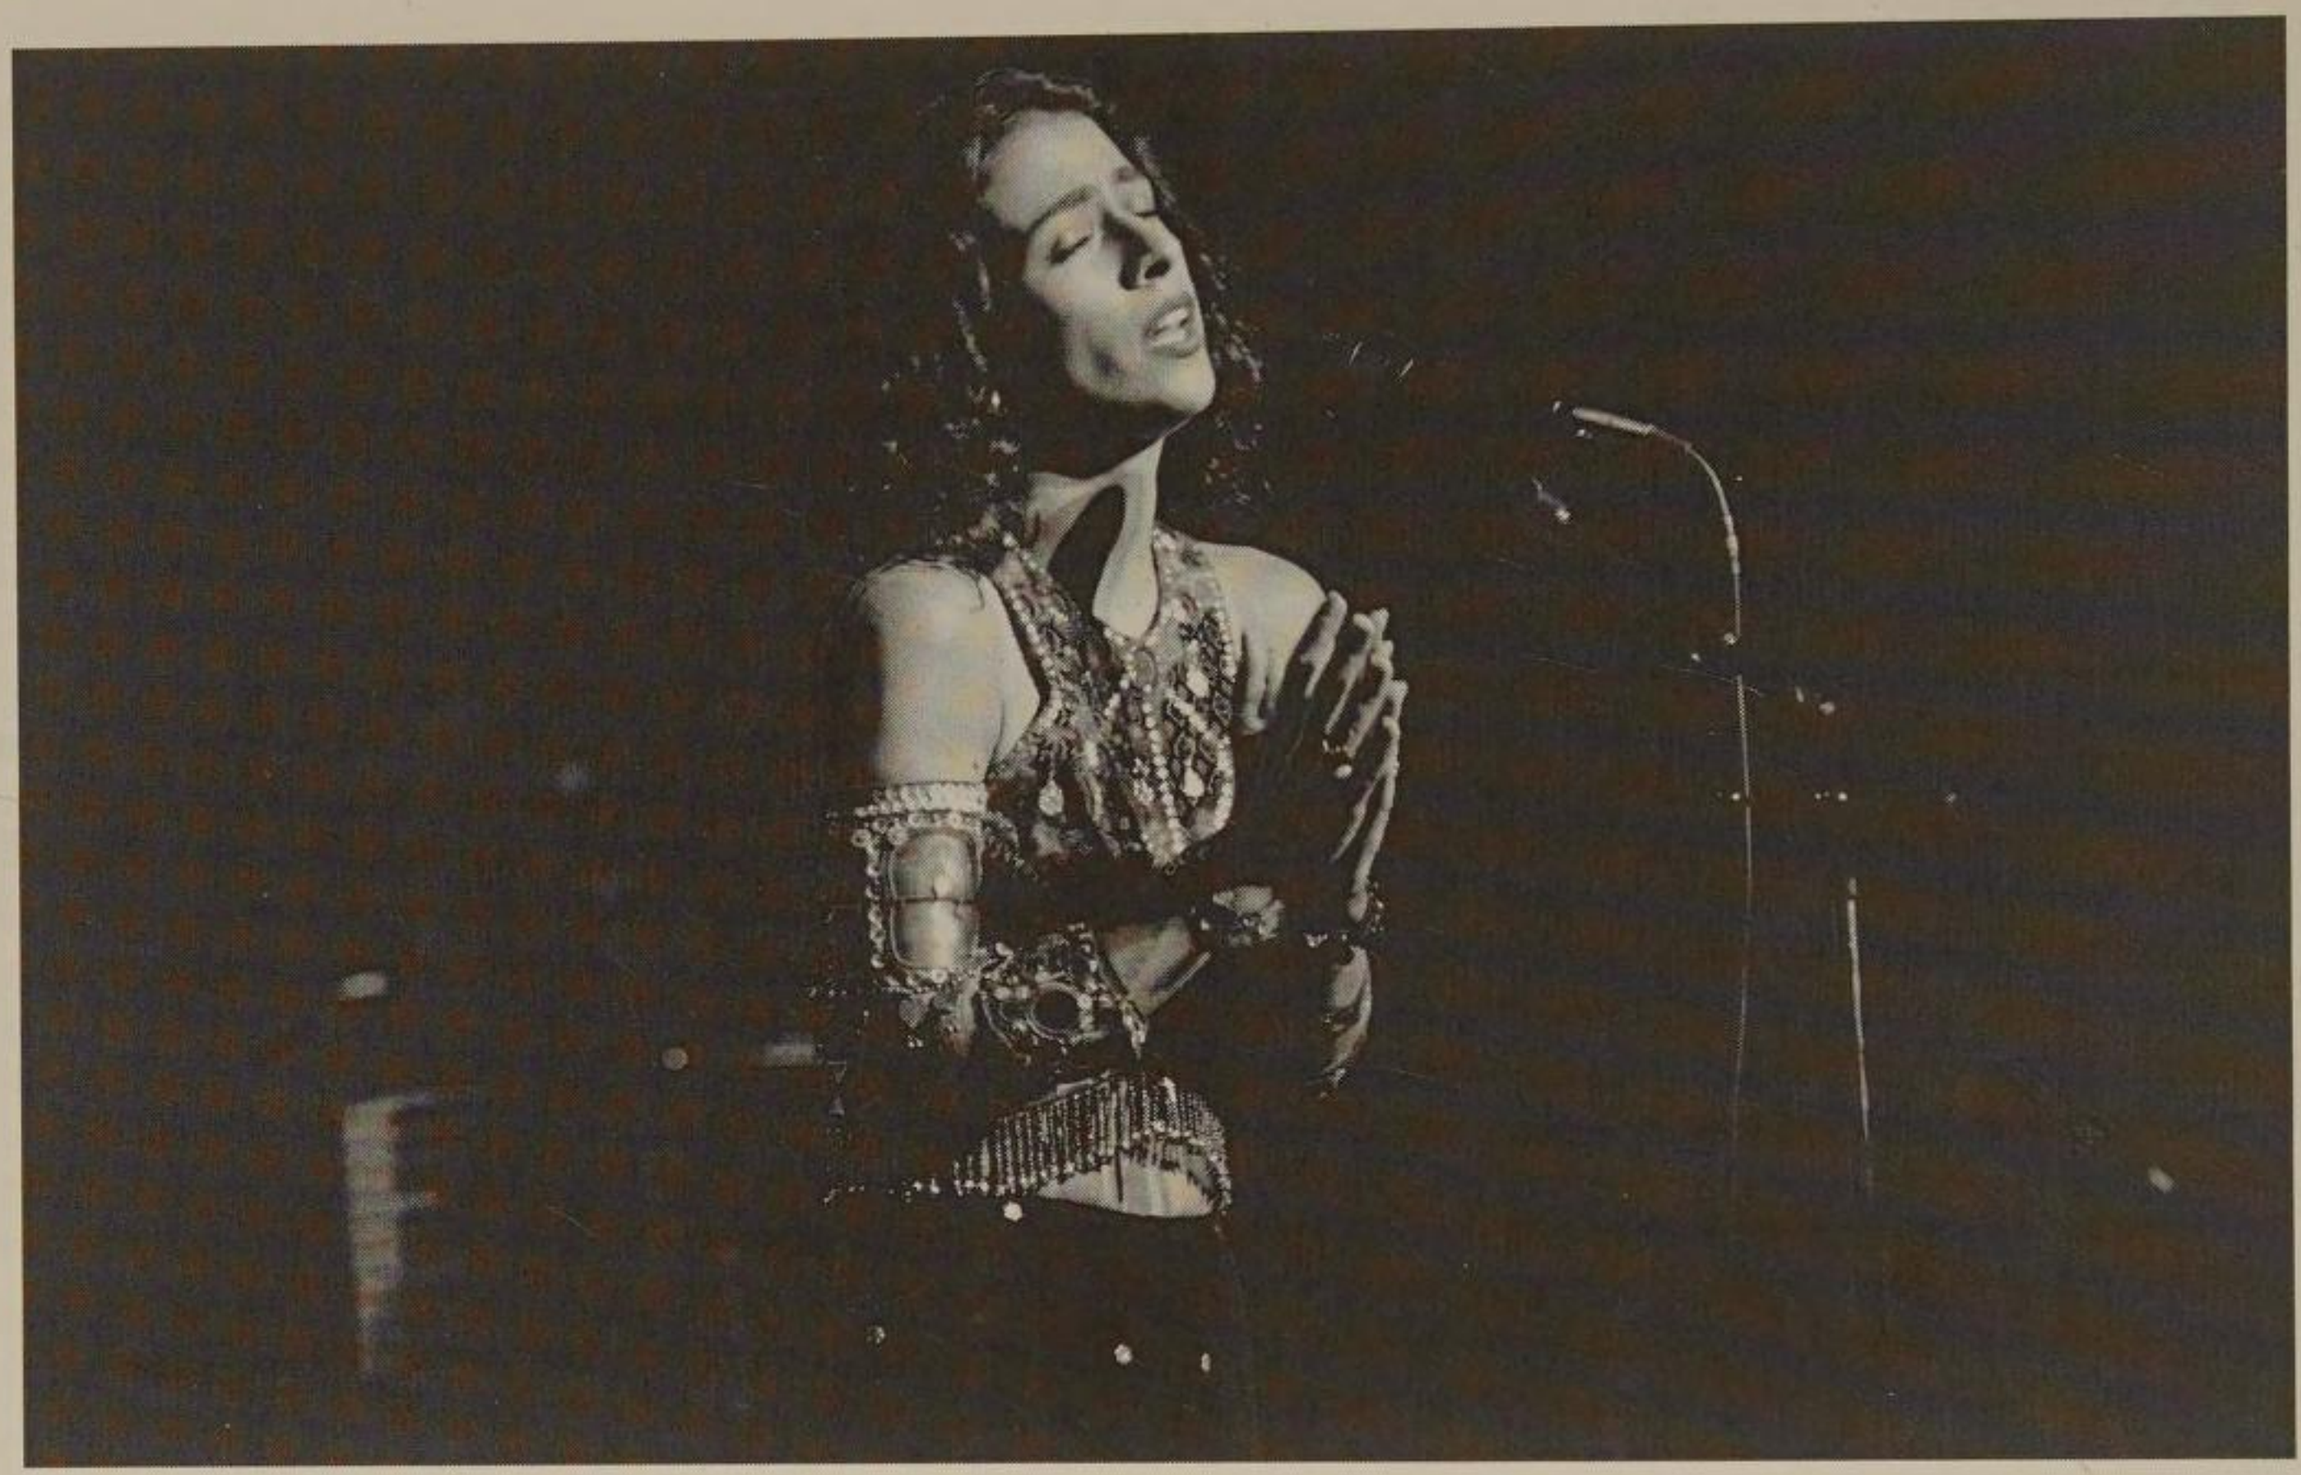
Montano broke all calypso records when he appeared on stage in a giant diaper to sing "Too Young to Soca" in 1986. He was only 11 years old, but his youthful tenor had the fire of a great calypsonian. Becoming a child star is a hard act to follow, but Montano set another record in 1997 when "Big Truck" won him the Road March crown. At 23, he became the youngest Road March King in the history of Trini's Carnival. Machel began singing because his older brother, Marcus, was too shy to perform his own songs. After his 1986 debut, Machel formed a band with other kids his age, but relied on adults like Leston Paul and Winsford Devine for songs, arrangements, and backing musicians when he made his yearly album for Carnival. Since the dawn of the 1990s, though, Machel and his band Xtatik have been controlling their own fate. Today Machel owns his own recording studio and record label, and when the band isn't touring he's in the studio working on remixes of his hits or producing other up-and-coming stars.

what to buy: The hard-hitting party album Heavy Duty ♪♪♪♪♪ (Xtatik, 1997, prod. Machel Montano) contains the Road March hit "Big Truck" as well as "Winnerboy," "Music Farm," and "Pretty Gyal."

what to buy next: The four-song mini-album Too Young to Soca ♪♪♪♪ (Macho Music, 1985, prod. Elizabeth Montano, Winston Montano) introduced Montano to the world, and contains the ultra-catchy title tune that may haunt him for the rest of his adult life.

the rest:

Dr. Carnival ♪♪♪ (Macho, 1988)
Charge ♪♪♪♪ (Xtatik, 1998)



Marisa Monte

influences: Sparrow, Arrow, Super Blue

j. poet

Marisa Monte

MPB (Brazilian Popular Music)

Born July 1, 1967, in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. Based in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

Marisa Monte has a voice like Marilyn Monroe had curves—with equal parts sweetness and seduction. As the singer tells it, her career began when she was a young girl in Rio and her family and neighbors would plead, "Marisa, sing for us." Since then, Monte has achieved both popular and critical acclaim for the sweet and sophisticated pop around which she wraps her exquisite voice. Monte's father was an important figure within the Portela samba school, but as a teenager she decided to pursue operatic training in Italy. Advised to try her hand at her own country's music, she began playing small clubs in Brazil; her performances gained so much notice that her first disc was a live one. Her eponymous debut displayed Monte's eclectic tastes with a song from Porgy and Bess as well as a reggae version of "I Heard It through the Grapevine." On Mais, her second album, Monte teamed with producer Arto Lindsay for a sound that borrowed from Brazilian traditions as well as downtown New York's edgy pop. Her third album, Rose and Charcoal, was more an exploration of "straight" Brazilian idioms. The album's flawless production and subtle inventiveness mark it as a masterpiece and Monte's high water mark so far. Produced again by Arto Lindsay, the album began Monte's fertile partnership with another brilliant star of Brazil, Carlinhos Brown. While Rose and Charcoal is her most Brazilian album, its vision is broad enough that it encompasses a cover of Lou Reed's "Pale Blue Eyes" and Monte's first straight-ahead samba, "Esta Melodia." Monte's fourth album, A Great Noise, was a half-live and half-studio compilation. The album's package art became somewhat controversial—consisting as it did of drawings from the underground cartoonist Carlos Zefiro, whose works explored bluntly sexual themes during repressive times in Brazil—and the CD cover was censored by Monte's American distributor. The live section of the CD (the two-disc Brazilian version was put on one disc for the U.S.) culled material from Monte's Rose and Charcoal tour, adding a couple of tunes that she had not recorded before. The studio section alternated between dreamy tunes and edgier electrified pop.

what to buy: Rose and Charcoal ♪♪♪♪♪ (Metroblue, 1994, prod. Arto Lindsay) is Monte's most Brazilian album—and her most consistently excellent. It is her attempt to explore various Brazilian styles that use acoustic guitar, percussion, and voice. The album's immaculate production makes a perfect foil for Monte's exquisite voice.

what to buy next: Mais ♪♪♪♪½ (World Pacific, 1991, prod. Arto Lindsay) is Monte's second album and finds her with one foot each in Brazilian and American pop. Her duet with Ed Motta on "Ainda Lembro" could be a soul classic; the fragile beauty of Pixinguinha's "Rosa" is transcendent. A wonderful album with many highlights, but not quite at the level of the follow-up Rose and Charcoal. A Great Noise ♪♪♪♪ (Metroblue, 1997, prod. Arto Lindsay, Marisa Monte) is half-studio and half-live. The studio section has some great moments, as does the live half, but it seems early for someone of Monte's youth to be revisiting her own catalog. Nevertheless, the studio cuts are alternately beautiful and rocking; the live tracks are exuberant if less manicured than their studio counterparts.

the rest:
Marisa Monte ♪♪♪ (EMI, 1988)

influences:
Elis Regina, Antonio Carlos Jobim, Caetano Veloso, Gal Costa

see also: Arto Lindsay, Timbalada

Marty Lipp

Christy Moore

Irish traditional rock

Born 1945, in Ireland. Based in Ireland.

Christy Moore is one of Ireland's most influential singer-songwriters. As a founding member of Irish trad-rock bands Planxty and Moving Hearts and as a soloist, Moore has successfully fused the musical traditions of Ireland with an understanding of modern political and social concerns. His original songs, including "Ordinary Man," "Go, Move, Shift," and "City to Chicago," have provided a voice for the working class and have spoken out on violence, war, and economic struggle. The older brother of singer-songwriter Luka Bloom, Moore has been involved with music most of his life. As a child, he sang at home with his mother and with school and church choirs, and learned to play piano. Initially attracted to rock 'n' roll, he shifted his musical direction after hearing a recording by Liam Clancy of the Clancy Brothers. Moore's knowledge of Ireland's traditional music was expanded when he met Dónal Lunny, the keyboardist of Newbridge band the Liffeysiders. (Lunny has continued to play an important role in Moore's career; in addition to playing together in Planxty and Moving Hearts, the two musicians have collaborated on Moore's solo albums, with Lunny producing several.) Moore was working as a bank official in 1964 when he met and befriended piper Willie Clancy, with whom he would play local pubs for the next year-and-a-half. Moving to London in 1966, he performed several gigs with the Grehans. While recording his debut solo album, Prosperous, in 1972, Moore assembled the band that became Planxty. Although he was only with the group for two years, he helped to produce three highly influential albums. In the early 1980s he took the band's energetic approach to modernized tradition a step further and formed Moving Hearts with Lunny, Keith Donald, Davy Spillane, Declan Sinnott, Eoin O'Neill, and Brian Calnan. Combining traditional instruments, including bodhrán (Irish frame drum) and uilleann pipes, with contemporary ones, including saxophone and electric guitar, the group brought the musical heritage of Ireland up to date. Since leaving Moving Hearts late in 1982, Moore has largely focused on his solo career.

what to buy: The Christy Moore Collection, 1981–1991 ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros. U.K., prod. Dónal Lunny, Christy Moore) surveys the most influential decade of Moore's solo work and includes such memorable tunes as "Ordinary Man," "Lakes of Pontchartrain," "Biko Drum," and "Lindoosvarna."

what to buy next: Recorded at the Point Theater in Dublin in July 1994, Live at the Point ♪♪♪½ (Grapevine, 1994, prod. Christy Moore) captures the excitement of Moore's concerts. Accompanying himself on guitar and bodhrán, Moore performs an intimate set that includes traditional folk songs such as "Black Is the Color" and memorable originals including "Fairytale of New York," "Go, Move, Shift," and "Ride On."

the rest:
Prosperous ♪♪♪½ (Tara, 1972)
Whatever Tickles Your Fancy ♪♪½ (Polydor, 1975)
Christy Moore ♪♪½ (Polydor, 1978)
The Christy Moore Folk Collection: 1973–1978 ♪♪♪ (Tara, 1978)
The Iron behind the Gate ♪♪½ (Tara, 1978)
Live in Dublin ♪♪♪ (Tara, 1978)
The Time Has Come ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1983)
Ride On ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1984)
Ordinary Man ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1985)
Nice 'n' Easy ♪♪½ (PolyGram, 1986)
Unfinished Revolution ♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1987)
Voyage ♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1989)
Smoke & the Strong Whiskey ♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1991)
King Pluck ♪♪½ (Columbia/Sony, 1993)
Graffiti Tongue ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1996)

influences:

⏮ Ewan MacColl, Martin Carthy, the Clancy Brothers, Seamus Ennis

⏭ Oyster Band, Bothy Band, Rare Air, Luka Bloom

see also: The Clancy Brothers, the Dubliners, Dónal Lunny, Moving Hearts, Planxty

Craig Harris

Hamish Moore

Scottish bagpipe

Born in Scotland. Based in Scotland.

Making a name for yourself in two different (albeit related) professions is quite an accomplishment, but that is exactly what Hamish Moore has done. Known as a premier maker of various sorts of bagpipes, Moore has also made a big splash as a practitioner. His work with Scottish small-pipes and Highland Bagpipes, as well as other variants, has opened a whole new frontier to the piping community. Moore is innovative and creative, combining elements of traditional music and modern jazz in a delightful whirlwind. The result leaves the listener filled with anticipation for what is to come next. Moore began playing the Highland Bagpipes at age 10, but his passion was truly kindled when he discovered the "cauld wind" Scottish small-pipes in 1980. His love of the instrument prompted him to promote it in a variety of ways, from handcrafting small-pipes to combining them with other instruments in new and exciting forms of music, thus grabbing a whole new audience for the pipes. His musical credits are numerous, including participation in Scottish festivals of folk and jazz; opening for Van Morrison at Edinburgh Castle; recording a film score with the Montreal Symphony Orchestra; and teaching at a variety of piping schools. He has also established a piping school of his own, with branches in the U.K., North America, and New Zealand.

what to buy: Stepping on the Bridge ♪♪♪♪ (Greentrax, 1994, prod. Jerry Holland) is a good starting point for those who enjoy well-executed traditional music. Moore plays tunes in the Cape Breton style made popular by such fiddlers as Buddy and Natalie MacMaster. The selection is superb and the playing lively. Liner notes explain Moore's by no means exclusive belief that contemporary fiddling in the emigration tributary of Cape Breton gives a closer picture of 18th-century Scottish music than the styles currently prevalent in Scotland itself.

what to buy next: Farewell to Decorum ♪♪♪½ (Greentrax, 1993, prod. Michael Marra) is an eclectic montage of creatively presented jazz, folk, and pop. Moore is joined by Dick Lee, a highly acclaimed jazz saxophonist. The two are in turn accompanied by a variety of other musicians, making up an entire jazz band on some tracks. Moore does a stirring small-pipe solo called "Farewell to Nigg," on which he experiments with an unusual tuning of the drones and chanter, leaving the piece with a decidedly minor feel.

worth searching for: The Bee's Knees ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1991, prod. Hamish Moore, Dick Lee) is another noteworthy pairing of Hamish and Lee, resulting in a jazzy selection of traditional and modern tunes.

influences:

⏮ Alex Currie, Buddy MacMaster, Dick Lee

⏭ Barbara Dennerlein, Don Patterson, Don Pullen

see also: Natalie MacMaster

Jo Hughey Morrison

Beny Moré

Son, mambo, bolero, salsa

Born Bartolome Maximiliano Moré Gutierrez, August 24, 1919, in Santa Isabel de las Lajas, La Villas, Cuba. Died February 19, 1963, in Havana, Cuba.

Nicknamed "El bárbaro del ritmo" (the Barbarian of Rhythm), Beny Moré was the most influential male vocalist to come out of Cuba since Abelardo Barroso's days with the Sexteto Habanero. His forceful yet fluid phrasing propelled his supple tenor past the ordinary and into the legendary, influencing Ruben Blades, Henry Fiol, Oscar D'Leon and a host of other well-known later masters. As a youth Moré played guitar at various local festivals and events, but by 1940 he had moved to Havana and developed a reputation as a singer with various ensembles including the Cuarteto Cordero and the Sexteto Cauto. In 1945 the young vocalist worked with Conjunto Matamoros before moving to Mexico while on a tour with them. Once there Moré worked with the Conjunto de Humberto Cane and Rafael de Paz's group prior to hooking up with Perez Prado's orchestra. This last move propelled Moré into stardom as his powerful, flexible voice wove around Prado's rumbas, mambos, and boleros. Despite the hit records and lucrative movie clips that Prado and Moré forged during the early '50s, the singer moved back home to Cuba in 1953, where he gigged with Ernesto Duarte and Bebo Valdés before forming his big band, the legendary Orquesta Gigante. This group featured a number of great musicians—including trumpeters Alfredo "Chocolate" Armenteros and Alejandro "El Negro" Vivar, timbales player Roland La Serie, ace arranger/trombonist Generoso Jiménez, and pianist Pedro "Peruchín" Justiz—and provided the instrumental backdrop for Moré's greatest recordings. His lifestyle offstage was centered around alcohol and partying, which may have been a factor in his demise at the tragically early age of 43.

what to buy: Baila Mi Son ♪♪♪♪ (Caney, 1995, prod. various) is the finest example of Beny Moré's big band available. It might be harder to find than the BMG titles mentioned below, but this set contains more songs (20) than they do (12 and 14), which might tip the scales for folks lucky enough to dig this disc up. The muted, sliding trumpet lines that introduce the coro (chorus) on "Santa Isabel de Las Lajas" are almost reason enough to spring for this album, but there are other hits included here. Especially notable are "Que Bueno Baile Usted," "Marianao," "Cienfuegos," and "Maracaibo Oriental." The Very Best of Beny Moré, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪♪ (BMG, 1995,. prod. various) and The Very Best of Beny Moré, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪♪ (BMG, 1995, prod. various) are fine foundations for a Cuban music collection. Their budget price and the distribution muscle wielded by a major label means that these discs are relatively available (as are most of his BMG recordings), but Moré's historic significance is distilled a tad too much by these anthologies, leaving the novice with the impression that there is nothing else worthwhile in Moré's recorded canon. That may be a nitpicking caveat, but one to consider when building your collection.

what to buy next: El Bárbaro Del Ritmo ♪♪♪½ (Tumbao, 1992, prod. various) contains almost all of the hits Moré had during his stint with Perez Prado, and the re-mastering lets the dynamic duo's music shine. Smashes include "Babaratiri," "El Suave," and "Guajiro." Grandes Voces Del Bolero: Beny Moré El Barbaro De La Melodia ♪♪♪½ (Caney, 1994, prod. various) concentrates on Moré's skill with boleros, those sensuous bits of balladry that allowed him to display his awesome vocal range and control. The big hits here include the classic "Oh, Vida," plus "Como Fue" and "Corazon Rebelde."

what to avoid: Ay Mi Cuba! ♪ (Latino, 1996, prod. various) has incredibly mediocre mastering that negates the musical quality of the performances. Any engineer who renders "Corazon Rebelde," "Marianao," and other gems as if mixed in a sonic dust bowl has committed an audio crime.

best of the rest:
The Most from Beny Moré ♪♪♪½ (BMG, 1990)
Conjunto Matamoros with Beny Moré ♪♪♪ (Tumbao, 1992)
Maracaibo Oriental ♪♪♪½ (BMG, 1992)
Y Hoy Como Ayer ♪♪♪½ (BMG, 1992)
(With Celia Cruz) Los Originales ♪♪♪½ (Globo/Sony, 1993)

influences:
◀◀ Abelardo Barroso, Israel "Cachao" López
▶▶ Ruben Blades, Henry Fiol, Oscar D'Leon

see also: Perez Prado, Bebo Valdes

Garaud MacTaggart

soca

When soca broke through in the mid-1970s, skeptics dismissed it as a fad. Its pioneers glossed the term as "soul calypso," and a seminal soca like Shorty's "Om Shanti Om" distinctly echoes African American singers of the day like Marvin Gaye and Donna Summer. But as it happened, soca's propulsive beat—a variant of the clave rhythm born (some say) out of the exuberance of oil wealth—inaugurated a lasting revolution in calypso style. Since their snub of Shadow's "Bassman" in the 1974 Calypso Monarchy competition, traditionalists have persistently decried soca for the endless quantities of mindless lyrics and monotonous melodies it seems to have inspired. And yet, like the best radical positions, soca is thoroughly traditional, faithfully carrying on the bacchanalian spirit of Carnival. Its immediate predecessor is the "road march"—an up-tempo tune with simple, catchy lyrics, custom-tailored for street revelry—pioneered by Radio, Lion, and Invader in the late '30s and early '40s, and developed to sublime perfection by Kitchener and Sparrow in the '60s. The road march itself was a makeover of the older lavway or leggo: brash, unbridled, call-and-response chants sung by carnival masqueraders spoiling for clashes with other bands. These days, calypso and soca have achieved an ambivalent sort of coexistence. The sit-down ambiance of the calypso tent and the Savannah stage allows for leisurely audition and lyrical sophistication, while the jump-up atmosphere of the "Big Truck" (the flatbeds full of deafening P.A. speakers that dominate Carnival parades) demands something less subtle. Still, many of the best contemporary performers—Black Stalin, Calypso Rose, Crazy, Red Plastic Bag, David Rudder, Edwin Yearwood of krosfyah, and even confirmed party people like Super Blue and Colin Lucas—consistently find ways to blend the punchiness and danceability of soca with the verbal wit and melodic savoir faire of calypso.

Michael Eldridge

airto moreira

Airto Moreira

Brazilian jazz, African percussion

Born August 5, 1941, in Itaiopolis, Santa Catarina, Brazil. Based in USA.

Airto Moreira is one of the world's best-known percussionists and is largely responsible for introducing Brazilian rhythm into American jazz. His blend of avant-garde Brazilian and contemporary free techniques influenced other musicians of his country who arrived in the United States during the late 1960s and '70s, and his distinctive use of percussion has now become the standard. Infusing jazz with new rhythms, textures, and tone colors, Moreira has appeared as leader and sideman on numerous recordings, often with his wife, Brazilian jazz vocalist Flora Purim. He has been cited as the top percussionist in the readers' and critics' polls of many international magazines.

Moreira grew up in the city of Curitiba and began his musical studies in Brazil from 1948 to 1950 on acoustic guitar and piano. He was performing professionally by his pre-teen years and formed his own groups after playing in the early '60s with the Sambalanço Trio, the Sambrasa Trio, and Quarteto Novo. A multi-talented instrumentalist who didn't fit into a particular niche, he gravitated toward jazz and progressive interpretations of native Brazilian styles, traveling extensively in his native country and studying a wide variety of percussion instruments. In 1968 he and Purim moved to the United States, where Moreira spent several months studying with composer-arranger Moacir Santos before becoming involved with the jazz scene. He played with jazz musicians Paul Winter, Wayne Shorter, Cannonball Adderley, and others, dazzling this community with his prowess on traditional and self-invented instruments. He first gained international notice around 1970 in live performances and recordings with Miles Davis on Bitches Brew, At Filmore, and Live-Evil. In 1971 he worked with Lee Morgan and played percussion on the seminal, eponymous Weather Report album, but he didn't join this group because of his commitment to Davis. His role in the latter's group was to use bells, rattles, and shakers to create colors and sounds more than rhythms, and this experience changed Moreira's musical direction. In between gigs with Davis, he recorded two albums as a leader: Natural Feelings and Seeds on the Ground, both in 1970. In 1972 he joined Chick Corea's premier version of Return to Forever, recording on the band's first, self-titled fusion LP and leaving the band after their 1973 album, Light as a Feather. Moreira had relocated to Berkeley, California, in 1973 and at that time formed and recorded with his own band, Fingers, which lasted for two years. In 1975 he recorded a solo album, Identity, which was considered to be one of the decade's best fusion excursions for its dense textures and the multi-tracked, interwoven sound of its myriad instruments. Eventually, Moreira became one of the most in-demand percussionists on the scene, working with a variety of jazz and other artists including the Crusaders, Freddie Hubbard, Carlos Santana, Herbie Hancock, Gil Evans, Mickey Hart, and Babatunde Olatunji. In the 1980s he was a member of the Al Di Meola Project and toured with Dizzy Gillespie's United Nation Orchestra. Moreira has also led another group of his own, Fourth World, which at presstime was scheduled to recorded its final album, Last Journey to the Fourth World, for the import label B&W Music.

what to buy: A serendipitous web-surfing session can lead you to some astounding Airto sessions recorded for the British import label B&W Music (check for info on the M.E.L.T. 2000 site at http://www.melt2000.com/). While Moreira has made an indelible mark on jazz, in recent years he's been exploring more world-influenced rhythms. You'll want to investigate three B&W sessions he recorded in Johannesburg and Capetown studios with various South African musicians—Moreira's 1995 tour (two weeks of recordings and three live concerts with over 50 colleagues in that country) was sponsored by the London-based Straight No Chaser magazine and documented on three CDs in the South Africa: Outernational Meltdown series. Bolstering a team of superb musicians with his colorful percussion, Moreira is featured most prominently on Outernational Meltdown: Free at Last ♪♪♪♪♪ (B&W Music, 1995, prod. Sipho Gumede), a seven-tune celebration yielding melodically enticing and rhythmically rousing South African jazz from the straight-ahead to the stretched out. It's an ear-expanding journey considerably different from other Airto albums. Singing and playing marimbas, Aboriginal Australian didgeridoo, shakers, African drums, additional percussion, and other instruments, an array of South African musicians from Johannesburg and Cape Town join Moreira on the 17-track second release in this series, Outernational Meltdown: Healer's Brew ♪♪♪♪½ (B&W, 1995, prod. Airto Moreira). More tribal-sounding than the other two albums in the series, this disc launches with a fervent "Blessing Ceremony," chanted by Susan Hendricks. Moreira often takes a back seat to his partners, playing shakers and, on some tracks, adding to background vocals. Zulu spiritual healers guided by multi-instrumentalist Pops Mohamed and the 17-member vocal choir Intethelelo Yabazalwane enhance this effective African-roots album. Notable selections include the nearly 20-minute rendering of the title track, intriguing songs by the choir, and raw, pulsating drum-laden numbers. More musical and jazz-influenced, the third album in the series, Outernational Meltdown: Jazzin' Universally ♪♪♪♪½ (B&W Music, 1995, prod. various), even swings a little bit and contains winning improvisational touches by players such as trumpeter Byron Wallen, pianists Tete Mbambisa and Moses Taiwa Molelekwa, and other gifted South African musicians. Again, Moreira mostly defers to the others, but his presence and inspiration are felt throughout the seven tunes. This venture leans toward the foundations of South African jazz from the 1950s and '60s, with cohesively rendered horn-section arrangements and nationalist themes evoking the contributions of exiled players who never lived to see the election of Nelson Mandela as South Africa's president.

what to buy next: Leading his modern-edged Fourth World band, Moreira recorded three albums for B&W with various lineups. B&W touts itself as "a label without inhibitions, producing music without boundaries," and that's exactly what you can expect on the Fourth World recordings. Airto and Flora are constants, and depending on where their global travels take them, they meld the region's native rhythms to jazz, often with guitarist Neto as a collaborator. You can't go too far astray with any of these albums. Fourth World ♪♪♪♪ (B&W Music, 1993, prod. David Garland, Mark St. John) draws inspiration from the Brazilian rainforests. Fourth World: Live in South Africa, 1993 ♪♪♪♪½ (B&W Music/Bootleg.net, 1995) combines Airto and Flora's Brazilian jazz with South African influences to stimulating effect. Recorded during a concert at the Bimhuis Center for Jazz and Improvised Music in Amsterdam, Encounters of the Fourth World ♪♪♪♪½ (B&W Music, 1995, prod. Airto Moreira, Fourth World) continues along the same path, but it's influenced less by Brazilian rhythms and more by jazz-rock fusion. The album features Moreira, Purim, guitarist Neto, bassist/vocalist Gary Brown, keyboardist/flutist Jovino Santos, and special guest Giovanni Hidalgo on congas/percussion. Each Fourth World album offers a distinctive, fresh adventure. Unless you're also an avid jazz fan, you may want to wait to explore the following CDs, though each one is excellent. The Best of Airto ♪♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1972–74/1994, prod. Creed Taylor, Billy Cobham, reissue prod. Didier C. Deutsch) draws mostly from Moreira's Free and Fingers albums, and contains 10 of his best tunes recorded between 1972 and 1974 with an array of jazz artists, including Chick Corea or Keith Jarrett (piano), Ron Carter or Stanley Clarke (bass), Eddie Daniels (flute), George Duke (keyboards), and numerous others. Moreira is superb throughout, demonstrating how mightily he adds fresh percussive flair to each tune. This is one "best of" that lives up to its claim, and it's a good introductory album for new fans to discover Airto's talents with Brazilian-jazz beats, and his pyrotechnic penchant for creating exciting music that holds up decades later. Plenty of Brazilian melodies, scat vocals, and swaying modern-edged beats should also satisfy the experienced listener. Moreira's first album for CTI, Free ♪♪♪♪♪ (CTI, 1972/CBS, 1988, prod. Creed Taylor), was a seminal work that's still immediate and exciting after all these years. Featuring the premier version of Return to Forever with Chick Corea (piano), Stanley Clarke (bass), Joe Farrell (saxophones/flutes), and other jazz luminaries, this was the album that helped spread the word about this incredibly talented Brazilian percussionist. A satisfying Moreira album that gives an overview of his broad interests, Three-Way Mirror ♪♪♪♪½ (Reference Recordings, 1987, prod. J. Tamblyn Henderson Jr., Airto Moreira) features him performing eight tunes ranging from native Brazilian numbers to bebop to Return to Forever–type fusion. Vocalist Purim, pianist Kei Akagi, guitarist José Neto, bassists Mark Egan or Randy Tico, and special guest flutist Joe Farrell (in his last performances) contribute to this fine album. While Moreira and Purim perform at their usual best, Farrell's playing is what really makes this expertly produced 1985 date a pleasure trip. If you crave the spontaneity of a jam session among prime innovators, check out Airto and the Gods of Jazz: Killer Bees ♪♪♪♪ (B&W Music, 1993, prod. Flora Purim), a unique, modern-sounding set created in California over two weekends in 1989 when percussionist/vocalist Moreira, longing to recreate his NYC loft-session days, assembled a group of all-stars: Hiram Bullock (overdubbed guitars), Stanley Clarke (acoustic/electric bass), Chick Corea (acoustic piano/electronic keyboards), Mark Egan (electric fretless bass), and Gary Meek (tenor/soprano saxophones). Purim makes brief appearances. The album documents one helluva 50-minute jam, with tunes ranging from free-jazz to straight-ahead styles. The title tune grew out of what was initially a beginning soundcheck from Egan. Moreira joins in, playing an Australian bull-roarer, an instrument used by Aboriginals to banish evil spirits (you've probably witnessed its buzzing in the Crocodile Dundee films). Corea and Bullock overdub with some nasty, funk-groove beats. The album contains many fine moments and enough variety to appeal to a wide range of jazz lovers.

best of the rest:
Seeds on the Ground ♪♪♪½ (One Way, 1971/1994)
The Magicians ♪♪♪½ (Concord/Crossover, 1986)
The Sun Is Out ♪♪♪½ (Concord/Crossover, 1987/1989)
Struck by Lightning ♪♪♪♪ (Venture, 1989)
The Other Side of This ♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1992)

influences:
◀◀ João Parahyba, Téo Lima, Robertinho Silva, Oswaldinho da Cuíca, Cyro Baptista, Paulinho da Costa, Guilherme Franco see also: Amampondo, Mickey Hart, Babatunde Olatunji, Orchesta Aragon, Flora Purim, Badal Roy

Nancy Ann Lee

Morgan Heritage

Reggae

Formed 1992, in Brooklyn, NY, USA. Based in Brooklyn, NY, USA.

Una Morgan, vocals, keyboards; Nakhamya "Lukes" Morgan, vocals, guitar; Roy "Gramps" Morgan, vocals, keyboards; Memmalatel "Mr.

pablo moses

Mojo" Morgan, vocals, percussion; Peter Morgan, vocals. (All members are from USA.)

Originally, Morgan Heritage comprised all eight of underground reggae great Denroy Morgan's children. But by the time their currently available records were made, three members—drummer Denroy Jr., bassist David, and lead guitarist Jeffery—had left, leaving their siblings to work with studio backup. The original octet debuted under their present name in 1992 at the definitive annual Reggae Sunsplash festival, though they had spent some time logging impressive apprenticeship credentials as support for Sister Carol and Judy Mowatt. The Sunsplash appearance got them signed to MCA, though the resulting album, Miracle, didn't sell well and was soon deleted. They followed up with several singles that did fairly well (especially in Europe), but those have yet to be compiled on CD. So the siblings moved on to indie reggae powerhouse VP, where they continue to record as a quintet, touring the world.

what to buy: Don't Haffi Dread ♪♪♪½ (VP Records, 1999, prod. Bobby "Digital" Dixon) finds Peter Morgan really coming into his own as a vocalist, especially on such tunes as "Earthquake" and the Wailers-like "Reggae Road Block." More important, he's got better songs to sing and better tracks to sing to. Even the weaker ones keep up the groove, and when the pace is changed with the acoustic "Freedom," the harmonies put it over.

what to buy next: When Protect Us Jah ♪♪♪ (VP Records, 1997, prod. Bobby "Digital" Dixon) is good, as on "Africa, Here We Come" and "Set Yourself Free," it rocks. However, too much is like the ersatz, bloodless, beatless soul ballad "When You Decide."

the rest:
One Calling ♪♪½ (VP Records, 1998)

worth searching for: A pop reggae record in the wake of actual reggae hits from Aswad and Inner Circle, Miracle ♪♪ (MCA, 1994, prod. Morgan Heritage, Denroy Morgan) is a mish-mash of new jack swing, rap, dancehall, and other pop grafted onto reggae. Still, tough, poignant tunes like "Unjust World" and "Love Police" make this one worth seeking out.

influences:
Denroy Morgan, Bob Marley, Third World

see also: Judy Mowatt, Sister Carol

Hank Bordowitz

Pablo Moses

Reggae

Born Pablo Henry, 1953, in Manchester, Jamaica. Based in Jamaica.

With his high-pitched, horn-like vocals set to Eurodisco arrangements, dreadlocked vocalist Pablo Moses has been espousing his Rastafarian-influenced vision of equality and justice for more than two decades. Moses first attracted attention after forming the vocal group the Canaries in the early 1970s. Although he scored a hit with his pro-marijuana anthem "I Man a Grasshopper" in 1975, Moses had little commercial success until the '80s. His debut album Revolutionary Dream was such a financial disappointment (if latter-day critical triumph) that Moses withdrew from the public eye for two years, sharpening his skills at the Jamaica School of Music. In 1978 he resumed his career with a vengeance, releasing the powerful A Song and remaining a well-respected conscious commentator to this day.

what to buy: Moses's return to the music scene, A Song ♪♪♪♪½ (Mango, 1978, prod. Geoffrey Chung), is still a masterpiece of hard-core Rastafarian lyricism. With such legendary backup as Sly (Dunbar) & Robbie (Shakespeare) as rhythm section, and Bob Marley/I-Threes veterans Rita Marley and Judy Mowatt on vocals, Moses defiantly voices classics like "Revolutionary Step," "Each Is a Servant," and "Protest I/A Song."

what to buy next: The best of Moses's early work, including his first hit "I Man a Grasshopper," is reprised on I Love I Bring: Anthology of Reggae Collectors' Series, Volume 7 ♪♪♪½ (United Artists, 1978, prod. Geoffrey Chung).

the rest:
Revolutionary Dream ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1975)
In the Future ♪♪♪ (Alligator, 1980)
Reggae Greats ♪♪♪½ (Mango, 1983)
Tension ♪♪♪ (Alligator, 1984)
Live to Love ♪♪♪ (Rohit, 1985)
We Refuse ♪♪♪ (Profile, 1988)
Mission ♪♪♪ (RAS, 1990)
Confession of a Rastaman ♪♪♪ (Musidisc, 1995)
Pave the Way ♪♪♪ (Mango, 1996)
Pave the Way Dub ♪♪♪ (Tabou 1, 1998)
In the Future & Dub ♪♪♪ (Tabou 1, 1998)

influences:
Bob Marley, Burning Spear, Peter Tosh

Third World, UB40

see also: Rita Marley, Judy Mowatt, Sly & Robbie

Craig Harris

Paul Mounsey

Celtic, Scottish, worldbeat

Born April 15, 1959, in Irvine, Scotland. Based in São Paulo, Brazil.

Composer/producer Paul Mounsey has assembled quite a musical mix from his diverse influences and remarkable background. The Scottish native graduated from Trinity College of London with first-class honors in composition, and from London

International Film School in movie scoring. After a short time lecturing at the University of London's Goldsmith's College, he moved to São Paulo, Brazil, in 1983. There he embarked on a successful career producing music for television—commercials, documentaries, and other programs. He also wrote a song that became a three-million-selling single for EMI Mexico and has worked with a number of internationally known performers including soul diva Etta James, reggae great Jimmy Cliff, and the celebrated percussion ensemble Olodum. But Mounsey's career took its most fascinating turn in 1990 and '91, when he heard some Scottish traditional music. Mounsey hadn't listened to any for the first seven or eight years he'd been in Brazil because it "provoked a profound sense of homesickness in me," according to an interview with Folk Roots magazine. But by the time he heard it again, "I found that I'd lost the link and it didn't provoke anything in me. It sounded quite foreign and that's why, I think, I decided to start working with it—to try to rediscover my own musical roots and identity." And with the Nahoo projects, that's exactly what he has done. The first Nahoo recording was released in 1994 by Iona in Scotland and consists mostly of Mounsey's adaptations and re-workings of traditional material. But Mounsey's music is far from conventional folk-rock. He's brought his contemporary pop experience to traditional music, which means ancient Gaelic ballads are given high-tech dance beats with lots of sampling. Mounsey himself sings, plays keyboards and whistle, and is responsible for programming, and the technology is mixed with other actual musicians who play guitar, bass, violin, viola, and percussion. NahooToo appeared in 1997 and emphasized original material. The folk base was somewhat less obvious; one track, the bright, catchy, and melodic "Wherever You Go," is as fine a piece of modern pop as you'll ever hear. At the time of writing, Mounsey has begun working on the third installment, which is tentatively titled Nahoo 3: Notes from the Republic.

what's available: Nahoo ♪♪♪♪♪ (Iona, 1994, prod. Paul Mounsey, João "Janjão" Vasconcelos) is a fine example of the next step in pop/rock/folk fusions—the first wave (Fairport Convention, Steeleye Span) brought the energy of psychedelic rock to folk music; in the 1980s the Pogues, the Men They Couldn't Hang, and Billy Bragg gave folk a punky edge; and in the 1990s traditional sounds are meeting the latest dance/pop and multiethnic grooves in the work of Afro Celt Sound System, Talitha MacKenzie, Shooglenifty, and Mounsey. Like his colleagues, Mounsey's specialty is creating whole pieces from all sorts of ingredients—with exciting, listenable results. For instance, the opening track here, "Passing Away," includes a brief spoken-word excerpt lamenting that "Gaelic is on the decline" before you hear ethereal vocals over pulsing dance rhythms and synth washes. On "Alba," Mounsey uses sampled vocals (taken from field recordings made by the School of Scottish Studies in Edinburgh) over his electronic beats, the two elements fitting together surprisingly well. Then there's Mounsey's arrangement of the old ballad "Journeyman," which he sings in a straight folk-ish voice to the accompaniment of hard funk/rap drums. He even recites one of the verses as poetry, and that works too. The ancient Scottish music is inherently rhythmic, which is why it adapts so well to these modern treatments. Mounsey broadened his palette for NahooToo ♪♪♪♪♪ (Iona, 1997, prod. Paul Mounsey, João "Janjão" Vasconcelos). "North" is an instrumental piece that starts off like a slow air, with violin playing the melody line. Then there's an abrupt shift as loud heavy-metal guitars crash in and make you think you're listening to Black Sabbath. "Turned on the Dog" is loud guitar-rock with sampled bagpipes! Brazilian flutes open up "The Fields of Robert John" while synths provide backing drones; choppy violin bits and strange percussion effects come later in this unique composition. Mounsey even brought in influential Celtic singer Flora MacNeill to sing Gaelic on several cuts, and she's surprisingly at home with all the electronics. Someone else trying to fuse so many different components could easily fail, but the discipline Mounsey underwent as a pop producer and composer undoubtedly gave him the experience to create coherent works from his plethora of sources.

influences:

- ◀◀ Field recordings, Runrig, Michael Oldfield, Moving Hearts, Peter Gabriel
- ▶▶ Shooglenifty, Peatbog Faeries, Talitha MacKenzie, Afro Celt Sound System

Ken Roseman

Mouth Music

Celtic world-funk

Formed 1990, in Scotland. Based in Scotland.

Jackie Joyce, vocals; Martin Swan, guitar, whistles, flutes, drums; Michaela Rowan, voice; James MacKintosh, drums; Quee MacArthur, bass; Jeremy Black, percussion.

"All music is singing or drumming," states Mouth Music's Martin Swan, and that is probably the closest you can come to finding a description of this unusual group. Evolving into a whole new sound with each recording, Mouth Music has defied both fans' and critics' expectations with its chameleonic tastes. One moment funky worldbeat, the next new-age with a touch of traditional, quickly followed by techno-pop, this group changes personae at the drop of a song. Which, considering their start, should hardly be a surprise. Formed by Scottish film and TV director Martin Swan and American-born ethnomusicologist Talitha MacKenzie, how could this group help but pull on a variety of styles and traditions, forming a new fusion of sounds at each turn? Feeling that rhythm is the root of any music, they derive such rhythm in the most creative of ways, from bongos and bottles to synthesizers and even the vocal lines themselves.

what's available: Winner of multiple "Best of the Year" awards, Mouth Music ♪♪♪♪½ (Triple Earth, 1991, prod. Martin Swan, Chic Medley) takes Gaelic tunes to Africa and back, adding a bit of pop culture along the way. Driving rhythms and heavily synthesized vocals and keyboard lines accompany a collection of traditional tunes, bringing them a new sound. Dance-beat meets waulking (traditional Scottish washing) songs and a cappella mouth music (customarily unaccompanied Scottish dance singing), sometimes all at once, sometimes alternating. Particularly fascinating is "I See the Great Mountains," from the tune better known as "Mist Covered Mountains," which mixes the familiar vocal line with a hypnotic drum beat. Mo-Di ♪♪♪½ (Triple Earth, 1993, prod. Martin Swan, Stuart Hamilton) is a collection of memorable dance tunes, distinguished by the amazing multi-lingual vocal talents of singer Jackie Joyce. Standout tracks include "Birnam," an ethereal new-age ballad, and "He Mandu," which combines exciting dance rhythms with compelling harmonies. Shorelife ♪♪♪ (Triple Earth, 1995, prod. Martin Swan, Chic Medley) has more of a computerized feel, heavy on the synthesizers and drum kits.

influences:

⏮ David Byrne, Brian Eno, Enya

⏭ Pink Kross

see also: Talitha MacKenzie

Jo Hughey Morrison

Moving Cloud

Irish traditional

Formed 1989, in County Clare, Ireland. Based in Ennis, County Clare, Ireland.

Paul Brock, accordion, melodeon; Maeve Donnelly, fiddle; Manus McGuire, fiddle; Christy Dunne, banjo (1989–93); Kevin Crawford, flute, tin whistle, bodhrán (1993–present); Carl Hession, piano. (Members are from Ireland and England.)

Many groups can play Irish jigs, reels, and hornpipes with fire and energy, but few can do it with the sensitivity and panache of Moving Cloud. Their repertoire is enhanced with a healthy selection of cheeky polkas, lively barndances and flings, memorable mazurkas, and elegant waltzes, setting them in a class by themselves. Moving Cloud's concert-champ status today owes much to their in-the-trenches apprenticeship as an ace dance band. Formed in the late 1980s at a time when set dancing in County Clare was enjoying an enthusiastic revival, the group soon became standard-bearers for that genre. Of course, it didn't hurt that bandmembers—drawn from Clare, Galway, and Westmeath in Ireland and Birmingham in England—held numerous All-Ireland traditional music titles on their respective instruments. Their aim to move onward and upward to the concert circuit has been realized with the aid of two albums that flawlessly deploy accordion, fiddle, and flute in front of delicately poised piano.

what's available: The debut, Moving Cloud ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1995, prod. Moving Cloud), was a breath of fresh air that can never go stale: great dance tunes from Ireland, Scotland, Cape Breton, and French Canada, beautifully presented, with sources duly noted on the sleeve. Two tunes from turn-of-the-century French Canadian melodeon player Alfred Montmarquette, "Virginia Waltz" and "Chinese Polka," are particularly charming. Foxglove ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1998, prod. Moving Cloud, Martin Murray) has a more polished and varied sound, making subtle use of some outside guests including Johnny "Ringo" McDonagh on bodhrán (Irish frame drum) and Gerry O'Connor on banjo. Generous notes are provided once more, and the way this band plays it, "Swing Waltz," a French musette (Gypsy-influenced romantic dance-music) tune from the 1930s, sounds quite at home beside numbers associated with fiddle legend Paddy Fahy and box player Joe Cooley.

influences:

⏮ Chieftains, Kilfenora Ceili Band, Tulla Ceili Band, Silly Wizard, Cherish the Ladies

see also: Frankie Gavin

John C. Falstaff

Moving Hearts

Irish traditional and fusion

Formed 1980, in Dublin, Ireland. Disbanded 1985.

Christy Moore, vocals, acoustic guitar, bodhrán (1980–82); Mick Hanly, vocals, acoustic guitar (1983); Flo Sweeney, vocals (1984); Dónal Lunny, bouzouki, synthesizer, vocals; Davy Spillane, uilleann pipes, low whistle; Declan Masterson, uilleann pipes, low whistle (1985); Keith Donald, saxophone, bass clarinet; Declan Sinnott, guitars, vocals; Eoghan O'Neill, bass, vocals; Brian Calnan, drums, percussion (1980–81); Matt Kelleghan, drums, percussion (1981–85); Noel Eccles, percussion (1985). (All members are from Ireland.)

The sadly overlooked Moving Hearts are clearly the missing link between some of the most innovative Irish groups of the '70s (Horslips, Planxty, Bothy Band) and the Riverdance phenomenon of the '90s. Moving Hearts actually co-existed and shared members with Planxty toward the end of the latter band's life (1980 to 1983), playing their unique brand of frequently political Irish-influenced fusion music while Planxty followed a more traditional and certainly less controversial path.

A decade after Moving Hearts broke up, several former members resurfaced together in the Riverdance band.

Moving Hearts was first convened in 1980 by prime mover and shaker Dónal Lunny (Planxty, ex–Bothy Band), well-established singer Christy Moore (Planxty), and guitarist Declan Sinnott (ex-Horslips), soon to be joined by Keith Donald (ex-Stagalee) on sax—not to mention future Riverdance composer Bill Whelan for a brief moment at the very start. They recruited a brilliant young Dublin piper named Davy Spillane (largely unknown at the time), and started playing live around town. Soon they had developed a reputation for two things: fiery tunes juxtaposing traditional and rock idioms in a startling new way, and often-political songs—anti-nuclear, anti-fascist, pro-republican (in the Irish sense)—sung by Moore in his distinctively soft and deceptively easy-going voice.

"Hiroshima Nagasaki Russian Roulette" (which Planxty also tried live) had been written and recorded in 1975 by Seattle-based protest singer/songwriter Jim Page, who spent some time living in Ireland in the late '70s. Moving Hearts' stunning adaptation of the song was aired on Irish radio at the start of 1981 and electrified many who heard it. It became the band's signature song and was adopted by the (ultimately triumphant) Irish anti-nuclear movement, in which both Christy and his brother Barry (later known to the world as Luka Bloom) were very active.

Expectations were high for the band's self-titled debut album, released in late summer of 1981, and the boys did not disappoint. This was the time of the tragic hunger strikes in Northern Ireland, and in concert the band left absolutely no doubt as to where they stood on that issue. (A rare single from this period includes near-future member Mick Hanly fronting the band live for his own Jackson Browne–soundalike, "On the Blanket.") The follow-up, Dark End of the Street (1982), was also very impressive, though it veered even further from traditional Irish music. Moore left at the end of that year to focus on his solo career; he was replaced by Hanly, who as writer had already contributed the best song on Dark End.

The only album to feature Hanly as a performer was Live Hearts, which includes three previously unrecorded songs—most notably Jimmy McCarthy's "Strain of the Dance"—but is marred by having its weakest track drag on for over 10 minutes. The band then tried out a female singer (Flo Sweeney) in concert before opting for life as a purely instrumental ensemble. They went out on a high note with The Storm (1985), recorded with Spillane and Declan Masterson, each on uilleann pipes. Both men, together with ace bassist Eoghan O'Neill and latter-day percussionist Noel Eccles (borrowed at the time from the country's national symphony orchestra), went on to give long service and lend considerable clout to the Riverdance project starting in the mid-'90s. They also kept busy with their own careers—Spillane in particular—as did the more prominent Lunny, Moore, and Hanly. Sinnott found fame backing and arranging for Mary Black and more recently for Sinead Lohan. Donald became the Popular Music Officer for the Irish Arts Council. They have reunited in some shape or form for live gigs on a few occasions.

On a good day, Moving Hearts concocted a uniquely heady brew of swirling pipes (Spillane), sax (Donald), and electric guitar (Sinnott), underpinned with great style by Lunny and O'Neill. Where artists such as Richard Thompson and Dan Ar Braz have used piping techniques as an inspiration for electric guitar playing, Spillane did the exact opposite at times, his piping taking on the role of lead guitar, dueling proudly, passionately, and fearlessly with Sinnott and Donald. Moreover, his soulful low whistle playing brought that once-infrequently heard instrument to a new and wider audience.

In a sense Moving Hearts (the perfect antidote to their contemporaries Talking Heads?) were two different bands: the one with Christy (or Mick) at the helm, belting out songs subtle and not-so-subtle (many of them American); and the other one whose voice needed no words to communicate. This may ultimately have been their undoing, but the fact remains that they considerably expanded the possibilities for the Irish traditional genre as fusion music, and in so doing planted many of the seeds that would later bear fruit as Riverdance and the Celtic commercial renaissance it ushered in.

what to buy: Moving Hearts ♪♪♪♪ (WEA, 1981, prod. Dónal Lunny) is their best effort, from the explosive "Hiroshima" opener and the instrumental "Category" (jaunty but, despite the title, thoroughly uncategorizable), to the seductive "Irish Ways and Irish Laws" (by John Gibb), "Before the Deluge" (Jackson Browne), and the brilliant "Faithful Departed" (by Irish punk Philip Chevron of the Radiators from Space and later the Pogues), a refreshingly literate look at a rapidly changing Irish society.

what to buy next: The Dark End of the Street ♪♪♪ (WEA, 1982, prod. Dónal Lunny) also starts off very strong with Barry Moore's "Remember the Brave Ones," but has a more hybrid, diffuse feel and is less focused than its predecessor. Mick Hanly's hilarious school-days reminiscence "All I Remember" seems tailor-made for Christy Moore, who is also superb on Don Lange's "Allende." The instrumentals range from Spillane's traditional-sounding "Downtown" to O'Neill's Weather Report–inflected "Half-Moon." The Storm ♪♪♪½ (Tara, 1985, prod. Dónal Lunny) is more coherent and is all instrumental; it's also the only release of the band's to feature two pipers. Eccles's intricate percussion adds depth to Lunny's and O'Neill's rhythm work, and everybody really stretches out on the longer tracks.

Early copies of this came with a free single featuring two otherwise unavailable (but hardly essential) songs recorded with Mick Hanly.

what to avoid: Some early-'80s American copies of The Dark End of the Street (same title and artwork as the real thing) actually contain a selection of tracks from the first two albums.

the rest:
Live Hearts ♪♪½ (WEA, 1983)

worth searching for: Van Morrison's A Sense of Wonder ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1985) has Moving Hearts playing a welcome (if somewhat out-of-place) instrumental called "Boffyflow & Spike," which Van wrote for them. Their flawless backing on some other tracks demonstrates what a consummate bunch of professionals they were.

influences:
◀◀ Planxty, Bothy Band, Weather Report

▶▶ The Pogues, Oyster Band, Rare Air, Bill Whelan, Kila

see also: Horslips, Dónal Lunny, Christy Moore, Sean Ó Riada, Planxty, Bill Whelan

John C. Falstaff

Judy Mowatt

Reggae

Born late 1950s, in Jamaica. Based in Jamaica.

"The Queen of Rasta Reggae," Judy Mowatt is one of Jamaica's most influential vocalists. A former member of the I-Threes, background vocalists for Bob Marley from 1974 until his death in 1981, Mowatt has continued to musically address her feminist and Rastafarian philosophies. According to Newsweek, Mowatt, whose soulful harmonies can be heard on albums by Peter Tosh, Jimmy Cliff, Big Youth, Pablo Moses, Freddie McGregor, U-Roy, and the Wailing Souls as well as on her own recordings, is "by far reggae's most highly regarded woman vocalist." Mowatt had her initial success as a member of the Gaylettes, a teenage singing group that she formed in 1967. Later lauded as a soloist in the early '70s, Mowatt's popularity reached international proportions when she joined with Rita Marley and Marcia Griffiths to form the I-Threes. Their vocal harmonies on Bob Marley's single "Jah Live" and his album Natty Dread marked the beginning of a long collaboration. The I-Threes replaced Marley's original centerpiece trio of himself, Bunny Wailer, and Peter Tosh, and achieved equally historic stature. Mowatt's debut solo album Black Woman, released in 1980, was the very first recorded in Marley's Tuff Gong studios. Continuing to perform with the I-Threes following Marley's death in 1981, Mowatt has more recently carried on as a still-acclaimed soloist.

what to buy: With Black Woman ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1980/1987, prod. Judy Mowatt, Freddie McGregor) Mowatt stepped into the limelight as a gifted songwriter and soulful singer. Accompanied by many of the same musicians featured on Bob Marley's recordings, Mowatt sings of strong women and the power of Rastafarian ideologies.

what to buy next: Mowatt's second solo effort, Only a Woman ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1982/1987, prod. Judy Mowatt), further affirms its predecessor's feminist and Rasta themes.

the rest:
Working Wonders ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1985)
Love Is Overdue ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1987)
Look at Love ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1991) Rock Me ♪♪♪ (Pow Wow, 1993)

influences:
◀◀ Bob Marley, Dinah Washington, Diana Ross, Rastafarianism

▶▶ Bonnie Raitt, Queen Latifah, Rita Marley

see also: Marcia Griffiths, Bob Marley, Rita Marley, Pablo Moses

Craig Harris

Tshala Muana /Tshala Mwana

Mutuashi, soukous

Born 1959, in Lubumbashi, Congo. Based in Congo and Paris, France.

Tshala Muana is regarded, along with Abeti, M'Bilia Bel, and M'Pongo Love, as one of the Congo's great female vocalists. Enormously popular and occasionally controversial in her native continent, Muana is as recognized in many African countries for her sexually suggestive dancing and assertive lyrics and attitude as she is for her impressive vocal range and distinctive rural Congolese yodel. Muana has had her name linked romantically to several African presidents, and her display of a condom in an AIDS public service announcement got the spot banned for a time in Zambia. While Muana's songbook includes plenty of numbers utilizing her country's best-known approach, the fast-tempoed, ringing guitar sound of soukous (a.k.a. Congolese rumba), she also sings over equally modern but more percussion-oriented updates of other native rhythms. Raised in a family of singers and dancers in the Southeast portion of the Congo, Muana first received attention for her modernization of traditional dance. Celebrated as "The Queen of Mutuashi" for her updated movements to this folkloric style, Muana relocated to Kinshasa in 1977 where she became a dancer with M'Pongo Love's group Tsheke Tsheke. Taking up professional singing, Muana soon recorded two singles before moving to Côte d'Ivoire in 1979. There in Abidjan, known for its recording studios and an abundance of musicians from around the continent, Muana recorded several more singles and used the coastal town as a base for touring throughout West and Central Africa. She moved to Paris in 1984, where she recorded her debut album and was subsequently voted top African woman vocalist in a number of polls. Since that time Muana has released a number of European- and African-only releases—and sadly only two American efforts—that have further consolidated her acclaim. Muana has worked on these albums with top male arrangers such as Bibi Dens and Souzy Kasseya, but she's never been a mere showpiece. She's written and/or produced much of her material and in her lyrics she's never been less than forthright about discussing the relationships between the sexes.

Tshala Muana

what to buy: Mutuashi ♪♪♪♪ (Stern's Africa, 1996, prod. Boncana Maiga) is a well-crafted, varied collection that adds Afro-Cuban and acoustic folk accents to Muana's mutuashi and soukous dance rhythms. Producer Maiga brings a number of the Latin musicians he had worked with on the Africando albums, and they add polyrhythmic piano, timbale, and horn sounds to a number of cuts. On the mutuashi song "Tshovo," Muana joyously wails her trademark extended syllable "yoooooh" over a unique blend of xylophone, keyboard, and flute sonics, before engaging in a call-and-response with her backing vocalists. Guitarists Lokassa Ya M'bongo and Daly Kimoko star on the soukous cuts, and Muana's voice takes on a deep, impassioned tone for the melancholy mid-tempo lament "Kabeji."

what to buy next: Soukous Siren ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1991, prod. Lou Deprijck, Tshala Muana) is a compilation of material Muana recorded between 1985 and 1988 for European labels. Occupying a narrower musical spectrum than Mutuashi, the CD still offers a number of scintillating compositions. On "Tshibola" Muana happily exclaims "Mutuashi!" over that style's percussive rhythms, while on "Lwa-Touye" she engages in a jubilant, speedy call-and-response exchange with her supporting singers.

worth searching for: The French import Dans un Duo pour l'Éternité avec Papa Wemba ♪♪♪ (Gefraco/Editions Kaluila) may only have Papa Wemba on one song, but Bibi Dens's arrangements, Rigo Star's guitar work, and Muana's vocalizing generally impress. Other albums to look for from Muana's impressive European catalog include Nasi Nabali (Sonodisc), M Bombo (Kaluila), La Vie este Belle (Stern's U.K., 1987), Biduaya (Celluloid, 1989), La Divine (Espera/Sonodisc, 1991), Yombo (Sonodisc, 1992), Elako (Tamaris, 1993), and Ntambue (Sonodisc, 1994).

influences:
⏮ M'Pongo Love

see also: Africando, M'Bilia Bel, Boncana Maiga, Rigo Star, Papa Wemba

Steve Kiviat

Abdel Aziz El Mubarak

Sudanese pop

Born 1951, in Wad Medani, Sudan. Based in Khartoum, Sudan.

Wad Medani is known in Sudan as a center for the arts, and Abdel Aziz El Mubarak is one of its favorite sons. Mubarak comes from a family of noted musicians, and he began singing and composing in elementary school. He went to Khartoum in his early 20s and passed the audition to be a singer on Sudanese Broadcasting, the national radio station. His first hits came in 1975 with "Yah Izzana" and "Laih Ya Galbi Kaih." Soon thereafter he put together a band to play weddings, nightclubs, concert halls, radio, and TV. Mubarak has a pleasingly straightforward tenor that plays neatly off of the band's swinging string section and percolating Arabic rhythms. Mubarak's songs combine classical Arabic music and poetry, and are carefully chosen to avoid musical and lyrical clichés. After the poets write the lyrics Mubarak works with the composers to create the melodies. Sudanese music is highly traditional—there is no musical notation and tunes are not written down, but transmitted directly from musician to musician. After Mubarak has a song ready, the rest of the band learns it, developing new ideas and arrangements as they go along. Before performance a song is submitted to a peer review of leading artists who check to make sure it conforms to tradition and follows the rules of classical Arabic verse and composition.

what to buy: For the past 20 years Mubarak has been Sudan's most popular singer, and one of his innovations was incorporating reggae into his rhythmic repertoire. On Adbel Aziz El Mubarak ♪♪♪♪♪ (Globestyle, 1988, prod. Adam Skeaping, John Haddon) the reggae of "Ahla Eyyoun" and "Bitgooli La" doesn't sound at all Jamaican, but it does have a funky, 12-bar bass line that brings to mind the R&B shuffle of "Night Train."

what to buy next: Recorded live during a performance in London, Straight from the Heart ♪♪♪♪½ (World Circuit, 1989, prod. John Haddon) includes many of Mubarak's best-known tunes including "Yah Izzana" and "Laih Ya Galbi Kaih," the songs that made his reputation. The reggae influence is more noticeable here—several tunes have the familiar "one drop" riddim in evidence—and the electric guitar is a bit more prominent in the mix, with a raw, twangy quality that brings to mind a late-night 1950s doo-wop recording session.

the rest:
Sounds of Sudan ♪♪♪♪½

influences:
⏮ Khalil Farrah, Ibrahim El Kashif ⏭ Abdel Gadir Salim, Mustafa Sidahmed

j. poet

Ephat Mujuru

Zimbabwean mbira dzavadzimu ("of ancestral spirits") music

Born August 6, 1950, in Mujuru village, Makoni, Rusape, eastern Zimbabwe. Based in Harare, Zimbabwe.

Ephat Muchandibaya Mujuru specializes in playing the mbira, which he makes himself. The hand-forged, iron-keyed portable percussion instrument sits on a small wood base. Sometimes referred to as a "thumb piano" by Western listeners, the thumb and index fingers pluck the keys. A large gourd amplifies the sound and bottle caps add the characteristic timbral buzz. Mujuru often plays while singing or telling a story and he is equally at home vocalizing about animals, ancestors, or answering machines, in English or Shona. His repertoire features traditional material used in religious ceremonies called biras, in which the mbira's job is to summon the spirits of forebears. He also composes original pieces; his songs are sometimes political and sometimes popular in their source material.

Mujuru was a strong influence on Thomas Mapfumo, who in defiance of the colonial system brought mbira patterns to the guitar in his chimurenga or "struggle" music celebrating Shona culture. Mujuru also influenced and has played with the Balafon Marimba Ensemble, appearing on one track of their eponymous 1990 Shanachie release. The music of Zimbabwe has been passed down to Mujuru through a long, distinguished family line, and he is especially known for his work in spiritual ceremony. Naturally, given this field of expression, he is committed to preserving traditional Shona culture. He spearheaded a revival of it, playing a large part in the foundation of the first National Dance Troupe of Zimbabwe and more recently working with traditional Zimbabwean stories and music in a series of books and cassettes. Mujuru has taught African instruments at the Zimbabwe College of Music and at the University of Washington. The latter occurred while he lived in the U.S. from 1982 to 1985; at that time he also received a Master of Arts degree. Far from a stereotypical academic, he also performs pop songs in his band Spirit of the People.

In addition to his concert work as a soloist and bandleader, the charismatic Mujuru—who is dedicated to introducing the mbira to the whole world—has performed with Mapfumo, Joan Armatrading, Eurythmics, Harry Belafonte, and Fela Kuti. After hearing Mujuru play to a packed house at the Filmore in San Francisco, the famed Fela said, "This is the very first time I have ever listened to an opening act." Mujuru has appeared on television and radio in the U.S., Europe, and Africa, and at festivals in Asia and Australia. His extensive tours throughout North America and Europe have included concerts at Carnegie Hall, Yale University, and the University of Oslo. His first trip to the U.S. was especially memorable for Mujuru, who captured the experience thus: "An iron horse took me to a place with iron beds. I went across the ocean, and the earth and the heaven became one; it was America. When I woke up, I asked: 'Where are the cowboys?' But I was in New York."

what to buy: A recent album featuring Mujuru as a soloist, Ancient Wisdom ♪♪♪½ (Music of the World, 1998, prod. Bob Haddad) is a good introduction to the mbira, with a mixture of traditional and original pieces.

what to buy next: Shona Spirit ♪♪♪½ (Music of the World, 1996, prod. Bob Haddad), a collaboration with fellow Zimbabwean Dumisani Maraire, is another worthwhile set.

the rest:
Rhythms of Life—Ephat Mujuru ♪♪½ (Lyrichord, 1990)

influences:
⏮ The Mujuru family

⏭ Thomas Mapfumo and Blacks Unlimited, the Bhundu Boys

see also: Fela Kuti, Thomas Mapfumo

Iris Brooks

Hugh Mundell

Reggae, roots reggae

Born 1962, in Kingston, Jamaica. Died 1983, in Kingston, Jamaica.

Hugh Mundell was shot dead at age 21, in a dispute over the ownership of a refrigerator. The shooting took place while Mundell sat in his car, with his close friend Junior Reid watching helplessly from the back seat. Mundell's recorded works were extraordinary for one so young, and we can only guess how he might have developed. Mundell had been making music since the age of 13, when he debuted with the single "Africa Must Be Free by 1983"—still his most famous song and the title track to his first album. The earliest performer in Jamaica to take an anti-apartheid stance, Mundell's gesture soon become a popular sentiment. The subject matter of his music was consistently pacifistic, with a strong roots feel communicated by his breathy alto, the voice audibly breaking with emotion: "Africa must be free/by the year-hear 1983/we have worked for the white man in the blazing sun/no more slavery, no more brutality." The message is all the more profound coming from someone so young. Along with Junior Delgado, Mundell was the young protégé of producer Augustus Pablo. After working with Pablo, Mundell recorded with Junjo Lawes and Prince Jammy. He even produced Junior Reid's debut single, "Speak the Truth," on his own Muni Music label, after which Reid went on to great commercial success. Mundell's later hits included "That Little Short Man" and "Jah Say the Time Has Come," a tragic prophecy of his bloody end.

what to buy: Mundell's biggest impact was with Africa Must Be Free by 1983 ♪♪♪♪ (RAS, 1978/1989, prod. Hugh Mundell), but at least as compelling is the deeply moving Blackman's Foundation ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1989, prod. Hugh Mundell, Augustus Pablo), nine tracks thick with reverb, words of protest, and prayer to Jah. As Mundell's voice matured his recordings became stronger, though they lacked the endearing quality of his fragile alto. Blackman's Foundation features Pablo's famed melodica-playing and spotlights Mundell singing assertive slogans like "Black on black/black some more."

the rest:
Arise ♪♪♪ (Network, 1994)

influences:
⏮ Bob Marley, Yabby You

⏭ Buju Banton, Israel Vibration

see also: Augustus Pablo

David Poole

Maryam Mursal /Waaberi

Somali jazz

Born 1950, in Galcaio, Somalia. Based in Denmark.

"I love music with a groove," Maryam Mursal says. "My songs start with Somali music; I play out the rhythms on congas or oud (prototypical lute), and maintain a traditional style while making it more modern, so young people can dance to it. In Somalia there's no clash between traditional and modern music. I like Dolly Parton, Etta James, Michael Jackson, anyone who puts feeling in the music, but if I borrow from them, I do it in a Somali way." Somalia is Mursal's birthplace, a country best known in the West for the U.S. military's ill-fated intervention in a civil war that dragged on after they left. Although her mother once threatened her with a knife to make her stop singing, Mursal's desire for a music career was fierce. At 17 she joined Waaberi, Somalia's national musical theater; she'd already been singing in nightclubs for three

5 4
2 junior murvin

Maryam Mursal

years, pioneering "Somali jazz," a fusion of international grooves and traditional music. "Our music combined the rhythms of Black Africa and Arabic Africa, India and China," Mursal explains. "I was from a well-to-do family. I knew the Beatles and Ray Charles and put it together with my music." Mursal fled during the civil war, walking her children across Kenya and Ethiopa to Djibouti, where the UN arranged her passage to Denmark. There she met Søren Kjœr Jensen, her collaborator on The Journey, an album aimed at the international market, and New Dawn, a traditional set recorded with the surviving members of Waabèri. "Peter Gabriel thought traditional music would be a good way to introduce Maryam," Jensen says. "We rounded up the musicians from Waaberi that had escaped the war and moved to Europe, to do New Dawn in a traditional style." For The Journey, the album that made Mursal a leading world-music diva, Jensen added some digital polish to her Somali jazz sound. "Lie Lei," a traditional children's song, floats Mursal's husky alto over a hip-house track sprinkled with samples from an old Yma Sumac album, and a bouncy Somali rhythm. "It's modern," Mursal admits, "but the core feeling is pure Somali."

what's available: On The Journey ♪♪♪♪♪ (RealWorld, 1998, prod. Simon Emmerson, Martin Rusell, Søren Kjœr Jensen) Mursal's passionate vocals are supported by a stellar cast that includes some of the Arab world's top session players, members of Waaberi, and her Danish touring band. The clash of popular and traditional impulses produces some thrilling moments. New Dawn ♪♪♪♪½ (RealWorld, 1998, prod. Simon Emmerson, Søren Kjœr Jensen) is the first album of traditional Somalian music released in the West; Mursal's vocals highlight the solid playing of Somalia's top folk musicians, now in exile in Denmark.

influences:
Etta James, Ray Charles, Fairouz, Umm Kulthum

j. poet

Junior Murvin

Roots reggae

Born 1949, in Port Antonio, Jamaica. Based in London, England.

With his trademark eerie, expressive falsetto, Junior Murvin had some minor success in the late '60s covering Curtis Mayfield tunes under the name Junior Soul. In 1972, backed by the excellent Crystalites, he recorded the single "Solomon" for Derrick Harriott, which would later be remade and reconstructed by Lee "Scratch" Perry for the landmark Police and Thieves LP. In 1976, after years of struggle with his career, Murvin planted himself outside of Perry's studio—the tiny, magical shack called the Black Ark, a place where many aspiring musicians patiently waited and competed to be recognized by the diminutive sorcerer/producer. One day Perry overheard Murvin singing "Police and Thieves," a tune inspired by the political violence, death, and lawlessness that gripped Jamaica at the time. Perry, who was also known as "The Upsetter," immediately called Murvin into the Ark and conceived a murky, creepy accompaniment for the timely tune. The single was released in a matter of weeks, held the #1 spot in Jamaica for nearly the rest of the year, and became an underground anthem in England, where riots and chaos imploded the Notting Hill Carnival that same year. To be sure, as nations all over the world were gripped by racial tension, the song was recognized as an international plea for peace, rights, and order. Island's Mango subsidiary then signed Murvin with the agreement that Perry would produce his debut. Released in 1977, the Police and Thieves LP stands today as a mystical, border-crossing Rasta masterpiece. The record was instantly revered by protest movements across the globe; legendary Brit punk-rockers the Clash even covered the title track on their eponymous '77 debut. Though it is true that Police and Thieves depends heavily on Perry's spacey, zero-gravity mix, it is Murvin's singular voice and startling scats that give the album such a compelling, apocalyptic feel. Murvin never again equaled the artistic or popular success of this debut. In the late '70s, he waxed sides for Michael "Mikey Dread" Campbell and scored a minor hit with "Cool Out Son" for Joe Gibbs. Unfortunately, his solid '80s records for the U.K. label Greensleeves—Muggers in the Street and Apartheid—are currently out-of-print. However, Murvin will forever be remembered in the annals of Jamaican music—and world music—for the foreboding, enigmatic classic that marked the zenith of his career.

what to buy: The centerpiece of Police and Thieves ♪♪♪♪ (Mango, 1977, prod. Lee "Scratch" Perry) is, of course, the title cut. Murvin's cool, understated falsetto floats amidst—and subtly cuts through—Perry's skulking, humid, black-cloud atmosphere. But it is Murvin's electrifying, heartstopping midsong soprano scat which makes this one of the most hypnotic and thrilling reggae songs ever recorded. "Roots Train," "Tedious," "False Teachin'," and "Workin' in the Cornfield" are also standouts on this essential roots reggae document.

the rest:
Bad Man Posse ♪♪♪ (Dread at the Controls, 1982)
Muggers in the Street ♪♪♪ (Greensleeves, 1984)
Apartheid ♪♪♪ (Greensleeves, 1986)
Signs and Wonder ♪♪ (Live and Learn, 1989)

post-soca

The past 10 years or so have seen a plethora of offshoots and upstarts in the soca genre (itself a descendent of calypso), many of which—like "ragga soca," with its obligatory gravel-voiced deejay bridge—reflect the Pan-Caribbean popularity of Jamaican dancehall and ragga (digital reggae) music. Other variants include "rapso," a diasporic cousin of U.S. rap and Anglo-Jamaican dub poetry pioneered by Rasta performance poet Brother Resistance; "ring bang," which emphasizes the raw, bottle-and-spoon sound of Carnival's spontaneous "Jouvert" (opening morning) bands; and "binghi," a catch-all form incorporating influences from house, techno, and R&B. Arguably the most significant phenomenon is the emergence of "chutney soca," which inflects the soca beat with tassa drumming, filmi music, and other traditions of Trinidad's enormous ethnic Indian population—most obviously the earlier "chutney" genre. As its name indicates, chutney is itself a creole blend of folk and popular sources, both sacred and secular, which acquired a name only in the late 1960s. Just as fittingly, it is often spicily risqué. Once associated with female-dominated social occasions, chutney territory is now shared by women and men. Stars in the chutney and chutney-soca firmament include the venerable trailblazers Sundar Popo and Cecil Fonrose, as well as Drupatee Ramgoonai, Sonny Mann, Sally Edwards, Brother Marvin (whose 1996 hit "Jahagi Bhai" signaled chutney soca's breakthrough into the mainstream), and two-time winner of the coveted Chutney Soca Monarch festival title Rikki Jai. A worthy introduction to the genre is Hot & Spicy Chutney ♪♪♪♪ (Music Club, 1998).

Michael Eldridge

worth searching for: Arkology ♪♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1997, prod. Lee Perry) is pure dub and reggae lifeblood. Those who submit to this "Scratch" transfusion will have the added benefit of some amazing, previously unreleased Junior Murvin performances coursing through their veins. These include the sizzling "Bad Weed," the restored mix of "Roots Train" (with a maniacal deejay version by Dillinger), an extended mix of "Tedious," and of course, "Police and Thieves," which is presented back-to-back with its instrumental version (Glen DaCosta's "Magic Touch"), deejay version (Jah Lion's #1 Jamaican hit "Soldier and Police War"), and phase-shifter-laden dub version (the Upsetters' stunningly trippy "Grumblin' Dub").

influences:

- Curtis Mayfield, Alton Ellis, Derrick Harriott, Junior Byles, the Abyssinians
- Alpha Blondy, the Clash, Lucky Dube, Michael Rose, Triston Palmer, Linton Kwesi-Johnson, African Head Charge, Aswad

see also: Mikey Dread, Joe Higgs, Lee "Scratch" Perry

Todd Shanker

Musical Youth

Pop-reggae

Formed 1978, in Birmingham, England. Disbanded 1985.

Junior Waite, lead vocals; Dennis Seaton, lead vocals (1981–85); Patrick Waite, vocals; Kelvin Grant, vocals; Michael Grant, vocals; Frederick Waite, lead vocals (1978–79). (All members are from England.)

Musical Youth formed while four of five original members were attending Duddleston Manor School in Birmingham, England; this first version of the band featured Michael Grant and his brother Kelvin, along with the sibling duo of Junior and Patrick Waite—sons of Frederick Waite, a founding member of legendary Jamaican vocal group the Techniques and, in the beginning, Musical Youth's lead singer. The band's debut single, "Political" b/w "Generals," sparked considerable local interest and led to a career-bolstering appearance on John Peel's famed BBC radio show. In late 1981 the Youth signed a major-label deal with MCA and Dennis Seaton stepped in as lead singer; the senior Waite became the band's manager. In 1982 they released their greatest hit, the truly infectious, pop-smoothed reggae joint "Pass the Dutchie," a version of the Mighty Diamonds' "Pass the Kouchie" on Jackie Mittoo's immortal "Full Up" rhythm. This bowdlerized cover slickly switched the patois expression "kouchie" (ganja joint) to the less offensive "dutchie" (a cooking pot). The song reached #1 on the U.K. charts, was Top 10 Stateside, and still stands as one of the best-selling reggae singles ever. The follow-ups—"Youth of Today" and "Never Gonna Give You Up"—lacked the song quality and sales quantity of "Dutchie," but were minor hits, this time just in the U.K. Succeeding singles—"Unconditional Love" with Donna Summer, "Sixteen," and a wretched cover of Desmond Dekker's "Shanty Town (007)"—sold decently in England, but nonetheless marked the beginning of the band's descent into virtual anonymity. Seaton left in 1985 to pursue a solo career. In 1993, plans for the now-obligatory "reunion tour" ended when Patrick Waite suddenly died—apparently of natural causes—while in police custody on drug charges. "Pass the Dutchie" was recently resurrected as a prominent selection in the film The Wedding Singer.

what to buy: Anthology ♪♪♪ (One Way, 1994, prod. various) of course contains the undeniably catchy and zestful "Pass the Dutchie." Little Junior's agile toasting—sprinkled with exclamations like "bim," "oink," and "ribbit," lifted from dancehall acts like Lone Ranger and Papa Michigan & General Smiley—was always the best part of this otherwise weakling reggae band. He gets his due on solid cuts like "Mash It the Youthman, Mash It" and "Children of Zion." This exhaustive single-disc compilation also includes the band's lowlight, "Whatcha Talking 'Bout," a moronic appropriation of the laugh-track inducing catch phrase of Gary Coleman's pint-sized character Arnold on the stomach-spinning sitcom Diff'rent Strokes.

the rest:

Youth of Today ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1982) Different Style ♪♪ (MCA, 1983)

solo outings:

Dennis Seaton:

Imagine That ♪♪ (Bellaphon U.K., 1989)

influences:

- The Techniques, the Mighty Diamonds, Lone Ranger, Papa Michigan & General Smiley, Jackie Mittoo, the Revolutionaries, the Roots Radics
- New Edition, Hanson

see also: The Techniques

Todd Shanker

Musicians of the Nile

Traditional Nile region and Egyptian Gypsy music

Formed in the remote past, in Abu-al-Djud (modern-day Luxor), Egypt. Based in Egypt.

Metqâl Qenâwi Metqâl, rabâbah; Shamandi Tewfiq Metqâl, vocals; Yussef 'ali Bakâsh, vocals; Mohammed Murâd Mejâlî, rabâbah, suffâra, vocals; Yunis al-Hilâli, rabâbah; Mustafâ 'Abd al'-aziz, arghûl; Hanafi Mohamed 'ali, tablah; Qenâwi Bakhit Qenâwi, mizmar; Ramadan Atta Muhammed, mizmar; Jadd al-Rabb Mahmûd, tablah baladi. (All members are from Egypt.)

The Musicians of the Nile are members of a Luxor clan gifted in music, so-called "Charcoal Gypsies" descended from Nubian slaves and Gypsy minorities in Egypt. Veterans of the world-music scene, they made their first international appearance at France's Chateauvallon Jazz Festival in 1975, and played the inaugural festival of the popularizing WOMAD (World of Music, Arts and Dance) organization in 1983. Their instrumentals and passionate epic ballads, like much music from the Nile valley, feature strong, visceral rhythms played on drums like the clay tablah, and pervasive hypnotic drones provided by mizmar oboes, arghûl double-reed clarinets, or rabâbah spike fiddles.

what to buy: The Musicians' first RealWorld CD, Luxor to Isna ♪♪♪♪ (RealWorld, 1989), enchants with mesmerizing ensemble instrumentals such as "Love Is as Vast as a River" and "The Tall Palm Tree," as well as solos like "Everyone Has Had a Broken Heart," on which the arghûl provides both the drone and the melody with the help of its double-reed conformation and the circular breathing technique of soloist Mustafa 'Abd al'-aziz.

what to buy next: Emphasizing the epic vocal ballads over the instrumentals, Luxor 's follow-up, Charcoal Gypsies ♪♪♪½ (RealWorld, 1996), is a good complement to its predecessor. While the music is enjoyable, the accompanying liner notes by Alain Weber tend toward the gratuitous, claiming, for example, that Weber "discovered" the group—one is tempted to ask whether they knew they were musicians prior to Weber's arrival.

worth searching for: Fans of this outfit will also enjoy The Music of Upper and Lower Egypt ♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1984, prod. Mickey Hart) and Music of the Nile Valley ♪♪♪½ (Lyrichord, prod. Alain Weber), both field recordings of various ensembles from the region.

influences:

⏮ Music of the Nawar, Masalib, and Halab Egyptian Gypsies

⏭ Soundtracks of Peter Gabriel

see also: Salamat

Jeffrey Muhr

Sabah Habas Mustapha

Dangdut, kacapi-suling

Born in the town of Szegerely, somewhere in the Balkans. Based in Berlin, Germany.

The youngest brother of the mysterious extended family of musicians known as 3 Mustaphas 3, Sabah is said to have cut his musical teeth playing gigs with them in Szegerely's only club, the Crazy Loquat. Reportedly hidden in refrigerators and spirited into England from Szegerely in 1982, the Mustaphas exploded onto the world-music scene with their tongue-in-cheek, crazy-quilt brand of musical mastery, cutting several hit albums before going into retirement in 1991. Since then, Sabah has performed as a guest musician with various groups, produced albums for the Klezmatics and Ali Hassan Kuban, and traveled to Indonesia, where he recorded two CDs of refined, romantic Indonesian pop with the help of local musicians. The title song from the first of these, Denpasar Moon, was one of the country's biggest pop hits in memory.

what to buy: Drawing upon Sundanese (Western Javanese) kacapi-suling (or "zither-flute") and Western pop and jazz idioms, and topped by Sabah's suave vocals, Jalan Kopo ♪♪♪♪ (Omnium, 1997, prod. Sabah Habas Mustapha) provides plenty of delightfully smooth music. A group of top-quality Sundanese musicians Sabah calls the "Jugala All-Stars" provide washes of Indonesian metallophone, flute, and zither that give the music a strong Javanese flavor. Though the CD has a more unique texture than Denpasar Moon, one still wishes for something a little less urbane and a bit more impulsive.

what to buy next: Denpasar Moon ♪♪♪½ (Piranha, 1994, prod. Sabah Habas Mustapha, Kensuke Shiina) brings together shimmering Indonesian dangdut pop with some Latin and African touches. Sabah sings on romantic themes and revisits "Singe Tema," a Kenyan taarab tune that was covered by the Mustaphas.

influences:

⏮ 3 Mustaphas 3, David Sylvian, Bryan Ferry

see also: 3 Mustaphas 3

Jeffrey Muhr

Mutabaruka

Dub poetry

Born Allen Hope, in Kingston, Jamaica. Based in St. James, Jamaica.

Like Linton Kwesi Johnson, Mutabaruka is among the most respected practitioners of dub poetry—reggae's answer to "spoken word." Muta (as he is widely known) was trained as an electrician and worked for the Jamaican Telephone Company in the early 1970s, but in 1974 he moved from urban Kingston to rural Jamaica and devoted much of his time to writing books of Rastafarian-based poems. Although the artist was combining poetry and music as early as 1973, it wasn't until the early '80s that his recording career really got going. Muta's debut single, "Everytime I 'ear de Soun'," fared well in Jamaica, and he enjoyed much international attention with 1983's Check It, his first studio album. Incendiary, angrily socio-political, and influenced by the teachings of Marcus Garvey, Check It vehemently spoke out against racial oppression and set the militant tone for subsequent albums Muta recorded in the '80s and '90s. In 1998 he organized and led the Roots All-Stars jam, but the project received a lukewarm response from critics, who didn't seemed to feel it met his solo work's high standards. The dub poet commands a small following in the U.S. and a large one in the Caribbean and Europe, though he has refused to tone his lyrics down to reach pop audiences.

what to buy: Mutabaruka has never recorded a bad album, but his most essential releases are Check It ♪♪♪♪½ (Alligator, 1983, prod. Mutabaruka), Outcry ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1984, prod. Mutabaruka), and The Mystery Unfolds ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1987, prod. Mutabaruka). Each of these efforts illustrates the uncompromising nature of Muta's lyrics—never one to record fluff, he turns his wrath on capitalists and socialists alike. But even if you don't agree with all of Muta's Rastafarian/Black Nationalist politics, the urgency he brings to these albums makes them quite compelling.

what to buy next: A "best of" anthology, The Ultimate Collection ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1996, prod. Mutabaruka), paints an impressive picture of Muta's Shanachie output though it doesn't tell the whole story. Essential tracks such as "Outcry," "Angola Invasion," and "Blacks in America" are missing, but gems like "Bun Dung Babylon," "Walking on Gravel," and "Witeman Country" (Shanachie includes a live version from 1989) are nothing to complain about. Black Wi Blak . . . k . . . k ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1991, prod. Mutabaruka) and Melanin Man ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1994, prod. Mutabaruka) aren't quite in a class with Outcry or Check It, but seasoned Muta fans will tell you that they're well worth acquiring nonetheless.

solo outings:
The Roots All-Stars:
Gathering of the Spirits ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1998)

influences:
⏮ U-Roy, I-Roy, Big Youth, King Tubby

see also: Linton Kwesi Johnson, Ini Kamoze, Oku Onuora

Alex Henderson

Muzsikás

See: Márta Sebestyén

Mynta

Jazz, Indian classical

Formed 1979, in Sweden. Based in Sweden.

Fazal Qureshi (India), tabla; Nandkishor Muley (India), santoor; Anders Hagberg (Sweden), saxophone, flute; Max Ahman (Sweden), guitar; Mikael Nilsson (Sweden), percussion; Christian Paulin (Sweden), bass.

This exciting group creates a hybrid of jazz and Indian classical music similar to that of John McLaughlin and Shakti. Mynta's four Swedes and two Indians synthesize a kind of chamber-jazz, mixing the exotic sounds of the santoor hammered dulcimer and tabla drum with standard jazz instruments. The group's most distinctive sonic voice is sax/flute player Anders Hagberg, and the combination of Fazal Qureshi's tabla and Mikael Nilsson's Western percussion delivers a distinctive rhythmic punch.

what to buy: Hot Madras ♪♪♪♪ (Miramar, 1995/Blue Flame, 1998) contains some of Mynta's most effective and evocative blendings of East and West. Recommended are the title tune, with its lively flute and tabla textures, and the slow, meditative "Mbira."

what to buy next: First Summer ♪♪♪ (Blue Flame, 1998) is Mynta's latest disc, with perhaps a bit more of a new-age feel than their earlier works.

the rest:
Indian Time ♪♪♪½ (Intuition, 1997)

influences:
⏮ Shakti, Ornette Coleman

see also: Shakti

Michael Parrish

Naftule's Dream

Modern klezmer

Formed 1993, in Boston, MA, USA. Based in Boston, MA, USA.

Glenn Dickson, clarinet; David Harris, trombone; Michael McLaughlin, piano, accordion; Pete Fitzpatrick, electric guitar; John Manning, tuba; Eric Rosenthal, drums. (All members are from USA.)

Shirim is a Boston-based traditional klezmer orchestra specializing in Yiddish theater music of the 1920s—and Naftule's Dream is Shirim's alter ego. While Shirim continues to play weddings and bar mitzvahs, Naftule's Dream plays cutting-edge klezmer in alternative clubs. The group's front line, clarinetist Glenn Dickson and trombonist David Harris, are two of the more quirky and experimental musicians in their field. Between the moans, shrieks, and horse-laughs of the brass and the vibrato of Fitzpatrick's electric guitar, Naftule's Dream is creating a dramatic new shift in the klezmer landscape.

what to buy: The wildly inventive Smash, Clap! ♪♪♪♪½ (Tzadik, 1998, prod. Glenn Dickson) suggests new directions for collective improvisation in the klezmer genre. The band reminds listeners of the best moments of Lester Bowie's Brass Fantasy on tracks like "Friends of Kafka." The jittery "Free Klez 3 & 4" showcases Dickson's virtuosity on the clarinet. And Michael McLaughlin plays the hippest accordion licks you've ever heard.

what to buy next: In Search of the Golden Dreydl ♪♪♪½ (Tzadik, 1997) boasts several arresting tracks such as Dickson's "Spinoza of Market Street" and Harris's rave-up of the classic "Oy Tate" by Naftule Brandwein (the klezmer pioneer whose name the band bears). But the rest lacks focus, as if the players are still in the midst of discovering their direction.

Najma

worth searching for: Despite its title, Naftule's Dream ♪♪♪½ (Northeastern, 1993) is a hard-to-find Shirim album of Brandwein tunes, some done with a hint of the alternative improvisation that was to come.

influences:
⏮ Naftule Brandwein, John Zorn

Aaron Howard

Najma

Indian pop, Indian light classical, worldbeat

Born in London, England. Based in London, England.

Najma Akhtar is the daughter of Indian immigrant parents and grew up speaking English, although she loved singing along to the filmi music (soundtracks of popular Indian movies) her parents played around the house. On an extended visit to her grandparents, the young singer learned Urdu and began investigating ghazals—short poems that illuminate the agony and ecstasy of romantic love, some of which date back to the 7th century. Poets recite these lyrics and compose new ones at social gatherings, but the highest form of the art is the sung ghazal, and singers are encouraged to write their own music for these timeless gems. Najma began composing her own tunes, and in 1984 she became the first Asian woman to win a song competition (in England people with roots in India are called Asian, to distinguish them from members of the large West Indian community). Soon after, she was approached about making an album. Although it took three years, Qareeb broke new ground for its combination of traditional Indian melodies and Western instruments. This was followed by two more sets that mixed Indian folk and light classical music with Western arrangements and instruments. The singer's latest album is a full-out worldbeat exploration of the filmi songs of S.D. Burman, one of India's great composers of popular music.

what to buy: Najma's vocals are always pleasing on Qareeb ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1988, prod. Iain Scott, Bunt Stafford Clark), with enough Western influence to make them palatable to those who are put off by the high, keening tones many female Indian vocalists affect. The jazzy sax and keyboard arrangements provide another entry for Westerners.

5/4/8 r. carlos nakai

what to buy next: Forbidden Kiss ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1996, prod. Najma, Chris Rael) is worldbeat with an Indian flavor; Najma collaborates with a trio of British and Austrian rockers to update the tunes of S.D. Burman. Surf guitar, sitar, reggae, swooping Indian string parts played on the synthesizer, and Najma's torchy vocals create an exciting exploration of a form little known outside the Indian community and Western popcultists.

the rest:
Pukar ♪♪♪♪ (Mondo Melodia, 1997)

influences:
⏮ Asha Bhosle, Lata Mangeshkar

see also: Page & Plant

j. poet

R. Carlos Nakai

Native flute, jazz, new age, worldbeat

Born April 16, 1946, in Flagstaff, AZ, USA. Based in Tuscon, AZ, USA.

R. Carlos Nakai (Navaho-Ute) has made traditional Native American flute a part of the musical landscape without diluting his spiritual or musical beliefs. "I'm little interested in integrating my culture into the greater American focus," Nakai says. "I'm bringing people into the Native tradition, not taking Native tradition to them."

Nakai was raised in the American West, moving from place to place with his extended family, which included migrant workers and farmers. He'd wanted to play flute since he was a boy, but "when I was forced into the Western music discipline by a teacher in grade school, I was told that men don't play flutes." Nakai was given a trumpet, but he took to the instrument and practiced hard, with an eye toward getting a classical music education at Julliard or Berklee. In 1970, while serving in the navy, he was in a traffic accident and smashed his mouth. After returning home he continued playing. "My lip was in no condition for fine performance, but during that time I remembered a flute song I heard back in 1957 by William Horn Cloud. Soon after, I met a Comanche flute-maker who was trading his flutes for material objects, and that set me on the journey I'm still on."

When Nakai started playing flute in 1982, the tradition was fading. "Doc Tate, Woodrow Hainey and Tom Ware were the only ones playing traditional flute. Later on I discovered Kevin Locke, but what they were doing wasn't getting much attention, even from Natives. A few non-Native flute-makers were working with the instrument, but they were trying to reconfigure it into a recorder." Nakai researched traditional music and began playing gigs. In 1983 he produced his first recording, which he put out on 250 cassettes, to send to friends and booking agents. Ray Boley, head of Canyon Records, heard the cassette and offered Nakai a recording contract. "Being a Native, and knowing how things work in the white man's world, I decided to bone up on the legalities of the record business. Finally, I decided it wouldn't hurt to let them put it out." The album was called Changes and included three traditional songs as well as 12 songs Nakai had composed in a traditional style. "I figured it might sell a few copies for about a year before it died out. I doubted it would be accepted by people outside my own culture, but it's still selling 16 years later. I'm still attempting to understand why it became so popular."

Nakai continues to develop and refine his playing, gradually "using some of the music of the outer culture, when it furthered my own perspective." Nakai began to make a greater impact on the "outer culture" with Natives, a collaboration with pianist Peter Kater that topped Billboard's new-age chart in 1990. Since then Nakai has branched out further in almost every musical direction, including new age, classical, jazz, and worldbeat. "African, Latin, and Native styles were impacted by colonialism," Nakai says. "But Don Cherry (Comanche) and Jim Pepper (Kaw) encouraged me to keep taking from the outer culture to revitalize our own." Nakai's excursions have made him traditional Native music's first superstar, and the first artist to earn a gold record for an album of native music without any new-age or rock flavoring, 1989's Canyon Trilogy. "The Native flute is made from materials that are part of this land, and its sound seems to reconnect people to the land. Even if your ancestors were European, you are now part of this land, which you may not like to hear coming from a Native, but you have to learn who you now are, so we can come together to honor the land."

what to buy: Changes ♪♪♪♪½ (Canyon, 1983, prod. R. Carlos Nakai) is the album that started Nakai's rise to superstardom, and it is a good first choice for listeners. The simplicity and spiritual power that drives his music is already in place. The purity of his sustained notes and his seemingly endless ability to improvise give the music a tranquil, timeless quality.

what to buy next: Those who think Nakai's music is stuck in a new-age rut will be surprised by Kokopelli's Cafe ♪♪♪♪ (Canyon, 1996, prod. R. Carlos Nakai, Will Chipman, J. David Muñiz, Amo Chip, Robert Doyle), credited to the Nakai Quartet. This intercultural group plays world-jazz, with inventive arrangements that mix bits of funk, Afro-Beat, and Native American and Latin rhythms for a smooth, swinging session. Nakai has close to 30 albums out on various labels, ranging from new age to jazz to classical. Take your pick from the rest: Jackalope ♪♪♪½ (Canyon, 1986) is an early jazz excursion with keyboard player Larry Yañez and guitarist Steve Cheseborough. Natives ♪♪♪½ (Silver Wave, 1990) introduced Nakai to the new age movement and remains a bestseller. Winds of Devotion ♪♪♪½ (Earth Sea, 1998) is a collaboration with Tibetan flautist and healer Nawang Khechog, a free-flowing improvisation based on the healing traditions of Native America and Tibet. Native Tapestry ♪♪♪ (Canyon, 1994) combines African percussion with James Demars's "classical" orchestrations. How the West Was Lost ♪♪♪½ (Silver Wave, 1993) is the soundtrack to the PBS series, with music by Peter Kater and Nakai.

influences:

◀◀ Woodrow Hainey, Doc Tate, Tom Ware

▶▶ Kevin Locke, Mirabal, Andrew Vasquez

see also: Steve Gorn

j. poet

Milton Nascimento

Brazilian pop, Brazilian jazz

Born 1942, in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. Based in Brazil.

Milton Nascimento is one of the most significant figures in Brazilian music, both as performer and composer. His vocal abilities are quite phenomenal, gliding from his normal chest voice up to a seamless falsetto. Nascimento's songs have been performed by jazz artists like Sarah Vaughan, Stan Getz, and the Manhattan Transfer. Born in Rio de Janeiro, he was raised in the Brazilian state of Minas Gerais by his adoptive parents. Nascimento played the accordion as a child but had switched to guitar and bass by the time he was a teenager. He also formed an important long-term musical relationship with keyboard player Wagner Tiso when they both played in the same band. Moving to Belo Horizonte, the capital of Minas Gerais, in 1963, Nascimento played area jazz clubs while attending college. His first big break as a songwriter came in 1966 when a tune he wrote called "Cangmo Do Sal" was performed by the popular Brazilian singer Elis Regina. In 1967 Nascimento was voted best performer at the International Song Festival, and one of his compositions, "Travessia" ("Bridges"), copped second place in the writing competition. In addition to writing many of his own songs, Nascimento has been closely involved with a cadre of poets and musicians from Minas Gerais called "Clube da Esquina" or the "Corner Club." As a collective, the club released albums under the names of fellow singer/writer L. Borges and Nascimento that were as important and revolutionary in the early 1970s as the collaboration between Antonio Carlos Jobim and João Gilberto was in the late 1950s. Nascimento has also been heavily involved with the nueva canción ("new song") movement that swept Latin America in the 1960s and 1970s, working with major figures within the genre such as Pablo Milanes, Silvio Rodriguez, and Mercedes Sosa. The socially conscious aspect of that movement is also reflected in Nascimento's non-musical activities; he is a committed political activist speaking for the indigenous peoples of the Amazon, the environment, and Amnesty International. Jazz musicians started becoming aware of his prodigious talents in the late 1960s, when he toured Mexico and the United States in the company of João Gilberto and Art Blakey. Nascimento's first appearance on a U.S. jazz album was on Wayne Shorter's 1974 Native Dancer. Shorter returned the favor on Nascimento's 1976 release Milton, which also featured appearances by Herbie Hancock and Raul DeSouza in addition to Brazilian stalwarts Airto Moreira and Toninho Horta. Pianist Barry Harris even wrote a lovely ballad called "Nascimento" that has been performed by Harris and Tommy Flanagan, among others. As he consolidates his position as a giant of 20th century music, millions on the other side of the stage continue to sing his praises too.

what to buy: Jazz aficionados will have to hunt for familiar names like Hubert Laws, Pat Metheny, and Steve Slagle on Encontros e Despedidas ♪♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1986, prod. Mazola), but they are there. The personnel is geared more toward Nascimento's favorite Brazilian musicians and the result more than justifies his choice. This album leans further into the jazz spectrum then many of his works, and tunes like "Portal da Cor" and the title song could tempt hard-core jazzers to check out the rest of his catalog. Minha Historia ♪♪♪♪½ (PolyGram Latino, 1994, prod. various) and The Art of Milton Nascimento ♪♪♪♪½ (Verve, 1995, prod. various) are both "best of" compilations, featuring many overlapping tunes. The former has "Travessia," perhaps Nascimento's most famous piece; the latter has 20 songs to Minha Historia's 14. Both retail at about the same price and serve as good introductions.

what to buy next: Clube da Esquina ♪♪♪♪ (World Pacific, 1972, prod. Milton Miranda) is a classic album, with L. Borges and the rest of Clube da Esquina. The album blends pop from Lennon and McCartney, folk-song influences from Minas Gerais, and elements of bossa nova for a heady mixture that influenced the direction of much 1970s Brazilian music. Nascimento ♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1997, prod. Russ Titelman, Milton Nascimento) finds Nascimento making a retreat from some of the pop aspects of his later albums. It opens with "Louva-a-Deus (The Praying Mantis)," a percussion fest à la Olodum with Nascimento's vocals floating and diving with ease. "Cuerpo y Alma (Body and Soul)" (not the jazz classic) and "E Agora, Rapaz (And What Now, Man?)" have that indefinable swing native to the best Brazilian music in general and Nascimento's tunesmithing in particular. Tambores de Minas—Ao vivo ♪♪♪♪ (WEA Brazil, 1998, prod. Paulo Junqueiro, Milton Nascimento) may be the best-recorded live set Nascimento has ever released, featuring impressive performances from the leader and his band. Nascimento's mature voice is darker in tone than the one heard in his youth—but that doesn't mean over-the-hill, because the control is still there. Reflective moments ("Ponta de Areia") vie for space with gently rolling semi-ballads ("O Rouxinol"), old classics ("San Vincente"), and percussion-heavy audience-rousers like "Janela para o Mundo." There's even a classy duet with Brazilian pop queen Elis Regina, to open up the show. The crowd, while appreciative, never really interferes with the music.

Milton Nascimento

best of the rest:
Sentinela ♪♪♪♪ (Verve, 1980)
Yauaret ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1988)
Miltons ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1989)
Missa Dos Quilombos ♪♪♪♪ (Verve, 1992)
Amigo ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1996)

worth searching for: Milton ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1976), not to be confused with 1989's Miltons, is a marvelous album that keeps going in and out of print. Originally released in the United States, it's the first full-length album by Nascimento that received any real distribution. The players include Wayne Shorter and Herbie Hancock, but the songs are the real reason to hunt this album up. "Cravo e Canela" is a classic.

influences:
⏮ João Gilberto, Baden Powell, Yma Sumac, Heitor Villa-Lobos

⏭ Novos Baianos

see also: João Gilberto, Antonio Carlos Jobim, Pablo Milanes, Airto Moreira, Olodum, Flora Purim, Elis Regina, Silvio Rodriguez, Mercedes Sosa

Garaud MacTaggart

Johnny Nash

Pop, reggae-influenced pop

Born August 19, 1940, in Houston, TX, USA. Based in England.

The late 1960s and early 1970s pop singles of Texas-born Johnny Nash had a profound effect on the spread of reggae throughout the world. Although he had recorded several Sam Cooke–inspired tunes between 1957 and 1967, Nash left his greatest impression with his reggae-tinged hits "Hold Me Tight" (1968) and the chart-topping "I Can See Clearly Now" (1972), the latter recorded with Bob Marley and the Wailers. Nash was one of the first North American artists to record songs by Marley, including "Nice Time," "Guava Jelly," "Reggae on Broadway," and "Stir It Up," which was a Top Ten hit in 1973.

Nash had grown up singing gospel in a local church choir. By the age of 13, his talents were so impressive that he became a featured performer on the Houston television show Matinee, singing a mixture of country & western, pop, soul, and calypso tunes. From 1956 to 1963, he sang on Arthur Godfrey's nationally broadcast radio and television shows. Nash recorded his debut single "When a Teenager Sings the Blues" in 1957, and he had a minor hit with "A Very Special Love" the following year. In 1959 he collaborated with Paul Anka and George Hamilton IV on the single "The Ten Commandments"; next followed numerous early-'60s singles for Warner Bros., Argo, and Groove, although Nash's only success of the period came as a composer, when his "What King of Love is This" became a Top 20 hit for Joey Dee and the Starlighters. After leaving Godfrey's show in 1963, he performed in supper clubs throughout the United States. In the late 1960s Nash became fascinated with reggae and began recording in Jamaica, first at Byron Lee's studio in Kingston, and eventually at his own newly built studio and on his own record labels, Joda and Jad. He moved to England in 1971, maintaining his ties to his previous adoptive island too.

what to buy: The best of Nash's Jamaican recordings are sampled on The Reggae Collection ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1993, prod. Johnny Nash). Although Nash delivered a weakened brand of reggae, the inclusion of many tracks previously unavailable in the United States makes this a historical document. The Very Best of Johnny Nash ♪♪♪ (Black Tiger, 1995, prod. Johnny Nash) reprises 16 tunes that span Nash's entire career. In addition to several tracks recorded in Jamaica, the album includes his soulful interpretation of Sam Cooke's "Cupid," which became a hit in England in 1969.

best of the rest:
Johnny Nash ♪♪♪ (ABC, 1958)
I Can See Clearly Now ♪♪♪ (Sony, 1990)

influences:
◀◀ Sam Cooke, Bob Marley
▶▶ Eric Clapton, the Rolling Stones

Craig Harris

Pandit Pran Nath

North Indian classical, Hindustani, khayal

Born 1918, in Lahore, Pakistan. Died June 13, 1996, in Berkeley, CA, USA.

A figure admired for his total commitment to music, khayal (classical) singer Pandit ("Teacher") Pran Nath will be remembered primarily for inspiring the American minimalists La Monte Young and Terry Riley. More generally, he made his mark as a sought-after master of the Kirana style of North Indian raga singing, with its legendary emphasis on perfect intonation. His teacher, Abdul Wahid Khan, gave the languishing khayal a new lease on life at the turn of the century and subsequently made the Kirana gharana (school) a great influence on Indian classical music as well as on Western contemporary music. It's primarily due to the commitment of La Monte Young, visual artist Marian Zazeela, and Terry Riley that anything by Nath was ever recorded, and it's a pity more isn't available.

what's available: Short Stories ♪♪♪♪½ (Nonesuch Records, 1993, prod. Bob Hurwitz, Judith Sherman, Kronos Quartet) is the only recording of Pandit Pran Nath currently in print. This disc has just one track by Nath, but it's a classic. "Aba Kee Tayk Hamaree (It is My Turn, Oh Lord)" is a slow 11-minute raga, with tambouras (four-stringed drone instruments) played by Terry Riley and John Constant, tabla drum by Krishna Bhatt, and discrete strings by the Kronos Quartet.

worth searching for: Ragas of Morning and Night ♪♪♪♪♪ (Gramavision/Great Northern Arts, 1991, prod. La Monte Young, Marian Zazeela) is a great recording of "Raga Todi" and "Raga Darbari," but it's hard to locate. Notes by La Monte Young make it a valuable find. Nath is accompanied by sarangi (bowed string instrument), tabla, and tamboura, and the latter's predominance in the mix show Young's influence.

influences:
◀◀ Ustad Abdul Wahid Khan ▶▶ Rhys Chatham, Don Cherry, Jon Gibson, Michael Harrison, Bhimsen Joshi, Nazakat Khan, Salamat Ali Khan, Lee Konitz, Terry Riley, Yoshimasa Wada, La Monte Young

see also: Kronos Quartet

David Paul

Nathan & the Zydeco Cha Chas

See: Nathan Williams

Native Flute Ensemble

Native American flute

Formed 1990, in and around Santa Fe, NM, and San Antonio, TX, USA. Disbanded 1996.

Jessita Reyes, John Martinez, and Lois Little Bear rotated on Native American instruments such as the Native American flute, Taos drum, Yaqui rain stick, log drum, Apache spirit flute, and Hopi rattle, as well as synthesizers. (All members are from USA.)

Drawing on Native American history, culture, and mythology, the Native Flute Ensemble developed a sound bordering on both the traditional and the new-age. Heavy use of percussion and soaring flute lines characterize their music, with lush synthesizers occasionally creating a backdrop while at other times the unembellished sound of the native instruments stands alone. The melodies, while traditionally inspired, are almost exclusively originals. The ensemble's recordings revolve around themes, such as the influence of the horse in Native American culture (as represented by the rhythmic sound of thundering hooves on Riding Thunder).

what to buy: Gathering of Shamen ♪♪♪♪ (Talking Taco, 1993) takes the listener on a trance-like journey, exploring several of the popular ritual sites of Native Americans, including the Black Hills of South Dakota, Canyon de Chelly, and Atitlan in Guatemala. Dynamic use of percussion and evocative flute solos make this recording stand out from the rest. Guest percussionist Eric Casias adds a rare flavor to the last cut with the sound of an ocean drum.

what to buy next: On Enchanted Canyons ♪♪♪ (Talking Taco, 1990), the Native Flute Ensemble paints a picture of what it might have been like in the society of the ancient Anasazi. Using the drawings of Kokopelli—the mysterious flute-playing figure shown on countless ancient southwestern rock surfaces and now adorning countless new-age trinkets—as the basis of their belief that native flute was an important part of the culture, they explore the sights and sounds of the surrounding canyons and ruins that remain from this fascinating civilization. The musical picture they create is quite compelling.

the rest:
Ritual Mesa ♪♪♪ (Talking Taco, 1990)
Temple of the Dream Jaguar ♪♪ (Talking Taco, 1991) Riding Thunder ♪♪♪ (Talking Taco, 1994)

solo outings:
Jessita Reyes:
Deer Dancer (Talking Taco, 1991)

influences:
◀◀ Kitaro, R. Carlos Nakai

Jo Hughey Morrison

Emilio Navaira /Emilio

Tejano, conjunto, country, pop

Born August 23, 1963, in San Antonio, TX, USA. Based in USA.

In the Latin music world, Texan Emilio Navaira is known as the King of Tejano, a jaunty blend of German polka, folkloric Mexican music, and traditional country styles with a modern, rock-oriented touch. He first stuck to the accordion-fueled conjunto sound—the rootsier predecessor of Tejano—and struck gold. But later, with his George Strait garb, photogenic looks, and penchant for singing English-language country and rock tunes on his albums and in concert, Navaira dropped the last name and recorded a mainstream country album in Nashville, away from the San Antonio, Texas, base he's accustomed to.

what to buy: SoundLife ♪♪♪♪ (EMI Latin, 1994, prod. Raul Navaira, Emilio Navaira, Stuart Dill) crosses the boundaries dividing old-school Mexican rhythms and new, pop-edged hybrids. Quedate ♪♪♪♪ (EMI Latin, 1996, prod. Michael Morales, Ron Morales, Raul Navaira, Emilio Navaira, Stuart Dill) delivers the familiar stuff, then successfully experiments with 1970s rock elements and flamenco guitar-laced ballads.

what to avoid: Life Is Good ♪♪ (Capitol, 1995, prod. Barry Beckett) doesn't do Emilio justice. His robust, raspy voice struggles to remain vital in the midst of gutless production. Singing a batch of middle-of-the-road songs safely aimed at mainstream country radio, Emilio sounds like he walked into the studio and followed every order given by the producer, not once offering an original idea.

influences:
◀◀ Little Joe, Roberto Pulido, George Strait ▶▶ Rick Orozco, Rick Trevino

Mario Tarradell

Youssou N'Dour

Mbalax

Born 1959, in Dakar, Senegal. Based in Senegal.

Youssou N'Dour is one of West Africa's leading singers. The originator of mbalax, a dance-inspiring mixture of African, Caribbean, and Western pop, N'Dour has transformed the music of Senegal into an international phenomenon. Descended from a long line of griots (oral historians), N'Dour has sung all of his life. As a youngster, he performed at local gatherings in the impoverished Medina section of Dakar. Shortly after making his professional singing debut—at the age of 12—N'Dour joined the Star Band, one of Senegal's most popular groups. In 1979 he left the band and formed the Étoile de Dakar to play his newly conceived mbalax style. Although the term "mbalax" came from the Wolof language's description of the rhythm traditionally played by the mbung mbung drum, N'Dour's approach called for this rhythm to be played on guitar, and for that of the sabar drum to be played on guitar and keyboards. Following his first visit to Paris in 1983, N'Dour wrote a tune, "Immigres," that was heard by British vocalist Peter Gabriel. Gabriel was so moved by it that he had N'Dour sing harmony on his recording "In Your Eyes" in 1986, and chose

Youssou N'Dour

nelson

N'Dour as the opening act for his worldwide tour the following year. In 1988 N'Dour joined with Gabriel, Bruce Springsteen, Sting, and Tracy Chapman on Amnesty International's Human Rights Now tour, thus advancing his stature as one of the earliest "world music" artists whose success bore out the scope of the term. In the 1990s N'Dour cut down on touring to focus on studio recordings. His apex to date came in 1994 with the hit duet with Nenah Cherry, "7 Seconds," from his album Wommat—The Guide, and his internationally broadcast set at the 25th-anniversary Woodstock Festival that same year.

what to buy: Wommat—The Guide ♪♪♪♪ (Chaos, 1994, prod. Boogie Bear) remains N'Dour's most commercially successful album, with the hit "7 Seconds," a unique interpretation of Bob Dylan's "Chimes of Freedom," and several tunes featuring the saxophone playing of Branford Marsalis. The best of N'Dour's late-1980s recordings are reprised on Hey You: The Essential Collection ♪♪♪½ (Nascente, 1998, prod. Youssou N'Dour).

the rest:
Immigres ♪♪♪½ (Earthworks, 1988)
Nelson Mandela ♪♪♪½ (Verve, 1988)
The Lion ♪♪♪½ (Virgin, 1989)
Set ♪♪♪½ (Virgin, 1990)
Eyes Open ♪♪♪½ (40 Acres & A Mule, 1992)
Djamil ♪♪♪½ (Celluloid, 1997)

worth searching for: Released only in his native Senegal, the two-cassette set Live '93 ♪♪♪♪ (Studio 2000, 1994, prod. Youssou N'Dour) captures the excitement and dynamic rhythms of N'Dour's live shows.

influences:
⏮ Star Band, Super Diamono ⏭ Ismael Lô, Baaba Maal, Orchestre Baobab

see also: Manu Dibango, Étoile de Dakar, Cheikh Lô, Jimi Mbaye, Alan Stivell

Craig Harris

Nelson /Lord Nelson

Soca

Born c. 1930, in Tobago, Trinidad and Tobago. Based in Brooklyn, NY, USA.

Nelson has been a major calypso (and soca) artist for almost 40 years, and one of the artists credited with introducing the latter genre (a contraction of SOul and CAlypso) to the world. "I lived in New York City, so it was natural that R&B and Latin music would creep into my songs," Nelson says, "but I don't think any one person invented soca. We all did it together."

After finishing high school in Tobago, Nelson came to the United States to seek his fortune, but six weeks after entering the country, he was drafted and sent to Korea. "I started singing and performing comedy in Army shows," Nelson recalls. "I found out I had a gift for it." After coming back home, Nelson sang with local steel bands in Brooklyn. "We did covers of the popular calypsos of the day. Since I hadn't been back to the islands in years, I had my own way of doing things." Nelson's unique style made him a favorite in Brooklyn's Caribbean community, but he didn't consider composing his own material until he became friends with the Mighty Duke. "Duke was encouraging. He taught me how to compose music, how to write a tight lyric, and encouraged me to continue to develop my style." Nelson's early hits, including "La La," "Stella," and "King Liar," electrified the calypso community with their funky beat. Since Nelson lives in the U.S., he isn't allowed to compete in the Carnival King contests in Trini, but in 1989 he won the title of Uncrowned King in a special competition for calypsonians from off-island. "There is a lot of jealousy in Trinidad," Nelson says. "They don't let singers from other countries compete, but in the long run, it's worked in my favor. I took calypso all over the world—South America, Canada, England, Europe, places the other singers seldom go."

Nelson became one of the few soca artists to get his music distributed in mainstream America when he signed with Shanachie in 1990. They put out two albums that helped introduce him to worldbeat fans, and on his first American release When the World Turns Around he added a bit of rap and reggae, as well as some African rhythms, to his international potpourri. "I find all black music inspiring, anything with a good backbeat. I make sure every song has a story, and love to play with words and use double entendres. That way the children can always understand it, while their parents can listen to it on a whole other level."

what to buy: When the World Turns Around ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1990, prod. Granville Straker), a digital remake of Love You Forever (originally on the Joker label), is a solid soca outing from one of the music's best practitioners. Nelson's tenor has a unique, gritty quality that's especially effective on his love songs, where he can purr like a kitten or growl like a lion before sliding up to a thrilling falsetto. The band is solid and the tempos are kicking.

what to buy next: The production on Bring Back the Voodoo ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1991, prod. Nelson, Mojah, Eddie Bullen, Michael Gould) is more stripped-down, but the music still sizzles. The set includes a re-make of "Mi Love," one of Nelson's big hits from the mid-1980s.

best of the rest:
We Like It ♪♪♪♪ (B's, 1982)

Hotter Than Hot ♪♪♪♪♪ (B's, 1983)
The Chief ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1990)

influences:

⏮ Lord Melody, Mighty Duke, Roaring Lion, Sparrow

⏭ Machel Montano

j. poet

The New Orleans Klezmer All Stars

Rock-funk klezmer

Formed 1991, in New Orleans, LA, USA. Based in New Orleans, LA, USA.

Ben Ellman, soprano and tenor saxophones, tambourine; Robert Wagner, clarinet, bass clarinet, percussion; Rick Perles, violin (1991–98); Glenn Hartman, accordion, piano, organ, toy piano, prepared piano; Johnathan Freilich (England), acoustic and electric guitars, sleigh bells; Arthur Kastler, acoustic and electric bass, slide whistle, bicycle horn; Stanton Moore, drums; Kevin O'Day, drums. (All members are from USA unless otherwise noted.)

The most rockin' klezmer outfit around, the New Orleans Klezmer All Stars, started out when musicians from several "Big Easy" bands met and jammed. As the group learned more tunes and became a more cohesive unit, they began playing in public. They did the expected wedding and bar mitzvah gigs, but also appeared at bars and night clubs, attracting a diverse crowd ranging from hippies to Jewish grandparents. Their first, eponymous CD was released in 1994, and they won the Big Easy Award for Best Folk Artist in 1994 and 1995. Wider recognition came after successful appearances at the New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival; the band hit clubs and concert venues in many major U.S. cities and even played at the Barbican Centre in London, England. But undoubtedly one of All Stars' most special gigs is their annual "unofficial" Mardi Gras parade, the manic "Juloo" parade. Recordings have continued to appear on a regular basis, with later releases showing an increasing emphasis on original material. Manichalfwitz was released in 1996, followed by The Big Kibosh in 1997. Fresh Out the Past, the boys' wildest recording yet, was released in March 1999.

what to buy: The Big Kibosh ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997, prod. Joe Ferry, the New Orleans Klezmer All Stars) is the most balanced of the band's four recordings, with a good mix of fast, frantic tunes and slower pieces. It's also the last N.O.K.A.S. album to feature violinist Rick Perles. Manichalfwitz ♪♪♪♪♪ (Gert Town, 1996, prod. Lizz Farrakhan) was the group's second recorded offering, and the faster tracks sound like klezmer played by a rock/funk band. The roots are there, but the rhythms are speeded up, noisy electric guitar riffs jump in and out, and the sax and clarinet blowing will make the listener think of anything from a rough 'n' ready 1950s rock 'n' roll band to an avant-garde jazz combo.

the rest:

The New Orleans Klezmer All Stars (Stretchy, 1994) Fresh Out the Past ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1999)

influences:

⏮ Boiled in Lead, Brave Combo, the Neville Brothers, 3 Mustaphas 3

⏭ The Klezmatics

Ken Roseman

NG La Banda /Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Cuban son, rumba, guaracha, timba, salsa

Formed 1988, in Cuba. Based in Cuba.

Extensive and changeable membership has included: José Luis Cortés, producer, arranger, flute; José Miguel Crego, trumpet; Calixto Oviedo Mulens, drums; Issac Delgado, vocals (1989–91); Mariano Mena Pérez, vocals; Miguel Angel de Armas, keyboards; Feliciano Arango Noa, bass; Rolando Pérez Pérez, alto saxophone; Elpido Chapotín Delgado, trumpet; Pablo Cortéz, bongos; Roldolfo Argudin Justiz, piano; Francisco Antonio (Tony) Calá, vocals; Juan Nogueras Jordan, percussion; Rafael Jenks Jiménez, tenor saxophone; Guillermo Amores Silveiras, guiro. (All members are from Cuba.)

In 1988 a group of graduates from Havana's state conservatory formed the ground-breaking timba (contemporary salsa) band Nueva Generación (New Generation)—since known as NG (pronounced "enna-hey") La Banda—to explore Cuban dance music and Latin jazz. Led by José Luis Cortés, known in Cuba as "el Tosco" (the Coarse One), these players had received their classical training during a time when jazz was not wholly accepted and serious musicians did not play dance music in the streets. They originally formed the band to play concert music that would take advantage of their conservatory training, a very precise kind of dance music that was meant to please musicians, critics, and intellectuals. It was a flop.

So, opting for the music of the people, they decided to play what they felt—music for dancers—and that decision led to their great success and their launching the whole timba movement, which builds on the rhythms of son, guaracha, and rumba; the same roots as the New York–bred salsa. But with its pronounced syncopation, timba is even easier to dance to. According to Cortés, a flutist who had played with such seminal Cuban outfits as Los Van Van (from 1970 to 1980) and Irakere (from 1980 to 1987), NG La Banda set out to establish a middle ground between the two styles, melding any international rhythms with Afro-Cuban music. They polished their sound in the barrios of Havana, acquiring a following of thousands and a slew of radio hits, including "La Expresiva," an ode to the barrio which has endured as an anthem of Cuban pride. Cortés continued to write songs the people could relate to, drawing from social and political themes of his country. His often vulgar lyrics, filled with street slang, sexual innuendo, and references to racism, prostitution and the economy, have gotten him into frequent trouble with government censors. Since its inception, NG La Banda has become one of the most popular groups on Cuba's dance-music scene and is becoming the Band That Launched a Thousand Careers—over the past decade such outstanding young talents as singers Issac Delgado, Paulito FG, and Manolín, and drummer Giraldo Piloto, among others, have stinted with the group before successfully venturing out on their own.

NG La Banda's blend is a frenzied, crowd-pleasing mix. Yet because of the U.S. embargo against Cuba, their discography is in disarray and their music is hard to find in this country, especially outside of large metropolitan areas. Still, the band has recorded or appeared on about 40 albums and continues to tour, perform, and gain international fans.

what to buy: A compilation of their best early material, En la Calle ♪♪♪♪♪ (Qbadisc, 1992, prod. José Luis Cortés) collects nine tracks recorded in Havana in 1989 and 1990 as the band's reputation was growing. With their danceable grooves, impeccable arrangements, provocative lyrics, and jazz-based instrumental solos, they generate plenty of excitement on this recording, which spotlights vocalist Issac Delgado before he left the band in 1991 to launch his phenomenal solo career. While their music is laden with percussion and focuses on vocals, the horn section is prominently featured in melody leads and call-and-response segments as they navigate some intricate Cortés arrangements. Cortés's own flute playing adds sweet sonorities as he soars above horns and percussion on some tunes. This is joyful, party-atmosphere music that will have even the most recalcitrant listeners up and moving.

what to buy next: Veneno ♪♪♪♪ (Metro Blue, 1998) is a sophisticated, 12-tune album incorporating Pan-Caribbean musical influences and various Latin rhythms. Translated, the album title means "venom" or "poison." Perhaps a dose of their music is so infectious you're forever changed; it sure is hard to sit still during these 52 minutes. Updated for the late 1990s, rhythms remain danceable, some tunes being infused with straight-ahead jazz solos, funk-rap beats ("Cucalambé"), NYC salsa ("Verano habanero"), and smooth-jazz tinges ("Veneno"). Vocal choruses are dense and arrangements are slicker and more intricate. Cortés has crafted alluring compositions that provide for spontaneous collective and individual performances, but you don't hear much of his flute playing on this disc. The major difference of this album from their others is the appearance of a talented, passionate female vocalist on three ballads (unfortunately, musicians are not listed). The driving rhythms, the bold, brassy horns, and the confident and expressive Spanish vocals that stand out even if you don't understand them—all make this a compelling recording.

best of the rest:
Best of NG La Banda ♪♪♪♪ (BMG/Milan Latino, 1997)

influences:
- Bailar con Cuba, Mario Bauzá, Juan Formell y Los Van Van, Irakere, Israel "Cachao" López, Mongo Santamaria, Chico O'Farrill
- Issac Delgado y Su Orquesta, Arturo Sandoval & the Latin Train

see also: Issac Delgado, Manolín, El Médico de la Salsa

Nancy Ann Lee

Mbongeni Ngema

Mbanqanga

Born 1955, in Verulam, South Africa. Based in Johannesburg, South Africa.

Ngema is best known in the United States as a playwright; with his partner Percy Mtwa, he co-wrote and starred in the award-winning Woza Albert!, an anti-apartheid comedy/drama of uncommon power. He also wrote and produced Asinamali and Sarafina!, works that helped keep the political struggle of black South Africans in the minds of Americans. Ngema was born in a township and was working to support his family before he finished high school, sometimes as a musician playing background music for theatrical productions. One night the lead in Lucky Mavundla's Isigcino took sick and Ngema filled in, which led to his successful theatrical career. In 1979 he moved to Soweto and joined Gibson Kente's theater for Mama and the Load. In 1981 he met Mtwa and they created Woza Albert!, which went on to tour the world for more than five years, garnering rave reviews wherever it played. Ngema returned home and wrote Asinamali, which opened in New York in 1986. Next up was his debut album, Stimela Sase-Zola, which featured the talents of the Soul Brothers and the Music Unlimited Orchestra; and then the dramatic musical Sarafina!, for which Ngema provided book, music, and lyrics. While he was in New York with Sarafina!, Ngema also recorded Time to Unite, his first international release.

what to buy: In Sarafina! ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1988, prod. Mbongeni Ngema), Ngema's tale follows Sarafina and her classmates at Morris Isaacson High School during the bloody anti-apartheid riots of 1976. The subject matter is serious, a matter of life and death for some students, but Ngema manages to find hope and humor in this epic struggle. The music is remarkably low-key for such a charged subject, but the message comes through loud and clear: even in the most dire of circumstances, the human soul will rise up and sing.

what to buy next: Like Sarafina!, Time to Unite ♪♪♪½ (Mango, 1988, prod. Mbongeni Ngema) is given an understated performance that intensifies its tales of life under apartheid. The cast of Sarafina! provides spirited backing vocals on most tracks.

influences:

- Rupert Bopape, Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens, Soul Brothers

j. poet

Samba Ngo

Afropop, worldbeat

Born 1950, in Zaire (now Congo). Based in Santa Cruz, CA, USA.

Ngo, like many of his African contemporaries, is interested in transforming the music of his youth into a pop sound that will captivate the sophisticated international listener. Since 1986 Ngo has been based in Santa Cruz, California, where he has gradually put together a powerhouse band he calls the Ngoma Players, a unit that combines soukous (African rumba), jazz, rock, and pop into a smooth multicultural confection. Ngo was born in Congo and was playing kalimba (thumb piano) in the village orchestra by the time he was six. He began teaching himself guitar at age 15, after hearing the legendary Franco's TPOK Jazz group. In 1964 he moved to Brazzaville, Congo, where he joined Echo Noire. Echo Noire moved to Paris in the early 1970s. After settling in Paris himself, Ngo joined M'Bamina, an international unit that toured the world and recorded nine albums. In 1985 he decided to start his own band, and chose California as its home base, so he wouldn't be tempted into session work in the booming Paris world-music scene. Ngo has made two solo albums since coming to the United States, and the second, Metamorphosis, was just picked up by Compass Records, the eclectic Nashville label run by progressive bluegrass star Allison Brown.

what's available: As heard on Metamorphosis ♪♪♪♪ (Compass, 1998, prod. Samba Ngo, Steve Carter), Ngo's jazzy Afropop fusion is both multicultural and ear-friendly. His eclectic guitar style slips from the smooth, rippling single-note leads of soukous, to the muted staccato picking of Zimbabwean chimurenga, to the ringing chords of jazzman Wes Montgomery, while the funky bass lines and sharp horn parts add a pleasing pop sheen to the proceedings.

worth searching for: Introspection ♪♪♪ (Elingo, 1990, prod. Samba Ngo, Steve Carter), Ngo's first solo outing on his own

india, north and south

The classical music of India can be divided into two main categories: the Hindustani style of North India and the karnatak style of South India. The two sounds are similar in their general outlook and theoretical background, but differ in a variety of details, due mainly to the more prominent Islamic influence on the music of the North. To Western ears, karnatak music may seem more emotionally direct than the usually serene, restrained characteristics of Hindustani. While the alaap—the opening segment, in which the soloist introduces the primary musical theme—of many North Indian classical raga pieces proceeds in a refined, stately manner, karnatak musicians are more liberal in adding decorative flourishes. Where Hindustani players then veer off into abstract, almost jazz-like improvisations (albeit within certain traditional confines), karnatak music places greater importance on compositional structure. But the most obvious way to tell a Hindustani recording from a karnatak one is simply by looking at the instruments used. In the classical music of North India, the most important melodic instrument is the sitar, a lute with six or seven main strings (two or three of which are used for drones) and anywhere from 11 to 19 sympathetic strings. South India's version, the veena, has no sympathetic strings, as karnatak musicians appear not to like the somewhat hollow tone they give the instrument. For percussion, Hindustani music features the tabla—actually a pair of drums, one with a high ringing tone, the other with a bendable bass tone—almost exclusively, while karnatak music tends to favor percussion ensembles comprising a variety of drums, the mridangam being the most prominent. And though the North Indian classical ethic is notoriously traditional, accepting the introduction of new instruments like the santoor hammered dulcimer only slowly over time, karnatak musicians seem eager to experiment with new sounds—guitars, mandolins, and saxophones all having been embraced in recent years.

see also: Indian percussion (sidebar), the Sitar (sidebar), the Tabla (sidebar) small label, already shows him on the path to the bubbly Afropop of Metamorphosis.

Bret Love

influences:

⏮ Fela Kuti, Franco, Thomas Mapfumo

⏭ Alpha Yaya Diallo, Angélique Kidjo

j. poet

Maire Ní Chathasaigh

Celtic harp

Born April 21, 1956, in County Cork, Ireland. Based in England.

Until recently the harp had, for the most part, fallen out of the world of traditional Irish dance music. While there were a few scattered players and a harp category remained at the All-Ireland competition, the rarity and expense of the instrument meant that there were few harpers in the rural countryside where traditional music survives most strongly. During the last 30 years, artists like Derek Bell of the Chieftains, Antoinette McKenna, and even Mary O'Hara had helped to start a harp revival, but it wasn't until the 1980s and the arrival of Maire Ní Chathasaigh's recordings that harpers began to use the techniques and ornamentation common to Irish dance music. Her precise, technically proficient style is based on the playing of the fiddlers and pipers she heard as a child in County Cork in the west of Ireland. Her first recording, The New Strung Harp, introduced audiences to her use of traditional ornamentation—including the rolls, cuts, and slurs common to fiddles, accordions, and pipes—and served as a revelation to harpers all over the Celtic world. The album forced harpers everywhere to raise their playing standards and changed forever the role of the harp in dance music. Born into a musical family (her sister is fiddle player Nollaig Casey) and brought up speaking both Irish and English, Ní Chathasaigh began playing the harp at age 12, having already learned whistle and piano. She attended University College, Cork, where she spent time collecting songs and music from traditional players in the area and received an honors degree in Celtic studies. Having won numerous harp competitions in her youth, Ní Chathasaigh is now a fixture as a judge and teacher at those same competitions. She has toured and taught throughout the United States and Europe, both as a solo performer and with her long-time musical partner, guitarist Chris Newman. She currently lives in England and is also president of Old Bridge Records, her own label.

what's available: The New Strung Harp ♪♪♪♪♪ (Temple, 1985/1997, prod. Robin Morton) is a classic. When released in 1985, the recording showed a new way to play Irish jigs and reels on the harp. Modeled on the playing of fiddlers and pipers, Ní Chathasaigh's playing mimics those instruments in her style of ornamentation, allowing her music to fit as closely as possible into the dance-music idiom. She shows off her awesome technique on the set of reels "The Volunteer" and "The Pullet" and on the jig "Gander in the Pratie Hole," and she also sings a few traditional Irish songs in a sweet, clear voice. Although other harpers have in the intervening years raised their level of playing to Ní Chathasaigh's, she was the first to play in this modern style, and for that reason she is important listening. The Carolan Albums ♪♪♪♪ (Old Bridge, 1994) is an essential compilation of the music of Turlough O'Carolan, a blind 18th-century itinerant considered to be the last of the great traveling Irish harpers. His compositions have become a major part of the traditional Irish repertoire and Ní Chathasaigh's precise, confident performances set a new standard for this important material.

worth searching for: Ní Chathasaigh's other recordings, all with guitarist Newman, are available on the import Old Bridge label. They are: The Living Wood ♪♪♪½ (Old Bridge, 1995); Out of Court ♪♪♪ (Old Bridge, 1991); and Live in the Highlands ♪♪♪ (Old Bridge, 1995).

influences:

⏮ Antoinette McKenna, Grainne Yeats

⏭ Aine Minogue, Sue Richards, Carol Thompson

Tony Ziselberger

Maighread Ní Dhomhnaill

Celtic

Born in County Donegal, Ireland. Based in Ireland.

Maighread Ní Dhomhnaill sings in Gaelic and English in a manner known as sean-nós ("old style"), a tradition believed to be descended from the bardic singers of ancient Ireland. Other singers who use this heritage in some of their popular work include Dolores Keane and Mary Black. Maighread was a member of the group Skara Brae with her brother Mícháel Ó Domhnaill and her sister Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill, both of whom have gone on to musical careers as solo artists and producers, as well as members, at various points, of such groups as the Bothy Band and Nightnoise.

what's available: No Dowry ♪♪♪♪ (1991, Gael-Linn, prod. Dónal Lunny) is a confident and engaging production of music in the old style. Perhaps easier to locate is the compilation A Woman's Heart 2, which contains a cut from this album (and is reviewed in this book's Compilations section). Her first album—with a different spelling of her name—Mairead Ní Dhomhnaill (Gael-Linn, 1976), is difficult to find.

influences:

⏮ Seán Ó Riada

see also: Mary Black, the Bothy Band, Dolores Keane, Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill, Nightnoise, Trian

Kerry Dexter

Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill

Irish folk

Born late 1940s, in Donegal, Ireland. Based in Portland, OR, USA.

With her expressive, heavily brogued soprano vocals and melodic harpsichord playing, Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill has been at the forefront of modern Celtic music for more than two decades. Although her solo outings have been limited to a single album, Tríona, released in Ireland in 1976 and the United States in 1983, Ní Dhomhnaill has showcased her vocal warmth in such influential Celtic bands as Skara Brae, the Bothy Band, Touchstone, Relativity, and Nightnoise. Many of Ní Dhomhnaill's recordings have been in collaboration with her brother, Míchéal Ó Domhnaill, a virtuosic Celtic guitar player. In the early 1970s, she and Míchéal joined with their sister, Maighread, and multi-instrumentalist Dáithí Sproule to form the tradition-rooted Gaelic band Skara Brae. Their introduction to most American audiences, however, came when they became founding members of the Bothy Band, a group formed by ex-Planxty bouzouki player Dónal Lunny in 1975 that combined Ireland's musical traditions with a modern sensibility. Emigrating to the United States in 1979, Ní Dhomhnaill recorded two albums of Irish, American, and Nova Scotian music as a member of the Chapel Hill, North Carolina–based band Touchstone. After moving to Portland, Oregon, Ní Dhomhnaill reunited with her brother, who had preceded her to the United States. After she'd toured and recorded two albums with Scottish brothers John and Phil Cunningham (of Silly Wizard fame) as Relativity, the reunion with Míchéal became musical too, with both she and he (as well as John Cunningham and others) playing in the Celtic new-age band Nightnoise.

what to buy: Ní Dhomhnaill's only solo album, Tríona ♪♪♪♪ (Gael-Linn, 1976/Green Linnet, 1983, prod. Míchéal Ó Domhnaill), combines traditional Irish tunes in Gaelic with songs sung in English, including the memorable gender-switching ballad "When I Was a Fair Maid."

influences:

◀◀ Planxty, Jean Redpath

▶▶ Mary Black, Maura O'Connell

see also: The Bothy Band, Johnny Cunningham, Dónal Lunny, Nightnoise, Maighread Ní Dhomhnaill, Silly Wizard, Trian

Craig Harris

Nightnoise

Celtic fusion

Formed 1983.

Billy Oskay, violin, viola, keyboards (1983–90); Mícheál Ó Domhnaill, guitar, whistles, synthesizers, vocals; Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill, keyboards, vocals, whistles, accordion (1986–present); Brian Dunning, flutes, panpipes (1986–present); John Cunningham, fiddle, vocals (1991–present). (Members are from Ireland and Scotland.)

Familiarity with French Impressionist painters like Monet might help an unfamiliar listener understand the group Nightnoise. Calling on backgrounds from the classical to the traditional Irish, this group has assembled a mist-covered image from a series of brightly colored impressions. Pulling their various backgrounds together, they have created a soft, romantic mood with the music they play. Nightnoise has a distinct and unusual sound, with a new-age feel to the instrumentation, but with more of a jazz-like rhythm to the music. Unquestionably Celtic in background, the group never exactly attempts to be traditional, yet it never loses the sense of the traditional either. Definitely not rock, but far too varied to be new age, this group is just plain hard to classify. There is a chamber-folk quality to them, but the music also borders on pop and still maintains an Irish feel. Perhaps they are the closest thing the Irish have to American jazz. The band was started by Billy Oskay, who wanted to record some tracks and asked Mícheál Ó Domhnaill to join him. The resulting music soon became the album known as Nightnoise, and they decided to take their show on the road. They added a piano player and a second fiddler for the tour, and by the time they were ready to record again, they had added Ó Domhnaill's sister Tríona (from Touchstone and the Bothy Band) and Brian Dunning to the mix. When Oskay decided to leave, they quickly filled his position with John Cunningham (of Silly Wizard fame). What appealed to these top-notch performers with busy solo schedules was the loose-knit structure of the group, which does ample touring but allows the members plenty of time to pursue other projects during the course of the year. This may be key to their success as a unit, with exploration of other creative outlets keeping the songwriting juices flowing and resulting in highly evocative and creative music from Nightnoise.

what to buy: Shadow of Time ♪♪♪½ (Windham Hill, 1993, prod. Dawn Atkinson, Nightnoise) contains a delightful mix of traditional and new material, sporting soaring flute lines, rhythmic piano accompaniment, and melodic fiddle. Exciting rhythms highlight "Silky Flanks," a wonderful instrumental track, and amazing Gaelic vocals create rhythm, melody, harmony, and texture in the mouth music (unaccompanied Scottish dance song) "Fionnghuala." This is new-age folk at its best.

what to buy next: A Different Shore ♪♪♪½ (Windham Hill, 1995, prod. Nightnoise) is also filled with new age–style music in a slightly more exotic vein. The arrangements include wonderful fiddle, flute, and vocal lines, brilliantly performed. The melodic piano line on the song "Falling Apples" and the throaty bass flute line on the title track are particularly lovely.

what to avoid: Both At the End of the Evening ♪♪♪ (Windham Hill, 1988, prod. Nightnoise) and Something of Time ♪♪♪ (Windham Hill, 1987, prod. Billy Oskay, Mícheál Ó Domhnaill) seem to have more new-age material and less folk substance to them than Nightnoise's other albums. A lack of tension in the music keeps these albums from living up to the group's overall standard.

the rest:
Oskay & Ó Domhnaill: Nightnoise ♪♪♪ (Windham Hill, 1984)
Parting Tide ♪♪♪ (Windham Hill, 1990)
Nightnoise: A Windham Hill Retrospective ♪♪♪ (Windham Hill, 1992)
The White Horse Sessions ♪♪♪ (Windham Hill, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ Jethro Tull, Relativity, Silly Wizard, Touchstone ▶▶ Enya

see also: The Bothy Band, John Cunningham, Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill, Silly Wizard

Jo Hughey Morrison

West Nkosi

See: Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens

Noa

Jazz, pop

Born Achinoam Nini in Tel Aviv, Israel. Based in Israel and USA.

Although she now reigns as one of Israel's primary pop stars, Achinoam Nini's route to stardom was surprisingly circuitous. Born in Tel Aviv to a Yemenite family, Nini grew up in New York City, but was constantly kept mindful of her cultural heritage. In New York, she attended the famed High School for the Performing Arts, but fell in love with an Israeli boy (now her husband) who convinced her to move back home. There she was drafted into the army, where she became a singing sergeant assigned to an entertainment unit. Following her stint in the service, Nini caught a break when she teamed with guitarist Gil Dor, a former student of jazz guitarist Pat Metheny. With her name shortened to Noa to avoid pronunciation woes and to emphasize her pop/jazz leanings over ethnic expectations—Noa is no Ofra Haza, nor does she attempt to be—Metheny co-produced her first American album, which led to a second, but with pop producer Rupert Hine at the helm. Noa's music does contain elements of Eastern exotica, and she frequently sings in Hebrew, but this Yemenite thrush is more intent on becoming Israel's answer to Joni Mitchell, or maybe even Madonna. With both folky and pop leanings at which she is equally adept and ambitious, she's already well on her way to doing just that.

what to buy: Noa's two U.S.-released major-label efforts are equally fine. Noa ♪♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1994, prod. Pat Metheny, Steve Rodby) is somewhat dominated by Metheny and Rodby's production, which sounds of a piece with Metheny's own group albums. Still, Noa shines on the sparkling "Wildflower," and numbers sung in Hebrew such as "Mishaela" and "Uri." The showstopper, though is "Ave Maria"—not the age-old hymn, but an original plea for "beauty, gentleness, and laughter." Calling ♪♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1996, prod. Rupert Hine) gets the edge, however, thanks to a terrific batch of songs including the enchanting "U.N.I," the slow-building release of "By the Light of the Moon," and the hard-rocking "Lama," which contains the immortal couplet "Every day that passes/Proves that God has lost his glasses."

what to buy next: An effort to expose some of Noa's Israeli-released work in the United States, Both Sides of the Sea ♪♪♪ (Mondo Melodia, 1998, prod. Yossi Fine, Noa, Gil Dor) combines tracks from Achinoam Nini and Achinoam Nini Gil Dor. Highlights include songs such as "Nisayon," "Nocturno," "Three Days," and "Me," featuring lyrics by Israeli poets Leah Goldberg and Rachel. The songs here are solidly in the pop realm, but use more exotic instrumentation than allowed on her American albums.

worth searching for: Fans of Both Sides of the Sea may want to tap their friendly import dealer for Noa's entire catalog of Israeli albums. They include Achinoam Nini Gil Dor Live (NMC, 1991); Achinoam Nini Gil Dor (NMC, 1993); Achinoam Nini (NMC, 1997); and Achinoam Nini and the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra (NMC, 1998).

influences:
◀◀ Leah Goldberg, Pat Metheny, Joni Mitchell, Rachel

Daniel Durchholz

Nocy

Spanish guitar

Born in Lebanon. Based in Los Angeles, CA, USA.

Nocy Karkour began his infatuation with classical Spanish guitar music in the unlikely setting of his native Lebanon. He developed his technique first at the Paris Conservatory for Spanish Guitar and then under the tutelage of Betho Davezac, Segovia's top protégé. Nocy has played with a diverse and impressive roster of musicians, including jazz guitarist Larry Coryell, blues-rock drummer Buddy Miles, and Gypsy swing guitarist Manitas de Plata. Since moving to Los Angeles in the early 1990s, Nocy has continued to broaden his commercial appeal, working with pop notables such as Rod Stewart, Kenny G, and Jon Anderson of Yes. He performed at the opening ceremonies for the 1994 Olympic Games and now regularly appears at the Mirage Hotel in Las Vegas. Although traditionalists might bemoan the commercial path Nocy has taken (and the success he has met with it), his technique remains impressive and his playing inventive and emotional.

what's available: The slick but passionate Flames of Spain ♪♪♪♪ (Earthtone, 1997, prod. Carol Horvsepian) puts Nocy's fiery playing in a new-age/light-jazz setting, augmented by bass, percussion, and backing vocals.

influences:

⏮ Gipsy Kings, Andres Segovia

⏭ Craig Chaquico, Kenny G

Michael Parrish

Nomos

Irish folk

Formed 1990, in County Cork, Ireland. Based in County Cork, Ireland.

Niall Vallely (1990–present), concertina, low whistle, piano, drones; Liz Doherty (1990–96), fiddle; Vince Milne (1996–present), fiddle; Gerry McKee (1990–present), mandocello; Frank Torpey (1990–present), bodhrán, drones; John Spillane (1992–98), vocals, guitar, bass; Eoin Coughlan (1998–present), vocals, bass. (All members are from Ireland.)

Nomos has its roots in the University of County Cork, where Niall Vallely and Frank Torpey were students. Gerry McKee joined the duo after moving to Cork from County Antrim via County Clare and the United States. Original fiddler Liz Doherty joined the lineup shortly thereafter, and Nomos expanded to a quintet a few years later with John Spillane. This lineup recorded I Won't Be Afraid Any More in 1994. Doherty left the group in 1996, replaced by Milne, who had previously played in traditional Irish folk groups and with bluegrass bands. This was the ensemble that recorded Set You Free in 1996, an album that Folk Roots magazine considered one of the best of that year. While the essential sound of the band remained unchanged through both releases, they'd been tweaking their concept to include more original material. This adjustment was pretty natural since Spillane was proving to be a talented composer, Vallely is one of the better concertina players around these days, Torpey has developed an interesting approach to rhythm and harmony, and Milne has a kinetic stage presence. In addition to jaunts throughout Ireland, Nomos has played in Great Britain, North America, and Denmark, with a short 1997 tour of the United States playing to sold-out houses. In 1998, during another North American tour, Spillane was replaced by bassist Eoin Coughlan.

what's available: The group's debut release I Won't Be Afraid Any More ♪♪♪½ (Solid/Green Linnet, 1995/1996, prod. Nomos) hews fairly close to tradition, with danceable reels and jigs leading the way. It also serves to introduce Spillane as a songwriter worth watching, with beautifully constructed gems like "All the Ways You Wander" and the title track. Nomos's next album Set You Free ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1997, prod. Nomos) introduced a new fiddler (Milne) and more assured tune-smithing from Spillane. The rock-ish feel of the title song fits well with the many reels and jig medleys on the project, but Spillane's reflective "Poor Weary Wanderer" and Vallely's beautiful instrumental "Súile Shuibhne (Sweeney's Eyes)" are closer to the album's basic ambiance.

influences:

⏮ Dónal Lunny, Mícheál Ó Súilleabháin, Alan Stivell

⏭ Reeltime

Garaud MacTaggart

Nordan Project

Improvisational folk music, jazz

Formed 1992, in Stockholm, Sweden. Based in Stockholm, Sweden.

Ale Möller, mandola, flutes, harp, shawm, cow's horn trumpet, hammered dulcimer, accordion; Lena Willemark, vocal, fiddle; Palle Danielsson, bass; Mats Edén, hardanger fiddle, kantele; Per Gudmundson, fiddle, Swedish bagpipes; Tina Johansson, percussion; Jonas Knutsson, sax, percussion; Björn Tollin, percussion. (All members are from Sweden.)

If American audiences are at all familiar with Swedish folk music, it is because of the Nordan Project, one of the few Swedish groups that have undertaken an extensive tour of the United States—although the musicians hasten to point out that the Nordan Project isn't a group, since all the members are involved in other bands or solo careers. Lena Willemark, who has an interest in medieval Swedish folk music, met multi-instrumentalist Ale Möller at a fiddler's convention in 1984. They hit it off and have played together ever since in various formats, including their trio Frifot and a quintet called Enteli. The duo met ECM Records head Manfred Eicher in 1992 and suggested putting together an album that would combine the improvisational traditions of folk music and modern jazz. Nordan was recorded as a one-off project, but the enthusiastic reception of the disc led to a tour and to a second album, Agram.

what's available: Möller's fretwork on a variety of instruments, Knutsson's melancholy sax, Johanssen's Afro-Arabic hand drumming, the droning fiddle of Mats Edén, and Willemark's astonishing vocals have produced a unique hybrid on Nordan ♪♪♪♪½ (ECM, 1993, prod. Manfred Eicher); a powerful kind of international folk/jazz that's dark, deep, and dreamy. Agram ♪♪♪♪ (ECM, 1996, prod. Manfred Eicher) is another excursion into the subliminal psyche of Scandinavia—perfect music for long, cold winter nights; alternately chilling and heartwarming.

influences:

⏮ Enteli, Frifot, Groupa, Simon Simonsson

see also: Groupa

j. poet

Nordan Project

Clara Nunes

Samba, MPB (Brazilian Popular Music), tropical

Born 1943, in Brazil. Died 1989, in Brazil.

Clara Nunes became a force in samba singing with the release of her breakout recording Alvorecer in 1964, when she was 21. A vocalist of sensuality and power, many of Nunes's lyrics drew from her belief in Candomblé, an Afro-Brazilian relative of Santería which reveres spirits of nature and admits the presence of such spirits in everyday life. Despite this less-than-mainstream source material, Nunes's vocal presence was such that she scored many popular hits and is still, despite her tragic early death, regarded as one of samba's enduring artists.

what's available: For an idea of the range of Nunes's music, look for The Best of Clara Nunes ♪♪♪♪ (World Pacific, 1992, prod. Gerald Seligman).

influences:

⏮ Ismael Silva

⏭ Alcione, Beth Carvahlo

Kerry Dexter

Sven Nyhus

Norwegian folk

Born 1932, in Norway. Based near Oslo, Norway.

Sven Nyhus is the towering figure in folk music of the Røros district of Norway. He is a master of the fiddle and hardanger fiddle, an ornate instrument with almost magical properties. Its "sympathetic" strings produce an unusual drone effect that lingers after each tune. Besides instrumental gammeldans or old-time dance music, Nyhus also plays classical violin and viola, soloing with the Oslo Philharmonic Orchestra and a string quartet. Nyhus was folk music director at Norway's public radio for more than a decade and curator of the national folk archives. He has written books on traditional music and produced many recordings. Nyhus founded a four-piece band in 1969, which has through the years grown to a sextet, with more than a dozen albums to its credit. Central to the group's sound is accordionist Tore Løvgreen, who's been playing with Nyhus since the mid-1960s. The brightest recent addition is his daughter, Åshild Breie Nyhus. Born in 1975, she's carrying the family fiddle tradition into at least a fourth generation. The Røros music championed by Nyhus is often melancholy. But he always tosses in a few jaunty numbers, even some with bluegrassy and jazzy lilts. Meanwhile, his elfish grin on the album covers suggests these are more than just funeral dirges for Norwegian bachelor farmers.

what to buy: A good place to start is Skuddårslek ♪♪♪♪ (Callisto, 1988, prod. Jan Erik Kongshaug), credited to the Sven Nyhus Kvartett & Åshild Breie Nyhus. Barely a teen when this was recorded, Åshild has no trouble keeping up with the seasoned veterans in dad's band. More fun and varied than the later Grimen, this set includes some real toe-tappers with jolly accordion solos. About half are originals, including a pols based on a Bach melody, written for the master's 300th birthday. With Åshild all grown up, the Sven Nyhus Sekstett's Grimen ♪♪♪½ (Heilo, 1997, prod. Hallvard Kvåle) features a fuller, six-piece sound, but still no percussion except for an occasional tapping (on a fiddle?). These 20 tunes range from sad waltzes to sprightly dances such as the asymmetrical pols and self-explanatory galopp. Some Sven learned from his Swedish grandfather (Sven Paulsson Nyhus); others are re-recordings of his originals from the 1970s and 1980s. Sometimes the album bogs down in drone and groan. Lest things get too samey, though, there's a sprightly whistle solo and some uncredited bird-calls after the last track—a touch of suitably dry humor.

the rest:
Traditional Norwegian Fiddle Music (Shanachie, 1992)

worth searching for: Nyhus is all over Arne Nordskaug's album Portrett av en spellmann ♪♪♪♪ (Heilo, 1985, prod. Ivar Stranger, Sven Nyhus, Jan Erik Kongshaug). On half of it, his quartet backs this fellow Norwegian fiddle legend; the remainder consists of charming duets between Nyhus and Nordskaug, who was 68 at the time. To hear three generations of Nyhus fiddlers, seek out Folkemusikk frå Trøndelag 9 ♪♪♪ (Grappa, 1995, prod. Leiv Solberg), a compilation in a handsome package with booklet. Among some 30 tracks there are five by Nyhus, one solo by Åshild, and one by Sven's father Peder Nyhus—a tad quavery at age 86, yet thoroughly charming. Finally, there's a live tune by all three, recorded a few years before Peder's death.

influences:
◀◀ Arne Nordskaug, Peder Nyhus, Sven Paulsson Nyhus ▶▶ Annbjørg Lien, Åshild Breie Nyhus

Wif Stenger

Sally Nyolo

Afropop

Born c. 1969, in Eyen-Meyong, Cameroon. Based in Paris, France.

Nyolo began singing at the same time she began talking. Her aunt Mamterry was a traditional singer and healer, who taught Nyolo many songs and rituals, some of which she has used in her own compositions. Nyolo was known for her dancing at an early age, and she moved to Paris when she was 13. She began her professional career singing backup and dancing with Afropop groups like Sixun and Touré Kunda. In 1993 she put together her first band and became a local star in Paris. She composed music for French radio dramas and contributed a tune to the soundtrack of a French film, Ashakara. After an appearance at one of Peter Gabriel's WOMAD (World of Music, Arts and Dance) Festivals, Gabriel invited her to record for a possible album. The songs turned up on the RealWorld compilation Around the World in 20 Tracks and Strictly Worldwide for the German Piranha label. In 1993 Nyolo met Marie Daulne, who invited her to join Zap Mama. Nyolo stayed with the band until 1996, when she parted ways to pursue her own international crossover dreams.

what's available: Multicultí ♪♪♪♪ (Tinder, 1998, prod. Sally Nyolo) is a mini masterwork from Nyolo and a fine supporting cast, which includes a few Zap Mamas and a small army of Afro-Parisian regulars. The pop and African elements are perfectly balanced, creating tunes that are at once commercial and deeply rooted in Nyolo's traditional past. Her first effort at forging her own sound, Tribu ♪♪♪ (Tinder, 1997, prod. Sally Nyolo, Lusafrica), is spotty, but interesting as a document of an artist trying to find her individual voice.

influences:
◀◀ Manu Dibango, Les Tetes Brulées, Sam Fan Thomas, Zap Mama

see also: Zap Mama

j. poet

Ebenezer Obey

Juju

Born 1942, in Idogo, Western Region, Nigeria. Based in Nigeria.

"Chief Commander" Ebenezer Obey is a pioneer of Nigeria's dance-inspiring juju music. Although King Sunny Adé was the first juju musician to perform in the Western world, Obey remains the genre's most prolific and best-selling artist, with more than 50 albums since 1969. Obey's musical talents were evident from the days of his Methodist primary school, where he was invited to lead his first band. After moving to the capitol city of Lagos he went professional with several outfits, including the Fatayi Rolling Dollars from 1958 until 1963. A year later he started recording with his own band, the International Brothers. Their first single, "Ewa Wo Ohun Ojuri," was also released in 1964, with the debut album, Late Oba Gbadelo II, following five years later. Although Obey's group was initially a small ensemble, it continued to expand with the addition of more drummers, guitarists, pedal steel players, and background vocalists. By the time Obey reorganized the band as the International Reformers in the early 1970s, it featured more than 20 musicians—and Obey's compositional ambitions continued to grow in proportion, with expanded arrangements and half-hour tunes. Set to intricate guitar melodies and the polyrhythms of multiple drums, Obey's songs remained jubilant and uplifting. His style of juju has come to be known as miliki, an African word meaning "joy and happiness." Many of the songs celebrate his ties to Christianity, linking his music back to that primary school where the teachers knew he was just beginning.

5 6 4 ebenezer obey

Sally Nyolo

what to buy: Recorded in Seattle in late 1987, Get Your Jujus Out ♪♪♪♪½ (Rykodisc, 1990, prod. Keith Keller) demonstrates the polyrhythmic intensity of Obey's concerts. His first American release, Juju Jubilee ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1985, prod. various), samples the best of Obey's early singles and album cuts.

best of the rest:
Late Oba Gbadelo II ♪♪♪ (Soundpoint, 1969)
And His Miliki Sound ♪♪♪ (Decca, 1973)
Inter-Reformers a Tunde ♪♪♪ (Decca, 1974)
Late Great Murtara Murtala Ramat Muhammed ♪♪♪ (Decca, 1976) Operation Feed the Nation ♪♪♪ (Decca, 1977)
In the Sixties Vol. 1 ♪♪♪ (Decca, 1979)
In the Sixties Vol. 2 ♪♪♪ (Decca, 1979)
There Is No Friend Like Jesus ♪♪♪ (Decca, 1979)
Leave Everything to God ♪♪♪ (Decca, 1980)
Current Affairs ♪♪♪½ (Decca, 1980) Celebration ♪♪♪ (Decca, 1982)
Austerity ♪♪♪ (Decca, 1982) Precious Gift ♪♪♪ (Decca, 1983)
Ambition ♪♪♪ (Decca, 1983)
Singing for the People ♪♪♪ (Decca, 1983)
Greatest Hits Vol. 3 ♪♪♪½ (Decca, 1983)
The Only Condition to Save Nigeria ♪♪♪ (Obey, 1984)
Solution ♪♪♪ (Obey, 1984)
Peace ♪♪♪ (Obey, 1985)
Security ♪♪♪ (Obey, 1985)
My Vision ♪♪♪ (Obey, 1986)
Patience ♪♪♪ (Obey, 1988) Determination ♪♪♪ (Obey, 1988)
Vanity ♪♪♪ (Obey, 1989)
Womanhood ♪♪♪ (Obey, 1993)
The Legend (Evergreen Songs) ♪♪♪ (Obey, 1996)

influences:
⏮ Babatunde Olatunji, I.K. Dairo

⏭ King Sunny Adé, Fela Anikulapo Kuti, Segun Andawale

see also: King Sunny Adé

Craig Harris

Maura O'Connell

Celtic country, singer-songwriter

Born September 16, 1958, in Ennis, County Clare, Ireland. Based in Nashville, TN, USA.

Maura O'Connell is a quality example of the singer as free-wheeling interpreter, unfettered by any genre in particular. Her soulful eclecticism is only fitting from an Irish-born artist who scored her first big musical successes by recording pop albums in Nashville. After starting out singing in clubs for Galway college kids, O'Connell hooked up with the Celtic traditional group De Dannan for two years. She split in 1983, trekked to Nashville on her manager's advice, and recorded three solo albums that became huge hits in her home country. O'Connell's signing to Warner Bros. sparked a string of meticulously produced albums distinguished by her warm, flexible mezzo and adventuresome song selections from John Hiatt, Tom Waits, and Shawn Colvin, mixed with second looks at standards from Tin Pan Alley and the Beatles. These efforts earned critical raves but only modest U.S. sales, though her incandescent live performances have solidified her Stateside audience while her star status in Ireland remains assured. Still, Warners opted not to renew her contract in 1994, so O'Connell launched her own Permanent Records imprint for her 1995 album Stories, which was released through Hannibal/Rykodisc, where at last check she's been living happily ever after.

what to buy: Helpless Heart ♪♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1989, prod. Béla Fleck) probably is the closest O'Connell has flirted with country, but Fleck's thoughtful arrangements deftly blend bluegrass and mountain influences with traditional Irish touches—and in "You'll Never Know," O'Connell demonstrates her authority with standards.

what to buy next: The smokier A Real Life Story ♪♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1990, prod. Greg Penny) continues O'Connell's great sense of song selection for grownups, with such meaty items as Hiatt's "When We Ran" and Hugh Prestwood's "A Family Tie"—a wrenching, ambivalent look at an alcoholic husband.

what to avoid: You won't get burned with any of O'Connell's stuff—it's all at least interesting—but you can skip some of the completist's items, such as the folky, low-key Just in Time ♪♪♪ (Philo, 1988, prod. Béla Fleck), until after you've bought the Warner Bros. and Hannibal albums.

the rest:
(With De Dannan) The Star-Spangled Molly ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1981)

Maura O'Connell ♪♪♪ (Third Floor Music, 1983)
Blue Is the Colour of Hope ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1992) Stories ♪♪♪½ (Rykodisc/Hannibal, 1995)
Wandering Home ♪♪♪½ (Rykodisc/Hannibal, 1997)

worth searching for: A Woman's Heart (Dara, 1992, prod. various) is a collection of works by Irish female singers that includes O'Connell's "Trouble in the Fields" and "Western Highway" (and is reviewed in this book's Compilations section).

influences:

- Dolores Keane, Linda Ronstadt, New Grass Revival, Bonnie Raitt, Little Feat
- Eleanor McEvoy, Niamh Parsons, Mary Black, Mary Coughlan, Dolores O'Riordan

see also: De Dannan, Kukuruza

Elizabeth Lynch

Robbie O'Connell

See: The Clancy Brothers

Sinéad O'Connor

Experimental Celtic-influenced multi-genre pop

Born December 8, 1966, in Dublin, Ireland. Based in London, England.

The eternal infamy of Sinéad O'Connor's early-'90s Pope-ripping episode has eclipsed the distinctly world-music moment that preceded it—a Gregorian chant-like reading of Bob Marley's "War." It was a musical mix to match her personal one, as a recent Rastafari convert who's unshakably associated with another island culture through her recurrent Irish-liberation lyrical agenda ("Irish Ways and Irish Laws," "Famine," "This IS a Rebel Song"). That theme is not often echoed in O'Connor's musical settings, which aren't as interested in Celtic roots as new shoots of late-20th-century avant-pop. But the relatively few exceptions are doozies, which not only keep her hand in tradition but also keep one foot in the future, including the spoken-word Gaelic guest-shot by Enya ("Never Get Old") on O'Connor's 1987 debut The Lion and the Cobra (well in advance of the music 'n' poetry market niche), and the ominous Irish-fiddle-infused hip-hop backdrop of "I Am Stretched on Your Grave" on 1990's I Do Not Want What I Haven't Got (way ahead of the late-'90s' Gaelic-funk and Afro Celt trends). You'll also find O'Connor in the mix wherever there's a high-impact media project on Ireland's trials and triumphs, from the Catholic/Protestant cultural exchange initiative "Peace Together," to the soundtracks for In the Name of the Father and Michael Collins, to several of the Chieftains' with-a-lotta-help-from-our-friends concept CDs. But perhaps most importantly, you'll hear the figurative and literal voice of Ireland in O'Connor's extreme repertoire of vocal embellishments, inextricably tied—however innovative its variations or unfamiliar its audiences—to the ornamented improvisational sean-nós ("old-style") genre of traditional Gaelic singing.

what to buy: Celtic or no Celtic, you want O'Connor's first two shots heard 'round the world, The Lion and the Cobra ♪♪♪♪♪ (Ensign/Chrysalis, 1987, prod. Sinéad O'Connor) and I Do Not Want What I Haven't Got ♪♪♪♪♪ (Ensign/Chrysalis, 1990, prod. Sinéad O'Connor), both phenomenal declarations of artistic uniqueness, the former edgy and arty, the latter subtle and smoldering. "Scarlet Ribbons" is given a satisfying tin whistle and uilleann pipes treatment on the largely lounge-y and lackluster Am I Not Your Girl? ♪♪♪ (Ensign/Chrysalis, 1992, prod. Phil Ramone, Sinéad O'Connor), and with the folky Gospel Oak ♪♪♪½ (Chrysalis/EMI, 1997) EP's structures and instrumentation O'Connor ventured decisively into the Celtic Lite marketplace—though the disc's best song, the Rwandan orphan dedication "Petit Poulet," offers a rolling rhythm and accordion-driven arrangement that also give the track a vaguely Franco-African feel. (These way-too-tame recordings were all given killer treatments in concert, so find a live bootleg if you can . . . not that there's anything right with that!) O'Connor's most acclaimed and easy-to-find classically Celtic material has been rendered with the Chieftains, the acknowledged best-of being "He Moved Through the Fair" and "The Foggy Dew" on The Long Black Veil ♪♪♪♪ (RCA/BMG, 1995, prod. Paddy Moloney). Keep up with all the directions of O'Connor's widely traveled muse at the exhaustive website http://sinead-oconnor.com.

the rest:

Universal Mother ♪♪♪♪ (Ensign/Chrysalis, 1994)
So Far . . . The Best of Sinéad O'Connor ♪♪♪♪ (Chrysalis/EMI, 1997)

influences:

- In Tua Nua, Enya, Clannad, Dónal Lunny, Kate Bush, Peter Gabriel
- The Cranberries, Alanis Morissette, Ashley MacIsaac, Mary Jane Lamond

see also: Afro Celt Sound System, the Chieftains, Manu Dibango, Abdel Ali Slimani

Adam McGovern

Odadaa!

See: Yacub Addy

Liam O'Flynn /Liam Ó Floinn

Irish traditional

Born 1950, in Kill, County Kildare, Ireland. Based in Dublin, Ireland.

Having first gained renown as a member of the 1970s Irish group Planxty, but more recently associated with orchestral works like The Brendan Voyage, Liam O'Flynn is widely recognized as one of Ireland's finest performers on the uilleann pipes. Born into a musical family, O'Flynn started playing the whistle at an early age and enjoyed his first taste of the pipes through the playing of Tom Armstrong. O'Flynn, however, credits Leo Rowsome, Willie Clancy, and Séamus Ennis as his main musical influences. As the folk boom was taking Ireland by storm in the early 1970s, O'Flynn was asked by singer Christy Moore to participate in the making of the album Prosperous, featuring Andy Irvine, Dónal Lunny, and a few others as accompanists. After the album came out in 1972, the foursome decided to perform together under the name Planxty. Over the next 10 years the band went on to record six albums, each featuring O'Flynn's piping prominently. By the time Planxty broke up in the early 1980s, O'Flynn had become involved in performing the compositions of his good friend Shaun Davey, who was experimenting with bringing together uilleann pipes and symphony orchestra. Recorded in 1980, the first and still the best-known of these pieces is The Brendan Voyage, evoking the legend of St. Brendan, Abbot of Clonfert's sixth-century sea voyage to North America. In 1988 O'Flynn finally recorded his first, eponymous solo album, released on his own label and featuring Seán Keane and Lunny. The Fine Art of Piping, produced for the British company Celtic Music, followed in 1989, and the fine trio album The Fire Aflame, with Keane and Matt Molloy, in 1992. Some of O'Flynn's more recent albums like Out to an Other Side (1993) and The Given Note (1995), which clearly show the influence of the piper's collaboration with Davey, are no match for his earlier output. However, his latest recording, The Piper's Call (1998), while again showing a tendency towards rather full accompaniments, is a masterpiece of classical piping and reunites him with Keane and Molloy. Even more compelling perhaps is the video release by the same title, beautifully shot and featuring fascinating interviews of the artist and others.

what to buy: Although the somewhat inflated accompaniments can at times overwhelm his masterful piping, O'Flynn's latest album, The Piper's Call ♪♪♪½ (Tara, 1998, prod. Liam O'Flynn, Arty McGlynn), is also the best choice among his recent solo releases. The pieces performed are perfect vehicles for O'Flynn's deliberate and expressive style of piping. Notable tracks include wonderful duets with Irish masters like Seán Keane (fiddle) and Matt Molloy (flute), as well as with the Galician piper Carlos Núnez, who has come to prominence through his collaboration with the Chieftains.

what to buy next: While O'Flynn's piping is immaculate throughout, his recent albums, Out to an Other Side ♪♪♪ (Tara, 1993, prod. Shaun Davey) and The Given Note ♪♪♪ (Tara, 1995, prod.

indian/jazz fusion

World music is a genre replete with cultural cross-pollinations, but no fusion has proven quite so artistically rewarding as the collaboration between Western jazz and Indian classical musicians. That the concept works so well makes sense, as both forms consist primarily of standard compositions within which musicians are free to improvise in order to demonstrate their technical prowess. The movement owes a great debt to Ravi Shankar, who broke with the restraints of Hindustani tradition to collaborate with Western classical violinist Yehudi Menuhin and the Beatles in the 1960s. This opened the door for two Indian/jazz fusion supergroups, Shakti and Oregon, whose music set the standards that persist to this day. Shakti, the more influential of the two, featured John McLaughlin on guitar, L. Shankar (no relation to Ravi) on violin, Zakir Hussain on tabla drum, and Vikku Vinayakram on ghatam percussion. Oregon was co-founded by one of Ravi Shankar's students, Collin Walcott, an American considered among the finest non-Indian tabla practitioners. That instrument always seems to play a prominent role in this hybrid genre, and three tabla virtuosos—Hussain, Badal Roy, and Trilok Gurtu—can be found at the heart of many excellent fusion projects. In addition to Shakti, Hussain is a crucial ingredient in Mickey Hart's Planet Drum ensemble and Bill Laswell's cross-stylistic experiments; Roy has played with jazz legends ranging from Miles Davis and Ornette Coleman to Pharoah Sanders; and, in addition to replacing the late Walcott in Oregon, Gurtu has worked with Don Cherry, Joe Zawinul, Pat Metheny, and Material. For an introduction to the wondrous sounds these inspired unions can create, check out The Best of Shakti ♪♪♪♪♪ (Moment, 1994) and The Essential Oregon ♪♪♪♪½ (Vanguard, 1981/1987), two impressive compilations from the genre's most influential groups. Beyond that, look for albums featuring any of the above-mentioned names, or those of masters like guitarist Vishwa Mohan Bhatt, violinist L. Subramaniam, and American bansuri bamboo flutist Steve Gorn.

Bret Love

Shaun Davey), would hardly meet with the approval of traditional music lovers. The influence of O'Flynn's collaboration with Shaun Davey is clearly heard in the overwhelmingly busy and pop-ish arrangements. Although only distantly related to traditional music, Davey's orchestral suites like The Brendan Voyage ♪♪♪♪½ (Tara, 1980, prod. Shaun Davey), The Pilgrim ♪♪♪ (Tara, 1983, prod. Shaun Davey), Granuaile ♪♪♪♪½ (Tara, 1985, prod. Shaun Davey), and The Relief of Derry Symphony ♪♪♪ (Tara, 1990, prod. Shaun Davey) have been successful in their own way. On The Seville Suite ♪♪♪ (Tara, 1992, prod. Bill Whelan, Dónal Lunny), O'Flynn performs with Andy Irvine and Lunny on "Timedance '92," the piece that was to evolve into co-producer Whelan's award-winning show Riverdance.

worth searching for: Unfortunately, O'Flynn's best recordings of traditional music remain his earlier ones, which are the hardest to find. During his Planxty heyday, he appeared on Mick Hanly and Mícheál Ó Domhnaill's beautiful Celtic Folkweave ♪♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1974, prod. Dónal Lunny). Although O'Flynn experimented with the accompaniment on his first solo LP, Liam O'Flynn ♪♪♪½ (LOF, 1988, prod. Dónal Lunny), Lunny's production avoided the excesses of the later, Davey-produced albums. The Fine Art of Piping ♪♪♪♪½ (Celtic Music, 1989) is just that, excellent solo piping by a master of the instrument. On The Fire Aflame ♪♪♪♪½ (Claddagh, 1992, prod. Seán Keane, Matt Molloy, Liam O'Flynn) O'Flynn collaborated with Matt Molloy (flute), Séan Keane (fiddle), and Arty McGlynn (guitar) to produce a remarkable album of deftly played traditional music.

influences:

⏮ Tom Armstrong, Leo Rowsome, Seamus Ennis, Willie Clancy

⏭ Mick O'Brien, Jimmy O'Brien-Moran

see also: Patrick Cassidy, Shaun Davey, Frankie Gavin, James Keane, Dónal Lunny, Matt Molloy, Sean Ó Riada, Planxty, Áine Uí Cheallaigh, Bill Whelan

Philippe Varlet

Ayub Ogada

Luo folk and fusion

Born in Mombasa, Kenya. Based in London, England.

A member of the Luo tribe, Ayub Ogada was inducted into the world of music at the tender age of six, when he accompanied his father, who was studying medicine in the U.S., and his mother, as they began playing Luo songs on the U.S. college circuit. Later, Ogada's education and uncanny knack for percussion led to a position with the French Cultural Centre in Nairobi, where he composed modern and traditional music for various productions. These two formative periods provided the yin and yang of Ogada's musical spirit, which combines a healthy respect for tradition with a hunger to nourish his own progressive creativity. A sophisticated urbanite, Ogada absorbed a variety of musical legacies, including soul, jazz, and the gorgeous, guitar-based sounds of benga, a Luo-derived rhythm popular in the '70s and '80s—but his love for traditional sounds led him to co-found the African Heritage Band in 1979. Six years and two albums later, Ogada followed the African musical exodus to Europe, where, after a time spent playing in the promising rumba band Taxi Pata Pata, he was discovered busking in England's subways and signed to Peter Gabriel's RealWorld label.

what's available: Ogada's only solo album available in the States is En Mana Kuoyo ♪♪♪♪½ (RealWorld, 1993, prod. Ayub Ogada, Richard Evans), a fantastic outing on which the buoyant melodies of Ogada's lyre-like nyatiti are matched only by the lilting beauty of his rich tenor. With Ogada on nyatiti, percussion, and flutes, former Taxi Pata Pata bandmate Zak Sikobe on guitars, and Alex Gifford on double bass and Hammond organ, the album is a seamless blending of the traditional and the modern, with jubilant Afropop numbers like "Ondiek (Hyena)" offset by the haunting ambience of chilling songs like "Kothbiro (It's Going to Rain)." Ogada collaborated with a cast of dozens in RealWorld's pan-cultural supergroup Jam Nation, whose Way Down Buffalo Hell ♪♪♪½ (RealWorld, 1993, prod. Mark Rutherford, Sugar J) features Ogada's distinctive vocal style to great effect, as does the aptly named Afro Celt Sound System, whose Volume 1: Sound Magic ♪♪♪♪ (RealWorld, 1996, prod. Simon Emmerson) presented a surprisingly fluid blending of two seemingly disparate cultural traditions.

influences:

⏮ D.O. Misiani, Shirati Jazz, Osibisa, Victoria Jazz

see also: Afro Celt Sound System

Bret Love

Helen O'Hara

Celtic, Irish fiddle

Born in Bristol, England. Based in the British Isles.

From childhood onward, Helen O'Hara just couldn't help being impressive. At age nine she began simultaneous study of violin and piano, first at the Birmingham School of Music with Felix Kok (leader of the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra), then with James Coles (leader of the Bournmouth Symphony) and Andrew Watkinson (leader of the Endellion Quartet). Her highly identifiable violin sound brought her attention and acclaim as the featured soloist in Dexys Midnight Runners, with whom she was awarded four gold records for sales of the album Too-Rye-Ay and international #1 hit single, "Come On Eileen." O'Hara also basked in the success of the group's follow-up, Don't Stand Me Down, when it was rereleased and rediscovered by radio in the late '90s. But her triumphs with Dexys are not her only ones; O'Hara also scored a Top 10 English hit with "Because of You," the theme-song for the BBC television series Brush Strokes; helped Mark Isham arrange brass and violin sections for Tanita Tikaram's Everybody's Angel ; and contributed as a session violinist to a lengthy list of recordings including the 1990 Irish World Cup single. As dedicated out of the spotlight as in it, O'Hara notes that she's a member of Greenpeace and a "keen" recycler.

what to buy: While Celtic music has rapidly become a staple in the international marketplace, Irish fiddlers remain predominantly male, with players like Johnny Cunningham, Kevin Burke, Hugh Gillespie, John Doherty, and the Chieftains' Seane Keane taking up most of the limited limelight. Women are usually relegated to vocals or the harp—with a few bold souls like accordionist Sharon Shannon claiming new ground. This leaves O'Hara, Natalie MacMaster, and lamentably few other female violin soloists to pave the way for others. Of the two, O'Hara has sold more records because her unique cross of Celtic and skiffle stylings helped power Dexys Midnight Runners around the world; but her solo recordings find O'Hara hewing closer to her Irish roots, though in an expansive way. A Night in Ireland ♪♪♪♪ (New World Music, 1999, prod. Helen O'Hara) finds the violinist at her best in a refreshing, impromptu, concert-like atmosphere put across with state-of-the-art production that showcases special guest performances by the late Rolling Stones pianist Nicky Hopkins, harpist Skaila Kanga, and accordion player Eddie Hession. In addition to moving instrumental treatments of traditional Celtic favorites like "Danny Boy" and "Three Captains," you'll discover rarer traditional Irish and English tunes like "Mountains of Mourne," "The Curragh of Kildaire," and "The Mason's Apron." O'Hara also contributes several outstanding originals, including "Hills of Calheiros" and the charming "Irish Lullaby." While perhaps not as technically proficient as the legendary Keane—who has recorded more than 50 albums—O'Hara demonstrates an equal measure of the emotive quality that is so vital to Celtic interpretation. Her ability to manipulate melody while soloing or laying back is impressive, and her compositional style is sublime.

what to buy next: Not to be confused with music from the land of Dixie, Southern Hearts ♪♪♪♪ (New World Music, 1998, prod. Helen O'Hara) features O'Hara as she focuses on the music of Ireland's south, along with such stellar guest artists as pedal steel guitarist B.J. Cole, pianist Hopkins, Celtic harpist Kanga, percussionist Woody Woodmansey, and the legendary Robin Williamson on Celtic harp, pennywhistle, and acoustic guitar.

the rest:

(With Dexys Midnight Runners) Too-Rye-Ay ♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram, 1982)
(With Dexys Midnight Runners) Jackie Wilson Said ♪♪♪ (PolyGram, 1982)
(With Dexys Midnight Runners) Let's Get This Straight from the Start ♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram, 1982)
(With Dexys Midnight Runners) Celtic Soul Brothers ♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram, 1983)
(With Dexys Midnight Runners) This Is What She's Like ♪♪♪ (PolyGram, 1985)
(With Dexys Midnight Runners) Don't Stand Me Down ♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram, 1985/1997)
(With Dexys Midnight Runners) Because of You ♪♪♪ (PolyGram, 1986)
(With Dexys Midnight Runners) The Way You Look Tonight ♪♪ (PolyGram, 1988)
(With Dexys Midnight Runners) Kevin Rowlands 13th Crime ♪♪ (PolyGram, 1988)
(With Tanita Tikaram) Everybody's Angel ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1988)
(With Tanita Tikaram) The Sweetkeeper ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1988)
(With Tanita Tikaram) Ancient Heart ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1988)
(With the Adventures) Trading Secrets with the Moon (Warner Bros., 1990) (With Mary Coughlin) Uncertain Pleasures ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1990)

influences:

◀◀ Seane Keane, Johnny Cunningham, skiffle

PJ Birosik

Sonny Okosun /Sonny Okosuns

African funk, highlife, reggae, "ozzidi"

Born 1947, in Benin City, Nigeria. Based in Lagos, Nigeria.

Okosun got his start as an actor with the Eastern Nigerian Theater and began playing in bands in 1966, at the age of 19. He was originally inspired by Western artists like Elvis and Cliff Richard, and played Western pop until he was hired by Sir Victor Uwaifo as second guitarist in 1969. Uwaifo became a star by adapting "palm-wine" (acoustic) guitar to various traditional styles, and giving them a contemporary spin. Perhaps he inspired Okosun, because after he left Uwaifo, Okosun developed his own combination of funk, reggae, and traditional music and gave it the label "ozzidi." His first albums with his Ozzidi band were still a bit ragged—the seams of his rock/funk fusion still showed— but by the time he cut Fire in Soweto the sound was his own. The title track of that album became a Pan-African hit, selling millions of copies. When it was released on the British OTI label, it caused a sensation in Europe too, making Okosun an international star. From the late 1970s to the mid-1980s Okosun released a string of hit albums that combined reggae, rock, highlife, funk, and, increasingly, a heavy disco/house backbeat. The fact that he sang in English, and tended to address the social and economic problems of Nigeria and South Africa, made him a cause celebre—especially in the U.S., where he was briefly compared to Bob Marley for his militant lyrics and highly melodic tunes.

what's available: Liberation ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1991, prod. Sonny Okosun) is a solid compilation of the smashes from Okosun's heyday, although it inexplicably leaves out "Fire in Soweto" and "Tell Papa," his biggest hits of the time. The funky, chattering guitars, reggae-ized basslines and relentless percussion give listeners a fine example of one era's state-of-the-art Afropop.

worth searching for: Most of Okosun's music is currently out of print, although you may be able to turn up some anthologies on import. EMI, which put out Okosun's hits in the 1980s, no longer has a distribution deal with its Nigerian partners, which will probably make much of Okosun's best stuff hard to find. The ones to look for are Fire in Soweto ♪♪♪♪♪ (Oti, 1978), 3rd World ♪♪♪♪♪ (Oti, 1980), and Togetherness ♪♪♪♪½ (EMI, 1983). African Soldiers ♪♪♪♪½ (Profile, 1991) was released on CD in 1991, but the recording went out of print within a year.

influences:

- Bob Marley, Fela Kuti, Sir Victor Uwaifo
- Alpha Blondy, Majek Fashek

j. poet

Victor Olaiya

Highlife

Born c. 1920, in Ijebu, Nigeria. Based in Lagos, Nigeria.

Known as "The Evil Genius of Highlife" ("evil" being synonymous with "bad" in 1960s black American slang), Olaiya is one of the few highlife musicians who have managed to keep making a living after the music's heyday. Highlife (a cosmopolitan dance music) was the day-to-day soundtrack for a generation of African youth that grew up in the heady times of early post-colonialism. When Ghana ousted the British in 1957 to became the first democratically ruled black African nation, West Africa witnessed an explosion of cultural pride and artistic expression. Kwame Nkrumah's government actively encouraged cultural expression and cooperation between ethnic groups, and supported the music of the highlife bands that ruled Ghana (and later Nigeria) and gave that pride "feet." Highlife swept through West Africa and England, preparing ears for what we now call "worldbeat" music, and piquing curiosity about the many rich varieties of African music in its less commercial forms.

In the 1920s, colonial contact with Europeans introduced the people of Sierra Leone and Ghana to a variety of new styles that included sea chanteys (which were similar to African religious chants), Christian church music, brass marching bands, and European popular songs. These forms were quickly "Africanized," and since they weren't the property of a single ethnic group, they provided a means for instant musical cross-pollination. The introduction of Western instruments—guitars, horns, and trap drums—also sparked the African imagination. By the mid-'30s these forms had combined into a new dance craze that was popular from Congo in the south to the border of Mali in the north, where Muslim forms predominated.

Olaiya, who is a singer, composer, and trumpet player, got his start in the band of Bobby Benson playing the European and Latin dance charts that were popular with African audiences in the early 1950s. But after catching E.T. Mensah and the Tempos on their first Nigerian tour, Olaiya left Benson and started a highlife group, the Cool Cats. He retained his popularity throughout the 1950s and 1960s with a series of hit singles, and gave many young musicians their first taste of fame, including Fela Kuti, Victor Uwaifo, and Sonny Okosuns (a.k.a. Okosun). He continues to lead his International Stars band to this day, playing a mix of new material and rearrangements of his back catalog at his Stadium Hotel Club and selected live concerts.

worth searching for: Not much by this pioneer is available in the States, so you'll have to do dig through the import bins to find his work. His greatest-hits compilations are probably the best bet; try In the '60s (Polydor Nigeria), Highlife Reincarnation (Polydor Nigeria), and Highlife Giants, Vol. 1 (Polydor Nigeria).

influences:

- Bobby Benson, E.T. Mensah
- Rex Lawson, Pat Thomas, African Brothers International

see also: Fela Kuti, E.T. Mensah, Sonny Okosun

j. poet

Babatunde Olatunji

African drumming, Afro-jazz

Born 1927, in Ajido, Nigeria. Based in New York, NY, USA.

The sounds of West Africa come alive through the music of Babatunde Olatunji. In the 40 years since the release of his groundbreaking debut album, Drums of Passion, the Nigeria-born and New York–based drummer, vocalist, and bandleader has taken the spirited rhythms of his homeland to stages around the globe. Although the West African tradition of drumming is vital to Olatunji's playing, he has consistently explored and adapted the rhythms of Earth's many cultures. In the 1960s and '70s, he performed and recorded with such jazz giants as Max Roach and John Coltrane. In the early '90s, he and many others joined with the Grateful Dead's Mickey Hart to record and tour as the percussion supergroup Planet Drum.

Olatunji's upbringing matched his destiny. In Ajido, the small fishing and trading village where he grew up, music was viewed as a necessary accompaniment for every aspect of life. The son of a fisherman, Olatunji was fascinated by music from earliest memory. At the age of six he was already watching and studying the musicians he saw at village festivals. Despite this enthusiasm, Olatunji didn't imagine a professional music career until coming to the United States, in 1950, to study political science at Morehouse College in Atlanta. While there, he produced a popular multi-media show based on the music and culture of his homeland. Moving to New York in 1954 to attend the New York University Graduate School of Public Administration, he continued to balance his academic studies with musical performances. A turning point came during an extended engagement at Radio City Music Hall in 1957. Performing a medley of African songs with a 66-piece orchestra, Olatunji was heard by Columbia Records' John Hammond (a legendary jazz producer who later produced Bob Dylan and Bruce Springsteen), and was invited to record. The resulting album, Drums of Passion, went on to sell more than five million copies and became not only the first album of African music ever recorded in the Western world, but, to this day, one of the most successful.

Babatunde Olatunji

Much of the money that Olatunji and his band earned on their early tours was used to open an Institute of African Cultural Studies in Harlem. The Institute, however, was plagued by financial instability and closed after two years. But never tiring in efforts for his people both on the continent and among the diaspora, in the early '60s Olatunji and Drums of Passion became actively involved with the Civil Rights movement, performing at NAACP rallies and traveling with Martin Luther King. Despite his influence, Olatunji faced great obstacles in his creative quest. Although he composed the score for the Broadway and Hollywood productions of A Raisin in the Sun, he was paid only $300 for his efforts. He suffered similarly when he assisted fellow Morehouse alumni Bill Lee with the music for She's Gotta Have It, the hit film debut by Lee's son, Spike. When Olatunji's contract with Columbia Records expired in 1965, he was unable to interest another label in his music. By the '80s, he had practically faded into obscurity. Things began to change in 1985, when Grateful Dead drummer Hart came backstage after Olatunji performed at a San Francisco club. "I had played at his high school," Olatunji said during a 1996 interview. "He told me that I was responsible for his interest in drums." The meeting led Hart to produce and secure Rykodisc's release of two new Olatunji albums, Drums of Passion: The Beat and Drums of Pas- sion: The Invocation. These discs further widened Olatunji's sound, with 11 percussionists and seven vocalists, and the master drummer again increased his following when he and his band opened the Dead's New Year's Eve show at the Oakland Coliseum on December 31, 1985.

Over the past decade, Olatunji and Drums of Passion have remained active. Their performances have included "Earth Celebration '95" in Japan; the "One World, One Music Celebration" of the United Nations' 50th anniversary at Madison Square Garden; the opening ceremonies of the International Peace University in Berlin; the International Transpersonal Association Conference in Czechoslovakia; and the New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival. In 1997, Sony issued a four-CD collection of Olatunji's recordings for Columbia from 1959–65, and Olatunji recently completed an autobiography, The Beat of My Drum, for Temple University Press. Although it's been more than four decades since he gave up his dream of becoming an ambassador, Olatunji has continued to promote an increased understanding of his native continent. In addition to teaching at the Esalen Institute in Big Sur, California, and the Omega Institute in Rhinebeck, New York, the "grand old man of the African drum" has conducted workshops in Italy, Japan, Canada, Switzerland, and Ghana, and set more future music in motion than we can yet conceive.

what to buy: The first album of African music to be recorded in the United States, Drums of Passion ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1957, prod. John Hammond Sr., Teo Macero) was a phenomenal success—selling more than five million copies and sparking an interest in African music that continues today.

what to buy next: Drums of Passion: The Beat ♪♪♪♪½ (Rykodisc, 1988, prod. Mickey Hart) is a musical exploration of West Africa's traditional chants and songs, with Olatunji's band augmented by (among many others) Brazilian percussionist Airto Moreira and bassist Bobby Vega of Sly and the Family Stone.

best of the rest:
Zungo! ♪♪♪ (CBS, 1960)
Drums of Passion: The Invocation ♪♪♪♪½ (Rykodisc, 1989) Love Drum Talk ♪♪♪ (Chesky, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ The West African drumming tradition

▶▶ Mickey Hart, Airto Moreira, Carlos Santana

see also: Mickey Hart, Airto Moreira, Randy Weston, Stevie Wonder

Craig Harris

Olodum

Samba-reggae

Formed 1979, in Salvador, Bahia, Brazil. Based in Salvador, Bahia, Brazil.

Vast and varied membership throughout the years, prominently featuring president and founder João Jorge and co-founder Neguinho do Samba.

With their much-heralded participation in the song "The Obvious Child" on Paul Simon's Rhythm of the Saints album and its subsequent tour, Olodum launched their heavily percussive sound—a Latin rhythm so unlike others—into the international arena. The rise over the last 20 years of the blocos afros—cultural organizations promoting race-consciousness and artistic expression—on Brazil's Atlantic Coast, mainly in Salvador, Bahia, has transformed both Carnival and day-to-day life. With the blocos, Carnival gained a strong black focus. The polyrhythms of ijexa, aluja, and samba-de-roda departed from the three atabaque drums of the local Candomblé religion and found strength in numbers through the percussion instruments already associated with samba—the giant surdo, the repenique, and the tamborim. The fusion of these Afro-Brazilian rhythms with Caribbean influences resulted in samba-reggae, the dominant bloco sound. To see the expansive bloco ensemble Olodum up close, in the street, 3,000 strong, every step and drumbeat synchronized, is to feel the raw power of music.

Since its inception as a small Carnival group, Olodum has built itself into a powerful institution of cultural production and community rejuvenation in the Pelourinho district of Salvador. Olodum operates music and dance schools, theater groups, shops, and restaurants, as well as programs for underprivileged youth. (Some of the banner performers of late-20th century Brazil, including Virginia Rodrigues, have gone from impoverished obscurity to the world stage thanks largely to initial aid from Olodum's operations.) Olodum's earlier recordings are gems, rough-hewn on very little technology, featuring thundering drums and traditional call-and-response vocals. Today the structure includes guitar, bass, keyboards, and a horn section, and the sound leans more toward pop arrangements and melodic vocals. Either way, good music remains as much their hallmark as good works.

what to buy: There are three versions of the album The Best of Olodum ♪♪♪♪½ (Continental, 1991, prod. Max Pierre). One is the original Brazilian release, which recaps the first phase of the group's development. Then there are two same-named Japanese variations, from 1993 and '94, that pop up from time to time and are also excellent collections.

what to buy next: Sol E Mar ♪♪♪♪ (Continental, 1995, prod. Mauro Almeida) is a live set from the Montreux Jazz Festival.

Olodum

The quality of the recording is not 100 percent, but the renditions are fresh, and the repertoire goes from the very beginning to their most modern numbers.

best of the rest:
Nubia/Axum Etiopia ♪♪♪♪♪ (Continental, 1988)
Do Deserto do Saara ao Nordeste Brasileiro ♪♪♪♪ (Continental, 1989)
Da Atlantica a Bahia, o Mar e o Caminho ♪♪♪♪ (Continental, 1990)
A Musica do Olodum ♪♪♪♪ (Continental, 1992)
O Movimento ♪♪♪♪ (Continental, 1993)
Os Filhos do Sol ♪♪♪♪½ (Continental, 1994)
Roma Negra ♪♪♪ (Continental, 1996)
Liberdade ♪♪♪ (Continental, 1997)

worth searching for: Olodum's first album Egito/Madagasgar ♪♪♪♪♪ (Continental, 1987, prod. Max Pierre) is a piece of history, an impassioned paean to Africa and affirmation of Brazil that stirs something deep inside.

influences:
⏮ Ile Aye

⏭ Carlinhos Brown, Daniela Mercury, Caetano Veloso, Gilberto Gil, E O Tchan

see also: Timbalada

Mara Weiss and Nego Beto

OMC

Pacific pop

Formed 1995, in Auckland, New Zealand. Based in New Zealand.

Rotating accompanists led by Pauly Fuemana, vocals, guitars, drums, bass.

OMC, essentially, is Pauly Fuemana, even though at least eight people accompany him on tour. Best known for the worldwide smash single "How Bizarre" but with more where that came from—especially in concert—this group has the ability to give any rave or late-night party a second wind with its funkified, Polynesian-influenced sound. OMC was born after the Otara Millionaires Club disbanded in 1995. The original group formed in a poor section of Auckland and adopted the name to show naysayers that these kids bred on the tough streets were smart enough to create a unique sound and survive. Thus far, what "How Bizarre" may have given OMC a shot at is being a one-hit wonder. However, with Fuemana's strong vision of musical success, OMC may just be around for a while.

what's available: OMC's debut album How Bizarre ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1997, prod. Alan Jansson) combines Fuemana's Polynesian roots-flair with hip-hop, jazz, funk, and runaway rock. Although Fuemana is credited with playing the majority of the instruments on the album, he enlisted a host of musicians to contribute their expertise on the likes of pedal steel, violin, cello, piano, trumpet, accordion, French horn, Dobro, and sax.

influences:
⏮ Marvin Gaye, Prince, Grandmaster Flash, David Bowie, New Order

Ari Bendersky

Kongar-ool Ondar

Tuvan throat-singing

Born 1962, in Chadaana, Tuva. Based in Chadaana, Tuva.

One of the most intriguing figures in world music, Ondar is considered the world's finest master of the art of Tuvan throat-singing, a phenomenal technique that enables a vocalist to sing as many as four distinctly audible notes at once. After graduating from high school, Ondar was drafted into the Soviet Navy, where he eventually suffered a broken neck while unloading cargo. Fortunately, he returned to Tuva with his throat intact, and by 1992 had been crowned world champion in the sygyt style of throat-singing, which is said to emulate the songs of birds. He holds the title of "People's Throat-Singer" in Tuva, and was named "National Artist of Russia" after serenading Boris Yeltsin during the Russian President's historic visit to Tuva in 1994. But the most eventful year for Ondar proved to be 1998, during which he founded a school for throat-singing in Tuva's capital, Kyzyl; was elected to the Tuvan Parliament representing his home district of Chadaana; and became the first Tuvan throat-singer signed to a major label, Warner Bros.

what's available: Its questionable title aside, Ondar's major-label debut, Back Tuva Future ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1999, prod. David Hoffner, Jim Ed Norman), is a brilliantly innovative fusion of styles that puts the somewhat alien sounds of Tuvan throat-singing in a variety of familiar contexts. "Tuva Groove" is a downright funky jam matching danceable rhythms, Ondar's mind-boggling vocals, and otherworldly chants from scientist/long-time Tuva enthusiast Richard P. Feynman, while "Two Lands, One Tribe" smartly pairs Ondar with Native American flutist/vocalist Bill Miller, pointing out the similarities between their traditions. Willie Nelson and Randy Scruggs drop by to make an East-West connection (strangely enough, Tuva is also known for its cowboys), while "Kargyraa Rap" draws comparisons between the Tuvan affinity for rapidly spoken tongue-twisters and . . . well, you figure it out.

worth searching for: Ondar's debut CD, Echoes of Tuva, and his strangely effective collaboration with San Franciscan bluesman Paul "Earthquake" Pena, Genghis Blues, are available by mail-order only from Friends of Tuva, Box 182, Belvedere, CA 94930; but several selections from each can be found on the excellent throat-singing anthology Deep in the Heart of Tuva ♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1996, prod. various), which is also very highly recommended (and is reviewed in this book's Compilations section).

influences:

⏮ Oorzhak Khunashtaar-ool, Bilchi-Maa Davaa, Sainkho Namtchylak, Huun-Huur-Tu

⏭ Paul "Earthquake" Pena

see also: Bill Miller

Bret Love

Remmy Ongala

Ubongo, soukous fusion

Born 1947 in Kivu, Congo. Based in Dar Es Salaam, Tanzania.

Like many Africans, Ongala began his musical education as a drummer; he joined the band Bantu Success while still in his teens. Later on, after teaching himself guitar and playing in several local soukous (African rumba) groups, he traveled to Tanzania to join Orchestra Makassy. When Makassy moved to Kenya after their big hit "Mamba Bado," Ongala stayed behind and joined Orchestra Super Matimila, a band owned by a local businessman. Ongala's tenure with Super Matimila lifted them to superstar status, mainly on the strength of his songwriting, which deals with the day-to-day tribulations of ordinary citizens, and his creative arrangements, which combine Congolese soukous with Tanzanian rhythms and sizzling horn charts. In 1988 Peter Gabriel brought Ongala and his band to Bath, England, to record in the RealWorld studios and play several dates at various WOMAD (World of Music, Arts and Dance) festivals. Because of the expense involved, Ongala had to leave about half of the band in Tanzania, and some critics claim that the reduced band relies too much on Ongala's guitar, and arrangements that are considerably less adventurous than those he was cutting for his Tanzanian albums.

what's available: On Songs for the Poor Man ♪♪♪ (RealWorld, 1988, prod. Remmy Ongala, Basil Anderson, David Bottrill) Ongala, one of Africa's finest protest singers, reprises some of his Tanzanian hits in a stripped-down style featuring his smooth vocals and inventive guitar work, and the complex rhythms of drummers Lawrence Linbanga and Saidi Salum. Ongala's second international album Mambo ♪♪♪ (RealWorld, 1992, prod. Rupert Hine) sounds more Congolese and less eclectic than his RealWorld debut, but it's still filled with sparkling musicianship; a few tunes are even sung in English to give Westerners a better idea of Ongala's impassioned songwriting.

influences:

⏮ Orchestra Makassy, Franco and TPOK Jazz, Juwata Jazz Band, DDC Mlimani Park

j. poet

Oku Onuora

Dub poetry

Born Orlando Wong, 1952, in East Kingston, Jamaica. Based in Kingston, Jamaica.

Onuora is one of the originators of "dub poetry" (a reggae-influenced form of spoken-word) who's since fallen out of the limelight, eclipsed by fellow pioneers Mutabaruka and Linton Kwesi Johnson. Like some other revolutionaries, Onuora came to writing via prison, and his particular road to literary epiphany is the stuff of folk legend. While still a teenager, he was working as a community activist and agitator when he purportedly robbed a post office (a charge he denies) in order to help an underfunded literacy program for ghetto youth. Arrested and convicted, he was shot five times in two escape attempts. He eventually served five-and-a-half years of hard labor, during which time he changed his name and took up Rastafarianism—and the pen. Once his poems were smuggled out and gained some exposure (they were collected and published as Echo in 1977), a public campaign led in part by PEN International first won him limited "work release" (to give poetry readings), then ultimately parole. Like several of his dub-poet contemporaries, he sharpened his performance skills at the Jamaican School of Drama, and released his first single ("Reflections in Red" on the 56 Hope Road label) in 1979. Onuora's classic poems are strong, spare, and simple, written—in keeping with his longstanding program of democratizing literary language—almost exclusively in Jamaican creole. Out of his mouth, the compact, pared-down, stutter-step cadences and couplets that lesser dub poets have exhausted from overwork still seem fresh, taut, and clean, perfectly suited to the mix of fervor and desperation he's trying to convey. And whether he's incanting a catalog of outrages or a call to action, his urgent bass-baritone can jump from a low, guttural monotone to a high, keening wail in the space of a single line.

what's available: Most of Onuora's oeuvre is hard to find and only intermittently in print. I a Tell . . . Dubwize and Otherwise ♪♪♪½ (ROIR, 1991, prod. Oku Onuora) was one attempt to remedy this with a vital collection of Onuora's seminal work—singles and remixes, both previously released and unreleased, from 1979 to 1983. On the title track he adopts his trademark persona: what Trinidadian scholar Gordon Rohlehr calls the "tribal 'I,'" the voice of the community who sees it and calls it on behalf of the "sufferah" in the street. It's that same persona who speaks "Wat a Situashan," a minimalist though impassioned adaptation of Mikey Smith's famous litany of local indignities, "Mi Cyaan Believe It." Onuora's version connects the local to the global, and finishes with a menacing promise of international conflagration. Most of the arrangements are true to the dub aesthetic of the day, making ample use of echo and reverb.

worth searching for: Though it adds hardcore funk and R&B to Onuora's musical bag of tricks, Pressure Drop ♪♪♪½ (56 Hope Road, 1984/Heartbeat, 1986/Zola & Zola, 1993)—released under the name "Oku + AK7"—continues in the vein of his early material, documenting "downpression" and shouting away the shackles of colonial mentality, from the screeching manifesto "A Slum Dweller Declares" to the fortifying anthem "Change Yes Change." Heartbeat has deleted this title, but Dutch label Zola & Zola has gallantly filled the gap. New Jerusalem Dub ♪♪♪ (ROIR, 1990, prod. Oku Onuora)—available on cassette only—is a sort of "ambient" concept album in the tradition of Lee "Scratch" Perry, which Onuora describes as "poetry without words." Though American labels have largely decided that dub poetry doesn't sell, European audiences apparently haven't heard the news; Onuora's recent import releases include Bus Out (Zola & Zola, 1993, prod. Oku Onuora) and Yesterday, Today, Tomorrow: 20th Anniversary Collection (Who Done It/Jamma, 1998). Two albums are forthcoming: the self-explanatory OverDub: A Tribute to King Tubby (ION), and A Movement, which features roots-reggae legends Sly & Robbie and Jamaican-born jazz pianist Monty Alexander. While this album moves Onuora onto some new musical ground (namely smooth jazz and hip-hop), lyrically it takes him back to his beginnings; "Education," for example, is an exhortatory sermon for youth literacy and scholarship. Among his noteworthy guest appearances, Onuora—along with Chuck D, John Trudell, Augustus Pablo, and others—contributed several numbers to the Afro-Native-Anarchist "The Fire This Time" collective's second compilation, Dancing on John Wayne's Head (Extreme/Dub Systems, 1995, prod. various). Selected published poems are collected in Echo (Sangster's, 1977) and Fuel for Fire (Frontline, 1998). Onuora maintains a website at www.escape.com/~dred/ which includes both sound and video clips.

influences:

◀◀ Big Youth

▶▶ Jean Binta Breeze

see also: Jean Binta Breeze, Linton Kwesi Johnson, King Tubby, Mutabaruka, Augustus Pablo, Lee "Scratch" Perry, Sly & Robbie, John Trudell

Michael Eldridge

Open House

Celtic, folk

Formed in 1992. Based in Washington, Oregon, and California, USA.

Kevin Burke (Ireland), fiddle; Mark Graham, vocals, harmonica, clarinet; Paul Kotapish, guitar, cittern, mandolin; Sandy Silva, dancing (foot percussion). (All members are from USA unless noted otherwise.)

Kevin Burke's reputation as an Irish fiddle player can be both a boon and a bane. The upside of his celebrity is the hoardes of devotees coming to see him in concert as a solo act; the downside comes when those same fans attend a show by his band Open House expecting to hear only Celtic material. It just isn't going to happen. The band started off as a studio project and gradually grew into a touring entity. Burke and Paul Kotapish were the first to meet and perform together, when guitarist Kotapish substituted for Burke's usual accompanist (an ailing Míchaél Ó Domhnaill) during a brief tour of the American Northwest. Mark Graham and Sandy Silva, who were doing gigs as Hoof and Mouth, were friends of Kotapish and would sometimes appear on the same bill as the other two folks. In 1992 all four of them formed Open House and went into the studio to lay down some tracks before arranging a brief tour of the American West Coast. The first album was loaded with Irish-inflected material, but by the time the second disc was released the other members were starting to influence the group's sound. Graham's songwriting and Kotapish's bluegrass roots made the biggest impact, but Central European modes also surfaced in the arrangements.

Open House is still somewhat of a side project for the various members. Burke continues working on his solo career and playing with groups like the Celtic Fiddle Festival, while Kotapish has pursued his involvement with the Rodney Miller Band, the Hillbillies from Mars, and the Moving Cloud Orchestra in addition to a career as a graphic designer. Silva is heavily involved in the California folk dance scene, and Graham, who used to perform with the Chicken Chokers, continues to demonstrate his harmonica prowess and impish, punning way with lyrics in various ensembles.

what to buy: The band's first album, Open House ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1992, prod. Míchaél Ó Domhnaill), was initially billed as a Kevin Burke project. Most of the songs stride with an Irish folk slant to their gait, with Burke's fiddle featured prominently, which may be a nod to fans expecting that approach. The vocals featured on the later albums are absent here, while Silva's feet provide an interesting (and unusual) pulse for many of the pieces. Together Burke and Graham prove to be a formidable songwriting duo, auguring well for future outings in which Graham provided even more material for the group's repertoire.

what to buy next: Following up their debut release, Open House unveiled more of a band sound with Second Story ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1994, prod. Tim O'Brien). This revealed most of Burke's associates as strong contributors in their own right, as the members sought to forge a group identity. Graham's witty songs, supple baritone, and fluid artistry with harmonica and clarinet are more up-front on this album, but Silva's unique contributions aren't as evident as in a concert situation. Burke's showpiece is "The Moth in the Lantern/Take No Prisoners," a Balkan-based tour de force. By the time Hoof and Mouth ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1997, prod. Ged Foley) was realized, Open House and their new producer had solved the mystery of how to fit Silva's contributions into the recorded sound.

influences:

◀◀ Bill Monroe, Christy Moore, Roger Miller, Walter Horton

see also: Kevin Burke

Garaud MacTaggart

Orchestra Baobob

African pop

Formed 1970, in the Plateau district of Dakar, Senegal. Disbanded late 1980s.

Abdoulaye Laye M'Boup (died 1974), vocals, maracas; Balla Sidibé, vocals, timbales; Thione Seck, vocals, timbales; Ndiouga Dieng, vocals, percussion; Rudolphe Gomis, vocals, percussion; Médoune Diallo, vocals, maracas; Bartélémy Attiso, lead guitar; Ben Geloum, guitar; Charles Ndiaye, bass; Pape Bá, guitar; Issa Cissokho, tenor, alto saxophones; Peter Udo, clarinet, alto saxophone; Montaga Kouyate, drums, percussion. (All members are from Senegal.)

Caribbean music had already made a substantial impact on African bands by the time Orchestra Baobob was created in 1970. The rhythms of Trinidad had inflected E.T. Mensah's groundbreaking highlife groups over in Ghana and Nigeria, but the Cuban clave was king throughout much of West Africa, as bands absorbed the horn-driven rumba arrangements of Beny Moré, Bebo Valdés, Machito, and Mario Bauza, among others. At first the various ensembles duplicated the playing of their Cuban influences, but gradually native instruments and rhythms came into the music. Many of the West African bands were singing in Spanish without understanding a word of what they were voicing; in Senegal this changed drastically with the advent of Orchestra Baobob, who created Creole, Wolof, and Mandinka lyrics for their songs.

The Orchestra evolved as the house band for the Baobob Club in Dakar. Most of the members were recruited from the Star Band de Dakar, one of Senegal's most important bands. It was an amazing confluence of talent and vision. Togo native Attiso was one of the most inventive African guitarists ever, and singers M'Boup and Theck were to make the Wolof and Mandinka languages the lyrical cornerstone of the group's repertoire. Baobob still performed songs in other languages, with Sidibé and Diallo covering most of the Creole, Spanish, and French vocals, but M'Boup's charismatic performances of Wolof and Mandinka lyrics attracted much of the initial attention. This talented but somewhat undependable vocalist died as the result of a car accident in 1974, whereupon Theck, who later left the group in 1979 to lead his own influential bands, finally stepped into the vocal spotlight along with Sidibé and Diallo. Orchestra Baobob went to the Djandeer club after the Baobob was sold in 1977. They became the house band at a couple of other clubs after that, but then left for Paris, France, in the summer of 1978, hoping to tour Europe and make more money than they could at home. It was by all accounts a fiscal disaster, with poorly attended concerts almost everywhere. While they were in Paris, Orchestra Baobob went into the studio and recorded some material that later showed up on two cassettes after a move back to Senegal in the winter of 1978.

The majority of material performed prior to the 1980s had a Latin tinge to it (despite the efforts of M'Boup and Seck), but the public's taste was beginning to change, sliding toward more local content with young bands like Étoile 2000. Seck had left to pursue his vision and Sidibé became the leader of Orchestra Baobob. By mid-decade, under Sidibé's guidance, the band started including tribal instruments in the arrangements and added a pair of female singers to the lineup. This revamped edition of the group didn't make it out of the 1980s, but many of the personnel have gone on to perform in other outfits.

what to buy: The band's frustrating journey to Paris, France, still resulted in the best recorded sound of their career to that time. On Vera Ça!: The 1978 Paris Sessions ♪♪♪♪½ (World Circuit/ Ledoux-Melodie, 1992/1997, prod. Abou Ledoux) finds Orchestra Baobob playing a lot of Spanish-language material, angling towards the vocal strengths of Diallo and Sidibé. Still, Attiso's "Wane Ma Maguiss," and the group's arrangement of the traditional tune "Digon Gama," demonstrate how they started bringing tribal elements into the Caribbean/Cuban formula.

what to buy next: The songs heard on N'Wolof ♪♪♪½ (Dakar Sound, 1998, compilation prod. Ted Jaspers) were recorded in the Baobob Club (but not in concert) at the beginning of the band's career. M'Boup is vocalist on most of these tracks, and his rough-hewn voice cries and moans with expressive power. He wrote the beautiful ballad "N'Diaye"—which has become a classic tune performed by both Touré Kunda and Ismael Lô—and his rendition on this album is forceful, if not as polished as the other two versions. The sound is rather cavernous, knocking half a bone off the results, but the excitement of this recording lies in hearing the band work out its signature sound. Attiso's guitar playing is already pretty advanced and Seck is still in the chorus, ready to step out if the charismatic and somewhat erratic M'Boup doesn't show up for the gig. Bamba ♪♪♪♪ (Jambaar/Stern's Africa, 1980/1993, prod. Ibrahima Fall, Ibrahima Sylla) is a blend of two albums released in 1980—Mouhamadou Bamba and Sibou Odia —that were credited to "Orchestra Baobab-Gouye-Gui de Dakar." Seck's use of traditional tunes within an electrified setting reached a zenith with "Mouhamadou Bamba" and "Doomou Baaye." His expressive tenor vocals soar over Attiso's chiming guitar leads and a percolating percussion squad. The title tune was a fairly big hit in Senegambia, as was Diallo's "Autorail." Sidibé, Dieng, Attiso, and Gomis also contributed well-crafted songs to these sessions, further enhancing the band's legend as a font of talent.

worth searching for: World Circuit's license to distribute Pirates Choice: The Legendary 1982 Session ♪♪♪♪♪ (World Circuit, 1989) had expired as this book went to press, and it is uncertain when this wonderful disc will be back on the market. It contained some well-chosen selections originally found on 1982's Senegambie and Ngalam cassettes. (These tunes had been cobbled together for an MCA album called Ken Dou Werente before appearing under the World Circuit imprint.) If this were still in print, picking between it and On Vera Ça! would be very difficult.

influences:

- Star Band de Dakar, Rio Band de Dakar
- Youssou N'Dour, Super Diamono, Sahel de Dakar, Ismael Lô, Africando

see also: Africando

Garaud MacTaggart

Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique /The Marrabenta Star Orchestra /Marrabenta Star

Traditional southern Mozambiquan pop music

Formed 1984, in Maputo, Mozambique. Disbanded c. 1995.

Variable membership from the mid-'80s to the mid-'90s, including: Wazimbo, lead vocals; Dulce, lead vocals; Mingas, lead vocals; Guimarâes, lead vocals, rhythm guitar; Sox, lead guitar; Milagre, bass; Xico, trumpet; Leman, trumpet; Matchoti, trumpet; Stewart, percussion; Zeca Tcheco, drums; Carlos Fernandes, bass; Mario Fernandes, saxophone, guitar; Manuel Miranda, drums; José Barata, keyboards; Joâo Maibasse, trumpet; Issufo Mussa, percussion. (All members are from Mozambique.)

The Marrabenta Star Orchestra is the proverbial thistle in the battlefield, something beautiful that thrived in the harshest of environments. Following its independence from Portugal in 1974, Mozambique slid into 15 years of brutal civil war, mostly driven by neighboring South Africa's inability to accept the new nation's overtly socialist government. With its generous ranks of singers, percussionists, horns, and guitars, the Marrabenta Star Orchestra was one of the only Mozambiquan bands to work during these years, in no small part because it enjoyed the favor of the governing party, Frelimo, and was the National Radio Station's house band. Marrabenta is also the name of the music that came out of Mozambiquan towns and into the capitol, Lourenco Marques (now Maputo), beginning in the 1950s, roughly simultaneous with the emergence of kwela music in South Africa. Some marrabenta was smooth and polished and encouraged by the Portuguese colonialists. Other varieties, especially the heavier sound coming from the Gaza province in the south, were seen as subversive. Nevertheless, prior to independence, many itinerant marrabenta singers operated throughout much of this vast East African country. But by 1980, with the civil war heating up, it became impossible for them to continue.

The Marrabenta Star Orchestra brought together veterans of the defunct marrabenta scene into a supergroup. The band revved traditional rhythms to high gear and set them in hard-hitting arrangements, always working around the transcendent, horn-like vocals of lead singer Wazimbo. After recording two releases and touring abroad, the band came on hard times in post-war Mozambique. Though the early '90s brought peace, there were no venues, recording studios, or touring opportunities for bands within the country. Since the group disbanded, ex-members have pursued solo recording careers, in particular Wazimbo and singer Stewart Sukuma, who have both released highly produced CDs.

what's available: Independence ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mapiko/Piranha, 1989) delivers the excitement of a classic African big band. Rough, lively, and full of glorious vocal work and surprising grooves, this is a must-own Mozambiquan release. Marrabenta Piquenique ♪♪♪♪ (Piranha, 1996) is a somewhat slicker followup, including an electric remake of the powerful ballad "Nwahulawana."

influences:

- Lisboa Mathavel, Fanny Mfumo, Alberto Mula, Dilon Djinji, Xidiminguani
- Wazimbo, Stuart Sukuma, Jose Guimaraes

Banning Eyre

Orchestra Virunga

See: Samba Mapangala

Orchestre National de Barbès

Traditional North African, pop, dance

Formed mid-1990s, in Paris, France. Based in Paris, France.

Youcef Boukella, bass, vocals, chef d' orchestre; Larbi Dida, vocals; Aziz Sehmaoui, percussion, vocals; Fateh Benlala, vocals, mandolin;

Toufik Mimouni, claviers; Olivier Louvel, guitar; Jean-Baptiste Ferr, keyboards; Fathella Ghoggal, guitar; Alain Debiossat, saxophone; Karim Ziad, karkabous; Michel Petry, drums; Ahmed Bensidhoune, bendir, derbouka; Kemel Tenfiche, percussion, vocals. (All members are from North Africa.)

Barbès is a North African "nation" composed of a few streets in the middle of the Montmartre district of Paris. It is home to a style of hypnotic dance music mined from funk, calypso, jazz, and rock and fused into Moroccan, Algerian, and French pop and traditional forms. Orchestre National de Barbès puckishly describe what they play as the "national music" of this multicultural milieu. Like many other "world" musicians, ONB inverts the meanings of that term and "neighborhood," taking in influences from every music that wafts into their area and creating sounds that express the spirit of a particular place. As if to complete the circle, this "local" music is rapidly gaining a global following.

what's available: En Concert ♪♪♪♪♪ (Tinder, 1998, prod. Tajmaat) was recorded live in 1996 at the Théatre de l'Agora in Paris. Every track is superb, executed with technical exuberance and almost flippant mastery of a wide range of instruments. Soaring vocals, wistful lyrics, and joyous, passionate grooves make this album music for the head, heart, and feet. En Concert is one of the most critically acclaimed world-music releases ever, and so beloved by the Rolling Stones (true story!) that they play it at the end of their shows to send the paying customers out in the proper festive mood.

influences:

◀◀ North African tradition, contemporary pop

Ron Garmon

Peadar Ó Riada

Irish traditional, choral, chamber, and orchestral

Born December, 1954, in Dublin, Ireland. Based in Cúil Aodha, Cork, Ireland.

The oldest of visionary Seán Ó Riada's seven children, composer and traditional musician Peadar Ó Riada inherited his father's influential role as director of the Cúil Aodha choir at the young age of 16, following the elder Ó Riada's untimely demise in 1971. Founded by Sean in a tiny church in a remote Irish-speaking pocket of west Cork in the early '60s, the all-male, 20-member choir included Peadar from its formative years; the tradition of fathers and sons singing together continues to this day. Over the three decades he has directed the choir, Peadar has written a large body of mostly liturgical music for it. A more recent graduate of the choir is singer Iarla Ó Lionáird. Ó Riada recorded two albums for Gael-Linn in the '70s, and obtained a music degree from University College Cork. He's worked extensively in traditional music—and music for church, film, TV, and radio—and his compositions incorporate classical, avant-garde, and Indian elements as well as Irish ones. While German writer Herman Hesse is a particular influence, much of Ó

indian percussion

As the primary percussion instrument of the North Indian classical tradition, the tabla is the drum most people think of when they think of Indian music (and rightfully so). But there are a host of other fascinating instruments in the pantheon of Indian percussion that deserve wider recognition, particularly in the South Indian (or karnatak) style. The two-headed mridangam, for instance, is a smaller version of the pakhavaj—the ancient Indian drum from which the tabla evolved—with the same paste on its heads which gives the tabla its ringing tone. The ghatam is a large, cylindrical clay pot that is played with the fingers, wrists, and palms on the side of the instrument, and which produces a distinctive low pitch when the opening is slapped with the hand. The morsing is a fantastic Indian jaw harp which, in skilled hands, emits a variety of textural sounds like nothing you've ever heard. The tavil is a large, booming drum used primarily in outdoor ceremonies, while the dholak is a traditional folk drum made of clay that makes a distinctive ringing sound. The kanjira, which has recently been banned from exportation, is a tambourine made from a wood frame and lizard skin. But perhaps the most unique percussion used in South Indian music, konnakkol, isn't technically an instrument at all, but an incredibly complex vocalization system Indian students learn to help them memorize rhythmic compositions. With dozens of different sounds delivered at lightning speed, konnakkol makes hip-hop's human beatboxing sound like baby talk. For a great introduction to all of these wonderful instruments and techniques, check out the Karnataka College of Percussion's dazzling album River Yamuna ♪♪♪♪½ (Music of the World, 1997).

see also: Karnataka College of Percussion, the Tabla (sidebar), Vadya Lahari, T.H. "Vikku" Vinayakram

Bret Love

Riada's output is provincial in the best sense of the word: his biggest inspirations often come from local poet Dónal Ó Liatháin, neighboring musicians, and the natural wonders he finds in abundance both inside his home and outside in the semi-tamed wilds of west Cork.

An accomplished musician on button accordion, concertina, tin whistle, and piano, Ó Riada also accompanies the Cúil Aodha choir on pump organ. He is a firm believer in the culture of the individual rather than the culture of the masses, and it shows in his recent highly personal releases. Unlike so many albums issued today, which target some combination of the dance hall, the concert hall, and radio, Ó Riada's projects give the impression of being carefully crafted creations of a keen, dynamic intellect with little or no regard for market expectations. Poetry, reverie, compassion, intelligence, and a sense of fun and adventure exist side-by-side in his music. Ó Riada displays a wonderful feel for pace, space, and mood. Breaking with modern convention, he preserves, rather than suppresses, natural sounds (birds, sheep, coughing, laughter, children) heard in his home and in the recording studio—which are often the same place.

what to buy: Amidst These Hills ♪♪♪♪ (Bar/None, 1994, prod. Peadar Ó Riada) is a carefully woven tapestry featuring the Cúil Aodha choir singing one of his earliest pieces, a setting of a poem about bees (another of Ó Riada's fascinations) by Ireland's first president; some reels for concertina and bones; meditative piano pieces taped at home with blackbird and peacock adding their contributions from outside the window; and an extended suite commemorating a key 1647 battle that took place not far from the Ó Riada homestead. Winds—Gentle Whisper ♪♪♪♪ (Bar/None, 1996, prod. Peadar Ó Riada) includes guests Kevin Glackin (fiddle) and Nigel Warren-Green of the London Chambre Orchestra (cello), each of whom shines on a large-scale work written specifically with them in mind. On a 15-minute tribute to Ireland's Sulan river, which flows past Ó Riada's door, Glackin plays hypnotically alongside Indian drones. "Shadows and Darkness with a Glimmer of Light"—set down in an inspired first take—is a moving piano and cello duet dedicated to young orphans of war across the world. Neighbor Connie O'Connell then lightens the mood with some lively reels on fiddle. The Cúil Aodha choir sing "The Road of Peace" (by Ó Liatháin) in Irish, which Peadar set to music in the summer of 1995, when glimmers of light first started to appear in Northern Ireland.

influences:

◀◀ Seán Ó Riada, Mícháel Ó Súilleabháin

▶▶ Chieftains, Mícháel Ó Súilleabháin, Iarla Ó Lionáird

see also: Seán Ó Riada

John C. Falstaff

Seán Ó Riada

Irish traditional, choral, chamber, and orchestral

Born John Reidy, August, 1931, in Cork, Ireland. Died October 1971, in London, England.

If the Chieftains are the most visible product of the traditional music revival that has shaped the music scene in Ireland for the past 30 years, then composer, arranger, and revivalist Seán Ó Riada was the catalyst whose own extraordinary vision and accomplishments made their formation and rise to fame possible. In fact, most of the members of the original Chieftains got their first taste of playing together in Ó Riada's groundbreaking Ceoltóirí Chualann ensemble in the early 1960s. Ó Riada's star burned bright and fast, his career including periods as jazz pianist; European classical composer; Irish traditional music enthusiast, revivalist, and innovator; radio broadcaster; writer of film and theater music; founder and leader of Ceolteori Chualann; and finally a long, self-imposed exile far from the spotlight, where he wrote in many different genres at a furious pace.

Born John Reidy in Cork City of parents who were both traditional players, he grew up in Adare, County Limerick, surrounded by music. Reidy graduated from University College Cork with a music degree in 1952, by which time he'd gone through jazz and European classical music phases. The following year he was named Assistant Director of Music for Ireland's state radio in Dublin. He soon felt bored there, however, and uprooted to Paris for a while, where he met seminal Greek composer and hellraiser Mikis Theodorakis, and kept body and soul together by translating pornography by day and playing jazz piano in clubs by night. Back in Dublin, Reidy adopted the Irish form of his name, and the culture that went with it. The whole family—including his half-Italian wife—were obliged to follow suit, and to speak only Irish at home. Seán Ó Riada then wrote his first film score, the very successful and much lauded Mise Eire ("I Am Ireland"), and found himself appointed Director of Music at the Abbey Theatre. There, in 1959, he hired young Paddy Moloney and Sean Potts as part of a small band of traditional musicians who would appear on stage during a particular play. This radical idea proved to be very popular with both critics and theater-goers, and set Ó Riada to thinking about setting up his own folk orchestra. What some credit as the first-ever concert by a group of traditional Irish musicians—on stage rather then as a ceilidh (communal dance) band—took place in Dublin's Shelbourne Hotel later that year: Ó Riada on harpsichord leading a group of musicians that included Paddy Moloney, Sean Potts, Martin Fay, and Michael Tubridy, collectively dubbed Ceoltóirí Chualann ("Musicians of Chualann"). They soon found themselves with live radio exposure and more work at the Abbey. Ó Riada and his troupe—now including his distant cousin, the distinctive singer Seán Ó Sé—courted the concert-going classes in Dublin over the next four years, and issued numerous popular singles and albums.

Around 1963, Ó Riada disbanded Ceoltóirí Chualann as a recording unit (though they still played the occasional concert) and retreated to the remote Irish-speaking village of Cúil Aodha in west Cork, where his own mother had come from. There he founded an all-male choir in the local church; his setting of the old poem "Ag Críost an Siol" ("To Christ the Seed") as an offertory hymn for this choir in now common currency in Ireland and beyond. (The Cúil Aodha Choir still sing on Sundays and holidays under the direction of Seán's son Peadar Ó Riada, their repertoire including seldom-heard Irish secular and church music, as well as a large body of work specially written for them by both Ó Riadas.) During this village period, the elder Ó Riada also served as Lecturer in Irish Music at University College Cork, and was arguably the earliest such academic appointee in Ireland. By the time he died in 1971, at the far-too-young age of 40, he had produced well over 500 works—including three Masses—only a fraction of which have been published to date. His "Mná na hÉireann" ("Women of Ireland") is undoubtedly his best-known tune; later popularized by the Chieftains, it has also been recorded by Phil Coulter & James Galway, Sinéad O'Connor, Scottish group Macalla, Breton (French Celtic) singer and harper Alan Stivell, and English artists Davy Graham, Mike Oldfield, and Kate Bush.

Ó Riada's resurrection and championing of Irish music, including the works of 18th-century harper Turlough O'Carolan (1670–1738), created a deep and lasting effect on the traditional revival scene in Ireland. In some ways, his efforts paralleled what Ewan MacColl and A.L. "Bert" Lloyd were doing at around the same time in Britain. Like Lloyd, Ó Riada was not above passing off as "traditional" some of his own compositions, e.g. the ever-popular "Carrigfergus." Many of the tunes we now associate with the Chieftains date back to their pioneering years as members of Ceoltóirí Chualann, and can be heard on the few Ó Riada CDs available today from the dozen albums in diverse styles he issued during his lifetime. His film scores were among the very earliest orchestral works to incorporate Irish traditional tunes, and have been hugely influential on the writing of the generation that followed: Shaun Davey, Mícháel Ó Súilleabháin, Bill Whelan, Patrick Cassidy, and others. In 1987 an important Ó Riada retrospective concert in Dublin, with musical director Dónal Lunny, resulted in a live double album. A re-united Ceoltóirí Chualann of sorts, including Ó Sé, de Buitléar, Potts, Tubridy, Kelly, and Mercier, was joined by Lunny, Paddy Glackin, Liam O'Flynn, Julia and Billy Clifford, Tony MacMahon, Éamon Kelly, Mary Bergin, and Peadar Ó Riada and the Cúil Aodha Choir.

what to buy: Both Ó Riada sa Gaiety ♪♪♪♪♪ (Gael-Linn, 1969) and Ó Riada ♪♪♪♪½ (Gael-Linn, 1972) feature Cork singer Seán Ó Sé fronting a 10-member, reconvened Ceoltóirí Chualann in exciting, historic live recordings. The first and half of the second were recorded at Dublin's Gaiety Theatre in 1969; the rest of the second album is from the Carolan Tercentenary Concert in Cork in 1970. Ó Sé's piercing, strident voice may not be to everybody's liking today, but it was he who first put Ó Riada's "Mná na hÉireann" ("Women of Ireland") and "Carrigfergus" on the map. Add tunes like "O'Neill's March," "The West Wind," "March of the King of Laois," "Tabhair Dom Do Lámh" ("Give Me Your Hand"), "Si Bheag, Si Mhor," "Planxty Maguire," "Fanny Power," and "Planxty Irwin"—all standards today—and you can't go wrong.

what to buy next: Mise Eire ♪♪♪♪♪ (Gael-Linn, 1969) brings together three masterful film scores from 1959–66, a period of emerging national pride and new cultural aspirations in Ireland as the 50th anniversary of the 1916 Rising approached. Mise Eire ("I Am Ireland") was the first, and like its successors, it effortlessly encompassed Irish melodies both known and obscure in a seamless Mahlerian cloak of strings and horns.

worth searching for: Fans of Seán Ó Sé's voice may want to hunt down Heritage (Harmac, 1986/Outlet, 1988), recorded under the watchful eye of Dónal Lunny. The years have softened the contours of Ó Sé's nasal voice, and the tracks include a remake of his signature song "Carrigfergus" and the odd nod to the Moving Hearts sound (the latter due to Davy Spillane's presence in addition to fellow Hearts alum Lunny's). The two-disc live Ó Riada Retrospective (Gael-Linn, 1987) is a fine tribute to the man and his music, and reprises many Ó Riada favorites, including his son and choir singing "Mo Ghile Mear," as they had done at his funeral. The all-orchestral Romantic Ireland (Marco Polo, 1996) includes Ó Riada's "The Banks of Sullane" from 1956, which was based on the very first piece of music he ever wrote as a college student, and inspired by a similarly titled song his mother used to sing. Ó Riada lived the last eight years of his life right on the banks of this river.

influences:

- Turlough O'Carolan, Gustav Mahler, Jean Sibelius
- The Chieftains, Peadar Ó Riada, Alan Stivell, Dónal Lunny, Shaun Davey, Mícháel Ó Súilleabháin, Bill Whelan, Patrick Cassidy

see also: Mary Bergin Patrick Cassidy, the Chieftains, Shaun Davey, Dordan, Paddy Glackin, A.L. "Bert" Lloyd, Dónal Lunny, Ewan MacColl, Moving Hearts, Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill, Nightnoise, Turlough O'Carolan (sidebar), Liam O'Flynn, Peadar Ó Riada, Mikis Theodorakis, Bill Whelan

John C. Falstaff

Oriental Brothers /Orientals /Dr. Sir Warrior and the (Original) Oriental Brothers International /Goodwin Kabaka Opara's Oriental Brothers International

Highlife

Formed 1971, in Owerri, Nigeria. Based in Lagos, Nigeria.

Core band: Warrior Opara, vocals; Dan Satch Opara, guitar; Goodwin Kabaka Opara, guitar. All members are from Nigeria.

The Oriental Brothers (the name refers to a birthplace in Eastern Nigeria, not the Far East)—vocalist Warrior Opara and twin guitar masters Dan Satch Opara and Goodwin Kabaka Opara—formed their band in 1971, just as the heyday of highlife (a cosmopolitan dance music) was being eclipsed by juju (a more Yoruba-influenced form). Their style was more Nigerian and less international than the highlife groups from Ghana, and for much of the 1970s the Oriental Brothers were one of Nigeria's most popular bands. Despite this popularity, the band's personnel was unstable, allegedly due to the constant sibling rivalry of the principals. In 1977 Goodwin Kabaka left the band to form Kabaka International, later known as Kabaka Opara's Oriental Brothers International. His version of the band included Ghanaian and Congolese accents in the rhythms and guitar lines. In 1980, Warrior left to form Dr. Sir Warrior and the (Original) Oriental Brothers International; Dan Satch continued playing with his own version under the original name. All three are still releasing records successfully, leading many to believe that the inter-familial warfare was a marketing ploy.

worth searching for: The various incarnations of the Oriental Brothers have released more than 50 albums in Nigeria, but, with few exceptions, they are not available outside West Africa. Credited to Dr. Sir Warrior and the Oriental Brothers International, Heavy on the Highlife! ♪♪♪♪♪ (Original Music, 1990) is an excellent compilation put together by Afrophile John Storm Roberts, and contains hit singles by the early Oriental Brothers, Dan Satch Opara, and Dr. Sir Warrior. The incredible guitar work, non-stop groove, and Warrior's gritty vocals make this a must-have. Do Better If You Can ♪♪♪♪♪ (Original Music, 1995) is another John Storm Roberts compilation, this time by Goodwin Kabaka Opara's Oriental Brothers International. The guitar work and overall feel is as much Congolese as Nigerian, with a smoother groove and bubbly, almost reggae-like basslines. Unhappily, Roberts' Original Music label is presently in limbo, so these titles are collector's items for now, with Heavy on the Highlife! being offered for 50 dollars or more. If you can find these albums any cheaper, snap them up. Vinyl and cassette versions may be available in world-music collector's stores.

influences:

⏮ Peacocks Guitar Band International, Prince Nico Mbarga, Victor Olaiya

⏭ Super Negro Bantous, Highlife International, Osibisa

j. poet

Orquesta Aragon

Charanga

Formed 1939, in Cienfuegos, Cuba. Based in Cuba.

Extensive and varying membership across six decades, led first by Rafael Ley Sr. (died 1989), and currently by Rafael Ley Jr.

Charanga is a style of Cuban music in which the rhythms are played on violin and flute rather than the more usual horn section. This resulted in an elegant and perhaps more European-oriented style when Orquesta Aragon began playing in the late 1930s. It was one of the first groups to set the model for this method of performing, and produced hit dance tunes for decades—and still does, under the leadership of the band's founder's son, Rafael Ley Jr. Aragon's music is said to have inspired the New York mambo scene of the 1950s, but they are by no means a retro band, having continued to infuse their sound and styles with lively Caribbean influences.

what's available: Cha-Cha-Charanga ♪♪♪♪ (Tinder, 1997) is Aragon's first new recording in several years, and gives a vibrant snapshot of the group's strong sense of instrumentation, combining elegant dance style with lively island rhythm. 50 Anos de Oro ♪♪♪♪ (EGREM, 1989) is the best historical compilation of Aragon's extensive discography, and one of its most popular recordings. With more than 700 songs in its repertoire, the band enjoys an extensive international recording history. For a look at their style at the height of their popularity in the 1950s, seek out Riverside Years ♪♪♪ (RCA), which, with guest artists like singer Beny Moré and pianist Perez Prado, showcases them in quintessential Latin ballroom-dance mode.

influences:

⏮ Beny Moré, Perez Prado

⏭ Irakere, Los Van Van

see also: Beny Moré, Perez Prado

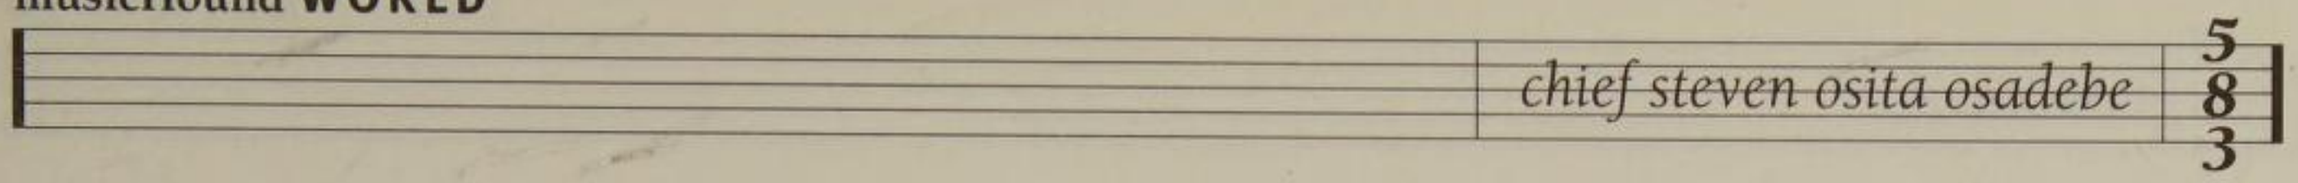
Kerry Dexter



A. Paul Ortega

Native American traditional, singer/songwriter

Born in Albuquerque, NM, USA. Based in Albuquerque, NM, USA.

A. Paul Ortega is a Mescalero Apache artist and spiritual leader. He is also a well-known singer/songwriter, one of the first Native artists to adapt traditional music for non-Native ears. Ortega plays guitar and traditional Native drums, and his fusion of Native forms with American folk music has created a style all his own. Ortega performs as a solo artist and is a generous benefactor to young artists. He has collaborated with singers such as Sharon Burch and Joanne Shenandoah, giving them their first recording opportunities.

what's available: Loving Ways ♪♪♪½ (Canyon, 1991), a collection of Indian love songs performed with Joanne Shenandoah, is the only album of Ortega's on CD, and is a good example of his Native folk style. His spoken interludes, while undoubtedly sincere, often sound embarrassingly amateurish, which is strange given the power and melodic beauty of his music.

worth searching for: Most of Ortega's music is only available on cassette. Look for The Blessing Ways ♪♪♪½ (Canyon, 1984), a collaboration with Sharon Burch; and Ortega's solo albums Two Worlds ♪♪♪ (Canyon) and Three Worlds ♪♪♪ (Canyon).

influences:

- Buffy Sainte-Marie, Floyd Westerman
- Joanne Shenandoah, Sharon Burch, Bill Miller

see also: Sharon Burch, Joanne Shenandoah

j. poet

Geffery Oryema

Worldbeat, singer/songwriter

Born 1953, in Kampala, Uganda. Based in Paris, France.

Oryema grew up during the worst days of Ugandan tyrant Idi Amin's regime, and after his father was assassinated, Oryema was smuggled into Kenya in the trunk of a car. Before Oryema's father passed, however, he had taught his son to play the nanga (harp) and introduced him to African folk, ritual, and pop music. Oryema had also studied Western music in school, and, after making his way to Paris, set about combining these influences into his own special brand of music, a moody style informed by European melodies, African harmonies, and Uganda's unique traditions. Oryema's rich, supple voice combines a growling lower register with a clear, high tenor that often slides effortlessly into falsetto.

what to buy: Who woulda thunk that electronica godfather Brian Eno would provide the perfect balance between tradition and the ambient dreams of the African future? On the lush Exile ♪♪♪♪♪ (RealWorld, 1990, prod. Brian Eno) half the tracks benefit from Eno's soothing atmospherics, and the other five feature Oryema's majestic open-hearted vocals and his work on traditional instruments, chiefly harp and thumb piano.

what to buy next: Oryema's slick African pop never loses its soul or its musicality on Night to Night ♪♪♪♪♪ (RealWorld, 1977, prod. Lokua Kanza, Jean-Pierre Alarcen, Nicolas Fiszman, Daniel Lanois), a perfect blend of Anglo-American and African pop instincts, sung mostly in English. Proof that African pop can embrace the West without being watered down or produced to death.

the rest:

Beat at the Border ♪♪♪♪♪ (RealWorld, 1993)

influences:

- Jimmy Katumba and the Ebonies, Sammy Kasule, Maria Wadaka
- Samite

j. poet

Chief Steven Osita Osadebe

Highlife

Born 1936, in Nigeria. Based in Nigeria.

One of the true legends of the popular and influential Nigerian highlife genre, Osadebe has played the music since 1959. His stellar career as a bandleader with the Soundmakers International has been running strong since 1964, and he's parlayed his classic highlife style into a sustained following, as well as Nigerian gold records well into the '80s. Unfortunately, U.S. listeners have only one album to choose from—but it's a good choice.

what's available: Kedu America ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet/Xenophile, 1996, Prod. Andrew C. Frankel) presents Osadebe as one of the few contemporary highlife acts left (kind of equivalent to playing surf music in the States). Nonetheless, this album shows how influential the sound is. Osadebe fuses heavy rumba rhythms and Ezikel Uti's monumental guitar work with long jams, large percussion sections, and big, circular horn arrangements. The roots of later revolutions like Fela Kuti's Afro-Beat are well-traceable in this Pan-African-flavored project.

influences:

- Steven Amache, Cardinal Rex Lawson
- Fela Kuti, Sonny Okosums

Hank Bordowitz

5/8/4 osibisa

Osibisa

Afropop

Formed 1969, in London, England. Based in England.

Teddy Osei, tenor sax, flute, African drums, vocals; Sol Amarfio, drums, percussion, fontonfrom; Mac Tontoh, trumpet, flugelhorn, percussion; Spartacus R., bass, percussion; Wendell Richardson, lead guitar, vocals; Robert Bailey, organ, piano, timbales; Loughty Lasisi Amao, tenor/baritone sax, flute, congas, fontonfrom.

The world's first true Afropop band, Osibisa emerged out of London's African expatriate underground scene. A veritable Middle Passage crew composed of cats from Ghana, Nigeria, Antigua, Grenada, and Trinidad, Osibisa was a hothouse of hip-shaking, polyrhythmic flow. Their unique mix of Fela Kuti beats, jazz atmospherics, griot-wisdom soundbites, Carnival mas, and skydog guitars secured them a recording contract with Decca—the first such band to be signed to a major British label. At the beginning of 1971, Osibisa released its self-titled debut album; before the year was out, the band also released Woyaya. On a roll, Osibisa toured the U.K. and Europe extensively. In 1972, they brought out Heads, which proved so popular among black college students that the band played several successful shows on that circuit during its 1972 U.S. tour. Since that high point, Osibisa has drifted from label to label, and further away from prominence. The band still exists today, gigging in the U.K. and Europe, sadly overlooked in the world-music boom. Nonetheless, their page in history is guaranteed.

what to buy: Woyaya ♫♫♫♫♫ (MCA, 1971/AIM, 1993, prod. Tony Visconti) is Osibisa's masterpiece. From the ancestral spirits channeling through "Beautiful Seven" to the Nevilles-meet-War-at-the-intersection-of-Horace Silver take on Rahsaan Roland Kirk's "Spirit Up Above," Woyaya is a worldpop fusion that no one—not even Osibisa itself—has equaled since.

the rest:

Celebration: The Best of Osibisa ♫♫♫♫ (AIM, 1993)
Ojah Awake ♫♫♫½ (AIM, 1995)
African Flight ♫♫½ (AIM, 1995)
Welcome Home ♫♫♫ (Songhai Empire, 1995) Best of Osibisa N/A (Cleopatra, 1999)

worth searching for: The out-of-print LP versions of Osibisa (Decca, 1971), Woyaya, and Heads (Decca, 1972) all feature great gatefold cover art, the first two with surreal flying elephant imagery by Roger Dean and the latter with humorous elephant imagery by Mati Klarwein.

influences:

⏮ E.T. Mensah, Guy Warren, Fela Kuti, Rahsaan Roland Kirk

⏭ Mandrill, O.J. Ekomede, Santana, Touré Kunde

Tom Terrell

Ossian

Scottish folk

Formed 1976, in Glasgow, Scotland. Disbanded 1991; re-formed 1997. Based in Scotland.

Billy Ross, vocals, guitar, dulcimer, whistle (1976–80, 1997–present); George Jackson, cittern, mandolin, fiddle, whistle, flute, guitar, vocals (1976–91); John Martin, fiddle, cello, vocals (1976–91); William Jackson, harp, uilleann pipes, whistles, vocals, bass, synthesizer, piano, bodhrán (1976–91, 1997–present); Tony Cuffe, vocals, guitar, tiple (1980–91); Iain MacDonald, bagpipes, flute, whistle, jew's-harp, vocals (1982–91); Stuart Morison, fiddle, cittern, mandolin, vocals (1997–present); Iain MacInnes, Scottish smallpipes, whistles (1997–present); other intermittent touring members, including Maggie MacInnes, harp, vocals; Norman Chalmers, concertina, harp, whistles, vocals. (All members are from Scotland.)

Named after the Bard of the Fianna in Celtic mythology (and the title of one of Scotland's most renowned and infamous works of literature), the folk band Ossian was a gentler alternative to the fiery Tannahill Weavers and the electrified Battlefield Band for the entire 1980s and a couple of years more. Ossian grew out of the Glaswegian folk-rock group Contraband, which included John Martin, George Jackson, and William "Billy" Jackson. These three, plus singer Billy Ross, comprised Ossian's original lineup, which formed in 1976 and established the band's trademark sound: a soft, classically informed, and subtle style that could nonetheless burn with intensity. In 1980 Ross was replaced by singer and guitarist Tony Cuffe, a veteran of such groups as Alba and Jock Tamson's Bairns. Cuffe's voice and full, round guitar-playing became further hallmarks of the group. To complete its growth, Ossian added one final distinctive ingredient in 1982: the sensitive highland pipe and flute playing of Iain MacDonald.

Apart from one tour on which William Jackson was replaced by Maggie MacInnes because of a broken hand, this classic Ossian lineup remained constant until 1990, when Jackson and Cuffe both moved to the United States. At that point, although Ossian did not break up right away, several of its members sought new opportunities and, as a result, both George and William Jackson were sometimes not available for tours. They were replaced on those occasions by multi-instrumentalist Norman Chalmers. Although Ossian remained together for a short time after that, the pressures on a band based in two countries ultimately won out and they broke up. After a short time Martin was recruited into the Tannahill Weavers and MacDonald into the Battlefield Band, while Cuffe and William Jackson performed as solo artists. Ossian was reborn in 1997, when the group Smalltalk, composed of Ross, Iain MacInnes, and Stuart Morison, added William Jackson, who had since moved back to Scotland, to its membership. Although only Jackson and Ross were former members of Ossian (MacInnes and Morison having passed through the ranks of that other Scottish musical institution, the Tannahill Weavers), they decided to play music in the spirit of Ossian's work during the '70s and '80s. Smalltalk changed its name to Ossian and recorded an album. Whether this new version of Ossian will be as successful and long-lived as the previous incarnation remains to be seen.

what to buy: The Best of Ossian ♪♪♪♪♪ (Iona, 1994, prod. Ossian) is undoubtedly the place to start for the uninitiated. It contains tracks from all of Ossian's recordings for the Iona label, which means all but the first of the original group's albums. The selection of tracks is terrific, and manages really to capture what was best about each Ossian lineup: Ross's beautiful Gaelic vocal on "S Gann Gunn Dirich Mi Chaoidh," Cuffe's equally affecting singing in Scots on songs like "The Road to Drumleman" and "I Will Set My Ship in Order," and piper MacDonald's rousing playing on several sets of tunes. Of course, the contributions of stalwart members John Martin, William Jackson, and George Jackson, the founders who remained with the group through almost its entire life, are without peer in Scottish music. There would be only one way to make The Best better: more tracks. At 56 minutes it's not exactly skimpy, but there's room on a CD for considerably more.

what to buy next: Borders ♪♪♪♪♪ (Iona, 1984, prod. Ossian) was the best of Ossian's original albums. It was produced after the band had been together for some time, and had really learned what worked best about their sound. The combination of highland pipes and harp, right from the start of the album, is more compelling than it had been on the predecessor, Dove across the Water. The arrangements are unusual, confident, and quite lovely. Cuffe mined several collections of songs, especially John Ord's Bothy Songs and Ballads, to find unusual and beautiful traditionals to sing, composing melodies where none existed and writing extra verses when necessary. In short, this was both their most traditional and their most original album. Seal Song ♪♪♪♪½ (Iona, 1981, prod. Ossian) comes in a close second. Ossian did not yet benefit from the highland bagpipes, which were to be an important part of Ossian's later palette, but this album nonetheless offers a full and rich sound, due in part to new member Cuffe. Cuffe's strong guitar playing—influenced by Martin Carthy and by Nic Jones—added melodic, harmonic, and percussive dimensions to the band, and his voice is magnificent. Even so, the band was already excellent without Cuffe, as is evident on St. Kilda Wedding ♪♪♪♪ (Iona, 1978, prod. Ossian). The group's deft handling of many and diverse instruments gives this album a light, airy, and appealing feeling. Despite the repertoire of entirely Scottish material, the band at this stage sounded more like an Irish group in the mold of Planxty than like contemporary Scottish acts, with uilleann pipes, cittern, whistle, and guitar taking center stage. Nonetheless, Martin's fiery fiddling and Ross's undeniably Scottish singing in both Gaelic and Scots made the band's Scottish identity quite evident. Ross's singing is also a major ingredient on the re-formed Ossian's debut, The Carrying Stream ♪♪♪½ (Greentrax, 1997, prod. Ossian). On this CD, the new band does not quite succeed in reproducing the classic Ossian sound, but they do come close; MacInnes's Scottish smallpipes are a sort of compromise between the highland and uilleann pipes featured on the original band's albums. Jackson's harp takes a more dominant role, and his piano fills out the sound in places. Ross's voice, guitar, and dulcimer sound as delicate and practiced as they did 20 years ago, and Morison's strong fiddling, while not identical to Martin's, is nonetheless stirring. Of the many solo and duet albums produced by Ossian's members, the best is Cuffe's When First I Went to Caledonia ♪♪♪♪♪ (Iona 1988, prod. Tony Cuffe). Cuffe's firm, sure guitar playing gets much more of a chance to shine on solo tunes like "The Lass o' Patie's Mill," and his singing is never more lovely than on the title track. It is one of the best solo albums of a Scottish singer/guitarist ever.

the rest:
Dove across the Water ♪♪♪ (Iona, 1982)
Light on a Distant Shore ♪♪♪ (Iona, 1986) worth searching for: The band's self-titled debut LP Ossian ♪♪½ (Springthyme, 1976) featured the same lineup as St. Kilda Wedding. Offering some nice songs and tunes, the effort is somewhat tentative overall.

influences:
◀◀ Planxty, Battlefield Band, Jock Tamson's Bairns, Alba, Contraband

▶▶ Tony Cuffe, William Jackson, Smalltalk

see also: Battlefield Band, Martin Carthy, Tannahill Weavers

Steve Winick

Ottopasuna

Modern and traditional folk

Formed 1990, in Helsinki, Finland. Based in Helsinki, Finland.

Petri Hakala, mandolin, mandocello, guitar; Kurt Lindblad, flute, tin whistle, bagpipes, clarinet (1990–1995); Kimmo Pohjonen, melodeon, harmonica, marimba; Kari Reiman, violin; Kristiina Ilomonen, flute, percussion (1995–present); Janne Lappalainen, bouzouki, bass clarinet, tin whistle (1996–present). (All members are from Finland.)

Ottopasuna's name is derived from that of a Finnish folk fiddler, but their take on traditional music isn't very traditional. The group is mainly a recording unit, since the members maintain ongoing careers with bands that include Värttinä, Helsinki

Mandoliners, and Pinnin Pojat. Their first eponymous album drew from venerable sources and was played with some interesting Afro Celtic flavors, while the followup is more Finnish—though even less traditional, since all the material was composed by the group.

what's available: Ottopasuna ♪♪♪♪ (Xenophile, 1993) is one of the original albums in the prestigious Xenophile label's "Finnish Invasion" series, a quirky platter full of fancy picking. The material is traditional, taken from early recordings and old manuscripts, but the renditions are thoroughly modern.

worth searching for: Suokaasua (Swamp Gas) ♪♪♪♪ (Amigo, Finland, 1996, prod. Tom Nyman) is a solid, quirky instrumental outing, well worth searching for, by turns sprightly and moody.

influences:
⏮ Värttinä, Karelia, JPP
⏭ Pinnin Pojat

j. poet

Orlando "Doctor Ganga" Owah /Orlando Owah with his Omimah Band /Orlando Owah and his Young Kenneries

Toye

Born c. 1940, in Owo, Nigeria. Based in Lagos, Nigeria.

In Nigeria, Orlando Owah is a legendary singer, guitarist, and bandleader, known for his unpretentious, deeply African style of music. He started out playing percussion in local bands, but soon moved to Lagos and hooked up with Fatai Rolling Dollar, who taught him to play guitar. Owah formed his first Omimah Band in the late 1960s, launching a career that continues to this day. In 1976 he renamed the band the Young Kenneries. Owah based his music on the "palm wine" (acoustic) guitar styles of Sierra Leone, with a heavy juju/highlife influence. Owah's music is called toye by his fans, who appreciate its earthy lyrics and wild polytonality—the two guitars and the bass each play in a different key, giving the music a slightly jarring quality to non-Africanized ears. The band's rhythmic shifts and unexpected changes of key and tempo undoubtedly keep dancers, and listeners, awake. Owah was jailed for drug use in the 1980s, which may explain his nickname.

worth searching for: The clashing tempi and conflicting keys make Owah's music challenging, and fun. The four track compilation Dr. Ganga's Polytonality Blues ♪♪♪♪♪ (Original Music, 1995, compilation prod. John Storm Roberts) features extended jams and dazzling guitar work. The collection features two tracks by the Omimah Band from 1974 and two by the Young Kenneries from 1981. More than 60 albums of Owah's work have been released in Nigeria, most on the Decca West Africa label.

influences:
⏮ I. K. Dario, Tunde Nightengale ⏭ Music Makers, Okukuseku

j. poet

O'Yaba

Reggae

Formed 1990, in Welkom, South Africa. Based in South Africa.

Botiki Letsi, drums; Tsietsi Koetle, bass; Edward Mphatsang, percussion, backing vocals; Tshidiso "Alexis" Fako, lead and backing vocals; Andrew Dlamini, electric piano, backing vocals; Bernard Themba, lead and rhythm guitar; Sidney Makoni, lead and rhythm guitar, backing vocals. (All members are from South Africa.)

The number of quality rocksteady outfits in Africa testifies to the power of reggae as an international force. One of the better non-Jamaican bands, O'Yaba, came together in the wake of two local predecessors, Sebela and Comedy. O'Yaba's sound recalls the more mainstream pop reggae of Third World and later Steel Pulse, with vocal and lyrical overtones of gospel. Produced by the late, great West Nkosi (better known for his work in mbaqanga, the "township jive" style popularized in the West by Paul Simon's Graceland), the group blends modernism and roots, pop smarts and upfull messages. They seemed to drop out of sight in the mid-'90s, but reunited for one of Nkosi's last productions, Crazy Love, a recording that has yet to receive wide distribution outside of Africa.

what's available: Game Is Not Over ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1992, prod. West Nkosi), brings together choice material from the group's first two South African albums, Tomorrow Nation and Caught Up. Their pop leanings are clear from the opening lick of the first disc's title track, a tip of the hat to the Beatles' "Let It Be." Their synth-powered rhythms and killer harmonies are best displayed in tunes like "Rootsman Soul." Tshidiso Fako's powerhouse voice just erupts out of the record. Whether it's the band's idea or Nkosi's, some home-township licks slip into the guitar part on "Rootsman Story" and even into the penny-whistle hook in "Tsalane." While most of the songs are in English, "Thube" and the aforesaid "Tsalane" show that reggae works just as well in the mother tongues.

influences:
⏮ Bob Marley, Peter Tosh, the King's Messengers, Lucky Dube

Hank Bordowitz

The Oyster Band

Expansive English folk-rock

Formed 1981, in England. Based in England.

John Jones, lead vocals, melodeon, accordion, piano; Ian "Chopper" Kearey, bass, cello, tiple, vocals; Ian Telfer, fiddle, viola, tenor concertina; Russell Lax (a.k.a. Lee), drums, percussion, hammer, vocals; Alan Prosser, guitar, banjo, mandolin, violin, vocals; Cathy LeSurf, vocals (1981); Chris Taylor (1981–84).

The Oysters are a one-of-a-kind punk band whose master musicians lean on Celtic and English dance traditions while rocking harder than most of the mainstream. Criminally underappreciated, they explore the political and personal landscape with intensity and consistency, generating high-spirited power-folk led by the assertive vocals of Welshman John Jones and the incisive electric fiddle of Telfer. The band is frequently transcendent on disc, though no release has ever approached their incendiary live performances. The Oyster Band owes its genesis to two others, the Whitstable Oyster Co. Ceilidh Band (later the Oyster Ceilidh Band), which first took the stage in 1975; and Fiddler's Dram, founded in 1972 by violinist David Arbus, known for his work with East of Eden and the Who. Fiddler's Dram, then also consisting of Prosser, Telfer, Taylor, and LeSurf, made the album To See the Play, notable for a "posthumous" hit novelty single in 1979, "Day Trip to Bangor." The song's success forced the band to make another album, on which they were joined by Kearey, among others. Meanwhile, much of Fiddler's Dram enjoyed a parallel existence in the Oyster Ceilidh Band, with LeSurf, Prosser, Kearey, Telfer, and Taylor joining Jones on the dancehall circuit. In 1981 the band dropped "Ceilidh" from its name, LeSurf departed, and the Oyster Band became essentially the unit that exists today. The Oysters have occasionally collaborated with English folk singer June Tabor, and earned a higher profile for their work—if, again, not for themselves—with buzz-binned Newfoundland folk-rockers Great Big Sea's recent cover of "When I'm Up I Can't Get Down."

what to buy: Ride ♪♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram, 1989, prod. Dave Young) comes closest to the glorious assault of their live show. Cuts range from the rollicking "New York Girls" to the pensive "This Year, Next Year," closing with the itchy fiddle cover of New Order's "Love Vigilantes." The Shouting End of Life ♪♪♪♪ (Cooking Vinyl, 1995, prod. Pat Collier) is highlighted by the fiddle-and-guitar pyrotechnics of "Blood-Red Roses" and a pulsating reworking of Bruce Cockburn's "Lovers in a Dangerous Time." Deserters ♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1992, prod. John Ravenhall) is a hard-edged beauty that includes the reeling "All That Way for This" and the working-class anthem "Fiddle or a Gun."

what to buy next: The band's one full-fledged experiment with June Tabor, Freedom and Rain ♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1990, prod. Oyster Band), is an atmospheric near-masterpiece that includes tunes by Shane MacGowan, Richard Thompson, and Billy Bragg.

what to avoid: Though a poor Oyster recording is not to be had, Little Rock to Leipzig ♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1991, prod. Oyster Band, Dave Young) is a less compelling collection of studio and live odds-and-ends best left to die-hard fans.

the rest:
Step Outside ♪♪♪ (Cooking Vinyl, 1986)

the sitar

The best-known instrument of India, and perhaps in all of world music, is the sitar. Created by the 13th-century musicologist Amir Khusrau, the sitar's strings are plucked with a pick or plectrum. The instrument can have six or seven main strings, along with 11 to 19 sympathetic strings on a different bridge; together these strings provide both melody and accompanying drone. The body of the sitar is historically made from half a dried mature gourd. The sitar's most prominent performer is Ravi Shankar. When George Harrison of the Beatles discovered the instrument at an Indian restaurant during the filming of Help, the seeds of one of the earliest and highest-profile world-music crossovers were sown. After his tutelage with Shankar, Western ears were suddenly "hip" to the East when Harrison played the sitar on 1965's "Norwegian Wood." Once famed session-man Vince Bell discovered the sitar's potential to create an "in" sound, it became not only the instrument of choice for spiritually enlightened hippies, but also easy-listening swingers who discovered sitar-lite through Gabor Szabo and Lord Sitar. Shankar, at once disappointed and galvanized by the superficial level on which most of these fans were approaching his centuries-old tradition, would alternately retreat to India and tour the world, collaborating with Western classical ensembles and heading music schools and programs in the U.S. Both perspectives seem to have won out; today the sitar is equally well regarded as a tool of the Indian classicism Shankar exemplifies, and the crossover pop of hip favorites like Cornershop.

Sam Wick

Wild Blue Yonder ♪♪♪ (Cooking Vinyl, 1987)
Holy Bandits ♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1993)
Trawler ♪♪♪ (Cooking Vinyl, 1996)
Deep Dark Ocean ♪♪♪ (Cooking Vinyl, 1997)

worth searching for: Several early Oyster recordings were released on the band's own Pukka label, and are not readily available: English Rock 'n' Roll—The Early Years 1800–1850, Lie Back and Think of England, 20 Golden Tie Slackeners, and Liberty Hall. The CD single "Cry Cry" (Rykodisc, 1994) from the Holy Bandits album collects three previously unreleased tunes, including an astonishing "Star of the County Down." The Putumayo label's engaging survey of the Celtic-music world's expanding and porous borders, Dublin to Dakar ♪♪♪♪ (Putumayo, 1999, executive prod. Dan Storper), features a track from Oysterband (as they are now referring to themselves) not yet otherwise available in the U.S.

influences:
⏮ Fairport Convention, Pentangle, the Clash
⏭ The Pogues, Spirit of the West

see also: Great Big Sea, the Pogues/Shane MacGowan, Richard Thompson

Martin Connors

Talip Ozkan

Traditional Turkish folk

Born 1939, in Acipayam, Turkey. Based in Paris, France.

Ozkan began his formal training as a student of classical music in the 1940s, studying a variety of Western and Turkish forms. Although it was becoming increasingly popular at the time for Turkish musicians to join orchestras or nightclub bands, Ozkan instead decided to focus on "pure" traditional music, studying Turkish scales, modal systems, and instrumental technique. After graduating from school, Ozkan went to work for Turkish national radio, where he eventually became director of folkloric music and dance programs, arranging and orchestrating performances by musicians from all across the country. By 1977, however, he'd become so tired of the constant lack of funds and the bureaucratic red tape that he moved to Paris, where he earned a doctorate in ethnomusicology. Now widely considered the world's finest living master of the saz, the popular lute instrument traditionally associated with Ottoman music and culture, Ozkan currently concentrates on teaching music theory, and instruction in various instruments and voice, in Paris.

what's available: Mysteries of Turkey ♪♪♪♪½ (Music of the World, 1990, prod. Bob Haddad), originally released in Europe in 1987 by Goasco Music as Talip Ozkan, is a delightfully hypnotic introduction to Ozkan's warm, rich baritone and masterfully intricate saz solos. Although he is unaccompanied and the production values are minimal, Ozkan is spellbinding, tapping out simple rhythms with his foot as the mystical melodies build to rousing crescendi. Romantic, poetic, and voluptuous, this is the Turkish tradition at its finest. Although not quite as stirring, The Dark Fire ♪♪♪♪ (Axiom, 1992, prod. Bill Laswell, Nicky Skopelitis) is another vigorous effort, with a brilliant performance by Ozkan showcased through Laswell's typical crystal-clear production. The necessity of Mahmut Demir's appearance on saz and percussion seems questionable at times, as it occasionally detracts slightly from the purity of Ozkan's performance, but on majestic songs like "Karsilama," his drums do lend the proceedings a suitably monolithic air.

worth searching for: Ozkan has recorded a number of albums released only in Europe (most notably L'Art Viviant de . . .), some of which you may be able to order on import through his French label, Ocora. But expect to pay a pretty penny, and understand that not all may be available on CD.

influences:
⏮ Nayi Osman Dedl, Kul Nesimi, Ashik Veysel, Emrah ⏭ Nicky Skopelitis, Velkis Akkale, Besir Kaya, Turku

see also: Bill Laswell

Bret Love

Ozomatli

Latin-funk-hip-hop-rock

Formed 1995, in Los Angeles, CA, USA. Based in Los Angeles, CA, USA.

Wil-Dog Abers, vocals, bass; Raúl Pacheco, guitar, lead vocals; Asdru Sierra, trumpet, lead vocals; Jose Espinoza, alto sax; Jiro Yamaguchi, tabla, percussion; Cut Chemist, turntables; Chali 2na, rap vocals; Justin "Niño" Porée, percussion; William Marrufo, drums, vocals; Ulises Bella, tenor sax, guitar, clarinet, bass clarinet, vocals. (All members are from USA.)

Ozomatli smashed onto the scene in Los Angeles almost by accident. Founder Wil-Dog Abers began writing songs during a month-long strike protesting conditions at his workplace, a local youth jobs agency called the Los Angeles Conservation Corps. During the downtime, he hooked up with an old friend, Raúl Pacheco, who had just moved back to town. Together, they started putting together material that reflected the increasingly hot and spicy ethnic, political, social, and musical stew that is Southern California. More musicians were added until Ozomatli, named after the Aztec god of dance, became a veritable UN of multi-culti rhythms. Its members claim Cuban, Mexican, African, Japanese, and European ancestry; its instrumental lineup includes turntables and tablas; and its style covers funk, salsa, hip-hop, and rock. The group's weekly residency at the tiny Opium Den sparked such word-of-mouth crowds that the engagements had to be moved to a larger, 400-capacity club. A year later, to satisfy the growing fan base, Ozomatli issued a four-track EP, Ya Llego!, which included one of their most popular songs, "Como Ves." In addition to its packed, sweaty club dates, the band began dazzling large audiences by opening for the likes of Santana and playing at stops on the multi-act Warped and H.O.R.D.E. festival tours. A recording deal with Almo Sounds soon followed, and an eponymous debut album was issued in 1998, fully documenting Ozomatli's pan-global pop style. Take-no-prisoners touring brought them to every town in the land while the album got them on seemingly every critic's Top Ten list, with ubiquitous soundtrack incursions like EdTV inching them ever closer to world domination.

what's available: Go with the full-length debut album, Ozomatli ♪♪♪♪ (Almo Sounds, 1998, prod. T-Ray, Ozomatli), as all of the band's swinging strengths are evident. Then backtrack and pick up Ya Llego! ♪♪♪ (self-released, 1997, prod. various), where it really all began.

influences:

◀◀ Santana, Tower of Power, Azteca, Malo

Cary Darling

Augustus Pablo

Reggae, dub

Born Horace Swaby, 1953, in Kingston, Jamaica. Died May 18, 1999, in Kingston, Jamaica.

Augustus Pablo was a master of the melodica, a mouth-blown keyboard instrument, and one of the originators of dub, an offshoot of reggae that utilizes the recording studio to remix tunes beyond recognition. Pablo's musical approach blended reggae rhythms with minor-key melodica and organ melodies in a style that he called "Far Eastern."

The former Horace Swaby's first instrument was piano, which he taught himself to play while attending the Kingston College School. But after borrowing a melodica from a girlfriend, Swaby became fascinated with that instrument, adapting to it so quickly that he was invited to play on several tunes recorded by Bob Marley & the Wailers between 1969 and 1970. He later appeared on recordings by Jimmy Cliff and Burning Spear, and performed as a member of Sly Dunbar's Skin, Flesh & Bones Band. During one recording session, the not-yet-pseudonymous artist met the original Augustus Pablo (Glen Adams), who played keyboard (and, coincidentally, melodica) for the Upsetters. When Adams emigrated to the United States in 1971, producer Herman Chin-Loy suggested that Swaby adopt the name. Although he recorded his first hit, "Java," in 1972, Pablo's greatest period came when he joined forces with producer King Tubby in 1973. His own triumphs as a producer would follow, including Junior Delgado's groundbreaking Raggamuffin Year in 1986. Pablo died of the nerve disorder myasthenia gravis in 1999, leaving behind a legacy far out of proportion to his tragically young age.

what to buy: There were dub albums prior to the release of King Tubby Meets Rockers Uptown ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1976, prod. King Tubby), but none had the impact of this recording featuring Augustus Pablo. Accompanied by Robbie Shakespeare (bass) and members of Bob Marley's band, including Aston "Family Man" Barrett (bass), Carlton "Carlie" Barrett (drums), and Earl "Chinna" Smith (guitar), Pablo mellifluously blows his melodica through such dub classics as "Keep on Dubbing," "Young Generation Dub," "Each One Dub," "Brace's Tower Dub," and "Skanking Dub."

what to buy next: The follow-up to King Tubby Meets Rockers Uptown, East of the River Nile ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1977, prod. Augustus Pablo) continues to explore the possibilities of dub.

best of the rest:

Rebel Rock Reggae: This Is Augustus Pablo ♪♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1973/1997)
Ital Dub ♪♪♪ (Trojan, 1975)
Meet King Tubby Inna Fire House ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1981)
Original Rockers ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1979)
Thriller ♪♪♪ (Echo Jazz, 1983)
Earth's Rightful Ruler ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1983)
Rebel Rock Reggae ♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1986)
Rockers Story ♪♪♪ (RAS, 1989)
Rockers International Showcase ♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1991)
Presents Rockers Dub Store '90s ♪♪♪ (Rockers, 1993)
Pablo & Friends ♪♪♪ (RAS, 1997) Valley of Jehosaphat ♪♪♪ (RAS, 1999)

influences:

◀◀ Bob Marley, the Skatalites, the Upsetters

▶▶ The Clash, Sly & Robbie, Burning Spear

see also: Joe Higgs, King Tubby, Hugh Mundell, Oku Onuora, Sly & Robbie

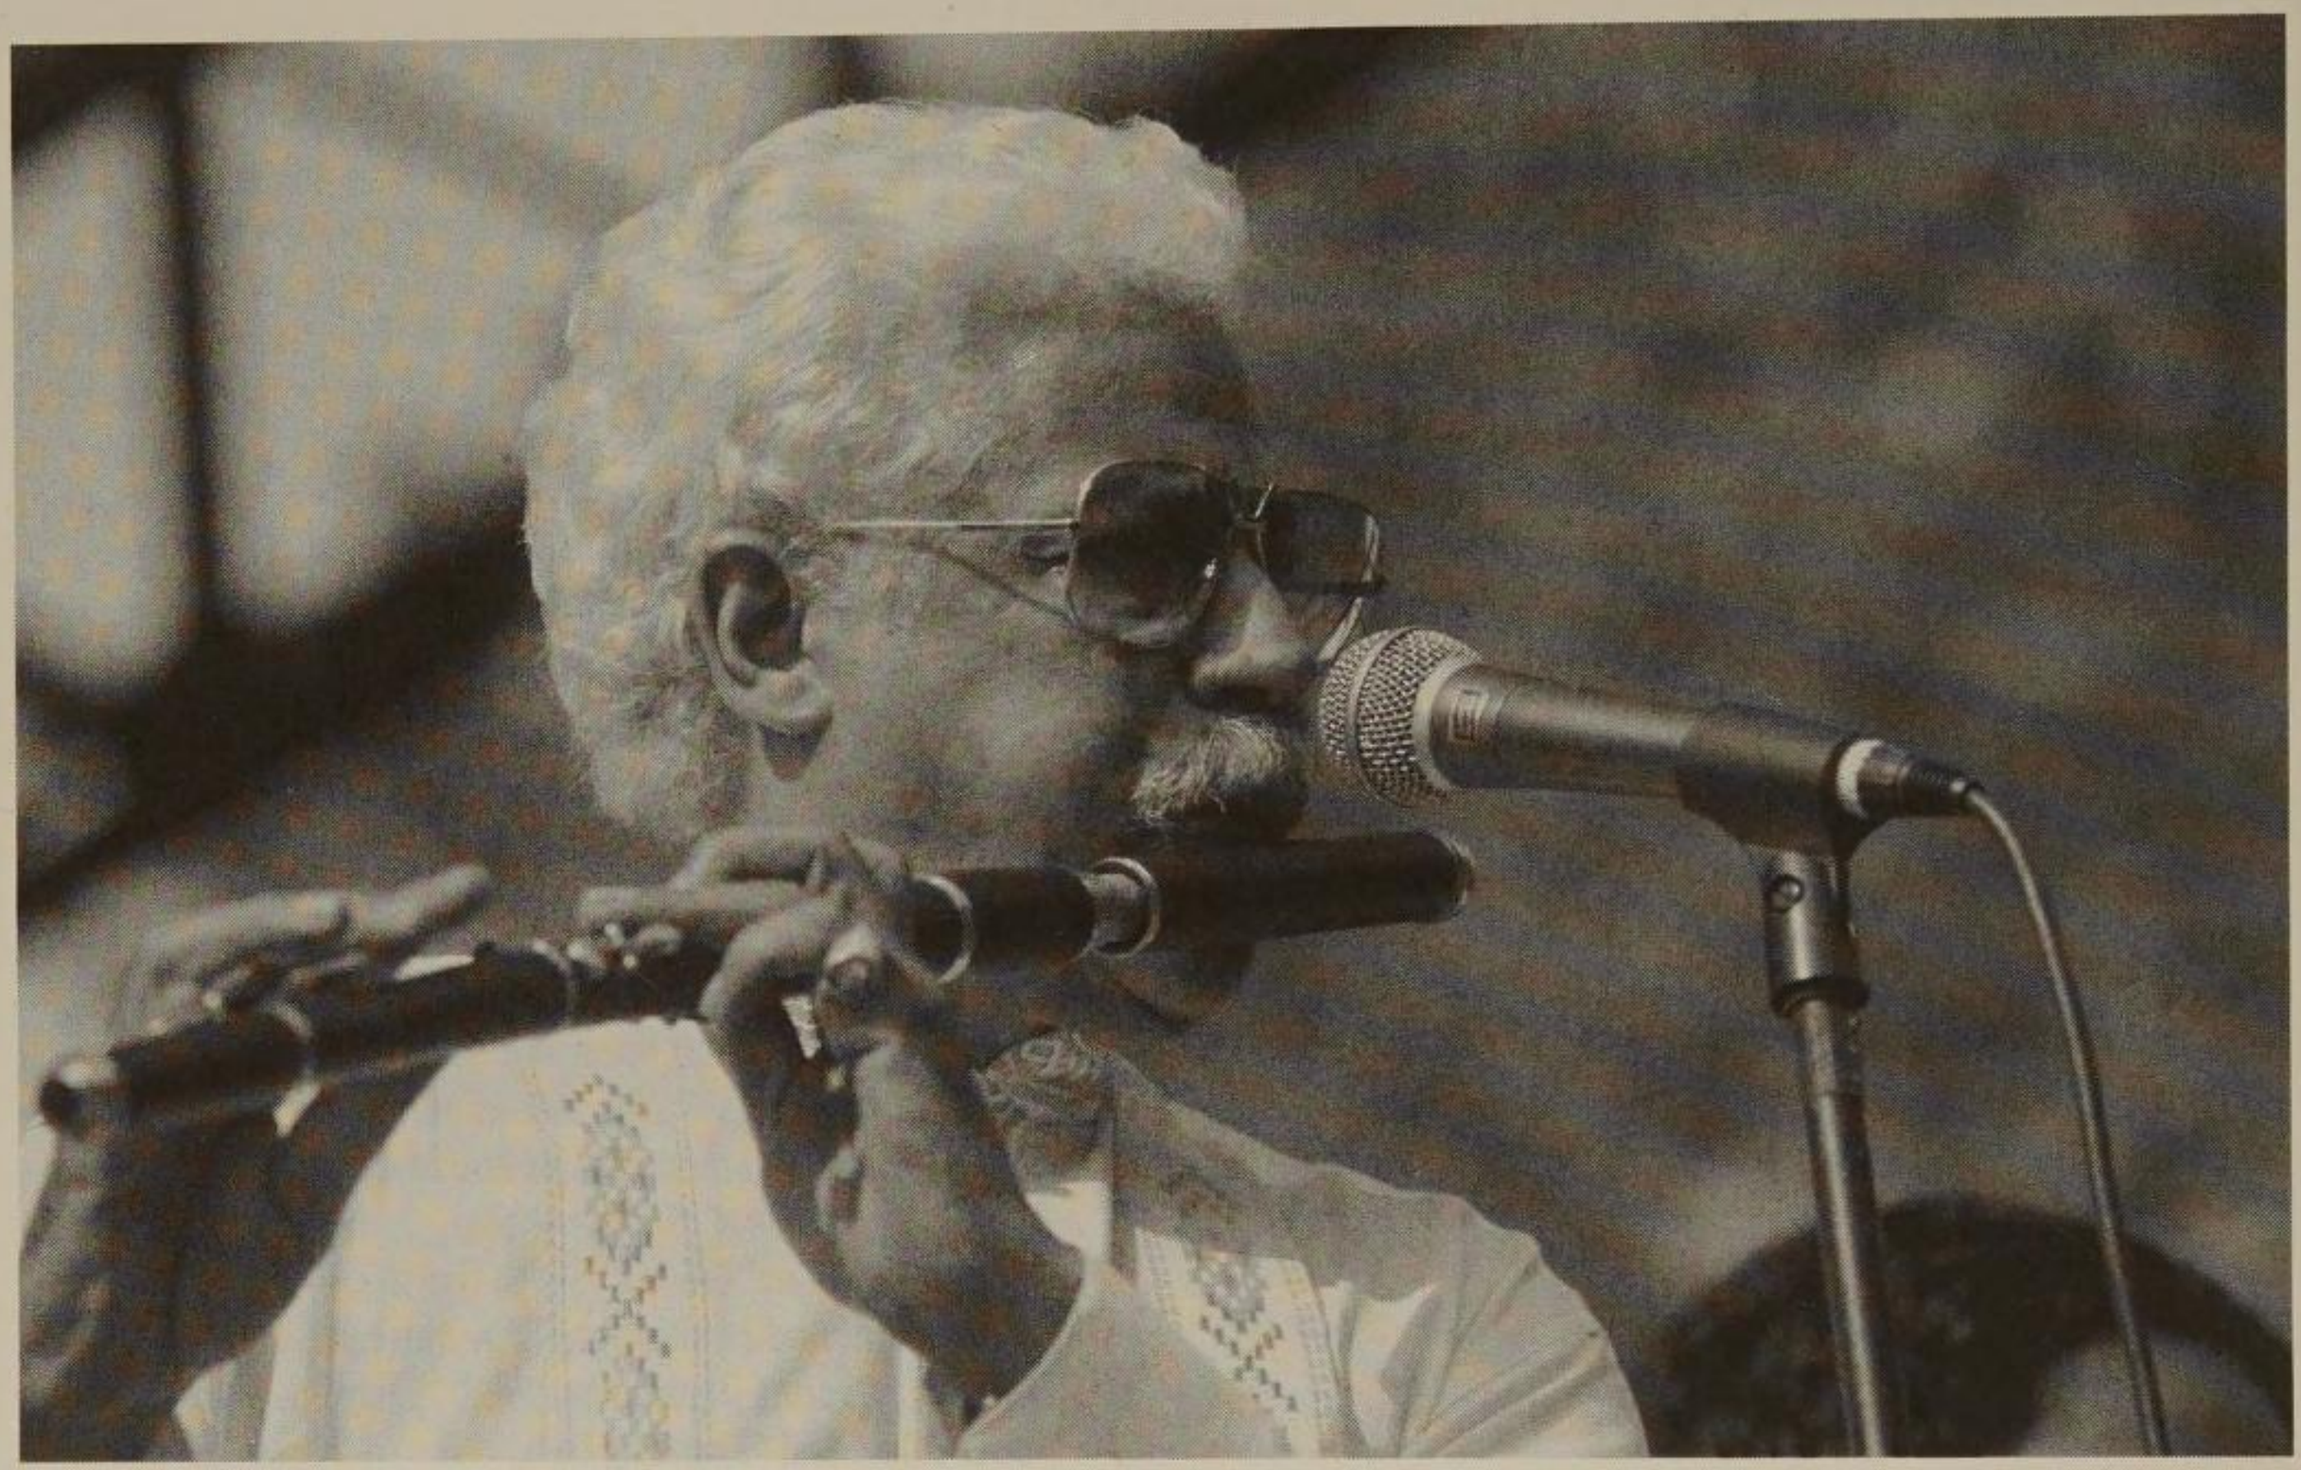
Craig Harris



Johnny Pacheco

Johnny Pacheco

Salsa

Born March 25, 1935, in Santiago de los Caballeros, Dominican Republic. Based in New York, NY, USA.

Think of it in terms of the word-association exercises you had in school: James Brown is to soul as Johnny Pacheco is to . . . salsa. That's right. Pacheco is the godfather—maybe even the father—of what has arguably been the most popular Latin music in the United States over the past 50 years. Pacheco, who plays flute, saxophone, and percussion, moved from the Dominican Republic to New York City as a teen in the late 1940s. He joined the legendary Charlie Palmieri's Latin orchestra and played with them for a number of years, leaving in 1959 to form his own band. With his own outfit, Pacheco began experimenting with new sounds, blending African, Cuban, Puerto Rican, and other Latin music into what was soon to be called salsa. In 1964 Pacheco and attorney Gerald Masucci launched the Fania record label, giving birth to this new musical form in earnest. Pacheco and Fania continue to crank out the salsa, under Pacheco's own name as well as that of the Fania All-Stars and other aggregations. The label has been home at one time or another to many Latin superstars, including Willie Colon and the legendary queen of salsa, Celia Cruz. Throughout his lengthy career Pacheco has turned out more than 60 records, with still more tunes appearing on numerous compilations. Although many of his groundbreaking 1960s recordings are out of print or darn hard to find, several can be located in stores with large Latin selections.

what to buy: The reissue Compadres ♪♪♪♪ (Fania, 1995, prod. Johnny Pacheco) might be scarce, but it's the record that put the hot in 1970s "tipico"-style salsa. Pacheco leads the band and plays flute and percussion, while Pete "El Conde" Rodriguez belts out the vocals. Fania put out more than 15 of Pacheco's recordings in 1992—reissues, remixes, some old, some new. One of them, Demanda Popular ♪♪♪ (Fania, 1992, prod. Johnny Pacheco), includes Pacheco's "Suarilo" as well as a—needless to say—surprising cover of Donovan's "Sunshine Superman." El Conde, Elliot Romero, and Pete Podriguez handle the vocals.

best of the rest:
Artist ♪♪♪ (Fania, 1992)
El Maestro ♪♪♪ (Fania, 1992)

influences:
- Charlie Palmieri, Noro Morales, Tito Puente
- Willie Colon, Celia Cruz, Ruben Blades, Joe Cuba, Yomo Toro, Gloria Estefan see also: Willie Colon, Celia Cruz, Charlie Palmieri

Andrew BeDell

Page & Plant

Rock 'n' roll

Formed 1994, in London, England. Based in England.

Jimmy Page (born January 9, 1944, in Heston, Middlesex, England), guitar; Robert Plant (born August 20, 1948, in Bromwich, Staffordshire, England), vocals.

Most people know and love Jimmy Page and Robert Plant as half of the iconic granddaddy of all metal bands, Led Zeppelin. However, it is doubtful that anybody immersed in world music in the purist sense would recognize these former paragons of excess to be true "world" artists. And rightfully so. But the guys must be given their due. In their youth as Zep, Page and Plant's tunes borrowed certain elements from abroad—a kind of pseudo-Celtic, middle-brow Middle Eastern lilt—not typically found in the blues-based rock being played by so many bands of the 1970s. Today, they're not exactly giving the oldies circuit what it wants either, having reunited after 14 years of post-Zep wanderings for a world-heavy MTV Unplugged concert and subsequent second act, still in progress as we speak.

what to buy: No Quarter ♪♪♪♪ (WEA/Atlantic, 1994, prod. Jimmy Page, Robert Plant) is the energetic live recording from the MTV special. To their credit, Page & Plant assembled an outstanding supporting cast for this gig, including Porl Thompson on guitar and banjo, Jim Sutherland on mandolin and bodhrán (Irish frame drum), Nigel Eaton on hurdy-gurdy, and Charlie Jones on bass. Notable Middle Eastern (and Indian) musicians include Najma Akhtar on vocals, Hossam Ramzy and Ibrahim Abdel Khaliq on percussion, and Abdel Salam Kheir on oud (Arabic lute). And we can't leave out the London Metropolitan Orchestra. The proceedings, recorded in Marrakesh, Morocco; Bron-Y-Aur, Wales; and London, include several Led Zeppelin chestnuts and a few new numbers. Page & Plant's decidedly world-music approach lends an exotic air to "The Battle for Evermore," "Kashmir," and "Gallows Pole," while they give a more classic Houses of the Holy treatment to "Nobody's Fault but Mine" and "Friends." The newer tracks, "Yallah" and "City Don't Cry," are both laced with hypnotic chanting by Najma Akhtar and others from the assembled chorus. Walking into Clarksdale ♪♪♪ (WEA/Atlantic, 1998, prod. Jimmy Page, Robert Plant) is a slightly less worldly effort. Though there are decided nods to Middle Eastern instrumentation, the disc is more Celtic in flavor, with Plant's pagan lyrical imagery in full swing. The song list is all new, albeit with an acoustic Zeppelin feel, again paying homage to Houses of the Holy and Physical Graffiti.

influences:
- Willie Dixon, the Beatles, Chuck Berry, Sonny Boy Williamson, Howlin' Wolf, Robert Johnson, Led Zeppelin, Hossam Ramzy
- AC/DC, Aerosmith, Bad Company, Black Sabbath, Bonham, Whitesnake, Van Halen, and a host of others

see also: Najma, Hossam Ramzy

Andrew BeDell

Gabby Pahinui

Slack-key guitar

Born Charles Philip Pahinui, 1921, in HI, USA. Died October 13, 1980, in Honolulu, HI.

Gabby Pahinui was one of Hawaii's great slack-key guitarists, and the one who introduced many mainlanders to the style (known for its open-tuned finger-picking). He ushered in the modern slack-key era when he made his first recordings in 1947, and continued recording and performing—both as a frontman and a sideman—until his death more than 30 years later. His many recordings, along with his virtuosic playing style and evocative falsetto singing, forever distinguished him as the father of his style in its modern form. Pahinui played in many well-known Hawaiian bands, including the Sons of Hawaii and the Hawaiian Serenaders. During the 1970s he led his own outfit, the Gabby Pahinui Hawaiian Band, which featured four of his children. World-music patron and guitar master Ry Cooder helped bring Pahinui's talents to mainland attention, but within the Hawaiian islands, there probably was and is not one guitarist who's not already directly influenced by Pahinui's music.

what's available: Though Pahinui recorded often throughout his career, most of his albums are no longer in print or are very difficult to find outside Hawaii. Fortunately, his watershed album The Gabby Pahinui Hawaiian Band, Volume 1 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Edsel, 1975/1987, prod. Panini) is readily available as a British import. It features a band including Sonny Chillingworth, Cyril and James "Bla" Pahinui, and Ry Cooder. It's an outstanding recording—made with a generator-driven studio in a remote section of the island of Hawaii in 1974. This is probably the best place to start for someone who's just getting interested in Hawaiian music. Pahinui and Atta Isaacs, who often played together, can be heard in duo fronting a five-piece band on Two Slack-Key Guitars ♪♪♪½ (Tradewinds, 1996, prod. Margaret Williams). The age of the recording shows, but the playing is exceptional.

influences:

⏮ Sonny Chillingworth, Atta Isaacs

⏭ James "Bla" & Cyril Pahinui, George Kuo, the Kahumoku Brothers, Ozzie Kotani, Keola Beamer, Rev. Dennis Kamakahi, Ledward Kaapana

see also: Sonny Chillingworth, Ry Cooder, the Pahinui Brothers

Brian Mansfield

The Pahinui Brothers /Cyril Pahinui /James "Bla" Pahinui

Slack-key guitar

Formed in HI, USA. Based in HI, USA.

Cyril Pahinui (born April 21, 1950, in Waimanalo, HI, USA), guitar, ukulele, vocals; James "Bla" Pahinui (born 1942, in Waimanalo, HI, USA), guitar, ukulele, vocals; Martin Pahinui (born in Honolulu, HI, USA), bass, vocals.

As sons of one of Hawaii's musical legends, the Pahinui Brothers have had big shoes to fill. Though they had performed on their own, they came to the forefront of Hawaiian music when they and another sibling joined their father in the Gabby Pahinui Hawaiian Band during the early 1970s, shortly after Gabby left the Sons of Hawaii. Since the elder Pahinui's death in 1980, the brothers have continued performing and recording, both separately and together. Cyril, James (usually called "Bla"), and Martin recorded an album for Private Music in 1992, and Cyril and Bla have each recorded solo for Dancing Cat.

what's available: The Pahinui Bros. ♪♪♪ (Private Music, 1992, prod. Steve Siegfried, Witt Shingle, Ry Cooder) takes a mainstream, mainland approach to Hawaii's distinctive, open-tuned slack-key guitar style, mixing songs by John Lennon ("Jealous Guy") and Steve Earle ("My Old Friend the Blues") with otherwise largely traditional fare. The session band includes lap-steel player David Lindley, drummer Russ Kunkel, and guitarist Ry Cooder. Both Cyril and James subsequently signed with George Winston's Dancing Cat Records and released solo albums. Cyril Pahinui, the ninth of Gabby's 10 children, made his solo debut with 6 & 12 String Slack Key ♪♪♪ (Dancing Cat, 1994, prod. George Winston) after a many-band apprenticeship. Half instrumental and half vocal, 6 & 12 String Slack Key offers exactly what its title suggests, with Cyril playing each instrument solo in a variety of tunings. James "Bla" Pahinui has recorded more often, though his early solo albums are out of print. Bla's Mana ♪♪♪ (Dancing Cat, 1997, prod. George Winston, Howard Johnson) shows the influence of his interest in both Latin music and doo-wop—he does a vocal medley including "Silhouettes (On the Shade)," "Goodnight My Love," and "Can't Help Falling in Love (With You)." That's a little odd, but, like the rest of the album, it has an endearing quality to it. James is a left-handed guitarist who plays his instrument upside-down and backwards; he plays all the songs here in a "Dropped D" tuning that runs D-A-D-G-B-E from the highest-pitched string to the lowest.

worth searching for: Cyril and Bla both play guitar on their dad's classic The Gabby Pahinui Hawaiian Band, Volume 1 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Edsel, 1975/1987, prod. Panini).

influences:

⏮ Gabby Pahinui, Sonny Chillingworth, Ry Cooder

⏭ George & Moses Kahumoku, Ozzie Kotani, George Kuo

see also: Gabby Pahinui, Ry Cooder

Brian Mansfield

Charlie Palmieri

Salsa, Latin jazz

Born 1927, in New York, NY, USA. Died 1988, in England.

Although not as well known as his younger brother Eddie, Charlie Palmieri was one of the most influential piano players in the history of salsa and Latin jazz. Classically trained, Palmieri is best remembered for his heavily percussive approach to the keyboards.

Palmieri began his musical career very young. Studying piano from the age of seven, he became a professional musician at 16. Though he formed his own band, El Conjunto Pin Pin, in 1948, it was short-lived and he went on to become a sideman in bands led by Tito Puente, Tito Rodriguez, and Pupi Campo. Palmieri's second attempt as a leader was more successful. Formed in 1958, his Charanga Dubonney was one of the best Latin bands to feature flute and violin. In its mid-1960s incarnation, the Dubonney Orchestra, Palmieri replaced the flute and violin with trumpets and trombones. Also during that decade, Palmieri served as music director of the Alegre label's Alegre All-Stars in New York.

But Palmieri's hard work came with a price. In 1969 he suffered severe emotional problems. Following a lengthy recovery period, he was hired as music director of Tito Puente's television show, El Mambo De Tito Puente. In an attempt to slow down his touring schedule, Palmieri became a teacher and lecturer on Latin music and history. He then moved to Puerto Rico in 1980, and remained on the island until 1983. Although he subsequently planned to perform a concert with his brother, he suffered a massive heart attack and stroke after traveling to New York to help plan the event. Still, he resumed his career in 1984 with a small ensemble. Together with Jimmy Sabater, he served as co-leader of the aptly named Combo Gigante, and in 1987 played piano on an album by a fellow giant, percussionist Mongo Santamaria. The following year, Palmieri traveled for the first time to England. While there, he suffered a second heart attack, which would take his life.

what to buy: Impulsos ♪♪♪½ (Mpl, 1975, prod. Charlie Palmieri) documents a historic jazz and Latin music session with Palmieri's piano and organ-playing accompanied by such top-notch Latin players as Tito Puente and Jerry Gonzalez.

what to buy next: Gigante Hits ♪♪♪½ (Alegre, 1994, prod. Charlie Palmieri) samples tracks from throughout his recording career.

the rest:
Tribute to Noro Morales ♪♪♪½ (Alegre, 1956)
Charanga ♪♪♪ (United Artists, 1960)
Pachanga at the Caravana Club ♪♪♪½ (Alegre, 1961)
Latin Bugalu ♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1968)
The Giant of the Keyboard ♪♪♪ (Alegre, 1972)
Adelante Gigante ♪♪½ (Alegre, 1975)
Perdido ♪♪♪ (Alegre, 1977)
A Giant Step ♪♪½ (Tropical Budda, 1984)
Hay Que Estar En Algo ♪♪½ (Alegre, 1992)
Heavyweight ♪♪½ (Alegre, 1995)
Echoes of an Era ♪♪♪½ (PolyGram, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Tito Puente, Mongo Santamaria, Dizzy Gillespie

▶▶ The Fort Apache Band, Ray Barretto, Gato Barbieri

see also: Jerry Gonzalez & the Fort Apache Band, Eddie Palmieri, Tito Puente, Mongo Santamaria

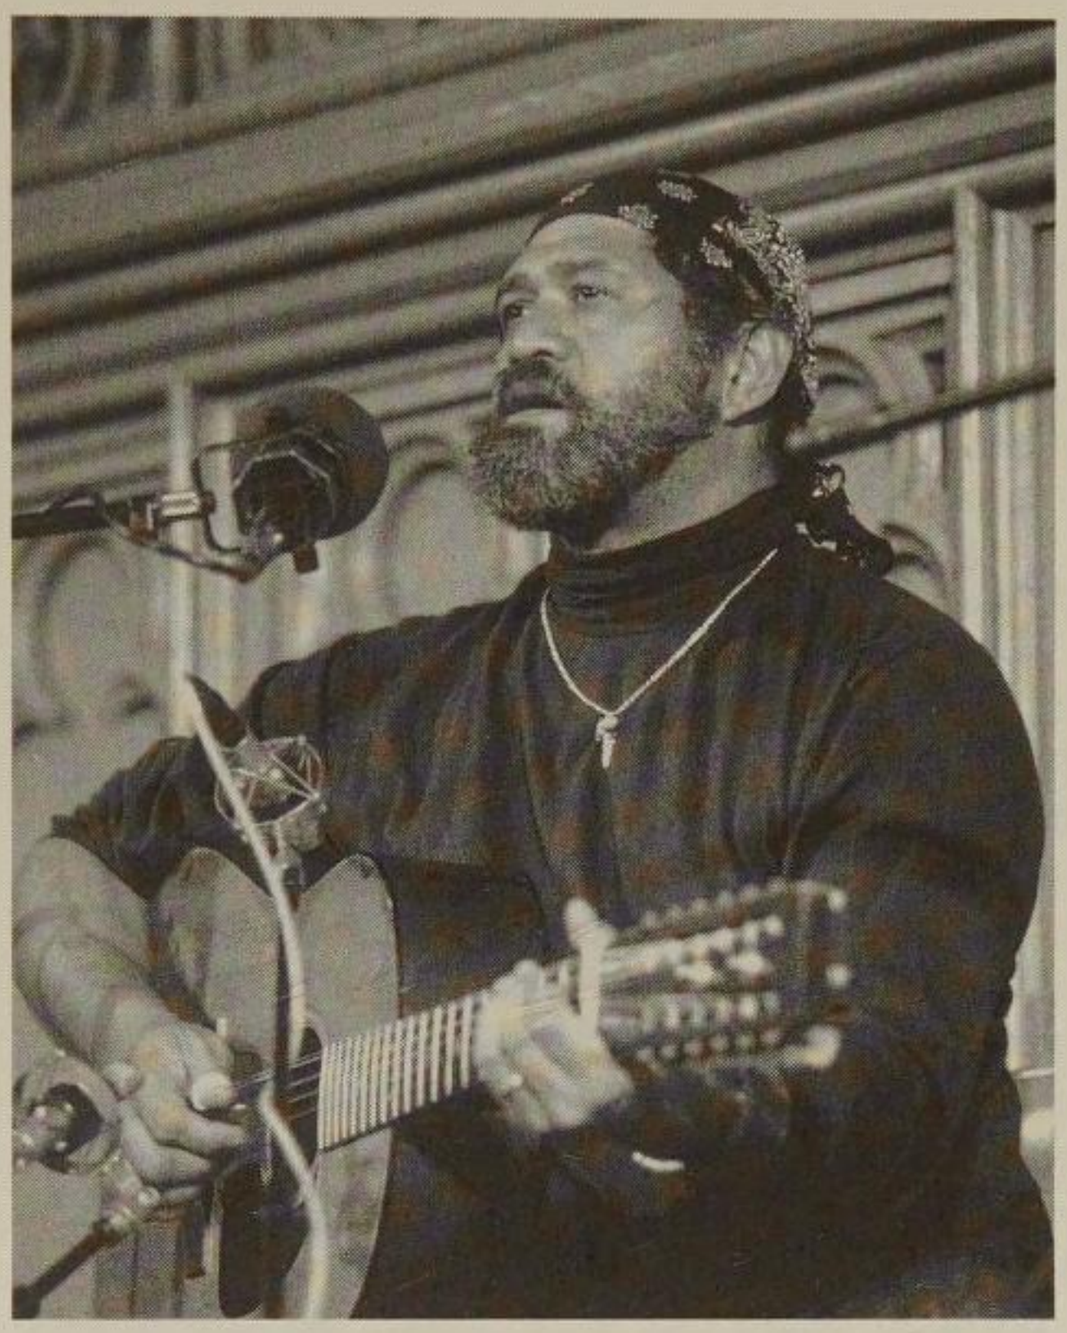
Craig Harris



Cyril Pahinui

Eddie Palmieri

Latin jazz

Born December 15, 1936, in New York, NY, USA. Based in USA.

Eddie Palmieri started playing the piano when he was eight years old, picking up the rudiments of performance from his older brother Charlie. It was Charlie who introduced Eddie to his first formal teacher in 1949, even though the younger Palmieri was starting to gravitate toward the timbales. This interest in percussion was to remain with him after he switched back to playing the piano a few years later. During the mid- and late 1950s Palmieri worked with a variety of bandleaders, the best-known of whom were vocalists Vincentico Valdez and Tito Rodriguez. When Palmieri finally went out on his own in 1960, he formed a charanga (violin-and-flute-heavy Cuban ensemble) called La Perfecta, which was similar to the groups led by his brother Charlie. Jazz elements started creeping into Eddie's playing and writing in the mid-1960s, just in time for the band to break up in 1968. Palmieri continued exploring his own personal fusion of Latin music and jazz during the 1970s, with an emphasis on the newer electronic gadgets being brought into the market. His later material shows an increased growth in both arranging and composition (although his electronic experimentation appears less often these days), and he, along with Cachao and Tito Puente, can now be considered among the most popular elder statesmen in the world of Latin jazz.

what to buy: Palmas ♪♪♪♪♪ (Elektra/Nonesuch, 1994, prod. Eddie Palmieri) shows the jazz influences in Palmieri's music more than anything he had done before it. His association with trumpeter Brian Lynch, trombonist Conrad Herwig, and alto saxophonist Donald Harrison was to continue past this release, but the formidable front line created by these three expert jazzmen here adds an improvisational punch to the awesomely talented Latin rhythm section already on hand. There are no weak tunes in the entire set, making this the Palimeri album jazz fans should start with. On Arete ♪♪♪♪½ (RMM/Tropijazz, 1995, prod. Eddie Palmieri), listeners should go right to "Definitely In," where Palmieri's slightly skewed arrangement and McCoy Tyner-esque piano voicings blend Latin and jazz elements as well as anyone ever has. "Waltz for My Grandchildren" has a pleasant Monk/Brubeck-goes-Latin feel to it, and the rhythm-fest at the front end of "Sixes in Motion" is a pulsating delight. The one caveat for this release concerns Palmieri's vocal groans and moans (à la Keith Jarrett, Oscar Peterson, and Glenn Gould) when he plays piano on the otherwise commendable "Sisters." For some folks, it's an annoyance that might detract from the overall quality of the album.

what to buy next: El Rumbero del Piano ♪♪♪♪½ (RMM, 1998, prod. Eddie Palmieri) features the usual batch of jazzers, but the slant aims straight at the salsa market. The tunes are relatively compact and to the point, with hot vocals from Wichy Camacho and Hermán Olivera. Folkloric group Los Pleneros De La 21, an outfit specializing in Puerto Rico's native plena rhythms, appears on "Dónde Está Mi Negra," and there is a splendid cover of Arsenio Rodríguez's "Oiga Mi Guaguancó," with a tres (small Cuban guitar) solo from Nelson González that echoes the original. Lucumi, Macumba, Voodoo Leyendas ♪♪♪♪ (Sony Discos, 1978/1995, prod. Eddie Palmieri) was a groundbreaking recording for Palmieri in the same way that 1979's Rican/Struction was for Ray Barretto, yet it sold poorly. On many levels, this is more a pop album than a jazz album, but the skillful arrangements incorporating both Brazilian and R&B elements are better than what one would hear on a rock session from the same period. "Colombia Te Canto" and the Santería-inflected percussion (reflecting that Afro-Caribbean religion's ritual) of "Mi Congo Te Llama," as well as the title tune, make this one of Palmieri's more interesting experiments. A solid album throughout, Vortex ♪♪♪½ (RMM/Tropijazz, 1996, prod. Eddie Palmieri) is marred slightly by a useless if clever Latinized arrangement of Beethoven's "Minuet in G," and Palmieri's distracting vocal rumbles and wheezes. Noteworthy tunes include "Iriaida," with its surprisingly tasteful use of electronic sounds, and "Vanilla Extract," an extended version of Palmieri's earlier hit, "Chocolate Ice Cream."

best of the rest:
Mozambique ♪♪♪½ (Tico, 1965/1992)
Champagne ♪♪♪½ (Tico, 1968/1992)
Live at Sing Sing, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪½ (Tico, 1974/1994)
Palo Pa Rumba ♪♪♪½ (Fania, 1984/1992)

worth searching for: Search for two rousing concert albums by the Tropijazz All-Stars that feature long works by Palmieri: Tropijazz All-Stars: Volume One ♪♪♪♪ (Tropijazz, 1996, prod. Ralph Mercado) contains "Suite 925-2828" and Tropijazz All-Stars: Volume Two ♪♪♪½ (Tropijazz, 1997, prod. Ralph Mercado) features "Nobel Cruise." Other personnel on these albums include Tito Puente, Giovanni Hidalgo, David Valentin, Charlie Sepulveda, J.P. Torres, and David Sanchez.

influences:
◀◀ Tito Puente, Charlie Palmieri, Thelonious Monk, McCoy Tyner, Bud Powell, Benny Golson

▶▶ Michel Camilo, Hilton Ruiz see also: Ray Barretto, Cachao, La India, Los Pleneros De La 21, Charlie Palmieri, Tito Puente

Garaud MacTaggart

The Pan-African Orchestra

African orchestral

Formed in Accra, Ghana. Based in Accra, Ghana.

Nano Danso Abiam, director; Baba Ayombila, wia (notched flute); Anthony Awingura, wia; Thomas Segkura, gyile (xylophone); Yaw Asiedu Kwakye, gyile; Mahmadu Susso, kora (harp-lute); Lamine Susso, kora; Abukari Alhassan, gonje (African violin); Gruma Muhamah, gonje; Emmanuel Nana Kwesi Ansong, Antenteben flute; Zorkie Nelson, Antenteben flute; Yaw Della Botri, Antenteben flute; Eric Yemoh Mensah, Antenteben flute; Kotey Amon, Antenteben flute; Vida Koranteng Opare, Antenteben flute; Kweku Sakyeama Kwakye, Antenteben flute; Yaw Asumadu, Antenteben flute; Boateng Kodua Acheampong, Antenteben flute; John Lartey Ayisi, Antenteben flute; David Okoe Nunoo, drums/percussion; Robert Tawiah Nunoo, drums/percussion; Ibrahima Abukari, drums/percussion; Kwabena Kwakye, drums/percussion; Charles Ofei Odametey, drums/percussion; Stanley Baidoo, horns; Ebenezer Bortey, horns; Edward Sackey, horns; Yaw Adjei, horns; Kofi Sarkwa, horns; Kofi Dei, horns; Samuel Ofori, horns. (All artists are from Ghana.)

Just as the Third Stream movement in jazz synthesized that genre and classical music, the Pan-African Orchestra's Opus 1 represents perhaps the first truly African symphonic work. Persuading the French horn player of the Ghanaian National Symphony Orchestra to bin his brass and use an elephant tusk had been a losing battle. Nano Danso Abiam was struggling with a colonial mentality by which classical music was well funded and taken seriously, and the musicians' own heritage was not. Abiam formed his own group, rejecting European culture and reclaiming African music as a serious pursuit for a large ensemble. His long struggle to finance this project originally aimed for 108 musicians, the amount that might be in a Western orchestra; 30 was the final figure. Pan-African in spirit more than specific source material, Abiam's symphonies are composed from a synthesis of mainly Ghanaian village music.

what's available: The nine compositions on Opus 1 ♪♪♪ (Real-World, 1995, prod. Nano Danso Abiam, Andy Summers) have been edited from full concert length. The title of the first track,

"Wia Concerto No. 1: First Movement, in Four Parts," reinforces Abiam's intent to have Opus 1 compared directly with classical music. It does not sound like an African take on Mozart by any means, and rather than simply amplifying traditional music, the larger ensemble plays at a much more complex level, with carefully plotted interactions between the instrumentalists.

influences:

Ghanian musical tradition, Duke Ellington

David Poole

Ivo Papasov

Stambolovo (Bulgarian wedding-band music)

Born 1952, in Kurdzhali, Bulgaria. Based in Bulgaria.

Ivo Papasov is a living legend in Bulgaria, where he is considered the superstar of Bulgarian wedding music, also known as stambolovo (named after the city where various wedding bands hold an annual festival). It's a feast of swirling sound set in motion by clarinet, saxophone, electric guitar, accordion, bass, and drums. Papasov leads the way on robustly played clarinet, blending in Gypsy, klezmer, and jazz influences with a snake-charmer's sensibility. There's metric zaniness afoot in Papasov's hold-your-breath music, propelled by such wonderfully odd time signatures as 11/16, 5/8, 7/8, and 9/8.

Legend has it that the hefty Papasov, of Turkish Rom (Gypsy) ancestry, had his umbilical cord tied with a thread from his father's zurna (double-reeded horn) at birth. And indeed, not long after, at the age of nine, Papasov switched from accordion to clarinet and got his first gig at a local restaurant when the house orchestra took its breaks. Early on, he began tinkering with Bulgarian folk traditions—an act frowned upon by communist government officials—by experimenting with jazz, blues, and rock influences. He even did some prison time in 1982 for his far-flung musical ideas. Yet this new rocket-fueled brand of Bulgarian folk—a whirlwind of asymmetrical rhythms, accelerating tempos, and staccato melody lines—eventually made Papasov the highest-paid wedding musician in the country. It's been said that he and his band are so popular some couples even resort to scheduling their marriages mid-week to hire him.

Even though Papasov's celebratory music is played brilliantly, its sheer power, beauty, and joy override any concern with virtuosic excesses. Saxophonist Youri Younakov once commented on why Papasov's band never looks at its audience when it plays: "There's no time. Have you ever seen how a hunted rabbit runs? It . . . zig-zag[s], stops, returns, does 8's and 16's . . . . That's how Ivo plays. And we chase him like hounds with our tongues hanging out." Papasov also has a reputation for getting so involved in the intensity of his music that he sometimes flies into a rage. In an interview, he admitted: "I am like a wild animal almost. If somebody makes a small mistake, I will shout at him. But my musicians are used to it. Some musicians are actually afraid of me; not just my musicians, but other musicians as well. But that's my temperament. When I'm onstage I could kill everybody." Papasov's popularity has spread to the concert circuit in Europe, where he fills stadia and inspires youth to spray-paint "Ivo Rules!" on walls. Figuratively, at least, he seems poised to knock 'em dead across the continent for some time to come.

what's available: Orpheus Ascending ♪♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1989, prod. Joe Boyd, Rumyana Tzintzarska) is a remarkable introduction to Papasov's vigorous Bulgarian wedding-band music. Its unusual vocal and instrumental loops, dissonant notes, and shifting rhythms assault you with waves of brilliant colors and fascinating textures. An even more fiery outing by Ivo and company is found on Balkanology ♪♪♪♪½ (Hannibal/Rykodisc, 1991, prod. Joe Boyd). There's plenty of ecstatic playing, with a Turkish dance number and Macedonian and Greek material tossed into the mix. As if that weren't enough (and what for this band is?), there's also a gorgeous vibrato vocal appearance by Papasov's wife, Maria Karafezieva, on the delicate ballad "Istoria Na Edna Lyubov," the only respite in this entire collection of fast dance frenzy.

influences:

Benny Goodman, Charlie Parker, David Sanborn, Petko Radev

Dan Ouellette

Niamh Parsons

Irish folk

Born 1959, in Dublin, Ireland. Based in Dublin, Ireland.

Niamh (pronounced "Neeve") Parsons is a good person to be carrying on the role created by Mary Black, Dolores Keane, and Sandy Denny. Her voice is by turns lustrous and austere, a Celtic aesthete's dream. Music was a prominent feature in Parsons's home life, and her early listening patterns included Irish folk pioneers Boys of the Lough and Planxty. Life as a musician was sketchy at first, when Parsons began singing with a variety of groups in a local scene where day jobs were an accepted part of being in a band. The blooming of her career started about the time she finally went into the studio to record her first album. With her husband Dee Moore and a batch of musicians handpicked to cut the disc, Parsons laid down the tracks for 1992's Loosely Connected. In relatively short order she was invited to join Arcady (replacing no less than the acclaimed Frances Black), and Loosely Connected was critically hailed. While she was singing with Arcady, Parsons and Moore put together a band called the Loose Connections as a vehicle for her performances and his songs. The second album, Loosen Up, featured this band, with Moore, Parsons, and the splendid piper John McSherry being the only holdovers from the first album's sessions. Parsons left Arcady in 1997.

Abida Parveen (center)

what to buy: While Parsons has been a steady, reliable singer ever since her debut, her work on Blackbirds and Thrushes ♪♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1999, prod. Niamh Parsons, Gavin Ralston, Alan Whelan) is a quantum leap in quality. All the promise held in anything she had done before has been fulfilled in this stunningly lovely disc of traditional tunes. From solo voice to sextet settings, there are moments of wonder to be heard.

what to buy next: Parsons's first album, Loosely Connected ♪♪♪½ (Greentrax, 1992/Green Linnet, 1995, prod. Vinnie Kilduff), contains a fair number of tunes that were written by established writers, or are arrangements of traditional folk songs. Her voice is strong throughout and the project was nominated as Album of the Year in Great Britain's prestigious Folk Roots magazine. It still holds up well, but the second album, Loosen Up ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1997, prod. Dee Moore), has more of a band feel to it, with most of the songs coming from Moore's pen—though the standout cut is Parsons's moving, a cappella rendering of Ron Kavana's "Reconciliation."

worth searching for: Arcady's Many Happy Returns ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1995, prod. Johnny McDonagh) shows that Parsons was a happy choice for the band. Her singing on "The Boys of Barr Na Sraide" and "The Rambling Irishman" is absolutely wonderful.

influences:

Boys of the Lough, Planxty, Dolores Keane, Mary Black

see also: Arcady

Garaud MacTaggart

Abida Parveen

Qawwali, ghazal

Born 1957, in Larkana, Pakistan. Based in Larkana, Pakistan.

While Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan made Pakistan's spiritual qawwali music famous worldwide through extensive touring and recording (and Western hybrid hits like his soundtrack work on Dead Man Walking), little is known of the style's female practitioners outside of Pakistan. But if Nusrat was the undisputed king of "qawwals" then Abida Parveen is the reigning queen. Her messages of love are uplifting, her soprano soars with divine grace, and the love she sings of in Urdu needs no translation, for in every breath her words communicate a deep devotion. Parveen excels equally at qawwali and the Persian-derived light-classical song form ghazal. Her music transports an audience into a state of marifat, or inner knowledge, in which repeated phrases lose their meaning to gain a wordless greater truth.

what to buy: The Best of Abida Parveen ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1997) was compiled from Parveen's industrious stint with EMI Pakistan. Her exquisite voice chimes several octaves above the drums, yet beneath the plucking sound of the sitar, as she scats captivatingly to vigorous rhythms. All 10 songs are a delight.

what to buy next: Longer improvisations can be heard on Parveen's most recent album, Devotional Journey ♪♪♪½ (Shalimar, 1998), which was recorded live in New York.

worth searching for: Pakistani Sufi Songs (Inedit, 1995) is available as a French import.

influences:

◀◀ Ustad Ghulam Haider, Ustad Salamat Ali Khan, Umm Kulthum

▶▶ Sheila Chandra, Natacha Atlas

David Poole

Margareta Paslaru

Romanian folklore–influenced mainstream and experimental pop

Born July 9, 1943, in Bucharest, Romania. Based in Summit, NJ, USA.

Few suburban New Jerseyans suspect that there's a Madonna in their midst. But in her home country of Romania, Margareta Paslaru carries that kind of stature—to begin with. Take the hit-making instincts the comparison implies, and combine it with the sustained and illuminating experimentation of a David Bowie or Yoko Ono, the unflagging and uplifting commitment to home-grown folklore of a Pete Seeger, the staying power of a child-star-turned-national-treasure like Stevie Wonder, and the timelessly hip sophistication (not to mention smoky lower-register vocal presence) of a Marlene Dietrich, and you're closer to the mark.

Paslaru's screenplay-like story begins with her discovery at age 15 and instant embrace by an escape-hungry national audience, whose country had lived under an authoritarian regime from the year she was born. Margareta, as she is simply known to her generations of admirers, moved through big-band, pop, folkloric, avant-garde, and other styles over a decades-long career, softening the human toll of strongman Nicolae Ceaucescu's communism—both for her fans and herself—even as she too chafed under its restrictions, eventually sacrificing the only life she'd ever known to be free of it.

Margareta's sound, while at one time or another having encompassed all the major stylistic movements of the 20th century both popular and rarefied, is centered on a flamboyant interpretation of Romanian traditional music for contemporary listeners. In her homeland, those listeners span several generations and every taste, supplied not only by Margareta's many recordings, but also her pioneering and longstanding prominence in Romanian television, her prolific and wide-ranging Elvis-like movie career, and her celebrated performances in theatrical works like a long-running Three-Penny Opera. Her concert tours throughout the communist world and in virtually every Western democracy but the U.S. only magnified her legend both at home and abroad, but it was a small, human concern that would change the course of that saga more profoundly than any artistic triumph.

By the early 1980s Margareta longed to reunite herself and her young daughter with her husband, a businessman then operating in the U.S. Family came first for Margareta, but, unsurprisingly, not for the regime, which obstructed her and little Anna's emigration for a year before mother and child moved on to an unfamiliar new home, and left behind the undying but now underground adoration of the masses in their old one. The family settled into a quiet life in Summit, New Jersey, with the parents attending to the financing of their daughter's upbringing and education—and providing what relief they could to many other relatives who hadn't made the trip. Margareta retired from performance, seeing this time philosophically as an introduction to the common life of the many who'd once supported her. But as Anna entered adulthood and one revolution overturned another in Romania, a broader kind of family concern drew Margareta back to the public arena.

Distraught by reports of Romanian orphans' abject state in the aftermath of political turmoil, Margareta began to record songs which sometimes detailed and always benefited the cause of humanitarian relief. Compilations of new and old favorites electrified post-communist Romania, and, upon the country's election of an opposition government for the first time in her life, Margareta made a triumphant homecoming which riveted the nation's attention, brought out mass crowds, and saturated nightly newscasts. Though timed to coincide with another "best of" release, Margareta's accompanying tour was not of concert halls but orphanages, to raise her countrymen and women's awareness of one of the ongoing crises within their borders. She received honors from UNICEF and UNESCO, and returned in two subsequent years as a distinguished arts–awards presenter (at the kinds of festivals where she herself had long been a recipient)—each time using the opportunity to press her cause. Equally triumphant reunions with the expatriate Romanian community in North America followed, with a sold-out tour throughout the U.S. and Canada (her return to the stage after an almost unbroken 16-year absence) in honor of her 40th anniversary in show business.

Today, Margareta divides her performing time between the Romanian-American oldies circuit continent-wide, and the avant-garde Eastern European–fusion underground in downtown New York City. At this writing, she was preparing for another tour to benefit the children and elderly displaced by the war over Kosovo, and looking forward to another anniversary, that of her 40th year in recording. Her work is hard to find in her adoptive country, but like the human potential she strives to preserve, it's a treasure worthy of the quest.

worth searching for: The definitive survey of either Margareta's folkloric or experimental-pop highpoints has yet to be compiled, and for now its appearance in your record collection faces some obstacles. First, the sound quality of what's extant is widely variable, since many masters were destroyed by the Ceauçescu regime after the artist's departure, and post-communist compilations are often transferred from vinyl once hoarded by reprisal-risking fans. Second, at this point Margareta has several different generations (and nations) of fans to accommodate, and the most general crowd-pleasers dominate the more rootsy and visionary stuff on her available releases. But for the hearty album-winnower there's still a lot of worthy material to sift for. The second and fourth volumes of her cassette-only "Suita Nostalgiilor" ("Nostalgic Suite") of archival tracks, self-released in the U.S. for Romanian and American charitable causes, feature the best batches of her traditional material you can find. De La Suflet La Suflet (From Soul to Soul) ♪♪♪♪ (M. Soul Productions, 1994, prod. various) includes such Romanian folkloric classics as the rousing, rapid-fire, fiddle-driven "Tarina"; the stately, swooping "Ouas"; and the hushed, haunted "Doina," a song of lamentation given a stark timpani-and-voice treatment (with metallic Japanese percussion sparingly deployed to memorably eerie effect). These three tracks are from before Margareta's emigration and are relatively well preserved. From the '90s and clear as a bell is "Collinde," an impeccably arranged and beautifully sung medley of Romanian Christmas carols (and one of Margareta's many Stateside collaborations with the talented Adrian Antonescu and Anthony Petosa). The album 40 de ani de la debut (40 Years from the Debut) ♪♪♪♪ (M. Soul Productions, 1998, prod. various) includes two stunning a cappella folk songs, "Saraca Inima Mea (Oh, My Poor Heart)" and "Balada lui Iancu Jianu (The Ballad of Iancu Jianu)," recorded live at the surprise mini-concert in Queens, New York (a large Romanian-American enclave), with which Margareta returned to public performance after more than a decade. Each is a life-affirmingly melodious yet achingly lamentational soliloquy quaking with drama. The tape also surveys the cream of Margareta's recent radio smashes and hybrid innovations. "Sarbarori Fericite (Happy Holidays)," from 1996, merges the African American gospel and Romanian choral traditions in an infectious pop sheen, while 1997's measured but insistently rhythmic "Bucuria de a Cinta (The Joy of Singing)," at once percussive and solemn, adds rollicking rock-roadhouse piano to an ancient ethnic beat, with world-class vocal belting punctuated by swooning peasant cries; all dynamic elements in an unforgettable whole. Un Pod Peste Ocean (A Bridge Across the Ocean) ♪♪♪♪ (Electrecord, 1993, prod. various), the comeback CD from after the fall of communism, compiles many Margareta favorites while introducing the four American recordings with which she'd broken her long silence. The forlorn, flute-driven "Un Copil Uitat (The Unknown Child)" (a prime collaboration with fellow Romanian émigré Alex Adrian) is a plea for abandoned and alone children the world over, and is the new song most evocative of Romanian stylistic tradition on this album. It's complemented by the affecting mid-tempo ballad "Am Cântat (I Sang)"; the rhythmically acrobatic "Septembrie (September)," a state-of-the-art European techno-disco number with an unexpected poignancy; and the moody, orchestra-sampling title track, whose rhythmic, raspy vocals deliver an inventive and respectful take on rap. All of these standouts on all of these albums are well worth having, and listeners 60 and up—not to mention lounge hipsters of all ages—may even find the dated but always exuberant material that fills out each collection enjoyable too. Source ♪♪♪♪ (Knitting Factory, 1999), a CD by Matt Darriau's Paradox Trio, features Margareta on a strong new reading of "Doina," and is the first recorded document of her ongoing collaboration with this adventurous offshoot project of the Klezmatics' clarinetist. Margareta's "Nostalgic Suite" cassettes are available from M. Soul Productions, P.O. Box 301, Summit, NJ 07902-0301, and through her Web site at www.margareta.com.

influences:

- Romanian folkloric tradition, international pop
- Generations of contemporary Romanian entertainers

see also: The Klezmatics

Adam McGovern

Patato

Son, salsa

Born Carlos Valdés, November 4, 1926, in Havana, Cuba. Based in New York, NY, USA.

"Patato" Valdés is a master conguero who has played with every giant in the history of salsa and jazz, including Beny

Moré, Machito, Cachao, Mario Bauzá, Dizzy Gillespie, Art Blakey, Tito Puente, and Quincy Jones. He was the first musician to tune the congas to a song's dominant chord, a fact of which he's justifiably proud. "Before I invented the tuning keys, you had to heat the drum head with fire, but because of the humidity in Cuba, they would always tune down," Patato says. "I asked Ramon Bragerra to put keys on the conga, like on the bongo, to keep a true tuning. I'm the only harmonic and melodic conga player around," he laughs, and at 73 he still plays with more energy than a roomful of men half his age. Patato's father was a musician who "played tres [small guitar] with Los Apaches, and piano with Sexteto Habanero. I started on tres, but when the piano took over in the 1940s, the tres was unnecessary, so at 18 I went to the congas." Patato also mastered cajones (wooden boxes played with wooden spoons, similar to the cajones in Afro-Peruvian music), shekere (rattles), washtub bass, and marimbula, a large Cuban thumb piano that's used for bass lines in traditional rumba groups. At 19 he joined La Sonora Matancera, the most popular and influential Cuban band of its day. After playing with Perez Prado, Beny Moré, and Conjunto Azul (with Chano Pozo), he left for New York in 1954. He's lived there ever since. Patato's incredible showmanship—he gave Brigitte Bardot a mambo lesson in And God Created Woman and invented new dances like the yoyo and the penguin—is the perfect complement to his innate rhythmic sense. He was one of the first Cuban congueros to make a name for himself in the United States, and his early contributions to the bands of Mario Bauzá and Dizzy Gillespie helped write the book for several generations of jazz and salsa percussionists. In-between regular gigs with Herbie Mann, Tito Puente, and Mario Bauzá, Patato did sessions with J.J. Johnson, Willie Bobo, Machito, Cal Tjader, and others. His free-flying rhythmic sense and high energy have always been in demand. "I don't like to be a mechanical player," Patato says. "I play whatever comes into my mind, bossa nova, Cuban, African. Nobody can imitate me, because I never play the same way twice. When the [producer] counts it off, I pick it up and go after it."

what to buy: Although Patato has been present on some of the greatest recordings of Afro-Cuban jazz, bugaloo, and salsa ever recorded, Masterpiece ♪♪♪♪♪ (Messidor, 1993, prod. Jorge Dalto, Patato) is only his second set as a bandleader. With Argentinean pianist/composer/arranger Jorge Dalto lending an able hand, Patato and company turn in a scorching set. Not unexpectedly, all tracks feature stellar drumming, with the two tunes based on Cuban traditional music ("Felice Navidad" and "Tonan Che Cabaldo a Ochún") particular standouts.

what to buy next: Ritmo y Candela ♪♪♪♪♪ (Round World, 1998, prod. Greg Landau) is a reissue of the Grammy-nominated descarga (jam session) first released on Redwood Records in the tabla

The most important percussion instrument in the North Indian classical tradition, the tabla is actually a pair of drums that evolved around 450 years ago from the pakhavaj, a two-headed drum played on its sides with the hands. Details of how the tabla developed from the pakhavaj are debated, but one theory involves an anecdotal incident in which two percussionist brothers were involved in a battle of skills. Out of frustration, one of the brothers threw his pakhavaj to the ground, splitting it in two and thereby creating a new instrument. Of the tabla's two units, the higher-toned one, called the "tabla" itself, is cylindrical, made of wood, and tuned by sliding wooden pegs beneath the straps that tighten the head. The lower-pitched bayan is larger, kettle-shaped, and usually made of brass. The head of the bayan is kept relatively loose, allowing players to alter its pitch by applying pressure with the palm as it is struck with the fingertips. These components and techniques, along with the gab (the black circle of paste in the center of the heads, which is made from rice powder and iron or magnesium filings), give the tabla its characteristic sounds: a bendable bass tone and a harmonic, ringing high tone. It all makes up one of the world's most distinctive, complex percussion instruments. The tabla has more than 50 different bols—spoken syllables assigned to the various sounds the instrument can produce—and students spend years learning to connect these syllables to form "words" that complete a rhythmic sentence. In the hands of tabla masters like Zakir Hussain and Badal Roy, who introduced the tabla to Western audiences back in the early '70s as a sideman with Miles Davis, these sentences are joined together to form a gorgeously poetic rhythmic language.

see also: Bikram Ghosh, Trilok Gurtu, Zakir Hussain, India, North and South (sidebar), Indian/Jazz Fusion (sidebar), Indian Percussion (sidebar), Badal Roy, Talvin Singh

Bret Love

1995, and features Patato, timbalero Orestes Vilato, and Jose Luis "Changuito" Quintana, the man who reinvented the use of the trap-drum set in Cuban jazz during his tenure with Los Van Van. This is a flat-out masterpiece: great tunes; sharp, down-to-earth production; and one of the most powerful and innovative Cuban rhythm sections ever put together.

the rest:
Ritmo y Candela II: African Crossroads ♪♪♪♪½ (Round World, 1998)

influences:
◀◀ Machito, Chano Pozo see also: Mario Bauzá, Celia Cruz, ¡Cubanismo!, Paquito D'Rivera, Los Van Van, Machito, Herbie Mann, Beny Moré, Perez Prado, Tito Puente, Sexteto Habanero

j. poet

Patrick Street

Modern Irish folk

Formed 1986, in Dublin, Ireland. Based in Ireland.

Andy Irvine, vocals, bouzouki, mandolin, harmonica (1986–present); Kevin Burke, fiddle (1986–present); Jackie Daly, button accordion (1986–present); Arty McGlynn, guitar (1986–94); Ged Foley, guitar, Northumbrian smallpipes (1995–present).

Imagine Woody Guthrie singing with the Bothy Band, and you get some idea of the heady mix achieved by Ireland's all-star folk group Patrick Street. Andy Irvine is a lifelong Guthrie devotee and sings songs charged with political passion, irreverent humor, and sharp-eyed detail—with the requisite harmonica and roughened baritone. He is backed, however, by two of Ireland's finest instrumental soloists, fiddler Kevin Burke and accordionist Jackie Daly. As a result, Patrick Street's albums and concerts bounce back and forth between moving songs and dazzling dance tunes—sometimes fusing the two into wonderful medleys. Irvine, Burke, Daly, and guitarist Gerry O'Beirne first toured together as the Legends of Irish Music in the United States in 1986. They enjoyed the experience so much that they returned in 1987 with a new name, Patrick Street; a new guitarist, Arty McGlynn; and an eponymous debut album. The quartet had ties to some of the finest Irish folk bands of the post-Beatles era. Irvine was a co-founder of Sweeney's Men in 1966 and of Planxty in 1972, and has also played with Paul Brady, De Dannan, and others. Burke played with Christy Moore before replacing the legendary Tommy Peoples in the Bothy Band in 1976. He later formed his own band, Open House, in his adopted home of Portland, Oregon. Daly was a member of De Dannan and Kinvara before joining Patrick Street. McGlynn had been the rhythm guitarist of choice for everyone from Christy Moore and Tommy Makem to Paul Brady and Van Morrison. Moreover, Dónal Lunny, who produced and played on Patrick Street's first album, had played with Planxty and the Bothy Band. The liner notes of that album claim the band was named after an old fiddler named Patrick Street, but the band later admitted that was a shaggy-dog story. Ultimately, however, Patrick Street outshone its many famous real-life predecessors by staying together longer than any of them, and growing tighter and brighter as a result.

what to buy: For Irish Times ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1990, prod. Gerry O'Beirne, Patrick Street), Patrick Street grew from a quartet to an octet with the temporary addition of fiddler James Kelly, keyboardist Bill Whelan, piper Declan Masterson, and guitarist Gerry O'Beirne. This little-big-band enables the group to achieve an astonishing density of sound on five songs and five instrumental medleys. Especially effective is their ceili (traditional communal dance-band) version of the Penguin Café Orchestra's "Music for a Found Harmonium." By the release of All in Good Time ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1993, prod. Bill Whelan), Patrick Street had achieved a longevity and a corresponding cohesiveness known to no other Irish band but the Chieftains. The payoff came in the exquisite arrangements and well-earned rapport of tracks on this album. The highpoint is the seven-and-a-half-minute medley, "Lintheads," which threads together two songs about textile mills with evocative instrumentals. The instrumental highlights of No. 2 Patrick Street ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1988, prod. Patrick Street) include the jigs and reels written by Jackie Daly for his effortlessly flute-like accordion figures. Vocal highlights include Andy Irvine's revamping of Woody Guthrie's "Tom Joad" to the tune of "John Hardy," and Irvine's own stirring song about Sacco and Vanzetti. Arty McGlynn was replaced by Battlefield Band guitarist Ged Foley on Corner Boys ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1996, prod. Patrick Street), and he helped Kevin Burke and Daly forego all tentative and ornamental notes to carve out confident, surprising melodic variations. And whether accompanying each other's solos or Irvine's vocals, these pickers know how to push without shoving.

what to buy next: Even on their debut album, Patrick Street ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1988, prod. Dónal Lunny), the promise of this illustrious band was already obvious. Burke's fiddle and Daly's accordion improvise grand leaps over the pulsing rhythms of McGlynn's guitar and Irvine's bouzouki. The highlights, though, are the three ballads which Irvine sings with a whispery intimacy that brings a genuine affection to his themes of loss. On Made in Cork ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1997, prod. Patrick Street), the group seem content to rely on proven methods rather than push forward with any innovations. These methods prove as pleasurable as ever, however. To further demonstrate how, for this band, staying put in no way means standing still, there's the vigorous—and remarkably, given how long they've been together, the first—live album, Live from Patrick Street ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1999, prod. Patrick Street).

influences:

⏮ The Bothy Band, Planxty, De Dannan

⏭ Celtic Thunder, Solas

see also: Battlefield Band, the Bothy Band, Kevin Burke, the Clancy Brothers/Tommy Makem, Jackie Daly, De Dannan, the House Band, Andy Irvine, Dónal Lunny, Christy Moore, Open House, Tommy Peoples, Planxty, Sweeney's Men, Bill Whelan

Geoffrey Himes

Jim Payne

Newfoundland folk

Born in Notre Dame Bay, Newfoundland, Canada. Based in St. John's, Newfoundland, Canada.

As owner of the St. John's, Newfoundland–based SingSong Music, Payne has been at the forefront of a movement to promote that province's rich heritage. Since 1990 his label has released more than 10 recordings of Newfoundland music, story, and song. Three of those releases have been solo outings by Payne himself, a talented singer-songwriter whose voice and original compositions bring home the reality of life in maritime Canada. Payne is also highly active in the theater community, and has directed, performed in, and written music for many of Newfoundland's finest stage productions of the last two decades. He has at one time or another been linked with every major Newfoundland folk artist, and his longtime association with Rufus Guinchard, grand master of Newfoundland fiddle, has had much effect on his own career. Payne plays guitar, accordion, mandolin, and tin whistle in addition to violin, and his frequent trips throughout the world to teach the traditional folk dances of his province have led many to dub him Newfoundland's ambassador of culture.

what to buy: Wave over Wave—Old and New Songs of Atlantic Canada ♪♪♪♪½ (SingSong Music, 1995, prod. Jim Payne, Fergus O'Byrne) is a phenomenal collection of traditional and contemporary songs featuring Payne and Irishman Fergus O'Byrne. Both possess strong voices, and they interweave them effortlessly on traditional chanteys like "Heave Away" and newly composed but traditionally based songs like "Rig Workers Alphabet." Payne's own composition, "Wave over Wave," has already become a classic in the Newfoundland tradition.

what to buy next: State of the Nation ♪♪♪♪ (SingSong Music, 1992, prod. Jim Payne) is a collection of songs written by Payne specifically for Newfoundland's Rising Tide Theater, six of whose annual revues he has toured in as both musician and actor. This is folk music as it should be: touching, socially conscious, and, most importantly, heartfelt. Payne's voice is at times rough-edged, but it is an edge that gives his music just the immediacy and poignancy his important topics deserve. Empty Nets ♪♪♪½ (SingSong Music, 1992, prod. Jim Payne) is a great mix of Jim Payne originals and songs in the traditional idiom by other Newfoundland writers. Selections like the bluegrass/country & western–tinged "Work Work Work" survey Payne's diverse influences, while the title track, concerning the plight of Newfoundland's diminishing fishing industry, is pure folk brilliance.

worth searching for: The Southern Cross ♪♪♪½ (SingSong Music, 1989, prod. Jim Payne) is Payne's first solo outing and is only available on cassette. It contains some great songs about Newfoundland's sealing industry.

influences:

⏮ Rufus Guinchard, Emile Benoit, Minnie White

⏭ Arthur O'Brien, Great Big Sea, the Punters

Cliff McGann

Peatbog Faeries

Ambient Scottish folk-dance fusion

Formed 1993, on the Isle of Skye, Scotland. Based on the Isle of Skye, Scotland.

Peter Morrison, pipes, whistles; Ben Ivitsky, fiddle; Ali Pentland, guitar; Innes Hutton, bass, bodhrán; Iain Copeland, drums, percussion; Norman Austin ("Nurudin"), synthesizer, keyboards. (All members are from Scotland.)

The Peatbog Faeries—along with their colleagues and fellow Greentrax-label alums Shooglenifty—represent the avant-garde of the '90s Scottish folk/roots scene. But while Shooglenifty presents a very in-your-face Scottish/funk/groove fusion, the Peatbog Faeries veer off in a slightly different direction. Like Shooglenifty, the Peatbog Faeries start from a base in Scottish folk-dance music. And they also funk up the rhythms. But the band shows they've been listening to the likes of Fripp & Eno and Kraftwerk as well. The tempos are slowed down and the whole sound is very dense. So far the Peatbog Faeries have only played live in Scotland and England, but when word gets further out—as they've tried to arrange with a recent U.S. label jump—their unique Gaelic groove thing is sure to become a world party.

what to buy: mellowosity ♪♪♪♪½ (Greentrax, 1996, prod. Iain Copeland, Peatbog Faeries) is the Peatbogs' only CD in release as we go to press, but it's a perfect showcase for their special brand of ambient Celtic funk. The rhythm section puts down a steady pulse while pipes, whistles, or fiddle handle the main melodies. Then other sounds—brief electric-guitar riffs, keyboard-created effects—are layered on top. Synth washes also provide a bed for everything else to sit in. Pete Morrison's title track displays a quintessential Peatbog Faeries arrangement: the basic rhythm is that of a dramatically slowed folk dance, slightly syncopated. Then guitar and keyboard effects appear, with whistle joining in for a bit of the melody line, which is soon taken over by bagpipes. An eerily distorted fiddle is heard throughout. Spooky, but brilliant.

the rest:
Faerie Stories N/A (Astor Place, 2000)

influences:
⏮ Fripp & Eno, Kraftwerk, Mouth Music, Moving Hearts ⏭ Shooglenifty, Talitha MacKenzie, Afro Celt Sound System

see also: Shooglenifty

Ken Roseman

Gnonnas Pedro

Afro-Cuban rumba

Born in Benin. Based in Cotonou, Benin.

Although Benin has a rich store of musical tradition, its music business is fairly underdeveloped, forcing many artists to relocate to Nigeria, Congo, and Ghana in order to make a living. The sound of Benin's biggest pop bands has also been dominated by Cuban music, to the detriment of their own traditions. Pedro was one of the leading bandleaders of the early '70s, when his African take on Cuban music made him a big star. There are some nice African touches, especially in the spare guitar parts, but most of his music doesn't sound too different from the Cuban bands he was emulating.

what's available: La Compilation ♪♪♪ (Ledoux France, 1991, prod. Abou Sylla) collects Pedro's hits from the '70s. Though the recording isn't great, there are touches of brilliance—the rippling guitar lines on "La Musica en Verite," for example—but most of this is fairly generic.

influences:
⏮ Alpha Jazz, Black Santiagos ⏭ Wally Badarou, Angélique Kidjo

see also: Africando

j. poet

Paco Peña

Flamenco

Born in Córdoba, Spain. Based in England and the Netherlands.

When Paco Peña began his performing career in the mid-1960s, he decided to do it in England rather than his native Spain. The warmth of the audiences and the sold-out clubs and concert venues he soon found told Peña that he could make a musical home there. He set out to carve a niche between then-popular showman and pseudo-flamenco stylist Manitas de Plata and rising-star flamenco innovator Paco de Lucia. Peña had something different to say—with fine and fluid technique, he presented music that stayed close to the canon of flamenco while breaking new ground in vigor, grace, and style of performance. His international base made him especially influential in bringing traditional flamenco to British and American audiences in the '60s and '70s. During that time he also started a company of flamenco dancers, singers, and musicians that tours worldwide. In the '80s, Peña returned to his native Córdoba to found a prestigious guitar festival. He is currently professor of flamenco at the University of Rotterdam in the Netherlands.

what to buy: Azahara ♪♪♪♪♪ (Nimbus, 1988, prod. Paco Peña) is a journey through the four main modes of flamenco—soleares, seguitiyas, tientos, and fandangos—with several folk-influenced and South American–inspired pieces thrown in to give a complete picture of the music's current sources. The album as a whole illustrates both traditional forms and more contemporary influences. Brief yet instructive liner notes about the structure and origins of the songs make this disc especially valuable for those new to the genre. Misa Flamenca ♪♪♪½ (Nimbus, 1991, prod. Paco Peña) is a collaboration between Peña, several well-known flamenco vocalists, and the chorus of England's Academy of St. Martin in the Fields, resulting in a mass-like presentation that illuminates both the flamenco style and the traditional liturgy.

the rest:
Flamenco ♪♪♪ (Verve, 1978)
Paco Peña Plays Montoya ♪♪♪ (Nimbus, 1987)
Encuentro ♪♪♪½ (Nimbus, 1989)
The Art of Paco Peña ♪♪♪♪ (Nimbus, 1993)
Fabulous Flamenco ♪♪♪ (Alex, 1993)
Flamenco Puro Live ♪♪♪½ (Nimbus, 1996)

influences:
⏮ Sabicas ⏭ Inti-Illimani

Kerry Dexter

Tommy Peoples

Irish traditional

Born September 20, 1948, in Letterkenny, County Donegal, Ireland. Based in County Clare, Ireland.

In his book Notes from the Heart, Irish record producer P.J. Curtis writes about taking an American friend to a session in a Clare pub, and of his friend's disbelief when it was revealed that the fiddler playing there was none other than Tommy Peoples. One of the few true masters of Irish traditional fiddle playing, one whose sound can be instantly identified, Peoples remains an unassuming man, generous with his music and happy to lead a simple life in the countryside of County Clare—he doesn't even have a phone at home. Peoples grew up in a musical family in the village of St. Johnston, in the eastern part of County Donegal that borders Northern Ireland. His father, Tom, who was a fiddle player himself, and especially his cousin Joe Cassidy, were Tommy's first sources of inspiration and instruction on the fiddle. By all accounts, he was already an impressive player by the time he'd reached his teenage years. After leaving school, Peoples moved to Dublin where he soon joined in the growing traditional music scene, playing at sessions with the likes of Matt Molloy, Liam O'Flynn, James and Seán Keane, and Mary Bergin.

By the early 1970s, Peoples was living in Clare, where he had married the daughter of Kitty Linnane, piano player for the famed Kilfenora Ceili Band. He became a member of that band, and participated in a 1974 recording of them produced by Mick Moloney for the American label Tradition. During that same period, Peoples was also involved for a time with 1691, a short-lived group that toured and recorded in Brittany. Among other members of the band were singer and clavinet player Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill and flute player Matt Molloy, with whom Peoples would soon become a member of the legendary Bothy Band in 1975. The band's debut album, which remains a revered classic, prominently features Peoples's fiery fiddle-playing. However, the pressures of the road did not agree with Peoples, who parted company with the band in 1976 and settled in Clare once again. That same year, Comhaltas Ceoltóiríéireann Éireann (the Irish Musicians' Association) released a collection of live recordings of Peoples made between 1974 and 1976. That album is still regarded as an essential document. In 1976 the fiddler also made a brand new album, The High Part of the Road, with guitarist Paul Brady as his accompanist, for the New York label Shanachie. Out of Peoples's participation in informal sessions in Dublin came the exhilarating Matt Molloy, Paul Brady, Tommy Peoples, recorded for Dónal Lunny's Mulligan label in 1977 and released the following year. At the same time, Peoples appeared on Paul Brady's celebrated Welcome Here Kind Stranger. In 1985 Peoples renewed his ties with Shanachie and recorded The Iron Man, with Dáithí Sproule providing the guitar accompaniment. More recently, Peoples released a self-produced solo album, The Quiet Glen, which instantly became one of the most sought-after new CDs of Irish music, and he was the first recipient of the Teilif ís na Gaeilge Traditional Music Award, presented to him in Galway's Town Hall. Tommy Peoples continues to appear in concert and teach for workshops. His daughters Siobhán and Gráinne carry on the family tradition with distinction, as does his nephew Séamus Gibson, who strives with great success to emulate his uncle's playing style. And if you are ever in Ennis or Kilfenora, County Clare, you may well run into Tommy Peoples at a local session.

what's available: The High Part of the Road ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1976, prod. Richard Nevins, Daniel Michael Collins) was Peoples's first album to be distributed in the United States. His playing has its characteristic urgency and rough edge, even with Paul Brady's guitar lending an air of civility. There are some great tunes here associated with Donegal, including the reels "The Oak Tree" and "The Pinch of Snuff." Matt Molloy, Paul Brady, Tommy Peoples ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mulligan, 1978/Green Linnet, 1985, prod. Dónal Lunny, Paul Brady), sounding much as if the three musicians were having a bit of a session in a Dublin pub, is an album that belongs at the top of any list of Irish recordings. It is pure energy and a thrilling listening experience, which daunts attempts to cite highlights only because each track is a highlight. The Iron Man ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1985, prod. Daniel Michael Collins, Richard Nevins), with Dáithí Sproule contributing his usual stellar guitar backing, recaptures the atmosphere of Peoples's 1976 album, with some of the rougher edges smoothed over. Once again, most of the dance selections are reels, but the medley of strathspeys, including the title tune, and the hornpipe "Kitty O'Shea," are things of wonder.

worth searching for: Even though it is only available from Peoples's own Web site and through a few specialized stores, The Quiet Glen ♪♪♪♪½ (self-released, 1998, prod. Tommy Peoples) is a must for any lover of Irish traditional fiddle music. Discretely and tastefully backed by Alph Duggan on guitar, Peoples performs a mixture of old tunes and his own compositions, all played with that unmistakable Peoples touch. Peoples appears with his daughter Siobhán, also a fiddler, on several tracks of the wonderful live recording Maiden Voyage ♪♪♪♪½ (Celtic Music, 1991, prod. Páraic MacDonnchadha, Kevin Crawford), made on location at Peppers Bar in Feakle, County Clare. There are other local performers involved, the music is varied and excellent throughout, and it retains the live-session atmosphere with fidelity and verve. If you are very lucky, you may come across Peoples's original solo LP, Tommy Peoples ♪♪♪♪½ (Comhaltas Ceoltóirí Éireann, 1976, prod. Séamus MacMathúna). Do not let it pass; it is one of the most exciting records of Irish fiddle playing ever made. Paul Brady's Welcome Here Kind Stranger ♪♪♪♪½ (Mulligan, 1978, prod. Dónal Lunny, Paul Brady), an outstanding album recently reissued on CD in Ireland and worth looking for in any case, happens to feature the playing of Peoples on several tracks, including the spectacular set of reels "The Boys on the Hilltop/Johnny Goin' to Céilidh."

influences:

Matt Peoples, Joe Cassidy, Vincent Campbell, Frank Kelly, Jimmy Hueston

Siobhán Peoples, Gráinne Peoples, Séamus Gibson, Mairéad Ní Mhaonaigh, Paddy Glackin, Paul O'Shaughnessy

see also: Mary Bergin, the Bothy Band, James Keane, Dónal Lunny, Matt Molloy, Mick Moloney, Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill, Liam O'Flynn, Planxty

Philippe Varlet

Percussion Incorporated

Worldbeat

Formed 1990, in New Orleans, LA, USA. Based in New Orleans, LA, USA.

Kenyatta Simon, drums; Kufaru Mouton, vibes, drums; Luther Gray, drums; Harold Brown, drums; Lloyd Daily, synthesizer; Amura Frezell, synth bass; Rick Nick, guitar; Amon Sheriff, vocals, flute, gongs; Wayne Bennett, guitar; David Barard, bass; Gabriel Cousins, trumpet; Jawara Atiba Simon, vocals; Kalamu Ya Salaam, vocals, drums; Issa Gray, vocals, piano; Congo Square Percussion Workshop, drums. (All members are from USA.)

Percussion Incorporated grew out of the Congo Square Percussion Workshop program, a project that was put together to celebrate the history of Congo Square, the only spot in North America where slaves and freemen could mingle equally. Around 1730 one of the open-air markets in New Orleans got the nickname Congo Square. Sunday was considered a "free day" based on the Black Code, a French law that made forced labor illegal on Sundays and religious holidays. Musicologists now believe that the unique New Orleans style of music was born as Native Americans, Africans, and Europeans began mixing and playing music in Congo Square. When the Spanish took over in 1769 they continued to honor the tradition, and the next influx of West African slaves added more elements to the musical and cultural melting pot. One of the dances that evolved was the Bamboula, a rhythm that may have laid the foundation for New Orleans–style jazz. On their one album, the players of Percussion Incorporated attempt to recreate the vibe of Congo Square with a session that combines jazz, African hand drumming, spoken word, and N'awlins-style funk.

what's available: The music on Congo Square ♪♪♪♪♪ (Repercussion, 1991, prod. Percussion Incorporated, Richard Bird) is percussive, symphonic, jazzy, and highly improvisational in nature, a suite to a time and place that has undoubtedly influenced the entire musical history of North America. The album is available direct from: Repercussion, 6913 W. Barrington Ct., New Orleans, LA 70128.

influences:

Louis Armstrong, Lee Dorsey, Wild Tchoupitoulas

j. poet

Chris Perez

Rock, Tejano

Born 1969, in San Antonio, TX, USA. Based in Corpus Christi, TX, USA.

Chris Perez grew up in central Texas with his hands on an electric guitar, listening to the mainstream rock stars of the '70s and '80s and the border dance bands of his home region. He had a band of his own as a teenager, and played guitar with Tejano (modern Tex-Mex) artist Shelly Lares. In 1990 Perez was hired as lead guitarist for the genre's soon-to-be-queen Selena Quintanilla, bringing a harder-rocking edge to her rise to the top of Tejano. Two years later they were married. As their success grew in the studio and on the road, the future seemed bright for the couple, but Selena was murdered by a disturbed employee in 1995. In the resultant firestorm of publicity, Perez has preferred to keep his grief private while he works out his musical future.

what's available: On Resurrection ♪♪♪½ (Hollywood, 1999, prod. Julian Raymond), Chris Perez and bandmates John Garza and Joe Ojeda know how to rock in both English and Spanish. They mix in border flavor—horns, guitars, and rhythm patterns—in contrast to the tropical-pop brand of Latin music climbing the charts around them. Although the group is still looking for a completely coherent voice, they're a good way toward crafting one—and toward reaching out to audiences who've sampled the Latin-pop flavor of the moment and are ready to try the stronger stuff.

influences:

Eric Clapton, Selena

see also: Selena

Kerry Dexter

Lourdes Perez

Singer-songwriter, nueva canción, nueva trova

Born Hato Arriba, in San Sebastian, Puerto Rico. Based In Austin, TX, USA.

Lourdes Perez grew up in a family of children who loved to sing. It was also a family aware of social justice and involved in the Puerto Rican independence movement, so when Perez first chose a career it was as a social worker, and she kept her music as a sideline. In the early 1990s, having relocated to Austin, Texas, Perez attended a concert by one of her musical heroes, Argentinean singer and political activist Mercedes Sosa. That proved a turning point. Perez decided to make music her main career focus, and began building up her performing opportunities in Austin and throughout the Southwest. The next time Mercedes Sosa played Austin, Lourdes Perez was her opening act, and Sosa was so impressed by the singer that she invited her to open her next concert, in Boston, beginning the exposure of what to buy: Vestigios ♪♪♪♪½ (VivaVoce, 1997, prod. Cathy Ragland, Annette D'Armata, Lourdes Perez) is a powerful expression of Perez's songwriting skills, as well as her command of voice and guitar. The album contains several examples of both her live and studio artistry, and in each is the strength and sensibility of the poet and the insight of the trovadora (all songs are in Spanish). Particularly outstanding is a duet with Irene Ferrara on "Tengo la Vida." Recuerdate por Mi ♪♪♪½ (CheeWee, 1994, prod. Peg Miller, Lourdes Perez) is a snapshot of Perez in concert at an intimate Austin club, performing nine originals, two Puerto Rican plenas, and two songs of social justice by other writers, all of which offer evidence that her voice transcends language, which explains why she has many fans who do not understand Spanish.

Perez to a wider audience. Recently, Perez has toured with the Indigo Girls' high-profile, all-star Suffragette Sessions revue.

worth searching for: Her now-rare debut release, Lourdes Perez ♪♪♪½ (VivaVoce, 1993, prod. Lourdes Perez), is a five-song collection that hints at the bases of Perez's work—it contains original songs, Puerto Rican traditional tunes, and socially conscious nueva canción.

influences:

⏮ El Topo, Silvio Rodriguez, Violetta Parra, Mercedes Sosa

see also: Mercedes Sosa

Kerry Dexter

Perfect Thyroid

Ska, punk, funk

Formed 1991, in Hudson Valley, NY, USA. Based in Ulster County, NY, USA.

Chris "Skunk" Hanson, lead vocals, trumpet, baritone horn, slide whistle, percussion; Shane Kirsch, tenor sax, vocals, percussion; Chris "Cornball" Snykus, drums, vocals; Jason Foster, guitar, vocals; Joe Cuchelo, four- and six-string bass; Dean "Lazy Bones" Jones, trombone, vocals, keyboards, percussion, xylophone. (All members are from USA.)

Perfect Thyroid blends the ska beat with horn arrangements and funk 'n' punk guitar energy to forge a musical style they refer to as "skunk." At their best, this band delivers punchy sounds and danceable rhythms with a big beat, which appeal to both fans of third-wave ska and those on the cusp of the neo-swing movement. Originally called Cat Butt (the title of one of their more popular club jams), Perfect Thyroid embellishes their songs and performances with humor of the Bonzo Dog Band variety, and more than a hint of social commentary. Their wild onstage antics, unusual look, and non-stop energy have made them quite popular in the college towns of upstate New York, and they have played major shows with such genre stars as Reel Big Fish and the Toasters. Their first national release, Musical Barnacles, made the Alternative Press list of "Ska-Punk's Top Ten Essential Albums" and garnered much airplay on college stations throughout the Northeast.

what's available: On their only major independent label release, Musical Barnacles ♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997, prod. Joe Ferry, Perfect Thyroid), Perfect Thyroid brings something fresh and vibrant to a few original tunes ("Marella," "Take Care," "Blah, Blah, Blah") as well as a Joe Jackson cover ("Got the Time"), but too often they let their sense of parody run rampant at the expense of the music. As a result, a few promising (and not-so-promising) tracks run far too long or dissolve into self-indulgent, silly in-jokes. A little bit of creative discipline could go a long way with a band this talented. Though Perfect Thyroid was recently dropped from Shanachie's roster of artists, this disc is still available through some online services and catalogs.

worth searching for: Perfect Thyroid has put out a few discs on their own label, including That's Good Enough, Let's Go Home (Skunkjam, 1993, prod. Perfect Thyroid), Kiss the Mammoth and Run!!! (Skunkjam, 1993, prod. Perfect Thyroid), and Which One of Us Is Me? (Skunkjam, 1995, prod. Rick Slater). All are available through the band's Web site at www.perfectthyroid.com.

influences:

⏮ Parliament-Funkadelic, Joe Jackson, the Specials, Fishbone, 311

⏭ Yolk

Ken Burke

Itzhak Perlman

Classical, klezmer

Born August 31, 1945, in Tel Aviv, Israel. Based in USA.

Itzhak Perlman is a classical violinist of outstanding power and virtuosity who has been on the world musical stage since his debut as a child prodigy in the 1950s. Long after he was well-established in the academic tradition of Europe as a whole, Perlman began to explore his own cultural roots in klezmer, the sometimes soulful, sometimes frenetic jazz-like folk music of Eastern European Jews. Both alone and in collaboration with artists such as Andy Statman, Brave Old World, and the Klezmatics, Perlman has created several albums based in this form, which have lent it a fresh take while encouraging his mostly classical audience to listen to roots music. In addition to his klezmer explorations, Perlman has an extensive catalog of classical recordings (most of them on the Angel/EMI label), and has recently begun composing for film.

what to buy: In the Fiddler's House ♪♪♪♪½ (Angel, 1995, prod. Steven Paul) is Perlman's first recorded venture into klezmer and it remains the freshest, with input from old-line and upstart experts like Andy Statman, the Klezmatics, Brave Old World, and the Klezmer Conservatory Band. Live in the Fiddler's House ♪♪♪♪ (Angel, 1996, prod. Steven Paul), Itzhak Perlman Plays Popular Jewish Melodies ♪♪♪ (Angel, 1998), and Tradition: Popular Jewish Melodies ♪♪♪ (Angel, 1998) continue Perlman's voyage of rediscovery.

influences:

◀◀ Isaac Stern, Ivan Galamian

▶▶ Sarah Chang, Andre Previn, Anne Akiko Myers

see also: Brave Old World, the Klezmatics, the Klezmer Conservatory Band, Andy Statman

Kerry Dexter

Lee "Scratch" Perry /The Upsetter

Reggae, dub

Born Rainford Hugh Perry, March 20, 1936, in Kendal, Jamaica. Based in Zurich, Switzerland.

Lee "Scratch" Perry is one of reggae's most influential characters. As a producer and record label executive, Perry oversaw seminal recordings by Bob Marley & the Wailers, Junior Murvin, the Heptones, Max Romeo, Gregory Isaacs, and even the Clash. As a songwriter, he penned hits for the Wailers, including "Duppy Conqueror," "Small Axe," "Kaya," and "The Sun Is Shining." And as a performer in his own right, Perry has recorded numerous tunes, including the #5 British hit "Return of Django."

Born to a poor family in the small Jamaican village of Kendal, Perry began his climb to international fame after moving to Kingston in the late 1950s. As a teenager, Perry chose records for the weekly ska parties run by Coxsone Dodd's Downbeat Sound Systems. After recording his debut single, "The Chicken Scratch," in the early '60s, Perry became an A&R director and producer for Dodd's Studio One label. Leaving Dodd in 1966, Perry teamed with producer Joe Gibbs to record a single, "I Am the Upsetter," and to run Gibbs's label, Amalgamated Records. His early production projects in this capacity included the Pioneers' "Long Shot," one of the first singles to utilize the rhythms that were later dubbed "reggae."

In 1968, Perry set up his own label, Upsetter Records, and formed a flagship studio band, the Upsetters. The original group, however, soon left Perry to become Toots Hibbert's band, the Maytals. Recruiting members of an outfit called the Hippy Boys, Perry formed his second version of the Upsetters. The reorganized band quickly became one of Jamaica's most respected. When Bob Marley & the Wailers teamed with the group, Perry agreed to become their executive producer. The enlarged ensemble remained with Perry until 1971, when the Wailers, with the Upsetters' rhythm section—Aston "Family Man" Barrett (bass) and his brother Carlton "Carlie" Barrett (drums)—signed with Island Records. Although he and the Wailers had initially agreed to share all profits from their recordings together, Perry took all the money and ignited a lengthy battle that lasted until Bob Marley's death in 1981.

Shortly after moving to Washington Gardens, a wealthy suburb of Kingston, in 1973, Perry built a studio, Black Ark, in his backyard. That studio became one of the most influential recording facilities in Jamaica, producing such albums as the Heptones' Party Time, Max Romeo's War in a Babylon, the Upsetters' Super Ape, and Junior Murvin's Police and Thieves. The studio was also home to many of the first recordings in the instrumental, sonically manipulated, proto-electronica reggae variant known as "dub." In 1975, Perry signed a worldwide distribution deal with Island.

Despite his growing success, Perry was beset by personal demons. After his wife left him, taking their two children, he set fire to the studio, shot himself in the foot, and began displaying very bizarre behavior. Halting his production activities, Perry recorded a string of unsuccessful singles on his own. Traveling between Europe and Jamaica for a couple of years, he temporarily settled in Amsterdam. In 1980, he assumed the name Pipecock Jackxon, and though he planned to reopen Black Ark Studios and ordered new equipment, he cut all the wires and dug a duck pond in the studio. Perry toured the United States in 1981 with a white reggae band from New York, the Terrorists. The following year, he toured with another white reggae band, the Majestics, and recorded his first album since torching Black Ark, Mystic Miracle Star. His problems, however, persisted. After accusing Chris Blackwell, then-president of Island Records, of being a vampire and blaming him for Marley's death, Perry's distribution agreement with Island was canceled.

Though he released another album, Battle of Armagideon, in 1986, Perry didn't show signs of resurrecting his career until joining with British producer Adrian Sherwood to record the apparently prophetically titled Time Boom X De Devil Dead that same year. Perry then relocated to Switzerland with his second wife, Mireille Ruegg, in 1989. A year later, he reunited with Sherwood and Island Records to release From the Secret Laboratory. A retrospective of Perry's recording career, Arkology, appeared in 1997—barely keeping pace with his still-prolific contemporary activities.

what to buy: With 52 tracks on three CDs, Arkology ♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1997, prod. Lee "Scratch" Perry) spans Perry's full career and offers a history lesson in the evolution of reggae and dub.

The collection includes many remixes and previously unreleased dub tracks.

what to buy next: Chicken Scratch ♪♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1989, prod. Coxsone Dodd) collects recordings produced by Coxsone Dodd at Studio One between 1963 and 1966, and features musical accompaniment by the Skatalites, Bob Marley & the Wailers, and Rita Marley with her singing group, the Soulettes.

best of the rest:
Super Ape ♪♪♪½ (Mango, 1976)
The Upsetter Collection ♪♪♪½ (Trojan, 1981)
The Best of Lee Perry & the Upsetters ♪♪♪½ (Pama, 1984)
Reggae Greats ♪♪♪½ (Mango, 1984)
The Upsetter Box Set ♪♪♪½ (Trojan, 1985)
Some of the Best ♪♪♪½ (Heartbeat, 1986)
Battle of Armagideon (Millionaire Liquidator) ♪♪♪½ (Trojan, 1986)
Time Boom X De Devil Dead ♪♪♪½ (On U Sound, 1987)
The Upsetter Compact Set ♪♪♪½ (Trojan, 1988)
All the Hits ♪♪♪½ (Rohit, 1989)
Mystic Warrior ♪♪♪½ (RAS, 1989)
Shock of the Mighty, 1969–74 ♪♪♪½ (Attack, 1989)
From the Secret Laboratory ♪♪♪½ (Mango, 1990)
Heavy Manners: Reggae's Best ♪♪♪½ (Lagoon, 1993)
Kung Fu Meets the Dragon ♪♪♪½ (Lagoon, 1995)
Super Ape Inna Jungle ♪♪♪½ (RAS, 1995)
Black Ark Experryments ♪♪♪½ (RAS, 1995)
Experryments at the Grassroots of Dub ♪♪♪½ (RAS, 1995)
The Best of Lee Perry ♪♪♪½ (Upsetter, 1996)
Technomajikal ♪♪♪ (Roir, 1997)
Archive ♪♪♪½ (Rialto, 1998)
The Mighty Upsetter ♪♪♪½ (Roir, 1998)
Live at Maritime Hall ♪♪♪½ (Maritime Hall, 1998) Africa Blood ♪♪♪ (Trojan, 1998)

influences:
◀◀ Coxsone Dodd, King Tubby, the Skatalites

▶▶ Bob Marley, the Upsetters, Max Romeo, Junior Murvin

see also: Black Uhuru, the Congos, Wasis Diop, Gregory Isaacs, Mad Professor, Bob Marley, Rita Marley, John Martyn, Jackie Mittoo, Junior Murvin, the Skatalites, Toots & the Maytals

Craig Harris

Sir Shina Peters

Afro-juju

Born 1958, in Nigeria. Based in Nigeria.

Along with the "Yo-pop" (Yoruba pop) sensation Segun Adewale, Shina Peters worked as a backing musician for juju (Yoruba dance music) veteran Prince Adekunle. Both sidemen left the band, forming Shina Adewale & the Superstars International in 1977. However, their ambitions differed. Adewale wanted to make the music more mainstream while Peters wanted to delve deeper into the roots of Nigerian pop. So they split so each could pursue their own directions. An impressive showman, Peters mixed juju with fuji (another popular Yoruba voice-and-percussion-dominated sound) and even Afro-Beat (Fela Kuti's big-band tribal/jazz style) to create music totally new yet totally Nigerian. His self-dubbed "Afro-juju" took West Africa by storm in 1989, sparking the movement that quickly became known as "Shinamania." Peters's popularity soared, and he earned Nigerian Juju Musician of the Year honors in 1989 and '90. The phenomenon lasted until he released the album that bore its name, Shinamania, in 1991. Sales were good, but this further synth-heavy evolution got critically panned and the fervor dampened. Nonetheless, Peters's prophetic juju visions played an important and lasting role in opening up the music dominated by King Sunny Adé and Ebenezer Obey to younger artists.

what to buy: Shinamania ♪♪♪½ (Stern's, 1991) leans heavily on the fuji/juju percussion, but also throws in guitars and keys that sound vaguely like soukous (Congolese rumba) or even Kenyan music. Peters also tosses in a reggae lick to start off "Omo Mbo," and the call-and-response vocals that begin "Pelemo" go so far as to recall Cab Calloway. However, the bulk of the vocals and talking drums are pure Yoruba.

what to buy next: Experience ♪♪♪ (Stern's/Sony Music Nigeria, 1992, prod. Laolu Akins) once again blends the heavy percussion with juju guitars in a nearly seamless group of songs. The album is short—less than 40 minutes—but powerful.

worth searching for: Afro-Juju 1 (Sony Nigeria, 1989) is not available outside of Nigeria. For the intrepid import-searcher Peters has 20 others like it to choose from, but this is the one that shook the world.

influences:
◀◀ Prince Adekunle, King Sunny Adé, Fela Kuti, Sikiru Ayinde Barrister

▶▶ Dele Taiwo, Fabulous Olu Fajemirokum

see also: Fela Kuti, King Sunny Adé, Ebenezer Obey

Hank Bordowitz

Cornel Pewewardy /Oyate Ump Moni

Native American

Born 1952, in OK, USA. Based in Lawrence, KS, USA.

There are so many exciting styles of Native American vocal music available today, and the field is growing phenomenally. From the powwow style of the Black Lodge Singers (Blackfeet) to the pey-

peter phippen

ote chants of Sioux and Navajo Native American Church members Primeaux & Mike, from the delicate bird songs of Keith Mahone (Hualapai) to the legendary Natay-Navajo vocalist Ed Lee Natay, there has evolved a dazzling assortment of ballad, "chicken scratch," dance-accompaniment, and even rap recordings. One of the names that always comes up when discussing distinctive singers of great heart is that of Cornel Pewewardy. Oyate Ump Moni is Dr. Pewewardy's Dakota name. Meaning "the one who stands out as a leader in a large gathering of people," he received it through a Dakota name-giving ceremony while living in Minnesota, USA. He is Comanche and Kiowa, and an enrolled member of the Comanche tribe of Oklahoma, USA.

Growing up in the southwestern part of that state, Pewewardy closely heeded the talents of an artistic extended family. From this exposure, he learned at an early age of his cultural ancestry and rich tribal background. Brought up, as he says, "on the drum," the young man encountered the internal appreciation and luminescent spirituality that comes from spending long hours with master singers of the southern plains. Currently, Pewewardy is an assistant professor in the teaching and leadership department at the University of Kansas's School of Education. He gives courses in multicultural education and Indian education, and has taught Native American music and dance at the University of New Mexico and Navajo Community College. Dr. Pewewardy also keeps a busy professional speaking schedule for diverse audiences. His music has been widely performed throughout the United States and Canada, and he continues to stretch his horizons through practicing, composing, and teaching. "Working with students," he says, "helps me clarify the important and often subtle nuances that make a good song."

Dr. Pewewardy's honors include a doctorate in education from Pennsylvania State University. He was named the 1988 National Indian Student of the Year and 1991 National Indian Educator of the Year by the National Indian Education Association in Omaha, Nebraska; the 1992 Indian of the Year by the American Indian Exposition and Fair in Anadardo, Oklahoma; and the 1997 Musician of the Year by the Wordcraft Circle of Native Writers & Storytellers. He also received the 1992 Minnesota Transformational Leadership Award from the Minnesota Administrator's Academy in Minneapolis, Minnesota, and the 1998 Phoenix Award for Music by the Lawrence Arts Commission of Kansas. Pewewardy dedicates his music to the memory of the many prominent southern plains singers and composers from Oklahoma and the Southwest. He hopes to promote and perpetuate their songs so the younger generation will be able to hear, understand, and love their cultural celebrations.

what to buy: On Spirit Journey ♪♪♪♪½ (SOAR, 1992, prod. Tom Bee), Pewewardy combines creative narration, nature sounds, and a unique musical ear to create an album appealing to a broad range of tastes. Whether playing his native flute or singing southern plains songs on the "big drum," Pewewardy's music conveys a wistful sense of serenity, beauty, and harmony between nature and humanity that is timeless and poignant. His voice is incredibly warm; sweet as a sigh when used softly, yet retaining that warmth even in his most powerful expressions. He describes the album's title as "a path of reclaiming or perhaps rediscovering elements about yourself: who you are, what you are, why you are as you are, and where you're heading. [It's about] learning to take control of your life and consciously fashioning your own path." what to buy next: Comanche Hymns from the Prairie ♪♪♪ (SOAR, 1996, prod. Tom Bee) presents Christian-inspired songs, dating back as early as 1895, from two Comanche Indian Churches, Baptist and Mennonite, in the native language as presented in the Numuhuviyanuu Songbook—a compilation of 116 songs by the late Elliot Canoge, a linguist who conducted and recorded music among the Comanche in the 1940s and '50s. The roots of chorales like "Follow On" and "Only Trust Him" stretch back to the days when tribal men were drafted to fight in World War I. The classic church organ and male-female choral arrangements are easily recognizable as liturgical.

the rest:
Dancing Buffalo ♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1992)

worth searching for: Look for performances by Pewewardy on the various-artists compilations The Rough Guide to Native American Music ♪♪♪♪½ (World Music Network, 1998) and Between Father Sky and Mother Earth ♪♪♪♪ (Narada, 1995) (each reviewed in this book's Compilations section), and on Robbie Robertson's Contact from the Underworld of Red Boy ♪♪♪♪½ (Capitol, 1998).

influences:
◀◀ Woody Big Bow (Kiowa), Woogie Watchetaker (Comanche)

see also: Black Lodge Singers, Primeaux & Mike, Southern Scratch

PJ Birosik

Peter Phippen

Contemporary flute

Born in WI, USA. Based in USA.

Peter Phippen spent most of his musical career as a bass guitarist for rock bands—and then, he says, the Native American flute found him. His first flute was a bamboo whistle, and others, including handcrafted Native American flutes, South American vertical notch flutes, and transverse bamboo flutes, soon joined his growing cache. As Phippen has learned the instrument's techniques he has also learned about its history, and often gives talks in which he demonstrates authentic ancient specimens.

what's available: Book of Dreams ♪♪♪♪ (Canyon, 1996, prod. Robert Doyle) is a meditative collection of original tunes (with the exception of "Scarborough Fair") that offers a haunting variation on contemporary flute music based in Native American ideas.

influences:

⏮ The ancient Native American flute tradition

Kerry Dexter

Astor Piazzolla

Nuevo tango

Born March 11, 1921, in Argentina. Died July 5, 1992, in Paris, France.

Argentina's tango was combined with jazz and classical influences to create nuevo tango ("new tango") by bandoneón player and composer Astor Piazzolla. Although he was initially scorned in his homeland as "asesino del tango"—"the assassin of the tango"—Piazzolla's unique approach successfully brought the once-forbidden dance music to concert stages around the world. In addition to recording on his own, Piazzolla collaborated with such stellar jazz musicians as Gerry Mulligan and Gary Burton. Piazzolla's compositions have been featured in numerous films, including Roman Polanski's Frantic, and have been performed by such ensembles as the Kronos Quartet and the Santa Fe Chamber Music Festival Orchestra.

Piazzolla's involvement with music was sparked shortly after moving to the United States with his parents at the age of three, temporarily settling in New York's Little Italy. Presented with a bandoneón that his father had purchased at a pawn shop, Piazzolla was sent for lessons. By the age of nine, he had mastered the instrument and begun playing professionally. From a similarly young age Piazzolla was fascinated by American jazz, and would often sneak into nightclubs in Harlem to hear masters like Cab Calloway and Duke Ellington. Classical music was equally influential, and Piazzolla developed an interest in the compositions of Mozart, Chopin, and Bach. A concert pianist who lived next door, Bela Wilder, helped Piazzolla transpose classical compositions to the bandoneón.

When tango master Carlos Gardel came to the United States in 1934, Piazzolla became his tour guide and translator, and had a bit role in Gardel's film, El Dia Que Me Quieres. Although he was invited to record and tour with Gardel, Piazzolla's parents refused to grant permission. Their decision proved pivotal when Gardel's plane crashed in Colombia the following year. Returning to Argentina in the late 1930s, Piazzolla performed in local tango clubs. A meeting with classical conductor Arturo Rubinstein, then touring Argentina, resulted in Piazzolla becoming a student of Alberto Ginastera, who, in addition to jamaican music 1: rastafarianism

Rastafarianism (a.k.a. Rastafari) is a widespread millennial religion and cultural movement that includes a small minority of Jamaicans. The reggae sound associated with it gives rise to a common perception of Rastas as defiant black men with natty, unshorn locks and a plenitude of ganja, oft-ingested as an aid to meditation. In reality, the practice of Rastafari varies among its diverse adherents, who do share a fundamental belief in the brotherhood of man and a vision of Africa as the spiritual homeland and future promised land.

Rastafarians view themselves as the Israelites of the West—abducted from their motherland and transported in chains to foreign territory ruled by oppressors ("Babylon"). To overcome this ignorance and cruelty, the displaced believe the dream of returning to their true home in Africa ("Zion") will one day come to fruition.

The Universal Negro Improvement Association, founded by Jamaica's Marcus Garvey in 1914, helped create this kind of kinship, based on common ancestral bonds, among African-descended men and women wherever they resided. Garvey's 1916 prophecy of a "divine black King" in Africa would eventually help Rastafari itself coalesce as a faith and a program—Rastafarians view the 1930 coronation of Ras Tafari (Amharic for "Prince of Peace") Makonnen as Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie (Amharic for "Power of the Trinity") as the arrival of the everliving God.

Rastafarianism incubated through the economic depression of the '30s and the anti-colonial riots of 1938; in the '50s, Rastafarian communes began to widely incorporate variations of the 17th-century renegade-slave Maroons' religious ritual into a method of socially conscious worship called nyahbingi. In the volatile '60s, after independence failed to bring much improvement for ghetto "sufferahs," Rastafari went from a means of afterlife redemption to a spiritual protest movement aimed at uplift in this life—often through the soul-stirring music created by its followers.

Todd Shanker

teaching the young prodigy orchestration, harmony, and music theory, instructed him in art, film, and literature.

Although Piazzolla's biggest break thus far came when he was invited to join Anibal Troila's top-notch Tango Orchestra, he remained with the group for only a few years. By 1944, Piazzolla was so frustrated with traditional tango that he left to form his own ensemble, Orquesta Del 46. He continued to write classical pieces as well, under conductor Herman Scherchen. Piazzolla's composition "Sinfonia Buenos Aires" placed first in the International Fabien Sevitsky Competition. A further honor for these efforts came when, in 1954, Piazzolla received a grant from the French government to study classical composition in Paris. Although he had a few lessons with Nadia Boulanger, Piazzolla was directed away from classical music and instructed to be faithful to his own cultural roots. As a result, he began writing tangos. With the help of Lalo Schifrin, Piazzolla hired musicians from the Orchestra of the Paris Opera and recorded his first album.

Inspired by the octet led by jazz saxophonist Gerry Mulligan, Piazzolla formed Octeto Buenos Aires in 1955. Although he returned to New York for three years, commercial success continued to elude him. After moving back to Argentina, Piazzolla formed Quinteto Nuevo Tango and regularly performed at his own club, Jamaica. Together with poet Horacio Ferrer, Piazzolla composed a tango-based folk opera that premiered in 1968; it would not be the last of his attempts to confer high-art respectability upon this traditionally lowly form.

Although he tried to slow down following a massive heart attack in 1973, Piazzolla continued to work at a feverish pace. His efforts finally paid off as his modern approach to the tango achieved acceptance in his native country in the mid-1980s. Among other triumphs, Piazzolla's music was featured in the Broadway hit Tango Argentina in 1986. But Piazzolla's inability to scale down his activities resulted in his suffering a cerebral hemorrhage in 1989, shortly after he had arrived in Paris to work on a full-scale opera. Piazzolla's final performance came in July 1990, when he appeared with the Athens Colours Orchestra under the direction of Manos Hidjidakis. A recording of the concert was released as Bandoneón Sinfonico. Piazzolla died two years later.

what to buy: Piazzolla's artistic approach to the tango is best showcased on Tango: Zero Hour ♪♪♪♪♪ (American Clave, 1986/1998, prod. Kip Hanrahan). Accompanied by Fernando Suarez Paz (violin), Pablo Ziegler (piano), Horacio Malvicino Sr. (guitar), and Hector Console (bass), Piazzolla and his bandoneón offer a performance marked by sensuous passion.

what to buy next: Piazzolla traces the development of the tango, from the brothels of Buenos Aires to the international concert stage, on The Rough Dancer and the Cyclical Night ♪♪♪♪ (American Clave, 1987/1993, prod. Kip Hanrahan, Astor Piazzolla).

best of the rest:
Suite for Vibraphone and New Tango Quintet ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic Jazz, 1987)
Astor Piazzolla: The Central Park Concert ♪♪♪½ (Chesky, 1987) Concierto Para Bandoneón ♪♪♪½ (Nonesuch, 1988)
The Vienna Concert ♪♪♪½ (Messidor, 1992)
Ballet Tango ♪♪♪½ (Milan, 1992)
Piazzolla Classics ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1993)
The Lausanne Concert ♪♪♪½ (Milan, 1993)
Collection ♪♪♪½ (Alex, 1994)
Tangamente: 1968–73 ♪♪♪½ (Just A Memory, 1994)
Piazzolla Clasico II ♪♪♪½ (Milan, 1995)
Tango Piazzolla: Key Works, 1984–1989 ♪♪♪½ (Music Club, 1995)
Astor Piazzolla Plays Piazzolla ♪♪♪½ (EPM Musique, 1995)
Concerto for Bandoneón ♪♪♪½ (Capriccio, 1996)
Bandoneón Sinfonico ♪♪♪½ (Milan, 1996)
Golden Collection ♪♪♪½ (Leader Music, 1996)
Paris 1955 ♪♪♪½ (Wotre Music, 1997)
Live at the BBC 1989 ♪♪♪½ (Intuition, 1998)

influences:
⏮ Vicente Greco, Roberto Firpo, Carlos Gardel ⏭ Litto Nebbia, Siglo XXX, Sexteto Mayor

see also: Carlos Gardel

Craig Harris

Pixinguinha

Chorinho

Born Alfredo da Rocha Vianna Jr., April 23, 1897, in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. Died February 17, 1973, in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

In 1922, the great Brazilian flautist and composer Pixinguinha and his band Os Oito Batutas were summoned for a European tour. There was an outcry in conservative circles and the media. Editorials called the musicians "savage" and "barbaric blacks." Even members of white society who had considered themselves friends of Pixinguinha now turned against him when it became a question of representing Brazil to the "civilized world."

Os Batutas played chorinho, an instrumental genre derived from polka, waltz, and Portuguese music, but with a strong link to Afro-Brazilian rhythms and an improvisational current that likened it to ragtime and the budding jazz movement in the United States. It proliferated in the "becos" and "botiquins" of Rio (small bohemian bars), later spreading to dancehalls, theaters, and redoubts of the upper classes. However, in the 1920s percussive instruments like the reco-reco and pandeiro were considered ignoble by the musical establishment; the Batutas not only incorporated them but featured them prominently, in a hybrid style which drew from northeastern maxixe and frevo and the frowned-upon samba. This mix caught fire in Europe, titillating the Week of Modern Art festival in Paris and obliging the group to stay long past their scheduled term.

But, notwithstanding the percussion for which his band was most notorious, Pixinguinha's first love was the flute. On it he composed some of his greatest works, including "Rosa" (1917), "Um a Zero" (1919), and his most famous song, "Carinhoso" (1923). On his return from overseas, Pixinguinha began playing more saxophone as well. His run with Benedito Lacerda's band in the 1940s, plus many recordings, solidified his identity as a woodwind icon; his soulful renditions, masterful technique, and joyful, irrepressible virtuosity endeared him to all of Brazil. As an arranger Pixinguinha continued to flourish, and his compositions were recorded by countless musicians across the musical spectrum. He brought serious instrumentalism to Brazilian popular music, and introduced popular elements to the orchestra. Over the course of his fruitful career he penned some 600 tunes. In 1997, the centennial of Pixinguinha's birth gave rise to research, commemorative recordings, and a well-deserved celebration of the life and work of this remarkable artist.

what to buy: An apt 100th-birthday present is the two-CD set Pixinguinha 100 Anos ♪♪♪♪♪ (RCA/BMG, 1997). Featuring stellar sessions by Pixinguinha, ranging from vintage 1920s material to recordings done in the early '70s, this slick but user-friendly package is a quality intro to the world of chorinho. Paulo Moura, one of Brazil's premier contemporary musicians, revisits Pixinguinha's repertoire with Paulo Moura e Os Batutas/Pixinguinha ♪♪♪♪♪ (Blue Jackel, 1998, prod. Gabi Leib). On this live album, Moura suffuses the melodies with his charisma, recreating the big-band atmosphere of mid-century gafieira dancehalls.

what to buy next: Kuarup Records, a Brazilian indie label, has worked hard to raise awareness about the king of chorinho. Sempre Pixinguinha ♪♪♪♪½ (Kuarup, 1997, prod. Henrique Cazes, Mario de Aratanha), with Paulo Sergio Santos on clarinet and Odette Ernest Dias on flute, soars on taut tempos and crisp, acoustic flair. Orquestra Brasilia ♪♪♪♪ (Kuarup, 1997, prod. Henrique Cazes, Mario de Aratanha) brings to light a trove of never-before-recorded Pixinguinha arrangements accidentally discovered in the National Library of Brazil. Old-guard sambistas share the mike with the younger generation and memorable renditions ensue.

best of the rest:
Orchestra Pixinguinha ♪♪♪♪½ (Kuarup, 1977)
Pixinguinha no Tempo dos Oito Batutas ♪♪♪♪ (Revivendo)

worth searching for: The "Os Originais" series from EMI-Odeon Brazil is out of print. Lucky scavengers may find the series's São Pixinguinha ♪♪♪♪♪ (EMI-Odeon Brazil, 1977) in a store or catalog. You've really hit the jackpot if you unearth a record called Gente da Antiga ♪♪♪♪♪ (EMI-Odeon), featuring Pixinguinha along with Clementina de Jesus and João da Baiana.

influences:
- Donga, Noel Rosa

Cartola, Jacob do Bandolim, João Gilberto, Antonio Carlos Jobim, Paulo Moura

Mara Weiss and Nego Beto

Planxty

Irish traditional

Formed 1972, in Dublin, Ireland. Disbanded 1983.

Christy Moore, vocals, guitar (1972–74); Andy Irvine, vocals, mandolin, bouzouki, hurdy-gurdy (1972–75, 1979–83); Dónal Lunny, bouzouki, guitar (1972–73, 1979–83); Liam O'Flynn, uilleann pipes, tin whistle (1972–75, 1979–83); Paul Brady, vocals, guitar (1974–75); Johnny Moynihan, vocals, bouzouki, fiddle, tin whistle (1973–75); Matt Molloy, flute (1979–80); Bill Whelan, keyboards (1983); James Kelly, fiddle (1983); Nollaig Casey, fiddle (1983); Eoghan O'Neill, bass guitar (1983). (All members are from Ireland.)

The emergence of Planxty during the early 1970s marked the beginning of an Irish traditional music revival that is still going strong today. The band also ushered in a new era in which Irish music was no longer seen as the exclusive domain of ballad groups like the Clancy Brothers and the Dubliners. Other bands before Planxty, Sweeney's Men in particular, had experimented with arranging traditional material for modern folk audiences, but Planxty's unique stroke of genius—and luck—was to secure the services of brilliant uilleann piper Liam O'Flynn. As the story goes, it all came about as singer Christy Moore and producer Bill Leader put their heads together to plan the album Prosperous, featuring Andy Irvine, Dónal Lunny, O'Flynn, and a few other accompanists. After the album came out in 1972 on Leader's Trailer label, the foursome decided to perform together under the name Planxty, a term found in titles of 17th-century harp tunes composed in praise of patrons. The immediate success of their single "The Cliffs of Dooneen" was followed by the 1973 release of their eponymous first album, known as the "black album" for its mostly black cover with an eerie shot of the musicians caught in the beam of a stage projector. Planxty's following grew rapidly and the band's success continued, despite Lunny's departure after the completion of The Well below the Valley, also in 1973. Replacing Lunny was singer and bouzouki player Johnny Moynihan, a former accomplice of Irvine's in Sweeney's Men. Moynihan was featured on the band's third album, Cold Blow and the Rainy Night, which was named Melody Maker magazine's folk album of the year for 1974. However, by the time the album was released, Moore had left the band to return to a quieter life in Ireland. Singer and multi-instrumentalist Paul Brady, formerly with the vocal group the Johnstons, was asked to replace Moore, a move frowned upon by Planxty fans at the time as Brady was involved in the California rock scene. As it turned out, Brady embraced this opportunity to return to his roots with enthusiasm, and the Planxty of 1975, although never recorded and short-lived, was at least as good as the original lineup. Not until 1979, with Lunny's Bothy Band on its way out, did Lunny and the three other original members decide to try it again, this time with the addition of the great Roscommon flute player Matt Molloy.

The reunited Planxty made a smashing comeback, despite a power outage interrupting their set, at the Ballysadare festival in August 1979 (an event also marked by the Bothy Band's final appearance), and released the powerful After the Break. Molloy, who unfortunately was soon gone to join the Chieftains, also appeared on the band's next album, The Woman I Loved So Well, released in 1980. During the early '80s, Lunny was once again distracted by other projects, namely an experimentation in folk-rock out of which came the great Moving Hearts, and Planxty began winding down slowly but surely. They released their final album, Words and Music, in 1983, with the participation of fiddler James Kelly and keyboard player Bill Whelan, well known today as the man behind Riverdance. However, all former members of the band continue to participate actively in the Irish music scene, Moore and O'Flynn as solo performers, Irvine with Patrick Street, and Lunny as one of the busiest producers and session musicians in Ireland today.

what to buy: The band's official first album, Planxty ♪♪♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1973/Shanachie, 1979, prod. Phil Coulter), remains one of its best. The famous opening song, "Raggle Taggle Gypsy," is left practically unchanged from Prosperous, though the fidelity of the studio recording allows a better appreciation of the intricacies of the arrangement, in particular the brilliant transition into the old harp tune "Tabhair Dom Do Lámh (Give Me Your Hand)." Other classic songs on the album include "Arthur McBride," later made into a hit by Paul Brady; "The Jolly Beggar"; "Follow Me up to Carlow," celebrating a rare Irish victory against the Crown; "The Blacksmith," with its Balkan-tinged instrumental conclusion; and Andy Irvine's own "West Coast of Clare." Liam O'Flynn's masterful piping is heard on the lovely reel medley "Junior Crehan's Favorite," the multi-part slide "Merrily Kissed the Quaker," and a couple of harp compositions by the legendary Turlough O'Carolan. Much in the same vein, The Well below the Valley ♪♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1973/Shanachie, 1979, prod. Phil Coulter) features Christy Moore and Irvine equally as lead singers, performing such classics as "Cúnla" and the two versions of "As I Roved Out." O'Flynn contributes some of the great pieces of the piping repertoire, including the slip jig "An Phis Fhliuch" and the reels "The Dogs among the Bushes" and "Jenny's Wedding." Despite Dónal Lunny's departure (he actually participated in the recording), Cold Blow and the Rainy Night ♪♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1974/Shanachie, 1979, prod. Phil Coulter) remains true to the earlier Planxty sound. New member and ex–Sweeney's Men vocalist Johnny Moynihan is the featured singer on "'P' Stands for Paddy," one of the memorable songs on the album. Others include Irvine's "Johnny Cope" and Moore's "The Lakes of Pontchartrain." Among the instrumental highlights are a set of polkas now universally known among Irish session-goers, and the exotic Balkan tune "Mominsko Horo," which immediately follows Irvine's own Romanian-themed (though not Romanian-sounding) song, "Baneasa's Green Glade." With After the Break ♪♪♪♪♪ (Tara, 1979, prod. Dónal Lunny), Planxty made a stunning comeback. Lunny's "blarge" (five-course bouzouki) brings new depth to the sound, while the sophistication of the mandolin-and-bouzouki arrangements reaches new heights, particularly on "The Good Ship Kangaroo" and "The Pursuit of Farmer Michael Hayes." The addition of Matt Molloy's expert flute playing makes the instrumentals that much richer—one of them is a spectacular Bulgarian dance tune titled "Smeceno Horo." The CD reissue of the album includes two additional tracks that had been previously released on the LP sampler High Kings of Tara.

what to buy next: Although not officially a Planxty album, Moore's Prosperous ♪♪♪½ (Trailer, 1972/Tara, 1972, prod. Bill Leader) gives a glimpse at a prototypical form of the band, as Moore gathered Lunny, O'Flynn, Irvine, and a few others to record the album. It features two songs, "Raggle Taggle Gypsy" and "The Cliffs of Dooneen," which Planxty would continue to perform with great success, along with other, equally interesting selections like Bob Dylan's "Tribute to Woody" and Woody Guthrie's "Ludlow Massacre." The Planxty Collection ♪♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1974/Shanachie, 1979, prod. Phil Coulter) is an excellent sampler based on Planxty's first three albums, to which is added the enormously successful "The Cliffs of Dooneen" from the band's 1972 single. Although not as exciting an album as After the Break, The Woman I Loved So Well ♪♪♪½ (Tara, 1980, prod. Dónal Lunny, Brian Masterson) contains some fine songs, like Irvine's "Kellswater," learned from the Sam Henry collection, and Moore's epic "Little Musgrave." The instrumental tracks benefit from the presence of guest musicians, particularly the great Clare duo of Noel Hill (concertina) and Tony Linnane (fiddle). Words and Music ♪♪♪ (WEA, 1983/Shanachie, 1983, prod. Dónal Lunny) was Planxty's swan song. The influence of Lunny's experiments with Moving Hearts can be clearly heard on this album, especially in some of the accompaniments featuring electronic keyboards and electric bass—although the marriage of high technology and traditional music works rather well on the beautiful piping air "Táimse Im' Chodlach." On other instrumental tracks, O'Flynn's pipes are combined with the twin fiddles of James Kelly and Nollaig Casey.

worth searching for: Three live Planxty tracks, one being a set of jigs not appearing on any of their studio albums, were included on the Breton-produced 2e Festival Pop' Celtic Kertalg 73 ♪♪♪ (Barclay, 1973, prod. Gwenn Le Goarnic, Hughes de Courson). High Kings of Tara ♪♪♪♪½ (Tara, 1980, prod. Dónal Lunny) contains three Planxty tracks left over from the After the Break sessions, two of which were later included in the CD reissue of that album. Arís ♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1984) is another anthology drawn from the band's first three albums, with the added interest being the inclusion of "Yarmouth Town" from the B-side of Planxty's famous first single. You will be truly lucky if you can find a copy of the two-cassette self-released bootleg The Best of Planxty Live ♪♪♪♪½ (Planxty, c. 1986, prod. Kevin Flynn, Michael Germaine), recorded live at the Olympia Theatre by the original quartet with Nollaig Casey (fiddle) and Bill Whelan (keyboards). The numbers performed span the complete recorded output of the band and its members, from the black album's "The Jolly Beggarman" to Andy Irvine's "Plains of Kildare," first recorded with Paul Brady, to "Pity the Poor Immigrant" and "The Irish March" from the band's final album.

influences:

◀◀ Ceoltóirí Cualann, Sweeney's Men

▶▶ The Bothy Band, Touchstone, Moving Hearts, Patrick Street, Dónal Lunny, Dervish

see also: The Bothy Band, Patrick Cassidy, Andy Irvine, Dónal Lunny, Matt Molloy, Christy Moore, Moving Hearts, Liam O'Flynn, Sweeney's Men, Bill Whelan

Philippe Varlet

The Pogues /Shane MacGowan

Celtic punk

Formed 1982, in London, England. Disbanded 1997.

Peter "Spider" Stacy, vocals, pennywhistle; Jeremy "Jem" Finger, banjo, guitar; Shane MacGowan, vocals (1982–91); Joe Strummer, vocals, guitar (1991–93); James Fearnley, accordion (1982–93); James McNally, accordion (1993–present); Philip Chevron, guitar (1984–93); Jamie Clarke, guitar (1993–97); Andrew Ranken, drums; Cait O'Riordan, bass (1982–86); Darryl Hunt (1986–97).

The Pogues injected the bile of punk rock into traditional Celtic folk music. At their best—with the brilliant gutter-poet Shane MacGowan on lead vocals—they were one of England's most original rock acts. But MacGowan, a career alcoholic, became increasingly unstable and left the band in 1991. With Spider Stacy handling lead vocals, the Pogues became a decent Celtic rock outfit, but hardly the revolutionary group they were in the past. The magic was gone without MacGowan, and the band split up after one lackluster album.

what to buy: Rum, Sodomy & the Lash ♪♪♪♪♪ (MCA, 1985, prod. Elvis Costello) is MacGowan and the Pogues at their peak, thrashing through punk workouts such as "The Sock Bed of Cuchulainn" and switching easily into ballads like "And the Band Played Waltzing Matilda."

what to buy next: MacGowan was still in fine form on If I Should Fall from Grace with God ♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1988, prod. Steve Lillywhite), especially on his brawling duet with Kirsty MacColl, "Fairy Tale of New York." But you could practically smell the whiskey in his slurred vocals on Peace and Love ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1989, prod. Steve Lillywhite), a still-strong effort that nonetheless foreshadowed the downhill stumble to follow.

what to avoid: Pogue Mahone ♪♪ (Mesa, 1995, prod. Steve Brown) is a pleasant but all-too-safe post-MacGowan effort.

the rest:

Red Roses for Me ♪♪♪ (Enigma, 1984)
Poguetry in Motion ♪♪½ (MCA EP, 1986)
Hell's Ditch ♪♪½ (Island, 1990)
Yeah, Yeah, Yeah, Yeah ♪♪ (Island, 1990) Essential Pogues ♪♪♪ (Island, 1991)
Waiting for Herb ♪♪½ (Chameleon, 1993) worth searching for: The soundtrack Straight to Hell (Enigma Classics, 1987) features the Pogues' version of Ennio Morricone's theme from the Clint Eastwood film The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly, as well as the traditional "Danny Boy."

solo outings:

Shane MacGowan & the Popes:

The Snake ♪♪♪½ (ZTT/Warner Bros., 1995)
The Crock of Gold ♪♪♪♪ (Phantom, 1998)

influences:

◀◀ The Clancy Brothers, the Clash, the Chieftains, the Sex Pistols

▶▶ The Drovers, the Levellers, the Cranberries see also: The Dubliners, the Oyster Band, Alan Stivell, Sweeney's Men

Thor Christensen

Martti Pokela

Finnish folk, classical Born January 23, 1924, in Haapavesi, North Ostrobothnia, Finland. Based in Finland.

Martti Pokela has done more to promote the use of Finland's national instrument, the kantele (a form of zither), than just about any other performer. Although the kantele was honored in Finnish tradition as the main instrument played within Finland's national epic poem, the Kalevala, by the 20th century it had been superseded by the fiddle and the accordion in folk groups. Pokela just happened to grow up in an area where kantele playing was still a living tradition, and he became captivated by its sound. Originally a hollowed-out piece of wood strung with five pieces of twisted horse hair, the kantele evolved over time into a finely crafted wooden zither with 9, 25, 32, or 36 copper or steel wire strings, and a tuning mechanism that lets the player modulate between keys and beyond the pentatonic scale to which it was originally confined. By the late 1940s Pokela was traipsing around the country collecting folk songs, which he then arranged and performed with his wife Marjatta. He has since joined the staff of the world-renowned folk music department at the Sibelius Academy, where, along with the department's director Heikki Laitinen, he has taught many of the musicians prominent in the new Finnish folk movement, including Maria Kalaniemi, Anna-Kaisa Liedes, and Timo Väänänen (Finland's 1997 Young Artist of the Year).

what to buy: Old & New Kantele ♪♪♪♪ (Finnlevy/Arc, 1978, prod. Martti Pokela, Matti Kontio) includes 16 pieces played on a variety of kanteles by a trio that includes Pokela, his daughter Eeva-Leena Pokela-Sariola, and Matti Kontio. There are plenty of sprightly tunes on this disc, but what's most notable is that some of the most affecting work is done using the older 5-string kanteles instead of the more modern 36-string instruments. Pokela shows that he is not just a folk artist on albums in which he takes the kantele into the classical world, including Sonata for Kantele ♪♪♪♪ (Finlandia, 1995, prod. Martti Pokela, Matti Kontio) and the more recent Snow Kantele/Sami Suite ♪♪♪½ (Finlandia, 1998, prod. Martti Pokela, Matti Kontio), a series of variations on joiks (the compelling music of the Sami, an indigenous people of Scandanavia once known as Laplanders).

what to buy next: The bulk of Finnish Kantele Music, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪½ (Finlandia, 1993, compilation prod. Jari Tiessalo) comes from sessions that Pokela recorded in 1965 and 1969 for the Scandia label. They include a lot of traditional tunes, plus some material that he composed using joiks as a base. Included alongside Pokela's recordings are some pieces performed by Ulla Katajavuori, another influential kantele player, in 1957.

worth searching for: The young Finnish quartet Loituma consists of four kantele players (including Timo Väänänen), and on Things of Beauty ♪♪♪½ (Kansanmusiikki-institutti/NorthSide, 1998, prod. Timo Alakotila, Timo Väänänen) they perform the Pokela composition "Suo," as well as a fine mix of originals and traditional arrangements.

influences:

- Paul Salminen
- Matti Kontio, Anna-Kaisa Liedes, Eeva-Leena Pokela-Sariola, Timo Väänänen

Garaud MacTaggart

The Police /Sting

Rock/reggae

Formed 1977, in London, England. Disbanded 1984.

Sting (born Gordon Sumner, October 2, 1951, in Newcastle, England), bass, vocals, saxophone, keyboards; Stewart Copeland (Egypt), drums; Henri Pandovani, guitar (1977); Andy Summers (born Andrew Somers, in England), guitar.

Arriving amid the fury of England's punk revolution, the members of the Police, while not actual punks themselves, played them on TV. By bleaching their hair so they could appear in a bubblegum commercial, the band may have called their credibility into question from the very beginning, but the fact is, their ability to write songs and actually play their instruments wouldn't have curried much favor in the DIY era anyway. With musical pasts ranging from jazz (Sting) to prog-rock (Copeland) to all manner of session work (Summers), the Police collectively focused on white reggae—Regatta de Blanc, as their second album's title proclaimed—coating it with a pop sheen that soon enough brought the world to their punky reggae party. Sting's middle-to-highbrow lyrics included some serious pretensions—namechecking novelist Vladimir Nabokov here, attempting to explain Jungian concepts there. But give the guy credit: if he helped move a few extra copies of Lolita or Psychology of the Unconscious along the way, then so much the better. The group splintered in 1984 with all three members going on to solo success of varying degrees, led of course by Der Schtingle, who has become one of the world's most famous rock superstars, retaining his reggae "roots" while mixing Latin, Celtic, English-folk, and other genres' elements into his jazzy, cinematic pop.

what to buy: The Police's Zenyatta Mondatta ♪♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1980, prod. the Police, Nigel Gray) is the album on which the group's grasp first matched its outsized reach. Moody, murky dub sonics and reggae-rhythmic digressions abound on just-happen-to-be monster hits like "Don't Stand So Close to Me," "De Do Do Do, De Da Da Da," "Driven to Tears," and "When the World Is Running Down, You Make the Best of What's Still Around," while "Canary in a Coalmine"'s beat qualifies it for, let's say, the second-and-a-half wave of ska. Dauntingly verbose, Sting's . . . Nothing Like the Sun ♪♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1987, prod. Neil Dorfsman, Sting) scores on the basis of its joyous polyrhythmic groove, thanks in large part to drummer Manu Katché. Sting's broad stylistic palette is most tasteful on the Latin-jazzy "Straight to My Heart," the Brazilian-balladic "Fragile," and the synth-Andean "They Dance Alone (Gueca Sola)" (with spoken-word accompaniment from Ruben Blades). To frame a semi-autobiographical tale of working-class struggle and his father's demise, Sting swerved from Afro/Latin/Caribbean sources to Celtic and English-folk ones for his masterwork, The Soul Cages ♪♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1991, prod. Hugh Padgham, Sting). British-Isles superstars like Northumbrian piper Kathryn Tickell evoke the home ground, while pan-rhythmic regulars like Katché keep the horizons wide.

what to buy next: The well-drawn blueprints for the Police's reggae-lite can be viewed on Outlandos d'Amour ♪♪♪ (A&M, 1978) and Regatta de Blanc ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1979, prod. the Police, Nigel Gray). It's the supernaturally talented Sting's special curse that he can commercially overachieve even when he's artistically undertrying. The high point of his lush-but-facile post–Soul Cages work is the Celtic-lament-into-Brazilian-pop stunner "I Was Brought to My Senses" on Mercury Falling ♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1996, prod. Hugh Padgham, Sting). The song is doubly search-worthy for its writer's well-advised reunion with sax genius Branford Marsalis. Sting's justly chart-climbing solo debut, The Dream of the Blue Turtles ♪♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1985, prod. Pete Smith, Sting), has among its lesser moments the reggae-ish "Love Is the Seventh Wave," and among its greater moments the African-inspired melodic percussion loop anchoring the poignant "We Work the Black Seam."

the rest:

The Police:

Ghost in the Machine ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1981)
Synchronicity ♪♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1983)
Every Breath You Take: The Singles ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1986)
Message in a Box: The Complete Recordings ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1993)
The Police Live! ♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1995)
Every Breath You Take: The Classics ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1995)

Sting:

Bring on the Night ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1986)
Ten Summoner's Tales ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1993)
Demolition Man ♪♪♪ (A&M EP, 1993)
Fields of Gold: The Best of Sting, 1984–1994 ♪♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1994)
The Very Best of Sting & the Police ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1997)

worth searching for: Depending on where your tastes fall on the purist-ometer, the Police's popularization of reggae was either the best thing that ever happened to the genre or the worst. Many reggae stars themselves seem to cast their vote for the former on a two-volumes-and-counting series of various-artists tributes, starting with Regatta Mondatta: A Reggae Tribute to the Police (MVP, 1997) and Regatta Mondatta: A Reggae Tribute to the Police, Volume II (EMD/Ark 21, 1998). Among the top-notch artists featured on these albums are Steel Pulse, Maxi Priest, Freddie McGregor, Toots & the Maytals, and recent Sting collaborators Aswad. Meanwhile, a later, Latin American generation of reggae synthesists and style-splicers (King Changó, Plastilina Mosh, et al) pay their respects on Outlandos d'Americas: A Rock en Español Tribute to the Police (EMD/Ark 21, 1998). Also, from the same sessions that produced Sting's . . . Nothing Like the Sun, Nada Como el Sol (A&M EP, 1991, prod. Neil Dorfsman, Sting) offers Spanish-language versions of "We'll Be Together," "Little Wing," and "Fragile," plus a version of "Fragile" sung in Portuguese.

influences:

- Bob Marley, the Beatles, Miles Davis, Wayne Shorter, Gilberto Gil
- Wang Chung, Men at Work, the Samples, Rancid, Goldfinger, Dave Matthews Band

see also: Aswad, the Chieftains

Daniel Durchholz and Adam McGovern

Perez Prado

Mambo

Born Damaso Perez Prado, December 11, 1916, in Matanzas, Cuba. Died September 14, 1989, in Mexico City, Mexico.

Jazzman Tito Puente got his due in the 1992 film The Mambo Kings, but where was Perez Prado? Some say the native Cuban invented the mambo rhythm circa 1942, and his nickname throughout his career was "El Rey del Mambo," or—you guessed it—"The Mambo King." Whether he was the pioneer or not, it's indisputable that when Prado moved from Cuba to Mexico in 1948, he set off the international mambo craze with his mixture of Afro-Cuban rhythms and American swing.

In Mexico City, Prado immediately set up shop at Club 1-2-3, earning the supplemental nickname "The Glenn Miller of Mexico" and using this notoriety to tour the U.S. and act in Mexican movies. His orchestra's mambo songs—built on a steady, tinny Latin rhythm and using an incredibly catchy, playful horn or whistle melody—became big hits in the late 1940s and led to an RCA Victor recording contract. His American tours, beginning in the early 1950s, gave him a massive audience, especially in such prominent New York City nightclubs as the Palladium. (Always a great showman, Prado's trademark cry was "Dilo!" which means "give it!") Though snooty jazz fans preferred Puente and Tito Rodriguez above Prado's unashamed hit-making style, Prado's influence flowed in unexpected directions. Singer Rosemary Clooney, inspired by Prado and the 1954 mambo craze, recorded her wonderful "Mambo Italiano"; Perry Como, Dizzy Gillespie, and the Crows also adapted his style. Prado's first #1 American hit, 1955's "Cherry Pink and Apple Blossom White," cemented his long-term popularity. He recorded until the 1970s, then retired to live with his family in Mexico City. As with many musicians who thrive on whimsical public crazes, Prado's body of work is rarely taken seriously; but he was a major talent, and instrumentals like "Why Wait" still sound fresh and catchy.

what to buy: The hard part about navigating Prado's multi-album career is determining which Spanish imports overlap with the original studio albums, and which of those are out of print. Mondo Mambo! The Best of Perez Prado & His Orchestra ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1995, prod. various) focuses on Prado's glory years—and, not coincidentally, the height of the mambo craze—and includes such classics as "Cherry Pink and Apple Blossom White" and "Patricia."

what to buy next: Prado's best-known studio album remains Havana 3 A.M. ♪♪♪ (BMG, 1956/1990), in which jazzman Maynard Ferguson contributes the lead trumpet parts and a big Latin swing band supplies the supernaturally catchy pop melodies. Other noteworthy studio albums, handily reissued on CD, include the breakthrough Prez ♪♪♪½ (RCA, 1958) and Que Rico Mambo! ♪♪♪ (BMG, 1982).

what to avoid: Like most pop musicians of his era, Prado was prolific, putting out a few albums every year during the height of his popularity; as a result, much of his stuff sounds like much of his other stuff, not to mention the other Latin-influenced easy-listening music of the same period. Among the examples of bland pop product are The Mambo King ♪♪ (RCA International, 1957) and the Spanish reissue Cuba, Grandes Idoles de Siempre ♪♪ (Orfeon, 1997).

best of the rest:

King of Mambo ♪♪ (BMG, 1967/1989)
Concierto Para Bongo ♪♪½ (PolyGram Latino, 1993)
Dance Date with . . . Perez Prado ♪♪½ (Polydor, 1994)
Esta Si Viven ♪♪ (PolyGram Latino, 1996)
Sinfeonola Tropical, Vol. II ♪♪½ (RCA, 1997)
15 Grandes Exito de Perez Prado, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1997)

worth searching for: Don't ignore the Latin import repackages, including Go Go Mambo ♪♪♪ (Tumbao, 1992) and Perez Prado and Benny Moré: Mambos ♪♪½ (Saludos Amigos, 1994)—although novices are advised to stick with the Rhino compilation.

influences:

⏮ Tito Puente, Arsenio Rodriguez, Orestes Lopez, Tito Rodriguez, Xavier Cugat

⏭ Rosemary Clooney, Herb Alpert, Sergio Mendes, Dizzy Gillespie

see also: Benny Moré, Orchesta Aragon

Steve Knopper

Maxi Priest

Reggae

Born Max Elliot, June 10, 1962, in London, England. Based in London, England.

Maxi Priest is perhaps the most popular international reggae singer since the earth-shaking Robert Nesta Marley. However, while Marley rallied people across the globe with songs of protest and struggle, Priest has crossed borders with a sweet, lissome tenor and nary a trace of defiance or controversy. He changed his surname after sighting the Rastafarian religion as a young man, redefining himself after Priest Levi, a figurehead of the 12 Tribes of Israel.

Notwithstanding his superb voice, Priest's music career initially sprung from his talent as a carpenter. In the early 1980s, while building speaker cabinets for Saxon Sound International—at the time the most massive of the U.K.'s dancehall sound systems (mobile deejay units)—Priest was moved by the nimble, rap-like "ragamuffin" toasting styles of deejays like Tippa Irie, Smiley Culture, and Peter King. But his favorite music was that of Jamaican roots singers Beres Hammond and Dennis Brown, and U.S. soul legend Marvin Gaye.

The Saxon crew eventually coaxed Priest out from the woodwork and onto the stage alongside them. Using the same rough-and-tough backing rhythms as the MCs (as U.K. deejays preferred to be called), Priest performed at a variety of south London dancehall shows, and brought a silky soulfulness to a place usually dominated by gritty high-speed chat. Priest's versatile fusion of "lover's-rock" romanticism, dancehall energy, and subtle roots-reggae touches led to a recording contract with Virgin in the U.K. The series of albums that followed exhibit little originality or lyrical substance, but damn do they sound good! With the song "Close to You," Priest even seized the #1 spot on the Billboard charts in 1990.

But what really cemented Priest's international rep was his perfectly timed revisitation of his rugged dancehall roots just as hip-hop exploded into the Top 40 in America. His collaborations with ragga-rappers Shabba Ranks ("Housecall") and, more recently, Shaggy ("That Girl") crossed over to the pop and R&B charts and significantly expanded his fan base. Ironically, even while Priest has helped popularize reggae as much as any living artist on the global stage, his music is generally unappreciated back home in Jamaica, where jaded dancehall fans pelted him with oranges at the 1988 edition of their annual Woodstock, the Sting Concert.

what to buy: Bonafide ♪♪♪♪ (EMD/Capitol, 1990, prod. Geoffrey Chung) includes the aforementioned #1 single with Soul II Soul, "Close to You," and, more importantly, demonstrates Priest's versatility better than any of his other releases. Modern reggae, pop, roots, lover's rock, soul—it's all warmly cocooned in this fine release. Priest's debut, You're Safe ♪♪♪ (EMD/Capitol, 1985, prod. Barry Boom), stands as his purest reggae album, and is bolstered with tight, spongy backing from the all-star band Caution, which included Fashion Records founder Chris Lane and the great Barry Boom (a.k.a. singer Paul Robinson), who doubled as producer.

what to buy next: Intentions ♪♪♪ (EMD/Capitol, 1986, prod. various) is a sleek, quality collaboration with fellow U.K. reggae-poppers Aswad. On Priest's first U.S. release, Maxi ♪♪♪ (EMD/Capitol, 1987, prod. Sly & Robbie), he performs a scintillating duet with his hero Beres Hammond on "How Can We Ease the Pain." This album benefits from production by Sly (Dunbar) & Robbie (Shakespeare), indisputably among Jamaica's greatest rhythm sections and session masterminds, and includes Priest's hit cover of Cat Stevens's "Wild World." Best of Me ♪♪♪ (EMD/Capitol, 1991, prod. various) is a serviceable greatest-hits package with a whopper bonus cut—the white-hot "Housecall" with Shabba Ranks.

what to avoid: Fe Real ♪♪ (EMD/Capitol, 1992, prod. various) is lightweight and uneven, though it does contain the marvelous soul cut "Groovin' in the Midnight." The Man with the Fun ♪ (Virgin, 1996, prod. various) is cluttered with detritus like Priest's practically catatonic cover of the Police's "Message in a Bottle." But it does include the irresistible single "That Girl," with some tough toasting from Shaggy.

the rest:
Live in Concert (BBC Session) ♪♪♪ (Strange Fruit, 1999)
So What If It Rains N/A (Virgin, 1999)

influences:
◀◀ Alton Ellis, Beres Hammond, Dennis Brown, Marvin Gaye

▶▶ Princess Sharifa

see also: Aswad, Shabba Ranks, Shaggy, Sly & Robbie

Todd Shanker

Primeaux & Mike

Intertribal peyote music

Formed 1987, in Kitsili, AZ, USA. Based in Kitsili, AZ, USA.

Verdell Primeaux, vocals; Johnny Mike, vocals. (Both members are from USA.)

Verdell Primeaux is the son of Francis Primeaux Sr., a well-known peyote singer. Verdell is from the Oglalla Sioux Reservation, where he began singing at the age of five. He has com-

jamaican music 2: nyahbingi

The hypnotic and intricate rhythms of nyahbingi drumming descended from traditional West African dance beats brought to Jamaica by Ashanti slaves. There are essentially three different types of drums used in the music. First, a large bass drum, approximately three feet in diameter, keeps time in deep, resonant thumps intended to mimic the heartbeat. These drums are usually struck with the padded mallet-head of a wooden staff. The smaller funde is a hand drum that fleshes out the rhythm. Finally, the "repeater," also a smaller hand drum, improvises and embroiders beats over the top. Handmade percussion, bottle horns, and occasionally brass instruments like the saxophone and trumpet are also worked into the celebratory "nyah" mix.

The seemingly infinite nyah rhythms are churned out for many consecutive hours at spiritual "grounation" sessions, supplemented with ganja (marijuana) smoked from communal chalices, and enlivened by kumina (Ashanti Twi for "possessed by an ancestor") dancing and chanting. The ritual's participants aim to obliterate time, escape the harsh reality of the present, sojourn with the proud spirits of ancestors, and use the wisdom acquired to form a clearer vision of the future.

The Ashanti Africans were known as Maroons in Jamaica, and they carried on the worship of their god Nyankopong—one theorized source of the rite's name. In any case, the Maroons were the first to rebel against Jamaica's slave system in the mid-17th century, establishing the defiant foundation of the Rastafarian movement of nearly three centuries later. The first recognized nyah sessions occurred in the wild Wareika Hills outside Kingston in the 1950s. The most famous nyah drummers—Count Ossie and Ras Michael—emerged from this "Rastaman camp." Count Ossie & the Mystic Revelation of Rastafari's Grounation ♪♪♪♪♪ (Ashanti, 1988) and Ras Michael & the Sons of Negus's Rastafari ♪♪♪♪♪ (Greensleeves, 1975) are two of the greatest recorded documents of the rhythms that would become the beating heart of roots reggae.

Todd Shanker

posed songs since 1983. Johnny Mike has been involved with the Native American Church all his life. He has been singing "healing songs" with Primeaux since 1987. Healing songs are sung without drum and rattle, to teach younger people how to sing the traditional songs and to provide a soothing healing environment for the sacred peyote ceremony, a spiritual communion controversial with the white authorities because of its use of a natural hallucinogen. By using harmonies that are similar to Christian church music, Primeaux & Mike have created a new style of peyote singing, although it is still very rooted in Native tradition.

what to buy: On Walk in Beauty ♪♪♪♪½ (Canyon, 1991, prod. Robert Doyle), Primeaux & Mike's voices blend their wonderful harmonies with almost no production, save a bit of echo to add depth of field. The result is a soothing and energizing effort that makes the melody of Indian music plain to white ears.

what to buy next: Sacred Path ♪♪♪♪ (Canyon, 1997, prod. Robert Doyle) adds a bit of new-agey synthesizer drone to the voices. It's unobtrusive, but unnecessary. The vocals are compelling enough on their own.

best of the rest:

Healing and Peyote Songs of the Native American Church ♪♪♪♪½ (Canyon, 1994)

influences:

◀◀ The Primeaux Family

see also: Robbie Robertson

j. poet

Maddy Prior /The Silly Sisters /Maddy Prior & Tim Hart /Maddy Prior & the Carnival Band

British folk-rock

Born late 1940s, in St. Albans, England. Based in England.

Maddy Prior is one of British folk-rock's leading vocalists. A founding member of Steeleye Span, Prior has also recorded as a soloist, as leader of the Carnival Band, and, together with June Tabor, as the Silly Sisters.

Initially inspired by American folk songs, Prior was introduced to traditional British folk music by a friend who steered her toward the songs of Ewan MacColl and the British folk-song archives at the Cecil Sharpe House. Meeting multi-instrumentalist and vocalist Tim Hart in the late 1960s, Prior joined with him to form a tradition-rooted duo. Although they recorded three albums—Folk Songs of Old England, Volume 1 and Folk Songs of Old England, Volume 2 in 1968, and Summer Solstice in 1971—Prior and Hart were little-known outside of St. Albans, England. The first break for the duo came when they met bassist Ashley Hutchings at the Keele Folk Festival in 1969. Hutchings, who had recently left Fairport Convention, was seeking musicians to form a band that would play an electrified version of traditional British folk. Prior and Hart were quickly recruited along with Gay and Terry Woods (formerly of Sweeney's Men) for the project, which became known as Steeleye Span. The group, which initially concentrated on 17th- and 18th-century songs that they found in journals of the English Folk Dance and Song Society, released their debut album, Hark! The Village Wait, in 1970. Although the Woodses left a few months later, Prior and Hart continued to perform in the group, with folk guitarist Martin Carthy added to its lineup. After the departure of Hutchings and Carthy in 1971, lead guitarist/vocalist Bob Johnson and bassist/vocalist Rick Kemp signed up in their place (Prior and Kemp were later married).

Prior and Steeleye Span had their first hit, "Gaudete"—an old Latin chant that the band performed a cappella—the following year. The band had an even bigger hit in 1976 with "All Around My Hat," one traditional song that Prior reworked with verses from another, "Farewell He." Although she also teamed with folksinger June Tabor to record the duo's first album as the Silly Sisters in 1976, Prior continued to perform with Steeleye Span until March 7th, 1978, when the group disbanded. Shortly afterwards, she released her debut solo album, Woman in the Wings, produced by Ian Anderson of Jethro Tull. While Prior reunited with Steeleye Span in 1980, her focus remained on raising her two children. The band failed to record another studio album until 1986, when they released Back in Line. After Prior experienced voice problems in 1993, Gay Woods returned to Steeleye as a second vocalist. Prior had become involved with a variety of outside projects in the late 1980s. In addition to recording a second Silly Sisters album with Tabor, No More to the Dance, she formed the Carnival Band, which has subsequently recorded four albums.

what to buy: Momento: The Best of Maddy Prior ♪♪♪♪½ (Park, 1995) surveys Prior's recordings as a soloist and with June Tabor as the Silly Sisters. Prior's songwriting talents are showcased on 15 of the album's 18 tracks.

what to buy next: The changing seasons are thematically explored on Year ♪♪♪♪ (Park, 1993), with such tunes as "Swimming Song," "Harvest Home," "Winter Wakeneth," and "Snowdrops/Birth." In addition to six original songs, the album includes tunes by Loudon Wainwright III and Nick Jones.

the rest:

Maddy Prior:
Woman in the Wings ♪♪♪½ (Chrysalis, 1978)
Changing Winds ♪♪♪ (Chrysalis, 1978)
Flesh and Blood ♪♪♪ (Park, 1997)
Ravenchild N/A (Park, 1999)

Maddy Prior & Tim Hart:
Folk Songs of Old England, Volume 1 ♪♪♪ (Mooncrest, 1968)
Folk Songs of Old England, Volume 2 ♪♪♪ (Mooncrest, 1968)
Summer Solstice ♪♪♪ (Mooncrest, 1971/Shanachie, 1988)

Maddy Prior & the Carnival Band:
A Tapestry of Carols ♪♪½ (Saydisc, 1987)
Sing Lustily with Good Courage ♪♪♪ (Saydisc, 1990)
Carols & Capers ♪♪♪ (Park, 1991)
Hang Up Sorrow and Care ♪♪♪ (Park, 1995)

worth searching for: With Prior's soprano and June Tabor's deeper contralto accompanied by some of England's best acoustic musicians (including Martin Carthy, Nick Jones, Andy Irvine, Johnny Moynihan, and Danny Thompson), The Silly Sisters ♪♪♪♪½ (Chrysalis, 1976/Shanachie, 1988, prod. Maddy Prior, Robin Black) remains one of the historic artifacts of modern British folk music. No More to the Dance ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1988, prod. Andrew Cronshaw) is a fitting follow-up, with accompaniment by guitarist Dan Ar Braz, harp duo Sileas, and Prior's husband, Rick Kemp, on bass.

influences:
◀◀ Sandy Denny, Ewan MacColl
▶▶ June Tabor, Connie Dover, the New St. George

see also: Dan Ar Braz, Frankie Armstrong, Martin Carthy, Fairport Convention, Ashley Hutchings, Andy Irvine, Ewan MacColl, Cecil Sharp (sidebar), Steeleye Span

Craig Harris

Willis Prudhomme

Zydeco

Born September 22, 1931, in Kinder, LA, USA. Based in Oberlin, LA, USA.

Willis Prudhomme typifies many of the zydeco performers who work the circuit and rarely become known outside the Cajun triangle of South Louisiana. Prudhomme is a rice farmer who started performing in public only in 1975. A solid but not flashy accordionist, he was recruited by drummer and singer Leo Thomas to play with his group. Prudhomme's apprenticeship with Thomas lasted 10 years before he was ready to strike out on his own. His band, Zydeco Express, is a lot like its leader: unassuming, but steady. They play an honest rural zydeco sound, nothing fancy and no frills. That means there is a bounce in the beat that distinguishes it from the crunch of the doubling, clutching sound popularized by Beau Jocque. Dancers always know that they will get their money's worth when Prudhomme is on the marquee.

what to buy: Prudhomme & Zydeco Express share Zydeco Live! Volume II ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989, prod. Scott Billington) with John Delafose & the Eunice Playboys. Prudhomme works exclusively on the one-row button accordion with an internal pickup, which produces a gritty sound similar to that of a good Chicago blues harpist. The band shines on the waltzes in particular, something of a dying art among zydeco groups.

what to avoid: Live, with a dance floor, these guys pack a lot of excitement. Their style of zydeco is about playing evenly, not about the kind of climaxes that are such a part of rock music. As exhibited on Willis Prudhomme & Zydeco Express ♪♪♪½ (Maison De Soul, 1990, prod. Floyd Soileau), this doesn't translate well into the studio, where the band fails to catch fire or a great groove without an audience. Prudhomme is an average singer, so you're not able to get much from focusing in on his voice.

influences:
◀◀ John Delafose, Roy Carrier ▶▶ Geno Delafose, Keith Frank, Chubby Carrier

see also: John Delafose & the Eunice Playboys

Jared Snyder

Tito Puente

Latin jazz

Born Ernest Anthony Puente Jr., April 20, 1923, in New York, NY, USA. Based in USA.

When the rock group Santana covered "Oye Como Va," a classic Latin hit that Tito Puente had written and recorded, the composer was slightly outraged that such a band would dare sully his music. As soon as the royalty check came (based on massive sales of Santana's first album), Puente discovered the upside of having other people perform his songs. He has prefaced the playing of "Oye Como Va" with that little story many times since then, and come to realize that his music has done as much to promote Latin jazz for current audiences as Machito's did for an earlier generation. Puente's musical career began with Latin groups such as the Cuarteto Caney and, after World War II, Xavier Cugat's band.

In the mid-1940s, after serving in the United States Navy during World War II, Puente came back to New York, where Noro Morales and Machito gave the budding percussionist work.

620 tito puente

By the early 1950s he had formed his own ensemble, the Piccadilly Boys, and played the Palladium, New York's cultural mecca for Latin bands. His outfit mutated into the Tito Puente Orchestra and, with lead vocalist Vincentico Valdes, proceeded to change the face of Latin music. Puente took the Cuban charanga form and arranged its flutes and violins in more of a big-band jazz context, punching up the brass and reeds for a more powerful sound. He also started using a lot of non-Latin jazz artists, like Doc Severinsen, in his bands, and playing arrangements of jazz standards with a Latin beat. During the 1960s and 1970s Puente recorded albums for GNP, Tico, and Fania with large and small groups, continuing the heavy schedule of touring he had developed in the 1950s. By the 1980s Puente's popularity was even stronger than it had been in the early '50s due to a base of fans that included not only the hard-core Latin music lovers, but a fair number of jazz musicians and enthusiasts as well. It was in 1983 that the multi-talented Puente (timbales, drums, marimba, vibraphone, percussion, vocals, arranging) won the first of his many Grammy Awards, for the album Tito Puente and His Latin Ensemble on Broadway. With over 100 releases to his credit, Puente has recorded with most of the major names in Latin music, and has been a leading force in the Latinization of jazz during the last half of the 20th century.

what to buy: The three-CD compilation set 50 Years of Swing ♪♪♪♪♪ (RMM, 1997, prod. various) is a perfect starting place for anyone wanting a well-conceived, albeit abridged, introduction to Tito Puente's music. The 50 songs cover his stints with the major pop labels like MCA and RCA, in addition to sampling material from Latin specialty companies like Tico and Westside Latino. His big hits "Para Los Rumberos" and "Oye Como Va" are included, along with distinguished covers of tunes made famous by Machito ("Tanga" and "Babarabatiri"), renditions of jazz classics like "Lullaby of Broadway" and "Moody's Mood for Love," and distinctly cheesy remakes of pop favorites ("Crystal Blue Persuasion"). The two previously unreleased songs—"Llegue" and "I'm Going to Go Fishing"—are adequate performances at best, adding little of real value for non-completists. From the mid-1950s through the early 1960s Puente had one of the hottest bands around, jazz or Latin. The lineup on The Best of Dance Mania ♪♪♪♪♪ (BMG/International, 1957–60/1994, prod. Fred Reynolds, Marty Gold) features his second great vocalist (after Vincentico Valdes), Santitos Colon; the remarkable bassist Bobby Rodriguez; and a host of stellar percussionists, including Ray Barretto and Jose Mangual. This CD has 23 cuts, including some previously unreleased outtakes that showcase the care Puente took to craft the perfect performance of a song. His unwillingness to make changes in an arrangement once he had things in place can be heard prior to take number six of "Estoy Siempre Junto a Ti," when he chides a sideman for wasting time "while the light is on" (signifying that the tape was rolling). Mambo Beat, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪♪ (BMG/International, 1956–57/1994, prod. various) is a well-chosen collection (compiled by Domingo Echevarria) featuring performances of jazz material—with a Latin kick—by Puente and his Afro-Cuban Jazz All-Star Orchestras. The arrangers include Puente, Marty Holmes, and one of Machito's ace writers, A.K. Salim. The personnel includes jazz musicians Doc Severinsen, Eddie Bert, Gene Quill, and Jimmy Cobb, plus a bevy of Latin percussion kings like Puente (on timbales and vibes), Mongo Santamaria, Willie Bobo, Candido, and Patato Valdes. Standards like "Yesterdays" by Jerome Kern and Oscar Pettiford's "Bohemia after Dark" (renamed "Birdland after Dark") share space with Puente's own wonderful "Night Ritual" and the percussion-fest "Ti Mon Bo." On Live at the Village Gate ♪♪♪♪½ (RMM, 1992, prod. Alfredo Cruz), Puente leads an all-star group, including Mongo Santamaria, Giovanni Hidalgo, Paquito D'Rivera, and Hilton Ruiz, through a well-selected program of jazz favorites and another hip arrangement of his "Oye Como Va." Especially noteworthy are Miles Davis's "Milestones" and Santamaria's "Afro Blue."

what to buy next: With the exception of the big-band mini-suite "Night Ritual," Top Percussion ♪♪♪♪½ (BMG/International, 1957/1992) is one of the most subversive Latin albums—given the time it first appeared—ever released. Santería (controversial Afro-Cuban religion) practitioner Puente released this album of polyrhythmic percussion honoring the orishas (deities) decades before Milton Cardona's classic Bembe. Alongside Mongo Santamaria, Willie Bobo, and a quartet of Cuban vocalists (including the great Mercedita), Puente went for percussion heaven, conducting a textbook example of how exciting and challenging his music can be. Constructed mainly for people with a minimal budget who want to start exploring Puente's voluminous catalog, El Rey Del Timbal! The Best of Tito Puente & His Orchestra ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1997, prod. various) is a good single-disc sampler of Puente's material, covering the period from 1949 to 1987. Production is very good but this compilation still does not replace 50 Years of Swing. Special Delivery ♪♪♪♪ (Concord Picante, 1996, prod. John Burk, Tito Puente) is a big-band jazz album surveying the bebop and post-bop composers whom Puente is most comfortable with—Dizzy Gillespie, Thelonious Monk, and Horace Silver. Puente features trumpeter Maynard Ferguson on Gillespie's "Be-Bop" and on the classic tune "On Green Dolphin Street," but his normal complement of players, like trumpeters Michael Philip Mossman, Bobby Shew, and Ray Vega, are just about as good. Solid playing throughout makes this a satisfying choice for those who want Puente in a "pure" jazz setting. In addition to his talents on timbales and other assorted percussion instruments, Puente is a gifted vibes player, and Mambo of the Times ♪♪♪♪

Tito Puente

(Concord Picante, 1992, prod. John Burk, Allen Farnham, Tito Puente) displays some of his best work in that regard. His playing on Fats Waller's "Jitterbug Waltz" is firmly within the jazz camp even as his supporting cast flits about his melodic statement like Latin fireflies. Puente's vibes on Billy Strayhorn's beautiful ballad "Passion Flower" cut another gem. The Mambo King ♪♪♪♪ (RMM, 1991, prod. Sergio George) is Puente's 100th album, marking a significant milestone in his career. More of a Latin recording than a straight jazz session, the album features Puente joined by major Latin vocal stars like Oscar D'Leon, Celia Cruz, Ismael Miranda, and Tito Nieves. The performance standard is suitably high and the playing is professional yet relaxed. The discography included in the negligible liner notes leads the reader through the honor roll of Puente's albums prior to this one. And then there is Live at Birdland: Dancemania '99 ♪♪♪♪ (RMM, 1998, prod. Tito Puente), an attempt to capture the magic of a night at the Palladium, New York City's Latin music headquarters during the 1950s. Sonny Bravo, Puente's longtime pianist, leads an amazing band of players, including saxophonists Mario Rivera and Bobby Porcelli, trombonist J.P. Torres, and special guest flautist Dave Valentin. The performances are exciting, with remakes of "Babarabatiri" and "Complicación" leading the pack.

best of the rest:
Goza Mi Timbal ♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1990)
Out of This World ♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1991)
In Session ♪♪♪♪ (RMM, 1994)
Tito's Idea ♪♪♪½ (RMM, 1996)
Concord Jazz Heritage Series ♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1998) Oye Como Va: The Dance Collection ♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1998)

influences:
◀◀ Machito, Mario Bauzá, Dizzy Gillespie, Gene Krupa ▶▶ Guilherme Franco, Cal Tjader, Carlos Santana

see also: Ray Barretto, Milton Cardona, Celia Cruz, Xavier Cugat, Paquito D'Rivera, Oscar D'Leon, Machito, Charlie Palmieri, Patato, Poncho Sanchez, Arturo Sandoval, Mongo Santamaria

Garaud MacTaggart

Roberto Pulido

Tejano

Born 1940s, in Edinburg, TX, USA. Based in Edinburg, TX, USA.

Roberto Pulido lost some of his hearing in a truck accident when he was two years old. Like many in his family he also grew up working in the fields, picking produce in California during harvest season. Pulido managed to graduate from Edinburg High School, cop a music scholarship at Pan American University, and get a degree that would let him earn a living teaching music in high schools. While his day job brought in some cash, Pulido still wanted to perform, and he played gigs in area clubs to that end. In the early 1970s he took a big step towards Tex-Mex stardom when he finally opted to concentrate on his music-making. He started putting together the band Los Clásicos in 1973 as a deliberate blend of the conjunto style popularized by accordionist Narciso Martinez and the orquesta tejana style typified by Beto Villa's saxophone-laden lineup. Pulido's first recordings were with the San Antonio–based company GCP, but he found more success in 1976 with Falcón, a label that developed Pulido and Los Clásicos into one of the top acts on the Tejano (contemporary Tex-Mex) circuit. His more recent albums have started blending synthesizers into the arrangements, thus keeping up with trends and maintaining his position in the marketplace. Pulido and his band have also turned into cultural icons, routinely honored at the Tejano Music Awards and constantly working to broaden their fan base. Pulido's sons and daughters have proven to be talented musicians as well—Bobby is a budding Tejano star, Alma is often Roberto's duet partner, Roel and Joel once anchored the saxophone section, and Leonel is quite a classy accordionist in his own right—adding yet another dimension to the influence their dad has had on the genre.

what to buy: Some of Pulido's Falcón hits show up on Roberto Pulido Y Los Clásicos ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder/Easydisc, 1997, compilation prod. Louisa Hufstader). Most of the album features rancheras (sentimental songs) and cumbias (dance numbers), with the accordion weaving through saxophone lines while Pulido's vocals soar over the mix. The "Schottische"—both the name of a track here and of a style passed on to Tex-Mex culture, much the same as polkas and waltzes were—is an interesting legacy of the time when Texas's German and Czech settlers hired Tejano musicians for their social functions. Através de los Año ♪♪♪♪½ (EMI Latin, 1996, prod. Roberto Pulido) is one of the most interesting things the artist has done in years—perhaps in spite of itself. Pulido isn't really working the "authenticity" angle as defined by Santiago Jimenez Jr., and while the stylistic innovations that Pulido helped pioneer are all here, the arrangements almost make this a pop album. It's almost too slick; a kind of Tejano Abba. But the melodies and the danceable pulse are very seductive.

what to buy next: A very good budget collection of Pulido's early 1990s work for EMI Latin, 12 Super Exitos ♪♪♪♪ (EMI Latin, 1994, prod. Roberto Pulido) has some fine performances, but also includes a move towards the Anglo market with a conjunto version of Hank Williams's "Jambolaya" (sic). Toro Prieto ♪♪♪♪ (EMI Latin, 1995, prod. Roberto Pulido, Hugo Rodriguez, Brando Mireles) was a big hit with fans. During the 16th Annual Tejano Music Awards it secured nominations for Vocal Duo of the Year (for "Me Desperto La Realidad" with his daughter Alma), Male Entertainer of the Year, Tejano Video of the Year (for the title song), and Album of the Year/Conjunto Progressive. Synthesizers, harps, and nylon-string guitars blend in with the accordion/sax sound Pulido helped pioneer, but they almost gild the lily. Luckily the vocals are wonderful.

best of the rest:
Roberto Pulido y Los Clásicos Live ♪♪♪½ (EMI Latin, 1993)
Te Vi Partir ♪♪♪½ (EMI Latin, 1994)

worth searching for: An admirable, wide-ranging introduction to Tejano music can be found in ¡Conjunto! Texas-Mexican Border Music, Volume 3 ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1990, compilation prod. Carl Finch). Pulido's "Accordeones alegres de Irineo Torres" (an atypical hit of his for the Freddie label) is his sole contribution here, but it provides a taste of how good the early stuff from his band was when it hugged the tradition instead of tinkering with it. Other legendary performers included on this set are Valeria Longoria, Tony de la Rosa, and Steve Jordan. Even though it's now out of print, Si Te Decides ♪♪♪♪½ (EMI Latin, 1992, prod. Roberto Pulido) contains some wonderful material that makes hunting it up worthwhile. Included are an updated version of Salome Gutierrez's classic "Vagar Sin Esperanza," and Leonel Pulido's swinging accordion showpiece "Griselda."

influences:
- Beto Villa, Narciso Martinez, Valeria Longoria, Conjunto Bernal
- Bobby Pulido, Alma Pulido, La Tropa F

Garaud MacTaggart

Flora Purim

Brazilian jazz, jazz fusion

Born 1942, in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. Based in USA.

With a soulful, six-and-a-half-octave range, Flora Purim is one of contemporary jazz and world music's most distinctive vocalists. Her collaborations with Chick Corea in the early 1970s were influential on the early development of jazz fusion, and her solo albums and recordings with her husband, percussionist Airto Moreira, have spotlighted her unique instrument-like approach to vocalizing.

The daughter of amateur classical musicians, Purim was exposed to the jazz recordings of pianist Erroll Garner and vocalists Billie Holiday and Ella Fitzgerald as a youngster. Studying guitar at the age of 14, Purim made her professional debut six years later, singing a mixture of jazz standards and songs by leading Brazilian composers like Antonio Carlos Jobim and Egberto Gismonti. After meeting and falling in love with Moreira, Purim was introduced to the African-influenced music of Brazil's Bahia region.

Moving with Moreira to New York in 1968, Purim became a frequent singer at late-night jam sessions at bassist Walter Booker's home, where she and Moreira temporarily resided. During one session, she sang with saxophonist Stan Getz and pianist Chick Corea; Getz subsequently hired her to tour with his band. Purim later recorded with pianist Duke Pearson and performed with pianist-composer Gil Evans, in whose band she met tenor saxophonist Joe Henderson and bassist Stanley Clarke. Purim's biggest break to this point came when she joined a band that Corea was forming with Clarke, flute player Joe Farrell, and her husband. The band recorded two seminal albums in this configuration: the eponymous Return to Forever in 1972 and Light As a Feather in 1973. Purim continued to evolve after studying the Stanislavsky method, which helped her to expand her vocal range even further, and working with voice coach and mentor Hermeto Pascoal.

Purim's first American solo album, Butterfly Dreams, was released in 1973, and it included her rendition of Corea's tune "Light As a Feather." Together with Moreira, Purim turned out a number of memorable albums on the Milestone label in the mid-1970s. In 1974, she received prestigious recognition from Down Beat magazine as Best Female Vocalist. The same year, however, she was arrested for possession of cocaine and placed in a California prison for 18 months. Following her release, Purim resumed her solo career. Signing with Warner Bros. in 1977, Purim and Moreira took a more commercial approach to their music. The pair have also had a long association with Grateful Dead percussionist and world-music impresario Mickey Hart. In addition to collaborating with him on the atmospheric cross-cultural album Däfos, released in 1985, they have more recently recorded and toured with Hart's percussionist supergroup, Planet Drum.

what to buy: Purim and Moreira reached their peak with 500 Miles ♪♪♪♪½ (Milestone, 1976, prod. Orrin Keepnews). Recorded during their performance at the Montreux Jazz Festival on June 6, 1974, the album is a memorable fusion of Brazilian and jazz influences. Its high point comes during "Cravo e Canela," featuring the song's composer, Milton Nascimento, on guitar and vocal harmonies.

what to buy next: Recorded in the studio a month after their Montreux performance, Stories to Tell ♪♪♪♪ (Milestone, 1974/Fantasy, 1988, prod. Orrin Keepnews) was one of Purim's last true jazz masterpieces. In addition to her husband's expressive percussion playing, Purim's vocals are ably backed by such stellar jazz musicians as pianists McCoy Tyner, Hemeto Pascoal, and George Duke, and tenor saxophonist Joe Henderson.

queen ida

best of the rest:
Flora E M.P.M. ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1964)
Butterfly Dreams ♪♪♪½ (Milestone, 1974/Fantasy, 1988)
Open Your Eyes, You Can Fly ♪♪♪ (Milestone, 1976)
Encounter ♪♪♪ (Milestone, 1977/Fantasy, 1994)
That's What She Said ♪♪♪ (Milestone, 1978)
Love Reborn ♪♪♪ (Milestone, 1980)
Brazilian Heatwave ♪♪♪ (Accord, 1982)
(With Mickey Hart and Airto Moreira) Däfos ♪♪♪½ (Reference, 1985/Rykodisc, 1988)
(With Airto Moreira) Humble People ♪♪♪ (George Wein Collection/Concord, 1985)
(With Airto Moreira) The Magicians ♪♪♪ (Crossover/Concord, 1986)
(With Airto Moreira and Joe Farrell) Three Way Mirror ♪♪♪½ (Reference, 1987)
Milestone Memories ♪♪♪ (BGP, 1988)
(With Airto Moreira) The Colours of Life ♪♪♪ (In + Out, 1988)
Midnight Sun ♪♪♪ (Venture/Virgin Records, 1988)
(With Airto Moreira) The Sun Is Out ♪♪♪ (Crossover/Concord, 1989)
Queen of the Night ♪♪♪ (Sound Wave, 1992)
Now Go Ahead and Open Your Eyes ♪♪♪ (B&W, 1994) Speed of Light ♪♪♪ (B&W, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ Billie Holiday, Ella Fitzgerald, Erroll Garner, Antonio Carlos Jobim, Milton Nascimento, Egberto Gismonti

▶▶ Rachelle Ferrell, Carla Bley

see also: Mickey Hart, Airto Moreira, Milton Nascimento, Badal Roy

Craig Harris

Q

Queen Ida /Ida Guillory

Zydeco

Born January 15, 1929, in Lake Charles, LA, USA. Based in CA, USA.

Born in Lake Charles, Louisiana, Ida Guillory's family followed the exodus of many Creole families to the San Francisco Bay region. She brought the music of her childhood with her to the West Coast but performed exclusively at social functions. While raising her children and driving a bus part-time, she borrowed brother Al Rapone's accordion and started practicing. With the encouragement of brothers Al and Wilbert Lewis, Ida began to perform in the Bay Area. The rarity of her stature as a female accordion player has overshadowed her talent on the three-row accordion, but increased the demand for her. Ida's music has a less intense beat than the music of bands working southwest Louisiana, and the English lyrics are easier to make out than those of most zydeco bands, but when the band breaks down to the drums, frattoir (washboard), and Ida's accordion, there is no denying the roots of her music. Ida, who is known to fans as "Queen," should be proud of the number of female zydeco performers following in her footsteps, including Rosie Ledet and Anne Goodley.

what to buy: Cookin' with Queen Ida ♪♪♪♪ (GNP, 1989, prod. Neil Norman) demonstrates the Queen Ida sound: zydeco mixed with rock and blues, with a lot more backing and harmony vocals than you'll probably ever hear from a Louisiana zydeco band (except maybe Double Clutchin'). Her son, Myrick "Freeze" Guillory, contributes accordion, frattoir, and vocals.

what to buy next: Band on Tour ♪♪♪½ (GNP, 1982, prod. Neil Norman), winner of the 1982 Grammy Award for Best Ethnic/Traditional Folk Album, finds Ida's sound geared toward an audience that is mostly English-speaking and from the lands outside of southwest Louisiana. The mix is lighter and more rock-oriented.

best of the rest:
Zydeco ♪♪ (GNP, 1976)
In New Orleans ♪♪♪½ (GNP, 1980)
Caught in the Act ♪♪♪½ (GNP, 1985)
Zydeco a la Mode (GNP, 1987)
Play the Zydeco (GNP, 1987)
On a Saturday Night ♪♪♪ (GNP, 1987)
In San Francisco ♪♪♪ (GNP, 1988)
Mardi Gras ♪♪♪♪½ (GNP, 1994)

worth searching for: The cookbook Cookin' with Queen Ida: "Bon Temps" Creole Recipes (and Stories) from the Queen of Zydeco Music (Prima Publishing, 1990), by Queen Ida Guillory and Naomi Wise, is full of stories about Queen Ida and Creole music. The food is great, as are the stories.

influences:
◀◀ Amédée Ardoin, Boozoo Chavis, Canray Fontenot, Clifton Chenier

▶▶ Beau Jocque, Zachary Richard

Jared Snyder

R

Radio Tarifa

Pan-Mediterranean/International

Formed 1993, in Madrid, Spain. Based in Madrid, Spain.

Rotating lineup; core members include: Faín Sanchez Dueñas (Spain), guitar, percussion, bass, keyboards, vocals, banjo, bouzouki, arrangements, musical director; Vincent Molino (France), crumhorn, ney, Poitou oboe, flute; Benjamin Escoriza (Spain), vocals, jaleos.

Queen Ida

Radio Tarifa exemplifies what "world" music is all about. The group's name comes from Tarifa, a port on the strait of Gibraltar in southern Spain, from which you can actually see Africa. And the music Radio Tarifa produces—a blend of flamenco, Middle Eastern, North African, and medieval European styles with a solidly contemporary feel; just check out the funk bass on several tracks of their second CD, Temporal —is exactly what you might hear on a radio station based in Tarifa. The band evolved from musical activities group-leader Faín Sanchez Dueñas was involved with in the 1980s. He and Vincent Molino played in Ars Antiqua Musicalis, an outfit that specialized in music from 12th-century France, Italy, and Spain. Dueñas also played in flamenco groups and had a trio playing rumbas in Madrid bars. Dueñas, Molino, and Benjamin Escoriza came together as the core of Radio Tarifa in 1993. They're augmented by other musicians for recording and live dates, but Dueñas is definitely the boss. As he explained to journalist Lois Darlington in an article for the English magazine Folk Roots: "I plan everything. First I choose the songs. Then I ask my colleague if he likes it or wants to sing it—he says 'yes' or 'no' and so on until I choose the right song for him. Then I work out all the instruments and who is going to play them. Normally on the record I play nearly everything—strings, bass, percussion, and keyboards. When we record, it is usually me and the individual musicians—never the whole group. Most of the songs are for Benjamin but I also choose other songs for other singers"; some of those others can be heard in concert. As Dueñas pointed out to Patricia Garcia-Rios of the U.S. folk publication Dirty Linen, "Our live lineup doesn't necessarily match the one we use when we record. Radio Tarifa live is very different; more imperfect, but also more alive." To date Radio Tarifa has released only two full-length recordings, Rumba Argelina and Temporal, but work on a third has begun.

what's available: Rumba Argelina ♪♪♪♪½ (World Circuit/Nonesuch, 1995, prod. Juan A. Arteche) consists of traditional lyrics set to new music, traditional music with new lyrics, or completely original (though tradition-based) compositions. Many people will think "Middle East," but that's just one flavor in Radio Tarifa's musical smorgasbord. For instance, "Soledad," an original Dueñas composition, is very trance-like but also uses flamenco-ish runs and snatches of loud electric guitar. "La Canal," with music by Dueñas and lyrics from Escoriza, sounds like a fusion of belly-dancing and medieval music. There are elegant choral vocals (reminiscent of Steeleye Span's interpretation of "Gaudete"), and the crumhorn gives the arrangement its distinctive medieval flavor. On Temporal ♪♪♪♪½ (World Circuit/Nonesuch, 1997, prod. Faín S. Dueñas, Vincent Molino), Radio Tarifa delves more into flamenco, but there are still lots of other soundscapes to explore. Particularly satisfying is their arrangement of "El Mandil de Carolina," a traditional Castilian and Galician (Spanish Celtic) piece. This number rocks, with fast rhythms and a wild melody line played on Poitou oboe. There's also a stately 12th-century "processional" from France played on the definitely different array of Poitou oboe, ney (Turkish reed flute), tenor saxophone, oud (Arabic lute), electric bass, and percussion.

influences:

◀◀ Blowzabella, 3 Mustaphas 3, Gryphon, Malicorne, flamenco, Ofra Haza

▶▶ Tayfa, Yosefa, Adaro

Ken Roseman

Rail Band /Super Rail Band of Bamako

Big-band Malian dance music, pop arrangements of Manding classics

Formed 1970, in Bamako, Mali. Based in Bamako, Mali.

Large, evolving membership over the years. In the early '70s, star members included: Salif Keita, lead vocals; Mory Kanté, lead vocals; Djelimady Tounkara (still current), lead guitarist. Most recent recorded lineup also includes: Kabiné Keita, saxophones; Mamadou Ouedraogo, saxophones; Fotigui Keita, bass; Ali Dembelé, rhythm guitar; Maguette Diop, drums; Lassana Bagayogo, percussion; Bamba Dembelé, percussion; Damory Kouyaté, lead vocals; Samba Sissoko, vocals; Adama Fomba, vocals.

In 1970, Mali's Ministry of Information decided to sponsor a cultural big band to operate in the capital of Bamako at the train-station hotel, the Buffet Hôtel de la Gare. It was a time when the government was cutting back on more ambitious means of promoting Malian musical culture. The great national ensembles launched by Mali's first president, Modibo Keita, were on the way out. From the start, the Rail Band preserved the best of the old vision: to take Mali's proud traditions and make them relevant as modern pop music. The band also did something that would have been hard to envision—they became a commercial success.

That was largely due to the sensational musicians involved. To name only the most significant ones, singers Salif Keita and Mory Kanté (of neighboring Guinea) were both destined to become international superstars in the era of Afropop a decade or more later; each got his start in the Rail Band. And Djelimady Tounkara, arguably the greatest living guitarist in Africa, remains the solid center of the modern Rail Band to this day. In every era, though, the lineup has had a genius for taking classics from the repertoire of the Manding griots (oral historians) and arranging them for present-day electric guitars, horns, bass, drums, percussion, and vocals. In the Rail Band's hands, the epic of the 13th-century Manding king Soundiata became a half-hour dancefloor extravaganza.

Over the years, the outfit has undergone many changes. When Salif Keita left in 1972 to create Les Ambassadeurs, Mory Kanté stepped in to sing lead for the Rail Band, and the two ensembles riveted West Africa with their spirited competition. After both singers had moved on, the Rail Band came to rely more on its instrumental prowess and band chemistry than on star vocalists. Reggae, funk, jazz, and rumba entered the mix. But Manding music has always been the band's mainstay. Tounkara's ability to harness the fleet delicacy of griot music as roaring electric-guitar bravado remains one of the wonders of modern African music.

what to buy: Mali Stars, Vol. 1: Salif Keita & Mory Kanté ♪♪♪♪ (Melodie) is the only recording you're likely to find of the original Rail Band. Though not exactly hi-fidelity, this is a classic, especially for its back-to-back presentations of Keita's and Kanté's versions of the Malian epic "Soundiata." Mansa ♪♪♪♪½ (Indigo, 1995) shows the band in its modern glory.

the rest:

New Dimensions in Rail Culture ♪♪♪♪ (GlobeStyle, 1985)

influences:

◀◀ Orchestre Nationale du Mali

▶▶ Les Ambassadeurs du Motel, virtually all Malian bands formed since 1975

see also: Mory Kanté, Salif Keita, Talking Heads

Banning Eyre

RAM

Vodou rock

Formed 1990, in Port-au-Prince, Haiti. Based in Port-au-Prince, Haiti.

Richard Morse (USA), leader, lead vocals; Lunise Morse, lead vocals; Wilson Theluce, drums; Jean Mary Brignol, drums; Robert Wood Romain, drums; Jose Modelus, bass; Onito Parfait, guitar; Emmanuel Marcelin, keyboards; Yonel Justin, Roland Octapad; Sylvain Jean, backing vocals; Patau Lindor, backing vocals; Jonas Jean, horns; Pierre Jules, horns. (All members are from Haiti except where noted otherwise.)

Richard Morse grew up in New Haven, Connecticut, where his father was a retired professor of Latin American studies. His mother was born in Haiti, and his maternal grandfather, Candido, wrote "Yellow Bird" for Harry Belafonte. After graduating from Princeton, Morse played in a series of punk bands but at the same time was becoming curious about his Haitian heritage. In 1985 he moved to Haiti and became manager of the Oloffoson Hotel. One of his duties was booking bands to perform there, and he began getting acquainted with the local musicians, including a singer named Lunise who eventually became his wife. Morse investigated Vodou and after a time was welcomed into the religion. In 1990 he decided to combine the Afro-Haitian music he was learning with the rock 'n' roll of his youth and formed RAM. Having the hotel as a springboard helped the new band achieve instant credibility. Their first album, Aïbobo, was a hit, with the single "Labonit (Banging Drums)" hitting #1 on Haitian radio. The band was included on the soundtrack of Philadelphia thanks to director Jonathan Demme's love of Haitian culture. Jimmy Buffett saw them perform at the New Orleans Heritage and Jazz Festival in 1996 and signed them to his Margaritaville label.

what's available: Singing in English may give Morse and company a slight edge in cracking a large world-music market share, but it's doubtful that Boukman Eksperyans are staying up late worrying about the competition. RAM may be a kickin' live band, but on Puritan Vodou ♪♪♪ (Margaritaville, 1998, prod. Richard Morse) only the extended cut "Zanj" builds up any steam; most of this sounds like worldbeat custom-made for AOR programmers.

influences:

⏮ Boukan Ginen, Boukman Eksperyans, Manno Charlemagne

⏭ Tropicana, Foula

j. poet

Hossam Ramzy

Egyptian folk music, Arabic jazz, worldbeat

Born 1954, in Cairo, Egypt. Based in London, England.

Ramzy is acknowledged as a master percussionist throughout the Arabic and world-music communities. He has played sessions with a wide cross-section of international musicians including Peter Gabriel, Rachid Taha, Maryam Mursal, Loreena McKennitt, Boy George, E.L.O., and the Rolling Stones. Ramzy's highest-profile rock gig (so far) came when Jimmy Page and Robert Plant asked him to put together and lead a band for their historic "No Quarter" reunion tour of 1995.

Ramzy began playing the Egyptian tabla—not to be confused with the Indian drum of the same name, and known in the jamaican music 3: mento

From the 1930s to the early '50s, mento was Jamaica's primary pop-cultural music. Like its forebear calypso and its progeny reggae, mento is a rhythm-propelled sound that incorporates the passions, concerns, and speech patterns of an African-descended people into a distinctive and rich indigenous culture. In mento, antiphonal call-and-response vocals are accompanied by instruments including the bamboo fife (popularized by perhaps the greatest mento artist, Sugar Belly Walker), banjo, bass drum, fiddle, rumba box (a large thumb piano), guitar, piccolo, and occasionally saxophone, along with a panoply of hand-made percussion instruments—such as shakers and scrapers built from bamboo, calabash, various organic seeds, metal graters, and sardine cans.

Mento used humor more prominently than previous Jamaican genres, and its lyrics were often unabashedly loaded with double-entendre. The first commercially recorded song in Jamaica's history was Lord Fly's "Whai! Ay!," a mento tune he wrote after experiencing a series of flat tires in the desolate Jamaican countryside, and a quintessential example of this easygoing form's framework for being able to laugh at yourself and your sorry plight. Other important mento artists included Lord Lebby, Count Lasher, Baba Motta, Lord Power, and Harold Richardson & the Ticklers.

Sadly, as with the Delta blues in America, the vibrancy and relevance of the music faded when severe economic hardship spurred country dwellers to migrate en masse to the urban centers. Though the style persists primarily as a cultural artifact, later musics' roots in it run deep to this day—to name but one vital vein, the rhythm for the mento song "Dog War a Matches Lane" was later used by the Maytals on their ska classic "Dog War," and now finds valuable currency in the digital "riddims" of ragga. There are also still a few mento artists devoted to reviving the form, including the Blue Glades, the Lititz Mento Band, and the peerless Jolly Boys, who have been happily performing the music for nearly 50 years.

see also: The Jolly Boys

Todd Shanker

West as a dumbek—at the age of three. He came from an artistic family, and they recognized his talents and arranged for him to study with Cairo's leading percussionists. As a young man he traveled throughout Saudi Arabia, where he learned traditional Bedouin drumming and singing. In the mid-1970s, Ramzy moved to England to begin a professional career as a jazz drummer, but he soon returned to the traditional music of his youth. He put together a band, and his first album, Introduction to Egyptian Dance Rhythms, became an instant classic, with both Arabic and European fans praising the music for its melodic and rhythmic innovations. In 1987 Peter Gabriel asked Ramzy to help with the soundtrack to Martin Scorsese's The Last Temptation of Christ. This led to work on Gabriel's Us as well as gigs and recording dates with Joan Armatrading, Ann Dudley, Big Country, Marc Almond, and others. Between pop sessions, Ramzy leads his own band, Hossam Ramzy & His Egyptian Ensemble, a group that plays slick arrangements of traditional Arabic music aimed at dancers.

what to buy: Egyptian Rai ♪♪♪♪♪ (ARC U.K., 1994, prod. Hossam Ramzy) is one of Ramzy's hottest albums, a set of "Arabic fusion" in which he weaves together elements of music from Algeria, Morocco, Egypt, Lebanon, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, and more, to give listeners what he calls "an eagle's eye view of the Arabic world." The music is full of hard-driving rhythms and stunning musicianship, including the Pan-Arabic hit "Wah Wah."

what to buy next: Ahlamy ♪♪♪♪♪ (ARC U.K., 1996, prod. Hossam Ramzy) is a collaboration with Rafat Misso, a virtuoso on the quarter tone saxophone, an instrument not widely used in Arabic music. Misso is the most in-demand sax player in Egypt, and he jumped at a chance to collaborate with Ramzy. The set includes several baladi (a type of urbanized folk dance) composed by Misso, some favorite Egyptian pop tunes, and folk songs. The tempos are slower than on Egyptian Rai, to highlight Misso's inspired improvisations.

best of the rest:
Best of Umm Kulthum ♪♪♪♪ (ARC U.K., 1994)
Source of Fire ♪♪♪♪½ (ARC U.K., 1995)
Gamaal Rawhany—Soulful Beauty ♪♪♪♪½ (ARC U.K., 1996)
Best of Baladi & Saaidi ♪♪♪♪♪ (ARC U.K., 1997)
(With Phil Thornton) Immortal Egypt ♪♪♪♪ (New World Music, 1998)

influences:
◀◀ Umm Kulthum, Sheikh Sayed Darweesh, Abd el-Halim Hafez, Mohamed Abdel Wahab

see also: Farid al-Atrash, Page & Plant, Rachid Taha

j. poet

Ernest Ranglin

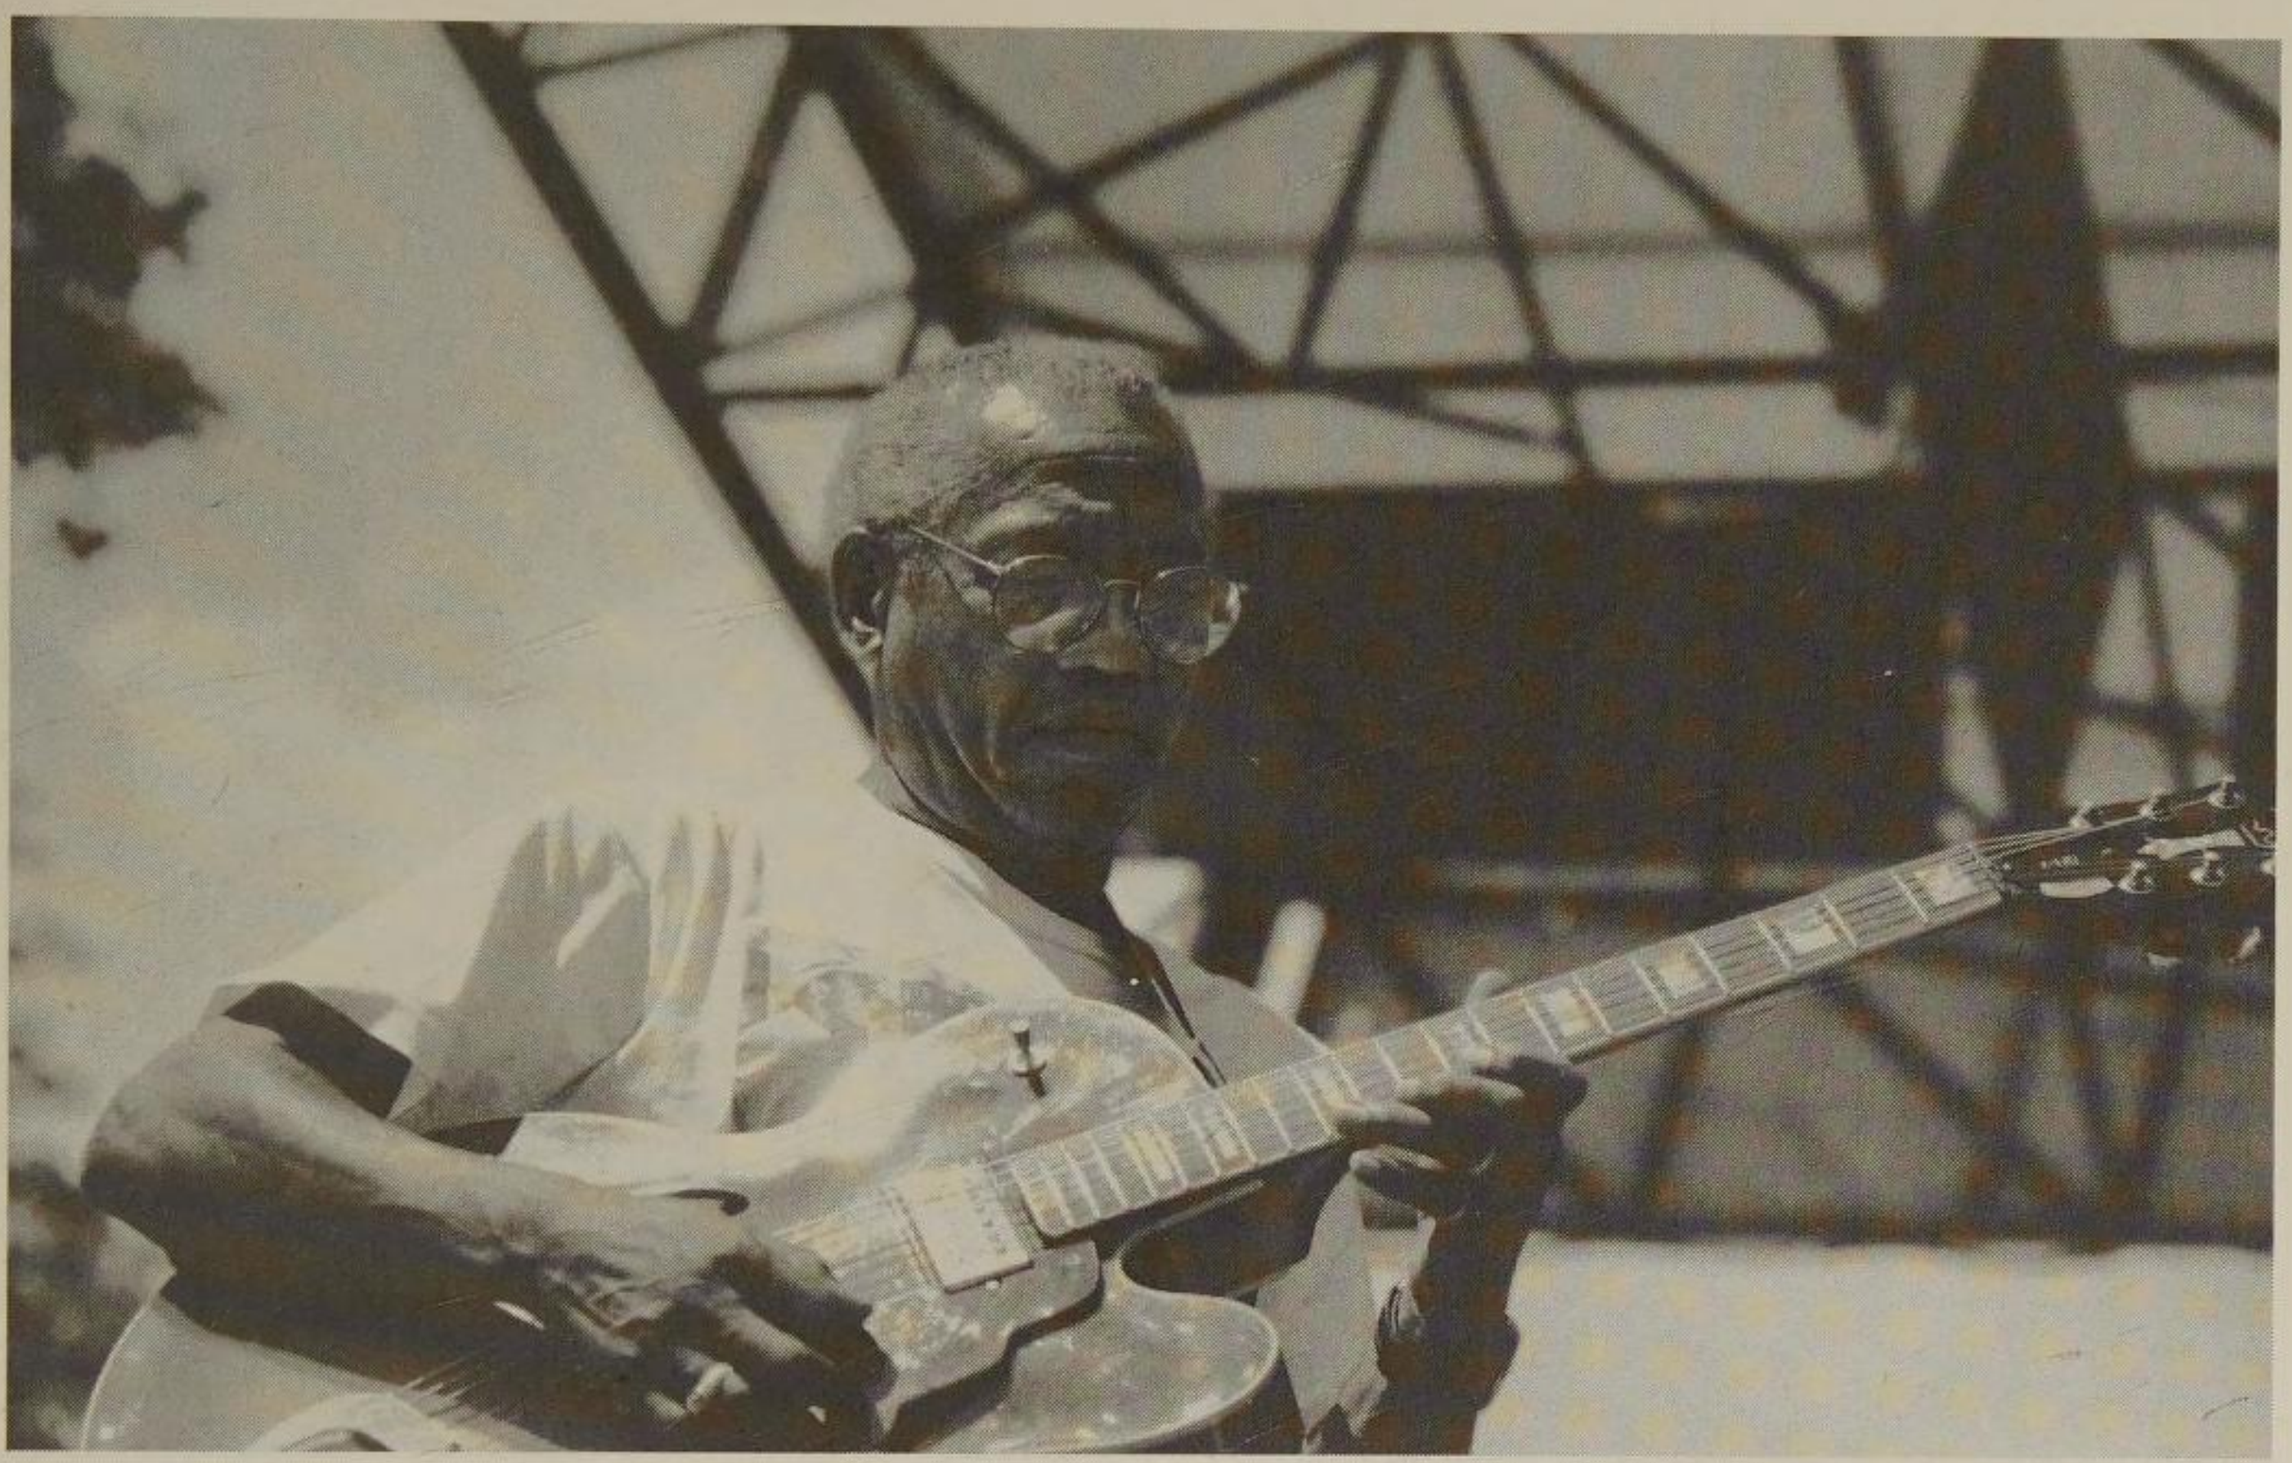
Reggae, jazz

Born June 19, 1932, in Robin's Hall, Jamaica. Based in Kingston, Jamaica.

Ernest Ranglin has an international reputation as a jazz guitarist and arranger, but it's his work in the field of popular music that will probably secure his place in history. In 1959 Ranglin cut an instrumental called "Shuffling Bug" for Clement "Coxsone" Dodd's Federal Records. It was an attempt to cash in on the New Orleans shuffle rhythm then so popular with Jamaican dancers, but when Ranglin and his fellow band members tried to "imitate" American black music, the rhythms came out "wrong." Jamaican folk and roots music share a strong 4/4 foundation with their American counterparts, but the emphasis is on the second and fourth beats, not the first and fourth as it is up north. When Ranglin played the shuffle, the result was ska, a loping riddim that laid the foundation for rocksteady, reggae, dancehall, ragga, and all the other Jamaican forms that have been so influential in world music.

When ska exploded and began replacing American R&B in Jamaica's dancehalls, Ranglin was in constant demand. He backed up Prince Buster and Baba Brooks on their early hits and in 1962 traveled to London at the request of Chris Blackwell, who had recently launched Island Records. Ranglin recorded "My Boy Lollipop" with a singer named Millie. The tune hit #2 on the British pop charts and went on to introduce the rhythms of ska to the world. As ska transformed itself into reggae, Ranglin continued to be in demand. He arranged the Melodians' "Rivers of Babylon" and added lead guitar to Bob Marley's "Hurts to Be Alone" and "I'm Still Waiting."

But despite his pop credentials, Ranglin's true love is jazz. Two uncles had taught him the basics, and hearing the recordings of Charlie Christian had set his course. At 15 he moved to Kingston from his country home of Robin's Hall allegedly to go to school, but he was soon playing in the Eric Deans Orchestra, one of the island's top hotel bands. He learned tunes by Benny Goodman, Stan Kenton, and Duke Ellington, as well as popular Cuban hits and Broadway show tunes. At the same time Ranglin was burning up the pop charts with "My Boy Lollipop," he was in residence at Ronnie Scott's famed jazz club, wowing the critics and topping Melody Maker's annual jazz poll. Ranglin returned to Jamaica in the late '60s, hoping to get on with his jazz career, but pop music came calling again. He worked with Johnny Nash on his reggae-influenced pop hits and joined Jimmy Cliff's touring band until 1973, when he returned to his first musical love, making his Newport Jazz Festival debut with Randy Weston in 1974. Since the '70s Ranglin has toured and recorded with such notables as Stanley Jordan, Charlie Byrd, Tal Farlow, and Jamaica's other jazz giant, pianist Monty Alexander.



Ernest Ranglin

what to buy: Baaba Maal's band, with Maal himself on a couple of lead vocals, sits in with Ranglin on the Afro-Jamaican fusion effort In Search of the Lost Riddim ♪♪♪½ (Palm Pictures, 1998, prod. Ernest Ranglin, Baaba Maal). On most of his albums, Ranglin's relaxed playing tends to bland out, but when he has someone to play off of, things get interesting—his battle with tama (talking drum) player Assane Diop on "Cherie" and the interplay between his guitar and the kora (harp-lute) played by Kawding Cissokho (a.k.a. Kaouding Cissoko) on "Nuh True" shows his laid-back style can shoot off sparks in the right setting.

best of the rest:
Ranglin Roots ♪♪♪ (Island, 1977)
Below the Bassline ♪♪♪ (Island Jamaica, 1996) Memories of Barber Mack ♪♪♪ (Island Jamaica, 1997)

influences:
⏮ Cecil Houdini, Charlie Christian, Wes Montgomery, Les Paul ⏭ Bob Marley

see also: The Congos, Alton Ellis, Baaba Maal, Jackie Mittoo, Sister Carol, the Skatalites

j. poet

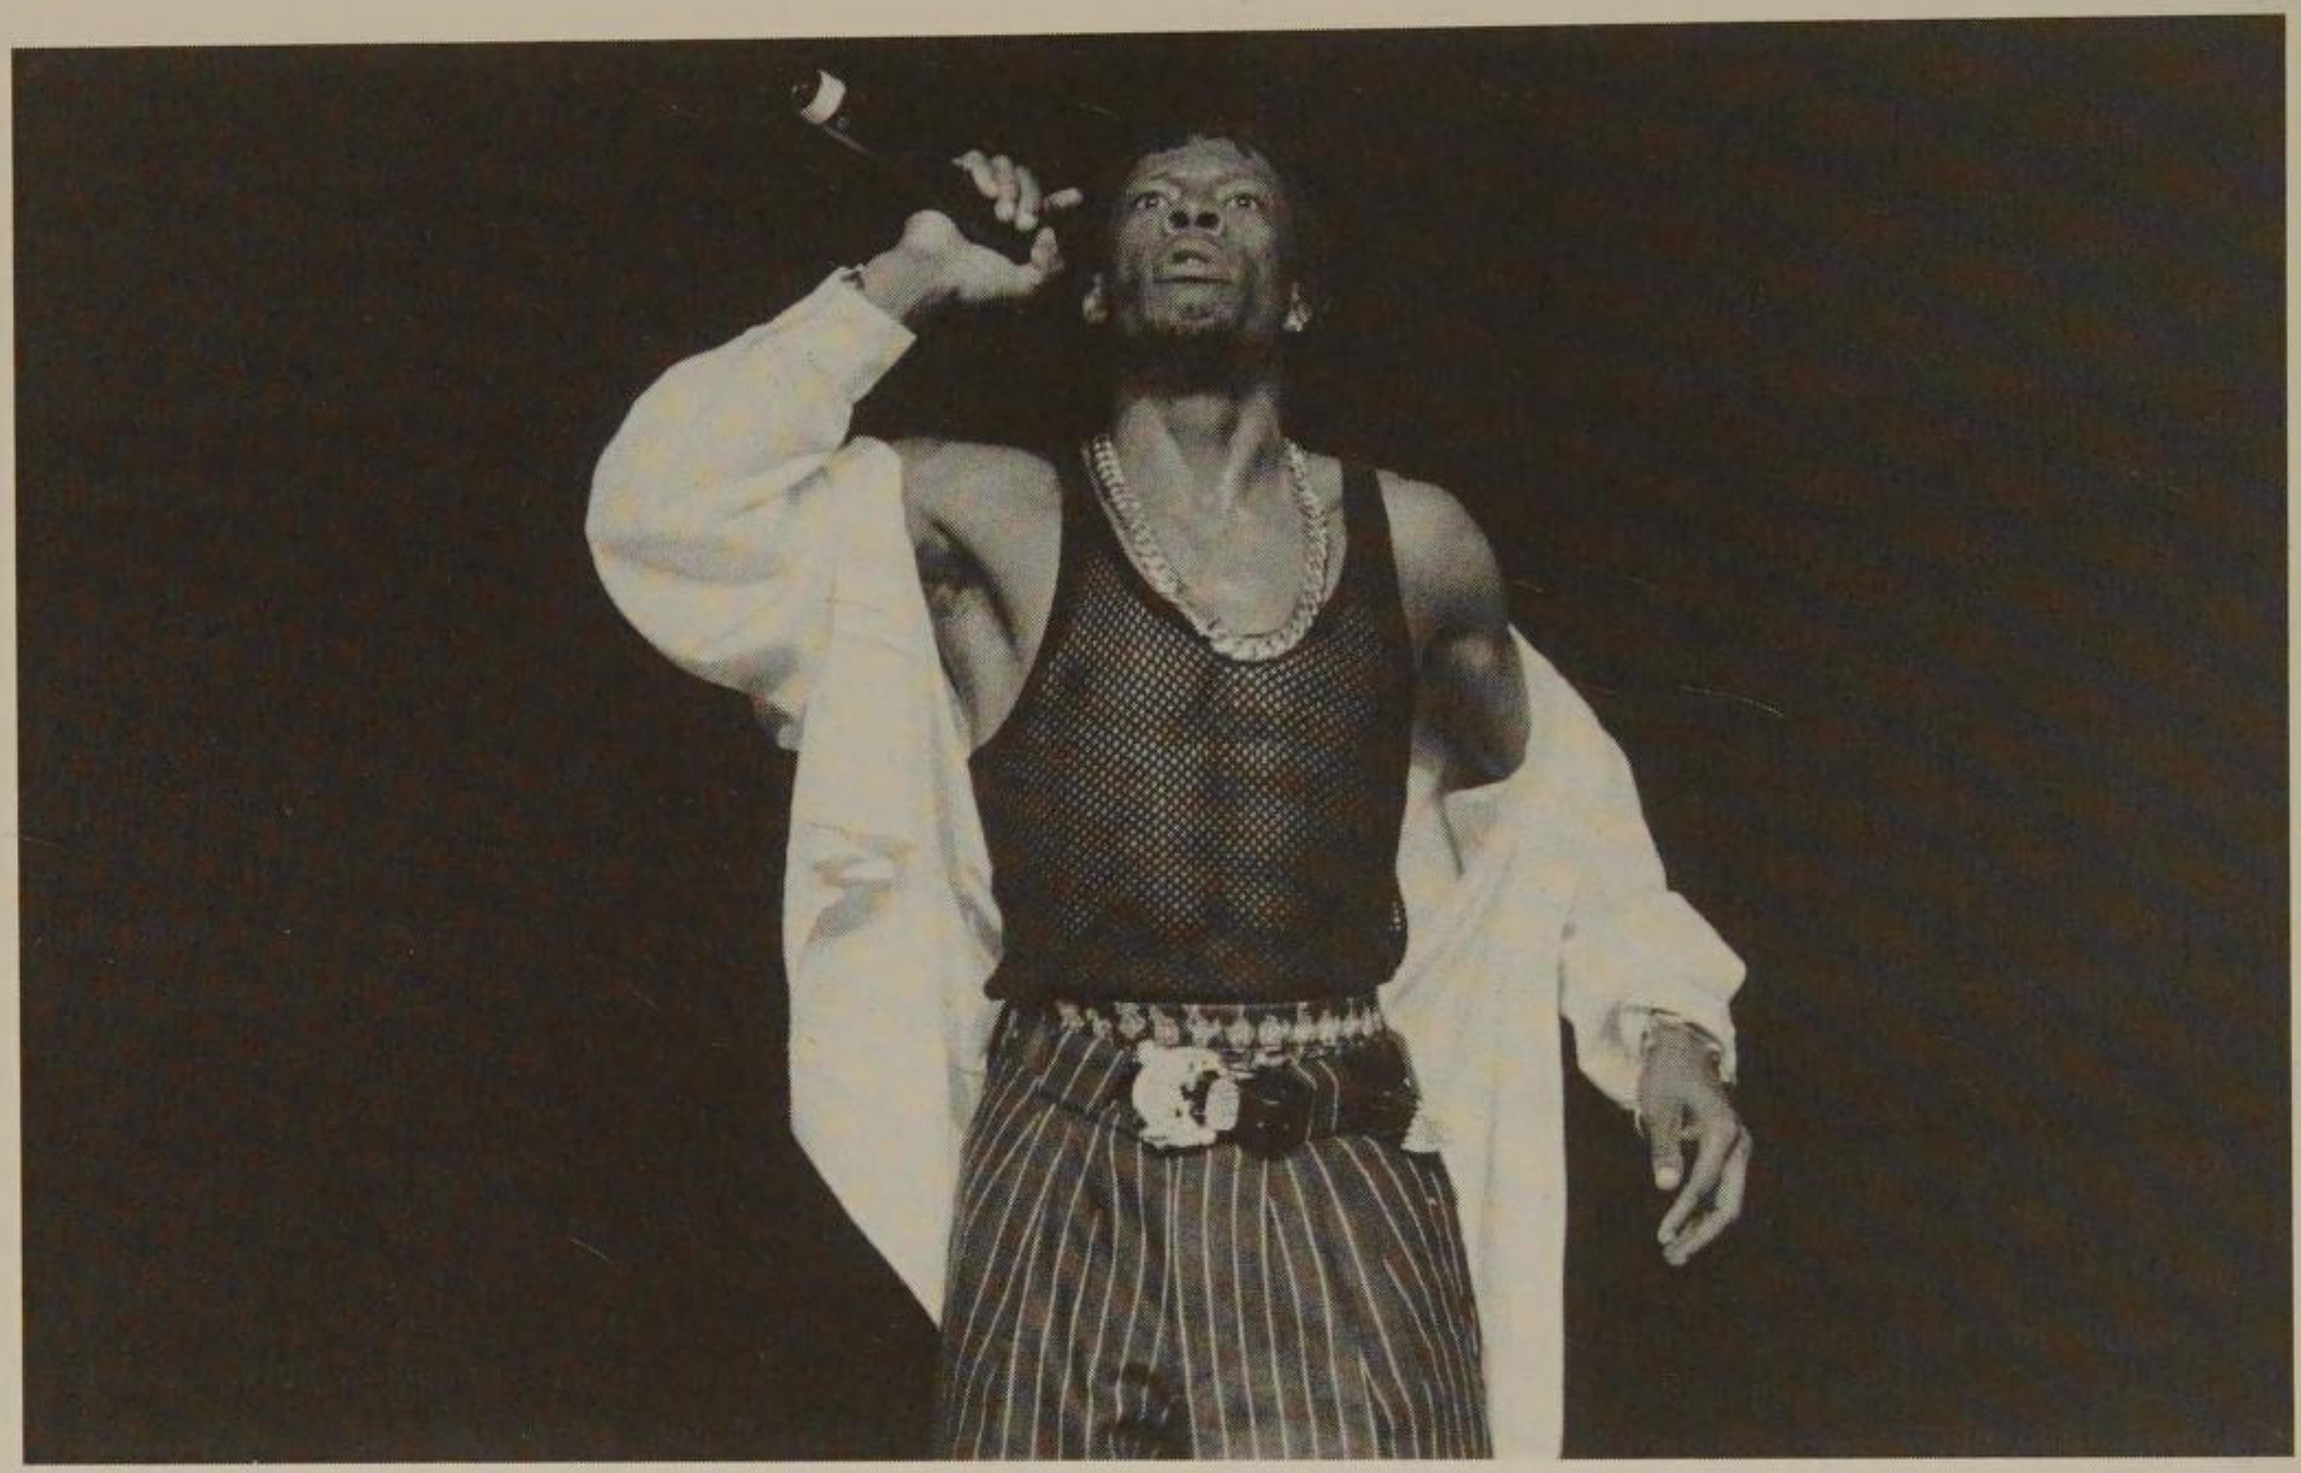
Shabba Ranks

Reggae

Born Rexton Rawlston Fernando Gordon, January 17, 1966, in St. Ann's Parish, Jamaica. Based in Jamaica.

The reigning sex symbol of Jamaican dancehall swing and self-proclaimed "Mr. Loverman," Shabba Ranks—the first reggae artist ever to win a Grammy Award—exploded on the international music scene with a series of crossover hits in the early 1990s, powered by his ragged, booming vocals. Developing his uniquely raunchy rap-and-reggae style for a decade before becoming an overnight sensation, Ranks sang and recorded in small Jamaican clubs and studios under the name "Co-Pilot," enjoying considerable success regionally and in the Caribbean sections of major cities like New York and London. Choosing "Shabba" after two local gangsters with the same name died, Ranks developed a musical variation all his own, combining the sounds of reggae, dancehall, and hip-hop with blatantly sexual lyrics (the latter known as "slackness," though not by Shabba, who beats reformers to the punch by calling his music "X-rated"). During the peak of his stardom from 1989 to '91, he released 50 singles, made a now-legendary helicopter-drop entrance at the 1989 Reggae Sunsplash festival, won his first of two Grammys for the 1991 LP As Raw As Ever, and signed a major three-album deal with Epic/Sony. Immodestly releasing a greatest-hits album the following year, Shabba's meteoric rise was blunted by an accusation of rape (for the fourth time in his life) by a woman who appeared in his "Trailer Loada Girls" video; he compounded the controversy around him with an interview on British television in which he said gays "deserve to be crucified," making him a target of GLAAD protesters. Nonetheless, Ranks claimed a string of crossover U.S. hits, including the Top 10 R&B tunes "Housecall (Your Body Can't Lie to Me)," "Mr. Loverman," "Slow and Sexy," and the #1 remake of Sly & the Family Stone's "Family Affair" off the Addams Family Values movie soundtrack. He continues to be an extremely popular attraction outside the U.S., particularly in Japan and Europe.

630 shabba ranks



Shabba Ranks

what to buy: Though he released not one but two "greatest hits" packages called Rough & Ready in the early 1990s, the subsequent 1995 double-disc set Caan Dun: The Best of Shabba ♪♪♪♪♪ (VP, 1995, compilation prod. David Sanguinetti, Derrick Moo-Young), graced with the gift of perspective, stands as a much more fulfilling overview of a dynamically unique performer. The Caribbean hits that spurred his breakout, like "Live Blanket" and "Wicked in Bed," are prominent here, as are the majority of his international victories, led by "Mr. Loverman" and "Best Baby Father." A fine introduction to Shabba in all his guttural, gritty glory.

what to buy next: His second Grammy-winning LP, X-tra Naked ♪♪♪♪ (Epic, 1992, prod. Wycliffe Johnson), finds the singer maximizing the style that propelled him to fame while giving the people what he believes they want: all his creativity is concentrated below the waist. Featuring his hit duet with Johnny Gill, "Slow and Sexy," and contributions from rappers Queen Latifah and Chubb Rock, the Shabba beats are fresh, challenging, nasty, and definitely not for the pure of spirit.

what to avoid: A rehashing of Shabba's best tunes repackaged without enhancement, Shabba Ranks/J.C. Lodge ♪♪ (Pow Wow, prod. various) adds nothing significant to his body of recordings, appearing to be more a device to place second-biller Lodge within the fringe of his spotlight.

the rest:
Rappin' with the Ladies ♪♪♪½ (VP, 1988)
Just Reality ♪♪♪♪½ (VP, 1990)
Best Baby Father ♪♪ (VP, 1990)
Golden Touch ♪♪♪ (VP, 1990)
As Raw As Ever ♪♪♪♪ (Epic, 1991)
Mr. Maximum ♪♪♪♪½ (Pow Wow, 1992)
Rough & Ready, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪♪ (Epic, 1992)
Rough & Ready, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1993)
No Competition ♪♪♪ (Critique, 1993)
A Mi Shabba ♪♪♪♪ (Epic, 1995)
Get Up Stand Up ♪♪♪♪ (Artists Only!, 1998)
Shabba & Friends ♪♪♪♪½ (Sony, 1999)

worth searching for: A brilliant roster of reggae, funk, and jazz talents—including Sly & Robbie, Bootsy Collins, Herbie Hancock, and Bernie Worrell, with Fred Wesley and Maceo Parker in the horn section—surrounds fellow guest-artist Shabba on the future-pop album from Bill Laswell's Material, The Third Power ♪♪♪♪ (Axiom, 1991). Ranks isn't the whole show here, but he steals it when he appears.

influences:
◀◀ Yellowman, Josey Wales, General Echo, King Jammy, Brigadier Jerry

▶▶ Maxi Priest, Buju Banton

see also: Cocoa Tea, Bill Laswell, Maxi Priest

Andre McGarrity

Enzo Rao

World-jazz fusion

Born in Sicily, Italy. Based in Sicily, Italy.

Born Vincenzo Rao Camemi, this Sicilian violinist/bassist/programmer is best known in the West for his fusion of jazz improvisation and the folk traditions of Italy and the Middle East with his group Shamal, which also features frame drum virtuoso Glen Velez and Sicilian saxophonist Gianni Gebbia. Like many children raised in Europe after World War II, Rao grew up divided between a respect for the deep-rooted traditions of his native land and a love for the modern music of the times, especially jazz and funk. After years of performing professionally in these genres in Italy, he formed Shamal in the early 1990s to, as he says, "sow the seeds of world music throughout the earth."

what's available: Rao's only U.S. release, Ettna ♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1996, prod. Bob Haddad), showcases Shamal's multitude of talents, with a timeless fusion of styles that seem to know no geographical boundaries. The title track, named after a majestic Sicilian volcano, sets the stage, with funky jazz interludes led by Gebbia's reedy sax solos interspersed between rhythmically invigorating passages driven by Velez's Arabic percussion sounds. Mediterranean references abound, with elements of traditions running from Eastern Europe through the Middle East and down to Morocco. A few songs were directly inspired by Sicilian sources, but Rao's hypnotic violin solo on "Waiting for You" is as specifically traditional as this wide-rangingly inventive album gets. A solid set that leaves you hungry for more.

influences:
◀◀ Shakti, John Zorn's Masada, Oregon

see also: Glen Velez

Bret Love

Rara Machine

Mizik rasin (Haitian "roots music"), rara

Formed late 1980s, in Port-au-Prince, Haiti. Based in Port-au-Prince, Haiti.

Clifford Sylvain, lead vocals, percussion, hand drumming, drum programming, leader; Jephte Guillaume, bass, hand drumming, vocals; Welmir J. Pierre, keyboards, piano; Donald Guillaume, drum kit, vocals; Gerald Sylvain, hand drumming, vocals; Bonga Jean Baptiste, hand drumming, vocals; Kenya, dancing, choreography; Nadia, dancing, choreography; Smitty, dancing, choreography; Sheila Degraff, lead vocals; Nadege Bowens, lead vocals; Robert Miller, sax. (All members are from Haiti.)

Clifford Sylvain started making his own drums and playing music at age 12. A few years later he formed a neighborhood band with friends, but his father didn't appreciate his interest in music and gave him a beating; the band broke up. Clifford's older brother was already playing in Boffa Combo, a band that played compas, Haiti's "upper class" music (a style the African roots of which had been considerably watered down over the years). Boffa was a favorite of the Duvalier family, and at one of their state parties, Clifford sat in on congas. The enthusiastic reaction of the crowd earned him a place in Boffa Combo's lineup. After finishing high school he played with the Ambassadors, Scorpio Band, and Accolade. In the mid-1980s Clifford moved to New York City to further his studies and started taking classes at the Latin Rhythm School with Mongo Santamaria, Frankie Mabali, and other samba and salsa masters. He played briefly with another New York–based compas band, Ska Shah—who had a hit with his "Min Numerou"—but was generally dissatisfied with their laid-back style. He returned to Haiti after the overthrow of the Duvalier regime, and, inspired by the success of the groundbreaking Boukman Eksperyans, put together Rara Machine. Like the Boukmans, Sylvain based his sound on traditional Vodou rhythms with a healthy dose of rara, a street-level dance music played at Carnival.

what's available: Voudou Nou ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1994, prod. Clifford Sylvain) is an album of high-energy Haitian roots music featuring lilting female vocals, swooping basslines, and relentless drumming, topped off by Sylvain's enthusiastic vocals. Solid production, with a taste of dancehall reggae and a couple of semi-traditional tunes that feature the band's drummers and singers. Rara Machine's debut, Break the Chain ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1991, prod. Clifford Sylvain), is a stunner, with a touch of funky bass, some propulsive horn charts, and a slight Latin rhythmic accent here and there. But mostly it's straight-ahead Carnival music, with a kick drum that'll push any party into overdrive.

influences:
Boukman Eksperyans, Boukan Ginen

j. poet

Rasha

North African and Iberian traditional and pop

Born in Khartoum, Sudan. Based in Madrid, Spain.

Rasha is determined to acquaint the world with the music and culture of her native Sudan, though ironically, due to civil strife, gender inequality, and religious strictures, she finds it safer and more possible to do so outside of Sudan itself. Some of her Sufi Muslim songs would not be allowed by the current orthodox regime, and some would be forbidden to women—as was an education, which Rasha went to Spain to get, soon switching from a literary career to a musical one as her possibilities opened up and her potentials came into view. She has transmitted Sudanese musical tradition to great acclaim and branched out into stylistic hybrids inspired by her adoptive country. (A taste for cultural convergence seems to run in the family; one of Rasha's brothers has played with star Arabic/flamenco fusionists Radio Tarifa.) Rasha has a serene demeanor that belies her rebellious spirit, but which says a lot about how she's attained her considerable goals. That calm is reflected on her debut CD, in a still, sublime, intimately organic sound that may be familiar to fans of Malian diva Oumou Sangare. But the similarities are purely atmospheric; the style is all Rasha's own. She's come far through a quiet confidence in her talents, and in the worthiness of giving expression to the unique voices in her head—and her audiences never need much convincing either.

what's available: Rasha's first release, Sudaniyat ♪♪♪♪♪ (NubeNegra/Alula, 1997), is a gourmet blend of Sufi, Sudanese, Nubian, and even some jamaican sounds, with sultry sax, swooning strings and woodwinds, and rhythms by turns lilting and languid all shimmering beneath Rasha's subtle siren voice. You need Rasha's songs on La Sal de la Vida (The Spice of Life) ♪♪♪♪½ (NubeNegra/Alula, 1998), an album of trios, duos, and solos centered around Our Heroine, Galician (Spanish Celtic)/Portuguese vocalist Uxía, and Castilian singer María Salgado. The Iberian influence is in the ascendant throughout the album, and after Rasha's restraint on Sudaniyat you'll skip a breath at her commanding, vivacious delivery here. Xesús Pimentel's chiming flamenco guitar arrangements are priceless, Rasha's percussion arrangements are endlessly inventive and energizing, Salgado is a rising star to watch, and Uxía matches Salgado's passion if not always her full timbre.

worth searching for: The two albums above are well available in the U.S., but perhaps not as ubiquitously as Putumayo World Music's fine Romantica compilation and even finer Women of Spirit one, each of which has a song from Sudaniyat and much more from a number of important and often hard-to-find artists. (Women is also reviewed in this book's Compilations section.)

influences:
Abed Azrié, Radio Tarifa

Adam McGovern

Ravel

Merengue

Born in Sabana Grande de Boya, Dominican Republic. Based in New York, NY, USA.

Ravel is a multi-talented singer, artist, and actor who emigrated to the U.S. when he was still a boy. His first singing gig, in his teens, was with Los Reyes del Caribe Orchestra. He formed his own band, Los Bravos, soon after, and recorded three albums with them. In 1993 the singer started his own label, Camino, and produced two hit-filled albums for it; the second, Llego El Tipo, won two Estrellas del Merengues (an award in his field), for Most Popular Orchestra and Most Distinguished Artist. He recently signed a worldwide deal with RMM, which should gain him a considerably higher profile.

what to buy: Ravel's smooth tenor and the band's intense, energetic attack makes Llego El Tipo ♪♪♪♪ (Camino, 1995, prod. Victor Waill, Ravel) swing from start to finish. Includes the hits "El Meneo," "Dondé Están Las Mujeres," and "Celosos."

what to buy next: Ravel's first major-label offering, Alma, Ritmo y Pueblo ♪♪♪½ (RMM, 1997, prod. various), continues his winning formula—high-energy arrangements, catchy tunes, and inspired vocals, which have acquired a pleasingly sensuous mid-range as he's matured.

the rest:
Como Tu Lo Querias ♪♪♪♪ (Camino, 1993)
Ravel ♪♪♪½ (J&N)
Amor de Verdad ♪♪♪½ (J&N)
El Tercero ♪♪♪½ (J&N)

influences:
Johnny Ventura, Wilfrido Vargas, Juan Luis Guerra

j. poet

Red Plastic Bag

Calypso, soca

Born Stedson Wiltshire, c. 1960, in Barbados. Based in Barbados.

Those who've only just discovered Bajan (Barbadian) music through the red-hot soca ("SOul-CAlypso") group krosfyah may not know that the island's flourishing calypso scene has long rivaled that of Trinidad and Tobago. Red Plastic Bag (or RPB), a perennial crowd-pleaser who belongs to the generation of accomplished veterans that includes Gabby, Grynner, and Ras Iley, proves this axiom with a vengeance. His lyrical and melodic wit and agility (not to mention his characteristically piercing diction) have won him four "Pic-O-De-Crop" titles (Barbados's equivalent of Trinidad's National Calypso Monarchy), the first in 1982—he was then the youngest ever to win the crown—and the most recent in 1996. Since his reputation as a serious-minded calypsonian is secure, his recent makeover from "De Lyrical Master" to "De Ragga Soca King" (ragga soca indicating the presence of "raggamuffin"-style dancehall chat and a languorous tassa-drum beat), far from being some career-resuscitating gimmick, only adds to his standing and versatility.

Red Plastic Bag (the name is a kind of anti-sobriquet that pokes fun at calypsonians' traditionally grandiose titles) first came to the notice of U.S. listeners on Shanachie's out-of-print 1988 compilation When the Time Comes: Rebel Soca with the irresistible "Cannot Find Me Brother." This punchy party tune about a famously unlocatable desperado clearly demonstrated RPB's strong suit: a shrewd ability to cross the high-energy with the hard-hitting, producing party soca that eschews the prefix "mindless." His penchant for clever and sophisticated verse—especially for subtle innuendo and extended metaphorical conceits—also applies to the slower-paced, more lyrically complex traditional calypso, though you'd scarcely know it from any of his releases currently available in the U.S.

what to buy: Not that there's anything wrong with those Stateside releases: the superlative One More ♪♪♪♪½ (WIRL, 1996, prod. Nicholas Brancker, Mac Fingall, Stedson Wiltshire) culls six of the best tunes (including the atomic-powered, flag-waving road march "Hittin de Front" and the gleeful ragga soca "One More") from RPB's two previous LPs—Hittin de Front (Bayfield, 1994) and Someting in de Music (Bayfield, 1995)—and combines them with an equal number of compatriot-sidekick Mac Fingall's hits from the same period (including the Pan-Caribbean novelty-soca smash "Big Belly Man"). Bajan Invasion ♪♪♪ (WIRL, 1996, prod. various) exploits both the proven commercial success of the RPB-Mac pairing and Bajan road march composers' overrunning of Trinidad's 1996 Carnival. It's a weaker album overall, even though it comprises all of Red Plastic Bag's LP of the same year, Riding de Riddim (Bayfield, 1996)—which featured the prize-winning, anti-downsizing soca "Give It to Me" and the topical calypso on confusing notoriety with heroism, "Issue of de Day."

worth searching for: It's in the nature of calypso albums to disappear within a year or two of their release, and this means that much of RPB's work on LP is long gone. (We can only hope for a greatest-hits anthology!) That said, you won't go wrong with anything out of the RPB back catalog that happens to fall into your hands. Most recently out of print is the first joint effort with Mac Fingall, Happiness ♪♪♪♪ (WIRL, 1993, prod. Nicholas Brancker, Mac Fingall), which again blends the contents of RPB's solid LP of the same name (Bayfield, 1993) with good-naturedly raunchy novelty songs by Mac. RPB's most recent releases—the buoyant plastic@calypso.com ♪♪♪♪ (Bayfield, 1997, prod. Nicholas Brancker, Stedson Wiltshire), whose anchor tune "On Line" metaphorically questions national priorities; and last year's Unlimited (Bayfield, 1998)—haven't found national distribution in the U.S., but should be available from record shops that specialize in Caribbean music. A thorough scouring of the same shops might turn up an old copy of De Heat Is On ♪♪♪♪½ (Bayfield, 1989/Rohit, 1989, prod. Kenny Wallace, Mac Fingall), whose "Pluck It" (a double-entendre about a local poultry-processing scandal) and "The Country En Well" (which diagnoses and anatomizes the state of the nation, body part by body part) won Pic-O-De-Crop.

influences:
Grynner, Ras Iley

see also: krosfyah

Michael Eldridge

Red Tail Chasing Hawks

Traditional flute, new age, Latin jazz

Formed c. 1992, in Phoenix, AZ, USA. Based in Denver, CO, USA and Phoenix, AZ, USA.

Calvin Standing Bear, flutes; James Torres, piano. (Both members are from USA.)

Calvin Standing Bear is a Rosebud Sioux who began singing in the church choir as a youth. He has played traditional flute for almost a decade and teaches traditional drumming, singing, and flute-playing in Denver. James Torres is Chiricahua Apache and Mexican American; he has been a professional musician most of his life, playing with Tito Puente, Willie Colon, Celia Cruz, Airto Moreira, and Flora Purim. Standing Bear says the

jean redpath

duo came together in the early 1990s to "share music with the world. I pray this music will touch the hearts and spirits of all people; we are all related."

what's available: Eagle Dances with the Wind ♪♪♪ (Canyon, 1995, prod. Calvin Standing Bear, James Torres) offers pleasant powwow jazz, meditative flute, and free-form improvisations for flute and piano, with a bit of Native percussion. Brother Hawk ♪♪♪ (Canyon, 1996, prod. Robert Doyle) is another soothing album, with some chanting and percussion on two tracks and the usual new-agey nature sounds.

influences:
◀◀ R. Carlos Nakai

j. poet

Jean Redpath

Celtic

Born April 28, 1937, in Edinburgh, Scotland. Based in USA.

Jean Redpath's unaffected, crystalline mezzo-soprano is an excellent instrument for Scottish songs. A university lecturer, she is as much a scholar as she is a performer. Nevertheless, her delivery is never dry; her heart is in every syllable, perhaps in part because she learned many of the songs she sings, and the stories behind them, from her mother, who was a scholar of Scots oral history. Redpath emigrated to New York and spent time in Greenwich Village in the 1960s. There she became a widely respected champion of the folk music revival that was then underway in the U.S., impressing her audiences with the size of her repertoire. Her best-known undertaking is the complete songs of Robert Burns. Seven volumes of a projected 22 in this series were recorded before the death of her producer, Serge Hovey, put the plan on hold. Another of Redpath's well-known endeavors is a compilation of Scottish songs written by women.

what to buy: Lowlands ♪♪♪♪♪ (Philo, 1994, prod. Jean Redpath) is an excellent mix of songs. Two of the best are "Faraway Tom" (with cello accompaniment by Abby Newton) and the a cappella "Gallowa' Hills." Equally strong is Jean Redpath ♪♪♪♪♪ (Philo, 1975/1989), which includes "I Live Not Where I Love," one of Redpath's most requested songs.

what to buy next: The Songs of Robert Burns, Volumes I and II ♪♪♪♪♪ (Philo, 1976/1980/1996, prod. Serge Hovey) contains the best of Redpath's versions of Burns's songs, including "Auld Lang Syne," "A Red, Red Rose," and "Nine Inch Will Please a Lady."

best of the rest:
The Songs of Robert Burns, Volumes III and IV ♪♪♪♪½ (Philo, 1982/1983/1996)
The Songs of Robert Burns, Volumes V and VI ♪♪♪♪½ (Philo, 1985/1987/1996)
Lady Nairne ♪♪♪♪ (Philo, 1986)
First Flight ♪♪♪♪ (Philo, 1989)
The Songs of Robert Burns, Volume VII ♪♪♪♪½ (Philo, 1990) Song of the Seals ♪♪♪♪½ (Philo, 1994)

influences:
◀◀ Robert Burns, Jeannie Robertson

Pamela Murray Winters and Kerry Dexter

Elis Regina

MPB (Brazilian Popular Music), bossa nova, Brazilian jazz

Born Elis Regina Carvalho Costa, 1945, in Porto Algre, Brazil. Died January 19, 1982.

Along with such leading lights as Milton Nascimento and Caetano Veloso, the late Elis Regina remains one of Brazil's most popular and talented singers. Born to a working-class family, Regina began singing professionally at age 12 on a children's television show, gaining local fame during two years of regular performances. She signed her first recording contract at age 13 and made three records, returning home after each junket to Rio de Janeiro. Her superb voice, full of spellbinding, full-throated soulfulness and polished technique, gained her distinction as the queen of MPB, and she rose to fame while still in her teens. As the family's main breadwinner, Regina relocated to Rio with her father in 1963, about the time that a military junta took control of the country. By the age of 21, she was the most revered (and handsomely paid) singer in Brazil. Not as overtly political as her contemporaries but still openly critical of Brazil's military rule, her enormous popularity probably kept her out of jail and exempt from exile. Still, she was forced to sing the Brazilian national anthem at an "independence" ceremony, an act that was criticized by leftist performers who felt her public, pro-government display was inappropriate. She would not learn until years later that her husband had been threatened with jail had she not complied with the government's demand. Regina's career continued full-blast into the 1970s, and she recorded some of her best albums during this decade. Songwriters sought her out as an interpreter with impeccable taste, and she helped introduce such Brazilian composers as Nascimento, João Bosco, Ivan Lins, Joyce, Renato Teixeira, and many others. However, a temperamental and moody artist, her personal life was in disarray. Her two marriages ended in divorce, leaving her to provide not only for three children but her parents as well. She secretly started using cocaine in the late 1970s, after the collapse of her second marriage. She began 1982 by signing a new recording contract, marrying for the third time, and making future plans. But on January 19 of that year, she was found dead of an accidental overdose of drugs and alcohol. Nearly two decades later, the musicians she inspired continue to pay tribute to her with songs and whole albums dedicated to her memory. If you're just getting acquainted with Regina, it's important to note that her style is quite different than what you might expect. Rather than the soft, mellow vocal style of other Brazilian singers known to American audiences, she exudes a raw power that is often compared to Janis Joplin's. On her many albums Regina sings with untamed gusto and heat, leaning mostly to the pop side of modern Brazilian music centered in São Paulo.

what to buy: Vento De Maio (May Wind) ♪♪♪♪½ (EMI/Hemisphere, 1997), a collection of tunes split between ballads and up-tempo MPB pop numbers, is the only recording Elis Regina made for EMI, but it ranks among her best. While she fervently mines the samba tradition, Regina delivers a diverse, modern-sounding session. Joining forces on some tracks with other popular Brazilian singer-songwriters, she kicks off with a lush version of the title song, elegantly performed with Lô Borges, and flirtatiously sings "Tiro Ao Alvaro (Hit the Bull's Eye)" with its composer Adoniran Barbosa. Highlights of this 13-track set are Regina's collaboration with Milton Nascimento on the captivating scorcher "O Que Fol Feito Devera (What Was Really Done)," and her version of Gilberto Gil's reverent, gospel-tinged "Rebento (Explode)." Three rare tracks are added to the CD version, and throughout, Regina artfully maintains a delicate balance between old and new. A collection of songs by Milton Nascimento, Nada Sera Como Antes (Nothing Will Be As It Was) ♪♪♪♪♪ (Verve, 1972/1984), demonstrates why Regina became one of the most cherished singers in Brazil and why so many of her colleagues still mourn her loss. Well chosen, these 10 songs convey not only Nascimento's artistry, but Regina's inventiveness at transforming his works, backed with gorgeous arrangements and support from unnamed instrumental soloists. Liner notes contain only Portuguese lyrics, but Regina sings with such fervent longing and undiminished skill, words don't matter.

what to buy next: If you want the most value for your money, check out either of two compilation albums released in 1990 that feature Regina in both studio and live performances. A Arte De Elis Regina ♪♪♪♪ (Verve, 1975/1990) contains 21 songs—more than 68 minutes' worth—compiled for Verve's "The Best of Brazil" series. Communicating a spectrum of moods, Regina sings MPB classics by composers Gilberto Gil, Milton Nascimento, Ivan Lins, Ary Barrosa, Antonio Carlos Jobim, Ed Lopo, and others. Some tracks include (synthesized) orchestral backing; others pair Regina with small, intimate combos. From start to finish, whether the material is up-tempo or stretched out, her performances sizzle with earthy passion. Portuguese lyrics, without English translations, are included in the liners. Reissued the same year, Fascination: The Best of Elis Regina ♪♪♪♪½ (Verve, 1990) is slightly more appealing than the other disc, though it duplicates about a third of that disc's tracks. The 20 songs here include powerful performances like the kicking opener, "Meninho Das Laranjas (The Orange-Selling Boy)"; Baden Powell's "Lapinha (A Neighborhood of São Paulo)," on which Elis is supported by a community chorus; the funky pop piece "Como Nossos Pais (Like Our Parents)"; and Regina's laughter-laced "Vou Deitar E Rolar (I'll Do It to the Hilt"). These songs and a gorgeous version of the classic American standard title tune heighten the charm of Fascination, giving it a slim edge over A Arte De Elis Regina —but if you're a completist, buy both.

what to avoid: While the performances are competent and die-hard Regina fans may want to devour everything she's recorded, be forewarned that most of the 16 songs on Personalidade: Elis Regina ♪♪♪½ (Verve, 1987) are repeated on other, more engaging Verve albums.

best of the rest:

Brazilian Collection from A to Z: Elis Regina ♪♪♪½ (Mercury, 1998) worth searching for: Regina's album with Antonio Carlos Jobim, Elis & Tom ♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram Brazil, 1974/Verve, 1990, prod. Aloysio de Oliveira), is a delightful way to experience two Brazilian legends at once. It includes their classic duet "Águas de Março."

influences:

- Antonio Carlos Jobim, Ary Barroso
- Milton Nascimento, João Bosco, Ivan Lins, Joyce, Renato Teixeira

see also: Gilberto Gil, Antonio Carlos Jobim, Joyce, Milton Nascimento, Caetano Veloso

Nancy Ann Lee

Cheikha Remitti

Oranese folklore, rai

Born May 8, 1923, in Tessala, Algeria. Based in Paris, France, and Oran, Algeria.

The mother of rai (Algerian pop music), Cheikha Remitti was born with the name Saâdia, but that, like her peaceful village life and so much else in her country, was not to last. Orphaned at an early age, she settled in Relizane under protection of a patron. Her difficult life became all the more so with the onset of World War II and its attendant food shortages and other hardships. Young Saâdia fell in with musicians, dancing and singing the nights away as a kind of escape from the suffering around her. "Misfortune has been my teacher," says Remitti now. Her next misfortune was the plague that ravaged Oran in the 1940s and inspired Camus's famous novel. The resulting horrors also inspired Saâdia to begin writing songs of her own, something she has continued to this day.

zachary richard

Under the tutelage of a great flutist, Saâdia started recording her songs at Radio Algiers. She earned the name Remitti while entertaining French soldiers during the war. After attempting the French expression for "another round" ("remettez"), her heavily accented utterance inspired fans to shout "Remitti, the singer! Remitti!" They have never stopped. She began recording under this name in the early '50s.

Remitti's works trace their roots to the sh'ir al-malhun, sacred Arabic poetry rendered as song. Once this music began to be recorded early in the 20th century, it started appearing in more popularized forms that appealed to common folk. As a girl, Remitti adapted these idioms, especially the form called gharbi. Singing for mostly male audiences, Remitti laid the groundwork for modern rai with her suggestive wordplay and sexual double entendres. As young male rai singers—most notably Khaled—came onto the scene in the 1970s, their rebellious style enraged Islamic fundamentalists and riveted youth, making the music a massive pop phenomenon for the first time.

Remitti's star rose with rai's, though she tends to dismiss rai stars as unoriginal and overrated. Her prolific cannon of songs has expanded to explore friendship, love, alcohol dependency, prostitution, and the problems of immigrants and nomadic people. In violence-stricken Algeria, Remitti cannot perform publicly, yet she now enjoys worldwide renown.

what to buy: Aux Sources du Rai ♪♪♪♪ (Blue Silver, 1994, prod. L'Institute du Monde Arab) features Remitti's robust voice in a live recording with simple percussion and deep-toned gasba flute backing. Sidi Mansour ♪♪♪♪ (Absolute Records, 1994, prod. Houari Talbi, JBV, Geza X) marks Remitti's first adventure into rai rock. With support from Robert Fripp and others, she turns out a hard-hitting, even majestic production, not at all like the slick dance tracks of more commercial rai artists.

what to buy next: Rai Roots ♪♪♪♪ (Buda Musique) provides more of Remitti's sultry traditional sound.

influences:

- sh'ir al-malhun, malhun-derived Oranese folk music

see also: Chaba Fadela, Chaba Zahouania, Cheb Mami, Cheb Hasni, Cheb Khaled, and many others

see also: Khaled

Banning Eyre

Zachary Richard

Cajun, swamp pop, rock

Born September 8, 1950, in Lafayette, LA, USA. Based in Lafayette, LA, USA.

Zachary Richard started out as a folky after graduating from Tulane University. Looking for something to make him stand out from all the other guitar-playing singers, he took up the Cajun accordion and learned from the great Felix Richard (who also mentored Horace Trahan) and by playing along to Aldus Roger records. Richard's style now is not often based on traditional Cajun music or the accordion, but on a blend that weighs more towards zydeco and New Orleans music, with a strong rock sensibility. There is a continuing thread of social activism in his work—about Cajun culture and the struggle to maintain the French language in Louisiana—that is juxtaposed with the music's danceable, good-times sound.

what to buy: Snake Bite Love ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1992, prod. Jim Wray) represents the mature Richard sound: a zydeco beat with elements of rock, country, swamp pop, and R&B built on top, all filtered through a Cajun sensibility. Richard's songwriting owes more to the singer-songwriter genre than to Lawrence Walker or Dewey Balfa, but the passion found in his vocals is clearly inspired by those Cajun legends.

what to buy next: On Women in the Room ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1990, prod. Zachary Richard, Jim Scott), Richard's songwriting began to match the major-label quality of his live performances. He struck the perfect synthesis of his social commentary and folk-rock style with "No French, No More," and mixed a south Louisiana dance groove and nonsense lyrics in "Who Stole My Monkey."

the rest:

Mardi Gras Mambo ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1980)
Zack's Bon Ton ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989)
Zack Attack ♪♪♪½ (Arzed, 1989)
Bayou des Mystées ♪♪♪ (Arzed, 1991)
Vent d'Eté ♪♪♪ (Arzed, 1996)

worth searching for: Looking Back ♪♪♪♪ (Arzed, 1985, prod. Zachary Richard) is a retrospective of Richard's early work.

influences:

- Aldus Roger, Jimmy C. Newman
- Tasso, Steve Riley

see also: Horace Trahan, Aldus Roger

Jared Snyder

Mike Richmond

World jazz

Born in Philadelphia, PA, USA. Based in New York, NY, USA.

Bassist Mike Richmond has played with a who's who of musicians as diverse as Ravi Shankar, Stan Getz, and Richie Havens. He took over the bass slot when Charles Mingus's band became the Mingus Dynasty upon the leader's demise. Richmond played with Miles Davis and Quincy Jones on Davis's last live concert recording and worked with other jazz notables including Gil Evans, Dizzy Gillespie, and Stan Getz. Today, Richmond teaches music at New York University and has been developing a fusion of acoustic styles with a group of innovative young musicians including percussionists Glen Velez and Joe Passaro, oud (lute) player Simon Shaheen, and harpist Lois Colin.

what's available: Although he has long done session work, Basic Tendencies ♪♪♪ (Nomad, 1996) represents Richmond's debut as a solo act. Working with a diverse slate of artists including percussionist Glen Velez and harpist Lois Colin, this album blends Richmond's classic jazz chops with his global music perspective. Although the other musicians provide tasty accents (notably Velez's Middle Eastern percussion touches), Richmond's lean, elegant bass lines are the principal focus on this fine first effort.

influences:

⏮ Charles Mingus, Gil Evans

⏭ Glen Velez, Todd Phillips

see also: Glen Velez, Badal Roy, Simon Shaheen

Michael Parrish

Bonnie Rideout

Scottish

Born December 18, 1962, in Saline, MI, USA. Based in USA.

Bonnie Rideout started playing violin at age eight and went on to study music and fine arts at the University of Michigan, graduating in 1985. As she was growing up, her family often played music together. Her mother was a concert pianist and was also her accompanist on her first recording, Soft May Morn. Rideout served as musician-in-residence at Armadale Castle on the Scottish Isle of Skye, where she had access to an unpublished 18th-century music manuscript of traditional tunes collected by Patrick McDonald. These rare tunes appear throughout her recordings. She is best known for her trademark piobrachs—highly ornamented Highland bagpipe tunes—and a style that borrows from such Highland bagpipe ornamentation. She has also been the National Scottish Fiddle champ three times. In 1996 Rideout became the first American ever invited to the prestigious Edinburgh International Festival in Scotland to demonstrate Highland-style fiddling. She took the gathering by storm and is influencing the next generation of young Scottish fiddlers. On both violin and viola, this tiny woman produces one of the biggest, fieriest sounds in Scottish music today.

what to buy: Rideout's recordings are all well researched, beautifully arranged, and masterfully performed. Celtic Circles ♪♪♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1994, prod. Charlie Pilzer) has the theme of a day's cycle from sunset to nighttime. Starting with a distant drum that leads into a driving march, the music makes a memorable statement. Braveheart piper Eric Reigler adds drive. Chris Caswell on nylon- and wire-strung harps and Carolyn Surrick on viola da gamba add delicacy and a haunting bass. The Washington Post describes Rideout's performance on this album best: "She transforms a lonely melody into utter desolation . . . then effortlessly switches gears from languorous ballad to virtuoso exercise." Kindred Spirits ♪♪♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1996, prod. Bonnie Rideout, Bill McElroy) is devoted to music for, by, and about women. Highlights include the heartbreaking eulogy written by Robert Burns at the death of his first wife and the soaring, uplifting "Aldavaloch" and "Roy's Wife" (who was reputed to be a fickle lass). Rideout is joined by her usual brilliant crew of Eric Rigler, Al Pettaway, Chris Caswell, Abby Newton, and Maggie Sansone.

the rest:

Soft May Morn ♪♪♪½ (Atholl Brose Recordings, 1990/Maggie's Music, 1994)

A Scottish Christmas ♪♪♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1996)

Gi'me Elbow Room ♪♪♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1998)

influences:

⏮ Rideout's musical family, Dr. John Turner, an old northeast Scottish farmer named Jim Falconer see also: Maggie Sansone

Karen Ashbrook

Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys

Cajun, zydeco

Formed 1990, in Mamou, LA, USA. Based in Mamou, LA, USA.

Members have included: Steve Riley, fiddle, accordion, vocals; Peter Schwarz, fiddle, bass, vocals; David Greeley, fiddle, saxophone, vocals; Jimmy Domengeaux (died January 25, 1999), guitar, vocals; Kevin Dugas, drums; Kevin Berzas, guitar. (All members are from USA.)

In Philip Gould's collection of photographs, Cajun and Zydeco Music, he juxtaposes an image of a very young Steve Riley wedged against the stage at a music festival in Mamou, his eyes locked in on the musicians, with a picture of a 20-year-old Riley playing on the same stage. The look of determination in the young boy's eyes sums up the intensity of Riley's development as a player and performer. Riley taught himself to play the accordion, taking as a model his cousin, master accordion maker and player Marc Savoy. His prodigious skills brought him to the attention of Dewey Balfa, who took Riley out on the road with him. It was under Balfa's eye that he learned to fiddle, and it was also in Balfa's sphere that he met Peter Schwarz, son of Tracy Schwarz and fellow fiddle student of the great Mr. Balfa. One of the master's final tours featured a band that included Riley, Schwarz, Christine Balfa (now of Balfa Toujours), and Kevin Barzas, a young guitarist from Mamou, whose grandfather Maurice had for years led one of the best Cajun bands around: the Mamou Playboys. With the addition of Baton Rouge–area fiddler David Greeley, the new Mamou Playboys were formed. Riley is a monster on both accordion and fiddle. He has expanded his talents to include three-row and piano accordion. The band uses complicated modulating arrangements, three-part harmony, and the occasional presence of Greeley's saxophone to vary the sound. Riley can play everything from the toughest, fastest two-steps, to solid zydeco, to the oldest of fiddle tunes from the Balfa Brothers repertoire.

what to buy: Titled after the French version of All Souls' Day, when people tend to the graves of their ancestors, Toussaint ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Scott Billington) shows off the strengths of the Mamou Playboys and keeps their excesses in check. The three-part harmonies are here, but used for accenting ("T'es Parents Veulent Plus Me Voir" and "La Valse D'Amitié"); the same can be said for the modulations the band sometimes can't resist jumping through ("Between Eunice and Opelousas"). "La Toussaint" may be the best Cajun composition of the '90s, a moving piece written by Schwarz with words by Greeley. Placing it as the centerpiece of the CD gives the recording a kind of thematic quality that isn't all that common in Cajun releases. Around it you have dancehall originals like "Katherine," complete with guest Issac Miller on steel, and archaic pieces based on seminal song-collector Alan Lomax's fiddle recordings. There are also two zydeco numbers with Riley showing his chops on three-row button accordion and C.J. Chenier contributing alto sax. Overall the record captures the essence of this group and makes for great listening you don't have to be a Cajun fan to enjoy. what to buy next: While Bayou Ruler ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1998, prod. C.C. Adcock, Tarka Cordell) shows you where the Mamou Playboys come from—the Balfa Brothers, Clifton Chenier, blues, and swamp pop—it is more about the contemporary tastes of their loyal fans in Louisiana. That means more English lyrics and more pronounced rock and zydeco influences. In this music, the Playboys are coming closer to Los Lobos than Beausoleil in the way they express their roots. There is less of the reverential updating of traditional tunes; here they use their understanding of their sources as a springboard for creating a modern sound embracing all their musical influences. Bayou Ruler is not their Kiko, but it shows they have the potential to make a record that distinctive. These are also sadly the last recordings with guitarist Jimmy Domengeaux, who died in a motorcycle crash on January 25, 1999. The enthusiastic playing and singing on Trace of Time ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993, prod. Al Tharp) are marred only by murky and bottomless production. Otherwise all the traits of the band are there: the modulations and the three-part harmonies that are their signature, and the Balfa Brothers tune "Parlez-Nous a Boire," played with respect for tradition.

the rest:
Steve Riley and the Mamou Playboys ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1990)
Tit' Galop Pour Mamou ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992)
Live! ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994)
Friday Night at Last ♪♪♪♪ (Swallow, 1997)

influences:
◀◀ The Balfa Brothers, Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band, Tracy Schwarz, D.L. Menard, Dewey Balfa

▶▶ Horace Trahan, Balfa Toujours

see also: Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin, the Balfa Brothers, Balfa Toujours, C.J. Chenier, Clifton Chenier, Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band, Tracy Schwarz

Jared Snyder

Archie Roach

Folk, rock

Born 1955, in Framlingham, Victoria, Australia. Based in Australia.

For proof of the healing power of music, look no further than the story of Archie Roach. An Aboriginal with the misfortune to be born in the days of a moronic government program bent on forcing Australia's indigenous population to assimilate, Roach was removed from his family at the age of four and raised in an orphanage. He was told that his family was killed in a fire. At 14, he discovered the lie, but not in time to see his real mother alive again. He became alcoholic and lived for years on the streets. Eventually, he channeled his rage into music and wrote the song "Took the Children Away," which dealt with the plight of Australia's "stolen generation." He has returned to the subject several times across his trio of albums, but he also writes passionately about other things he's seen throughout a life of hardship and disappointment. Over and above his fine material, which ranges from folk and country-tinged numbers to blazing rock, Roach is possessed of an unusual vocal timbre, more or less that of an Outback Sam Cooke.

what to buy: Roach's debut, Charcoal Lane ♪♪♪½ (HighTone, 1990, prod. Paul Kelly, Steve Connally), is often painful to listen to as the singer opens old wounds and sprinkles them liberally with salt. Jamu Dreaming ♪♪♪♪ (HighTone, 1993, prod. David Bridie) has its share of grim tales as well, such as "From Paradise" and "Tell Me Why." But overall, the atmosphere here is more cleansing and redemptive, and the arrangements are more fleshed out than on the debut. That's even more true on

Looking for Butter Boy ♫♫♫♫ (HighTone, 1997, prod. Malcolm Burn), which rocks with forthright energy as it rages against injustice. Highlights include the righteous "A Child Was Born Here" and the aching "Louis St. John," which features a guest vocal by Roach's wife, Ruby Hunter, an acclaimed singer-songwriter in her own right.

influences:

Sam Cooke, Ray Charles, Paul Kelly

Daniel Durchholz

Steve Roach

Ambient/world fusion

Born 1955, in La Mesa, CA, USA. Based in Tucson, AZ, USA.

Steve Roach is an incredibly prolific multi-instrumentalist/producer who seems equally comfortable performing live on Aboriginal didgeridoo and percussion or crafting futuristic soundscapes on synthesizers in his home studio. Initially inspired by Tangerine Dream and Can, Roach began composing experimental electronic music in the early '80s, meticulously assembling albums that seem in retrospect to be a little too influenced by the ambient synth sounds pioneered by Brian Eno. Roach's artistic breakthrough came in the late '80s when, on a trip to Australia, he met a young Aboriginal didgeridoo virtuoso named David Hudson. This meeting not only would be the start of an enduring friendship and musical partnership, but also spawned the album Dreamtime Return, which signaled the beginning of Roach's fascination with the music of Australian and other indigenous cultures. He went on to produce all of Hudson's albums, including the solo debut Woolunda, which was one of the first traditional didgeridoo recordings available in the U.S. (By now, the droning, organically constructed yet electronic-sounding instrument has gained much popularity Stateside and around the world.) Since then, although he has collaborated with a broad variety of musical talents, his work can be loosely divided into three categories—non-traditional world-music excursions; atmospheric electronic experiments; and, most prominently, fusions between the two—all of which work fairly well thanks to an appealingly timeless quality that brings music's ancient past and unforeseeable future together in a meditative present. Relocated to the desert of Arizona to commune with his muse, Roach has recently realized what would seem to be his destiny, composing music used for soundtracks (the films Rapa Nui and Heat, and the PBS series The Way West). His older electronic stuff may get a bit too new-agey at times, but with nearly 40 albums to his credit in the last 17 years, his batting average remains surprisingly high.

what to buy: Because Roach's vast output has been so stylistically diverse, you'll probably want to start with his two-CD jamaican music 4: deejay style

In the late 1950s Jamaica's neighborhood dances, held by competing "sound systems," became the primary way most of the island enjoyed music. The sound system was essentially a mobile, massively amplified stereo. "Selectors" moved the crowd by spinning the hottest records of the day; Count Machuki and King Stitt were unique in that they stoked the fire of the dance by introducing the "scorchers" with short, punchy flurries of rhythmic word patter—making them widely considered to be the forebears of the deejay style of reggae (and the rap beyond).

By the late '60s bass-bolstered instrumental B-sides, called "versions," were the rage of record at sound-system dances. When King Tubby decided to add U-Roy's funky patois jive over his own crafty remixes of these versions, it ignited a phenomenon called "deejaying" or "toasting." U-Roy's roller coaster timbre and staccato braggadocio masterfully slalomed through the rhythms of the mix, and he was the first to establish deejaying as a popular art form—in 1969 he held the top three chart positions in the country, and from that point onward deejaying would be an integral part of Jamaican music.

The deejay's slang-peppered commentary on both the personal and the political over raw, heavy beats bestowed the bloodline that led to the birth of hip-hop in late-'70s New York, with the ruling deejays (like the Stateside MCs) attaining their often briefly assumed thrones by captivating the crowds with creative catchphrases and imaginative, intensely rhythmic rhyme flows. The immortal U-Roy's Version Galore, Words of Wisdom, Dread in a Babylon, and Natty Rebel are outstanding examples of the deejay form, as are the John Coltrane–inspired Big Youth's seminal Screaming Target, Dread Locks Dread, and Natty Cultural Dread. Other slippery-tongued microphone maestros include Prince Jazzbo, Dennis Alcapone, Trinity, Dillinger, Prince Far I, Yellowman, and I-Roy.

Todd Shanker

greatest-hits collection, Dreaming . . . Now, Then: A Retrospective 1982–1997 ♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1998, prod. Steve Roach), a 21-track overview of his 15-year association with the Fortuna label that charts his artistic evolution from promising synth-noodler to one of America's finest ethno-ambient fusionists. For a more cohesive creative statement, try Halcyon Days ♪♪♪♪½ (Fathom, 1996, prod. Steve Roach), his gorgeously produced collaboration with the similarly talented Stephen Kent and Kenneth Newby, both of Trance Mission fame. Also well worth a listen is David Hudson's Gunyal ♪♪♪♪½ (Black Sun, 1998, prod. Steve Roach), a gloriously transcendental Australian Aboriginal concept album teaming Roach with his friend and significant artistic influence.

what to buy next: Although Roach has always been fairly well received by critics, few of his solo projects have gotten the same adulation as Suspended Memories, his group with multi-instrumentalist Jorge Reyes and guitarist Suso Saiz. Earth Island ♪♪♪♪ (Fathom, 1994, prod. Steve Roach) is a captivating patchwork of surreal soundscapes navigating heretofore uncharted territories of time, space, and mind. Likewise, Kiva ♪♪♪♪ (Fathom, 1995, prod. Steve Roach), a collaboration with ambient composer Michael Stearns and Native American musician Ron Sunsinger, builds hallucinogenic mirages of sound around source recordings made at Native ceremonies fueled by the natural mind-alterers peyote and ayahuasca.

what to avoid: Although not altogether bad, some of Roach's early offerings are likely to prove dangerous to those without a natural immunity to the sound of new-age synth-wanking. If this sounds like you, stick primarily with his post-1990 efforts.

the rest:
Now/Traveler ♪♪ (Fortuna, 1982/1983/1992)
Structures from Silence ♪♪ (Fortuna, 1984)
Empetus ♪♪♪ (Fortuna, 1986)
(With Kevin Braheny) Western Spaces ♪♪♪½ (Fortuna, 1987)
Quiet Music ♪♪♪ (Fortuna, 1988)
Dreamtime Return ♪♪♪♪½ (Fortuna, 1988)
(With Kevin Braheny and Michael Stearns) Desert Solitaire ♪♪♪½ (Fortuna, 1989)
(With David Hudson and Sarah Hopkins) Australia: Sound of the Earth ♪♪♪♪½ (Fortuna, 1990)
(With Robert Rich) Strata ♪♪♪♪½ (Hearts of Space, 1990)
(With Robert Rich) Soma ♪♪♪♪½ (Hearts of Space, 1992)
World's Edge ♪♪♪ (Fortuna, 1992)
(With Suspended Memories) Forgotten Gods ♪♪♪♪ (Hearts of Space, 1993)
The Lost Pieces ♪♪♪½ (Projekt, 1993)
Origins ♪♪♪♪½ (Fortuna, 1993)
Artifacts ♪♪♪♪½ (Fortuna, 1994)
(With Vidna Obmana) Well of Souls ♪♪♪♪½ (Projekt, 1995)
The Magnificent Void ♪♪♪♪½ (Fathom, 1996)
(With Vidna Obmana) Cavern of Sirens ♪♪♪♪ (Projekt, 1996)
On This Planet ♪♪♪♪ (Fathom, 1997)
(With Roger King) Dust to Dust ♪♪♪♪½ (Projekt, 1998)
(With Vir Unis) Body Electric ♪♪♪♪½ (Projekt, 1999)

worth searching for: Like any good prolific artist, Roach has released a number of albums that are difficult to find or are long out of print, but only a few merit the effort to track them down. His 1994 solo effort, The Dream Circle (Soundquest, 1994), and his three-CD collaboration with Vidna Obmana, Ascension of Shadows ♪♪♪♪ (Projekt, 1998), were both limited-edition runs of 2,000 copies. And there are two ambient albums available only through Roach's Web site at www.steveroach.com, Slow Heat (Timeroom Editions, 1998) and Truth & Beauty: The Lost Pieces, Volume Two (Timeroom Editions, 1999).

influences:
⏮ Tangerine Dream, Brian Eno, Can, David Hudson

⏭ Dead Can Dance, Trance Mission, Soma, Lights in a Fat City see also: David Hudson, Ron Sunsinger, Takadja, Omar Faruk Tekbilek, Trance Mission

Bret Love

Roaring Lion

Calypso

Born Rafael de Lion, 1909, in Trinidad. Based in Port of Spain, Trinidad.

At 90, Roaring Lion is the last surviving member of calypso's first golden age in the 1930s. He began singing in 1927, at a time when singers were expected to improvise a lyric on the spot, and many of his most famous tunes, like "Mary Ann" and "Ugly Woman," evolved out of lyrics he composed during various impromptu battles with other singers.

In the early 1930s, when islanders realized people would pay to see calypso singers perform, the first "tents" were created, and Lion became star of the Victory tent. In 1933, Lion, Atilla the Hun, King Radio, and Lord Beginner became the first singers to perform throughout the Caribbean, and in 1934 Lion and Atilla became the first calypsonians to record, when they cut sides for New York's Brunswick Records. Lion also sang for President Roosevelt, appeared on Broadway at Rudy Vallee's Hollywood Café, and became the first calypso singer to make a movie when he sang his famous "Ugly Woman" in the film Happy Go Lucky, the first Hollywood movie made in Trinidad.

Lion was an early Carnival favorite and won the Road March Crown from 1933 to 1938. He entertained the British and American troops stationed in Trinidad during WWII and opened Calypsoville, one of the original calypso nightclubs. After the war he lived in England for 11 years, constantly touring the continent and founding the Coloured People's Accommodation Bureau, an organization that helped West Indians and Africans settle into their new immigrant life. As he nears the century mark, the Lion still performs regularly and composes new material.

what's available: The 25 tracks on Sacred 78's ♪♪♪♪♪ (Ice, 1994, prod. various) are from the Lion's heyday in the 1930s, and the digital remastering is remarkable. Lion has an impish quality; you can almost hear him smirk as he sings of love, politics, and sex. Included are the original recordings of "Mary Ann" (later a hit for the Easy Riders), "Bananas," and "Ugly Woman," a sexist standard the world over ("If you wanna be happy the rest of your life, never make a pretty woman your wife"). The music has a stronger Cuban influence than modern soca (the descendant of calypso), and the big band arrangements are full of spunk.

influences:

- Sparrow, Kitchener, Arrow, Calypso Rose

j. poet

Kim Robertson

Celtic harp

Born in WI, USA. Based in USA.

To many, the first name in Celtic harp is Kim Robertson. Her sensuous arrangements have become a hallmark of the folk harp community, the tunes she plays magically woven into a tapestry of ethereal threads. Her touch on the strings is firm, yet delicate, her expression evocative, and her arrangements perfectly suited for the instrument. Robertson plays a wide variety of styles, from Celtic tunes to original works, from American folk favorites to new-age sounds. One of her greatest skills is improvisation, in which she soars to the height of her expression. Robertson's dedication extends to spending much of her time running harp workshops, both in the U.S. and abroad. She has written several books on music and published two instructional videos as well. Robertson began playing in her senior year of high school, learning the pedal harp. She enjoyed the instrument but had no desire to join a symphony, so she did not pursue it as a career. Instead she entered college as a piano major. Her background in that field included jazz improvisation, a skill that she translated beautifully to the harp in general and to the Celtic harp in particular; she discovered that instrument during the mid-'70s while attending a retreat for its practitioners. She soon fell in love with the instrument, exploring its many voices and experimenting with its possibilities. The result was her own unique sound, capturing the spirit of the harp itself and carrying it to the listener in music. Some of her more recent work has also included her equally unique vocals.

what to buy: Displaying her talent for evocative arrangements of traditional tunes, Robertson plays an array of delightful works on Wind Shadows II ♪♪♪♪½ (Invincible, 1987, prod. Liv Khalsa). Her arrangements of "Arise and Get Dressed," "Black Nag," "Star of County Down," and "Bridget Cruise" display her work at its very best. The selection will please fans of traditional Celtic music. Celtic Christmas II ♪♪♪♪½ (Invincible, 1990, prod. Liv Khalsa) is among the best Christmas albums around. A broad collection of well-known and lesser-known carols, this recording combines the delicate strains of Robertson's harping with the haunting voice of a cello, played by Virginia Kron. Special selections include a delightful Spanish carol, "A la Nanita Nana"; the American folk song "As Joseph Was a Walking"; and a wonderful 13th-century French "Pastourelle."

what to buy next: On Treasures of the Celtic Harp ♪♪♪♪ (Dargason Music, 1995, prod. Joemy Wilson, Scott Fraser), Robertson returns to arranging traditional material after a period of largely original work. Such gems as "Glenlivet" and "The Water Is Wide" sparkle on this fresh recording, along with four of her own compositions. Incorporating haunting flute by Bettine Clemen and an occasional cello or percussion accompaniment, Love Song to a Planet ♪♪♪½ (Invincible, 1994, prod. Bettine Clemen, Kim Robertson) is an uplifting collection of traditional tunes and new material, all expressing the love and joy the musicians have for this earth. A moving rendition of the "New World Symphony" theme launches this album, followed by several choice Robertson originals. There are also stirring arrangements of "Mist-Covered Mountains," "The Dark Island," and "Amazing Grace." Joy! Joy! Joy! ♪♪♪½ (Invincible, 1989, prod. Liv Khalsa), another Christmas recording, features remarkable reworkings of familiar carols. Sometimes bordering on jazz, as in the stirring rendition of "Joy to the World," sometimes soft and romantic, as in the gentle "Jesus Lullaby," Robertson and flautist Steve Kujala paint a highly evocative Christmas picture.

what to avoid: If you are looking for active-listening music, avoid all of the Crimson Collection series: Crimson Collection, Volumes I and II ♪ (Invincible, 1991, prod. Liv Khalsa); Crimson Collection, Volumes IV and V ♪ (Invincible, 1991, prod. Liv Khalsa); and Crimson Collection, Volumes VI and VII ♪ (Invincible, 1991, prod. Liv Khalsa). These recordings each contain two half-hour-long chants, featuring Liv Khalsa's voice and Robertson's harp. Although the original themes are all strong, they are very repetitive, meant to be used as a background for deep meditation or prayer, and promoted for their healing powers. Although excellent for their intended purpose, they will not excite a listener looking for more than background sound.

the rest:

Wind Shadows ♪♪♪ (Invincible, 1983)
Water Spirit ♪♪♪½ (Invincible, 1987)
Moonrise ♪♪ (Invincible, 1987)
Celtic Christmas ♪♪♪½ (Invincible, 1987)

Wild Iris ♪♪ (Invincible, 1989)
Angels in Disguise ♪♪½ (Invincible, 1990)
Gratitude ♪♪♪ (Invincible, 1990)
Tender Shepherd ♪♪♪½ (Gourd Music, 1992)
Wood, Fire, and Gold ♪♪♪ (Dargason Music, 1996) Spiral Gate N/A (Narada, 1999)

influences:
◀◀ Virginia Kron, Singh Kaur ▶▶ Knodel & Valencia, Sunita Staneslow

Jo Hughey Morrison

Robbie Robertson

Classic rock, modern Native American, electronica

Born Jaime Robbie Robertson, July 5, 1943, in Toronto, Ontario, Canada. Based in Los Angeles, CA, USA.

Contemporary audiences probably know Robbie Robertson most as a driving force behind classic rockers The Band, or as a hit-making musical director for big-budget movies (most recently masterminding Eric Clapton and Babyface's double-Grammy-winning "Change the World" as executive soundtrack producer for Phenomenon). But history may regard him best for his riveting explorations of his Native American heritage. At this writing it's a relatively recent phase of his career, which has produced just two albums, but each one is a landmark. Robertson's introspective odyssey began with the score to the Turner Broadcasting documentary series The Native Americans, and continued with his Grammy-nominated Contact from the Underworld of Redboy. On each, he employed that most modern of forms, electronic music, to evoke not the trendy but the timeless, pursuing a more ambient sound on the former album and a more syncopated techno-dance one on the latter. These sets are all-star affairs in which the communal voice of Native tradition and the multi-perspectival aesthetic of postmodernism converge. True to a culture that doesn't partition art and life the way the European one has—and to an embattled people that doesn't have the luxury of differentiating the personal and political as the dominant society may—Robertson's definition of "all-star" ranges from Native American musical luminaries (Ulali), to healers (Primeaux & Mike), to imprisoned activists (Leonard Peltier). Like the "keepers of the ancient future" in one of his lyrics, this rock icon—and the proud civilization he helps speak for—has only begun to fight.

what to buy: The former Band leader creates a new kind of classic for the age of electronica with Contact from the Underworld of Redboy ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1998, prod. various). Alternately ethereal and frenetic, Robertson collages a groundbreaking synthesis of Native rhythm and computerized bpm, of venerable belief and futuristic sound textures. The non-conformity of popular musics past is revived in deadly earnest by guest vocals from framed American Indian Movement advocate Leonard Peltier (taped by phone from super-max incarceration); golden-voiced but controversial peyote-ceremony healers Primeaux & Mike; and, sampled from an old ethnographic field recording, the unquiet ghost of 16-year-old Leah Hicks-Manning, who grew up to become Native activist John Trudell's mother-in-law before perishing with his wife and their children in a suspicious arson the U.S. government refused to investigate. When not yielding the spotlight to his honored guests, Robertson sings/narrates the tracks in a hushed and measured rasp by turns mystically reverent and smolderingly indignant. Historically significant (if a bit sonically out of place) is the bonus inclusion of Robertson's surprise gay club hit, "Take Your Partner by the Hand." Music for the Native Americans ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1994, prod. Robbie Robertson) was credited to Robbie Robertson and the Red Road Ensemble, an impressive honor roll of Native performers, including Jim Wilson, Ulali, Douglas Spotted Eagle, the Silvercloud Singers, Kashtin, and Coolidge (the last-named being a prototypical version of the well-received trio Walela). Wilson's stirring "Coyote Dance" appears on his own innovative Little Wolf project's debut album, and Ulali's ethereal harmonies on "Mahk Jchi (Heartbeat Drum Song)" will recur in your dreams. Wilson and Robertson's "Ghost Dance" uses affecting MOR funk (and a striking babble-drone intro and outro) to deliver a stinging account of 19th-century religious persecution. Coolidge matches Ulali revelation for revelation on the dream-like "The Vanishing Breed." The steady but ominous beat of "It Is a Good Day to Die" finds Robertson exactly half-way on his road from the tribal rhythm to the techno pulse, while Kashtin's anthem "Akua Tuta" breaks it all down to the most striking folk-rock being produced today. An exhilarating chant from a Manhattan skyscraper by Ulali and the Silvercloud Singers, and a bizarrely beautiful insect-and-opera-singer prototype of Little Wolf's "Twisted Hair," are the set's benediction. Even in electro-classic-rock mode Robertson's playing is impeccable, and the lyrics are among the best of his career. The gifted Wilson, who doubled as musical director, has become more well known in this technology-rich genre by virtue of having started his career with it, but Robertson remains a late-blooming master as well.

best of the rest:
(With The Band) Music from Big Pink ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1968)
(With The Band) The Band ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1969)
(With The Band) Rock of Ages ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1972) Robbie Robertson ♪♪♪ (Geffen, 1987)

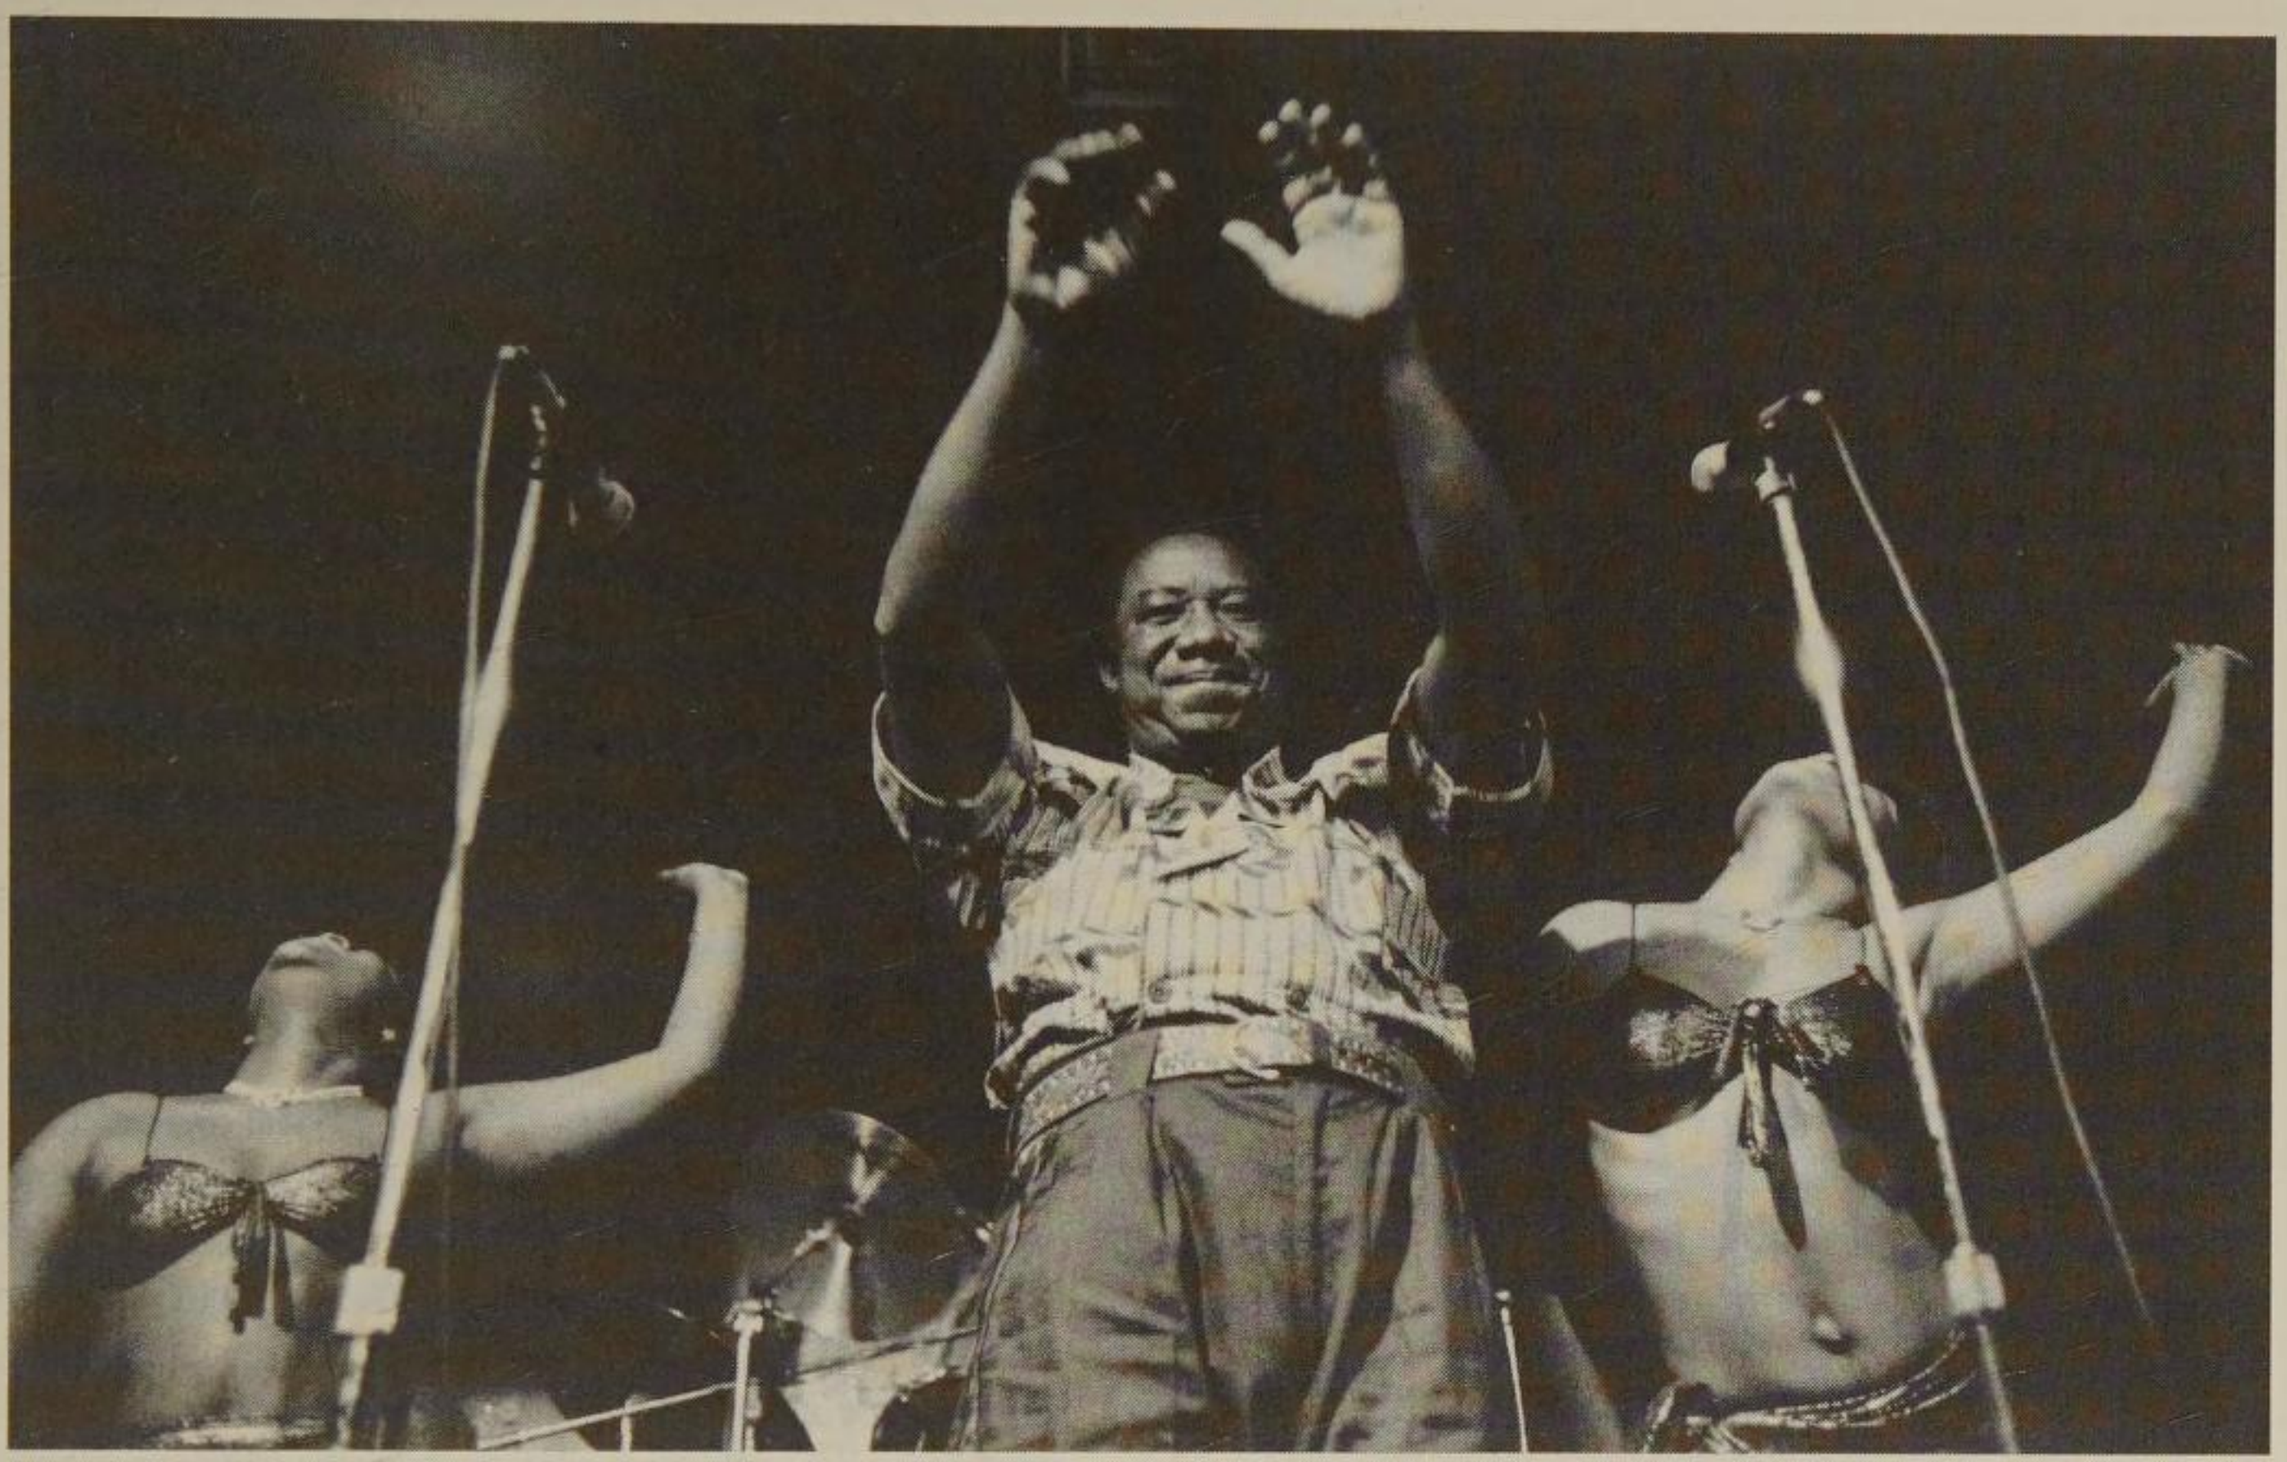
influences:
◀◀ Ronnie Hawkins, Bob Dylan, Tom Bee, Buffy Sainte-Marie, Jim Wilson, Leonard Peltier



Tabu Ley Rochereau

Walela, Little Wolf

see also: Kashtin, Primeaux & Mike, Douglas Spotted Eagle, John Trudell, Pura Fé, Walela, Jim Wilson (sidebar)

Adam McGovern

Tabu Ley Rochereau /Tabu Ley /Pascal Tabu Rochereau

Soukous, Afropop

Born 1940, in Bandundu, Congo. Based in Paris, France.

If Congolese music has one living legend, it is Tabu Ley Rochereau. With more than 200 albums and 2,000 songs to his credit, Rochereau still tours and records prolifically with his large ensemble, adapting new trends and keeping his style fresh. Many stars of Congolese music started their careers or enjoyed their earliest success in Rochereau's band Afrisa, including Sam Mangwana, Faya Tess, and M'Bilia Bell. It was the extension of a great musical dynasty in which Rochereau himself had apprenticed with Joseph "Le Grand Kalle" Kabasele's epic African Jazz band. Congo rules African pop, and Tabu Ley Rochereau is its king (a title for which he long vied good-naturedly with the late, legendary Franco). Rochereau has sung all his life, as a child finding a focus for his skills in the hymns at Catholic school before writing his first hit, "Besama Muchacha," at the age of 14 with African Jazz. The year was 1954, and the band dominated the Congolese music scene, with much more to come. In an interview the artist explained how he got his name—all of it: "Tabu is my father's name; Ley is my father's name. Rochereau is a name I got in grammar school. During a French history lesson I was the only one who knew the names of Napoleon's generals; the rest of the class was punished because of it. They teased me and called me Rochereau, but I liked the sound of it and kept it as my artistic name." A fitting enough overture to the history he himself would make.

what to buy: Africa Worldwide ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Scott Billington) is a 35th-anniversary live recording of Rochereau and his excellent ensemble. The songs provide a retrospective of his long career, while showing that this powerhouse of ideas is anything but a nostalgia act.

best of the rest:
Babeti Soukous ♪♪♪ (RealWorld, 1989)
Man from Kinshasa ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1991)
Muzina ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1994)

worth searching for: Rochereau is a superstar in the French-speaking world, a fact reflected by the more than 30 recordings available on French label Sonodisc and obtainable through Stern's USA, (212) 964-5455.

influences:
⏮ Joseph "Le Grand Kalle" Kabasele, Manu Dibango, Dr. Nico, Franco/OK Jazz

⏭ Sam Mangwana, Papa Wemba

see also: Africando, M'Bilia Bel, Dr. Nico, Franco, Sam Mangwana

David Poole

Rock en Español

There's always been a truism in rock 'n' roll: sing it in English or don't bother to sing it at all. Despite fervent cults for German art-rock, French cabaret, and Japanese noise, native English speakers have relegated most foreign-language pop to the back of the musical bus. But the Spanish-language world is fighting back and it has a potent weapon: rock en Español. As with so much of the globe, many pop/rock musicians in Spain and Latin America (as well as Latino players in the U.S.) merely imitated their Anglo-American counterparts from the '50s through the '70s. There were exceptions, of course. From Ritchie Valens through Santana and Los Lobos, the West Coast began exporting a unique Latino rock subculture—though much of it was in English. That started to change during the '80s, when musicians across Spain, Latin America, and the United States—raised on rock and ranchera, beatbox and bolero—began mixing it all up and singing about things that mattered to them, in Spanish—global commercialism be damned. Unsurprisingly, rock en Español got its initial start in countries with the closest ties to the United States or Europe, namely Mexico, Argentina, and Spain. Despite disdain or outright hostility from local authorities, "los roqueros" flocked around such acts as El Tri, a smoky-voiced Mexican blues-rock outfit whose roots go back to the '60s and Mexico City's working class, and Charly Garcia, a musical rebel with a cause in a clamped-down Argentina. It wasn't until the early '90s, though, that this movement bubbled up from the underground and became a force with which the English-speaking world has had to reckon. Spanish folk-rock duo Duncan Dhu signed to Sire and teamed with Argentinian rocker Miguel Mateos for a small-scale U.S. tour that proved there was an audience outside their home countries. Meanwhile, back home, the socially aware salsa/punk/cumbia/Afropop of Maldita Vecindad (Mexico); sassy alternative rock of Soda Stereo (Argentina); dreamy, swirling rock of Caifanes (Mexico); electro-dance grooves of Los Prisioneros (Chile); punk folklorico of Café Tacuba (Mexico); punk-funk-ska of Los Fabulosos Cadillacs (Argentina); sublime, quirky pop of Fobia (Mexico); beautiful, post-McCartney pop of Fito Paez (Argentina); lightweight pop-reggae of Mana (Mexico); and heavy, Doors-like rock of Heroes del Silencio (Spain) began filling clubs and stadiums. No doubt the movement has been helped along by the collapse of the region's military regimes, the introduction of MTV Latino, and the large Spanish-speaking population in los Estados Unidos. By the mid- to late '90s, there was cool stuff coming out of Panama (Los Rabanes); Venezuela (Desorden Publico, Los Amigos Invisibles); Colombia (Aterciopelados); Peru (Pedro Suarez-Vertiz); and the United States (Maria Fatal, Los Olvidados, King Chango, Yeska). In fact, rock en Español could end up being a victim of its own success. With a Grammy category to itself, at least two slick California-based fanzines (Retila, La Banda Elastica), specialty record labels (Aztlan, Grita!), and increased media exposure, the young genre could find its unique, fiery cross-cultural musical and political attitudes crushed by hype and a broader, mainstream audience. However, until then, rock en Español—with its often ferocious, soccer game–style live shows, musicians who can skillfully play both sides of the rhythmic border, and lyrics honed by culturally divergent situations—proves that rock's innate spirit doesn't talk only in English and can speak to everyone.

what to buy: Two compilations are absolute musts—Silencio = Muerte: Red Hot + Latin ♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram/Hola, 1996, prod. various) and Reconquista! The Latin Rock Invasion ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino/Zyanya, 1997, prod. various). The former, a high point in the anti-AIDS "Red Hot" benefit discs, pairs leading Latin lights with cutting-edge English-language performers: Los Lobos with Money Mark; Café Tacuba with David Byrne; and Los Fabulosos Cadillacs with Fishbone. The latter disc is more of a historical sampler of the genre, though compiler Ruben Guevara keeps things on the punk and political end of the spectrum.

what to buy next: In terms of individual acts, here's the essential list: Maldita Vecindad, El Circo ♪♪♪♪♪ (BMG Latin, 1991, prod. Gustavo Santaolalla), a perfect introduction to the genre with its heady blend of cross-continental styles and social observation; Fito Paez, Circo Beat ♪♪♪♪♪ (WEA Latina, 1994, prod. Phil Manzanera, Fito Paez), the Beatles meet Elvis Costello in Buenos Aires; Plastilina Mosh, Aquamosh ♪♪♪½ (Capitol, 1998, prod. Tom Rothrock, Rob Schnapf, Plastilina Mosh), Beck meets the Beastie Boys meets Esquivel in Mexico; Aterciopelados, La Pipa de la Paz ♪♪♪♪½ (BMG Latin, 1996, prod. Phil Manzanera), inventive, intelligent rock fronted by the charismatic Andrea Echeverri; Los Fabulosos Cadillacs, Rey Azucar ♪♪♪♪½ (Sony Discos, 1995, prod. Chris Frantz, Tina Weymouth), a propulsive pastiche of ska, reggae, and punk with some top-shelf guest stars (Mick Jones, Deborah Harry, Big Youth); Caifanes, El Silencio ♪♪♪♪ (BMG Latin, 1992, prod. Adrian Belew), moody yet hooky Cure-like art-rock; Soda Stereo, Cancion Animal ♪♪♪♪ (CBS Discos, 1990, prod. Gustavo Cerati, Zeta Bosio), muscular pop-psychedelia alt.rock; Los Amigos Invisibles, The New Sound of the Venezuelan Gozadera ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros./Luaka Bop, 1998, prod. Andres Levin), a party-rocking blend of disco, acid jazz, and bossa-nova lounge; Todos Tus Muertos, Dale Aborigen ♪♪♪½ (Grita!, 1996, prod. Todos Tus Muertos, Guillermo Picolini), ultra-political Bad Brains–ish punk-funk from a group fronted by two Afro-Argentinians; Fobia, Amor Chiquito ♪♪♪½ (BMG Latin, 1995, prod. Gustavo Santaolalla, Fobia), clever and quirky pop-rock; Café Tacuba, Café Tacuba ♪♪♪ (WEA Latina, 1992, prod. Gustavo Santaolalla) and Avalancha de Exitos ♪♪♪ (WEA Latina, 1996, prod. Gustavo Santaolalla, Anibal Kerpel), both fun stylistic hodgepodges, ranging from Mexican traditionalism to Beck-ish post-modernism, marred only by the sometimes screeching vocals of Cosme (who changes names every album); and Mana, Donde Jugaran Los Ninos? ♪♪½ (WEA Latina, 1992, prod. Fher, Alex Quintana, Jose Quintana), the best album from the Guadalajara outfit whose mix of Police-lite reggae, environmentalism, and suave good looks has made it a major act at home and the first rock en Español band to move to the arena level in the States. Finally, rock en Español is as diverse as its English counterpart. There's ska, rap, and even Celtic-Hispano rock. One of the best of the ska-influenced bands is Desorden Publico, whose two U.S. albums—Canto Popular de la Vida y Muerte ♪♪♪½ (Sony Discos, 1995, prod. Carlos Savalla) and Plomo Revienta ♪♪♪♪ (Sony Latin, 1997, prod. K.C. Porter)—are breezy and infectious. Pura Eskañol: Latin Ska Underground ♪♪♪ (Aztlan, 1997, prod. various) is a solid compilation of U.S.-based acts. Rap en Español exploded in the mid-'90s thanks to albums such as Molotov's Donde Jugaran Las Ninas? ♪♪½ (Universal, 1997, prod. Gustavo Santaolalla)—whose title is a take-off on the popular Mana album mentioned above—and Control Machete's Mucho Barato ♪♪♪ (PolyGram Latino, 1996, prod. Jason Roberts, Antonio Hernandez), both Mexican acts very much influenced by Cypress Hill and the Beastie Boys. The best, though, may come from Spain's Latino Diablo, whose El Mundo No Es de la Gente Humilde ♪♪♪♪ (Grita, 1998, prod. Latino Diablo) pounds hard yet has subtle touches. Also from Spain, Celtas Cortos combine a love of both Celtic and Spanish cultures on the knockout En Estos Dias Inciertos . . . ♪♪♪♪ (WEA Latina, 1996, prod. Eugenio Munoz, Celtas Cortos).

worth searching for: Some of the most striking music in the genre doesn't get released by American labels, and Latin divisions of U.S. companies are notoriously dim-witted about promoting rock en Español. That means seeking out mom-and-pops or small chains in Latino neighborhoods that carry imports from Latin America to find such gems as Spain's Los Planetas, whose Super 8 (BMG Mexico, 1995) is an explosion of Replacements/Nirvana–style riff-o-rama.

influences:

◀◀ Santana, Los Lobos, War, Los Brazos, Ritchie Valens

▶▶ Ozomatli, Maria Fatal, Bloque, Los de Abajo

Cary Darling

Rockin' Dopsie

Zydeco

Born Alton Rubin, February 10, 1932, in Carencro, LA, USA. Died August 26, 1993, in Lafayette, LA, USA.

Most people will know Rockin' Dopsie from "That Was Your Mother" on Paul Simon's Graceland, but that was just a footnote to a long and successful career playing zydeco. The former Alton Rubin was born in Carencro, Louisiana, and spent much of his childhood working the land, either picking cotton or cutting cane. He started playing the accordion at 14, encouraged by his father, who was an accordionist himself. Being a lefty, Rubin had to flip over the accordion and play it upside down—the same way Jimi Hendrix played the guitar. He taught himself by learning tunes heard over the radio. His local reputation soon surpassed that of his father, but his career really took off when he moved to Lafayette and began to play the clubs with his cousin Chester Zeno on washboard. Rubin moved up to the three-row button accordion and got the moniker "Dopsie" from an out-of-town dancer who performed in Lafayette. The "Rockin'" was for the drive in his playing, and his bands throughout the '60s and '70s cooked. His sons Alton Jr. and David joined him on drums and frattoir (washboard) respectively. There is always a respect for Creole music in his records, and, in turn, a lasting admiration for his legacy among the artists who are carrying it on.

what to buy: Louisiana Music ♪♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1991, prod. Shane Keister, Ahmet Ertegun) was Dopsie's major-label debut, and he got to keep it gritty while having the production values he deserved. This does what a good zydeco record should—it sizzles and then cools into an occasional Ivory Joe Hunter tune like "Since I Lost My Baby" to let you catch your breath.

what to buy next: Big Bad Zydeco ♪♪♪♪ (Sonet, 1988, prod. Sam Charters) is worth buying just to hear how a zydeco band reshapes "Jambalaya"—a tune Hank Williams reshaped from the Cajun two-step "Grand Texas"—and brings it home in cooking fashion. Dopsie could drive a dance floor all night with his accordion alone, but this band likes being driven. The production is sparse, but it suits the sound well.

Rockin' Dopsie

the rest:
Crowned Prince of Zydeco ♫♫♫♫ (Maison de Soul, 1987)
Saturday Night Zydeco ♫♫♫½ (Maison de Soul, 1988)
Good Rockin' ♫♫♫♫ (GNP, 1988)
Zy-De-Co-In' ♫♫♫½ (Gazell, 1989)
Feets Don't Fail Me Now ♫♫♫♫ (Aim, 1994)

worth searching for: French Style (Sonet, 1982, prod. Sam Charters) brings Dopsie together with Cajun fiddler Dewey Balfa with mixed results. Sometimes it works very well, sometimes it's a little odd—sometimes even in the same tune. Still, a team-up of two legends is worth finding.

influences:
⏮ Boozoo Chavis, Clifton Chenier, Amédée Ardoin

⏭ John Delafose, Roy Carrier, Chubby Carrier

see also: Balfa Brothers, Clifton Chenier

Jared Snyder

Rockin' Sidney

Zydeco, swamp pop

Born Sidney Simien, April 9, 1938, in Lebeau, LA, USA. Died February 25, 1998, in Lafayette, LA, USA.

Sidney Simien began playing guitar and harmonica before discovering accordion (he also played organ in Lake Charles lounges). He started playing professionally in his late teens and had his first regional hit in 1957. His 1962 chart record "No Good Woman" was backed with "You Ain't Nothin' but Fine," which would eventually be covered by Rockpile. During his days on the soul circuit he was "Count Rockin' Sidney," complete with turban. Like Lynn August, he also worked the Lafayette circuit as an organist. Starting in the 1970s he began to work more in a zydeco vein that owed much to Clifton Chenier, but it was in 1985 that he struck gold with the unlikely hit "My Toot Toot." This song is loosely based on a French term of endearment, "my special all and all." "Toot Toot" won a Grammy and received radio airplay far outside of the normal spectrum for zydeco recordings. As is to be expected, Sidney's sound is much more soul- and R&B-influenced than most other zydeco performers. His recordings are almost always a mixed bag.

what to buy: My Toot Toot ♫♫♫ (Maison de Soul, 1986, prod. Sidney Simien) includes the more band-oriented version of the title hit, probably the most well-known zydeco song there is. Sidney covers his hits with a good solid ensemble that includes Katie Webster, Warren Storm, and Marcus Miller, but this is still missing the level of passion and excitement found on most zydeco records.

what to buy next: On My Zydeco Shoes Got the Zydeco Blues ♫♫½ (Maison de Soul, 1984, prod. Sidney Simien), Sidney plays all the instruments. Sometimes this works, sometimes it doesn't. Many tunes from My Toot Toot also appear here.

the rest:
Give Me a Good Time Woman ♫♫♫ (Maison de Soul, 1987)
Mais Yeah Chere! ♫♫♫ (Maison de Soul, 1992)
Zydeco Is Fun ♫♫ (Maison de Soul, 1992)
Boogie, Blues, and Zydeco ♫♫½ (Maison de Soul, 1995) worth searching for: Forget about "Toot Toot"; They Call Me Rockin' ♫♫♫♫ (Flyright, 1974, prod. Floyd Soileau) is the record you want to check out. It's not zydeco or Cajun music, it's the R&B you could find in the same area in the 1960s and 1970s. This is what Sidney is really known for, and They Call Me Rockin' brings together his hits and his B-sides. The most famous track here is "You Ain't Nothin' but Fine," but there are plenty of excellent tunes to go around.

influences:
⏮ Clifton Chenier

Nathan Williams, Lynn August, Zydeco Force, John Delafose

Jared Snyder

Rocky Boy Singers

Traditional Chippewa-Cree drum group

Formed 1980s, in Rocky Boy, MT, USA. Based in Rocky Boy, MT, USA.

Lloyd Top Sky, lead vocals, drum; Kenny Standing Rock, vocals, drum; Athan Standing Rock, vocals, drum; Clinton Standing Rock, vocals, drum; William Standing Rock, vocals, drum; Merle Tendoy, vocals, drum. (All members are from USA.)

The Rocky Boy Singers are a drum group that use the old Chippewa-Cree rhythms in an attempt to preserve the music of their tribal traditions.

what to buy: The music and drumming on Montana Homeland ♪♪♪ (SOAR, 1995, prod. Spotted Eagle) is well recorded and very traditional in style. Some tracks were composed by Lloyd Top Sky, others were given to him by elders like Hector Winnepeg and Alfred Driver.

the rest:

Rocky Boy Chippewa-Cree Grass Dance Songs ♪♪♪ (Indian House cassette, 1982)
Grass Dance and Jingle Dress Songs, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪ (Indian House, 1993)
Grass Dance and Jingle Dress Songs, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪ (Indian House, 1993)

influences:

Ponemah Chippewa Singers, Pigeon Lake Singers

j. poet

Amália Rodrigues

Fado

Born 1920, in the Alfama district of Lisbon, Portugal. Based in Portugal.

Amália Rodrigues is to fado what Celia Cruz is to salsa, Umm Kulthum is to Egyptian music, and Edith Piaf is to the art of French cabaret: a queen in her realm. Fado in Portugal, like tangos in Argentina and jazz in America, arose from the lower classes to become an art form associated with the country as a whole. It is a mournful sound, and its poetry is filled with resignation to the inevitability of fate. The classic fado group generally includes a singer and two guittarras (a pair of long-necked guitars with a sound approximating Greece's bouzouki). The legendary Maria Severa was evidently the first singer to bring fado from the rough-and-tumble environs of the impoverished, desperate Alfama district into society at large, but her reign took place in the mid-1800s. When Rodrigues started her career in 1939 most of the better-known fado singers were men, including Edmundo de Bettancourt and Lucos Junot—but she has since eclipsed all other fado artists in the eyes of her country and become the leading proponent of this art in the eyes of the world. Rodrigues, like Severa, came from the Alfama and rose from these humble beginnings by virtue of her amazingly powerful voice, the force of her personality, and her striking beauty. Rodrigues has toured Europe (with France proving to be especially receptive) and journeyed to various Portuguese-speaking communities around the world. Fado, as sung by Rodrigues, has also had an impact on morna, the style of singing most closely associated with Cape Verde and its best-known vocalist, Cesaria Evora.

what to buy: Fado as "fun" is not really a Portuguese concept, but Amália Rodrigues Sings Portugal ♪♪♪♪♪ (Celluloid, 1990, prod. Jean-Jacques Lafaye) is packed with energy, almost begging the listener to dance. The guittarras ring and the vocals chime in this well-recorded recital, with "Fadinho Da Ti Maria Benta" and "Malhao De Cinfaes" taking pride of place. This may be the best starting point for newcomers to Rodrigues's art. The First Recordings ♪♪♪♪ (EPM, 1997, compilation prod. Philippe Zani) shows the power of Rodrigues's young voice in the stripped-down settings of pure fado.

what to buy next: On Obsessão ♪♪♪♪ (DRG, 1990, compilation prod. Joao Belchior Viegas), Rodrigues is backed by a quartet—two guittarras, one guitar, and a bass guitar—that puts the emphasis on her voice, where it belongs. Her remake of "Alma Minha" proves that Rodrigues can still sing with power, and the title tune is an admirable example of the kind of paean to puzzlement and acceptance that the best fadistas can bring forth at the drop of a hat. Fado Lisboeta ♪♪♪♪ (BCD, 1992) samples her material from the 1950s and 1960s, which means the traditional format is augmented with full orchestration on some of the songs. The short, mournful clarinet and oboe solos heard during "Que Deus Me Perdoe" could have served as inspiration for the misguided sessions with Don Byas referred to below. The stripped-down, roots-oriented sound of "Disse Mal de Ti" and "Sem Razão" is far more interesting.

what to avoid: The concept of blending American jazz with Portuguese fado is at the heart of Fado ♪ (Celluloid, 1990, prod. Jean-Jacques Lafaye), but the results just aren't that good. Rodrigues is still in fine voice throughout, but the great jazz saxophonist Don Byas had his playing grafted onto the basic tracks and sounds surprisingly nondescript.

best of the rest:

Amália Rodrigues at the Olympia Theatre ♪♪♪♪ (Monitor, 1960)
Queen of the Fado ♪♪♪♪ (Sounds of the World, 1992)
Amália Rodrigues ♪♪♪♪ (DRG, 1997)
Amália Rodrigues ♪♪♪♪ (Pharoah, 1997)

worth searching for: Hearing Rodrigues's potent alto on American Songs ♪♪♪ (Celluloid, 1992, prod. Jean-Jacques Lafaye), in arrangements by Norrie Paramor, is a guilty pleasure. Her renditions of "Who Will Buy" and "Blue Moon" won't replace other, better-known versions, but once heard they won't be forgotten either. There are only eight songs here, but the disc's likely cutout-bin price should be worth the experiment.

6/4/8 virginia rodrigues

influences:
⏮ Maria Severa
⏭ Bévinda, Dulce Pontes, Marta Dias

Garaud MacTaggart

Virginia Rodrigues

MPB (Brazilian Popular Music), samba, Candomblé, Christian devotional

Born 1964, in Salvador de Bahia, Brazil. Based in Brazil.

Had Virginia Rodrigues been born in Europe, she might have become one of history's all-time-great opera singers—so thank God she was born in Brazil. Gifted with a voice that's a new wonder of the world but coming from humble origins, Rodrigues brings a classical insight and excellence to a thoroughly modern variety of expression. The overused, opera-derived term "diva" ceases to be a cliché when the name "Virginia Rodrigues" appears after it; she goes beyond the triple-underlined belting of a Celine Dion to convey an emotional range as wide as her vocal range. And the Three Tenors have nothing on this one contralto, who avoids the mismatched overkill of a Pavarotti pop song by coming to her material from her own roots rather than from on high. Rodrigues calls upon the spirits of the Afro-Brazilian Candomblé religion for her phenomenal talents, and her concerts are enough to make a believer of anyone—they're not-of-this-earth events in which Rodrigues starts and finishes each song as if entering and waking from a trance. Rodrigues wants her voice to sing the realities of black Brazilians, whose recognition lags behind that of the dominant classes in her country as in the rest of the hemisphere (well whaddya know). In finding a fittingly stunning aural environment for her arresting vocals, it was Rodrigues's fortune to encounter wunderkind-cum–elder statesman Caetano Veloso and secure him as her debut album's artistic director. Rodrigues's drop-dead-gorgeous music with the ethnic-pride subtext must have struck a chord with Veloso, whose own Tropicalismo style was a good-time sound with metaphorically political lyrics that got him and others exiled from the Brazil of not too long ago. Of course, with lyrics all in Portuguese, the "message" of Rodrigues's music will remain subtextual to many listeners, and it is indeed best accessed through that wondrous voice, a testament to the artistic wealth that can be robbed from the world because some of its artists are born to material poverty. Rodrigues's story has a happily-ever-after, and whatever rewards she now reaps can't compare with her gift to the world.

what's available: You'd need the Jaws of Life to pry Sol Negro (Black Sun) ♪♪♪♪♪ (Hannibal/Rykodisc, 1998, prod. Celso Fonseca) off my stereo. Though it's Rodrigues's only album to date, it's like an advance "best of," with no two songs alike and not a bad one in the bunch. Recorded in an improvised home-studio setting, the album's immaculately intimate sound puts nothing between you and Rodrigues's heavenly voice, though an understated yet substantial array of sparing instrumentation compliments it impeccably. Rodrigues makes a trove of treasures from the Brazilian canon her own with interpretive gifts second to none, while this literally millennial event in the music of their country invites inspired cameos by three of Brazil's other very-living legends, Djavan, Gilberto Gil, and Milton Nascimento. The vocals and arrangements swoop and sway from the lilting to the sultry to the reverent, taking in everything from samba to liturgical chant. Forty minutes that changed the course of world-music history. Just wait and see.

influences:
⏮ Marcio Meireles, Milton Nascimento, Caetano Veloso, Djavan, Gilberto Gil, Maria Bethânia, Candomblé and Christian chant

see also: Djavan, Gilberto Gil, Milton Nascimento, Olodum, Caetano Veloso

Adam McGovern

Arsenio Rodríguez

Son montuno

Born August 30, 1911, in Güira de Macurije, Matanzas Province, Cuba. Died December 31, 1970, in New York, NY, USA.

When a horse kicked eight-year-old Arsenio Rodríguez in the head, the young lad's eyesight became history, but he wasn't deprived of a bright musical future. When he was 15 Rodríguez learned how to play the tres (a small guitar with three sets of paired strings), bass, maracas, and bongos from Victor Feliciano, a local musician. A few years later Rodríguez started composing tunes and playing tres with his own group, Sexteto Boston. By 1937 he was ready to move on to bigger things, joining the Conjunto Bellamar and the Casino De La Playa before forming his own first classic conjunto (a general term for Latin-music bands) in 1940. With his new group, Rodríguez reconfigured the classic sexteto and septeto lineups (by adding two more trumpets, a piano, and congas), and—because of the band's subsequent popularity—influenced the way many future Cuban outfits would be structured. This new group and Rodríguez's new songs became the foundation of both the mambo and what we know today as "salsa." In 1947 Rodríguez was in New York City, where a doctor told him there was no way to surgically restore his sight. While he was in the States, Rodríguez became involved in a recording session for Chano Pozo that included vocalists Miguelito Valdés and Tito Rodríguez (no relation), and members of Machito's orchestra. The communion with such formidable names must have had an impact on him, for upon returning to Cuba, Rodríguez ended up turning his group over to the legendary trumpeter Felix Chappotin just before moving back to New York City to live. Rodríguez continued to record and perform with various groups through the '60s, experimenting with lineup changes and different formats, including a musical hybrid that he called "quindembo." Even though the music he recorded during the '40s and '50s was influential in the Latin "roots revival" that took place in the late '60s and '70s, Rodríguez died in near obscurity.

what to buy: Dundunbanza ♪♪♪♪½ (Tumbao Cuban Classics, 1994, prod. various) contains a whole slew of hits that Rodríguez recorded in Cuba from 1946 to 1951 with his awesome conjunto. In addition to the leader and a healthy fistful of his compositions (including the title tune and the majestic "Ta Benito Eh"), the ensemble also featured the magical trumpet section of Felix Chappotin, Carmelo Alvarez, and Alfredo "Chocolate" Armenteros. After Rodríguez moved to New York City he hooked up with vocalists René Scull (his cousin, who was in Rodríguez's conjunto on the previous disc) and Candido Antomattei for the sessions found on Como Se Goza En El Barrio ♪♪♪♪ (Tumbao Cuban Classics, 1992, prod. various). The opening strains of "Esclavo Triste," with its subtle, swaying tres chords rubbing up against a pulsating piano line and understated trumpets, is almost an open invitation to licentious behavior.

what to buy next: Quindembo: Afro Magic—La Magia de Arsenio Rodríguez ♪♪♪½ (Epic/Sony Tropical, 1963/1995) was an experiment in what Rodríguez called "quindembo," a Congolese-based amalgam that substituted saxophones for the trumpets usually found in Cuban conjuntos. He even sings on "Canto Abacoa" and "Bruca Maniguá," and his tres solo on "Oración Lucumí" is absolutely marvelous. One of the landmark Latin music sessions of all time took place in 1947 at a New York City studio, and the results can be heard on Legendary Sessions: 1947–53 ♪♪♪½ (Tumbao Cuban Classics, 1992, prod. Gabriel Oller). The CD revolves around the marvelous conga player Chano Pozo and finds him in the spotlight with various groups, including a healthy handful of tunes with Rodríguez's conjunto.

best of the rest:
Arsenio Dice . . . ♪♪♪½ (Tico, 1968)
A Todos Los Barrios ♪♪♪½ (Cariño/BMG, 1974/1992)
Montuneando: 1946–50 ♪♪♪½ (Tumbao, 1993)
Clasicas De Un Sonero ♪♪♪½ (Seeco, 1998) worth searching for: Tributes to Arsenio Rodríguez abound! One of the first, Arsenio Rodríguez ♪♪♪½ (Artex, 1993, prod.

jamaican music 5: ska

The charging horns and intensely percussive rhythms of ska soared from the heart of downtown Kingston bands to the bull's-eye of the tiny nation's search for the first distinctively Jamaican sound—a search that was intensified in the wake of its new-found independence from Britain in 1962. Ska is the umbilical cord for all Jamaican cultural music, and was conceived from a combination of New Orleans R&B, traditional mento, big-band jazz, and sheer indigenous creativity.

The raw, ghetto sound of the amazing Skatalites is the style's archetype. Formed in 1963, the band produced vital, brassy music, which implemented a jerky riff on the offbeat, resulting in more hit songs than any other group in the nation's history. The band also provided superb backup for the top vocalists of the era, including the young Wailers; the Rasta-tinged Justin Hinds & the Dominoes; Lord Creator; and the sanctified Jamaican gospel of the Maytals. Led by the furnace-eyed Bob Marley, the Wailers' own string of ska hits was so popular that on the 7-inch dub plates for their singles the name of the group was replaced by the simple appellation "Scorcher!" Prince Buster developed a variation of ska that highlighted the piano and guitar instead of the brass on the accented beat, along with uniquely integrated hand claps and horn honks; it earned him monster hits as well. On New Year's Day 1965, Skatalite Don Drummond's murder of his girlfriend and subsequent institutionalization and suicide tragically portended the temporary demise of both the Skatalites and ska, as the cooler rhythms of the "rock-steady" style were soon to sway the island. But ska would rise again—and again, during the "two-tone" English revival of the late '70s, and a "third wave" in the U.S. in the '90s. Proudly resounding from a one-time slave depot, the jubilant horns and frenzied rhythms of ska announced a nation's freedom, a people's celebration, and—perhaps most important—the mostly poor and black "sufferahs'" unbridled optimism for a brighter future.

see also: The Skatalites

Todd Shanker

various), mixes classic Rodríguez performances with versions of his tunes by such artists as Chucho Valdés, Irakere, and Grupo Manguaré. There is also a recent, rather whacked-out album by avant jazz guitarist Mark Ribot, Mark Ribot y los Cubanos Postizos ♪♪♪½ (Atlantic, 1998, prod. J.D. Foster), with strange yet loving renditions of eight songs associated with Rodríguez and one written by Alfredo Boloña, the founder of Sexteto Boloña. The best of all the tributes, though, is probably the one that Sierra Maestra did, Dundunbanza! ♪♪♪♪½ (World Circuit, 1994, prod. Nick Gold, Marcos González), an album that smokes from beginning to end.

influences:
⏮ Isaac Oviedo, Victor Feliciano

⏭ Sierra Maestra, Conjunto Casino, Conjunto Matamoros

see also: Mario Bauzá, Irakere, Machito, Tito Rodríguez, Sexteto Boloña, Sierra Maestra, Chucho Valdés

Garaud MacTaggart

Silvio Rodríguez

Nueva trova

Born 1946, in San Antonio de los Baños, Havana Province, Cuba. Based in Havana, Cuba.

The songs of Silvio Rodríguez bear little resemblance to most Cuban music, where rhythm is king. He is the best known of the island's nueva trova ("new ballad") artists who emerged in the 1970s. A homegrown variant of the Latin American nueva canción ("new song") movement, nueva trova eschewed mainstream Cuban pop and its trappings. Rodriguez's best work is set to acoustic guitar with little or no percussion. That said, he has an amazingly broad palette of sound. He also has a gift for indelible, almost supernatural melodies and arrangements—as catchy as any capitalist ad jingles. His trademark is the easy-listening ballad with offbeat, subversive lyrics.

Rodríguez has been erroneously tagged "the Bob Dylan of Cuba." Sure, he's a folkie whose political tunes became anthems for a generation throughout the region. Yet Rodríguez is no protest singer. On the contrary he was—and is—an enthusiastic supporter of the Castro government, which took power when he was 12. Like the nueva canción singers elsewhere in Latin America, Rodríguez and fellow neuva trovadore Pablo Milanés wrote plenty of tender love songs while "protesting" against colonialism, machismo, and tyranny. Their early music was often anti-American—though partly inspired by U.S. folk. Still, Rodríguez's sound is miles from Dylan. With his sweet tenor voice, lilting melodies, and flexible song structures, he is closer to the European troubadour tradition: Rodríguez was influenced by French chanson and has often toured and recorded in Spain, beginning in 1976 when his international debut was released there.

Since then, Rodríguez has embraced more traditional Latin musical forms. In the mid-'80s he began collaborating with the groups Los Van Van and Afrocuba, and in 1990 he taped a live album with Irakere in Chile. Now a musical elder statesman and national hero with more than 20 releases under his belt, Rodríguez has remained active through the '90s. He returned impressively to acoustic music and then launched an ambitious four-part trilogy (!) contemplating his parents and his own maturation.

what to buy: Cuba Classics 1: Canciónes urgentes ♪♪♪♪♪ (Sire/Luaka Bop, 1991, prod. various) is the best place to start. This compilation on David Byrne's label plucks accessible tracks from the first decade-and-a-half of Rodríguez's career, from pop-, rock- and jazz-oriented work to the trademark acoustic ballads. Rodríguez's debut, Dias y Flores (Days and Flowers) ♪♪♪ (EGREM, 1975/Carthage/Hannibal, 1976, prod. Frank Fernandez), is uneven, ranging from the irresistible pop opener "Como esperando Abril" to some cheesy period production. But on Silvio ♪♪♪♪♪ (Fonomusic, 1992, prod. Silvio Rodríguez), Rodríguez makes a triumphant return to acoustic ballads after 14 years. He recorded all the music, voices, and sound effects—including champagne pouring and demented yodeling—alone in Havana between 1989 and 1992. This launched a trilogy that continued with Rodríguez ♪♪♪♪ (Fonomusic, 1994, prod. Silvio Rodríguez) and Dominguez ♪♪♪ (Fonomusic, 1996, prod. Silvio Rodríguez), dedicated to his father and mother respectively. Descartes ♪♪♪♪ (Fonomusic, 1998, prod. Silvio Rodríguez), the fourth installment of the "trilogy," is made up of outtakes from the previous three albums.

what to buy next: Triptico, Vols. 1–3 ♪♪♪½ (Areito, 1984, prod. Eduardo Ramos) is a treasure-chest of 25 songs written between 1968 and 1983, dedicated to the 25th anniversary of the revolution. The set ranges from sparse acoustic ballads and instrumental fragments to fully orchestrated seven-minute epics, before ending with a painfully dated 1976 duet with Milanés about the Angolan war. Causas y azares ♪♪♪ (Fonomusic, 1986, prod. Silvio Rodríguez) includes music for two films and his first recordings with Afrocuba, recorded in Madrid.

what to avoid: Misleadingly labeled as a Silvio Rodríguez album, El hombre extraño ♪ (Iris, 1995) is actually by a mediocre group called Sintesis, with Rodríguez guesting briefly.

the rest:
Mujeres ♪♪♪½ (EGREM, 1978)
Oh melancolía ♪♪♪½ (Fonomusic, 1988)
Silvio Rodríguez en Chile ♪♪♪ (Fonomusic, 1991)

worth searching for: Rodríguez sings two songs on April in Managua ♪♪♪ (Varagram/Fonomusic, 1984, prod. various), a politically charged live album featuring many of his Latin American cohorts from Chico Buarque to Mercedes Sosa. Mano a mano ♪♪♪♪ (Fonomusic, 1994) is another live album, with Luis Eduardo Aute.

influences:

⏮ Violeta Parra, Victor Jara, the Beatles, Bob Dylan

⏭ David Byrne, Juan Luís Guerra, Carlos Varela, Los Van Van

see also: Pablo Milanés

Wif Stenger

Tito Rodríguez

Latin beat, salsa

Born January 4, 1923, in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Died February 28, 1972, in New York, NY, USA.

As a young teenager, Tito Rodríguez moved to New York from Puerto Rico to sing with the band formed by his brother, Johnny Rodríguez. He also sang with the orchestras of Xavier Cugat, Noro Morales, and Jose Curbelo. In 1947 he started a trumpet quintet of his own. His 1963 recording of "Inolvidable (Unforgettable)" sold over a million copies in Latin America.

what's available: The Best of Tito Rodríguez and His Orquesta ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1992) offers a portrait of Rodríguez's music as singer and bandleader in salsa style.

influences:

⏮ Xavier Cugat, Jose Curbelo, Johnny Rodríguez

Kerry Dexter

Aldus Roger

Cajun

Born February 10, 1916, in Carencro, LA, USA. Died April 4, 1999. Based in Scott, LA, USA.

Aldus Roger was an accordionist and band leader whose groups set the standard for performance of Cajun music from the late 1950s to the 1970s. He emulated his hero, Lawrence Walker, until his own success finally eclipsed Walker's popularity. Roger was a full-time carpenter, but he was so in-demand that he played every night. His band, the Lafayette Playboys, served as a proving ground for many important young musicians, including swamp-pop singer and historian Johnnie Allan, steel players Phillippe Alleman and Rodney Miller, fiddler Doc Guidry, and Cajun singer Belton Richard. Roger developed a syncopated, energetic style on the accordion, which he played standing and using a shoulder strap (a configuration some credit him with inventing). His bands swung hard through two-steps, with the bass percolating and the steel player coming in on the off-beats. A number of his records feature twin fiddle in a style influenced by western swing, but at their heart there's always pure Cajun singing and Roger's distinctive accordion. Their unique quality is what caused later luminary Zachary Richard to spend two hours a day playing along with Roger's recordings.

what to buy: Roger was known to say that his band would often walk into the studio in the afternoon after appearing on a morning TV or radio show and record. Listen to A Cajun Legend ♪♪♪♪♪ (La Louisiana, 1995, prod. Carol Rachou Sr.) and see if you can hear any mistakes. This band is so tight and so on-the-music that they make it sound easy. Cajun culture is built around a love of dancing, and you can tell from the effect of this music why the Lafayette Playboys packed the clubs. Legend brings together two earlier Roger albums, Plays the French Music of South Louisiana and King of the French Accordion Plays His Old Hits.

what to buy next: Plays the French Music of South Louisiana ♪♪♪♪♪ (La Louisiana, 1995, prod. Carol Rachou Sr.) was Roger's biggest seller, and although it's folded into the previously mentioned disc, it stands on its own as a classic of the time. On the two-steps the instruments seem to be chasing each other, with Roger's accordion being followed by Phillip Alleman's steel and then Doc Guidry's fiddle.

worth searching for: Marie/Be Careful, You're Breaking My Heart ♪♪♪♪♪ (Swallow, c. 1966, prod. Floyd Soileau) is the only 45 rpm record that Roger cut for Swallow, but it has stayed in print on the power of the A-side, which continues to be performed by both Cajun and zydeco bands.

influences:

⏮ Lawrence Walker, Sundown Playboys

⏭ Zachary Richard, Mark and Ann Savoy, Paul Daigle, Bruce Daigrepont

see also: Zachary Richard

Jared Snyder

S.E. Rogie /Sooliman E. Rogie

Palm wine guitar

Born 1926, in Freetown, Sierra Leone. Died 1994, in Catford, England.

Rogie was just a boy when he heard his first guitar music. He lived out in the country with his uncle, and the music was coming from the local bar. "It was what they call palm wine music," Rogie once said. "It's like folk music or the blues, and probably influenced calypso when they heard it in Trinidad." Rogie got himself a guitar and began playing, partially influenced by the Jimmie Rodgers records he heard. "Highlife [a modern, danceable form] was popular back then, but I liked the more traditional style of acoustic guitar." In the early 1960s, however, Rogie heard rock 'n' roll and shifted over to a more electric sound. He put together a small studio in his home, and began making demos with his friends. One of those tunes, "My Lovely Elizabeth," became a hit, and was picked up by EMI. It then became an even bigger smash and allowed Rogie to put together an African rock 'n' roll band that he called the Morningstars. They had a modest hit of their own,"Twist with the Morningstars," in 1965.

Rogie moved to Oakland, California, in 1973 and was around for the Bay Area's worldbeat boom of the mid-1980s. He put together a small combo to play his old hits and the new material he was writing, but as soon as he'd train a guitarist in the intricacies of his style, that musician would split and form another worldbeat band. During his stay in Oakland Rogie started his own small label and released African Lady, a beautiful example of his sparkling playing and gruff, Jimmie Rodgers–style vocals. He was also smart enough to retain the masters of his African sides and released The '60s Sound of Sooliman E. Rogie, a collection of his hits from Sierra Leone.

In 1990 BBC Radio asked Rogie to play a few dates in England. Rogie liked the vibe and stayed on, eventually getting signed to Peter Gabriel's RealWorld label. He cut Dead Men Don't Smoke Marijuana, a return to the acoustic style of his youth, in 1994, and was putting together a tour to support the album when he died of a heart attack.

what's available: Rogie's mellow vocals and relaxed guitar stylings give the folky tunes on Dead Men Don't Smoke Marijuana ♪♪♪♪½ (RealWorld, 1994, prod. Tchad Blake) a timeless beauty. You can almost feel the palm wine bubbling in your veins as you surrender to Rogie's soothing, soulful crooning.

worth searching for: The '60s Sound of Sooliman E. Rogie gives you a good idea of what African rock 'n' roll sounded like in the 1960s, but the album had limited distribution, even in the Bay Area where Rogie was based when he released it. If you can find it, grab it.

influences:

⏮ Ticklers, Police Orchestra, Ebenezer Calebdar

⏭ Karma Kanix, Jungular Grooves, Looters

j. poet

Ruben Romero & Lydia Torea

Flamenco

Formed in Santa Fe, NM, USA. Based in Santa Fe, NM, USA.

Ruben Romero, guitar; Lydia Torea, dance.

Ruben Romero began playing the guitar as a child, eventually studying both classical and flamenco styles in Spain. He has recorded more than a dozen solo albums and his work appears in a number of contemporary guitar collections. Lydia Torea is a flamenco dancer who began her international career touring with the Jose Greco Dance Company. Currently she heads her own dance conservatory in Phoenix, Arizona.

what's available: Flamenco Fantasia ♪♪♪♪½ (Canyon, 1993, prod. Ruben Romero, Lydia Torea, Robert Doyle) offers an unusual chance to visit a side of flamenco performance rarely displayed to the public, the juerga. That's a sort of jam session in which the intricate relationships between guitarist, dancer, and singer, later to be played out in public presentation, are explored and formed. Romero, the guitarist; Torea, the dancer; singer Chaytto; singer/guitarist Guytano; percussionists Carlos Calleros, Step Raptis, and Jaime Betancourt; and bassist Demetri Sahnas have created a unique picture of that point of creativity. It's an especially well-engineered record that makes clear the percussive role of the flamenco dancer's feet in the music.

influences:

⏮ Sabicas, Jose Greco

Kerry Dexter

Linda Ronstadt

Mexican, Mexican American, tropical, country, rock, pop

Born July 15, 1946, in Tucson, AZ, USA. Based in Tucson, AZ, USA.

Tucson, Arizona, where Linda Ronstadt grew up, is about an hour's drive from Mexico. It's a border town, an area of the United States that used to be Mexico, and part of that unique mix of cultures that characterizes Mexican American life. Ronstadt found this mix in her own family: her father is Mexican and her mother is Anglo. Though she did not grow up speaking the Spanish language, she grew up singing harmony in Spanish to the rancheras and corridos her father and brothers enjoyed playing, and trailing around fascinated behind mariachi musicians on family visits to Mexico. As she made her rise through folk-rock and country to pop stardom, Ronstadt didn't make a point of being Mexican American, but neither did she conceal her heritage. In fact, she has said, she tried to incorporate ideas she'd absorbed from listening to her father's records of famous Mexican vocalist Lola Beltrán into her rock singing: "You can hear it most clearly on my earlier records like Different Drum in which I made a conscious effort to recreate her vocal tone," she told an interviewer for the biography Linda Ronstadt: It's So Easy! "Later, in my version of 'Blue Bayou,'" she continued, "I used falsetto in the end, which is a Mexican vocal trick. Unfortunately, the English language can only accommodate these sounds to a certain extent."

As early as 1978, Ronstadt began to express the desire to record an all-Spanish record, only to have her record company remind her that Joan Baez had done that at the height of her popularity and the record hadn't sold well. Ronstadt kept the idea in the back of her mind, though, and it resurfaced in a way that would lead to the project she had envisioned when she was invited to perform at the Tucson Mariachi Festival in 1985. The organizers of the festival that year knew of the Ronstadt family's Spanish-singing background, and asked her father if performing at the festival was something Linda would like to do. "I said, 'You bet!'" she recalls, "because I knew I would get a chance to meet Mariachi Vargas de Tecalitlan and Ruben Fuentes." In fact, Ronstadt persuaded Fuentes to assist her in arranging and learning songs for the festival, as she discovered that singing lead was quite different than singing harmony on the songs she'd chosen, ones from her father's repertoire that she'd learned as a child. Fuentes, a famous Mexican folksinger who at that time had retired from performing, agreed to help Ronstadt because he saw her devotion to the music. "Even though I had sung these songs when growing up at home," Ronstadt has said, "I had to practice each song 15 to 20 hours just to get the pronunciation, not to mention the intricate Indian rhythm, which is just not the same as our African-based rock 'n' roll." Ronstadt brought her father up on stage with her because "I figured if I was going to embarrass myself then we'd all be embarrassed together," but the performance was a success. It convinced the singer to pursue her plans of making a record of all Spanish songs, a project which eventually turned into three discs, an appearance on public television, and a touring show with a mariachi band, which was, Ronstadt said at the time, "the first time I really felt comfortable and at home on the stage." Ronstadt's appetite for vocal challenge has led her to expand her repertoire of English recordings since doing the Spanish albums, but with them she brought Mexican music and Mexican American culture more firmly to the attention of the mainstream pop audience in the United States. what to buy: Canciones de Mi Padre ♪♪♪♪½ (Elektra/Asylum, 1987, prod. Peter Asher, Ruben Fuentes) and Mas Canciones ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra/Asylum, 1991, prod. George Massenburg, Ruben Fuentes) show Linda Ronstadt doing what she does best, wringing every drop of vocal power, emotion, and intensity from the tunes she chooses to interpret. Since these are songs—rancheras, corridos, huapangos, and danzas habaneras—of the border regions and northern Mexico, which have been part of Ronstadt's life since childhood, the emotional connection is powerful. That may explain why Frenesi ♪♪♪ (Elektra/Asylum, 1992, prod. George Massenburg, Peter Asher), despite its Grammy for Best Tropical Latin Performance, just doesn't resonate with quite the same intensity. It was a product of Ronstadt's investigation into music of the islands in connection with her work on the film The Mambo Kings. Most of Ronstadt's output since Frenesi has been in English, but her version of fellow Mexican American Tish Hinojosa's "Donde Voy" on Winter Light ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra/Asylum, 1994, prod. Steven Tyrell) is worth seeking out. Of her English-language discs, Trio ♪♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1987, prod. George Massenburg), Heart Like a Wheel ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1974, prod. Peter Asher), Feels Like Home ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra/Asylum, 1995, prod. George Massenburg), and We Ran ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra/Asylum, 1998, prod. George Massenburg) give the most varied and complete picture of Ronstadt as a vocalist of power, emotion, and imagination. Ronstadt has an extensive discography of pop, rock 'n' roll, country-rock, Broadway, and even children's music, and in early 1999 she released a sequel to her Grammy-winning Trio country project with Emmylou Harris and Dolly Parton, Trio 2 ♪♪♪♪½ (Asylum, 1999, prod. George Massenburg).

influences:

- Lola Beltrán, Hank Williams Sr., Mariachi Vargas de Tecalitlan, Emmylou Harris
- Terri Clark, Lone Justice, Rosanne Cash, Trisha Yearwood, Tish Hinojosa

see also: The Chieftains, Tish Hinojosa

Kerry Dexter

The Roots Radics

Roots dancehall

Formed 1978, in Kingston, Jamaica. Based in Kingston, Jamaica.

Vast and varying membership over many years, prominently including: Eric "Bingy Bunny" Lamont (died December 31, 1993), rhythm guitar, vocals; Errol "Flabba" Holt, bass; Lincoln Valentine "Style" Scott, drums; Noel "Sowell Radics" Bailey, lead guitar; Dwight "Brother Dee" Pinkney, lead guitar; Roy Hamilton, lead guitar; Eric "Fish" Clarke, drums; Tony Greene, saxophone; Carlton "Santa" Davis, drums; Wycliffe "Steely" Johnson, keyboards; Earl Fitzsimmons, keyboards. (All members are from Jamaica.)

The mighty Roots Radics laid the molten rhythmic substratum for the entire dancehall era of reggae music. Founded by two former members of the Morwells, vocalist Eric "Bingy Bunny" Lamont and bassist Errol "Flabba" Holt—along with ex–Hippy Boys lead guitarist Noel "Sowell Radics" Bailey and drummer Lincoln Valentine "Style" Scott—the Radics dethroned the Revolutionaries as the island's most in-demand session band in the late '70s, and rhythmically ruled Jamaica until the digital revolution of the mid-'80s. Indeed, it was Lamont's initial baptism as a rhythm guitarist with the Revolutionaries, at the height of the "rockers" era in the mid-'70s, that convinced him to pursue a career as an instrumentalist rather than as a singer/songwriter. The quartet was briefly dubbed the Roots Rock Band during some sinewy sessions with the great toaster and producer Jah Thomas in 1977 and 1978. As the Roots Radics, however, they went on to transform the whole vibe and groove of reggae on subsequent recordings with producers Don "Jah Bible" Mais, Linval Thompson, and Henry "Junjo" Lawes. The Radics slowed the beat down to a sensual, well-oiled skank and at the same time stripped down the instrumental backing to raw, rippling drum-and-bass, punctuated by Bingy Bunny's distinctively stinging, reverb-embellished "skeng" guitar sound. The Radics' genius was to alchemize familiar rhythms (many from the seminal Studio One) into something both texturally inventive and brutally visceral. The Radics were so predominant from 1978 to 1985 that it's almost easier to list the artists they didn't back. Suffice it to say that the Radics' menacing rhythms power Barrington Levy's Bounty Hunter, Bunny Wailer's Rock 'N' Groove, Gregory Isaacs's Night Nurse, Freddie McGregor's Big Ship, the Wailing Souls' Fire House Rock, nearly all of the terrific Scientist dub albums, Johnny Osbourne's Never Stop Fighting, John Holt's Police in Helicopter, Eek-a-Mouse's Skidip, Josey Wales & Yellowman's titanic deejay album Two Giants Clash, Papa Michigan & General Smiley's "Diseases," and Triston Palmer's "Entertainment," to name just one far-too-long sentence's worth. In the mid-'80s, the Radics began a long and prosperous association with the roots-harmony trio Israel Vibration, both on record and on tour. Their bond culminated with a coruscating concert in the holy city of Jerusalem in 1993, a performance of tremendous spiritual significance to the ailing Bingy Bunny, who died of prostate cancer that New Year's Eve. At the height of their powers the Roots Radics were one of Jamaica's greatest rhythm sections. Their roiling, rising current of rhythm consistently induced the soul-connected trance state that most of this decade's electronic music only aspires to.

654 the roots radics

what to buy: Spin your choice of any of the aforesaid albums to hear the Radics' Richter-scale riddims in their prime. But to hear their innovative early grooves—which boldly experiment with spatial contrast and state-of-the-art drum-and-bass topography—check Roots Tradition from the Vineyard ♪♪♪♪ (Majestic Reggae, 1997, prod. Don Mais), an invaluable document of the conception, if not the birth, of the deejay-driven dancehall style. This is a collection of outstanding and rare singles from producer Don Mais's Roots Tradition imprint between 1977 and 1980, the majority of which cascade, ebb, and swell due to dramatically propulsive Radics rhythms. The sound and subject-matter are still deeply rootsy, but you can feel the vibe reviving itself into something fresh and new. Highlights include Rod Taylor's prideful "True History," nine-year-old Little John's "Robe," and Peter Ranking & General Lucky's "Housing Scheme," a pulse-quickening protest against both segregation of the poor and the scarcity of safe, affordable shelter. King Tubby Meets Roots Radics: Dangerous Dub ♪♪♪♪ (Greensleeves U.K., 1981, prod. Jah Screw, Ranking Joe) and Jah Thomas Meets King Tubby inna Roots of Dub ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino U.K., 1982, prod. Nkrumah "Jah" Thomas) are both wonderful opportunities to hear the inventor of dub himself—the massive King Tubby—magically manipulate a cauldron of hot, surging Radics rhythms. The results are a thing of beauty . . . and dread.

what to buy next: Jah Jah Dreader Than Dread ♪♪♪♪ (Majestic Reggae, 1997, prod. Linval Thompson) collects early roots-dancehall rub-a-dub from the Thompson Sound label between 1979 and 1983. This one just drips with the fast-changing, kinetically charged musical atmosphere of the time, and features thick, heavy, simmering rhythms by the Radics behind such great singers, toasters, and roots-harmony groups as Freddie McGregor, Freddie McKay, U-Brown, Triston Palmer, the Wailing Souls, and the Viceroys, all of whom stand atop the mountain and let themselves be heard. Awesome! On Dubbin' with Horns ♪♪♪♪ (Burning Sounds, 1981, prod. Nkrumah "Jah" Thomas), the mad beat-chemist known as Scientist mixes the Radics' formidable subterranean boom with a brimming beakerful of some of Jamaica's finest hornsmen—including Dean Frazier, "Deadly" Headley Bennett, Bobby Ellis, and Vincent "Don Drummond Junior" Gordon. Scientist's crafty application of reverb to alternate drumbeats and keyboard chords, and nuanced horn-section fusillades, result in an extraordinarily lively three-dimensional mix.

the rest:
Radical Dub Session ♪♪♪♪ (Solid Groove, 1982)
Radification ♪♪♪ (Cha Cha, 1982)
Scientist and Prince Jammy Strike Back ♪♪♪ (Greensleeves, 1983)
Freelance ♪♪♪ (Kingdom, 1985)
Hot We Hot! ♪♪½ (RAS, 1988)
Hot We Hot Dub ♪♪½ (Roir, 1989)
Forwards Ever, Backward Never ♪♪♪½ (Heartbeat, 1990)
World Peace Three ♪♪♪½ (Heartbeat, 1992)
Live at Channel One ♪♪♪ (Live & Love, 1995)
Radically Radics ♪♪½ (RAS, 1996)
King Tubby's Rockers ♪♪♪ (Trojan, 1998)

solo outings:

Eric "Bingy Bunny" Lamont:
Me and Jane ♪♪♪ (Cha Cha, 1982)
Kingston 12 Toughie: A Tribute to Bingy Bunny ♪♪♪♪ (RAS, 1996)

Errol "Flabba" Holt:
Vision of Africa ♪♪♪ (Dread & Dread, 1982)

The Morwells (with Lamont & Holt):
Presenting the Morwells ♪♪♪ (Mor-well Esq., 1975)
Dub Me: Morwell Unlimited Meets King Tubby ♪♪♪♪ (Mor-well Esq., 1975/Blood & Fire, 1997)
Crab Race ♪♪♪ (Burning Sounds, 1978)
Cool Runnings ♪♪♪ (Bushays, 1979)
Kingston 12 Toughie ♪♪♪ (Carib Gems, 1980)
The Best of Morwells ♪♪♪♪ (Nighthawk, 1981)

influences:

- The Revolutionaries, Soul Vendors, Sound Dimension, the Morwells, Bongo Herman, Derrick Harriott, Brentford All-Stars, Jah Thomas, Linval Thompson, Henry "Junjo" Lawes, King Tubby, Scientist, Don Mais, Israel Vibration, Hippy Boys, Prince Far I, Zap Pow, Mikey Dread
- Prince/King Jammy, Jah Lion, Prince Hammer, Adrian Sherwood, African Headcharge, Creation Rebel, Singers & Players, Steely & Clevie, Barrington Levy, Eek-a-Mouse, Freddie McGregor, Gregory Isaacs, Congo Ashanti Roy, Triston Palmer, Yellowman, Josey Wales, Papa Michigan & General Smiley, John Holt, Israel Vibration, Wailing Souls, Eberhard Schoener, Cabaret Voltaire

see also: Black Uhuru, Cocoa Tea, Culture, Eek-a-Mouse, Gregory Isaacs, Israel Vibration, the Itals, King Tubby, Barrington Levy, Freddie McGregor, Sugar Minott, Bunny Wailer, Wailing Souls, Yellowman

Todd Shanker

Lazaro Ros

Cuban folk music

Born May 11, 1925, in Havana, Cuba. Based in Havana, Cuba.

Lazaro Ros began singing as a child and was initiated into the oral traditions of the Yoruban religion at an early age. At the time of his birth, many Cubans considered African music to be low-class and unsophisticated, but Ros persevered in his musical and religious beliefs. In his early teens, Ros attended the Afro-Cuban rituals at the house of Otilia Mantecón, where he learned from the older drummers and singers whose parents and grandparents had come from, and still remembered, Africa. In 1950 Ros was initiated into La Regla de Osha—the Rule of the Orisha (African deities)—and worked with the master singer Eugenio de la Rosa to learn the pronunciation of the Nigerian language and better preserve the songs, chants, and rhythms of Africa. After the revolution in 1959, Castro encouraged the preservation of Afro-Cuban culture. In 1962 Ros became a founding member of the Conjunto Folklórico Nacional and since then has been tireless in his efforts to preserve and protect traditional forms. He has collaborated with the National Ballet and National Symphony of Cuba and written many theatrical and musical works based on the Afro-Cuban tradition, including Alafin de Oro and Arara, considered the two most important plays in the repertoire of the Cuban Folk Theater. He has toured widely, taking Afro-Cuban roots music to Europe, North America, South America, and back to Africa. He has arranged tunes for the Cuban rock band Sintesis, recorded "modern" versions of African songs with the Cuban world-music band Mezcla, and created Groupo Olorún, a group of young singers he is training to pass this tradition on to future generations.

what to buy: Credited to Ros and Mezcla, Cantos ♪♪♪♪♪ (Intuition, 1992, prod. Rachel Faro, Sammy Figueroa) shows what happens when rock 'n' roll, Cuban style, meets its African roots. Mezcla is a "rock" band, but their rock draws as much on the music's African and Latin American sources as it does on the more familiar Anglo/American pop hybrid. The band pulls out the stops, peppering their crunchy guitar explorations with traces of rumba and its African cousin soukous, as well as jazz and funk, while Ros cuts through the mix with a simple yet forceful vocal style that's equal parts sandpaper and sugar. No matter what you expect from an album of Cuban music, this set will surprise you.

what to buy next: Olorún ♪♪♪♪♪ (Ashe/Xenophile, 1994, prod. Rachel Faro, Sammy Figueroa) is a more folkloric outing, beautifully recorded, with Ros and Groupo Olorún backed only by a handful of drummers. The material is traditional, prayers and chants full of stark beauty and uncommon power.

the rest:

Asoyi ♪♪♪½ (Discmedi, 1993)

influences:

- Pablo Roche, Jesús Peerez, Argelier León
- Sintesis, Mezcla, Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

see also: Sintesis

j. poet

Doudou N'Diaye Rose

Wolof drumming

Born 1928, in Senegal. Based in Dakar, Senegal.

They call Doudou N'Diaye Rose the father of modern sabar drumming. While djembes are played throughout West Africa, the sabars are the royal drums of Senegal and are unique to it. Similarly, Rose himself has largely remained unique to Senegal. Although you can find hundreds of tapes of his work in that country, only two releases are in print worldwide. Rose and his family (including 38 children) often perform together as a percussion orchestra, another concept he introduced to Senegal. He has worked with Western artists including Peter Gabriel, and he contributed to Four World Songs, choreographer Kathryn Posin's award-winning entry in the Sarasota Ballet's competition.

what to buy: On Djabote ♪♪♪½ (RealWorld, 1992, prod. Eric Serra), rivaling such ensemble drum classics as the legendary Drummers of Burundi recordings and the holy rhythm of Olatunji, Rose creates an audio sea of percussion with some 50

6/5/6 doudou n'diaye rose

Lazaro Ros

drummers playing sabar, djembe, and other drums. The album flows on a riptide of cross-rhythms, with tunes like "Khine Sine" sporting a traditional griot call-and-response. Pieces like "Walo" get super-intense, with some purely amazing rhythms. The traditional tune "Diame," with the 50 drummers augmented by an 80-voice choir, may be one of the most awe-inspiring pieces of music ever committed to tape.

the rest:
Sabar ♪♪♪ (Melodie France)

influences:
Mapathe Diop, Doudiabay N'Diaye, Omar Thiam

see also: Drummers of Burundi, Babatunde Olatunji

Hank Bordowitz

Anders Rosén

Folk, classical

Born September 8, 1946, in Malung, Dalarna, Sweden. Based in Sweden.

Anders Rosén was born in Dalarna, Sweden's most famous folk-music province, but due to his father's job with the postal service, the family moved frequently. Rosén took up fiddle at 11, but briefly switched to sax when he got interested in American jazz. "I rediscovered folk music in the mid-1960s," Rosén says. "Swedish jazz musicians, like the piano player Jan Johansson, had done jazz versions of Swedish folk tunes, showing the great possibilities of this music." In 1970 Rosén moved back to Malung in Dalarna and stayed with his grandparents. He introduced himself to Willie Toors, who took him under his wing, teaching him fiddle and introducing him to many of the old fiddlers who still knew the traditional music. Although Toors was a great teacher, Rosén felt the need to develop his own style. With Kalle Almlöf he formed a duo that became quite an influence on the younger folk fiddlers. Rosén also started his own independent folk label, which was unprecedented for the genre in Sweden.

Rosén achieved a breakthrough with his third album, Forsens låt (Tune of the Rapid), on which he recruited soprano saxophonist Roland Keijser and featured, for the first time on record, a Swedish kind of fiddle with resonant strings that he had seen in a museum collection. The label was now called "Hurv" after "Hurven," a family of polska (triple-time dance) tunes from western Sweden and eastern Norway. In 1976 Rosén made Stamp, tramp and långkut (Stamp, Tramp and Long-Run) with Almlöf, in front of a live audience, dancing the polska, a tradition that had almost died out. Rosén and Almlöf supplied free dancing lessons before the concert, and free food and drink during. The evening and album were so successful that the dances became a weekly event, slowly spreading across the country to create a new generation of traditional dancers.

After Rosén married and had a child, he retired from the indie music business to raise his family; he taught violin and went to school to study baroque music and musicology. He also investigated the historical origins of the polska, but instead of a dissertation, presented the results on a couple of albums, The History of the Polska I and II. In 1989 came Utdansbandet (Outdance Band), a contemporary folk ensemble; Rosén also began producing other artists, including Ulf Störling (on I polskatagen (In a Polska Turn)). "In the '90s I switched back to the fiddle and concentrated on the traditional local styles from Dalarna," Rosén says. "My goal is to reconstruct old repertoire and playing techniques from my part of Sweden. Young players today learn folk fiddling at courses and music schools—the old fiddlers are gone. There is a risk that original folk playing is substituted with a simplified classical playing technique, because the old-fashioned folk style isn't accepted if one is going to be a teacher. That would be a great loss for Swedish folk music, because genuine folk playing has many secrets and technical specialties, making it quite different from modern classical playing. There is also a risk in the demand of the 'market' for a folk-music style adapted to 'world music'—creating a mishmash of different unrelated elements that don't blend harmoniously." Rosén's most recent projects include producing Willie Toors's first album, Från skogar, logar, zigenarläger och cirkustält (From forests, barn dances, gypsy camps and circus tents), and planning a seven-CD archival series called Historical Recordings of Swedish Folk Music. He's also continued his own recording as a solo artist and as a member of duos and trios.

what to buy: Dance Minuets, 1731–1801 ♪♪♪♪ (Hurv, 1998, prod. Mats Hellberg) is a trove of folk archaeology that unearths some of the earliest known dance tunes from the song books of the 1700s, a time when Swedish folk and baroque fiddle styles were hard to separate. Rosén and second fiddler Ulf Störling give us a spirited example of the music that was rocking the house in 1732. Both play gut-stringed fiddles, tuned as they were in the 1700s, which gives the music a rounder, more full-bodied tone.

what to buy next: The solo fiddle outing Hurv! ♪♪♪½ (Hurv, 1991, prod. Anders Rosén) has a lonesome, haunted quality. Rosén's playing is full of passion, and the music weaves a dark, deeply somber spell.

best of the rest:
(With Kalle Almlöf) Västerdalton (Sound of West Dalarna) ♪♪♪½ (Hurv, 1972)
(With Kalle Almlöf) Troskari Tunes ♪♪♪½ (Hurv, 1992)
(With Kalle Almlöf and Per-Olof Moll) Hopp Tussilunta (Jump Tussilunta) ♪♪♪♪ (Hurv, 1994)

worth searching for: Kristina Ståhl Cedervall's Horsehair Strings, Tunes from Älvdalen ♪♪♪½ (Hurv, 1996), with Rosén on second fiddle, features traditional tunes from Älvdalen, Sweden's "wildest" musical "dialect."

influences:
⏮ Willie Toors, Olmorts Erik Olsson

see also: Willie Toors

j. poet

Rossy

Malagasy pop

Born Paul Bert Rahasimanana, in Antananarivo, Madagascar. Based in Antananarivo, Madagascar.

Rossy was born in a poor section of Antananarivo, Madagascar's capital city. He got hold of an accordion when he was seven and taught himself how to play. He had a band while he was still in high school, but it was a trip to visit his father, who lived in northeastern Madagascar, that inspired his desire to be a professional musician. The pop music of the northeast is called salegy, a bouncy 6/8 dance rhythm that combines Malagasy roots music and some Western influences, notably rock, into a style that has been popular since the late 1960s. ("Malagasy" is the adjectival form of "Madagascar.") Northeast port cities like Diego Suarez and Mahajanga had thriving music scenes and two record labels (Discomad and Kaiamba) that fed this madness. Rossy had never heard electric instruments or experienced such a scene before. When he returned to Antananarivo he acquired a guitar and began playing it, as well as the valiha (zither) and flute. He also began borrowing from Madagascar's many folk traditions, as well as rock, funk, reggae, and South African jive, for his new compositions. Rossy's style made him the toast of Antananarivo, successful enough to buy instruments and equipment for his band as well as a bus to have them travel all over the island. In 1986 Globestyle Records sent an expedition to Madagascar to record its pop and folkloric music, though drawing the line between the two is increasingly hard on an island where almost everyone sings and plays an instrument. They recorded two Rossy tunes, which brought him to the attention of Peter Gabriel, who signed Rossy to his RealWorld label. Henry Kaiser and David Lindley fell under Rossy's spell when they recorded their Malagasy hootenannies A World out of Time, Volumes 1 and 2 (reviewed in this book's Compilations section). They arranged for the Shanachie label to ship a 16-track studio to Madagascar so Rossy could record an album for that label, the acclaimed One Eye on the Future, One Eye on the Past. Studio Rossy is the only such facility on the island run by Malagasy musicians and has since become a center for Madagascar's blossoming local folk and world-music scenes.

what's available: One Eye on the Future, One Eye on the Past ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1992, prod. Rossy) is Malagasy music recorded for the home market, but its vitality and verve can be felt by anyone with ears, or feet that want to dance. As befits an island that lies in the path of ancient trade routes between Asia, Europe, the Pacific, and Africa, the music is complex and multifaceted. There are hints of Hawaiian slack-key guitar, Latin percussion, and Malagasy folk music, and traces of rock, funk, reggae, soukous (African rumba), and South African jive, but Rossy and band manage to shamelessly incorporate most of it into their own smooth, rockin' style. Island of Ghosts ♪♪♪♪ (RealWorld, 1991, prod. Vic Coppersmith-Heaven, David Hickman) is another fine collection, although the dance rhythms and synth added by the producers make it sound as much world-beat as Malagasy.

influences:
⏮ Roger Georges, Tianjamani, Les Smockers ⏭ Tarika, D'Gary

j. poet

Badal Roy

World/jazz fusion

Born Amerendra Roy Choudhury, 1944, in Bangladesh. Based in NJ, USA.

The two-headed tabla drum is one of the most important instruments in Indian music, and one of the most versatilely expressive ones in all world music. Although he began learning to play the tabla from his uncle, Dwijendra Bhattacharya, at an early age, percussionist Badal Roy was still an amateur when he came to America in 1968 with a pair of tablas and eight dollars in his pocket. Three days later he took a job as a waiter at an Indian restaurant in New York, and was soon studying with tabla master Alla Rakha by day and performing for diners by night. The story of Roy's discovery is the stuff showbiz myths are made of: a few months after the tabla player began entertaining audiences at New York's A Taste of India restaurant, a young man with a guitar approached him and asked if he could sit in. After playing together for six months, Roy learned that the guitarist was John McLaughlin, who later became a jazz legend, and the next thing Roy knew he was in the studio performing on My Goals Beyond, a seminal album in the jazz fusion movement. Shortly thereafter, Roy was asked to record with, and eventually join, Miles Davis's band, and he thus began his long courtship with the cream of America's jazz musicians. Over the years, Roy has recorded with hundreds of stellar artists in the jazz and world-music fields, including Pharoah Sanders, Lonnie Liston Smith, Herbie Mann, Nana Vasconcelos, Babatunde Olatunji, and Purna Das Baul. But perhaps his biggest break came in 1988, when he was asked to join Ornette Coleman's Prime Time band, a fruitful partnership that continues today. Strangely enough, although Roy has collaborated with a wide variety of musicians and appeared as a sideman on hundreds of recordings, his first headlining project to be widely available in the U.S. didn't appear until 1997—but he's confident that it is the first of many more to come. "Honestly," he told this writer, "I feel now that I should've done it a long time ago . . . but it's never too late!"

Badal Roy (third from left) with Steve Gorn, Amit Chatterjee, and Adam Rudolf

what to buy: For a showcase of Roy's stellar tabla skills, there's no better place to start than his "solo" recording, One in the Pocket ♪♪♪♪½ (Nomad, 1997, prod. Bob Haddad), which features appearances by frequent collaborators like Indian guitarist Amit Chatterjee, Brazil's Duofel, jazz bassist Mike Richmond, and master percussionist Glen Velez. This one's worth owning just for "Rinpoche's Rag," a Deliverance-gone-to-India track featuring Jim Bowie's Bengali-style banjo dueling with Mike Richmond's basslines, as Roy's nimble tabla rhythms drive the track to a frenzied crescendo. Whew! For a kinder, gentler Indian music experience, try Yantra ♪♪♪♪½ (Latitudes, 1987, prod. Bob Haddad), Roy's collaboration with American-born bansuri bamboo flute master Steve Gorn, which features five gorgeous ragas that showcase Roy's largely self-taught classical skills.

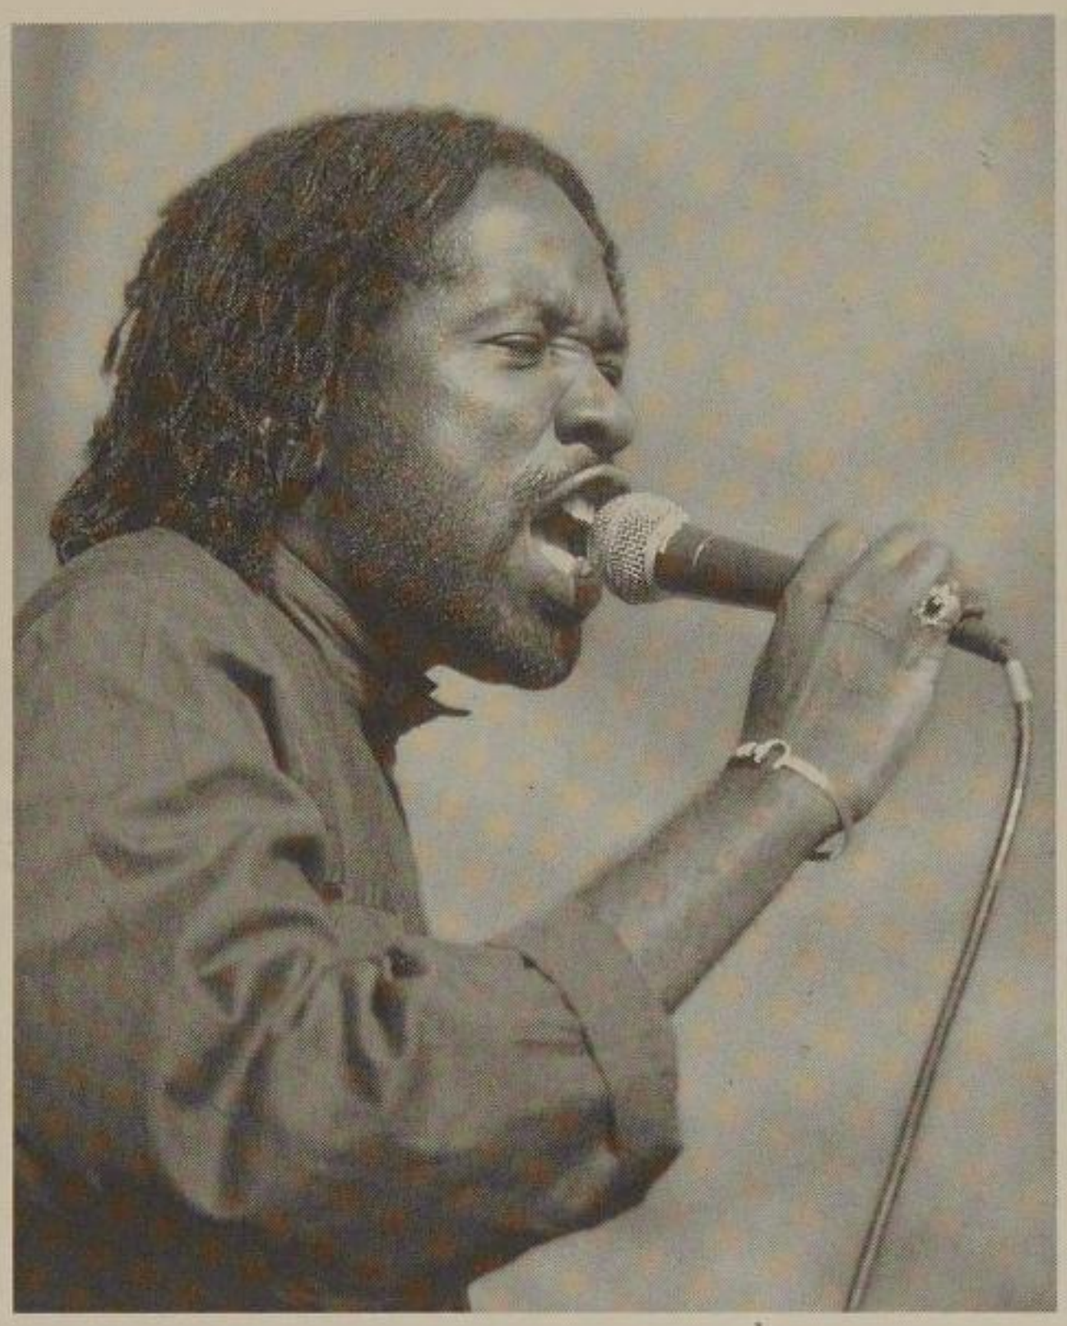
what to buy next: Although Roy's tabla is featured less prominently, Asian Journal ♪♪♪♪ (Nomad, 1988, prod. Bob Haddad) is a brilliant cross-cultural fusion featuring Roy, Gorn, Richmond, Nana Vasconcelos, Turkish saxophonist Ismet Siral, and Turkish percussionist Murat Verdi. Songs like the title track present a seamless marriage of many seemingly disparate musical styles, while tunes like "Bombay Boogie" and "Badal" play to Roy's considerable percussive strengths. Of course, most of Roy's work with jazz fusionists like Pharoah Sanders, Miles Davis, and John McLaughlin is in the same league, but since the list of albums on which Roy has appeared as a sideman is so extensive, the absolute best of the bunch are simply highlighted in the section below.

best of the rest:

John McLaughlin:

My Goals Beyond ♪♪♪♪½ (Douglas, 1971)

david rudder



David Rudder

Miles Davis:
On the Corner ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1972)
Miles Davis in Concert ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1973) Get Up with It ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1974)

Mike Richmond:
Basic Tendencies ♪♪♪♪ (Nomad, 1989)

Ornette Coleman & Prime Time:
Tone Dialing ♪♪♪ (Harmolodic, 1995)

Ustad Sultan Khan:
Festival of India ♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World)

Steve Turre:
Sanctified Shells ♪♪♪♪½ (Antilles, 1997)

Pharoah Sanders:
Wisdom through Music ♪♪♪♪ (Impulse!)

worth searching for: Roy has released a number of superb collaborations that are either available only as imports or are currently out of print, including Endless Radiance with Amit Chatterjee, Espelho das Aguas with Duofel, Global Brazilians with Airto Moreira and Flora Purim, and the cassette-only Songs for Sitar & Tabla with Indian sitar virtuoso Arooj Lazewal. If you find any of these, buy one for yourself and send one to me!

influences:
⏮ Alla Rakha, Ravi Shankar, Dwijendra Bhattacharya ⏭ Zakir Hussain, Bikram Ghosh, Talvin Singh

see also: Purna Das Baul, Steve Gorn, Bill Laswell, Herbie Mann, Airto Moreira, Babatunde Olatunji, Flora Purim, Mike Richmond, Shakti, Nana Vasconcelos, Glen Velez

Bret Love

David Rudder

Soca, calypso

Born September 8, 1961, in Port of Spain, Trinidad. Based in Trinidad.

Each year at Carnival time the streets of Port of Spain, Trinidad, explode with music as the island's calypso singers vie for the title of Calypso King, among other honors. In 1986, the first time David Rudder entered the fray, his tune "The Hammer" won him the title of Young King of Carnival (best new performer), Calypso King (best performer), and Road March King (best song). Another of his compositions, "Bahia Girl," took second place in the Road March competition. Capturing four of Carnival's top honors made Rudder the most successful calypso singer and composer Trinidad and Tobago had seen in 30 years. His quadruple crown caused so much jealousy that in 1988 the singer announced his intention to refrain from further Carnival competition, saying, "My job now is to take calypso to the rest of the world.

"To people in the States, calypso means Harry Belafonte," Rudder explains, "but the tradition goes back to slavery days. Calypso makes use of African rhythms, jazz, British and French folk music, rock 'n' roll, and popular styles from neighboring islands like Haiti and Guadeloupe. In the early days, before people could read, calypsos were the newspapers of the black community. The singers commented on politics, made up satirical songs about the slavemasters, and helped keep resistance alive."

Rudder was originally inspired by soul musicians. He says Sly & the Family Stone and Stevie Wonder were early idols. "I admired Sly because of the radical things he did with rhythm, and Stevie Wonder because he was physically handicapped. [Rudder has a slight limp from a childhood bout with polio.] He overcame his blindness with music, so I decided I shouldn't let anything stand in my way." This love of American soul music stayed strong until "I heard some of the early calypsonians, men like Attila the Hun, then of course Kitchner and the Mighty Sparrow. That's when I realized that calypso could make use of soul, jazz, salsa, or whatever I wanted. And calypso has a lyrical freedom you don't find [in other music]." That freedom can be puzzling to people who weren't raised in the calypso tradition. Singers often make comments about the political or sexual lives of public figures that would be considered libelous elsewhere (at least in the pre–Kenneth Starr era). On occasion, governments have been toppled because of the overwhelming public response to a vicious parody, but because of their popularity, the singers remained immune to prosecution. "Men in Trinidad are very macho," Rudder explains. "If you're a public figure and someone makes fun of you, you've got to take it 'like a man' or you'll lose face. In the '30s and '40s the ruling class did attempt to censor the singers. They had to take their songs to the police station to be approved, but the singers would take a false song to the police and sing the real lyrics later on. Once or twice the police tried to stop the shows where the libelous songs were being sung, but riots broke out so they had to give up and accept it.

"People in Trinidad are open to all kinds of music," Rudder continues, "salsa, [Haitian] compas, reggae, mambo. In the last couple of years zouk, the music from Guadeloupe, has made an impact in Trinidad, and calypso is starting to gain in popularity on the other Caribbean islands as well. It's creating a kind of international musical outlook that's very attractive." Once Rudder was attracted to the music of Trinidad, he taught himself guitar and began writing songs for Charlie's Roots, a band fronted by his friend Tambu (Chris Herbert). Rudder explains that the band took its name from influential calypso label-head Rawlston Charles, for whom they used to do session work, becoming "like the Sly & Robbie of calypso. Chris was an old friend of mine, and when he got a case of writer's block he asked me for a few songs. Then in '86 he had laryngitis, so he asked me to sing for Carnival." The rest is history, though it's far from over. Dropping out of the Carnival competition has allowed Rudder and the band (with he and Herbert now sharing lead vocals) to pursue their own destiny. They tour the world bringing calypso's message of racial unity and political awareness to people from North America to Southeast Asia, and the band is constantly searching for ways to make their music as international as their lyrics. Still, Rudder's outlook has its critics. Some claim that Rudder's music is being diluted by his worldbeat approach, but he discounts that notion. "We grew up in Trinidad listening to all kinds of music: rock, jazz, African music—but we know our own culture inside and out. So instead of losing our roots, listening to these other musics makes our love of calypso stronger. After all, zouk is African Guadalupian music, jazz is African American music, calypso is African Trinidadian. So when we bring these sounds to our music we're not trying to cross over, we're crossing back, bringing these African forms back and reclaiming them. This way we can reach out to the whole diaspora."

what to buy: Haiti ♪♪♪♪♪ (Sire, 1987, prod. Joe R. Brown) is one of the best calypso albums of the modern generation. It contains the monster hits "Haiti" and "The Hammer," plus the usual solid party grooves.

jamaican music 6: rocksteady

In 1965, the seminal Skatalites broke up. Maybe it was the legendary ska band's demise or maybe it was simply that the post-independence frenzy had calmed a bit, but in 1966, when Hopeton Lewis released the steady-rockin' "Take It Easy," a whole new wave of cooler, more elegant Jamaican music was ushered in." The electric bass superseded the stand-up acoustic version, and slow, strutting basslines overtook the music, as did more emphatic melodicism in general. One of Jamaica's great musicians, Leroy Sibbles of the Heptones, described the change in the book Reggae Routes: "Ska is more up-tempo—'uh UH uh UH uh UH'—and we brought it down to 'gidgy gidgy boom, gidgy gidgy boom.' And that's rocksteady." The emphasis on bass and drums has remained vital to all future genres of Jamaican music. But with its deep space between notes and its seductive pacing, rocksteady cast the spotlight on the singers. It was Jamaica's soul sound, and the voices that carried it were unforgettably sophisticated and expressive.

Duke Reid was the king of the rocksteady era, producing a veritable chest-full of booty in the Treasure Isle studio above his wife's liquor store in Kingston. Coxsone Dodd's sound was rougher and tougher than Reid's; he produced a number of "rudeboy"-oriented rocksteady hits about the rebellious and at times violent youth of Kingston's ghettos—though arguably, the two greatest rudeboy achievements were Desmond Dekker's "007 (Shanty Town)" and the Slickers' "Johnny Too Bad," each for Leslie Kong.

It was also in the rocksteady era that nationalistic pride and the Rastafarian faith started coming to the fore in life and music, nourished by outspoken professor Walter Rodney and visits from Martin Luther King Jr. and Emperor Haile Selassie in 1965 and '66. In 1968, the graceful grooves and beautiful vocal virtuosity of rocksteady were about to change with Jamaica's people, as poverty still gripped the island and racial tension and war ravaged the world. The reign of reggae was at hand.

Todd Shanker

adam rudolph

the rest:
1990 ♪♪♪♪ (Sire, 1990)
Frenzy ♪♪♪♪ (Lypsoland, 1992)

worth searching for: Sire Records was at one point going to sink big money into Rudder and calypso, hence the two-CD This Is Soca ♪♪♪♪♪ (Sire, 1987, prod. Joe Brown), which contains Rudder's Bahia Girl album plus a bonus disc of Carnival hits from 1987, including work by Duke, Stalin, Shadow, Gypsy, and others.

influences:
⏮ Sparrow, Duke, Sly & the Family Stone, Stevie Wonder, Kassav' ⏭ Chris Herbert (Tambu), Taxi, WCK

see also: Tambu/Chris Herbert

j. poet

Adam Rudolph

World-influenced jazz

Born September 12, 1955, in Chicago, IL, USA. Based in Los Angeles, CA, USA.

Adam Rudolph is a world-music drummer who often works in jazz-related contexts. His most famous jazz associations have been with Yusef Lateef (eight albums), Don Cherry, Herbie Hancock, and Kevin Eubanks, and his most jazz-oriented project as a leader, with his group Moving Pictures, appeared on Soul Note. He specializes in hand drums—congas, djembe, bendir, dumbek, tabla, talking drum, udu—but also plays bamboo flutes, kalimba (African thumb piano), didgeridoo (Aboriginal Australian blown drone instrument), and synthesizers, with multiphonic singing also ranking among his talents. He draws on music literally from around the world (Bali, Cuba, Ghana, Haiti, India, and Morocco), and has seen more of it than many musicians. He lived in Ghana in 1977 and later spent time with the Gnawa musicians of Morocco, as has pianist Randy Weston. Another major contribution to Rudolph's style was his study of North Indian tabla drums with Ravi Shankar's tabla player, Pandit Taranath Rao. Rather than playing in imitation of the styles he studies, however, Rudolph synthesizes them into a cross-cultural melting pot that has a jazz/improvisation sensibility at its core. Rudolph's other groups include the percussion quintet Vashti, with Chicago jazz drummer Hamid Drake, Poovalur Srinivasan (South India), Souhael Kaspar (Egypt), and I Nyomen Wenten (Bali); and the Mandingo Griot Society (co-founded with Jali Foday Musa Suso), which blends traditional African music with R&B and jazz. Moving Pictures uses a variable lineup that has included guitarists Wah Wah Watson and Kevin Eubanks, double violinist L. Shankar, harpist Susan Allen, multi-windplayer Ralph Jones III, and many others, and overlaps somewhat with another Rudolph band, Eternal Wind.

what to buy: Recorded with Yusef Lateef, The World at Peace: Music for 12 Musicians ♪♪♪♪♪ (YAL/Meta, 1996, prod. Yusef Lateef, Adam Rudolph) is a two-CD dual release on Lateef's and Rudolph's labels. It is a major work full of innovative writing that so far is the crowning achievement of Rudolph's career. Rudolph and Lateef follow unusual processes that include splitting the parts of a given piece between the two composers, who then write independently and put the two halves together after the fact. Lateef was one of the pioneers of the multiculturalism Rudolph has built his sound around, and this compositional method produces not clashes but rather complementary cogs in meshing wheels. There are more normally composed pieces as well on a CD that brings jazz, blues, and world music together in a gloriously coherent whole. A number of musicians from Moving Pictures are included in the ensemble, with Ralph Jones and trumpeter Charles Moore making especially valuable contributions and Lateef excelling like the venerable master he is.

what to buy next: Credited to Moving Pictures, Skyway ♪♪♪♪ (Soul Note, 1994, prod. Adam Rudolph) includes Jones, Allen, Eubanks, and multi-instrumentalist Jihad Racy on ney and salamiyyah (reed flutes), oud (Arabic lute), kaman (Arabic violin), mijwiz (double clarinet), and rababah (Egyptian fiddle). The sheer variety of timbres, textures, and rhythms is a delight, but there is nothing cut-and-paste about the way it all comes together; the music seems to grow organically, with a pervading feeling of ritual throughout the project.

the rest:
(With Hassan Hakmoun and Don Cherry) Gift of the Gnawa ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1991)
Adam Rudolph's Moving Pictures ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1992) Contemplations ♪♪♪ (Meta, 1997)

worth searching for: The Dreamer ♪♪♪♪ (Meta, 1995, prod. Adam Rudolph) was Rudolph's first release on his Meta label, and uses Moore, guitarist G.E. Stinson, Allen, violinist Jeff Gauthier, Jones, vocalist Kimball Wheeler, narrator Robert Wisdom, and Rudolph's young daughter, Hannah, on vocals. It's an opera of sorts, and comes as part of a gorgeous package with 12 paintings accompanying texts (inspired by Nietzsche and Schopenhauer) by Nancy Jackson, with each musical piece matched to a painting. Perhaps because the 32-page spiral-bound booklet is nearly the size of two CDs laid top-to-bottom, and thus an awkward size for chain-store bins, this release may be easiest to obtain by ordering it directly from Rudolph through his Web site, www.metarecords.com, where his other Meta albums are available as well. The suite, as one might guess from its title, often has the floating quality of a dream. The music's more composed nature and the texture of Rudolph's synthesizers and Gauthier's violin combine with Wheeler's classically trained singing to project a more formal feeling than Rudolph's other recordings.

influences:

⏮ Don Cherry, Yusef Lateef, Fred Anderson, Malawi Nurdurdin, Charles Moore, Pandit Taranath Rao

⏭ Kevin Eubanks, Hassan Hakmoun

see also: Hassan Hakmoun, L. Shankar, Foday Musa Suso, Randy Weston

Steve Holtje

Runrig

Scottish folk-rock

Formed 1973, in Scotland. Based in Scotland.

Rory MacDonald, bass, vocals, accordion (1973–present); Calum MacDonald, percussion, vocals (1973–present); Blair Douglas, accordion (1973–74, 1978–79); Donnie Munro, vocals (1973–97); Robert MacDonald (died 1986), accordion; Malcolm Jones, guitars, accordion, pipes, hurdy-gurdy, whistle, jew's-harp (1979–present); Richard Cherns, keyboards (1981–86); Iain Bayne, drums, percussion, timpani (1984–present); Peter Washart, keyboards, keyboard programming (1986–present); Bruce Guthro (Canada), vocals (1998–present). (All members are from Scotland except where noted.)

Beginning as a university band playing traditional dance tunes, Runrig has come a long way in 25 years. Their Gaelic folk-rock anthems (with emotional lyrics commenting on social and political conditions past and present) have won them a huge following in Scotland, where their concerts fill large stadium-like venues. Late in the summer of 1997, longtime vocalist Donnie Munro left Runrig to pursue a career in politics. The first album with his successor, Bruce Guthro, was released in 1999 (In Search of Angels), with the band carrying on Munro's social consciousness in its own way—Runrig released a special, limited-edition CD single of "May Morning" to commemorate the formation of a Scottish Parliament.

what to buy: Although Runrig's 1988 release, The Cutter and the Clan, was issued in the United States by Chrysalis, it is only available now as an import. The one all-original Runrig album presently licensed to a U.S.-based label is Maral ♪♪♪♪ (Chrysalis, 1995/Avalanche Communications, 1996, prod. Brian Young, Runrig). It's pretty standard late-period Runrig, with Munro's charismatic voice leading the charge over the instrumentalists' energetic, rocked-up march rhythms. "Lighthouse" is a particularly effective track, not as bombastic as several others, but with a melody that lingers long in your mind even after the first time you hear it. The thoughtful lyrics use the metaphor of lighthouse as refuge to relate modern feelings of alienation and confusion.

the rest:

BBC Session/Live at the Royal Concert Hall, Glasgow '96 N/A (BBC Music/EMI, 1999)

Long Distance—The Best of Runrig N/A (BBC Music/EMI, 1999)

worth searching for: If you can find it as an import, The Cutter and the Clan ♪♪♪♪½ (Chrysalis, 1988) is worth picking up. It contains two singularly strong songs with environmental themes: "Protect and Survive" and "Our Earth Was Once Green."

influences:

⏮ Dick Gaughan, Battlefield Band, Tannahill Weavers, Fairport Convention, Bruce Springsteen, Five Hand Reel

⏭ Capercaillie, the Oyster Band, Billy Bragg, Rawlins Cross, Wolfstone

Ken Roseman

Rurutu Choir

Polynesian

Formed in Rurutu. Based in Rurutu.

Individual members not identified.

The small, isolated island of Rurutu, roughly 250 miles southeast of Tahiti, has produced a polyphonic a cappella choral style with a pentatonic origin in the island's ancient pagan chants. Swooping intonation by the lead voice and the sort of high, wailing head tone heard in traditional Chinese singing have been augmented (some might say corrupted) by the chordal influence of Protestant hymns. The resulting hybrid suggests nothing so much as an independently developed gospel style, with the communal fervor of the group and the individual expression of the high voice perfectly balanced. Sometimes the choir is co-ed, but most often it seems exclusively female, or at least dominated by the treble voices.

what's available: Polynesian Odyssey ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1996, prod. Pascal Nabet-Meyer) was the third album produced by scholar/preservationist Pascal Nabet-Meyer in his exploration of Polynesian music, and as the only current record of this group it is a very valuable document. Veteran or open-minded world-music listeners will quickly hear past the variable tuning and (probably deliberately) inexact group intonation (compared to Western choral standards, so intolerant of individual variation) and luxuriate in the fullness of the sound, the diversity of the arrangements, and the passion the singing exudes at every point. It's especially chordal (and thus accessible for first-time listeners) on "Ietu Te Ea," "Pure," and "Faatata," the latter sounding uncannily like "Bringing in the Sheaves." The liner notes are over-romantic and vague, but one Ngatokorua Patia has songwriting credit for all tracks; whether that's merely for publishing purposes or involves either arranging of traditional materials or actual composition is not specified. Texts of songs are provided, but not translations, though each lyric is summarized.

kelly russell

influences:
◀◀ Tahitian Choir, Tubuai Choir

see also: Tahitian Choir

Steve Holtje

Kelly Russell

Newfoundland folk

Born 1956, in St. John's, Newfoundland, Canada. Based in St. John's, Newfoundland, Canada.

A professional musician since 1974, Kelly Russell was born into a well-known Newfoundland family. His father, Ted Russell, was familiar to Newfoundland audiences through his role as Uncle Mose on CBC radio. Many of the humorous stories the elder Russell used in his radio show were culled from ones local fisherman had told him during his travels around Newfoundland's tiny outport communities as a district magistrate. The deep love for Newfoundland traditional arts that was passed from father to son led to the establishment of Pigeon Inlet Productions in 1979. Since its inception, the record label, owned and operated by Kelly Russell, has produced more than 30 recordings of Newfoundland's rich and diverse musical and storytelling traditions. In addition, Russell was an original member of landmark Newfoundland groups Figgy Duff and the Wonderful Grand Band. But his most fruitful musical relationships were with Newfoundland's late great fiddle masters Rufus Guinchard and Emile Benoit. While primarily known as a fiddler, Russell also plays concertina, bouzouki, mandolin, tin whistle, dulcimer, and harp.

what to buy: It is a testament to Russell's immense talent that no single recording best encompasses his music. This is partly because he has yet to produce a definitive solo recording, all his work having been within band settings. The Plankerdown Band was formed by Russell and accordion player Fran Maher after the demise of Figgy Duff. Their only recording, The Jig Is Up ♪♪♪♪½ (Pigeon Inlet Productions, 1993, prod. Plankerdown Band), is a great collection of traditional music that is in much the same traditional-roots vein as early Figgy Duff. Russell's fiddle and Maher's accordion are front-and-center while the other members provide a steady beat on bass, guitar, and drums—but the core is always acoustic. The playing is excellent and arrangements superb. The ensemble Bristol's Hope features an all-star cast of Newfoundland's finest musicians and is the closest thing to a traditional supergroup you will find in the province. Their only recording, Lately Come Over ♪♪♪♪½ (Pigeon Inlet Productions, 1997, prod. Sandy Morris, Kelly Russell), is a highly successful combination of Newfoundland's folk instrumental and vocal traditions. This group was formed specifically to celebrate the 500th anniversary of John Cabot's arrival in what was to become Newfoundland, and this album is the best collection of the area's music released since the heyday of Figgy Duff.

what to buy next: Following the demise of the Plankerdown Band, Russell joined forces with St. John's–based alternative outfit Drive to form the Planks. Smashed Hits ♪♪♪♪ (Pigeon Inlet Productions, 1998, prod. Tom Ronan, Kelly Russell) is the Planks' debut, successfully combining an alternative-music sensibility with the traditional music of Newfoundland. The band convincingly emulates the sounds of Led Zeppelin, Pearl Jam, and Black Sabbath while Russell works his fiddle magic. Guest appearances by the grand master of the Newfoundland accordion, Frank Maher, and a nice version of the traditional song "Arthur McBride," make for a truly diverse and innovative listening experience. The Planks definitely aren't for everyone, but their combination of two seemingly irreconcilable musical forms turns out to be a match made in heaven.

worth searching for: Tall Are the Tales ♪♪♪½ (Pigeon Inlet Productions, 1995, prod. Kelly Russell) features narratives from seven of Newfoundland's finest storytellers, including Russell and his late father. While there is no music, the stories are entertaining and paint a splendid picture of the island's vibrant tradition in this field.

influences:
◀◀ Emile Benoit, Rufus Guinchard, Ted Russell, Noel Dinn

▶▶ Patrick Moran, Glen Hiscock

Cliff McGann

Rustavi Choir

Georgian Polyphony

Formed 1968, in Georgia, U.S.S.R. Based in Georgia.

Variable and seldom-identified membership over 30+ years, directed by Anzor Erkomaishvili.

Established during the Cold War, this all-male choir is typical of the type of ethnic ensembles once supported by the Soviet regime. Though the basis of the group's material lies in folk music, it is not stylistically "pure." However, the choir's structure sensibly gives the lead vocals in songs from different parts of Georgia to vocalists who hail from those regions. Though use of the term "Georgian Polyphony" is standard, it's something of a misnomer. As noted above, it's not really one style, but several, from various regions of the former Soviet republic. Nor is it usually polyphonic in the strict sense of the word. Most often it's in three parts, a drone bass and two upper parts that frequently move in parallel motion. These upper parts sometimes are ornate, or flutter in wide intervals in a style between ululation and yodeling, often on nonsense syllables. Too much has been made of the group's maleness, overemphasizing the singers' robust tones and dissonant harmonies. Not only do female choirs from Eastern Europe tend to exhibit the same qualities, but such stereotyping obscures the great versatility of this group, which excels equally in quiet, mellifluous repertoire.

The Rustavi Choir

what to buy: By its very title, Oath at Khidistavi: Heroic Songs and Hymns from Georgia ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1998, prod. Ted Levin) plays into the testosterone stereotype, but two of the highlights are the hushed "Romelni Kerubinta (Those Who Are like the Cherubim)" and the lullaby "Batonebo." There are plenty of rousing tunes, though, with a nice mix of work songs, wedding songs, tales of battle, and the so-called "table songs"—which allow for bravura virtuosity. The liner notes include an interview with choir director Anzor Erkomaishvili and complete lyrics and translations.

what to buy next: Recorded live (in good sound) in Germany in 1986, 2: Georgia ♪♪♪♪ (World Network, 1995) gets its title from being the second in a series of World Network releases proceeding by country (some references call this album Georgian Polyphony). There are 18 tracks by the Rustavi Choir and six by the instrumental Duduki Trio. There are also two Rustavi tracks with light instrumental accompaniment. Again, there is a well-programmed mix of styles, including some religious material. Georgian Voices ♪♪♪♪ (Nonesuch, 1989, reissue prod. Ted Levin) was this group's introduction to the West. Nonesuch compiled it from 1980s recordings made by the official Soviet record label, Melodiya. It lags slightly behind the group's other albums, but only in recording quality.

worth searching for: Global Voices: A Vox Set ♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1998, prod. Bob Haddad) is a three-CD collection of vocal music from around the world. It includes a previously unreleased Rustavi Choir track, "Tsmida Dedoplis Sagalobeli," a liturgical song from the Guria region for four vocal parts. Voices ♪♪♪♪ (Alula, 1996, prod. Ulrich Balss) is a compilation of eight modern vocal groups that includes two rare solo tracks by the late singer Hamlet Gonashvili, a Rustavi Choir member who died in 1986.

influences:

- Red Army Chorus, Bulgarian State Radio & Television Female Vocal Choir (a.k.a. Le Mystère des Voix Bulgares, a.k.a. Angelite)
- Tsinandali Choir, Ensemble Georgika

Steve Holtje

Cathie Ryan

Celtic

Born November 26, 1959, in Detroit, MI, USA. Based in USA.

In recent years there has been a resurgent interest in female performers of Celtic music. No wonder: with voices as haunting and mystical as that of harpist Aine Minogue, Canadian songstress Loreena McKennitt, or the ever-present Celtic/new-age performer Enya, the sound is stunningly beautiful and captivating. One of the latest upon the scene is Detroit native Cathie Ryan, formerly the lead singer of the renowned New York group Cherish the Ladies. Ryan's parents were from Kerry and Tipperary, Ireland, and Ryan gained much of her Irish musical influence from her grandmother and her father, a singer at the Gaelic League and Irish American Club. They taught her the value of choosing the right songs. From age seven she learned the sean-nós unaccompanied singing style and participated in All-Ireland competitions. Eventually Ryan moved to New York, where she studied under legendary sean-nós singer Joe Heaney. She acquired other influences on her music, however, from friends who were fans of country music, Motown, and traditional blues. Eventually, Cherish the Ladies' director and flutist, Joanie Madden, who had heard Ryan sing at a party, asked her to join the troupe. Ryan spent seven years with them, singing and playing bodhrán (Irish frame drum), before moving on to a solo career with respected roots/world label Shanachie Records.

what to buy: The artist is nothing less than phenomenal on her self-titled debut Cathie Ryan ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997, prod. Seamus Egan). She sings in a variety of Celtic styles, from traditional Gaelic to contemporary, her voice gracing melodies by Dougie MacLean, Dave Swarbrick, and Ralph McTell, in addition to the steady, buoyant rhythms of her own "Eveline," inspired by James Joyce. Particularly good is the sadly affecting love poem by John Frazier and Sean Tyrrell, "The 12th of July (Lament for the Children)," which calls for unity among people: "Your badge my patriot brother/It's the everlasting green for me/And we for one another." Though the sean-nós singing she is known for is present here, so are Ryan's American influences, the rhythms and styles that have shaped the rest of her career. The Music of What Happens ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1998, prod. Seamus Egan) continues in Ryan's poignant but affirmative fashion with an astute selection of songs on the traditional-to-contemporary spectrum and impeccable yet flexible vocal technique. Tasteful, sometimes haunting acoustic and a cappella settings do Ryan's singular voice great justice. Ryan joins singer Susan McKeown and new-age pianist Robin Speilberg for Mother: Songs Celebrating Mothers and Motherhood ♪♪♪♪ (North Star, 1999), a collection of lullabies, Celtic traditionals, and new compositions exploring the cycles of life and family.

worth searching for: Recorded during her tenure with Cherish the Ladies, The Back Door ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1992, prod. Gabrielle Donohue, Eileen Ivers) is titled for Ryan's song, a tribute to Irish immigrants in the United States. Another effort worthy of a concerted search is the Ladies' Out and About ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1993, prod. Johnny Cunningham).

influences:

- Hank Williams, Emmylou Harris, Joe Heaney, Dolores Keane, her grandparents

see also: Cherish the Ladies, Johnny Cunningham, Susan McKeown

Stephen Ide

S

The Sabri Brothers

Qawwali

Formed 1946, in East Punjab, India (now Pakistan). Based in Pakistan.

Ghulam Farid Sabri (died 1994), harmonium, vocals; Maqbool Ahmed Sabri, harmonium, vocals; Haji Kamal Sabri, chirya trana, vocals; Mehmood Ghazanavi Sabri, bongo, vocals; Fazal Islam, vocal; Azmat Farid Sabri, vocals; Sarwat Farid, vocals; Javed Kamal Sabri, vocals; Haji Abdul Karim, dholak; Haji Mohammed Anwar, tabla. (All members are from Pakistan.)

The Sabri Brothers were taught the technique of qawwali (the devotional music first known to the world through Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan) by their father and began singing in public when they were still children. They helped modernize the form with a more forceful percussion attack, and the call-and-response between the brothers made their performances especially memorable.

what to buy: The Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997), a compilation of extended performances from the Sabri's Indian albums, is a tour de force with its powerful vocals, relentless percussion, and accompaniment that includes hammered dulcimer and violin. The opening interlude of "Tajdar-E-Harman" sounds strangely similar to the opening notes of Joaquin Rodrigo's "Concerto de Aranjuez" as played by Miles Davis on his Sketches of Spain album, raising interesting questions about who influenced whom.

what to buy next: Ya Habib ♪♪♪♪½ (RealWorld, 1990, prod. Richard Evans), the album that introduced most Westerners to the Sabris, mixes the incredible vocals and percussion way up front, adding to the overall impact.

the rest:

Ya Mustapha ♪♪♪♪ (Xenophile, 1996)
Qawwali ♪♪♪♪ (Nonesuch, 1998)

worth searching for: Like many artists, the Sabris have turned out hundreds of cassettes for the Indian market. If you live in or near a city with a large Indian population, you'll be able to find their work in any cassette shop or food store.

influences:

- Minshi Razi-ud-din Ahmed, the Nazami Brothers, Farid Ayaz Brothers
- Badar Ali Khan

j. poet

G.S. Sachdev

Indian classical music

Born in India. Based in India.

Gurbachan Singh Sachdev is one of the world's best-known and most accomplished players of the Indian bansuri bamboo flute. Sachdev has worked with a who's-who of musicians in his genre, including Ravi Shankar and Ali Akbar Khan. The flute is less familiar as a lead instrument in Indian classical music than the stringed sarod and sitar, but Sachdev's impeccable technique makes the ragas he plays sound as if they were written for wood instruments. The combination of Sachdev's round, fluid tones with the contemplative nature of the classical pieces he performs has made his music a favorite in meditation/Yoga circles. He frequently appears in a duet format, usually with one of the two leading younger tabla drum players, Zakir Hussain or Swapan Chaudhuri.

what to buy: The World of G.S. Sachdev ♪♪♪ (Lyricord, 1996, prod. various) is a box set compiling three of Sachdev's best recordings, Solo Bansuri (1992), Live in Concert (1994), and Flights of Improvisation (1996). The concert disc finds Sachdev paired with Swapan Chadhuri and Flights of Improvisation is just that, a virtuoso duo performance with Zakir Hussain. Solo Bansuri emphasizes unaccompanied pieces, though occasional guests, including tambura (stringed drone instrument) player Gay Kagy, also appear.

best of the rest:

Amar Sangit ♪♪♪ (Relaxation Company, 1996)

influences:

- Ravi Shankar, Vijay Ragh Rao
- Zakir Hussain, Hari Prasad Chaurasia

see also: Zakir Hussain, Ali Akbar Khan

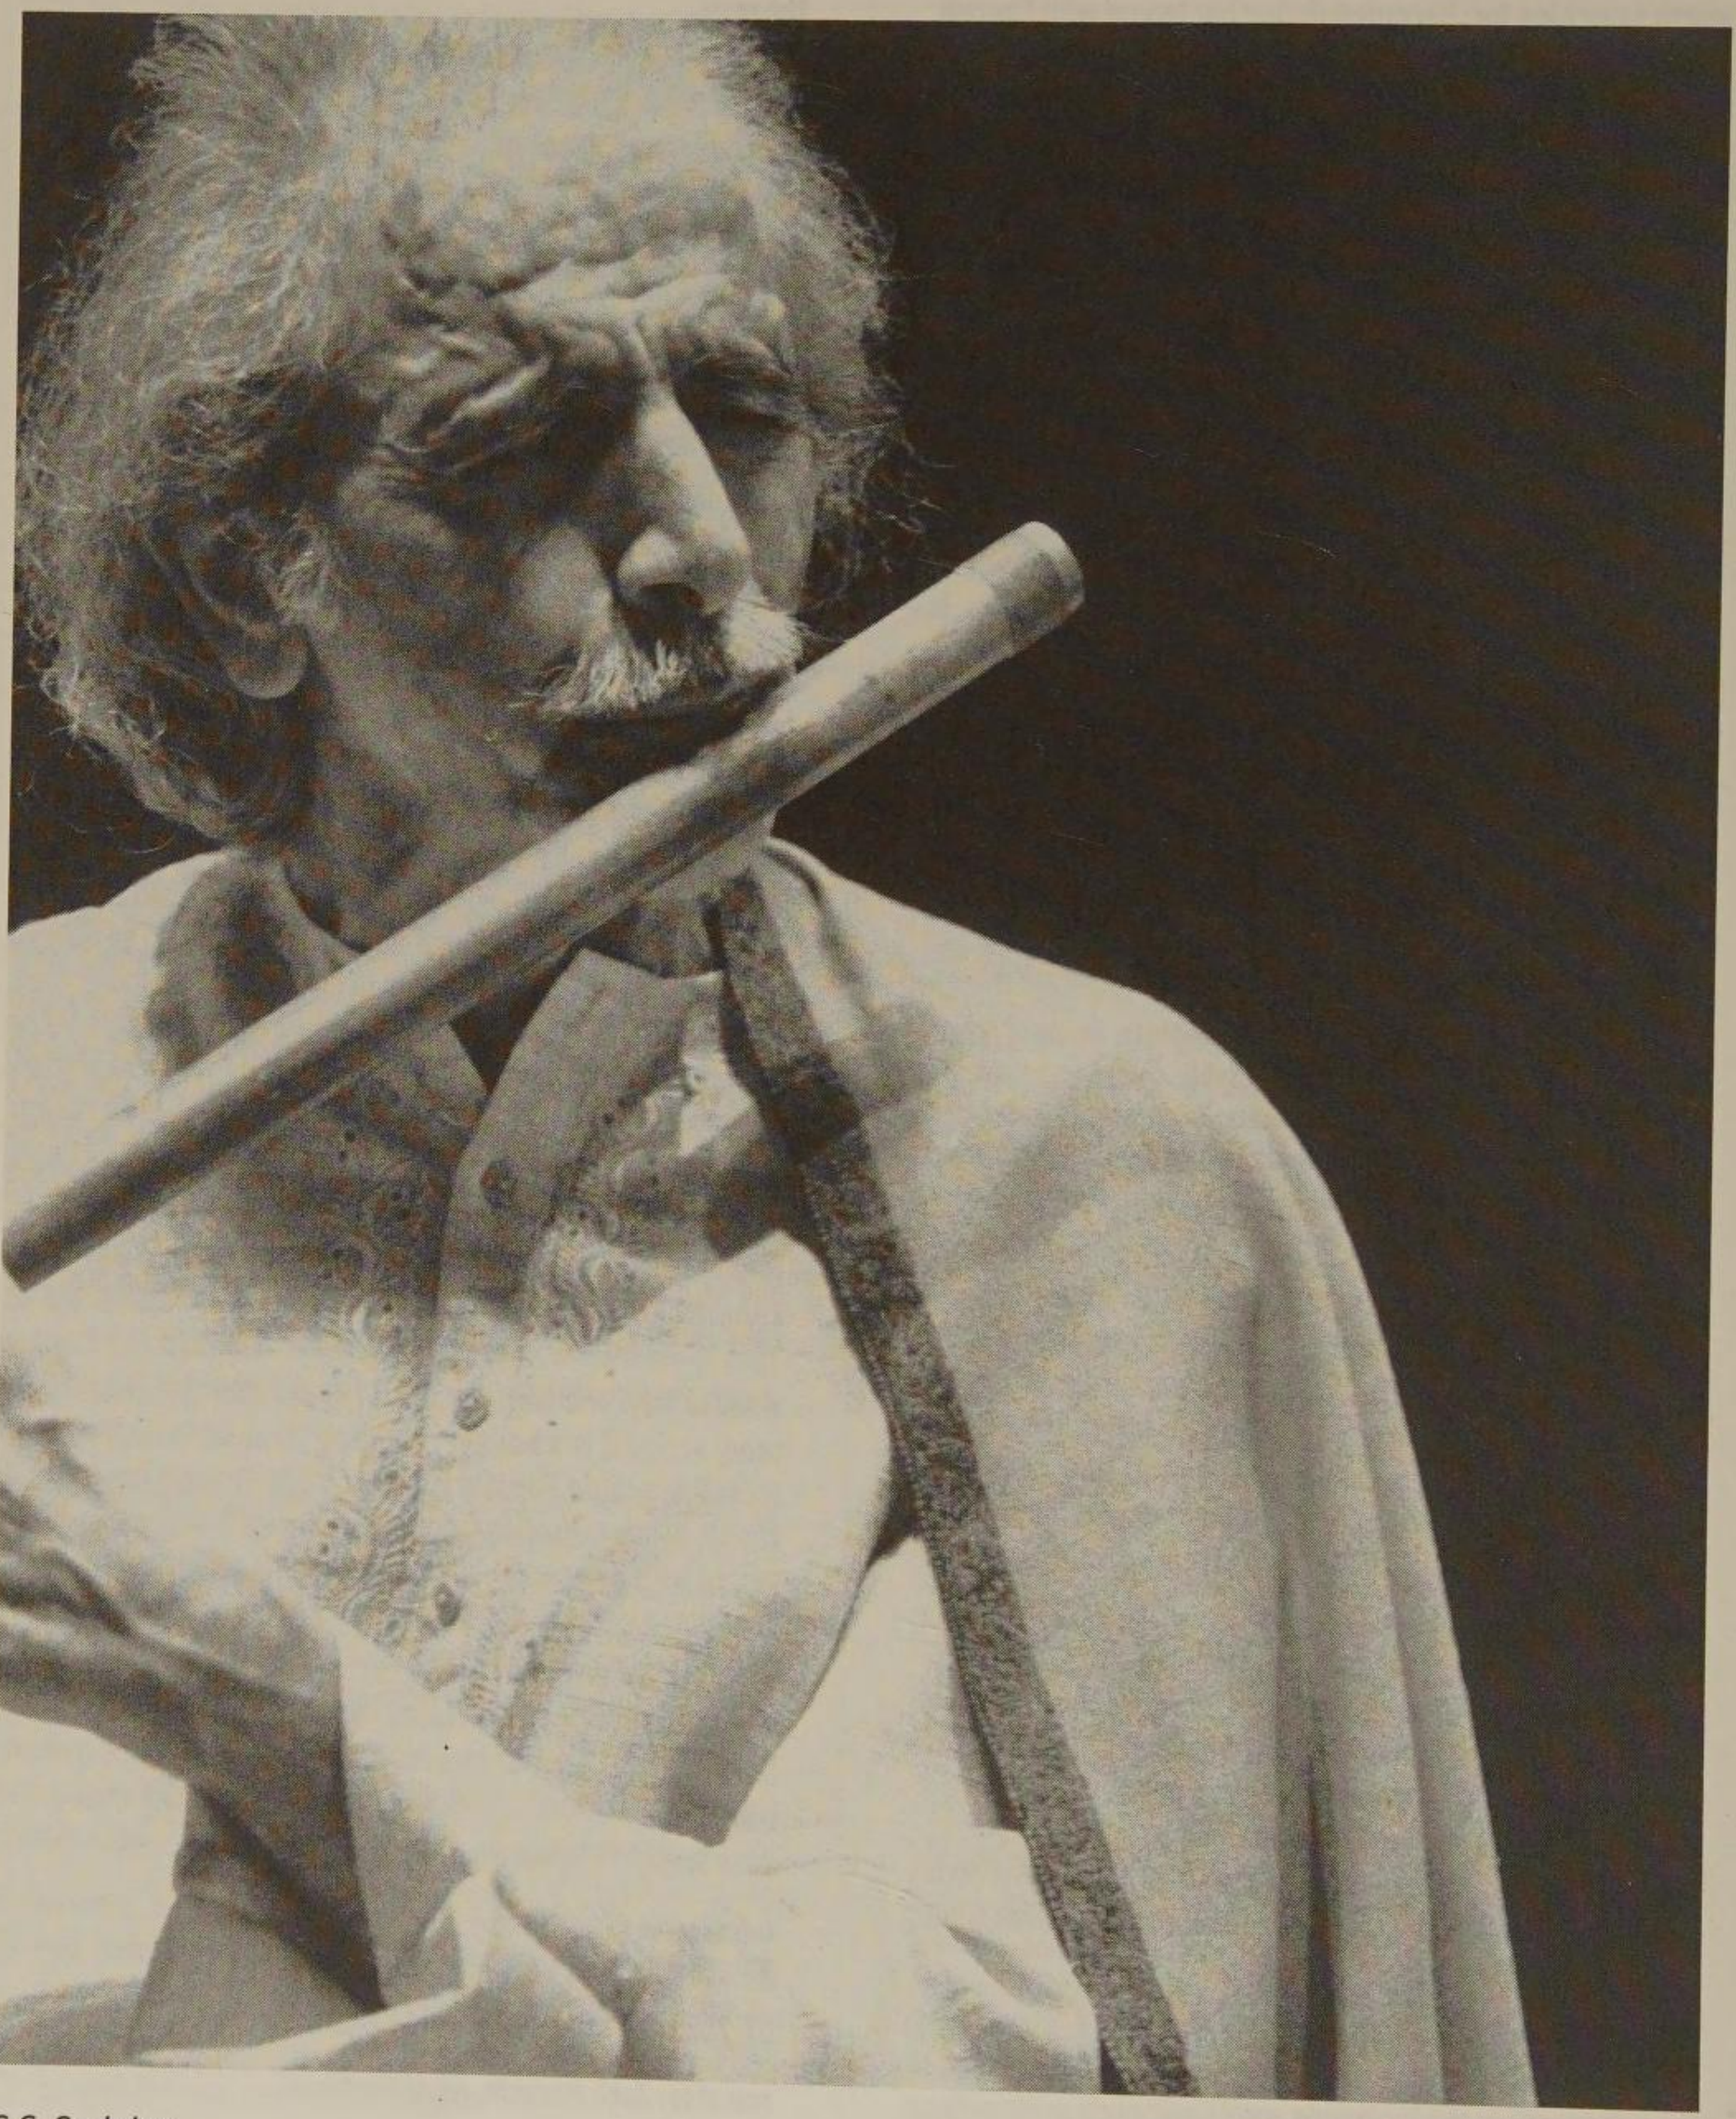
Michael Parrish

balwinder safri



G.S. Sachdev

Balwinder Safri /The Safri Boys

Bhangra

Born December 15, 1965, in Blehar Khanpur, the Punjab, India. Based in London, England.

Balwinder Safri is one of the most influential vocalists in bhangra, the musical style that developed in the U.K. from roots in the Punjab region of India. An energetic dance music, bhangra blends traditional Punjabi music with Western influences, including reggae, hip-hop, rock, soul, and other dance forms. The son of a ragi (religious singer), Safri initially sang Punjabi folk songs. Emigrating to England in 1981, he switched to bhangra and performed with such popular bands as Azaad, Ashoka, and Geet Sangeet. With his debut solo album, Reflections, released in 1991, Safri became one of the genre's leading performers. Safri's single "Par Lingarde (Legends)" was one of the first in the style and became a major hit. Together with his band the Safri Boys (a rotating ensemble with Safri as the focus), he attained international recognition with the 1994 album Get Real. The Safri Boys' second album, Off the Record, followed in 1995.

what to buy: A collection of 10 very diverse bhangra tunes, Get Real ♪♪♪♪ (Multitone/BMG, 1994, prod. Harjinder Bopara) spent eight weeks at the top of the charts and includes the hits "Chan Meray Makhna" and "Rehaye Rehaye."

what to buy next: Balwinder and the Safri Boys continued to weave their infectious Punjabi-inspired dance music on Off the Record ♪♪♪½ (Multitone/BMG, 1995, prod. Harjinder Bopara).

influences:

⏮ Kuldip Manak, Charanjit Ahiya, Gerdes Maan

⏭ Golden Star, Apache Indian, Bally Sagoo

Craig Harris

Bally Sagoo

Bhangra, Hindi remix, ragga

Born 1964, in New Delhi, India. Based in Birmingham, England.

Bally Sagoo is the man who almost single-handedly changed the global face of Indian music with his remixes of popular bhangra and Hindi movie hits. Sagoo grew up like many immigrant children, slightly embarrassed by the music his parents liked. Sagoo's father, Saminder, was in the Musafirs, a band that played bhangra, a style of percussion-heavy folk music from the Punjab, while Sagoo Jr. was into funk, rock, reggae, and later techno. By the early 1980s the younger Sagoo was a well-known club and party DJ.

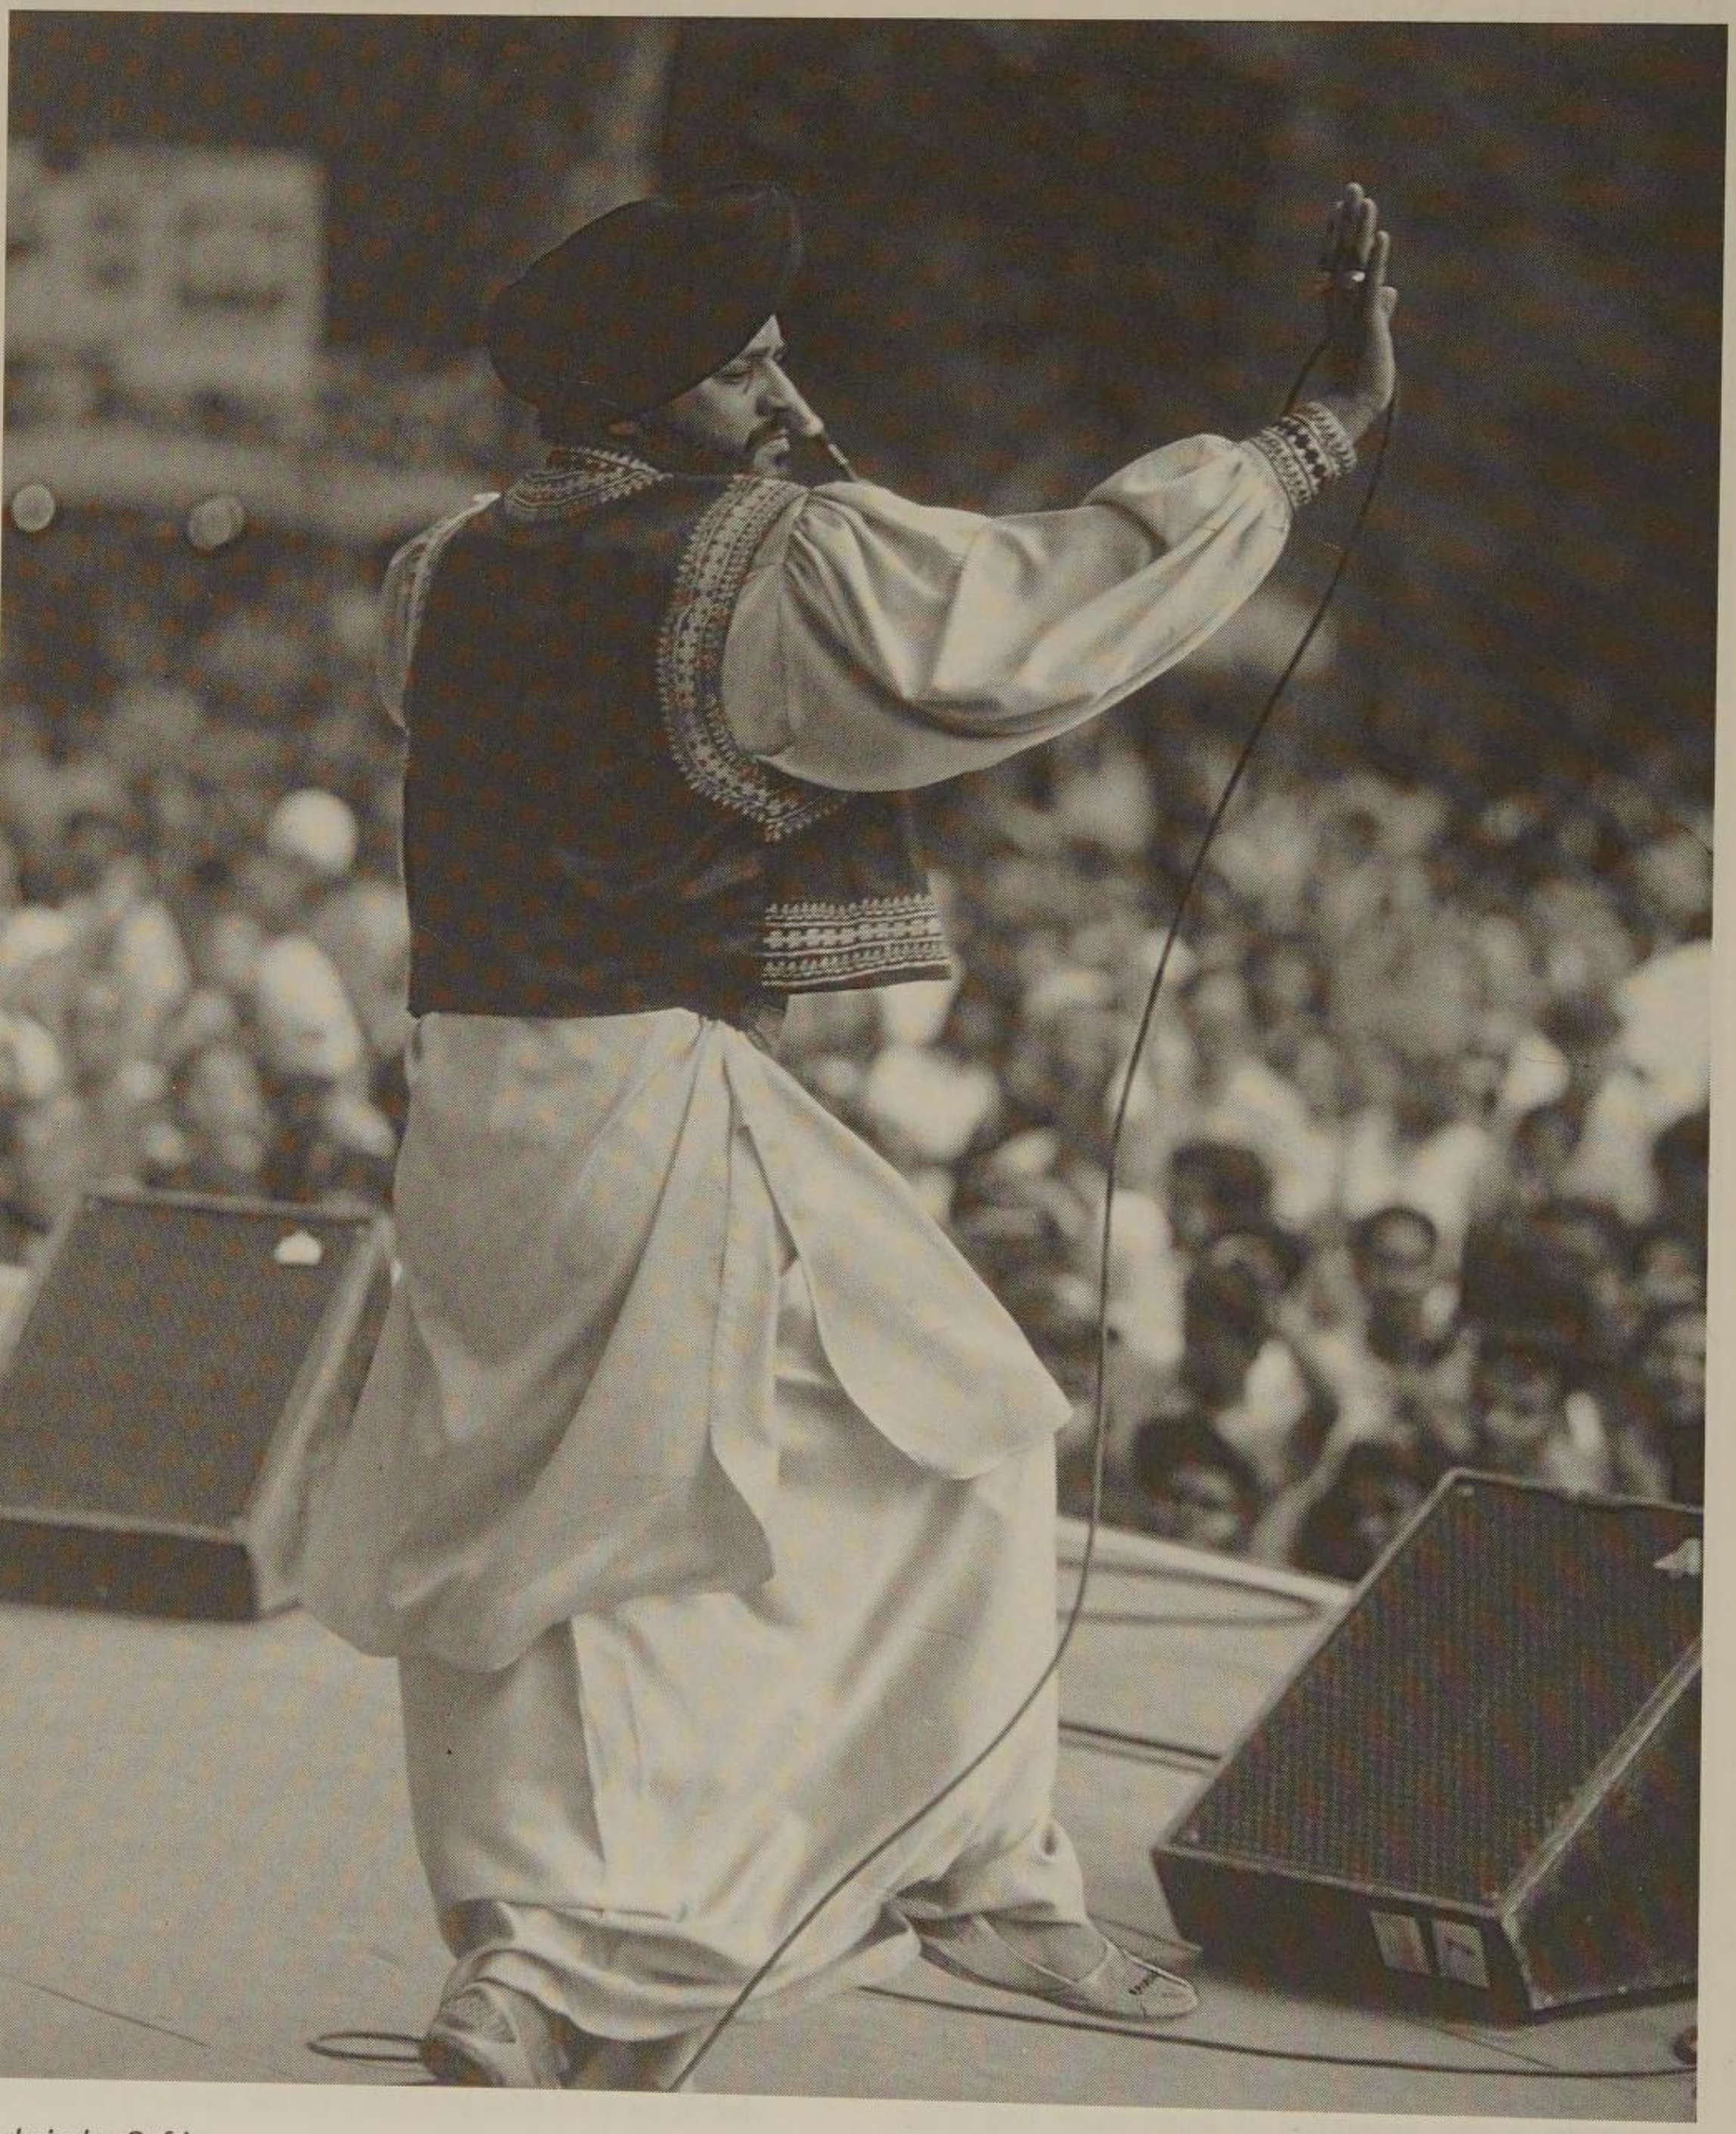
Meanwhile, a new generation of Asian youth had taken bhangra and made it their own (in England people with roots in India are called Asian to differentiate them from the large West Indian immigrant community). When bands like Alaap, the Safri Boys, and XLNC realized the bhangra beat fit neatly into the 4/4 of rock, reggae, and hip-hop, they began adding Western drum kits and electric instruments to the traditional percussion lineup of dohls and tablas. The result was an explosion of creativity that eventually led to new beats like jungle.

Since he was a musician himself, Sagoo's father had friends at Oriental Star, one of the new bhangra labels, and helped his son get a crack at remixing Malkit Singh's "Hey Jamalo," which was already a big hit. When the younger Sagoo's remix exploded worldwide, the label asked him to do his own remix album. The result, Wham Bam, Vol. 1, caused another sensation, and Sagoo joined the staff of Oriental Star as a producer. One of his first projects was Magic Touch, a collaboration with Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan that transformed the latter's qawwali style into a dancefloor flavor of the month. Dozens of remix albums followed, including Star Crazy, another monster hit.

By 1992 Asian dancers were complaining about the generic quality of the bhangra beat, and Sagoo put on his thinking cap. When Jackson Heights DJ Magic Mike suggested doing a remix job on the latest Hindi soundtrack hits, Sagoo jumped on it. Bombay, called "Bollywood" in India, produces thousands of movies a year, and every film includes several extravagant song and dance numbers—music videos from before the age of television. Films often rise and fall with the popularity of their soundtrack cassettes, and several generations of Asians are familiar with the biggest soundtrack hits. By this time, Sagoo had signed to Sony Music U.K., the first Asian artist on their roster. His inaugural effort for the label was Bollywood Flashback, a collection of Hindi soundtrack tunes given a big fat house 'n' techno remix treatment. The success of Bollywood Flashback — "Chura Liya," the lead-off single, became the first Indian song ever played on London's Radio One—created a new industry. Almost overnight every Asian DJ on the planet was remixing Bollywood hits and raking in the bucks, but few had the taste to turn out the kind of smooth dancefloor pop that is Sagoo's trademark.

what to buy: House, techno, hip-hop, and smooth R&B rub up against sumptuous Indian vocals by Ranjana Joglekay and Ireen Perveen to produce Bollywood Flashback ♪♪♪♪ (Tristar, 1996, prod. Bally Sagoo), one of the most innovative club albums of the 1990s, regardless of genre.

what to buy next: Wham Bam ♪♪♪♪ (Oriental Star, 1990, prod. Bally Sagoo), Sagoo's first remix album and his first megahit, includes the smash "Hey Jamalo." This album knocked Asian club music for a loop, and many people have yet to recover from its effects.



Balwinder Safri

best of the rest:
Star Crazy ♪♪♪♪ (Oriental Star, 1991)
Wham Bam, Volume 2 ♪♪♪ (Oriental Star, 1992)
On the Mix ♪♪♪♪ (Mango U.K., 1993)
Rising from the East ♪♪♪½ (Tristar, 1996) worth searching for: Sagoo has hundreds of cassettes (legit and bootlegged) available. Even the poorest are full of innovative beats and can produce unexpected cultural meltdowns. Check you nearest Indian market or music store.

influences:
⏮ Malkit Singh, Mohammed Raffi, Asha Bholse, Alaap, Heera, the Safri Boys, Detroit techno

see also: Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan

j. poet

Yan Kuba Saho

Traditional Mandinka kora music

Born mid-1940s, in Danhunhi, Gambia. Based in Serrekunda-Bandung, Gambia.

Yan Kuba Saho was born to a family of Mandinka griots (musical oral historians) in Gambia, the heartland of the kora, the 21-string harp-lute. He received a traditional griot's education, part kora and part Koran, and after 10 years he began to practice his ancestral art. This involved traveling throughout Gambia and Senegal, performing at ceremonies such as weddings and baptisms, using his music and his dry, powerful voice to praise patrons by evoking the great deeds of their ancestors. This tradition remains strong throughout the Mande (including Mandinka) lands of Mali, Guinea, Senegal, Gambia, Côte d'Ivoire, and Burkina Faso. A person who is being "sung" by a griot experiences a palpable sense of grounding in ancient events. The subject then feels inspired to proceed in the (presumably) honorable and courageous ways of his or her better ancestors. The griots of Africa may be equated with the historians of the West, but in a real sense they act as preemptive psychotherapists as well.

Saho lived in the Gambian capital, Banjul, during the 1960s and '70s before moving to his current family dwelling in the countryside. He has traveled in Europe and North America to perform but has remained a traditional musician rather than pursuing pop fusions of griot music as have so many of his kora counterparts, especially in Mali and Guinea. Saho is undeniably a master, and to compare his solo playing to, say, that of Toumani Diabaté of Mali is to understand the distinctive character of the Gambian kora style. Its sometimes-oblique harmonies and moody stop-and-dash rhythms are among the wonders of African music.

what's available: Kora Music from Gambia ♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1998, prod. Bob Haddad) presents Saho's renditions of newer songs in the griot repertoire; not the classics, but his playing is absolutely in the tradition, and quite sublime.

influences:
⏮ Alhaji Bai Konteh, Amadu Bandang Jobarteh

see also: Toumani Diabaté

Banning Eyre

Sainkho

Tuvan, improvisational

Born Sainkho Namtchylak, 1957, in Kyzyl, Tuva. Based in Vienna, Austria; Moscow, Russia; Amsterdam, Holland; and Milan, Italy.

Sainkho stands out in a style where men dominate and women have actually been discouraged from practicing—the phenomenal "throat singing" of the small central Asian Republic of Tuva, a form in which two or more tones are created at once by a single voice. The rarity of her gender gives Sainkho special novelty in a genre that is enjoying widespread novelty appeal overall, but Sainkho herself eschews specific labels, and it is indeed by incorporating these techniques into a broader avant-garde vocabulary that she has most distinguished herself.

Born to schoolteacher parents in a small gold-mining village near the Tuva/Mongolia border, Sainkho studied music at both a local college and in Moscow. Outside of this schooling, she also studied Tuvan and Mongolian throat singing, as well as lamaistic and shamanistic traditions of Siberia. Her professional singing career began as a member of Sayani, the Tuvan State Folk Ensemble. Moving to put her music into a broader context, she began working with improvisational musicians, first in what was then the Soviet Union and later in Europe and the U.S. She joined the ensemble Tri-O (which more or less translates not as "trio" but as "three holes"), with Sergej Letov (sax), Arkadij Kiritschenko (tuba), and Alexander Alexandrov (bassoon), and was noticed in the West. She has frequently collaborated in ad-hoc, free-form performances with horn players; a CD with New York saxophone/woodwind player Ned Rothenberg documents a sterling example. Sainkho seems determined not to be pigeonholed as a "world-music" artist, yet has not abandoned her roots—a difficult balancing act that doesn't please purists of either the world or jazz camps, yet broadens her appeal in the populous space between musical extremes. Gradually, other Tuvan artists are starting to record outside traditional boundaries, following Sainkho's lead, though not necessarily going in her avant-garde direction.

what to buy: Naked Spirit ♪♪♪♪ (Amiata, 1998, prod. Marc Eagleton, Matteo Silva) is at press time Sainkho's most recent release, and her most "produced," on a label with new-age leanings. But fear not; this actually works in her favor—she has freedom to explore new sound-combinations, and in a more structured and focused context than some of her other projects. The title track features the duduk (Armenian oboe) playing of Djivan Gasparyan, while on the haunting "Midnight Blue" Sainkho sings over Roberto Cacciapaglia's heavily pentatonic piano. Elsewhere she is joined by percussionists, and the mouth harp is a frequently heard texture. German Popov adds low vocals as well as indigenous Tuvan instruments. Some especially hypnotic tracks seem to utilize tape loops. This is a very approachable album, yet it retains musical depth on repeated listenings.

Sainkho

what to buy next: Amulet ♪♪♪♪ (Leo, 1995) is a duo album with Ned Rothenberg, who gets equal billing. Sainkho and Rothenberg (on saxophone, bass clarinet, and Japanese shakuhachi flute) sometimes build off of pre-existing songs, but largely seem to start from scratch and intertwine in imaginative free improvisations where variety of timbre is paramount. Sainkho, though she comes from a different tradition, will on many tracks here remind Western listeners of the more avant-garde moments of Yoko Ono; other possible references could be Joan LaBarbara or even Patty Waters. Much of the album was recorded in concert, and Tuvan roots are present but hardly predominant—this is music created in the heat of the moment, and valuable for representing the context in which the singer has made the greatest impression on Western listeners.

the rest:
Out of Tuva ♪♪♪♪ (Crammed Discs, 1993) Letters ♪♪♪♪ (Leo, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ Bilchi-Maa Davaa, Okna Zam Tasgan, Oorzhak Khunashtaar-ool, Yoko Ono

see also: Djivan Gasparyan

Steve Holtje

Buffy Sainte-Marie

International folk, hybrid pop, experimental music

Born February 20, 1941, in Saskatchewan, Canada. Based in HI, USA.

A sizable early output followed by a 25-year low profile has made Buffy Sainte-Marie one of those artistic icons who's more respected than known, but she beat everyone to some of the most fertile and enduring trends in contemporary music. Though most remembered as a folkie, you'll hear the very earliest stirrings of worldbeat, goth, electronica, and new age on her albums, as well as explorations in almost any other style you can name. The folk revitalizations heralded by such artists as Suzanne Vega and Tracy Chapman during the 1980s and Ani DiFranco in the 1990s were actually resumptions of the uncompromising and borderless music movement Sainte-Marie had begun before most of them were born. Her unique, melismatic vocal style introduced a histrionic, revelatory extremity that has revolutionized rock every time it has been expanded on, from Yoko Ono and Patti Smith to John Lydon and Sinéad O'Connor. With her Illuminations album, she also ushered in the era of electronic rock, a year before Kraftwerk. The secret is an absolute disregard of limits, which sometimes takes her music over the top but overall has sustained her as a Native American woman in a white male–dominated field and yielded a contribution to the 20th-century musical canon that few have paralleled.

what to buy: Sainte-Marie's debut, It's My Way! ♫♫♫♫♫ (Vanguard, 1964, prod. Buffy Sainte-Marie), takes the gloves right off with the Native rights anthem "Now That the Buffalo's Gone" and never stops slugging, through prime blues-gospel and Hindi standards, window-rattling feminist laments, joyous Americana, and the exhilarating, iconoclastic title track. The Best of Buffy Sainte-Marie ♫♫♫♫½ (Vanguard, 1970, compilation prod. Maynard Solomon) and The Best of Buffy Sainte-Marie, Vol. 2 ♫♫♫♫♫ (Vanguard, 1971, compilation prod. Maynard Solomon) are solid, satisfying collections that rescue many great songs from her out-of-print albums and salvage what's good from her lesser in-print ones.

what to buy next: Even were its ambitious folk/Scottish/Muzak instrumental track to be erased, Little Wheel Spin and Spin ♫♫♫♫½ (Vanguard, 1966, prod. Buffy Sainte-Marie) would stand as one of the most harrowing and virtuosic vocal performances of the rock era. On Moonshot ♫♫♫♫ (Vanguard, 1972, prod. Buffy Sainte-Marie, Norbert Putnam), Sainte-Marie's damn-the-torpedoes experimentation results in perhaps the most enigmatically bizarre pop album of all time. Recently back in print, Fire & Fleet & Candlelight ♫♫♫½ (Vanguard, 1967, prod. Maynard Solomon) teeters on the genius/madness razor's edge and often falls over into the latter. The album's cream has already been skimmed for the Best Of s—including orchestral art-song numbers conducted by Peter Schickele (soon to become the highbrow prankster PDQ Bach) that surpass most "classical pop" that's been attempted since—but if you want to hear it in its full messy glory, now's your chance.

what to avoid: The quasi-Nashville approach of I'm Gonna Be a Country Girl Again ♫♫♫ (Vanguard, 1968, prod. Bob Lucie, Mayjamaican music 7: reggae

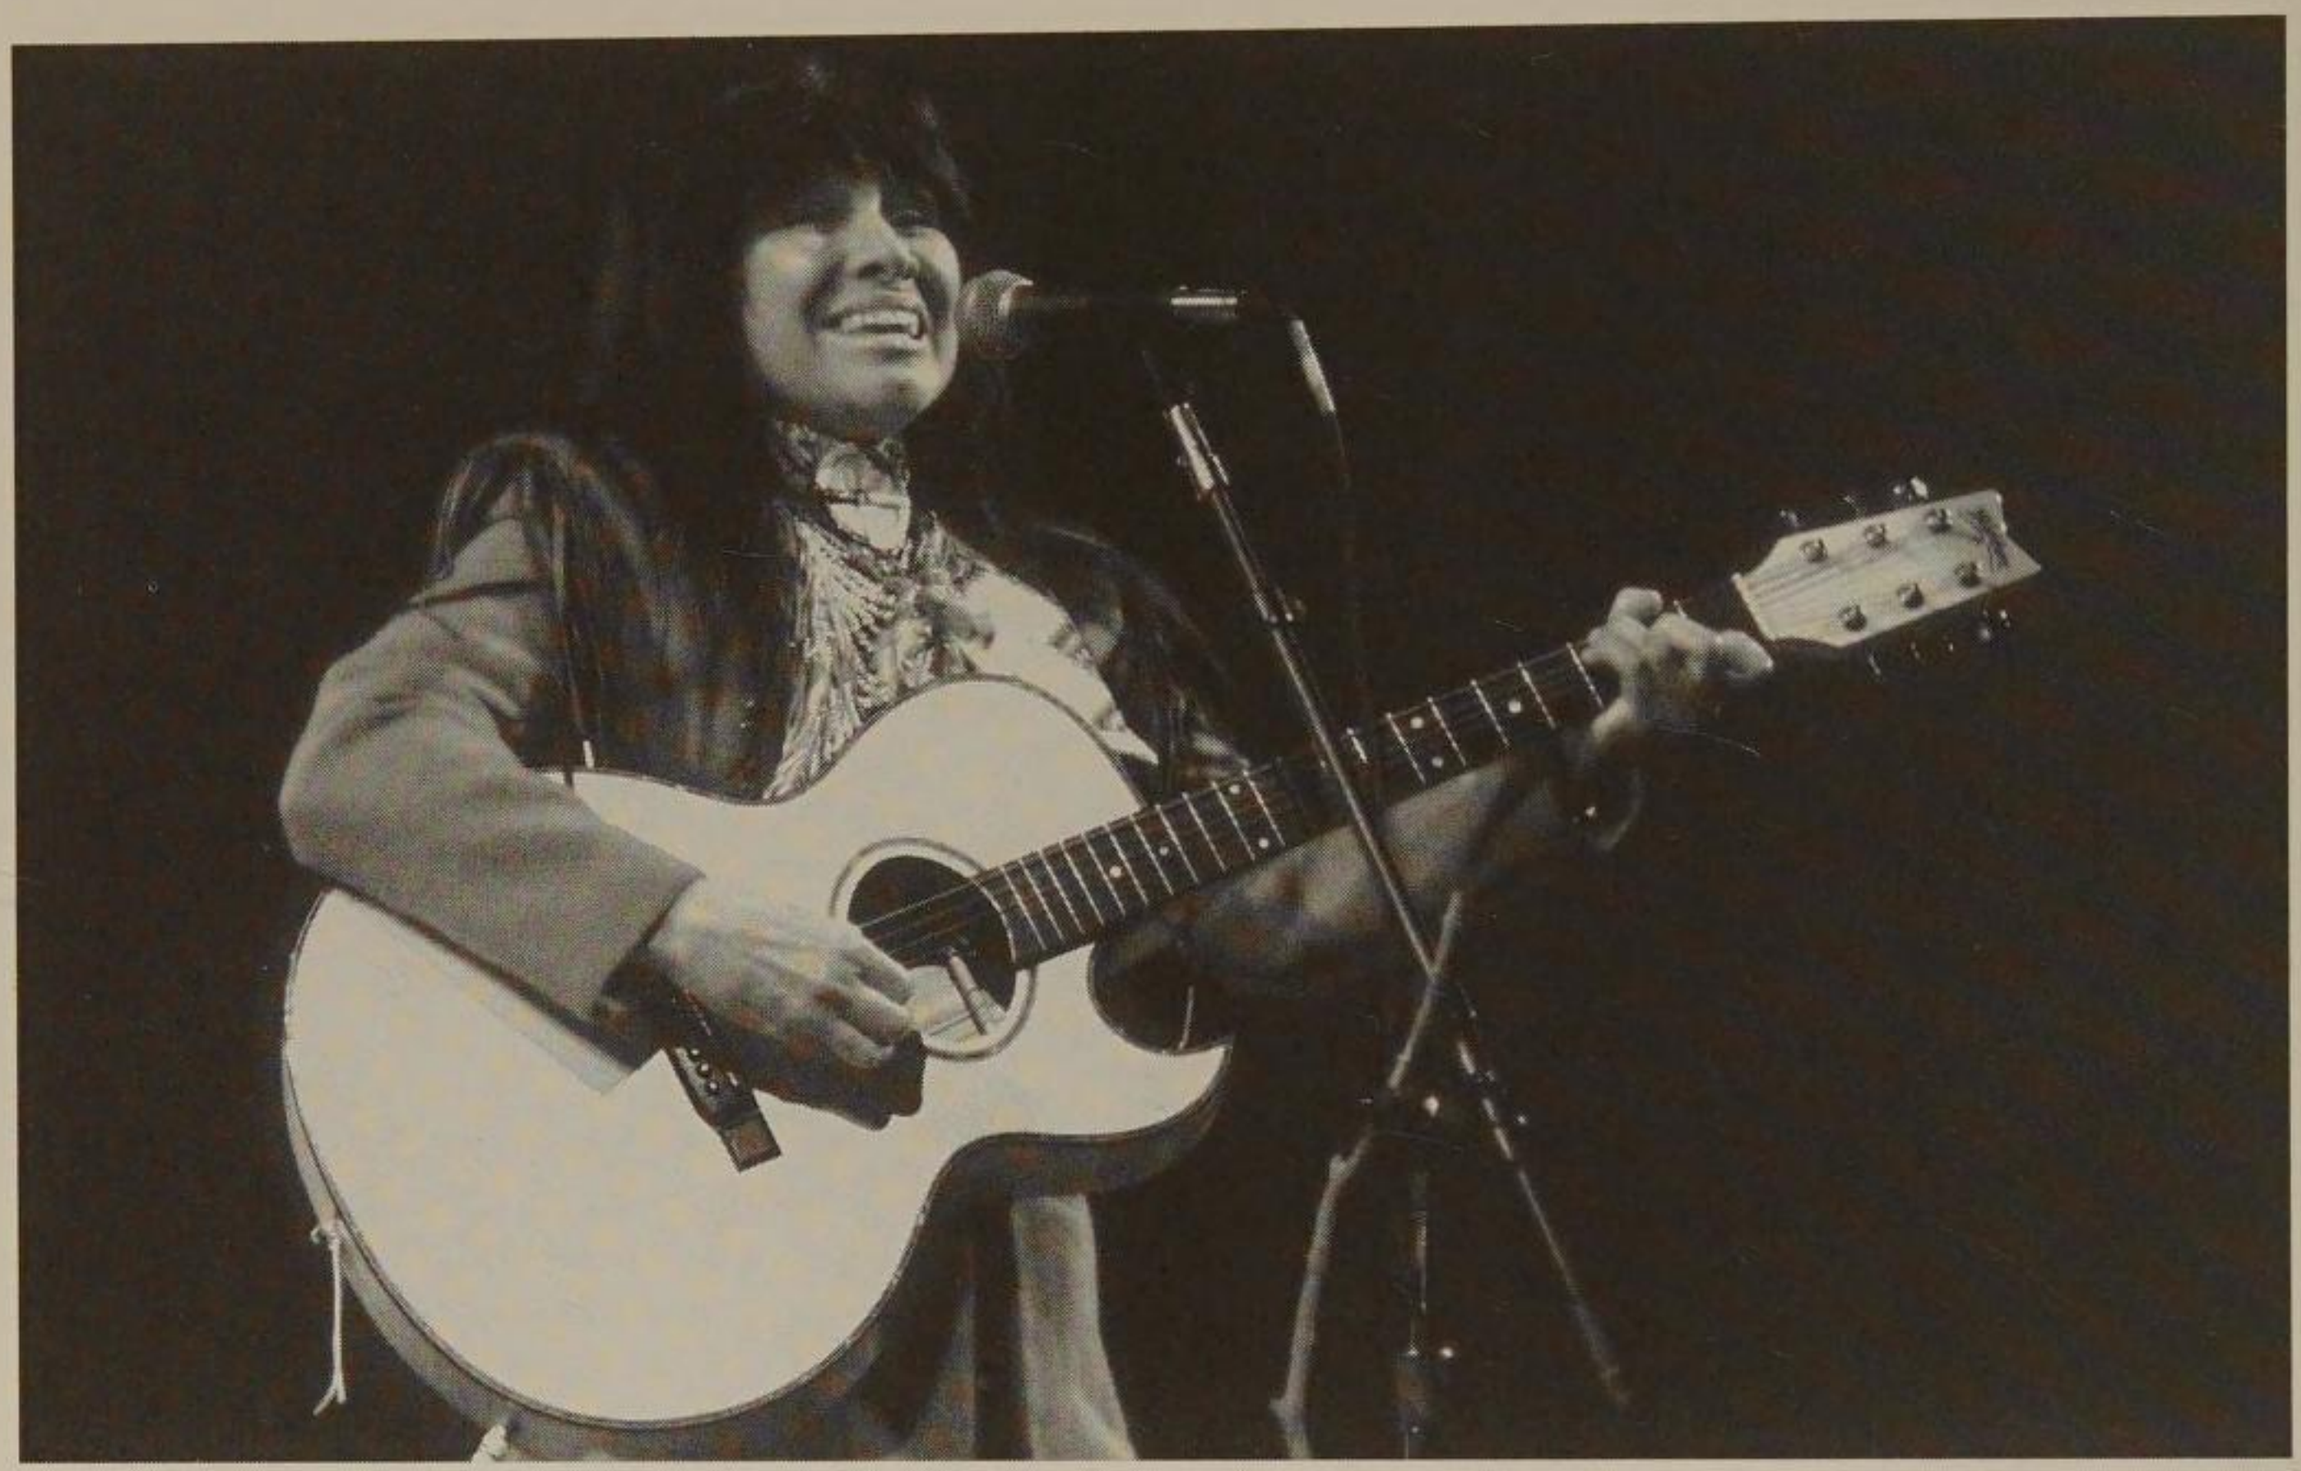
At its roots, reggae music encompasses the experiences and aspirations of the "sufferah"— giving formidable voice to the downtrodden, whether in articulating the Rastafarian's spiritual quest, as with Burning Spear's mystical, hypnotic chanting on Marcus Garvey, or in crying out the pain of the poor with a survivor's sense of purpose, as on Jimmy Cliff's reggae cornerstone The Harder They Come. It is a music with immense humor, as in Lee "Scratch" Perry's gut-busting slap at his former employer, "People Funny Boy." The funky-ass instrumental organ sure-shots of Jackie Mittoo and the Upsetters—that's reggae too, kid! And, as vivified in the mighty sounds of Bob Marley & the Wailers, and in the very image of the imposing "stepping razor" Peter Tosh, reggae is music of fist-pumping rebellion against "Babylon": the system of powerful, often white-skinned oppressors who have devised and implemented the iniquitous institutions of racism, colonialism, and police brutality. Reggae plants its feet on the foundation—earthy rhythms from the African ancestral core, including nyahbingi, mento, and kumina cultural music. Reggae is that same diminutive sorcerer named Lee "Scratch" Perry, blowing ganja smoke onto his master tapes as a spiritual blessing after creating dense, eerie works of art. Reggae too is the Revolutionaries—the band that updated classic "rocksteady" rhythms with unsurpassed skill, and provided the heart-stopping backup on such classic "rockers" albums as the Mighty Diamonds' Right Time and the Wailing Souls' Wild Suspense, not to mention their own self-titled masterpiece. The goose-bump-raising roots harmonies of vocal groups like the Abyssinians, Israel Vibration, and Culture—damn right that's reggae. Ditto for Toots & the Maytals' ecstatic "Reggae Got Soul," an ode to joy brought on by music. And perhaps this is the ultimate goal of all reggae—to uplift. As the Wailers sing on "Trenchtown Rock": "One good thing about music/When it hits you, you feel no pain."

Todd Shanker

674 buffy sainte-marie



Buffy Sainte-Marie

nard Solomon) ranges from pedestrian to gauche, with little in between. She Used to Wanna Be a Ballerina ♪♪ (Vanguard, 1971, prod. Jack Nitzsche, Buffy Sainte-Marie) is a strained and dated attempt at commerciality. Up Where We Belong ♪♪♪ (Angel, 1996, prod. Chris Burkett, Buffy Sainte-Marie) has a few moments of bracing powwow pop that aren't worth its many listless hits remakes, though the better tracks would make a great EP.

worth searching for: Inexplicably out of print, Illuminations ♪♪♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1969, prod. Buffy Sainte-Marie) electronically processed Sainte-Marie's vocals and guitar to add a kind of proto-sampling and eerie instrumental atmosphere to her haunting folk balladry, prescient worldbeat, and banshee-wail psychedelia. Three decades ahead of its time, it's still a striking listen. On Coincidence and Likely Stories ♪♪♪♪ (Ensign, 1992, prod. Rick Marvin, Chris Burkett, Buffy Sainte-Marie), also revolutionary and out of print, Sainte-Marie synthesized pissed-off political pop with a radical, powwow-influenced singing style that yet again expanded the horizons of what the rock vocal could be. The singer's pronounced tremolo, often misidentified as the tragic flaw that makes her the anti-Baez, is in fact directly traceable to this rich ritual form of singing, and Coincidence is the album on which she started making the connection literal. Its hard-edged version of "Starwalker" (also given a good reading on Up Where We Belong) can be found on the must-have anthology Heartbeat: Voices of First Nations Women, which is reviewed in this book's Compilations section. Sainte-Marie spent some of her years away from the recording studio, guest-starring on Sesame Street with her son and becoming a certified teacher; she has now developed an acclaimed educational program, the Cradleboard Teaching Project. This course links mainstream and Native schools in yearlong distance-learning partnerships, in which the two communities gain understanding of each other through video, telephone, and online exchanges of knowledge. The project's Web site is at www.cradleboard.org.

influences:

- Woody Guthrie, Pete Seeger, Bob Dylan, Joan Baez, Ben Blackbear
- Yoko Ono, Patti Smith, Suzanne Vega, Sinéad O'Connor, Tracy Chapman, Diamanda Galas, John Lydon, Morrissey,

Ani DiFranco, Mary Ann Farley, Jim Wilson/Little Wolf, Robbie Robertson

Adam McGovern

Ryuichi Sakamoto

World synth-pop

Born January 17, 1952, in Nakano, Japan. Based in Japan.

Along with Peter Gabriel and Brian Eno, Ryuichi Sakamoto occupies an extremely rare position in contemporary popular music: that of a world-class artist who has created a unique, truly global form of music and whose every move is viewed with excitement and trepidation by fans all over the planet. Schooled in Western classicism but influenced by both Japanese music and Western pop, Sakamoto is an international leader in the melding of synth-pop and dance music with folk elements from not only Japan, but also Africa, Brazil, India, and even (gulp) North America. After an initial solo album in 1978 (Thousand Knives), the keyboardist-composer formed the Yellow Magic Orchestra (YMO) with drummer-vocalist Yukihiro Takahashi and bassist-producer Haruomi Hosono. The three took Japan by storm with their arty and sometimes downright silly disco-ish synth-pop. Sakamoto left the trio in 1983 and immediately placed himself squarely on the map with his lovely, synth-inflected score to the film Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence, the first of close to a dozen such works. In 1984, he took the first step toward the extraordinary synthesis of styles that now characterizes his music, releasing Illustrated Musical Encyclopedia. By 1987's Neo Geo, he had developed his concept to a level that still stands as a benchmark for world-music fusion, and a year later his portion of the score to Bernardo Bertolucci's The Last Emperor won him both an Oscar and a Grammy for best motion picture soundtrack. Since then he has furthered his pop and film-scoring careers, honing the advancements of Neo Geo on Heartbeat and re-working themes from his scores on Playing the Orchestra and the chamber-music album 1996. Given his interest in using technology to serve the creative process, it's not surprising that his latest release, Discord, is also a "CD Extra," with visual tracks and a hyperlink to a special Discord Web site. But the music on Discord, a four-movement tone poem leading from "Grief" to "Salvation," continues his shift back towards orchestral writing. No matter where Sakamoto's interests lead, however, he will certainly keep on producing quirky, dazzling, beautiful, and ultimately meaningful music of lasting value.

what to buy: From start to finish, Neo Geo ♪♪♪♪♪ (Epic, 1987, prod. Bill Laswell, Ryuichi Sakamoto) is a knockout. Framed by gentle, Satie-like instrumental pieces, the album shifts through Okinawan/hip-hop combinations, rocketing dance-funk, and cool 'n' jazzy alternative rock ("Risky," sung by collaborator Iggy Pop). Of Sakamoto's soundtracks, Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence ♪♪♪♪½ (London/Milan, 1983) is the best starting point, as the main theme illustrates his singular ability to mix Asian modality with a rather French, impressionistic style of classical music.

what to buy next: Heartbeat ♪♪♪♪½ (Virgin, 1991, prod. Ryuichi Sakamoto, David Sylvian) is in many ways a more listenable affair than Neo Geo, although it seems more of a stylistic grab bag. Still, no matter what genres he dances through, Sakamoto's composing, arranging, and producing skills are in tip-top form here. The best-known cut from Illustrated Musical Encyclopedia ♪♪♪♪½ (Midi, 1984) is the bouncy Thomas Dolby collaboration "Field Work," but that track doesn't begin to reveal the cross-cultural wonders hidden within this disc, which ties together big-band jazz lines, Asian beats, rugged classical passages, light funk, and Japanese and Brazilian motifs.

what to avoid: Because Sakamoto has never been much of a singer, he (like Carlos Santana) has often been at the mercy of the vocalists with whom he's collaborated. On Media Bahn Live ♪♪½ (Midi, 1986, prod. Ryuichi Sakamoto), he depends on Bernard Fowler to carry most of the melodies, and Fowler is little more than a middle-of-the-road R&B singer. Even the band seems rather stiff on this double album worthy of dismissal.

the rest:

Thousand Knives ♪♪½ (Alfa, 1978)
Miraiha Yaro ♪♪♪½ (Midi, 1985)
(With David Byrne and Cong Su) The Last Emperor (Soundtrack) ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1988)
The Handmaid's Tale (Soundtrack) ♪♪♪ (GNP Crescendo, 1989)
Beauty ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1990)
The Sheltering Sky (Soundtrack) ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1991)
High Heels (Soundtrack) ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1992)
Little Buddha (Soundtrack) ♪♪♪♪ (Milan, 1993)
(With Yosuke Yamashita and Bill Laswell) Asian Games ♪♪♪♪ (Verve, 1993) Sweet Revenge ♪♪♪½ (Elektra, 1994)
1996 ♪♪♪♪ (Milan, 1996)
Smoochy ♪♪♪ (BMG/Milan, 1997)
Discord ♪♪♪½ (Sony Classical, 1998) worth searching for: Playing the Orchestra (Virgin, 1988, prod. Aki Ikuta, Ryuichi Sakamoto) features a suite of material from the score to Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence and one from The Last Emperor, performed live by an orchestra. The music is gripping, poignant, and marvelously played. Rarity seekers may want to search for the special promo-only boxed version of this album, which includes an extra three-song CD single highlighted by an orchestral version of "Before Long," the opening cut from Neo Geo.

ryuichi sakamoto

Ryuichi Sakamoto

influences:

- Brian Eno, Bill Nelson, Prince, David Byrne, Material, Sergio Mendes, Erik Satie, Maurice Ravel, Japanese, African, and Arabian folk music
- Pizzicato Five, Deee-Lite, Soul Coughing, Air

see also: Farafina, Bill Laswell, Talvin Singh, Caetano Veloso

Bob Remstein

Salala /Ricky & Mbasalala

Beka (traditional Malagasy funeral music)

Formed 1983, in Taolanaro, Madagascar. Based in Taolanaro, Madagascar.

Mbasalala, lead vocals; Senegemana, vocals, percussion; Christian Andrianjanaka, vocals, Malagasy violin; Ricky Randimbiarison, vocals (recording only, 1995). (All members are from Madagascar.)

Although many people on Madagascar are Christian, many pre-Christian religious practices still survive as well. One is a funeral ritual in which singers known as mpibeko improvise a song to soothe the passage between worlds. The songs include details of the departed's life and incantations to calm the spirits of the survivors. These songs are also sung at famadiahana ceremonies—where the dead are disinterred and carried to the home of their children to be wrapped in clean sheets before reburial—and at healing ceremonies, where the music is said to enter into the deepest part of the soul and persuade evil spirits to assume a more positive form. Mbasalala and his trio draw on this tradition, but they have also trained in Western music, and use Western ideas of composition and harmony in their music. Mbasalala met Ricky at the German Institute for the Arts in Antananarivo, a school that supports and promotes Malagasy music. ("Malagasy" is the adjectival form of "Madagascar.") Although they both sing with their own groups, Ricky and Mbasalala decided to team up for the disc that bears their name.

what's available: The production on Ricky & Mbasalala ♪♪♪♪½ (Weltmusik, 1995, prod. Sender Freies) is cleaner than on Mbasalala's earlier Salala album, but the music is just as amazing. The singers mix African doo-wop, deep churchy harmonies, rhythmic grunts and pants that could be from Zululand or the mid-Pacific, soaring falsetto flights of ecstasy, and call-and-response vocals that bob and weave like a flock of hummingbirds courting a field of honey-dripping jungle flowers. Another of many world-music styles that display the incredible flexibility of the human voice. The sound on Salala ♪♪♪♪ (Cobalt, 1994, prod. Philippe Conrath) is a bit dry, but it's a minor distraction. Everything mentioned above applies here too; another brilliant low-key gem.

influences:

- Bessa
- Lazan' Amtanifosty

j. poet

Salamat

Nubian pop

Formed c. 1992, in Cairo, Egypt. Based in Cairo, Egypt.

Fathi Abou Greisha, vocals; Mahmoud Fadl, conga, dohopla, tar; Hassan Meky, accordion, keyboards; Ahmed El Saidy, sax; Salma Abd Rady, vocals. (All members are from Egypt.)

Young players who cut their teeth in Ali Hassan Kuban's Nubian Band strike out on their own, with a Pan-Arabic and Pan-African sound that will rock the casbah, no matter what language you speak.

what's available: Salam Delta ♪♪♪♪♪ (Piranha, 1995, prod. Hijaz Mustapha) is more traditional than their debut, and quite impressive. Salamat joins the Musicians of the Nile for an Egyptian super-session. The aforesaid debut, Mambo El Soudani ♪♪♪♪½ (Piranha, 1994, prod. Mahmoud Fadl), offers Nubian pop that balances traditional drumming and vocals with African rhythms and a hint of European musical theory. The recording isn't the best, but the muddy mix adds to the music's power. The yearning R&B-flavored sax of Ahmed El Saidy is particularly impressive.

influences:

- Ali Hassan Kuban, Hamza El Din

see also: Ali Hassan Kuban, Musicians of the Nile

j. poet

Dino Saluzzi

Tango, classical, jazz

Born Timoteo Saluzzi, May 20, 1935, in Campo Santa, Argentina. Based in Argentina.

Dino Saluzzi has a deep and abiding interest in the folk-music traditions of his native country, acquiring them through his membership in a clan of musicians. He learned the bandoneón (an accordion-like instrument) from his father and, despite an academic background in avant-garde classical music acquired through later studies, he has always used folk elements as the basis for his compositions. In that regard Saluzzi is a lot like fellow countryman Astor Piazzolla, whose interest in the tango spurred him to experiment with the form. Saluzzi uses the same elements in combination with milóngas (Argentinean cowboy songs), Candomblé (Afro-Brazilian ritual) rhythms, and music from the Andean Indian tradition to make a whole new hybrid. Saluzzi has entered the world-music market in the company of jazz performers like Charlie Haden, Edward Vesala, and George Gruntz, adding piquant, folk-rooted improvisations and colors to their music. Despite this, he is best known in South America for his membership in an experimental ensemble called Musica Creativa.

what to buy: Cite de la Musique ♪♪♪♪ (ECM, 1997, prod. Manfred Eicher) provides an introduction to Saluzzi's jazzier side. Along with bassist Marc Johnson and his son/guitarist, Jose M. Saluzzi, the senior Saluzzi's wizardly bandoneón playing has reached the synthesis of jazz and Argentine tango that was only hinted at in earlier recordings. Despite some quick pattering percussion on songs like "El Rio y el Abuelo," the overall impression is still sensuous and reflective rather than raucous. For Mojotoro ♪♪♪♪ (ECM, 1992, prod. Manfred Eicher), Saluzzi hired three other talented Saluzzis and a trio of outsiders. The blend of two bandoneóns by Dino and Celso with reed work by Felix (Saluzzis all!) swings in the same lush yet ascetic fashion as many ECM albums. Dino has some of the same stylistic conceits as Astor Piazzolla and Gato Barbieri, but the collective combination of Argentine passion and classical training doesn't take away from anyone's individuality.

what to buy next: With Rios ♪♪♪♪ (Intuition, 1995, prod. Lee Townsend), Saluzzi is first among equals in a trio with bassist Anthony Cox and vibes/marimba player David Friedman. The interplay between bandoneón and marimba is especially pleasing to the ear, but the music owes more to the vibrant folk roots of Argentina than it does to the traditional jazz bastions of New Orleans, Chicago, or New York. On Andina ♪♪♪½ (ECM, 1988, prod. Manfred Eicher), Saluzzi makes his bandoneón jump and mourn through intense, folk-based melodies, much as Piazzolla, Billy Strayhorn, and Zoltan Kodaly did for their respective cultures. Another worthwhile hybrid from Saluzzi is the album he made with the Rosamunde Quartet, Kultrum: Music for Bandoneón and String Quartet ♪♪♪♪ (ECM, 1998, prod. Manfred Eicher). Where the first Kultrum (released in 1983) featured Saluzzi's bandoneón with overdubbed voice, percussion, and flutes (all played by him), this new version combines his instrument with forces more closely aligned with the avant-garde aspects of his earlier training. The resultant blend of folk, jazz, tango, and European-based classical idioms, while heady, may not necessarily be the place for new listeners to start.

the rest:
Kultrum ♪♪♪ (ECM, 1983)
Once upon a Time—Far Away in the South ♪♪♪ (ECM, 1986)

influences:
◀◀ Astor Piazzolla
▶▶ Celso Saluzzi

Garaud MacTaggart

Sam-Ang Sam Ensemble

Mohori (Cambodian folk music)

Formed in Newington, CT, USA. Based in Newington, CT, USA.

Sam-Ang Sam, khloy (flute), thaun-rumanea (drums), roneat (Cambodian folk xylophone) vocals; Pok Van, tror so tauch (mid-range fiddle), tror ou (low-pitch fiddle), krapeu (zither); Yan Van, vocals; Chan Moly Sam, chhing (cymbals); Ra Khlay, vocals; Ngek Chum, roneat ek (high xylophone), roneat thung (low xylophone), khimm (hammered dulcimer). (All members are from Cambodia.)

With the help of some like-minded friends, Sam-Ang Sam and his wife, Chan Moly, formed this group in their adoptive land to play the secular folk music of their original one.

what to buy: Mohori ♪♪♪♪ (Latitudes, 1997, prod. Sam-Ang Sam) is one of the few albums of Khmer (Cambodian) music available in the States. A mohori is a small group composed of string and percussion players; songs are performed alternately—the singer sings a verse, then the band echoes the verse and adds improvisations. The music has a pleasing, percolating quality.

influences:
◀◀ Cambodian folk music

j. poet

Samite

Traditional Ugandan

Born in Uganda. Based in Ithaca, NY, USA.

Samite, like most Africans, lives in many worlds: traditional and contemporary, urban and rural, African and Western, introspective and wildly ebullient. Although he came of age in Uganda during Idi Amin's dictatorship and lost a brother to the reign of terror, his outlook remains positive and he continues to make music that's deeply spiritual; full of love, compassion, and hope.

Samite grew up surrounded by music, some of it literally coming out of the ground. "My mother played a traditional instrument she made by selecting a young supple tree and digging a trench around it. Then she'd fasten a section of tin roofing or a lid from a big metal can to the ground, tie one end of a string to the metal and the other to the tree. By pulling on the tree and plucking the string, she would make the most beautiful sound; music that made the earth sing."

Samite's uncle and grandfather both played flute and exposed him to the recordings of Miriam Makeba, Harry Belafonte, and Barry White, and when the family began renting rooms, he spent hours with the boarders learning to play drums and kalimba (thumb piano). Samite's first professional experience was in a band called the Mixed Talents, a group that played covers of tunes by Bob Marley, Kenny Rogers, and Rod Stewart. "We tried to be as Western as possible, and got quite popular." Samite didn't begin to explore his own cultural background until he settled in Kenya and joined the African Heritage Band. "I replaced the flute player, and when I began missing Uganda, I got my own kalimba and amazed myself, because I remembered how to play it." Around the same time, Samite met and befriended an old litungu (Kenyan harp) player. The old man taught him how to play litungu, and that instrument led Samite further back to his roots and his home.

Sam-Ang Sam

By 1982 life in Uganda was unbearable. "Everyone was totally paranoid. The police took my brother away, and since we were very close, I felt that it would be my turn next." Samite fled and landed in a refugee camp back in Kenya, an experience that changed his life. "It is easy to look down on people less fortunate than you. I had always had material things, and didn't realize people who lived on the streets had lives too. In the camp beggar and bank president became equal, all of us in the same desperate situation." Samite remembers one man in particular, a beggar, "who became popular with his amazing stories of the things he'd seen while living on the street. He led a hard life, but he made jokes about everything." Samite came out of the camp a new man. "I learned that despite class or education, we all share the same feelings. There are many differences and complexities, but in the end we all share our common humanity."

After leaving the refugee camp, Samite had musical success in Kenya, both with the African Heritage Band and as a solo act. He emigrated to the United States in 1987 and, thanks to an opening spot on an early Ladysmith Black Mambazo tour, began building a reputation as a traditional African musician. In an unlikely coincidence, a tune he wrote for the African Heritage Band while he was in Kenya came to the attention of the producers of Good Morning America. They used it for a segment on the show and the royalties paid for Samite's first home studio. For the past several years Samite has made his living as Uganda's unofficial musical ambassador to the United States. When he's not busy in his studio working on the songs that come to him "in dreams, or through the grace of the instrument," he's constantly performing. "I really enjoy doing shows for young children, especially kids from rural America who have never met an African or been exposed to African music, and young African American children. Children often seem embarrassed about Africa, perhaps from seeing too many Tarzan movies, but by the end of the show they're all singing and dancing. And when the black children see the white kids enjoying it, they develop a real sense of pride about their own culture. After eight years of living and traveling throughout the world, performing in temple courtyards in Japan, music festivals in East Berlin, and at Woodstock '94, the similarities of the human spirit overwhelmingly occupy my thoughts. I am convinced that we are all moved by the same desires, needs, and emotions, regardless of the language in which those feelings are expressed."

Samite's soothingly energetic music may sound jazzy to Western ears, but, as he points out, "Ugandan music, like jazz, is highly improvisational. In my music I use everything I've ever heard, traditional African music, jazz, classical, American country music. When an idea comes to me, I play it over and over again, till it arranges itself into a melody. My music, whether traditional or of my own composition, celebrates the common threads of human concern—love, friendship, the value of family, respect for the elderly, peace, prosperity, and pride in the planet that gave us birth. From the cradle to our last days, we all need to be valued, protected, challenged, and loved."

what's available: Silina Musango ♪♪♪½ (Xenophile, 1996, prod. Samite, Tony Cedras) is a collection of jazzy African praise songs, lullabies, and gently rhythmic ballads. Samite's traditional style is complemented by his jazzy improvisations on drums, kalimba, flute, and harp, with help from the guitar of Tony Cedras and occasional touches of cello, bass, accordion, and backing vocals. Samite recorded the deep, meditative work Dance My Children Dance ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1989, prod. Samite, Al Butterfield) in his home studio; simpler and folkier than Silina Musango, but equally as charming.

influences:

◀◀ Sammy Kasule, Maria Wandaka, Jimmy Katumba & the Ebonies

j. poet

Poncho Sanchez

Latin jazz

Born October 30, 1951, in Laredo, TX, USA. Based in TX, USA.

Along with his former boss, Cal Tjader, Poncho Sanchez is one of the two great non-Caribbean Latin-jazz bandleaders. A virtuoso conguero (conga player), Sanchez leads one of the most consistent and versatile (not to mention employed) Latin bands in jazz. Growing up in Norwalk, California, in a large Mexican-American family (he was the youngest of 11 kids), Sanchez taught himself flute, guitar, and percussion before learning the congas at age 18. Though it took him a while to break into the close-knit Latin percussion circles, he soon began working with local southern California bands. Hired by Tjader in 1975, he played a central role in that leader's popular group until Tjader's death in 1982. Sanchez formed his own band the same year and recorded two albums for Discovery, then signed on with Concord Picante. His band has become one of the label's staples, recording a series of consistently well-crafted albums, often featuring special guests. Part of the band's strength is its stability—the Banda brothers (Tony on bass and Ramon on timbales) have been with Sanchez since the beginning. With his large book of Latin and modern jazz charts, Sanchez fits easily into any musical context, working regularly at clubs, festivals, and concerts.

what to buy: As the title says, Para Todos ♪♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1994, prod. Carl E. Jefferson, John Burk) has something for everyone, including a very funky dose of tenor saxophonist Eddie Harris, who fits right in with Sanchez's typically well-played Latin jazz. Sanchez puts an Afro-Cuban twist on modern jazz tunes by Gerry Mulligan, Harold Land, J. J. Johnson, and Art Farmer, and spurs Harris to some very satisfying low-down tenor work on his great theme "Cold Duck Time." Sanchez's formula of tight, swinging arrangements, strong improvisers, and a mixed program of jazz and Latin themes reaches a perfect balance on Papa Gato ♪♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1987, prod. Carl E. Jefferson), one of his better sessions. Saxophonist Justo Almario, trumpeter Sal Cracchiolo, and trombonist Art Velasco all take advantage of their solo space, and the band is in excellent form on Horace Silver's "Señor Blues," Dizzy Gillespie's "Manteca," and "Tania," a lovely tune by the band's pianist, Charlie Otwell. A meeting of two Latin jazz giants, Chile Con Soul ♪♪♪♪♪ (Concord Picante, 1990, prod. Frank Marrone, Allen Farnham) features one of the best versions of Sanchez's band, with the great timbales player Tito Puente sitting in on two tracks, including one of the most emphatic versions of "Lover, Come Back to Me" ever recorded. Other highlights include pianist Charlie Otwell's title track, Eddie Palmieri's "Con Migo," and Cal Tjader's "Soul Burst."

what to buy next: An excellent Latin jazz session by one of the best bands in the business, Fuerte! ♪♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1994, prod. Chris Lang) features spirited solos by trumpeter Sal Cracchiolo, trombonist Art Velasco, and tenor saxophonist Kenny Goldberg, who also contributes two strong tunes. Sanchez keeps things interesting by varying the mood with a bolero piece and the West African–derived "Alafia" by pianist Charlie Otwell, as well as a smoking Latin version of Clifford Brown's "Daahoud" to close the album. In some sense every album Sanchez has made is a tribute to Cal Tjader, but for Soul Sauce ♪♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1995, prod. Carl E. Jefferson, John Burk) he recreates the great bandleader's sound by bringing vibraphonist Ruben Estrada into the band. Sanchez picked out a host of tunes associated with Tjader, including Clare Fischer's "Morning" and Mongo Santamaria's "Tu Crees Que." Sanchez's love and respect for his former boss comes through on every track. A must for Latin percussion fans, Conga Blue ♪♪♪♪♪ (Concord Picante, 1996, prod. John Burk, Nick Phillips) features the great conguero Mongo Santamaria sitting in on five tracks, including a brief but blazing version of Herbie Hancock's "Watermelon Man." The band is in fine form, with many solo opportunities for trombonist Alex Henderson, saxophonist Scott Martin, and trumpeter Stan Martin.

the rest:
Sonando ♪♪♪♪ (Concord Picante, 1983)
El Conguero ♪♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1987)
Bien Sabroso ♪♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1988)
La Familia ♪♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1988)
Cambios ♪♪♪♪ (Concord Picante, 1991)
El Mejor ♪♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1992)
A Night with Poncho Sanchez Live: Bailar ♪♪♪♪ (Concord Picante, 1993)
Baila Mi Gente—Salsa ♪♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1996)
Freedom Sound ♪♪♪♪ (Concord Picante, 1997)
Concord Jazz Heritage Series ♪♪♪♪ (Concord Jazz, 1998) Afro-Cuban Fantasy ♪♪♪♪ (Concord Jazz, 1998)

influences:
⏮ Mongo Santamaria, Cal Tjader, Tito Puente

see also: Tito Puente, Mongo Santamaria

Andrew Gilbert

Arturo Sandoval

Afro-Cuban, Afro-Caribbean, jazz

Born November 6, 1949, in Artemisa, Havana, Cuba. Based in USA.

Called "Cubop" when it arose in the 1940s with the late Dizzy Gillespie as its prime innovator, Afro-Cuban jazz is alive today partly through Gillespie's protégé, multi-talented Cuban trumpeter Arturo Sandoval. Much like Gillespie carried on from his models Mario Bauzá and Chano Pozo, Sandoval continues that legacy, merging Afro-Cuban polyrhythms with bebop harmonies and lines. With his band Latin Train, formed in the mid-1990s, Sandoval strives to infuse jazz with Afro-Cuban rhythms instead of merely tacking Latin percussion onto a jazz tune.

Sandoval began playing music at age 13 in a village band, where he learned the rudiments of theory and percussion. He selected the trumpet after playing many instruments, and in 1964 started three years of classical trumpet studies at the Cuban National School of the Arts. By age 16 he'd earned a place in an all-star national band and had his first exposure to jazz recordings by Dizzy Gillespie, who would become his idol and mentor. After a stint in the military (during which he continued to play with the Orquesta Cubana de Música Moderna), Sandoval co-founded Irakere, a Grammy-winning group that melded traditional Cuban music, jazz, classical, and rock into an explosive mixture. This band quickly became a worldwide sensation, and their appearance at the 1978 Newport Jazz Festival in New York introduced them to American audiences and resulted in a recording contract with Columbia. Sandoval left Irakere in 1981, formed his own international touring band, and captured honors as Cuba's best instrumentalist in 1982, 1983, and 1984. He also performed as a classical trumpeter with the BBC Symphony in London and with the Leningrad Symphony in the former Soviet Union.

arturo sandoval

Sandoval was thrilled to finally meet his muse in 1977 when Dizzy Gillespie was in Cuba to perform. Though Sandoval couldn't speak a word of English, he chauffeured Gillespie into the black neighborhoods to hear musicians play guaguanco and rumba in the streets. Gillespie was surprised when his "driver" performed that evening with Irakere. Impressed with the young musician, Gillespie took him under his wing. Sandoval recorded and toured internationally with Gillespie's United Nation Orchestra and appeared on the 1992 recording Live at Festival Hall. In fact, it was while touring with this Grammy Award-winning group in Rome in July 1990 that Sandoval requested political asylum. With help from Gillespie and then–Vice President Dan Quayle, Sandoval resettled with his family in Miami, where he now teaches full–time at Florida International University. Although there were problems in the late 1990s with Sandoval's status in the U.S., they have been resolved and he continues to tour extensively, performing jazz, of course, but also classical music with symphony orchestras. He has lectured in the U.S. and overseas and has written and performed on several film soundtracks, including The Perez Family, The Mambo Kings, and Havana.

what to buy: After Sandoval established his wide-ranging talents on a few GRP albums, he hit big with the one his fans had been waiting for: Arturo Sandoval & the Latin Train ♪♪♪♪♪ (GRP, 1996, prod. Arturo Sandoval), an album of 11 Afro-Cuban jazz classics featuring one of Sandoval's hottest bands. Their Cuban grooves and Sandoval's soaring solos could shake dust from club rafters and coax fans to dance in the aisles. Augmented by vocalists and a host of percussionists, the Latin Train band simmers with the expert musicianship of director Kenny Anderson (saxophones), Otmaro Ruiz (piano), David Enos (bass), Aaron Serfaty (drums), and Manuel "Equi" Castrillo (percussion). Sandoval's clean, crisp tone and polished technique are astounding. You'll be reminded of Dizzy, especially when Sandoval hits those shrieking high notes. The energetic tunes are balanced by beautiful Latin ballads such as "Waheera," sweetened with "strings" briefly before the tempo shifts. The band embraces danceable grooves that include mambo, danzón, son montuno, guajira, guaracha, songo, and cha cha cha. If you can't discern one style from another, just let your head and feet feel the beat. Sandoval soon followed up with Hot House ♪♪♪♪♪ (N2K, 1998, prod. Arturo Sandoval), an appropriately titled album that deservedly won him a 1999 Grammy Award for Best Latin Jazz Performance. Influenced by Gillespie's Afro-Cuban jazz bands and by memorable gigs with Cuban outfits including La Orquesta Cubana de Música Moderna, Sandoval brilliantly fronts a Latin big band, playing fiery upper-register solos on tunes that are mostly his originals. Guests Patti Austin, Michael Brecker, Ed Calle, Tito Puente, Rey Ruiz, Charles McNeill, and Rene Toledo add much to the success of this 11-tune album that magnificently builds on the tradition of Sandoval's main mentor, the late Gillespie. Sandoval creatively takes things a few steps ahead with lusciously thick, colorful arrangements and hearty, blended rhythms.

what to buy next: Danzón ♪♪♪♪½ (GRP, 1994, prod. Arturo Sandoval, Richard Eddy) is full of exciting rhythms, soaring solos, and plentiful surprises (for one, Bill Cosby sings). A fun-filled celebration of Afro-Cuban music in the style of the legends, late and living, this 11-rack album shows the full range of Sandoval's talents as player of trumpet, flugelhorn, piano, timbales, and other percussion, as well as singer and composer/arranger. In addition to playing some high-note trumpet, Sandoval sings scat vocals on a hot version of "Groovin' High." A vast powerhouse of talented guest artists maintains the matchless vitality of the album. Joining Sandoval on various tracks are vocalist Gloria Estefan, pianist Danilo Perez, guitarist Rene Toledo, flutist Dave Valentin, percussionist Giovanni Hidalgo, and saxophonist Ed Calle. Highlights are many on this must-own disc of danceable rhythms. For an earful of Sandoval's combustible high-register trumpet playing, check out The Best of Arturo Sandoval ♪♪♪½ (Milan Latino, 1997, prod. various), an eight-tune compilation of Sandoval's Bernstein-to-bop-to-Latin-fusion performances, along with some originals. You may have to adjust the treble-bass controls on your audio setup, but you'll appreciate the trumpeter's open and muted virtuosity on the diverse mixture of tunes. Unless you hanker for reeling bebop, you may want to pass on the spectacular all-jazz tribute to the late trumpeter Clifford Brown, I Remember Clifford ♪♪♪♪♪ (GRP, 1992, prod. Papito, Carl Griffin, Rudy Perez, Arturo Sandoval)—not necessarily "world music," but still stunning. Sandoval's second album as leader after emigrating from Cuba to the U.S. in 1990, it showcases his mastery of the post-bop tradition with racing lines and controlled technique, as well as a warmly compassionate take on the title tune. Although Sandoval is superbly backed by a top-notch rhythm crew and guests including keyboardist Felix Gomez, tenor saxists Ernie Watts, David Sanchez, and Ed Calle, he steers clear of his native rhythms.

the rest:

Tumbaito ♪♪♪½ (Messidor, 1986/1991)
Flight to Freedom ♪♪♪½ (GRP, 1991)
En Concerto ♪♪♪♪ (Habacan, 1992)

Dream Come True ♪♪♪½ (GRP, 1993)
The Classical Album ♪♪♪♪♪ (RCA Victor/Red Seal, 1994)
Swingin' ♪♪♪♪½ (GRP, 1996)

worth searching for: A date that brings Sandoval back together with leader Paquito D'Rivera, Reunion ♪♪♪♪♪ (Messidor, 1991, prod. Götz A. Wörner, Uwe Feltens) features the former members of the groundbreaking Orquesta Cubana de Música Moderna and the innovative Irakere. With accomplices fluent in Afro-Cuban rhythms—bassist David Finck, guitarist Fareed Haque, percussionist Giovanni Hidalgo, pianist Danilo Perez, and drummer Mark Walker—Sandoval sizzles in solos, especially when he slows things down for his rendition of "Body and Soul" with Perez and Finck. A totally engaging album from start to finish.

influences:
⏮ Dizzy Gillespie, Clifford Brown

see also: Paquito D'Rivera, Gloria Estefan, Irakere, Tito Puente

Nancy Ann Lee

Tommy Sands

Irish folk

Born in Rostrevor, County Down, Ireland. Based in Ireland.

Tommy Sands is a singer, guitarist, and one of Ireland's truly great songwriters. His songs deal most often with questions of reconciliation, personal and political, and it's no surprise; the small farm in war-torn Northern Ireland where he grew up with his parents and six siblings was often the locus where Catholics and Protestants got together in friendly, intimate circumstances for music, dancing, and fun. His father and six uncles all played the fiddle, his mother played the accordion, and his six aunts lilted for dances—so there was never an absence of music. His first recollections of instrumentals and songs are from a time when he was too young to participate; he would hear the music of the session coming in under the bedroom door. Catholics and Protestants making music together demonstrated to the young Sands children that the lines drawn by political allegiance are artificial, and that they can be transcended by ordinary people.

The sessions also gave Sands his start as a musician and songwriter. After taking up the fiddle for a while, he became more interested in singing, and eventually in songwriting, which he initially saw as a direct outgrowth of traditional music, marking a continuity of traditional creativity. Sands left the farm to go to college, where he studied philosophy and theology. He was nearing home on his final return from university, unsure of his future, wondering if he'd end up working in the ditches like the men he passed along the way, when a black taxi filled with his siblings passed him going in the opposite direction. It stopped, and his brother Colum rolled the window down. "We're going to play a concert," he said. "We've got your guitar in the back of the car." Tommy hopped into the taxi, and became a professional musician. The Sands Family, composed of siblings Tommy, Eugene, Ben, Colum, and Ann Sands, became one of the great groups of the 1960s and '70s Irish folk revival. Tommy remembers feeling the influence of the Clancy Brothers, as well as that of American folk music greats like Pete Seeger and Joan Baez. A first-place award in a national ballad-group contest won the Sandses a concert trip to New York City in 1970; eventually they were playing Carnegie Hall. But the political troubles at home made the family want to stay closer to Ireland, so most of their touring over the years was in Europe. During one of those tours, in 1975, tragedy struck; the youngest brother, Eugene (or Dino, as he was known), was killed in an auto accident going from gig to gig. After that, the family's professional life underwent some major changes. Ann didn't have the heart to tour Germany anymore, so any family tours there were restricted to the three brothers. Meanwhile, Tommy had started a weekly radio program, which continues to this day. The Sands Family, after 14 albums and numerous tours, was reunited as a professional group only once a year for the summer music festivals in Ireland, and Tommy started to tour the world on his own. He can be seen in the U.S. often as a solo act, and occasionally with Mick Moloney's Green Fields of America or with accordion player Mairtin O'Connor.

what to buy: Singing of the Times ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1989, prod. Colum Sands) features two of Tommy's best-known political songs, "There Were Roses" and "Daughters and Sons." The first of these is probably his most powerful of all; it recalls a sad event in Sands's youth when two of his friends, a Catholic and a Protestant, were murdered in the Northern Irish "troubles." Another nice touch is the inclusion of some old Sands Family tracks, two of which feature the late Dino Sands. Backing musicians, in addition to the Sands family, include Dónal Lunny (bouzouki), Arty McGlynn (guitar), Nollaig Casey (fiddle), and Desi Wilkinson (flute).

what to buy next: Beyond the Shadows ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1992, prod. Tommy Sands, Colum Sands, Kieran Goss) has several challenging songs on it. "1999" is a call for peace in Northern Ireland, as urgent today after the cease-fire as it was in 1992. "Dresden" explores the feelings of people who have suffered years of oppression. From the Nazis to the allied bombardment to occupation to the Iron Curtain, and finally to the toppling of the Berlin wall, the song follows the story of one small family. Like "There Were Roses," both are quiet and sad songs that don't preach. Also featured is Sands's rollicking emigration ballad, "When the Boys Come Rolling Home." Guests this time include Steve Cooney (guitar, bass, keyboards), Mairtin O'Connor (button accordion), and Tao Seeger (voice and percussion). Sands's third album, The Heart's a Wonder ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1995, prod. Tommy Sands), explores similar themes. Like everyone in Northern Ireland, he views the recent cease-fires as a reason to hope for the future. He knows, however, that a solution will only be reached by hard work. "No matter what the eventual solution is to be," he says, "ordinary people have to learn to live together." To that end, he has written "The Music of Healing," his most celebrated song since "There Were Roses." It is a plea for understanding, for love, and for peace, crystallizing the prayers of many Irish people.

worth searching for: Apart from Sands's albums, there are currently no CDs by the Sands Family available in the United States. However, keep a lookout in the used record bins; the Sands family recorded 14 albums for companies in Ireland and Germany, and any one of them is a collector's item today.

influences:

- Pete Seeger, Joan Baez, the Clancy Brothers & Tommy Makem
- Colm Sands, Ben Sands, Sean Tyrrel

see also: Dónal Lunny, Mick Moloney

Steve Winick

Oumou Sangare

Afropop, wassoulou

Born 1968, in Mali. Based in Bamako, Mali.

Oumou Sangare is a singer, songwriter, feminist, and international phenomenon. At the age of six, she made her debut at Mali's Omnisports Stadium to a huge crowd. Her performance was good enough to earn her a place in the National Ensemble of Mali, where she was trained in traditional singing and performance. In 1986 she joined Djoliba, a traditional percussion troupe led by Bamba Dambele, for a world tour. On her return to Mali she was determined to start her own band, and write and perform her own songs. Sangare began working with Amadou Ba Guindo, a noted Malian arranger and producer, and put together a band with Boubacar Diallo on guitar and Aliou Traore on violin (replacing the traditional horse-hair fiddle). After two years of rehearsing they went into a studio in Côte d'Ivoire and cut Moussolou (Women). On its release the cassette sold over 200,000 copies, not to mention the millions of pirated ones. When Britain's World Circuit label released the album internationally, Sangare became a contender for divahood.

Sangare's parents came from the Wassoulou region of Mali, home to an extraordinary number of women singers. The area has a distinct style based on the popular traditional dances everyone knows, including the sogonikun, a ritual performed mainly by young women at harvest time. It was this rich musical heritage Sangare would draw upon, and with Moussolou she and her collaborators did something remarkable for Africa: they made modern-sounding music using traditional instruments, without synthesizers or heavy pop production. Sangare also outraged traditionalists by singing about the status of women in a country that's dominated by longstanding Muslim beliefs. Ko Sira (Marriage Today), Sangare's second album, consolidated her position as a star and spokesperson for the common people. While much of Mali's music is based on the jali tradition—songs composed to honor powerful personages and their deeds—Sangare's lyrics address the daily joys and sorrows of the working class. "I am not trying to change the whole society," Sangare recently told the Boston Globe. "Just look how I dress. I am a traditional woman, but I do not like the injustice between men and women. I don't like that men can marry many women, and the women suffer. I write about what I see around me, and the young people hear what I'm saying, especially the women. Men with many wives don't like me, but the young men understand. And the music is very traditional, which is very respectful. Then when they listen to the music, I launch my words at them." Sangare recently lent her talents to the soundtrack of the film Beloved. Her performance of the "ancestor vocals" is brief, barely four minutes long in total, but introduces her powerfully to mainstream American listeners, showing how much her singular sound warrants even wider international exposure.

what to buy: On Worotan (Ten Cola Nuts) ♪♪♪♪½ (World Circuit, 1996, prod. Oumou Sangare), Sangare takes her music to another level by adding a horn section led by Pee Wee Ellis, late of James Brown's band and the Horny Horns. It's a credit to both musicians that the horn charts remain understated, adding texture to the arrangements rather than overwhelming the music with obviously funky moves. The main attraction remains Sangare's forceful vocals. The title refers to the price a man must pay to secure a bride in Mali.

what to buy next: Moussolou ♪♪♪♪♪ (World Circuit, 1991, prod. Bientou Musique) is one of the classics of modern African music; a deeply traditional showcase for Sangare's voice and the skillful interplay between Boubacar Diallo's guitar, Aliou Traore's violin, and the subtle percussion of Benogo Diakite.

the rest:

Ko Sira ♪♪♪♪½ (World Circuit, 1993) Beloved (Soundtrack) ♪♪♪ (Epic, 1998)

influences:

- Coumba Sidibe, Sali Sidibe, Flan Saran

j. poet

oumou sangare

Oumou Sangare

6/8/6 trichy sankaran

Trichy Sankaran

Trichy Sankaran

South Indian (karnatak) classical drumming, gamelan, percussion, chamber music

Born Tiruchi Sankaran, July 27, 1942, in Puvalur, Madras State, India. Based in Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Trichy Sankaran is a virtuoso percussionist from South India who has performed traditional and original works on four continents. He plays with precision and a polished delicacy while expressing intricate rhythmic patterns on the mridangam, a tunable, double-headed wooden barrel drum. Both of the skin-derived heads are held to the body by leather thongs, and a dark spot in the center of the skin is made of iron filings and rice paste. Sankaran sits cross-legged, holding the instrument over his lap, playing the centuries-old classical music of South India as well as original compositions and collaborations with other contemporary, jazz, and world-music artists. He also plays the lizard-skinned kanjira, a small single-headed tambourine from South India. "Trichy is my home town but it has become my name," explains Sankaran. "Many artists are known by their home town. They started printing this name—Trichy Sankaran—on concert posters; it wasn't my decision. Then I started receiving checks from All-India Radio and I had to sign that name!" Sankaran's public debut was at age 13, and since then he has performed widely throughout Asia, Europe, and North America. He is the founding director and professor of Indian Music Studies at York University in Toronto, Ontario, Canada, where he is currently based. It is one of many teaching posts he has held, and his method has been influential on other music educators. His awards and titles are numerous, as are his collaborations with a range of artists in diverse genres, while his impact reverberates even further through his thorough manual on how to play the mridangam, The Rhythmic Principles and Practice of South Indian Drumming (Lalith Publishers, Toronto, 1994).

what to buy: Lotus Signatures ♪♪♪♪½ (Music of the World, 1997, prod. Trichy Sankaran, Bob Haddad) was recorded in India with a full percussion ensemble as well as violin and flute. This excellent album features the virtuosity of Sankaran paired with the melodic mastery of bamboo flutist Dr. N. Ramani.

what to buy next: Laya Vinyas ♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1990, prod. Bob Haddad)—whose title translates literally as "rhythmic elaborations"—pulses forward with a dazzling display of South Indian drumming on the mridangam. Sankaran overdubs several tracks, and there is also a kanjira solo.

the rest:
Sunada ♪♪♪♪½ (Music of the World, 1993)
(With Paul Plimley) Ivory Ganesh Meets Dr. Drum ♪♪♪ (Songline, 1998)

influences:
◀◀ Palani Subramania Pillai, Palghat Mani Iyer, Kishan Maharaj ▶▶ Sal Ferraras & Drum Heat, Nexus, Glen Velez

Iris Brooks

Maggie Sansone

Celtic hammered dulcimer

Born in Miami, FL, USA. Based in Annapolis, MD, USA.

Maggie Sansone has been a pivotal force in heightening the profile of Celtic music in the U.S.—from both sides of the stage and studio. As a hammered dulcimer player, she has done much to popularize that instrument in Celtic music, through her recordings and through her performances at Celtic, Renaissance, and folk festivals. As a teacher, she has published an innovative music-book series for the hammered dulcimer, among several other music books from Mel Bay Publications. As an independent label executive, she has released nearly 25 albums for worldwide distribution, most focusing on the music of the Celts. The label has received four "Wammie" Record Label of the Year awards from the Washington, D.C., Area Musicians Association, while Sansone's own albums have received "Indie" awards from the Association for Independent Music. She has taken her musical cause to CBS-TV's Sunday Morning and National Public Radio's All Things Considered, Performance Today, and Thistle and Shamrock. Her albums ring with a Renaissance spirit, a fusion of ancient sounds and modern sensibility, fueled by rich arrangements and innovative use of instruments old and new.

what to buy: On A Scottish Christmas ♪♪♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1996, prod. Charlie Pilzer), Sansone teams up with Scottish fiddler Bonnie Rideout and guitarist Al Petteway for one of the best seasonal albums ever. Featuring pipes, bells, hammered dulcimer, fiddle, and cello, it lifts you away to castle banquet halls with roaring fires and to desolate snow-filled forests, in a celebration of Christmas, Hogmanay, and the New Year. Sansone's newest release, A Traveler's Dream ♪♪♪♪½ (Maggie's Music, 1999, prod. Bobby Read), is perhaps her best "solo" album yet and only adds luster to her growing reputation. The album's theme is one of the hammered dulcimer following the migration of ancient civilizations across Asia Minor and onto the European continent from the Black Sea to the North Atlantic shores. It also reflects Sansone's own journey from her childhood in Florida to her first exposure to folk music and her later infatuation with both Celtic and world music. Again featuring the likes of Al Petteway on guitar, Bonnie Rideout on fiddle and viola, Aran Olwell on Irish flute, David Sheim on Celtic harp, and producer Bobby Read on some 23 different instruments, this is a lush production, but one that never overwhelms the dulcimer. Sansone's playing is impeccable, often taking advantage of the pedal dampers on her Nick Blanton instrument to produce rhythmic variations that are both compelling and perfectly in keeping with the music. Petteway and Rideout are also just about the best at what they do. A landmark album. On Ancient Noels ♪♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1993, prod. Charlie Pilzer), Sansone teams with Ensemble Galilei, Rideout, percussionist Ben Harms, and guitarist and citternist Zan McLeod to deliver an unusual and special holiday recording that you'll want to have available all year long. Renaissance rhythms and haunting medieval hymns bring to life images of desert landscapes, stone monasteries, and the origins of Christmas.

what to buy next: Dance upon the Shore ♪♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1994, prod. Charlie Pilzer) finds Sansone in a jazzy crossover into what she calls a "cool Celtic voyage to Ireland, Scotland, Brittany, and the Isle of Man." It features her hammered dulcimer, but also adds Bob Read's soprano saxophone, clarinet, and alto flute; Steve Bloom's excellent percussion; and the stringed wizardry of both Robin Bullock and Petteway.

the rest:

Sounds of the Season ♪♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1988)
Traditions ♪♪♪½ (Maggie's Music, 1989)
Mist and Stone ♪♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1990)
Sounds of the Season II ♪♪♪♪ (Maggie's Music, 1991) (With Sue Richards, Bonnie Rideout, and Ensemble Galilei) Music in the Great Hall ♪♪♪½ (Maggie's Music, 1992)

jamaican music 8: dub

In the 1970s context of Afrocentric and liberation-oriented reggae lyric-content, the coronation of dub was even more phenomenal than it might have been. For the most part, dub used only ghostly, floating vocal snatches from hit records of the time, and focused on dismantling and resculpting the rhythms with complex studio sorcery. Dub is a kind of psychedelic reggae, with the "trip" ignited by the imaginative and magical use of modern technology—in particular, mixing devices such as reverb, echo, delay, and equalization, and jarring sound effects. The recording engineer moved to the forefront with dub, as visionaries like its inventor King Tubby (Osbourne Ruddock) and the confounding Lee "Scratch" Perry developed adventurous and intuitive ways of manipulating, treating, and disintegrating sound. Basslines with jet-engine power would suddenly echo and fade into infinity, only to come flying back out of nowhere like a renegade sound boomerang. The vocals, horns, and drums could also instantly disappear and reappear, in wholly different combinations and places. Occasionally, the music was completely eviscerated except for the faint a cappella echoes of the vocalist suspended in solitude. Dub creates a sizzling tension between the missing elements and their inevitable yet unpredictable reappearance, which often occurs with stunning amplification and/or metamorphosis. Like the best hip-hop deejays, dub engineers were able to break down a song to its essence with a third-eye focus on rhythm, and dub is an undeniable ancestor of later dance musics including ambient, house, acid jazz, techno, drum 'n' bass, and jungle. Dub is thrilling, wall-shaking, floor-rumbling, (mostly) instrumental roots-reggae that recalls Bob Marley's on-target line from "Bad Card": "Turn the speakers up, I want to disturb my neighbor."

see also: Mikey Dread, King Tubby, Mad Professor, Lee "Scratch" Perry

Todd Shanker

mongo santamaria

influences:

Bonnie Rideout, Malcolm Dalglish

Ceoltoiri, Karen Ashbrook

see also: Bonnie Rideout

Neal Walters

Mongo Santamaria

Latin jazz

Born Ramon Santamaria, April 7, 1922, in Jesus Maria, Havana, Cuba. Based in USA.

Born in a poor district of Havana known for its Afro-Cuban culture, Mongo Santamaria originally studied the violin, but switched to drums before dropping out of school to become a professional musician. Santamaria was 28 years old and already established in this career path in Havana when he traveled to the U.S. via Mexico, arriving in New York City with fellow congo player Armando Peraza. Billed as the Black Cuban Diamonds, they were performing during a time when Latin music was changing course and spawning an array of mambo groups, from big bands to small combos. Perez Prado led probably the biggest crossover band to reach non-Latin audiences, and master conguero Santamaria worked with Prado before joining Tito Puente for six years. Santamaria recorded with Dizzy Gillespie in 1954, then relocated to the West Coast where he joined San Francisco–based vibist Cal Tjader (somewhat of a pacesetter himself in Latin jazz) from 1958 to 1961. While on the West Coast Santamaria began recording his own albums with a straight-Latin charanga band (a style known for the prominence of violin and flute in its instrumental lineup), debuting with Mongo and Yambu. His popular composition "Afro Blue" from this early period eventually became a jazz standard, recorded by countless musicians. But his biggest hit would be the Herbie Hancock tune "Watermelon Man," which the pianist brought to a New York nightclub one night in 1962 where Santamaria's band was performing to an audience of about three people. Hancock began to demonstrate his new tune, the musicians gradually joined in, and the tune became part of Santamaria's repertoire. Producer Orrin·Keepnews heard it, and had it recorded as a single for the Battle label that same year. It became a huge hit, topping pop charts in 1963. It remains Santamaria's theme song and the tune that most fans remember him by. Throughout the 1960s Santamaria led his own groups including both jazz and Latin players, among them Brazilian Joao Donato on piano. Santamaria became tremendously popular running long-lasting bands that combined traditional charanga with jazz brass sections, wind instruments, and piano solos. His lineups in the early '60s included pianist Chick Corea and flutist Hubert Laws, as well as Brazilian and Cuban musicians. Santamaria formed a New York–based group in 1961, and, between 1965 and '70, made a series of recordings for Atlantic and Columbia that combined R&B and soul tunes with Latin rhythms and jazz—a hot, danceable combination that brought him greater fame. Santamaria continued to mix musical genres in the 1960s and '70s, and has since returned to his Afro-Cuban roots, recording for Vaya, Pablo, Concord Picante, Chesky, Milestone, and other labels.

what to buy: The two-CD set Skin on Skin: The Mongo Santamaria Anthology (1958–1995) ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1999, compilation prod. Miles Perlich, Ted Myers) scans Santamaria's 40-year career and, from a world-music perspective, contains some of his earliest and best recordings, when he was less influenced by jazz. The set collects 34 exemplary tracks from the Fantasy, Riverside, Battle, Atlantic, Columbia, and Concord Picante labels. Santamaria's sides of the late 1950s, and into the early '60s, lean more toward his musical roots, and disc one kicks off with a beautiful, simply layered version of his classic "Afro Blue." The set is chronologically arranged so that you begin to hear the growing influence of jazz creeping into Santamaria's varied Afro-Cuban rhythms. It's a pleaser from start to finish. If you're a fan of Latin rhythms or just want to hear a single album of the music that started Santamaria's career, check out AfroRoots ♪♪♪♪♪ (Prestige, 1958/1989, prod. various), which combines 12 tunes from Santamaria's 1959 session for Fantasy (originally released as Mongo) with nine selections recorded in 1958 (originally released as Yambu). Just as the title implies, these 21 percussion-laden tunes cut to the quick, with Santamaria playing native rhythms based on venerable chants and rituals. One track features vibist Cal Tjader and pianist Vince Guaraldi, hinting at the leader's more jazz-oriented albums to come. Willie Bobo appears on Timbalero, creating some of the most exciting Afro-Cuban rhythmic exchanges fans at the time had ever heard. On Sabroso! ♪♪♪♪ (Fantasy, 1993), Santamaria leads a band based on the classic Latin charanga format, as well as the pachanga, a pulsing variant that was briefly the rage among New York's Latin teenagers around 1961. The 13 tunes capture a performance recorded in San Francisco in the early '60s. The danceable rhythms and instrumentation of this CD are most attractive. Our Man in Havana ♪♪♪♪ (Fantasy, 1960/1993), which compiles recordings made in the title city in early 1960 with Willie Bobo and other percussionists, vocalists, and instrumentalists from Cuba, is equally enticing, and you can hear how this music had begun to influence the development of Latin jazz. With Mongo Returns ♪♪♪♪ (Milestone, 1995, prod. Todd Barkan), the then 73-year-old percussionist comes home to the label that issued his 1963 Top Ten hit "Watermelon Man." Santamaria maintains a palatable, diverse mix of nine modernized Afro-Cuban jazz tunes laced with smatterings from his '70s fusion days. The session features a tight, melodic horn section and solo improvisations from Eddie Allen (trumpet and flugelhorn), Robert DeBellis (alto and baritone saxes and flute), and Roger Byam (tenor and soprano saxophones and flute). Mongo is on the spot, illustrious and supportive as conguero and leader. Conductor Marty Sheller contributes three modern-edged tunes. Highlights include a seductive version of Ary Barroso's "Bahia" that features Allen's pretty muted-trumpet solos, and a Latinized interpretation of Marvin Gaye's "When Did You Stop Loving Me, When Did I Stop Loving You." Allen also proves his prowess as composer with two funky originals—"Ol' School Groove" and "Slyck 'n' Slyde." Most of the 12 musicians comprise Santamaria's regular working group of the past decade (guest pianist Hilton Ruiz and bassist John Benitz excluded). Pianist Oscar Hernandez, an array of percussionists (Louis Bauzo, Greg Askew, Steve Berrios), and the horn team generate spacious, fresh Latin-jazz grooves that are enriched by fine solos. The euphonious melodies and easy rhythms will charm you. Live at Jazz Alley ♪♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1990, prod. Carl E. Jefferson, Allen Farnham) captures conguero Santamaria in a magnificent, 10-tune, roots-rich Afro-Cuban jazz performance at Dimitriou's Jazz Alley in Seattle, Washington, in March 1990. By this time, some of his 12 musicians had been with him for a while and, navigating mostly Santamaria or Marty Sheller arrangements, they deliver polished performances. Santamaria's original "Bonita," a funk guajira (peasant rhythm), is a catchy number spotlighting a splendid solo from Ray Vega (trumpet, flugelhorn). Dizzy Gillespie's "Manteca" features top-notch, expansive solos from Bobby Porcelli on baritone sax and Mitch Frohman on tenor sax, not to mention a lengthy solo from Mongo. "Afro Blue," a popular minor blues/jazz melody combined with 6/8 African rhythm, was one of the first songs to be included in Santamaria's band book when he formed his outfit in 1961. As the finale here, it's a saucy ending made splendiferous by improvisations from Mongo, vocalist/percussionist Eddie Rodriguez, tenor saxman Mitch Frohman, and pianist Bob Quaranta. This disc is perhaps less fiery but more danceable than some of his earlier Concord Picante releases, and that's its major appeal.

what to buy next: If you're more interested in hearing overt jazz influences, pick up Skins ♪♪♪♪♪ (Milestone, 1962/1976/1990, prod. Orrin Keepnews), which features 10 tunes by a 1964 version of Santamaria's band first documented on the Riverside recording Mongo Explodes!, and nine tunes recorded by the 1962 version of "the Mongo Santamaria Afro-Latin Group" (originally issued as Go, Mongo!). The 1964 band included jazz players such as Hubert Laws (piccolo, flute, tenor sax) and guesting soloists Nat Adderley (cornet) and Jimmy Cobb (drums), in addition to Santamaria's regular lineup. Capers and Sheller were writing some great tunes by then, and this album has numerous highlights and catchy beats that tried to recapture the success of "Watermelon Man." (They come close with the instrumental track "Corn Bread Guajira.") The band performing the tunes for the first Riverside date in 1962 was originally thrown together by Santamaria and his manager (because Santamaria at the moment of signing had no band), and includes a young Armando Corea at the piano (before he became known by his nickname "Chick"), and Chicago musicians Paul Serrano (trumpet), Pat Patrick (flutes, saxophones), and others. Obviously, this CD offers historical value as well as some good music. Riding on the success of his 1963 hit "Watermelon Man" (and his album of the same name), Santamaria appeared at the Village Gate in New York City with his band on September 2, 1963, and made the live-recorded Mongo at the Village Gate ♪♪♪♪ (Riverside, 1963/OJC, 1990, prod. Orrin Keepnews). By now the up-front horns feature musical director Marty Sheller (trumpet), and Bobby Capers and Pat Patrick (flutes, saxes), with a rhythm section that includes Santamaria, Rodgers Grant (piano), Victor Venegas (bass), and Frank Hernandez (drums), plus two other Latin percussionists. Along with originals by Santamaria (including the bonus track "Para Ti"), there are tunes by band members and others. Highlights are many, but especially notable are Sheller's trumpet solos. Santamaria performs a skin-against-skins solo on "My Sound" that's a knockout. His mastery as a conguero was long established, but this recording documents his continuing growth and the rigor of his new music, which would pave the way for ensembles of today such as Jerry Gonzalez & the Fort Apache Band. Brazilian Sunset ♪♪♪♪ (Candid, 1992, prod. Alan Bates, Mark Morganelli) features Santamaria with an array of prime musicians conversant in Afro-Cuban jazz for a 1992 live-recorded performance at Birdland, New York City. Likely owing to the appreciativeness of the audience, these tunes really kick, spurred by the leader's colorful percussion. Santamaria remains in the forefront on the 12 selections (seven of them originals), laying down great rhythms for his soloists—musical director Eddie Allen (trumpet, flugelhorn), Jimmy Crozier (alto and baritone saxes, flute), and Craig Rivers (tenor sax, flute)—with support from the fine rhythm players Ricardo Gonzalez (piano), Guillermo Edgehill (bass), Johnny Almendra (drums, timbales), and Eddie Rodriguez (percussion). The version of Marty Sheller's "Gumbo Man" maintains distinctive '70s funk flair tinged with shifting Latin rhythms. Mongo's original "Sofrito" features an excellent baritone sax solo (either by Rivers or Crozier; liner notes vary). Another take on Santamaria's most memorable hit, "Watermelon Man," adds to the festive atmosphere.

best of the rest:

Arriba! ♪♪♪♪ (Fantasy, 1959/1996)
At the Blackhawk ♪♪♪♪½ (Fantasy, 1962/1994)
Mongo Introduces La Lupe ♪♪♪♪½ (Riverside, 1963/Milestone, 1993)

Afro Blue ♪♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1987/1997)
Soy Yo ♪♪♪ (Concord Picante, 1987)
Soca Me Nice ♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1988)
Olé Ola ♪♪♪½ (Concord Picante, 1989)
Mambo Mongo ♪♪♪½ (Chesky Records, 1993)
Mongo's Greatest Hits ♪♪♪♪♪ (Fantasy, 1995)

influences:
⏮ Luciano "Chano" Pozo y Gonzales, Willie Bobo ⏭ Carlos Santana, Jerry Gonzalez, ¡Cubanismo!

see also: Jerry Gonzalez & the Fort Apache Band, Charlie Palmieri, Perez Prado, Tito Puente, Poncho Sanchez

Nancy Ann Lee

Santana /Carlos Santana

Latin rock, jazz rock, classic rock, hybrid rock Formed 1967, in San Francisco, CA, USA.

Variable membership throughout the years, including: Carlos Santana (born July 20, 1947, in Autlan de Navarro, Mexico), guitar; Gregg Rolie, organ, vocals; David Brown, bass; Michael Shrieve, drums; Jose "Chepito" Areas, timbales; Michael Carabello, congas.

Unknowns who took Woodstock by storm—literally, since the band played during a downpour—Santana could have stopped recording after their third album and their legacy would still be secure. Leader Carlos Santana is the musician who launched a thousand would-be and actual guitar heroes (Vernon Reid is one of many worshippers), and Santana's legacy in mainstream rock is matched by his elder-statesman status in world music. His band was one of the earliest battering rams at the door of general acceptance for Latin sounds, and he went on to become an in-demand session guest with such artists as Beninese diva Angélique Kidjo, Nigerian percussion giant Babatunde Olatunji, Malian superstar Salif Keita, and others, as well as a devotee of Sri Chinmoy and a student of Indian classical virtuoso Ali Akbar Khan. Santana's earliest inspiration came from his mariachi-violinist father, and was then fleshed out by an infatuation with Stateside blues players. His supergroup style and later aspirations to jazz would follow. Though his solo projects and numerous editions of Santana the band may have failed to quite equal the power and sweep of those first three historic albums, Santana the man's historical stature is assured.

what to buy: On the heels of the original band's 1998 induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, Columbia Legacy gave the cornerstone first three albums a complete going over, with previously unreleased bonus tracks that weren't even part of the exemplary box set Dance of the Rainbow Serpent ♪♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1995, compilation prod. Bob Irwin). That collection remains essential, and you'll also want the refreshed first testaments: the sparkling debut, Santana ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1969, prod. Brent Dangerfield); Abraxas ♪♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1970, prod. Fred Catero); and Santana III ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1971, prod. Santana).

what to buy next: The band's initial attempt at recording the debut album—a December 1968 show at the Fillmore West—is featured on Live at the Fillmore '68 ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia Legacy, 1998, prod. David Rubinson, Bill Irwin), and why this wasn't released in the first place is an utter mystery. Confident to the point of being cocky, these strutting, menacing newcomers manhandle their fiery fusion of blues, Latin, jazz, and rock like masters.

what to avoid: The so-called Lotus woof! (Columbia, 1973, prod. various), a three-record set recorded live in Japan but unreleased in this country for nearly 20 years, finds the guru guitarist's jazz-fusion pretensions at their teetering height.

the rest:
Carvanserai ♪♪ (Columbia, 1972)
Welcome ♪ (Columbia, 1973)
Greatest Hits ♪♪ (Columbia, 1974)
Borboletta ♪ (Columbia, 1974)
Amigos ♪ (Columbia, 1976)
Festival ♪ (Columbia, 1977)
Moonflower ♪ (Columbia, 1977)
Marathon ♪♪ (Columbia, 1979)
Zebop! ♪♪ (Columbia, 1981)
Shango woof! (Columbia, 1982)
Havana Moon ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1983)
Beyond Appearances ♪ (Columbia, 1985)
Freedom woof! (Columbia, 1987)
Viva Santana! ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1988)
Spirits Dancing in the Flesh ♪ (Columbia, 1990)
Milagro ♪♪♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1992)
The Best of Santana ♪♪♪½ (Columbia Legacy, 1998) Supernatural ♪♪♪♪ (Arista, 1999)

worth searching for: The only time the most ferocious version of Santana ever performed the Miles Davis classic "In a Silent Way" happened to also be the final time this illustrious lineup played together, closing night at the Fillmore West in 1971. This serene benediction was recorded live and included on the box set Fillmore: The Last Days ♪♪♪♪ (Epic, 1972/Legacy, 1995).

solo outings:
Carlos Santana:
Love, Devotion and Surrender ♪♪½ (Columbia, 1973)
Illuminations woof! (Columbia, 1974)
Oneness, Silver Dreams—Golden Reality woof! (Columbia, 1979)
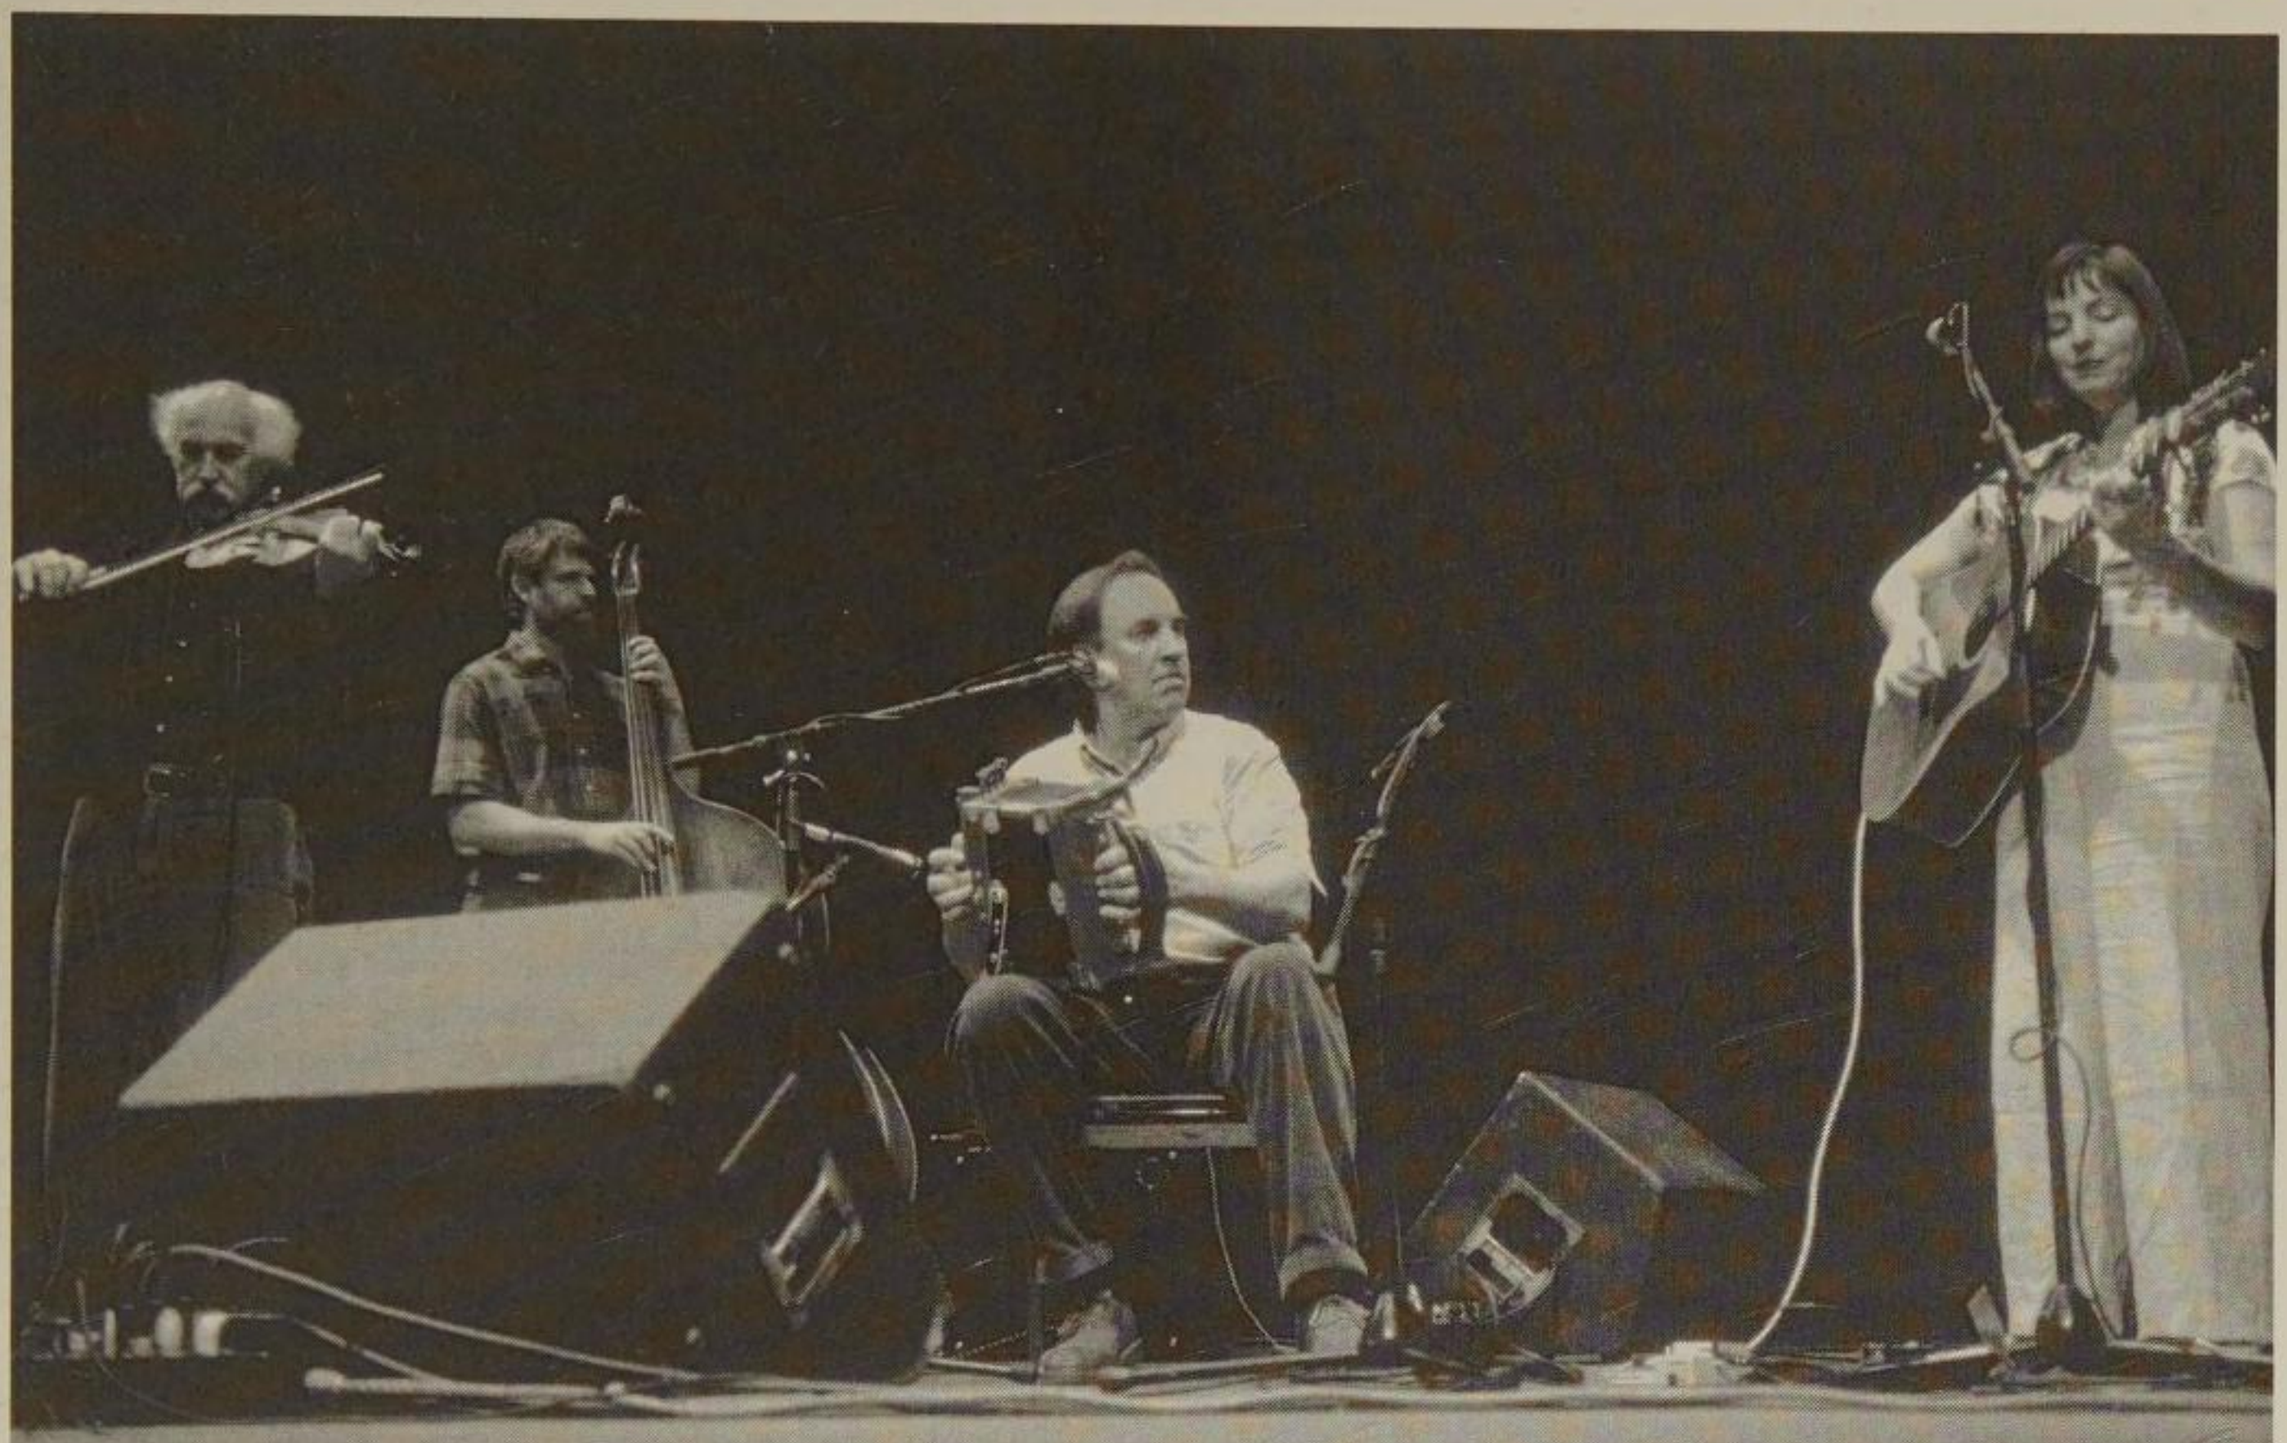
The Swing of Delight ♪ (Columbia, 1980)
Blues for Salvador ♪♪ (Columbia, 1987)



Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band

Sacred Fire: Live in South America ♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1993) Brothers ♪♪ (Island, 1994)

influences:

⏮ Willie Bobo, Tito Puente, Babatunde Olatunji, John Coltrane, Miles Davis, Peter Green

⏭ Malo, Azteca, Journey

see also: Salif Keita

Joel Selvin and Craig Harris

Henry Sapoznik

See: Kapelye, Klezmer Plus!

Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band

Cajun

Formed 1978, in Lafayette, LA, USA. Based in USA.

Marc Savoy, accordion, vocals; Ann Savoy, guitar, vocals; Michael Doucet, fiddle, vocals. (All members are from USA.)

This occasional band is dedicated to the perpetuation of traditional Cajun music; their material is rooted in the sound of the Gulf Coast Cajun culture. They record and tour whenever member Michael Doucet's busy schedule allows—he is the leader of Cajun supergroup Beausoleil. Though well-known for his inventive fiddle forays with that band, Doucet's playing with Savoy-Doucet is firmly within the tradition; he is conversant with and mindful of the work of his fiddling forebears at all times. He has been particularly influenced by Dennis McGee and two great Creole fiddlers, Canray Fontenot and Amédée Ardoin. Marc Savoy is probably the most accomplished accordionist in traditional Cajun styles and is also celebrated as an accordion builder. His wife, Ann, born in St. Louis and raised in Virginia, is Cajun by marriage and has embraced the musical traditions of the culture enthusiastically as a forceful rhythm guitarist and singer. The trio's work in both instrumentalism and voice is exemplary.

what to buy: Home Music with Spirits ♪♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1992, prod. Chris Strachwitz) contains classic waltzes, two-steps, stomps, and blues from the Cajun repertoire. It also includes a wonderful version of the "Cajun national anthem," "Jolie Blonde." Two-Step d'Amédée ♪♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1988, prod. Chris Strachwitz, Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band) is a studio set just as good as Home Music with Spirits, with the added excitement of seven live cuts. Live! At the Dance ♪♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1994, prod. Chris Strachwitz) effectively captures the palpable excitement of traditional Cajun dance music in its natural live setting.

692 tracy schwarz

what to buy next: On Now and Then ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1996, prod. Scott Ardoin), Ken Smith, another outstanding fiddler—if less adventurous and more melodic than Doucet—sits in on a typically excellent batch of Cajun classics with the Savoys.

worth searching for: Cajun Jam Session ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1989, prod. Chris Strachwitz) features Doucet along with guitarist Alan Senauke and accordionist Danny Poullard in an impromptu recording of a live radio show from 1983. It's an enjoyable, if occasionally ragged, set of traditional Cajun music.

solo outings:

Marc Savoy:

(With Dewey Balfa and D.L. Menard) Under a Green Oak Tree ♪♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1977)

(With Wallace Read) Cajun House Party ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1979)

Oh, What a Night ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1981)

influences:

⏪ Iry LeJeune, Harry Choates, Cleoma Falcon, Canray Fontenot, Amédée Ardoin, Dewey Balfa, Nathan Abshire, Dennis McGee

⏩ Steve Riley, Balfa Toujours, California Cajun Orchestra

see also: Amédée Ardoin, Bayou Seco, Beausoleil, Canray Fontenot, Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys

Randy Pitts

Tracy Schwarz /Tracy Schwarz Cajun Trio

Cajun

Born September 13, 1938, in New York, NY, USA. Based in West Virginia, USA.

Born and raised in New York City, Tracy Schwarz began working with the New Lost City Ramblers. as a replacement for Tom Paley in 1962, and shortly thereafter met a young Dewey Balfa at the Newport Folk Festival. The two men hit it off, and thus began a long friendship. Schwarz's development as a Cajun fiddler and accordionist is chronicled on individual tracks of various New Lost City Ramblers albums. His first collaboration with Balfa was the Folkways LP How to Play Cajun Fiddle, released in 1976. The two worked together at many festivals and workshops. You can hear the Balfa family influence in the plain, lonesome quality of Schwarz's style, along with some hint of the Appalachian music mined by the New Lost City Ramblers.

what to buy: Mes Amis! ♪♪♪♪ (Swallow, 1996, prod. various) delivers consistent quality. Schwarz is never going to overwhelm with emotions like Beausoleil's Michael Doucet, or leap through syncopated modulation like Steve Riley; instead you'll get something that's steady and dignified.

what to buy next: Les Quatre Vieux Garçons ♪♪♪♪ (Folkways, 1984, prod. Quatre Vieux Garçons) brings together Tracy and Peter Schwarz with Dewey and Tony Balfa to play some old favorites. Peter had been studying with Dewey and the project gave them a chance to record their fiddle interplay. Papa Tracy adds accordion and fiddle to the mix. Tony is Rodney Balfa's son and plays guitar in the same driving, percussive way.

the rest:

(With Dewey Balfa) How to Play Cajun Fiddle ♪♪♪½ (Folkways, 1976) (cassette only)

Louisiana and You ♪♪♪ (Marimac, 1990) (cassette only)

Tracy Schwarz Cajun Trio ♪♪♪½ (Swallow, 1993)

worth searching for: Souvenirs ♪♪♪♪½ (Swallow, 1985, prod. Tracy Schwarz) was made under Dewey Balfa's name, but features the same group as on Les Quatre Vieux Garçons, with the addition of superb accordionist Robert Jardell. Recapturing some of the old Balfa magic, this album consists primarily of Dewey Balfa originals played on three fiddles, with Dewey in the lead, Peter Schwarz an octave below, and Tracy playing the tenor parts in the middle. The record also contains "Bienvenue Au Paradis," a Tracy Schwarz original written after the tragic death of Dewey's brothers, Rodney and Will, in an automobile accident.

influences:

⏪ Balfa Brothers, Lawrence Walker, Nathan Abshire

⏩ Balfa Toujours, Horace Trahan, Steve Riley

see also: Balfa Brothers, Balfa Toujours, Beausoleil, Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys

Jared Snyder

Sean Nua

Irish traditional

Formed in Dublin, Ireland. Based in Dublin, Ireland.

Joe McKenna, accordion, uilleann pipes, vocals, whistle; Gerry O'Donnell, whistle, flute, vocals, clarinet; Antoinette McKenna, harp, vocals; Joe McHugh, uilleann pipes, bouzouki, vocals, keyboards; Jo Partridge, vocals, guitar; Mario N'Gomo, percussion.

At the heart of Sean Nua is the husband and wife team of Joe and Antoinette McKenna. Both hail from Dublin and grew up entrenched in Ireland's rich musical heritage. Joe began studying the uilleann pipes at a young age at the famed Pipers Club in Dublin. It was there that he came under the tutelage of Leo Rowsome, one of the piping world's most respected and imitated players. Antoinette came from a musical family; her sister Mary Bergin (of the band Dordan) is one of the finest exponents of the Irish tin whistle. Growing up, Antoinette and her family would make frequent excursions to Galway, where she was exposed to the traditional songs of Ireland. At the same time, she was taking harp lessons—and excelling—back home in Dublin. Another once-and-future prodigy, Joe McHugh, who'd already won an All-Ireland championship on the uilleann pipes by the age of 18, provides more of Sean Nua's impressive instrumental interplay—and even that hardly exhausts the band's supply of exceptional musicianship.

what to buy: The Open Door ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1993, prod. Jo Partridge, Joe McKenna) is a vehicle for the piping of Joe McKenna and the fine flute playing of Gerry O'Donnell. Antoinette McKenna's harp, Jo Partridge's guitar, and Mario N'-Gomo's percussion provide the canvas on which the two other talented artists paint a beautifully vibrant picture. Joe McHugh adds some graceful bouzouki playing as well as joining McKenna on some blistering pipe duos. The exquisitely poignant numbers "Ó Ró Song of the Sea" and "Tá Mé 'Mo Shui," each sung by Antoinette McKenna, provide some welcome juxtaposition to the sprightly instrumental sets.

what to buy next: Although Sean Nua has only recorded one album, the group's core, Joe and Antoinette McKenna, have recorded together for the Shanachie label for years. The Best of Joe and Antoinette McKenna ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997) gives a great overview of the duo. Their unique combination of uilleann pipes and harp is featured prominently, as is Joe's fabulous tin whistle playing. Joe's style of piping is brilliant both visually and aurally; his use of the instrument's regulators to frame his playing is great to watch and even better to listen to. Antoinette and Joe are each wonderful singers, too, and their talents are well represented on "Willie Archer" and "Fill Fill a Run O."

worth searching for: Offshore ♪♪♪½ (Brambus Records, 1996) is a Swiss release by Sean Nua piper and bouzouki player Joe McHugh and Swiss hackbrett (hammered dulcimer) player Gilbert Paeffgen. The album is all instrumental, except one song featuring Irish vocalist Shirley Grimes. It is indeed heavily reliant on the Irish tradition for its contemporary tunes, and features a host of instruments played by these two fine talents.

influences:

◀◀ Leo Rowsome, Seumas Ennis, Willie Clancy

▶▶ Danu, Todd Denman

see also: Mary Bergin

Cliff McGann

Márta Sebestyén /Muzsikás /Vujicsics

Hungarian folk music

Muzsikás formed 1972, in Budapest, Hungary. Based in Budapest, Hungary.

Muzsikás: Márta Sebestyén, vocals, recorder (1980–present); Sandor Csoóri, bagpipe, hurdy-gurdy, viola, vocals; Mihaly Sipos, violin, zither, vocals; Peter Eri, bouzoúki, Turkish horn, cello, viola, vocals; Daniel Hamar, bass, hurdy-gurdy, vocals. (All members are from Hungary.)

When she recorded two songs for the Oscar-winning movie The English Patient, Márta Sebestyén broke out of the world-music ghetto and became internationally famous, at least for the next 15 minutes. It would be wonderful to believe that a talented folk singer of Hungarian, Transylvanian, and Carpathian music could become a star on her own merits, but in the current musical climate, it's probably not meant to be.

Sebestyén was born and raised in Budapest, Hungary. Her mother had not only studied with one of Hungary's great modern composers and folk-music preservationists, Zoltan Kodaly, but taught music herself. Before Sebestyén was a teen, she was singing in a tanchez (dance house), a club where the students of the Communist era were trying to keep their own culture alive by playing folk music—particularly the music of Transylvania, a part of Hungary that had been absorbed by Romania. Although singing folk music is the kind of wholesome activity the Communists would ordinarily promote, there was a nationalistic element to this movement that bothered the regime. People were followed, phones were tapped, and the music was banned for a short time by the powers that be—probably making it all the more appealing.

Sebestyén went on to become a well-known singer on the folk scene from an early age, and sang with Sebö & Halmos and Vujicsics before joining Muzsikás in 1980. Muzsikás got started in the early 1970s when Mihaly Sipos, Peter Eri, Daniel Hamar, and Sandor Csoóri left behind their classical training to play folk music. They joined the tanchez movement as a reaction to the Russian music that was dominating Hungary at the time. The band began learning their repertoire the same way Sebestyén had, by listening to recordings, but as they grew in confidence as individuals and as an ensemble, they started making trips to Transylvania and other outlying regions to record and collect songs that were in danger of vanishing. Since they signed with Hannibal Records in 1986, they've become one of the best-known international folk bands on the world-music circuit. In 1991 Sebestyén became the first folk singer to win the country's top musical award, the Liszt Prize, and has had an equally successful solo career since 1992.

Márta Sebestyén of Muzsikás

what to buy: The band is at its best on the recent Morning Star ♪♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1997, prod. Daniel Hamar, Muzsikás); jaunty rhythms, incredible virtuosity from the fiddlers, and Sebestyén's solitary vocal style drift through the mix like the forlorn echo of a primeval mother drowning in the world's sorrows.

what to buy next: The Prisoner's Song ♪♪♪½ (Hannibal, 1986, prod. Levente Szörényi) is the album that introduced Sebestyén and Muzsikás to the West. The dance tunes grip you with their lively energy, and while Sebestyén's voice lacks the confidence it exhibits today, it's still a haunting instrument. Includes an early a cappella recording of "Szerelem, Szerelem," later re-recorded for the English Patient soundtrack.

best of the rest:

Muzsikás:

Blues for Transylvania: The Lost Jewish Music of Transylvania ♪♪♪½ (Hannibal, 1990)

Maramaros ♪♪♪½ (Hannibal, 1993)

Márta Sebestyén with Muzsikas ♪♪♪½ (Hannibal)

Márta Sebestyén:

Apocrypha ♪♪♪½ (Hannibal)

Kismet ♪♪♪½ (Hannibal, 1996)

Best of Márta Sebestyén: The Voice of the English Patient ♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1997)

influences:

◀◀ Zoltan Kodaly, Bogiszió Folk Orchestra, Vujicsics

▶▶ Sebo Ensemble, Eva Fábián, András Berecz

see also: Deep Forest, Bill Whelan

j. poet

Mansour Seck

Afropop

Born 1955, in Podor, Senegal. Based in Dakar, Senegal, and Paris, France.

Mansour Seck's father was the griot (oral historian) of the Maal family; Senegalese superstar Baaba Maal and Seck have been best friends since boyhood. Griots in Fouta (Seck's home region) usually don't sing, but Seck began singing as a boy, and in addition to the kora (harp-lute), taught himself guitar. In 1972, Maal, Seck, and another boyhood friend, Bassou Niang, joined a group of actors, singers, and dancers under the direction of Ousegnu Gueye. Later on, the three friends moved to Dakar and performed as a trio before hooking up with Lasly Fouta, a well-known folkloric group. When Maal decided to become a professional musician, he went on a long trek through Mauritania, Mali, Gambia, Côte d'Ivoire, and Senegal with Seck, playing for food and collecting songs from the various ethnic groups. Since Seck came from a griot family, he was able to win the trust of other traditional musicians, and the duo received a priceless education from the people they met. At this time, Seck also began going blind as the result of a hereditary disease, and Maal became his eyes. In 1981 Maal and Seck were in Paris, where they first formed a small folkloric group. In 1984 the duo recorded Djam Leelii, a tour de force that featured the twin vocals and guitars of Maal and Seck, and introduced some subtle electric guitar playing to the mix. The cassette version of this album was a hit, both on the European world-music scene and in Senegal. Later that year, Mall and Seck returned to Senegal and recruited musicians for Daande Lenol ("Voice of the People"), which has since become the world's premiere African pop band, due in part to the incredible guitar playing and vocals of Mansour Seck. In 1994, with Daande Lenol and Maal well-established as stars, Seck began a solo recording career that has so far produced three albums of breathtaking, mostly acoustic music.

Mansour Seck

what to buy: On Yelayo ♪♪♪♪½ (Stern's, 1997, prod. Mansour Seck), Seck continues to work his quiet magic on the guitar, playing off of the sparkling kora rhythms of Niumoukunda Cissoko. The subtle backing vocals of Izabel Gonzales and Cathy Renoir give the set a deep, almost religious feeling.

what to buy next: Djam Leelii ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mango, 1989, prod. Mansour Seck, Baaba Maal), released for the Senegalese cassette market in 1985, became a surprise hit in Europe, launching the careers of Maal and Seck. The gorgeous guitar playing and Maal's incredible vocals in a quiet, almost traditional setting made this one an instant classic. Interestingly, the original master tapes of this session were lost, but Maal was able to find tapes of another earlier session during which they'd cut some of the same tunes. After a brief absence from the market, this album has again become widely available as Djam Leelii: The Adventurers (Palm Pictures, 1998). This version contains three worthwhile bonus tracks from the same era.

the rest:
N'der Fouta Tooro, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪♪½ (Mango, 1989)
N'der Fouta Tooro, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪♪½ (Mango, 1989)

influences:
⏮ Idrissa Diop, Star Band de Dakar, Youssou N'Dour

see also: Baaba Maal

j. poet

Peggy Seeger

See: Ewan MacColl

Seelyhoo

See: Anam

The Selecter

Two-tone, ska

Formed 1979, in Coventry, England. Disbanded 1981. Re-formed 1992. Based in England.

Noel Davies, guitar; Charley Anderson, bass (1979–81); Pauline Black, vocals; Charley "H" Bembridge, drums (1979–81); Compton Amanor, guitar (1979–81); Arthur Hendrickson, vocals (1979–81); Desmond Brown, keyboards (1979–81); Perry Melius, drums (1992–present); Martin Stewart, keyboards (1992–present); Nick Welsh, bass (1992–present).

In an effort to get its ska brew heard, the Selecter band started its own company, 2-Tone, a label that went on to considerable success with kindred spirits such as the Specials. Like most of its ska-revivalist peers, the Selecter focused mainly on brittle and propulsive tunes with a political edge, highlighted by the jumpy drama of Pauline Black's vocals. The Selecter wrongly played second fiddle as England embraced the Specials and Madness. Black and Noel Davies regrouped in 1992 to no greater recognition, just a bit too early for the new ska movement in the U.S.

what to buy: Selected Selecter Selections ♪♪♪♪ (Chrysalis, 1989, prod. Errol Ross) is a potent reminder of the band's best work, culled from its first two albums, Too Much Pressure and Celebrate the Bullet. Selections such as "Too Much Pressure," "Murder," "On My Radio," "Three Minute Hero," and "Celebrate the Bullet" all reveal, again, that the Selecter was indeed an unjustly neglected part of the early '80s ska scene.

the rest:
Out on the Streets ♪♪ (Triple X, 1992)
The Happy Album ♪♪ (Triple X, 1994)
Back out on the Streets ♪♪ (Triple X, 1996) Collection ♪♪♪ (Cleopatra, 1997)
Cruel Britannia N/A (Madfish, 1999)

influences:
⏮ Bob Marley, Jimmy Cliff, Skatalites, Delroy Wilson, Derrick Morgan, Desmond Dekker ⏭ Smash Mouth, Chumbawamba, Sublime, 311, Sugar Ray

Allan Orski

Selena

Tejano

Born April 16, 1971, in Lake Jackson, TX, USA. Died March 31, 1995, in Corpus Christi, TX, USA.

The five Hispanic-American women who have reached international prominence in music have each gone about it with a different emphasis: Joan Baez, passionate storyteller and political activist; Linda Ronstadt, who delights in the sheer vocal challenge of singing the Mexican music she grew up with; Tish Hinojosa, visionary songwriter whose work crosses genres and borders; Gloria Estefan, who moves her music to island dance rhythms; and Selena Quintanilla Perez, the entertainer, who drew her joy in music from sharing it with her audiences. Selena had the chance to discover the thrill—and the work—of connecting with people from behind a microphone while she was still in elementary school. Her father, Abraham Quintanilla Jr., had worked in the band Los Dinos, and he recognized his daughter's developing vocal talent. The young Selena sang on stage at the family's restaurant, and when the restaurant had to close, the family decided to take the band (which included Selena's brother and sister) on the road to make a living. Though Selena hadn't grown up speaking Spanish, her father insisted that she learn songs in the language, and the band began to work its way up through the fairs, clubs, and bars of the Texas Tejano (modern Tex-Mex music) circuit. Though there were hard times in this life, by the time she was 14, the singer had established an engaging stage presence, the beginnings of a following in the male-dominated Tejano market, and an adult voice of power and sensibility. The band recorded several singles on regional labels that were heard on Tejano stations and, with Selena's growing maturity, caught the ear of record company executives as well as radio listeners. In 1986 she won her first Tejano Music Awards, as Female Vocalist and Entertainer of the Year. In 1989, she signed with EMI Latin, a move that was predicted to break Selena and the band both internationally and in the crossover market at home. She was still building up unprecedented popularity for a woman in the Tejano community itself. The 1991 release Entre a M Mundo produced what would become Selena's signature song, "Como La Flor." This was followed by the Grammy-winning Selena Live! and the best-selling Amor Prohibido. During this time Selena performed in Mexico, receiving a warm reception that was striking, for Mexican-American musicians are generally regarded with disfavor across the border. Her lively, sexy stage show; her down-to-earth personality; her family-oriented outlook (her brother AB wrote many of her songs, her sister Suzette played the drums in her band, her father produced her records, and she had married her lead guitarist, Chris Perez); and her ability to connect with audiences and draw them into her songs had enchanted the established listeners of Texas and the wary crowds of Mexico. It seemed that she was ready to make the move, one she had long wished for, to success in the crossover market alongside her early idols Paula Abdul and Madonna. Along the way Selena, who loved to design clothes, had achieved another dream, that of opening her own fashion boutique. While she was recording tracks for an English-language album, questions arose about the integrity of her business and fan-club manager, Yolanda Saldivar. Saldivar was fired, and when Selena went to meet her to collect business records, the star was shot in the back upon leaving. Saldivar was convicted of Selena's murder in November, 1995.

what to buy: Selena: An Anthology ♪♪♪♪½ (EMI Latin, 1998, prod. Abraham Quintanilla Jr.) is a 30-song career retrospective. The three discs are arranged stylistically, with one devoted to pop (including songs in both English and Spanish), one to ballad-infused ranchera, and one to danceable cumbia tunes. It's a good portrait of Selena's oeuvre (and of her brother AB's flexible songwriting). Though some of the music has been remixed and remastered, her vocals are all original, including several songs she recorded when she was 14. It's not a greatest-hits collection. Several of those had been issued or planned at the time Anthology was put together, so the decision was made to favor earlier or less widely available songs. Dreaming of You ♪♪♪♪ (EMI Latin, 1995, prod. Abraham Quintanilla Jr.) is the music most of the non-Hispanic world associates with Selena, though it's not her strongest disc. Amor Prohibido ♪♪♪♪½ (EMI Latin, 1994, prod. Abraham Quintanilla Jr.) and the above-mentioned Anthology would qualify for that designation. Dreaming of You consists of tracks Selena had recorded for her projected English-language release together with several of her Tejano best-sellers such as "Techno Cumbia," "Bidi Bidi Bom Bom," and "Como la Flor." A particularly strong track is the bilingual duet with David Byrne, "God's Child/Balia Conmigo." For the most part what Dreaming of You illustrates is that, in English or Spanish, Selena favored light, hook-laden danceable pop, and that she could, through the power of her voice and personality, connect with the listener through even the most insubstantial song. It also offers a good survey of her popular styles and may be the best entry point to Selena's music for those who don't speak Spanish.

what to buy next: Entre a Mi Mundo ♪♪♪½ (EMI Latin, 1992, prod. Abraham Quintanilla Jr.) is best-selling Tejano/pop as Selena began her rise to national stardom. Ven Conmigo ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1990, prod. Abraham Quintanilla Jr.) was the first Tejano recording to go gold, which it did in 1991. Selena! ♪♪♪ (EMI Latin, 1997, prod. Abraham Quintanilla Jr.), the soundtrack to the motion picture of the singer's life, gives a taste of several styles of her music and includes two songs in tribute to her as well.

the rest:

Entertainer of the Year ♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1992)

Mis Mejores Canciones: 17 Super Exitos ♪♪♪ (Capitol/EMI Latin, 1993)

worth searching for: Because of the dramatic circumstances of Selena's murder at a young age, several photo books, celebrity biographies, and videos were produced to satisfy the desire for information about her. A commonly available video to avoid is Selena: The Final Notes, which is a poorly edited and—especially disturbing in a piece about a musician—poorly mixed collection of news clips woven together with a badly written script. Despite the title, the producers clearly didn't obtain permission to use Selena's recordings. The only time she is heard singing in this video is on a tape within a tape, as actresses auditioning for a role in the movie about her practice lip-synching to the music. A much better choice, though it veers a bit toward the iconographic side in its introduction, is Selena Remembered. As might be expected in a video issued by her record company, there is much well-shot and well-recorded concert footage, interspersed with informal interviews with the singer, her family, and others who worked with her. It ends, however, without making clear the circumstances of her death. The best understanding of the singer's life on video can be gained by watching the theatrical film Selena!. In the title role, Jennifer Lopez provides insight into the personality of the young girl who grew up both Mexican and American, seeking pop stardom and a balanced life on her own terms.

influences:

⏮ Madonna, Paula Abdul, Rocío Dúrcal

⏭ Jennifer y los Jets

see also: David Byrne, Jennifer Lopez, Chris Perez

Kerry Dexter

Seven Nations

Celtic rock

Formed 1994, in USA. Based in Windermere, FL, USA.

Kirk McLeod, vocals, guitars, keyboards, bagpipes; Struby, bass, vocals; Neil Anderson, bagpipes, uilleann pipes, whistles (1994–98);

sexteto boloña

Nick Watson, drums (1995–96); Ashton Geoghagan, drums (1996–present); Scott Long, bagpipes, mandolin (1999–present); Dan Stacey, fiddle, step dancing (1999–present). (All members are from USA.)

Billing themselves as a "Celtic rock" band, Seven Nations purvey an increasingly loud brand of undistinguished plain-old rock spiced up with raucous bagpipes. Their main Celtic credentials seem to be electrified medleys of traditional tunes—which suggest too much listening to Boiled in Lead and bad Wolfstone—and their stage presence: bandmembers often appear in kilts. Showing a little bare knee never lost the Spice Girls any fans, and so far it seems to be paying off for Seven Nations as well. They've started to play at Scottish Highland Games festivals with some regularity, where they have been known to drown out performers on other stages with over-the-top amplification. Formerly trading under the "Clan na Gael" moniker, in 1994 the band adopted their current name, invoking the ancient Celtic lands of Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Isle of Man, Cornwall, Brittany, and Galicia. Their music is less ambitious, however, rarely straying from the Irish and Scots domains when it does draw on the old traditions. They seem equally content working the crowds with all the polish and finesse of the average boogie band, and rushing out albums before they have much to say; their musical abilities have a long way to go to catch up with their marketing and publicity skills. The recent loss of their greatest asset, piper Neil Anderson, cast a shadow over their future, but his replacement with not one but two new members showed they'd rather light a candle than curse the obvious.

what to avoid: Rain and Thunder ♪♪ (Seven Nations, 1994, prod. J. Melville) and Old Ground ♪♪ (Seven Nations, 1995, prod. Seven Nations, Grant Austin) display a confused sense of purpose, mixing bar-band quality playing —some spirited piping notwithstanding—of Irish/Scottish tune medleys and non-Celtic cover songs, with largely characterless compositions of McLeod's. On the first album they cover "Faithful Departed" by former Irish punk Philip Chevron (later of the Pogues), though the Seven Nations take is faithful to Christy Moore's version with Moving Hearts, a band whose sound is briefly echoed elsewhere in the Seven Nations catalog. With Big Dog ♪♪♪ (Seven Nations, 1996, prod. Seven Nations) the band gets a bit more focused, though exactly what on is not clear; it doesn't seem to be Celtic music. Opening with a straight cover of the Church's late-'80s hit "Under the Milky Way," cleverly used as an excuse for some feisty bagpipe solos, they continue with a decent attack on Dominic Behan's "Crooked Jack," some group originals with a little more bite to them, and a handful of the obligatory jigs-and-reels medleys. The band turns up the volume even more for the pointless live Roadkill—Volume One woof! (Seven Nations, 1998, prod. Kirk McLeod), whose claim to be an accurate representation of the in-concert Seven Nations experience ("totally us, totally live, warts and all") is a troubling thought indeed. Some of the between-tracks "Gee, guys" patter is as indulgent as it gets and raises serious questions about their credibility. Which doesn't make the recent rumors of a Roadkill—Volume Two any less ominous. . . .

influences:
Boiled in Lead, Moving Hearts, Christy Moore, Wolfstone

John C. Falstaff

Sexteto Boloña

Son

Formed 1923, in Havana, Cuba. Disbanded 1935.

Alfredo Boloña Jimenez, bongos, tres; Manuel Menocal, tres; Manuel Corona, guitar; Victoriano López, maracas; Joaquín Velázquez, bongos; Hortensia Valerón, vocals; Tata Gutiérrez, vocals, maracas; José Manuel "El Chino" Incharte, bongos; Abelardo Barroso, vocals, claves; Mario Rosales, vocals; José Interián, trumpet; Loreto Zequeira, bongos; José Vega Chacón, guitar, vocals; Tabito, bass. (All members are from Cuba.)

Out of the ashes of the Cuarteto Oriental came two sextets that helped change the direction Cuban music would take. The more famous of the two was the Sexteto Habanero while the other, the Sexteto Boloña, lasted for a dozen years before splitting up when two of the members (Tata Gutiérrez and José Vega Chacón) left to form the Septeto Bolero. Both sextets were famous for the music they played and the personnel that passed through them on the way to other groups. The leader of the Sexteto Boloña was Alfredo Boloña Jimenez, a classy tres (small guitar) player with fairly decent compositional chops. A few years after the group formed they went on a tour that took in Venezuela and New York City, and it was during the Big Apple visit that the group recorded 17 songs for posterity. Luckily they were pretty memorable, and this was due in no small part to the golden throat of Abelardo Barroso and the percussion of the superb bongosero "El Chino" Incharte (both of whom also passed through the Sexteto Habanero).

what's available: The Sexteto Boloña didn't record much material. On CD the main choice is Echale Candela ♪♪♪½ (Tumbao Cuban Classics, 1995, prod. various), which has all 17 tunes that were recorded in NYC. The sound is not that spectacular but the performances are well worth searching out. The alternative is the cassette of La Historia Del Son Cubano (The Roots of Salsa 1) ♪♪♪ (Folk Lyric, 1985, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz), which duplicates the now out-of-print vinyl and lacks three of the songs heard on the Tumbao CD.

worth searching for: Sones-Vol. II, Original Recordings from 1926–1928 ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1996, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz) may be the best all-around buy for folks looking to explore this musical territory. It duplicates 12 of the 17 tunes found on the Tumbao CD, but makes up for that by including six songs by the Sexteto Occidente, four by the Sexteto Nacional, and two from the Sexteto Matancero (featuring Cuban music legend Isaac Oviedo).

influences:
⏮ Cuarteto Oriental ⏭ Septeto Bolero, Sierra Maestra

see also: Arsenio Rodríguez, Sexteto Habanero

Garaud MacTaggart

Sexteto Habanero /Septeto Habanero

Son

Formed 1920, in Havana, Cuba. Based in Cuba.

Membership variable; see below. (All members are from Cuba.)

Sexteto Habanero set the timer on the salsa explosion when they brought Cuban son's crossfire rhythms and African-rooted call-and-response vocal patterns from Oriente Province—including the country around Guantánamo, Baracoa, and Santiago de Cuba—into metropolitan Havana. By challenging the entire tipico style of performance that Cuba's high-society dance bands were used to playing, the Sexteto Habanero revolutionized the island's popular music forever. They were also the first band to have "hit" records in Cuba and, when they mutated into a septet in 1927 with the addition of a trumpet player, laid down the stylistic blueprint for other groups to build upon.

The sextet evolved from two earlier bands (the Trio Oriental and the Cuarteto Oriental) whose core members also sang with the popular choral group Los Apaches. Their initial lineup included Gerardo Martínez (leader, vocals, and marimbula), Carlos Godínez (tres—a small guitar), Felix Neri Cabrera (vocals and maracas), José "Cheo" Jiménez (vocals and claves—wooden sticks), Guillermo Castillo (vocals and guitar), Antonio Bacallao (botija) and either Agustín Rodríguez, José María "El Chino" Incharte, or Oscar Satolongo (sources vary on this point) on bongos. Martínez's marimbula and Bacallao's botija were both percussive instruments that held down the musical bottom for the group and later gave way to the string bass (also played by Martínez).

In 1927 the group added trumpeter Enrique Hernández, who left soon after and was replaced by one of the giants of Cuban music, Felix Chapottin. Other major figures to pass through the band during its late-'20s heyday were the vocalist/claves player jamaican music 9: dancehall

Dancehall music emerged in the late 1970s, when political instability and a further declining economy swayed Jamaica's people and music away from roots-reggae's Pan-African perspective to one more focused on recreational escape and fulfillment of desire. After nearly a decade of U.S.-encouraged turmoil and nearly a thousand killings between the election of slain pseudo-socialist Prime Minister Michael Manley and successor Edward Seaga—the "CIA-ga" of Kingston graffiti—the people no longer wanted to meditate on idealistic visions of liberation from oppression; instead, they wanted to forget these problems altogether. The lyrical topics turned to funky dance moves, gun-fortified empowerment, and sexually explicit microphone chat called "slackness," a term first coined by deejay General Echo on his influential 1979 LP Ranking Slackness. With Tenor Saw's "Ring the Alarm" providing the theme song, boastful deejay "sound clashes" became dancehall "sporting" events as popular as soccer matches. Producers rarely constructed new rhythms; to save studio time and cash, they recycled classic rocksteady and reggae tracks for the dancehalls on "dub plates." Nonetheless, the rhythms rarely sounded retread, as the best session bands (Roots Radics, Soul Syndicate) and producers (Prince Jammy, Junjo Lawes, Linval Thompson) were able to make vintage beats sound explosively new. A Deejay Explosion inna Dancehall Style ♪♪♪♪½ (Heartbeat), recorded at Kingston's famed Skateland venue in 1982, is perhaps the best approximation of the visceral energy of live dancehall music, and a stellar example of the improvisational art of deejaying. Despite the preeminence of microphone motormouths, singers were still a critical element of the dancehall, and chants of "respect due!" were showered on such fine vocalists as Sugar Minott (actually the first artist to earn the "dancehall" tag), Barrington Levy, Freddie McGregor, Frankie Paul, Cocoa Tea, and Half Pint. For its followers—the dedicated downtown "massive"—dancehall music is a rhythmic hailstorm, its venues a site of temporary but cathartic communion.

Todd Shanker

Abelardo Barroso (oftimes referred to as "Caruso" for his clear tenor and impeccable phrasing), and the "bongosero" Agustin Gutierrez, whose later career included stints in the Septeto Agabama (alongside the legendary Machito) and in the Conjunto de Matamoros. The group has gone through various lineups over the years, breaking up only to reform later. Septeto Habanero is still playing gigs but all of the original personnel have died, leaving Manuel Furé (vocals and clave) as the longest-tenured member, dating from the Martínez era in 1952.

what to buy: With 24 tunes, Las Raices del Son ♪♪♪♪♪ (Tumbao Cuban Classics, 1992, prod. various) serves as a perfect audio introduction to the Sexteto Habanero. The selections include a fair number of originals but they also contain works by Ignacio Piñeiro, whose Septeto Nacional was the main competition for the Septeto Habanero, and by the great Latin composer Ernesto Lecuona. The mastering has reduced the noise considerably, though there is a slight loss in the upper ranges.

what to buy next: A companion volume to the above-mentioned album, Son Cubano ♪♪♪½ (Tumbao Cuban Classics, 1991, prod. various) is much shorter, but the performances are still worth checking out. 75 Years Later ♪♪♪½ (Corason, 1995, prod. Eduardo Llerenas) marks the recording comeback of the Septeto Habanero under Manuel Furé's direction. The production is very clean and the tunes and playing do honor to the group's progenitors.

the rest:

Sexteto Habanero, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪ (Bongo Latino, 1994, prod. various) Sexteto Habanero, Vol. 2 ♪♪♪ (Bongo Latino, 1994, prod. various) Sexteto Habanero, Vol. 3 ♪♪♪ (Bongo Latino, 1995, prod. various) 1926–1931 ♪♪♪½ (Harlequin, 1995, prod. various) 1926–1948 ♪♪♪½ (Harlequin, 1996, prod. various) Sones Cubanos Vol. 2, 1926–1931 ♪♪♪½ (Folk Lyric cassette, 1983, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz)

influences:

◀◀ Trio Oriental, Cuarteto Oriental

▶▶ Arsenio Rodriguez y su Conjunto see also: Machito, Sexteto Boloña

Garaud MacTaggart

Shadow

Soca, calypso

Born c. 1942, in Tobago, Trinidad and Tobago. Based in Port of Spain, Trinidad, and Brooklyn, NY, USA.

Shadow (a.k.a. Winston Bailey) is a giant of soca (the phenomenally popular hybrid named as a contraction of "soul" and "calypso"), both as a singer/composer and as a musician. His masterful electric bass playing has redefined the instrument's role in calypso and soca, and added an extra element of rhythmic excitement to the music. Shadow was born on Tobago, a small island near Trinidad, and grew up poor, dreaming of a career in music, one of the few ways out of the ghetto for a hungry young man. He began his career by joining Sparrow's tent (calypso organization) as a backup singer, but soon moved on to form his own band. In 1974 he won his first Road March Crown (given to the composer of the most-covered song of the current Carnival season) with "Bassman," the tune that introduced his remarkable style on the instrument. It was the first time in years that anyone but Sparrow or Kitch (Lord Kitchener) had won the Road March Crown, and signaled an end to their domination of Carnival music. Like Sparrow and Kitch, Shadow can compose a mordant political lyric, but he is also welcomed by the younger generation for his ability to build a tune around a phat party groove.

what to buy: The Best of Shadow, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Straker's, 1995, prod. Granville Straker) is a collection of hits in their original versions, starting with "Bassman," the tune that made Shadow a force to be reckoned with. It only duplicates one track from the almost-as-good compilation Columbus Lied.

what to buy next: Columbus Lied ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1991, prod. Granville Straker) is a retrospective featuring re-recordings of some of Shadow's biggest carnival hits including "Tan Tan," "Bad Boy Peter," and the title track, a scathing indictment of colonial mentality and racism.

best of the rest:

Return of De Bassman ♪♪♪♪ (Straker's)
High Tension ♪♪♪♪ (Straker's)
Mystical Moods ♪♪♪♪ (MRS, 1984)
Sweet Sweet Dreams ♪♪♪♪ (CCP, 1984) Raw Energy ♪♪♪♪ (B's, 1986)

influences:

◀◀ Sparrow, Lord Kitchener, Growling Lion, Atilla

▶▶ David Rudder, Tambu, Machel Montano, Taxi

see also: Lord Kitchener, the Mighty Sparrow

j. poet

Shaggy

Dancehall

Born Orville Richard Burrell, October 22, 1968, in Kingston, Jamaica. Based in Brooklyn, NY, USA.

Dancehall was in the doldrums around 1993, having taken hits from Snow, the Vanilla Ice of reggae, and Buju Banton, an influential star who earned lots of bad press for slurring gays in public. Then came "Oh Carolina," Shaggy's clinking, clanking, brightly hoarse remake of a 1960 reggae song by the Folkes

Brothers, and the genre revitalized itself. Nicknamed, as you might expect, for the hippie character on the Scooby Doo cartoon, Orville Burrell moved with his mother from Kingston to a West Indian section of Brooklyn when he was 18. Like his reggae forebears, he worked as a deejay in local clubs and started "toasting," making up lyrics to rap over songs by Super Cat and other established dancehall stars. He recorded a few singles with the big-name producer Sting (no relation to a certain other big name who's dabbled in reggae), but had decided to join the U.S. Marines—and, to his chagrin, served in the Persian Gulf—before anything happened. Upon his return friends called to say his singles, such as "Big Up," were taking off. Ditching the Marines for his pop career, he scored a huge hit with "Oh Carolina"—his first of several. One of reggae's few mainstream Stateside success stories, Shaggy's sunny hits about love and partying are rarely as political as, say, Bob Marley, or as ponderous as Maxi Priest's heavy crooning.

what to buy: "Oh Carolina" is the centerpiece of Pure Pleasure ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1993, prod. J. Ralf Allen), but the rest of the album, most notably "Soon Be Done," is almost as irresistible. In addition to his catchy, superlow vocals and jittery dancehall production, there's an underlying devotion to old-school soul and reggae melodies; even on his debut album Shaggy reveals he's far more Marvin Gaye than Eek-a-Mouse.

what to buy next: Boombastic ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1995, prod. Robert Livingston, Gemma Corfield) recaptures the feel of "Oh Carolina" on several standout cuts, including the bouncy title track, a version of Ken Boothe's reggae classic "The Train Is Coming," and the snappy opener "In the Summertime."

what to avoid: Though Midnite Lover ♪♪ (Virgin, 1997, prod. various) features fun, upbeat songs like "Sexy Body Girls" and Percy Sledge's "Warm and Tender Love," it's less spry than the singer's earlier material, with more heavy-handed production.

the rest:
Original Doberman ♪♪½ (Greensleeves, 1990) worth searching for: Tougher Than Tough: The Story of Jamaican Music ♪♪♪♪½ (Mango/Island, 1993, prod. Chris Blackwell) is a four-disc chronology that contains just one Shaggy tune. But it nicely shows the progression from the Folkes Brothers' original "Oh Carolina" (produced by the great Prince Buster) to Shaggy's wonderful revamp, with Bob Marley, Dennis Brown, Desmond Dekker, Junior Murvin, Culture, and Shabba Ranks in between. (The disc is also reviewed in this book's Compilations section.)

influences:
⏮ Prince Buster, Shabba Ranks, Super Cat, Lee "Scratch" Perry, Wilson Pickett, James Brown, Ken Boothe, Bob Marley, Boogie Down Productions

⏭ Red Rat, Beenie Man

see also: Maxi Priest

Steve Knopper

Simon Shaheen

Traditional Arabic folk

Born 1955, in Tarshiha, Galilee/Israel. Based in Brooklyn, NY, USA.

Most artists would be content with being considered a master of one instrument, but Shaheen is equally adept at two. World-renowned as a virtuoso of the oud—the short-necked, pear-shaped Arabic precursor of the European lute—Shaheen's skill as a violinist is somewhat overlooked. Born in a small village in Galilee to a family rich in musical talent, Shaheen began studying the oud with his father, Hikmet, a well-known composer and teacher of Arabic music, at the age of five, and at seven entered the Rubin Conservatory, where he studied violin and Western classical music. After graduating from the Academy of Music in Jerusalem in 1978 with a double degree in performance and Arabic literature, but feeling limited in his career opportunities, Shaheen moved to New York in 1980, where he studied musicology, music education, and violin performance. In 1982 he formed the Near Eastern Music Ensemble, and has since become highly respected in the U.S. as a teacher, giving lectures and workshops at prominent institutions like Harvard, Princeton, and Juilliard. Just as Shaheen had mastered two instruments, he soon earned recognition as an expert in the musical traditions of two worlds, the Middle East and the West, through collaborations with a variety of European and American artists and groups, including Bill Laswell's fusion project Material. But even as he explores styles ranging from jazz and flamenco to film scores (The Sheltering Sky and Malcolm X) and theater, Shaheen continues to promote Arab musical traditions, producing the annual Arab Arts Festival, Mahrajan Al-Fan, in New York. He is currently in the process of establishing an Arab Art Institute in that same city.

what to buy: If you're looking to learn more about Arabic music but don't know where to start, The Music of Mohamed Abdel Wahab ♪♪♪♪♪ (Axiom, 1990, prod. Bill Laswell, Simon Shaheen) is as great an introduction as you'll find. An homage to Egyptian composer Wahab, this sultry masterpiece features a massive orchestra of more than 20 musicians and singers, including Shaheen's brother on oud and his sister on vocals. Beautifully recorded and filled with dazzling rhythms and spellbinding melodies, this blissful excursion is world music at its absolute finest. For a more in-depth examination of Shaheen's own compositional skills and instrumental prowess, try Saltanah ♪♪♪♪½ (Water Lily Acoustics, 1996, prod. Kavichandran Alexander), Shaheen's brilliant collaboration with Indian slide guitarist Vishwa Mohan Bhatt. Impossibly complex improvisations by both musicians converge on five wondrous tracks that point out the inherent similarities between Indian ragas and Arabic maqams.

Simon Shaheen

what to buy next: Taqasim ♪♪♪♪ (Lyrichord, 1991, prod. Phillip D. Schuyler) is a more sublime, stripped-down outing featuring Shaheen trading extended improvisations with Lebanese musician Ali Jihad Racy, a master of the buzuq, a Near Eastern variation on the Greek bouzouki. Although the compositions on Turath ♪♪♪♪ (CMP, 1992, prod. Bill Laswell, Simon Shaheen) fit the more stereotypical idea of traditional belly-dancing music, it's still an album well worth having for Shaheen's virtuosic picking and some maddeningly infectious rhythms.

influences:

⏮ Mohamed Abdel Wahab, Hikmet Shaheen

⏭ William Nakhly, Bill Laswell, Najib Shaheen

see also: V. M. Bhatt, Bill Laswell, Mike Richmond, Mohamed Abdel Wahab

Bret Love

Shakira

Latin pop

Born Shakira Isabel Mebarak Ripoll, February 9, 1977, in Barranquilla, Colombia. Based in Miami, FL, USA.

Shakira was born into a poor family in Barranquilla, Colombia. At 13 she left her home for Bogotá, seeking success as a model. Her voice attracted interest from Sony Discos and at 14 she released what proved to be an unsuccessful collection of self-penned tunes, Magia. A second album, Peligro, also did not do well, so the teenager pursued her modeling career and began acting in telenovelas (soap operas), including the Colombian El Oasis. Still, having not completely abandoned her interest in music and having earned a touch more maturity in the entertainment business, she went back to Sony in 1996 and put out what at first appeared to be another unsuccessful project, Pies Descalos. But this time singles slowly began getting airplay in South American countries and eventually made the Billboard Latin charts, building the album's popularity and opening doors for the even more successful Donde Estan Los Ladrones?.

what to buy: Donde Estan Los Ladrones? ♪♪♪ (Sony International, 1998, prod. Shakira Mebarak R.) and Pies Descalos ♪♪♪ (Sony International, 1996, prod. Shakira Mebarak R.) hit a balance of danceable tunes and angry-young-woman-rock attitude. There are acoustic guitar touches that recall the artist's Latin origins and she sings in Spanish, but Shakira's music moves in the direction of dance pop's globalization rather than the expression of Latin culture. She's been called the Latin Alanis Morissette and has attracted the attention of Gloria and Emilio Estefan, at whose Miami studio Donde Estan Los Ladrones? was recorded, and who are said to be assisting Shakira with English adaptations of her songs.

the rest:

Magia ♪♪♪ (Sony, 1991)
Peligro ♪♪♪ (Sony, 1992)
Megamixes ♪♪♪ (Sony, 1997)

influences:

⏮ Beck, Alanis Morissette, the Estefans

Kerry Dexter

Shakti

World, jazz-fusion, Indian jazz

Formed 1975, in London, England. Disbanded 1978.

John McLaughlin (England), acoustic guitar; Zakir Hussain, percussion; T. H. "Vikku" Vinayakram, percussion; L. Shankar, violin. (All members are from India except where noted otherwise.)

After attracting international acclaim for his lightning-fast playing with the electric jazz-fusion groups the Miles Davis Band and the Mahavishnu Orchestra, British guitarist John McLaughlin turned his focus toward the acoustic guitar. Teaming with virtuoso Indian violinist L. Shankar, tabla drum player Zakir Hussain, and ghatam (clay pot) player T. H. "Vikku" Vinayakram to form an acoustic group, Shakti, McLaughlin used Indian classical ragas as a springboard for lengthy improvisations and created one of the first true world jazz-fusion bands. Although they were only together for two years, the band recorded three memorable albums and spurred the growth of world music as we know it today—a much-transformed cultural climate into which McLaughlin and Hussain set out on a "Remember Shakti" tour in 1999.

what to buy: The debut, Shakti with John McLaughlin ♪♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1975, prod. John McLaughlin), was recorded during a concert at South Hampton College. A true East/West summit meeting, the album showcases McLaughlin's fiery playing balanced by the rest of the band's tradition-rooted arrangements. The highpoint comes with a longer-than 29-minute improvisation.

what to buy next: Though recorded in a studio and thus not quite matching the intensity of their live album, the six-tune follow-up Natural Elements ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1978/Sony, 1997, prod. John McLaughlin) finds its potency through subtlety and instrumental lyricism.

the rest:
Handful of Beauty ♪♪♪♪ (Tristar Music, 1977)
The Best of John McLaughlin and Shakti ♪♪♪♪ (Moment, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ Ravi Shankar, the Paul Winter Consort, Oregon

▶▶ Bill Meyers, Trilok Gurtu

see also: Hari Prasad Chaurasia, Zakir Hussain, L. Shankar, T. H. "Vikku" Vinayakram

Craig Harris

Anoushka Shankar

Indian classical

Born 1981, in London, England. Based in England.

So what do you do when you're the child of sitar master Ravi Shankar? It ain't roller blading, that's for sure. The daughter of Ravi's second wife, Sukanya, Anoushka was born in London and grew up splitting time between Southern California and her father's native India. As the only player ever trained completely by the elder Shankar, Anoushka started learning at age nine on a "baby" sitar built especially for her and made her performing debut when she was 13, sharing the stage with her father in New Delhi and, by all accounts, blowing him off it (which we find a bit hard to believe). Still, she seems well set up to be Ravi's successor, having recorded with him and George Harrison on the former's 1997 release Chants of India and becoming the youngest (and first female) recipient of a House of Commons Shield from the British Parliament in 1998—all before the release of her self-titled debut album.

what's available: Anoushka ♪♪♪ (Angel/EMI Classics, 1998, prod. Ravi Shankar), given her laudable credentials, is not really all it should be. She's clearly a gifted technician, but at this young age Anoushka's playing tends to be more skillful than emotional. She is also quite clearly the daughter of Ravi, and while that close tie has obviously given her a leg up on the instrument and in the marketplace, it has somewhat hampered the development of her independent voice.

influences:
◀◀ Ravi Shankar

see also: Ravi Shankar

Gary Graff

L. Shankar /Shankar

Indian classical and jazz, world fusion

Born 1953, in Madras, India. Based in Los Angeles, CA, USA.

The classical ragas and drones of India are combined with a multitude of world-music influences by India-born violinist and vocalist Larshinarayana "L." Shankar. In addition to many solo recordings, Shankar has recorded albums with his wife, Caroline, a former British vocalist whom he met during recording sessions with Peter Gabriel in 1980; and in a rock band, the Epidemics. Shankar has also been featured on albums by such performers as Gabriel, Bruce Springsteen, Yoko Ono, and Talking Heads. His 1979 recording Touch Me There was produced by Frank Zappa, who wrote lyrics to several tunes. Since 1980 Shankar has played a special, 10-string, double violin that he designed with guitar builder Ken Parker. The instrument has given Shankar much flexibility, with five strings that sound like a double bass or cello, and five strings on the upper neck that sound like a violin or viola.

Shankar grew up in a musical family. Both of his parents were professional vocalists, and his father was also one of the country's premier violinists and operated his own music school. Shankar himself began studying music at the age of five. He was exposed to a mixture of traditional Indian sounds and the pop, rock, and classical music of the Western world. In the early 1960s Shankar performed with his brothers, L. Subramaniam and L. Vaidhyanathan, as the Violin Trio. Shankar came to the United States to teach Indian music at Wesleyan University and to study for a Doctorate in Ethnomusicology. His most influential learning, however, came in the clubs of New York, where he was befriended by many musicians. Shankar's earliest recording sessions in the U.S. were with such jazz artists as Archie Shepp and Jan Garbarek. In 1976 he formed a groundbreaking acoustic band, Shakti, with fusion guitarist John McLaughlin of the Mahavishnu Orchestra. He has since become a much-in-demand session player. In 1989, he joined with such artists as Bruce Springsteen, Sting, Lou Reed, and Tracy Chapman for the Amnesty International-sponsored "Human Rights Now!" tour. Shankar's music has been featured in several films, including The Last Temptation of Christ, Robin Hood, and Jennifer 8. He had his greatest success to date in 1991, when his Pancha Nadai Pallavi became the first Indian classical music album to make the Top Ten on Billboard's World Music chart.

what to buy: The musical traditions of India are blended with jazz fusion and rock rhythms on Shankar's album Touch Me There ♪♪♪♪ (Barking Pumpkin, 1979, prod. Frank Zappa). In addition to such imaginative instrumentals as "No More Mr. Nice Girl," the album includes the memorable song "Dead Girls of London," featuring Zappa on guitar and Mothers of Invention vocalist Ike Willis.

what to buy next: Although Raga Aber ♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1995, prod. Shankar) is more rooted in classical Indian music than the above disc, the energetic drive of Shankar's playing adds a contemporary touch. His violin is enhanced by the percussive rhythms of Caroline on tambourine and Zakir Hussain on tabla drum.

the rest:
Who's to Know ♪♪♪ (ECM/Polydor, 1979)

influences:
◀◀ Ravi Shankar, V. Shankar ▶▶ Zakir Hussain, Mickey Hart

see also: Zakir Hussain, Bill Laswell, Shakti, Dr. L. Subramaniam, T. H. "Vikku" Vinayakram

Craig Harris

Lakshmi Shankar

Indian classical

Born late 1920s, in India. Based in India.

One of India's top female vocalists, Lakshiminarayan or "Lakshmi" Shankar joined one of India's leading musical families when she married sitar player Ravi Shankar's older brother Rajendra Shankar (a scriptwriter) in the early 1940s. Although she began her career as a dancer in the troupe organized and managed by Uday Shankar (another of Ravi's brothers), she turned to music when health problems prevented her from practicing her first artistic love. She then garnered acclaim for her work on the ballet Discovery of India in 1946 and '47. In addition to singing on the soundtracks of several movies including the Academy Award-winning Gandhi, Shankar has been featured on several of Ravi's albums. The mother-in-law of Indian jazz violinist L. Subramaniam, Shankar is a master of khayal, a light classical style of Indian singing.

what to buy: Shankar's talents for singing classical Indian music are obvious on the live album Evening Concert ♪♪♪½ (Ravi Shankar Music, 1986, prod. Richard Bock).

what to buy next: Shankar's vocals are strengthened by the innovative playing of Norwegian jazz saxophonist Jan Gabarek on Vision ♪♪♪½ (1983, ECM, prod. Jan Gabarek).

the rest:
Who's to Know ♪♪♪½ (ECM, 1980)
Song for Everyone ♪♪½ (ECM, 1984)
Les Heurs Et Les Saisons ♪♪♪½ (Ocara, 1987)
Nobody Told Me ♪♪♪ (ECM, 1990) Soul Searcher ♪♪♪ (Axiom, 1991)

influences:
◀◀ Ravi Shankar, Lata Mangeshkar, Begum Akhtar ▶▶ Peter Gabriel, Jan Garbarek, L. Subramaniam, Najma Akhtar

see also: Ali Akbar Khan, Ravi Shankar, Dr. L. Subramaniam

Craig Harris

Ravi Shankar

Indian classical

Born Rabindra Shankar Chowdery, April 7, 1920, in Uttah Pradesh, India. Based in India.

A master of the sitar, India's best-known stringed instrument, Ravi Shankar attracted international acclaim when he gave lessons to the Beatles' George Harrison in the mid-1960s. Shankar later became one of the few non-rock performers at the Monterey Pop Festival in 1967 and the Woodstock Music Festival in 1969. Together with Harrison, Shankar helped organize, and performed at, the Concert for Bangladesh in 1971. The event and subsequent three-disc album helped raise more than $15 million for that war-ravaged country. Billboard named Shankar its Recording Artist of the Year and Musician of the Year in 1967; in a 1995 interview Harrison referred to Shankar as "the godfather of world music."

The son of Shyam Shankar, a Minister for the Maharajah of Jhalawar, Shankar made his professional debut, at the age of 13, as a dancer in the Compaigne de Danse et Musique Hindou, a troupe that included his older brother Uday Shankar. A turning point came after meeting influential multi-instrumentalist Allaudin Kahn, father of Indian percussionist Ali Akbar Khan, at the All-Bengal Music Conference in December of 1934. Shankar apprenticed himself to the elder Kahn, who toured with the dance troupe as a featured soloist from 1935–36. In 1938, Shankar left the troupe to spend six years studying music under Kahn.

Ravi Shankar with his daughter Anoushka

Performing his first public recital at a Music Conference in Allahabad in 1939, Shankar toured throughout India in the late '40s. In 1945 his composition "Sare Jahan Se Accha" became one of the country's most popular songs. Shankar served as music director and launched the chamber orchestra Vadya Vrinda for All-India Radio in New Delhi from 1949 until 1956, when he performed his first solo concerts in Europe and the United States.

Shankar's music has been featured in such films as Charlie, The Flute and the Arrow, Kabuliwala, and Ghandi. Shankar has composed many pieces for ballets, including "Samanya Ksnati," "India Immortal," "The Discovery of India," and "Ghyanshyam: The Broken Branch." The first Indian musician ever commissioned by a major Western orchestra—"A Concerto for Sitar and Orchestra," performed by the London Philharmonic in 1970—Shankar has also composed material for the New York Philharmonic under the direction of Zubin Mehta, the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, and French flute player Jean-Pierre Rampal. In 1979, Shankar performed on an East Greets East tour with Japanese flute player Hosan Yamamoto and koto (classical zither) player Musumi Miyashita. In 1988, Shankar was commissioned by the Palace of Culture of the Soviet Union to compose a piece, "Swar Milan," to be performed by 140 musicians and singers. Two years later, he collaborated with minimalist composer Philip Glass on the recording Passages.

Shankar has been extremely generous in sharing his understanding of Indian music. In 1967, he founded the Kinnara School of Indian Music in Bombay. He later opened a branch in Los Angeles. Shankar also served as chairperson of the department of Indian music at the California Institute of Arts.

Shankar reached his lowest point in 1975 when he suffered a near mental breakdown during a tour with Harrison and the Festival of India. Following his recovery, he vowed to perform only in classical or ethnic music venues. In 1997, he established the Ravi Shankar Foundation in Encinitas, California; his autobiography, My Music, My Life, was published in 1969.

what to buy: A four-CD set, In Celebration ♪♪♪♪ (Angel, 1996, prod. various) is a thorough retrospective of Shankar's career and includes several cuts with the London Symphony Orchestra and the Chamber Orchestra of the Moscow Philharmonic.

what to buy next: Ravi Shankar ♪♪♪♪ (Deutsche Grammaphon, 1993, prod. various) unites four of Shankar's most influential albums—East Greets East, Ragas Hameer & Gara, Raga Jogeshwari, and Homage to Mahatma Ghandi and Baba Allauddin.

the rest:
Ragas ♪♪♪♪ (Fantasy, 1973)
Raga Paramsehwari ♪♪♪½ (Capitol, 1976)
Shankar Project: Tana Mana ♪♪♪½ (Private Music, 1987)
The Genius of Ravi Shankar ♪♪♪½ (Sony, 1987)
The Sounds of India ♪♪♪½ (Sony, 1987)
Inside the Kremlin ♪♪♪♪ (Private Music, 1988)
Golden Jubilee Concert ♪♪♪♪ (Chandra Dhara, 1990)
Farewell, My Friend ♪♪♪½ (EMI India, 1992)
At the Monterey International Pop Festival ♪♪♪♪ (One Way, 1993)
Live at Monterey, 1967 ♪♪♪½ (Ravi Shankar Music Circle, 1993)
Concert for Peace ♪♪♪ (Moment, 1995)
The Music of Ravi Shankar ♪♪♪♪ (Ocara, 1995)
Genesis Soundtrack ♪♪♪½ (BMG/Milan, 1995)
In San Francisco ♪♪♪♪ (One Way, 1995)
In Celebration: The Highlights ♪♪♪½ (Angel, 1996)
The Genius of Ravi Shankar ♪♪♪½ (SPM, 1997)
Raga Tala ♪♪♪½ (Interra, 1997)
Mantram: Chants of India ♪♪♪½ (Angel, 1997) worth searching for: The Concert for Bangladesh ♪♪♪♪½ (Apple, 1972/Capitol, 1991, prod. Phil Spector) includes Shankar's expressive raga, "Bangla Dhun."

influences:
◀◀ Allaudin Khan

▶▶ George Harrison, Ashwan Batish, Anoushka Shankar

see also: V. M. Bhatt, Tarun Bhattacharya, George Harrison, Zakir Hussain, Ali Akbar Khan, Anoushka Shankar, Lakshmi Shankar

Craig Harris

Sharon Shannon

Irish traditional

Born June 8, 1967, in Ruan, County Clare, Ireland. Based in Ireland.

Sharon Shannon is at the top of a stellar crop of young Irish musicians bringing traditional music to the attention of a new generation in Ireland and the United States. An amazing talent with a firm grasp of traditional music and killer chops on both button accordion and fiddle, Shannon has taken her solid foundation in Irish music and expanded upon it, adding influences from the world of pop and from other cultures to whose music she is drawn. Growing up in North Clare, one of the hotbeds of Irish traditional music and the home turf of the legendary Kilfenora Ceili Band, Shannon was surrounded by dancers and musicians from an early age. Her brother Gary, a fine flute player, and sister Mary, the banjo player with the Irish band the Bumblebees, were early influences, as was Frank Custy, a local music teacher credited with giving many of Clare's young musicians the right start. Shannon was performing professionally at an early age as a member of Disirt Tola, a group that also counted Gary and Mary Shannon, piper Ronan Browne, and concertina player Gearoid O'hAllmhurain among its members. They were active through the '80s and released one album in 1984. Shannon was also active in Comhaltas Ceoltoiri Eireann tours during the 1980s, where she met the great piano accordion player Karen Tweed, whose repertoire and style were very influential on Shannon's development. After a short period with the group Arcady during the late '80s, Shannon was asked by Mike Scott to join the Waterboys. She spent a year and a half touring and recording with the band and being exposed to a whole host of new musical ideas and styles. After Scott changed the band's direction to a less folk-oriented one, Shannon left to pursue a solo career. Her first album, recorded in 1990, mixed traditional tunes with a somewhat pop-oriented acoustic backing and featured appearances by Liam O'Maonlai of Hothouse Flowers and Adam Clayton of U2, as well as many of her former Waterboys bandmates. Their support put her name in front of the Irish popular music press and made her a star to young Irish audiences. Her appearance on the 1992 A Woman's Heart anthology, the best-selling album in Irish history, cemented her status as one of Ireland's leading young artists. Since then she has toured throughout the U.S. and Europe and recorded two more albums. Shannon is a dynamite musician on both fiddle and accordion; her playing is firmly rooted in Irish heritage; and she has a great store of traditional tunes. She is also an artistic explorer completely at home in a pop-music idiom. As a result, her arrangements are often more adventurous than on many Irish traditional albums, employing drum machines, synthesizers, saxophones, and other instruments rarely heard in her chosen genre. While this approach often irritates hard-core traditionalists, it's gained a wider ear for the music and helped give it a future—Shannon's credentials are impeccable, and her debt to the music of her forbears is definitely mutual.

what to buy: Each Little Thing ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1997, prod. Dónal Lunny), Shannon's third album, is her most cohesive and self-assured. Working with a crack crew of musicians including guitarist Steve Cooney and fiddler Winnie Horan, Shannon has produced an album that combines traditional and contemporary influences in a completely personal musical statement. From the audacious version of Grace Jones's "Libertango," featuring vocalist Kirsty MacColl, and a cover of Fleetwood Mac's "Never Going Back Again," to a sweet version of Junior Crehan's "With Her Lovely Long Hair," Shannon mixes her sources into a tasty musical stew, with the steady hand of producer Lunny keeping things from boiling over. While not everything works (the hooked-on-classics-sounding programming on "Bag of Cats," for instance), everything bears the stamp of an artist exploring fresh ideas and synthesizing new music out of old.

what to buy next: Sharon Shannon ♪♪♪½ (Philo, 1991, prod. John Dunford) was Shannon's debut album, and her most musically conservative. While her playing is astounding as always, the arrangements are spare and subdued, with less of the daring of her later recordings. Highlights include the slow air "Marbhna Luimni," and a killer set of box tunes from the pen of Phil Cunningham. If you're a hard-core traditional Irish music fan, this would be the album to purchase—though Shannon's adventurousness in repertoire is still displayed with an imaginative pairing of a Kerry slide and a Cajun dance tune, as well as a Portuguese number.

what to avoid: Out the Gap ♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1995, prod. Dennis Bovell, John Dunford) is an album by an artist searching for a style; the control and sophistication developed by Shannon for Each Little Thing were not yet there. As usual, her taste in tunes is tremendous, and her playing is great, but saxophonist Richie Buckley has little feel for traditional music and producer Dennis Bovell's tracks seem too restrained. All in all, the pieces just don't fit together.

the rest:
Spellbound—Best of Sharon Shannon ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1999)

worth searching for: One of Shannon's first recorded appearances was on Ceol Tigh Neachtain ♪♪♪½ (Gael-Linn, 1989, prod. Brendan O'Regan), a sampler featuring many of the fine young musicians in Galway at the time. Other highlights include appearances by fiddler Sean Smyth and sean-nós (Irish "old-style") singer Deirbhile Ní Bhrolchain. Good luck finding the eponymous Disirt Tola album; you'll have to search used record stores in Ireland. However, A Woman's Heart is very much available and reviewed in this book's Compilations section.

influences:
◀◀ Tommy Peoples, Karen Tweed, Mairtin O'Connor

▶▶ Ashley MacIsaac, Mary Custy Band, Natalie MacMaster, Eileen Ivers

see also: Arcady, Máire Breatnach, Phil Cunningham, Dónal Lunny, the Waterboys

Tony Ziselberger

Jamshied Sharifi

Middle Eastern jazz

Born October 17, 1960, in Kansas City, MO, USA. Based in New York, NY, USA.

His name suggests his Middle Eastern background, but Jamshied Sharifi was born in Kansas City, and that town's jazz tradition is equally strong in his music. Sharifi studied at Boston's prestigious Berklee College of Music, and then reacquainted himself with the music of his childhood as well. Sharifi draws from Middle Eastern, Ghanaian, and other African music in his compositions and arrangements, and has played all over the world with artists as disparate as John Lurie, Phyllis Hyman, Leon Russell, and Babatunde Olatunji. Irrespective of his leanings toward tradition and the organic ethic of jazz, he is known for his synthesizer work. "Because I've always had a lot of contact with acoustic instruments and players," Sharifi explains, "I have tried to hold the synthesizer up to an 'acoustic' standard; in other words, to try and play it with the depth, detail, and richness of articulation that come naturally to an acoustic instrumentalist." In addition to performance, Sharifi has gained a name in recent years for production and film work. To name one notable example, he coproduced Irish chanteuse Susan McKeown's acclaimed 1998 album Bushes and Briars with McKeown and Akira Satake.

what's available: A Prayer for the Soul of Layla ♪♪♪½ (Alula, 1997, prod. Jamshied Sharifi, Akira Satake) is a masterful blend of bells, handclaps, drones, and the slicker sounds of synthesized jazz. It doesn't have the earthy power of a field recording or even a Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan album, but it's a fusion work that still contains the spices of another world. The listener is drawn into an almost cinematic landscape with Sharifi's arrangements. No wonder, then, that his other major album credit is for a film score. Harriet the Spy ♪♪♪½ (Castle, 1996, prod. Graham Walker, Jamshied Sharifi) boasts one of the hippest soundtracks ever found in a kid flick, with music that frames and backs selections by James Brown, Jill Sobule, and Les Negresses Vertes. Sharifi brings a true melting-pot sensibility to the jazz-based proceedings.

influences:
◀◀ Salif Keita, Lyle Mays, Pat Metheny

Pamela Murray Winters

Shiv Kumar Sharma

North Indian classical

Born 1939, in Jammu, Kashmir, India. Based in India.

Before Shiv Kumar Sharma began playing the 100-string santoor, a distant relative of the hammered dulcimer, the instrument had only been associated with Kashmiri folk. Sharma changed the tuning system and the number of strings, replaced brass strings with steel ones, and separated the instrument from its traditional wooden stand. The result was a new santoor that could play all 12 notes of the Indian musical scales in three octaves with clarity, readying it for a loftier application. Purists scoffed at the idea that a lowly regional folk instrument could be used in Hindustani classical music, even though the santoor had long played a role in the Persian classical tradition. But with the huge critical and financial success of his Call of the Valley album in 1967, Sharma silenced all doubters. He is unsurpassed in his mastery of delicate opening alaap movements and the complicated rhythms of fast-tempo climaxes. Taking his artistry full-circle to popular forms, Sharma has followed his success in the classical field by introducing the santoor into film music as well.

what to buy: Call of the Valley ♪♪♪♪♪ (Hemisphere/EMI, 1967, prod. G. N. Joshi) was a kind of concept album that portrayed a day in the lives of two lovers in a Kashmiri valley. In addition to the santoor, the album featured two other instruments not previously associated with Indian classical music—the bansuri flute and the guitar—also to an enthusiastic public reception. Hard-core classical fans were wowed by the new possibilities these sounds opened up for Hindustani music, and won over by the interplay between the talented musicians, while the album's accessible folk melodies and direct storytelling struck a cord with non-classical listeners. The album remains one of the greatest in Hindustani music.

what to buy next: Santoor ♪♪♪♪♪ (Moment, 1993, prod. Zakir Hussain) is the live performance of a popular evening raga (an Indian classical piece synched to the varied moods of the times of day), "Rag Rageshri." Sharma has recorded a large number of albums with percussionist Zakir Hussain to amazing effect, and this is no exception. Since the santoor is struck with curved sticks made of walnut, it is an ideal rhythm instrument in the right hands; when these two musicians are in synch, as here, the rhythmic interplay is unbelievable. The Valley Recalls ♪♪♪♪½ (Navras, 1996, prod. Vibhaker Baxi) is a two-volume jugalbandi or duet between Sharma and Hari Prasad Chaurasia, his partner on the landmark Call of the Valley. Their 1995 reunion, recorded at Delhi's Nehru Centre, is not only a historic occasion but a showcase for two of India's top musicians at the peak of their talent.

worth searching for: Any album that features Sharma and tabla drum virtuoso Zakir Hussain is a good bet. Among the dozens of Sharma releases available at better Indian music stores are: Hundred Strings of Santoor ♪♪♪♪½ (Navras, 1986) with Zakir Hussain; Megh Malhar ♪♪♪♪ (Music Today, 1991) with vocalist Pandit Jasrae; The Pioneer of Santoor ♪♪♪♪ (Chhandra Dhara, 1991), also with Hussain; Shiv Kumar Sharma: Maestro's Choice ♪♪♪♪ (Music Today, 1991); Gurjari Todi ♪♪♪♪ (Navras, 1993); and Shiv Kumar Sharma Plays Santoor in Osho's Samadhi ♪♪♪♪ (Meditation, 1994).

influences:
Uma Dutt Sharma

see also: Tarun Bhattacharya, Hari Prasad Chaurasia, Zakir Hussain

Aaron Howard

Joanne Shenandoah

Native American, pop

Born in the Oneida Nation, NY, USA. Based in the Oneida Nation, NY, USA.

Shenandoah, one of the country's most prolific Native musicians, doesn't use any tricks to coax the muse. "Whenever I need a song, I sit down and write one," Shenandoah says, "although I don't take personal credit for my songs; they're all ancestrally inspired. When I'm working on a song, I can hear the voices of the past and future coming through." A member of the Oneida Nation, Shenandoah was born in Iroquois territory and was given the name Takalihwa kwha—She Sings. Shenandoah has performed at both Clinton inaugurals; contributed music to the soundtracks of Northern Exposure, PBS's How the West Was Lost, and the feature film The Indian in the Cupboard; been nominated for a Pulitzer Prize in music for her symphonic composition Ganondagan; written books; performed at powwows, clubs, and music festivals in France, Canada, and the United States; and recorded six albums including her latest, All Spirits Sing, a coming-of-age story for children that she calls "a mythical journey that all ages can relate to—a tale to raise children's self-esteem." Shenandoah has been performing since her own childhood, and her father, Clifford Shenandoah, played jazz guitar with Duke Ellington's band. She started playing piano as a child, going on to guitar, clarinet, cello, flute, and more. In college, Shenandoah discovered computers and considered a career in systems management, but music always called out to her. After doing commercials and background singing, she finally decided to see how far she could go with her own music and signed with Canyon Records in 1989. Since then she's followed her heart and produced a body of work that combines all her interests—pop, symphonic, folk, and her own Native roots.

what to buy: On Matriarch ♪♪♪½ (Silver Wave, 1996, prod. Tom Wasinger, Joanne Shenandoah) Shenandoah performs 13 traditional Iroquois women's songs as a tribute to the women in her family. The tracks were recorded a cappella at various sites sacred to the Oneida; the sounds of the birds and wind are all natural. It's one of Shenandoah's most powerful and deeply felt recordings.

what to buy next: On Life Blood ♫♫♫½ (Silver Wave, 1995, prod. Peter Kater) producer Kater, a new-age keyboard star, provides sympathetic settings for a collection of traditional Haudenosaunee-Iroquois songs. This album prompted Billboard to call Shenandoah a "Native American Enya."

the rest:
Joanne Shenandoah ♫♫ (Canyon, 1989)
(With A. Paul Ortega) Loving Ways ♫♫♫½ (Canyon, 1991)
Once in a Red Moon ♫♫ (Canyon, 1994)
All Spirits Sing ♫♫♫½ (Music for Little People, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ Willie Nelson, A. Paul Ortega, Jackson Brown, Rita Coolidge ▶▶ Sharon Burch, Mishi Donovan

see also: A. Paul Ortega

j. poet

Shinehead

Reggae/rap

Born Edmund Carl Aiken, April 10, 1962, in London, England. Based in England.

Raised in both the center of reggae (Jamaica) and the birthplace of rap (the Bronx), it's no wonder Shinehead became one of the first artists to fuse the two genres. Less evident, however, is why he began remaking old pop, rock, and soul songs—though it's hard to quibble with most of the results. Still, hearing Boston's rock hit "More than a Feeling" in a reggae-fied hip-hop context is a bit jarring.

what to buy: On his expertly produced major-label debut, Unity ♫♫♫♫ (Elektra, 1988, prod. Claude Evans, Jam Master Jay, Davy D.), the even-keeled toaster-of-the-town gets a little help from the Beatles, using "Come Together" as the foundation for the self-explanatory title track. Even better, though, is "Chain Gang (Rap)," a warm, funky, and funny update of the Sam Cooke song. Shinehead gets topical, too, serving up a sort of dancehall "White Lines" for the hubba era with "Gimme No Crack."

the rest:
The Real Rock ♫♫½ (Elektra, 1990)
Sidewalk University ♫♫ (Elektra, 1992) Troddin' ♫♫ (Elektra, 1994)

influences:
◀◀ Don Baron, Asher D & Daddy Freddy ▶▶ Snow

see also: Sly & Robbie

Josh Freedom du Lac

jamaican music 10: ragga

As it did everywhere else, the digital age radically transformed the music of Jamaica. The realization that session bands and studio time were no longer a necessity led to a deluge of computer-generated rhythms and releases. Even the poorest would-be producer could create music for the price of a toy Casio keyboard, the instrument King Jammy used to construct the immortal "Sleng Teng" rhythm—the 1985 drum-roll that announced the arrival of Jamaica's digital era. This renewed populism in the dancehall inspired Junior Delgado's "Raggamuffin Year," a tune which purged the negative connotations of the term and transformed an abbreviation of it—"ragga"—into a proud emblem of the new music being made by and for Jamaica's ghetto youth. The hottest producers included the aforesaid Jammy, Donovan Germain, Dave Kelly, Gussie Clarke, Bobby Digital, and Sly (Dunbar) & Robbie (Shakespeare). Interestingly, though the digital sound was far more pulverizing than its analog forebear, and so clean it bordered on sterile, the rhythms it drew on were more traditionally Jamaican than in any then-recent genre.

The boisterous atmosphere of the dancehall swiftly intensified; in the "arena," guns were fired in appreciation, bottles hurled in denunciation, and orgasmic shouts unleashed in the midst of lascivious wind-and-grind dancing. But when a profusion of bullets and cocaine flowed into the current of dancehall culture, and the government countered with the automatic weaponry of the "Eradication Squad," it led to much tragedy and death—the legendary King Tubby and Peter Tosh; former Wailers drummer Carlton Barrett; talented deejays Pan Head, Major Worries, Dirtsman, General Echo, and Flux; and the sonorous singer Nitty Gritty were among those who didn't survive the era. Slowly but surely the '90s have seen spiritual and cultural themes return to the dancehall. Nonetheless, it will always be energized to some extent by the hellfire-intense rhythms, sweaty sexuality, and fierce competition meant to transport the "arena" from the realities that once intruded upon it with such impact.

Todd Shanker

Shooglenifty

Experimental folk

Formed 1994, in Edinburgh, Scotland. Based in Edinburgh, Scotland.

Iain MacLeod, mandolin, tenor banjo; Angus R. Grant, fiddle; Garry Finlayson, banjo, banjax; Malcolm Crosbie, acoustic guitar, electric guitar; Conrad Ivitsky, bass; James MacKintosh, drums, percussion, piano. (All members are from Scotland.)

At the forefront of Scotland's '90s generation of "roots" bands is Shooglenifty. Given their exploratory bent the term is used loosely—the group itself describes its music as "hypno-funkadelic ambient trad" or "acid croft." If that doesn't help, think of a buzzing fusion of traditional Scottish dance music with modern-pop rhythm grooves. Equally at home playing on a folk/world-music festival stage or at urban concert halls and dance clubs, the band has traveled extensively, thrilling audiences in the United Kingdom, Poland, Spain, Denmark, and as far afield as Hong Kong and Malaysia. Shooglenifty has recorded two studio albums and one live set, and members of the band also participated in the groundbreaking Afro Celt Sound System project.

what's available: The group's first album, Venus in Tweeds ♪♪♪♪ (Greentrax, 1994, prod. Jim Sutherland), is a bit softer than its successor, A Whiskey Kiss ♪♪♪♪♪ (Greentrax, 1996, prod. Jim Sutherland). On the latter the rhythms are tougher; drums are more prominent and much better used to become a fully integrated part of the band. The ensemble as a whole plays with more confidence and their music acquires an exciting edge.

the rest:
Live at Selwyn Hall (WOMAD Select/RealWorld, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Mouth Music, Capercaillie, Moving Hearts, Edward II

▶▶ Afro Celt Sound System, Peatbog Faeries, Old Blind Dogs, Talitha Mackenzie, Mary Jane Lamond

see also: Afro Celt Sound System

Ken Roseman

Shu-De

Throat singing/overtone singing/höömeï

Formed in Tuva. Based in Tuva.

Oleg Kuular, throat-singing, igil, khomus; Mergen Mongush, throat-singing, limbi, vocals; Leonid Oorzhak, throat-singing, igil, doshpuluur, vocals; Nadezhda Shoigu, vocals; Boris Salchak, vocals, percussion. (All members are from Tuva.)

"Throat-singing," also known as overtone singing or höömeï, is an astonishing vocal technique employed by the peoples of such Asian regions as Mongolia, Tibet, and Tuva, in the last of which the art has been refined to its highest level. Throat-singers are able to utter two or more tones at one time, producing what is in essence an entire chord without the aid of an instrument; this is accomplished by carefully forming the mouth and tongue into certain configurations. The resulting sounds range from low abdominal growls to unearthly, whistling overtones. Shu-De is a traditional throat-singing ensemble from Tuva. They back their vocals with igil (two-stringed fiddle), doshpuluur (lute), khomus (jew's-harp), and other instruments of their homeland.

what's available: The band's only CD available to date, Shu-De: Voices from the Distant Steppe ♪♪♪½ (RealWorld, 1994, prod. Stephen Pritchard), contains some pretty intense music-making. "Throat Singing and Igil," for example, showcases impressive soaring and wobbling in the sygyt sub-style, and on "Khomus Solo," Oleg Kuular creates some wild, pulsating effects as he combines his khomus playing with a resonant vocal line. Also included is a recording of the kham shamanic ritual. The liner notes put perhaps too much emphasis on the shamanic component of Tuvan music, however; it seems a bit hyperbolic to contend that throat-singers are in a "trance" when they perform. In addition to the questionable text, there are some annoying discrepancies between the track listing and the CD's actual running order—but these lapses of perspective and organization fall happily short of preventing one's enjoyment of often-remarkable music.

influences:
◀◀ Tuvan tradition

Jeffrey Muhr

Sierra Maestra

Son

Formed 1976, in Havana, Cuba. Based in Havana, Cuba.

Alejandro Suárez, musical director, cata, claves; Eduardo Himely, bass, guitar, marímbula; Juan de Marcos González, tres, vocals; Carlos González, bongos, congas; Bárbaro Teuntor Garcia, trumpet; Jesús Alamañy, trumpet (1976–1992), vocals; Carlos Puisseaux, güiro; Alberto "Virgilio" Valdés, maracas; José Antonio "Maceo" Rodriguez, vocals, guitar; Luis Barzaga, vocals, claves. (All members are from Cuba.)

Son is one of Cuba's main musical exports, the basic building block of New York and Miami salsa. This folkloric form grew out of the religious rituals of the African slave population in Oriente province, when they combined it with European and possibly Native American forms. Around 1800 refugees from Haiti's revolutionary violence brought their music, which mixed with the already potent brew of Afro-Cuban, Spanish, and French styles. For a while in the late '60s and early '70s, the more folkloric forms of son were supplanted by salsa and rock 'n' roll from the U.S. (despite the American embargo), and the Cuban neuva trova, a singer/songwriter movement that was concerned with poetic representations of everyday life. Irakere and Los Van Van had begun to revitalize the son in the early 1970s, but they were playing in a more modern style, to appeal to the younger generation. When Sierra Maestra got together, they decided to concentrate on the music's classic style: they played acoustically and their instrumentation was heavily traditional, including tres, guitar, trumpet, bongos, güiro, maracas, clave, and vocals. Juan de Marcos González, one of Sierra Maestra's founders, decided in favor of this approach because, as he says, "Son is the essence of all Cuban dance music. We wanted to prove that this traditional music was still a living thing, a vibrant musical force." "Sierra Maestra was both classical and nostalgic," concurs Jesus Alamañy, who honed his trumpet skills with a 10-year apprenticeship in the band before striking out on his own with ¡Cubanismo!. "The son is the root of Cuban music, but it had been forgotten. In Sierra Maestra we kept the original ideas and rhythms, but opened it up, creating a new era of dancing music."

what to buy: Dundunbanza! ♪♪♪♪½ (World Circuit, 1994, prod. Nick Gold, Marcos González), the album that introduced Sierra Maestra to the international audience, is a stunner; it includes many hits written by the blind tres (small guitar) player Arsenio Rodríguez, whose innovations set the standard for son in the 1940s and 1950s. The piano of special guest Bernardo Sassetti is particularly tasty.

what to buy next: On the band's latest international offering, Tíbiri Tábará ♪♪♪♪ (World Circuit, 1998, prod. Nick Gold, Alejandro Suárez, Eduardo Himely), the production is slicker, but the pumped-up sound of the percussion serves the music well. Bernardo Sassetti returns to add his keyboard magic to the session.

the rest:
Criolla Carabali ♪♪♪♪ (Soni Do France, 1995)

influences:
⏮ Sexteto Habanero, Beny Moré, Orquesta Aragon ⏭ NG La Banda, ¡Cubanismo!

see also: Arsenio Rodríguez, ¡Cubanismo!

j. poet

Garnett Silk

Dancehall reggae, ragga

Born Garnet Smith, 1967, in Manchester, Jamaica. Died December 10, 1994, in Manchester, Jamaica.

With a rare open-hearted certitude, Garnett Silk's sleek, impassioned tenor brought the topics of peace and love—physical and spiritual, corporeal and divine—to the ragamuffins of the nihilistic dancehall. Silk began his career as a teenager under the name DJ Bimbo, recording "Problems Everywhere" and "See Bimbo Ya" for Delbert "Callo" Collins in the mid-'80s. He then developed his vocal craft and vision at Destiny Outernational Sound System, where he worked with his Manchester homey, Tony Rebel. Rebel introduced him to Anthony "Fire" Rochester, a young songwriter who shared Silk's conscientious idealism. After some lean, rough years, their collaboration resulted in Silk's 1992 debut, It's Growing, an album of depth and beauty that briefly shifted the attention of the dancehall "massive" away from lyrics of gun-glamorizing violence and disrespectful, sexually explicit "punany" slackness. A year later, Silk became a nationwide sensation in Jamaica with his follow-up 100% Silk, a set of thoughtful songs with cultural substance and melodic sweetness to spare, including "Nothing Can Divide Us," "Necessity," and "Zion in a Vision." The same year he signed a recording contract with Atlantic, and plans were made to issue his substantial back catalog of fine singles for producers such as Steely & Clevie, King Tubby, King Jammy, Jack Scorpio, and Donovan Germain. The intensity of Silk's conviction moved many reggae fans to compare him with the late Bob Marley after his inspirational performance at the 1994 Reggae Sunsplash festival. Unfortunately, like Marley, Silk was to be taken from this earth far too soon. In late '94, Silk's mother's home in the Manchester community of Brumalia was robbed. After receiving ongoing threats, the peaceful Silk resorted to borrowing a gun from his attorney. While at home, one of his brothers was demonstrating how to use the weapon when it accidentally fired, striking a gas canister and igniting an explosion and fire. Amidst the flames, Silk attempted to carry his mother out of the home, but to no avail. He and his mother—to whom he gave moving tribute in his early hit single "Mama"—perished in each other's arms on December 10, 1994.

what to buy: A perfect place to begin your exploration of Silk's revelatory vocal power is the budget-priced 20-track compilation Jet Star Reggae Max ♪♪♪♪ (Jet Star, 1996, prod. various), which features a prime selection of singles from a variety of producers, including the magnificent "Lion Heart" (Donovan Germain), the #1 Jamaican single "Zion in a Vision" (Jack Scorpio), the previously hard-to-find U.K. hit "Hello Africa" (Startrail), and for Courtney Cole's Roof International, the aforementioned "Mama," an earnest paean to the person most responsible for Silk's kind-hearted spirituality. It's Growing ♪♪♪♪ (V.P., 1992, prod. Bobby Digital) is Silk's masterful debut, and there is no overlap with the fine Jet Star disc. Soul-restoring cuts like "I Am Vex," "A Friend," and "Commitment" are only the highlights of this cohesive dancehall classic.

what to buy next: Released posthumously, both Silky Mood ♪♪♪½ (V.P., 1995, prod. various) and Journey ♪♪♪½ (V.P., 1998, prod. various) have much to offer Silk's dignified legacy. The former features the Silky One's excellent singles with King Jammy, including the essential "Lord Watch Over Our Shoulders"—a grooving plea to Jah for guidance in tough times—and "So Divine," an uplifting hymn in praise of women that was so out-of-place in the dancehall at the time it was recorded (late '80s) it's no wonder it wasn't released until now. The latter includes early singles interspersed with insightful interviews with Silk from Jamaica's IRIE-FM and JBC Television. These interviews prove that Silk was every bit the vulnerable, culture-proud nobleman his fans believed him to be.

712 silly wizard

the rest:
100% Silk ♪♪♪½ (V.P., 1993)
Live in Concert ♪♪♪ (Power Play, 1994)
Garnett Silk Meets Tony Rebel Inna Dancehall Conference ♪♪♪½ (Heartbeat, 1994)
Love Is the Answer ♪♪♪ (V.P., 1995)
Nothing Can Divide Us ♪♪♪ (V.P., 1995) Collector's Series ♪♪♪ (Penthouse, 1998)

worth searching for: The rare "Silk Chant," an earthy, nyabinghi-charged psalm, is one of the treasures on the superb Digital B Presents Kette Drum ♪♪♪♪ (Digital B, 1995, prod. Bobby Digital). With every song utilizing the classic Kette Drum beat, this is a "one-rhythm" album in the tradition of Rupie Edwards's historic Yamaha Skank LP from 1975, and includes stellar contributions from Beenie Man and Determine ("Kette Drum"), Bounty Killer ("Seek God"), and dub poet Mutaburuka.

influences:
- Bob Marley, Horace Andy, Sugar Minott, Alton Ellis, Jackie Edwards, Delroy Wilson, the Abyssinians, the Ethiopians, Tony Rebel, Yasus Afari, Anthony "Fire" Rochester
- Luciano, Tony Rebel, Yasus Afari, Richie Stephens

Todd Shanker

Silly Wizard

Scottish folk

Formed 1972, in Edinburgh, Scotland. Disbanded 1988.

Andy M. Stewart, vocals, banjo; Phil Cunningham, accordion, keyboards, whistle; John Cunningham, fiddle, vocals; Gordon Jones, acoustic guitar, bodhrán, vocals; Martin Hadden, bass, guitar, vocals.

Characterized as one of the most traditional of all folk bands, Silly Wizard were known for their electric playing of mostly acoustic instruments. John Cunningham's flying fiddle, his brother Phil's amazing accordion, Andy Stewart's stirring vocals, and Gordon Jones's accompanying guitar helped define the band's sound. Rivaling the best of contemporary folk groups, Silly Wizard brought a unique chemistry to the stage, through its members' good-natured humor and technically brilliant musicianship, not to mention a passion for the material and performance themselves. Rivaling Steeleye Span in their focus and aim, Silly Wizard's music was distinctly different from anything else popular on the folk circuit of the day. This was largely due to the group's unquestionably Scottish sound and Stewart's powerful sense of song and ballad. The group's history was tumultuous. It started as a trio (Gordon Jones, Bob Thomas, and John Cunningham), working around Cunningham's schedule, as he was only 14(!) at the time. These three recorded an album with singer Maddy Taylor, but it was never released. Soon after, Stewart joined the group, along with John's younger brother Phil, on accordion. Living in squalid digs and fighting to keep their heads above water, they finally had a major breakthrough with a huge recording offer from a London firm. However, the deal fell through, leaving them to find their own way to the top. They eventually recorded 10 albums and toured all over Europe and America, building a reputation as solid as their musicianship. Despite their ultimate demise, their fiery dance tunes and soulful ballads live on in their excellent recordings.

what to buy: Widely considered the definitive Silly Wizard set, Live Wizardry ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1988, prod. Phil Cunningham) captures the scope and spirit of the band in concert, playing their most-loved tunes. Live performance definitely brings out the best in this group, as shown through such tracks as the moving "The Valley of Strathmore" and the energetic "The Queen of Argyll." Another excellent collection of the band's work is The Best of Silly Wizard ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1985, prod. Silly Wizard), which includes a number of its most popular songs.

what to buy next: With a delightful selection of tunes, So Many Partings ♪♪♪½ (Highway, 1978/Shanachie, 1989, prod. Archie Fisher, Silly Wizard) may show the top mix of ballads and dance pieces in the band's catalog. Standout tracks include Andy Stewart's "The Highland Clearances," a heartfelt lament about the loss of natural landscape in Scotland, and the stirring "Donald McGillavry/O'Neill's Cavalry March." Caledonia's Hardy Sons ♪♪♪ (Highway, 1978/Shanachie, 1989, prod. Silly Wizard, John Zollman) displays the excellent accordion work of Phil Cunningham and includes two of the group's best ballads, "Fhear a Bhata" and "Broom o' the Cowdenknowes."

what to avoid: Golden, Golden and Silly Wizard: Live in America are the two albums from which Live Wizardry was compiled; as the single set is missing only one track from the original pair, it's the better choice for most fans.

the rest:
Wild and Beautiful ♪♪♪ (Highway, 1981/Shanachie, 1982)
Glint of Silver ♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1986)
Kiss the Tears Away ♪♪ (Highway, 1983/Shanachie, 1987)

influences:

- Dougie MacLean, Boys of the Lough, Whistlebinkies, Planxty
- Capercaillie, Tannahill Weavers

see also: Altan, Kevin Burke, Johnny Cunningham, Phil Cunningham, Connie Dover, Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill, Nightnoise, Solas, Andy M. Stewart, David Wilkie

Jo Hughey Morrison

J. Reuben Silverbird

Native American flute and chant

Born in the southwestern USA. Based in the southwestern USA.

J. Reuben Silverbird is a Navajo Apache best known for his album celebrating Native American creation legends, The World in Our Eyes, and as producer and percussionist on the works of his son, flutist Perry Silverbird.

what's available: The World in Our Eyes ♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1991, prod. J. Reuben Silverbird, Ron Russo) combines the venerable (ancient flute melodies and the age-old instrument of human voice raised in chant) with the modern (synthesizer and other more contemporary sounds) to create an intricate aural tapestry. A double CD, it allows pure instrumental listening on one disc, and music interwoven with chant and narration by Silverbird on the other.

influences:

- Early Apache flute players and singers
- Perry Silverbird

see also: Perry Silverbird

Kerry Dexter

Perry Silverbird

Native American flute and chant

Born in the southwestern USA. Based in the southwestern USA.

Perry Silverbird is a Navajo Apache flute player, performing most often on small wooden flutes that he augments with drumming, chant, and sounds from nature.

what's available: The Blessing Way ♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1992, prod. J. Reuben Silverbird) is a meditative collection of original music incorporating natural sounds from the southwest with drumming and chant in flute-based melodies.

worth searching for: The harder-to-find Spirit of Fire ♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies) focuses on the image of purity, with flute melodies inspired by Native American conceptions of the title element.

influences:

- J. Reuben Silverbird, Steve Roach

see also: J. Reuben Silverbird

Kerry Dexter

Terrance Simien /The Mallet Playboys

Zydeco, New Orleans R&B

Born September 3, 1965, in Mallet, LA, USA. Based in Lousiana, USA.

A fast-paced, hard-driving approach has made accordion player and vocalist Terrance Simien a leader in the new breed of southwest Louisiana's zydeco music. Best known as co-writer of two songs performed with his band the Mallet Playboys in the film The Big Easy, Simien has continued to attract attention with his dance-inspiring style. Inheriting his love of music from his mother, who sang with the choir at St. Ann's Catholic Church, Simien studied jazz and classical trumpet at Lawtell Elementary School. However, his interests in zydeco didn't develop until he attended dances as a teenager. Acquiring a single-row diatonic accordion for his 15th birthday, Simien taught himself to play the squeezebox. Forming the Mallet Playboys in 1981, Simien sharpened his skills by playing church dances and zydeco clubs including Slim's Y-Ki-Ki in Opelousas, Louisiana. A turning point came when the band was chosen to perform at the 1984 World's Fair in New Orleans. That led to a booking in Washington, D.C., and before long Simien and the band were touring throughout the U.S. When Paul Simon came to Louisiana in search of zydeco musicians to provide a stylistic counterpoint to the African sounds on his album Graceland, Simien and the Mallet Playboys were one of the outfits he auditioned. Although Simon chose Rockin' Dopsie instead, he produced and sang harmony on a recording session for the group; a single from the session, "You Used to Call Me," was later released. An appearance at the Lone Star Cafe in New York, on the eve of the Live Aid concert in 1985, attracted an audience that included Simon, Bob Dylan, and Mick Jagger. Two other Rolling Stones, Keith Richard and Ron Wood, took the stage to play with the group. Despite their ongoing popularity, Simien and the Mallet Playboys remain less than prolific as recording artists: Though their first two albums were separated by a relatively reasonable three years, it took nine years from their formation for the initial one to come out, and there has yet to be a third.

what to buy: Terrance Simien and the Mallet Playboys' long-overdue debut album, Zydeco on the Bayou ♪♪♪♪ (Restless, 1990, prod. Dick Landry), was well worth the wait, with Simien reinventing the zydeco of Louisiana's Cajun country as turbo-charged dance music.

what to buy next: With guest appearances by pianist Art Neville and the Meters, There's Room for Us All ♪♪♪♪ (Black Top, 1993, prod. Daryl Johnson) further showcases Simien's eclectic approach.

influences:

⏮ Clifton Chenier, Boozoo Chavis, the Neville Brothers

⏭ Filé, The Basin Brothers, C. J. Chenier

see also: Rockin' Dopsie, Paul Simon

Craig Harris

Paul Simon

American pop, folk, world-music fusion

Born October 13, 1941, in Newark, NJ, USA. Based in New York, NY, USA.

With an infusion of African rock and roots music on his 1986 album Graceland, Paul Simon rejuvenated a career dulled by too much reliance on the then-tired California session musician scene. As stunning as the album was, Simon was criticized for being a post-colonial exploiter of Third World music, a charge similar to what George Gershwin faced when he used black American music as the inspiration for works such as Porgy and Bess. Unlike Gershwin, Simon gave credit to the musicians who helped him write the songs. In turn, the musicians who played with Simon, particularly Joseph Shabalala, leader of Ladysmith Black Mambazo, expressed gratitude to him for opening doors to the lucrative American market. Ladysmith most likely would never have had the opportunity to record a Life Savers commercial without Graceland. (Okay, that's a dubious distinction; but the album and its tours—spotlighting South African acts not just as backup players but as artists in their own right—got and held Stateside attention for world music like never before.) Coming as it did in the waning days of apartheid, the popularity of Graceland helped Americans put a face on the struggle in South Africa; even Nelson Mandela eventually complimented Simon on his work.

In fact, a quick look at Simon's career shows that Graceland was no sudden gimmick from a fame-deprived former hitmaker, but was the result of years of interest in other music besides American pop. On their first album in 1966, Simon & Garfunkel's arrangement of "Benedictus," an ancient church chant, anticipated the kind of genre-bending that defines today's world music. Simon's English lyrics to "El Condor Pasa" helped turn that 18th-century Peruvian melody into a hit on the pop charts and introduced many Americans to Andean sounds. His solo career, which began in 1972, continued this fascination with such tunes as the Peruvian-inflected "Duncan" and a venture into reggae with "Mother and Child Reunion." Later, his blandest period was redeemed by jump-out tracks with a "world" view, like the strongly Latin-influenced "Late in the Evening." Even the gospel stylings of "Love Me Like a Rock" and "Slip Sliding Away," though deriving from these shores, are part of his round-the-world mentality. Musicians are influenced by what they hear, and Simon's ears apparently had been wide open for a long time.

what to buy: Graceland ♪♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1986, prod. Paul Simon) captures the golden moment of an aging pop veteran being inspired and uplifted by the sounds of Africa. The rhythms and melodies provided by the Pan-African group of musicians loosened Simon's tongue for some of the best lyrics of his career. For a world-music novice, this is the jumping-off point to albums by the likes of Ladysmith Black Mambazo, King Sunny Adé, Hugh Masekela, and Miriam Makeba. Remember, a back-and-forth interchange between American and African pop has been one of the driving forces of world-music growth.

what to buy next: Rhythm of the Saints ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1990, prod. Paul Simon) and Songs from the Capeman ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1997, prod. Paul Simon, Oscar Hernandez, Roy Halee) aren't at all as revelatory as Graceland and don't hold up as well. Simon's intellectualism takes over and saps the energy of the music—a promising fusion with Brazilian sounds in the case of Saints and a less-satisfying blend of theater and Puerto Rican music on Capeman. Better to pick up Paul Simon ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1972, prod. Paul Simon, Roy Halee), which features "Mother and Child Reunion," "Duncan," and the Latin-flavored "Me and Julio Down by the Schoolyard," or Live Rhymin' ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1974, prod. Phil Ramone), which includes instrumental support by the Peruvian group Urubamba and vocals by the Dixie Hummingbirds, to hear a lively precursor of the spirit of collaboration that made Graceland a joy.

what to avoid: From the perspective of a world-music buyer, the rest of Simon's mostly solid catalog would be of little interest except for occasional flashes of international influence. However, if you enjoy Simon as a pop star, the listless Hearts and Bones ♪ (Warner Bros., 1983, prod. various) is the nadir, followed closely by One-Trick Pony ♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1980, prod. Paul Simon, Phil Ramone), even though it contains the wonderful Latin-tinged hit "Late in the Evening," one of Simon's best numbers ever.

the rest:

There Goes Rhymin' Simon ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1973)
Still Crazy After All These Years ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1975)
Negotiations and Love Songs ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1980)
Paul Simon's Concert in the Park ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1991) 1964/1993 ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1993) worth searching for: Paul Simon: The Collection ♪♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1991, prod. various), a three-volume Japanese survey, includes a live set from the Graceland tour in addition to Simon's hits.

influences:

◀◀ Joseph Shabalala, Tao Ea Matsekha, Clifton Chenier, Milton Nascimento, Youssou N'Dour, Everly Brothers, Bob Dylan

▶▶ James Taylor, Jackson Browne, Mary Chapin Carpenter

see also: Marc Anthony, Ruben Blades, Ladysmith Black Mambazo, Los Incas, Miriam Makeba, Hugh Masekela, Olodum, Rockin' Dopsie, Terrance Simien

Salvatore Caputo

Talvin Singh

Ethno-techno fusion

Born 1970, in London, England. Based in London, England.

Born in London to Indian parents, Singh's music is a product of both nature and nurture. He began studying Indian classical music at the age of six, and by the age of eight had begun serious study on the tabla drum. However, growing up in Leytonstone, the young musician was surrounded by the sounds of electro-funk, punk, and hip-hop, and was soon accompanying a local Asian breakdancing crew by playing tablas along with programmed drum-machine beats. Singh left for India at the age of 16 to study tabla in earnest, but soon rebelled again the strict, closed-minded attitudes of the classical community. Returning to Britain in the late '80s, Singh soon found himself in high demand as a sideman, working with a diverse cast of artists ranging from Sun Ra and the Indigo Girls to Massive Attack and Future Sounds of London, and backing Siouxsie & the Banshees on the first Lollapalooza tour in 1991. In 1995 Singh founded "Anokha," a club in London where techno DJs and Asian punk bands mixed comfortably with Singh's blend of Indian bhangra dance music, drum 'n' bass, and tabla breakbeats. Singh has been a sought-after remixer and producer ever since (Björk's "Possibly Maybe" from the remix album Telegram being one high-profile example), and he recently started his own label, Omni Records.

what's available: Although slightly overrated on the whole, Singh's compilation Anokha: Sounds of the Asian Underground ♪♪♪½ (Quango, 1997, prod. Talvin Singh) was an imaginative introduction to an exotic techno subculture few outside of London even knew existed. Singh is only credited with composing two tracks, but one of those, "Jaan," soon found its way into the mainstream via its use in a highly visible TV commercial for Philips recordable CD players. His proper solo debut, OK ♪♪♪♪½ (Island, 1998, prod. Talvin Singh), was far more impressive for its seamless fusion of styles ranging from drum 'n' bass and ambient techno to Indian classical. Here, Singh's formidable tabla talents are on fine display, giving the album a distinctly ethnic feel whose appeal is only enhanced by appearances from Japanese avant-gardist Ryuichi Sakamoto on flute, sarangi (bowed string instrument) master Ustad Sultan Khan, and the stirring strings of the Madras Philharmonic Orchestra, which are put to great use on the dazzling opener, "Traveler."

influences:

◀◀ Zakir Hussain, Ravi Shankar, Transglobal Underground, Pandit Kamalesh Maitra

▶▶ State of Bengal, Asian Dub Foundation

see also: Michael Brook, Ryuichi Sakamoto

Bret Love

Sintesis

Afrocubano, ethno-rock

Formed 1976, in Cuba. Based in Cuba.

Carlos Alfonso, lead vocals, bass; Ele Valdés, lead vocals, keyboards; Fidel García, lead vocals, percussion, keyboards; Equis Alfonso, keyboards; Esteban Puebla, keyboards; Victor Navarrete, guitar; Raul Pineda, drums. Past members have included: José Bustillo, guitar; Frank Padilla, drums; Roberto Vincaino, bata drums; Lazaro Ros, vocals; Lucia Huergo, vocals, flute, sax, keyboards; Joel Drich, percussion; José Leonardo Angel, percussion; Oney Cumbá, percussion; Madonna Alonso, vocals. (All members are from Cuba.)

Evolved out of vocal group Tema IV, Sintesis fuses traditional Santería (Afro-Cuban ritual) chanting and drumming with synthesized rock and pop textures. The combination has made them one of Cuba's most popular bands and kept individual members in session demand, lead singers Carlos Alfonso and Ele Valdés turning up on salsa star Adalberto Alvarez's 1993 hit "Dale Como E." Though they've toured internationally, Sintesis had the embargo to thank for not visiting the U.S. until 1997, when they cut the album Orishas in California.

what to buy: Highly acclaimed though it may be, Ancestros ♪♪♪½ (QbaDisc, 1987, prod. Carlos Alfonso, Lucia Huergo) doesn't date well due to its tired '80s production and reliance on synthesized textures. Nevertheless, the band's songs are rather special, chants and prayers sung in the Nigerian Yoruba language to Santería deities such as Yewa, mistress of the world of death, and Elegua, lord of the crossroads (and you thought all this time it was Robert Johnson). Playing not so much world music as netherworld music, Sintesis finds the right balance on the excellent follow-up Ancestros 2 ♪♪♪♪½ (QbaDisc, 1994, prod. Carlos Alfonso), structured from beginning to end as an oru, or rite, for their pagan gods. Whatever their subject matter the songs are quite catchy, leaving little chance these gods will come knocking, since the music's sweet temperament is a perfect talisman.

what to buy next: Orishas ♪♪♪½ (Milan Latino, 1997, prod. Carlos Alfonso) continues the band's formula, a highly integrated fusion of devotional and dancefloor rhythms.

worth searching for: El Hombre Extraño ♪♪♪♪ (Artex, 1993, prod. Carlos Alfonso) is a collaborative effort with lyrics and vocals by pioneer of the socially conscious nueva trova ("new ballad") movement Silvio Rodríguez.

influences:
Tito Puente, Santería, Tema IV

see also: Silvio Rodríguez, Lazaro Ros

Bill Ellis

Sister Carol

Reggae

Born Carole Theresa East, 1959, in Kingston, Jamaica. Based in Brooklyn, NY, USA.

Though as notable as an actress—particularly in some of Jonathan Demme's late-'80s comedies—as for her work in reggae, Sister Carol's music career predated her acting by a good 10 years. Hooking up with the star of reggae's "dancehall" variant, Brigadier Jerry, she adopted his style of toasting (reggae rapping) . . . for a while. She eventually grew tired of the dancehall scene, telling Tom Weber in Reggae Island (Da Capo Books, 1998), "People taking off their clothes on stage—it got to that point where it was getting unbearable to everybody." As a musical postscript, she would add in her own song "Sellout" from the Lyrically Potent album, "I'm not one of these and I'm not one of those/Can't pay me fi go take off mi clothes/My body parts should not be exposed." She came to Brooklyn and started to work on a hybrid, splicing the roots and righteousness of the proto-reggae "rocksteady" with the riddims of dancehall. Demme saw her performing with the legendary Judy Mowatt and cast her to act in several of his films, including "Married to the Mob" and "Something Wild." This raised her profile enormously—with her parallel appearances on the soundtracks not hurting what would become her signature career.

what to buy: On Jah Disciple ♪♪♪♪ (RAS, 1989), one of her livest-sounding albums, Carol plays to her strengths and avoids the weaknesses that plague some of her other releases. Said strengths are a combination of toasting and singing over the roots grooves, a winning way that starts with "Ram the Party" and runs through her tribute to Bob Marley, "Get It Straight Africans." Even the tunes straight off the dancehall tip, like "Lost in Space," have a conscious charm. "Potential" reworks "Reggae Gone International" from Black Cinderella (see below). And how can you not be amazed by any record with a song like "Intelligence," whose inspirational verse instructs, "They taught me trigonometry to find the content/Studied algebra to find the coefficient"?

what to buy next: Again proving as able a singer as she is a toaster—especially when she moves effortlessly between the two on "Lovers Rock Style"—Sister Carol successfully works both sides of the old and new sounds of Jamaica on Mother Culture ♪♪♪½ (RAS, 1991, prod. Carol East, D. Wauchope). She even borders on mainstream R&B with "B Who U R," a tune that might have mainstreamed her on a label with promotion muscle in that world. Some of the backing tracks, though, do not have as much muscle as Carol's performances. On the somewhat-earlier Black Cinderella ♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1984, prod. Hyman "Papa Life" Wright, Percy Chin) Carol mixes her roots and rap, and a pretty good singing voice as well. What weighs this record down are tunes like "No Way No Better Than Yard," with its somnolent band and reliance on the old dancehall cadence. At about 15 beats-per-minute faster, "Reggae Gone International" would be inspirational, not a drag. On the other hand, "Dedicated to Bob Marley," with little snippets from his catalog done inna dancehall stylee, is fun, as is "My Children," a toast based approximately on the children's ditty "This Old Man." Casting from children's traditional to adult contemporary, she lifts the nice, sprightly little tune of "Jah Is Mine" from the Carpenters' "On Top of the World." Carol earned a Best Reggae Record Grammy nomination for Lyrically Potent ♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1996, prod. Carol East, Dean Wauchope/Kariang Productions). Here she toasts far more than she sings. "Can't Stop Reggae" wanders into hip-hop, but most of the album comes off more like dub poetry (reggae's spoken-word form) than dancehall. It helps that the recording has spank and spunk, with a punchier band and mix than any of her others. With guest artists like ska pioneer Ernest Ranglin and dancehall groundbreaker Sugar Minott, and production that falls just short of dub, this album is not only lyrically potent, but musically potent too. In fact, one track is just dub (the sonically manipulated reggae mutation), a move Sister Carol had yet to make despite her dancehall background. "Milk and Honey" fuses reggae and acid jazz for its backing track. No slackness there. Call Mi Sister Carol ♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1994, prod. various) mostly features Carol toasting, continuing to avoid slackness (dancehall slang for sexual explicitness) by stressing values of education, universal suffrage, and of course Jah Rastafari. She still takes opportunities like the "Human Nature" riff in "Ital Jacuzzi" to show off her singing voice.

what to avoid: Potent Dub ♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997, prod. Carol East), the dub version of Lyrically Potent, has tracks like "Natty Congo Dub" that show what made the album so successful. On the other hand, such selections as "Strong and Fit Dub" are merely repetitive. Only "Ras Dub" and "Who the Dub Fit" really make interesting use of the echo and effects that are the genre's trademark.

the rest:
Isis—The Original Womb-Man N/A (Tuff Gong International, 1999)

influences:
⏪ Brigadier Jerry, Linton Kwesi Johnson

see also: Sugar Minott, Judy Mowatt, Ernest Ranglin

Hank Bordowitz

Six Nations Women Singers

Traditional Native American (Seneca, Onondaga, Cayuga)

Formed 1968, in the Six Nations Community, NY, USA. Based in the Six Nations Community, NY, USA.

Charlene Bomberry, vocals; Sadie Buck, vocals; Betsy Buck, vocals; Pat Hess, vocals; Janice G. Martin, vocals; Jaynane Burning, vocals. (All members are from USA.)

The Six Nations Women Singers are members of the Seneca, Onondaga, and Cayuga tribes of upper New York state, and have been singing together at dances and religious and social functions for more than 30 years. According to acclaimed singer-songwriter Joanne Shenandoah of the Oneida Nation, women have always been the spiritual backbone of the Six Nations, and much of the tribes' teachings have been passed down by their female members.

what's available: Native music poses unique problems for listeners unfamiliar with its underlying culture. Like the qawwals (devotional singers) of Pakistan, Native Americans use vocables—syllables that are "meaningless" on a conscious level—in an attempt to express the inexpressible, usually the unity of the human spirit with the greater spirit some call God. On We Will All Sing ♪♪♪♪ (SOAR, 1996, prod. Tom Bee) the Six Nations Women Singers touch that spirit, with rousing social songs that feature a powerful lead singer backed by the slightly dissonant harmonies of the ensemble, in the manner of the well-regarded Bulgarian Women's Choir. All the melodies are strong, and one—"Yo Ho O Ho"—sounds uncannily like Steven Foster's "Camptown Races," which raises intriguing questions about that better-known song's possible origins.

influences:
⏪ Traditional Native singing styles of the Six Nations

⏩ Yoko Ono, Don Cherry

j. poet

Sixteen Ninety-One

See: The Bothy Band

SKAndalous All-Stars

Ska

Formed 1996, in New York, NY, USA. Based in New York, NY, USA.

Vic Ruggiero, keyboards, vocals; T. J. Scanlon, guitar; Marcus Geard, bass; Joe Ferry, guitar, percussion; Ara Babajian, drums; Greg Robinson, trombone; Doug Dubrosky, saxophone, vocals; Donna Lupie, vocals; Nathan Breedlove, trumpet; Dan Dulin, trumpet; Brendog, guitar; Britt Savage, vocals; Chris "Skunk" Hanson, vocals.

Members of such punk and ska bands as the Skatalites, Mephiskapheles, Ruder Than You, and the Slackers converge for a clever if thin concept: interpret rock hits as ska tunes.

what to buy: Hit Me ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997, prod. Joe Ferry) has a few clever adaptations—Nirvana's "Lithium" and Radiohead's "Creep" work best—but the gimmick wears quickly. Living Colour fans take note: guest vocalist Corey Glover sings not on the All-Stars' rendition of "Cult of Personality" but on the Stevie Wonder classic "Higher Ground."

what to buy next: Punk Steady ♪♪ (Shanachie, 1998, prod. Joe Ferry) is more of the same, with the Camper Van Beethoven parody "Take the Skinheads Bowling" not even mildly ironic. Better than hearing a wedding band cover such material, but not by much.

the rest:
Age of Insects N/A (Shanachie, 1999)

influences:
⏪ Dread Zeppelin, Perfect Thyroid

Bill Ellis

Skara Brae

See: The Bothy Band

The Skatalites

Ska

Formed 1963, in Kingston, Jamaica; several disbandings and reunions since.

Variable membership over many years, including: Tommy McCook, trumpet, tenor sax; Roland Alphonso, tenor sax; Don Drummond (died 1969), trombone; Jackie Mittoo, keyboards; Jah Jerry Haines, guitar; Lloyd Brevette, bass; Ernest Ranglin, guitar; Johnny "Dizzy" Moore, flugelhorn, trumpet; Lester Sterling, alto sax; Lloyd Nibbs, drums, percussion.

Seldom have so many done so much for so short a time as the Skatalites. The prototypical band of the prototypical Jamaican sound, their very name heralded the galloping ska rhythm that would mutate in due course into reggae and resurface in its original form to fire youth-music movements of its own, from the late-'70s "two-tone" British invasion of bands like the Specials and Madness, to the '90s "third wave" skaquake of Stateside punk bands like Rancid, Goldfinger, and too many more to mention.

The Skatalites

Formed in 1963, this all-star congregation of Jamaica's top musicians had more hit songs than any other group in the nation's history, leaving behind such classics as "Guns of Navarone," "Man in the Street," "Don Cosmic," "Yard Broom," "Don D Lion," "Confucious," "Lucky Seven," and "Musical Communion" for starters. Tenor saxophonists Tommy McCook and Roland Alphonso teamed up with the brilliant but mad musical genius trombonist Don Drummond, and 16-year-old keyboard wonder Jackie Mittoo, to form this legendary group that also included Jah Jerry Haines on guitar and the great Lloyd Brevette on bass. The outfit's almost telepathic tightness goes back to an earlier apprenticeship of most members in the Eric Deans Orchestra in the 1950s, not to mention a common musical tutelage at the esteemed Alpha Boys School a decade before that.

The Skatalites' 18-month existence was a force of nature that left nary a major venue of the time untouched—legend even had it that one young lady became so enthralled by the band's miracles of invention she literally danced herself to death at a concert. Sadly, there was nothing apocryphal about Drummond's murder of his girlfriend in 1965, after which he was institutionalized until his death by suicide four years later. The crime also signaled the first end of the Skatalites, whose members split into a number of illustrious successor bands and solo careers. The outfit's first reunion came on July 7, 1984, when they performed at the definitive annual Reggae Sunsplash festival. Since their most recent rebirth in the early '90s, the Skatalites have resumed touring and recorded such albums as Ska-Voovie, Hi-Bop Ska, and Greetings from Skamania. Ska and its namesake live on.

what to buy: With 32 tracks spread over two CDs, the early recordings of the Skatalites are sampled on Foundation Ska ♪♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1996, prod. Clement "Coxsone" Dodd, Arthur "Duke" Reid). In addition to instrumental tracks, the album includes several songs by Jackie Opel and the Wailers, two of many equally historical names with which the Skatalites shared stage and studio.

what to buy next: Ska after Ska after Ska ♪♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1998, prod. Arthur "Duke" Reid) includes more early recordings by the Skatalites in a variety of incarnations.

best of the rest:
Ska-Voovie ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1993)
Hi-Bop Ska ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1994)
Greetings from Skamania ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1996)
Authentic Ska ♪♪♪½ (Musicrama, 1997)
Ball of Fire ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1998) Stretching Out ♪♪♪♪ (ROIR, 1998)

influences:
⏮ Dennis "Ska" Campbell, the Upsetters
⏭ The Wailers, the Maytals, the Melodians see also: Alton Ellis, Bob Marley, Jackie Mittoo, Lee "Scratch" Perry, Ernest Ranglin, the Techniques

Todd Shanker and Craig Harris

Skyedance

See: Alasdair Fraser

Abdel Ali Slimani

Rai, worldbeat

Born in El Anasser, Algeria. Based in London, England.

Abdel Ali Slimani is Algeria's unofficial musical ambassador to England. Khaled and others have made quite an impact with the large Algerian expatriate community in Paris, but Slimani is our man in London. Slimani's extended hollers and deep-chested elisions of notes will be familiar to fans of Jah Wobble's Invaders of the Heart, on whose records he sings in French and Arabic. Slimani first performed in Algeria—playing guitar at local soccer matches—but was not able to make a living as a musician until he moved to Paris, and later London, where he was discovered by Wobble, the British post-punk bassist and world-music impresario.

what's available: Slimani has only recorded one album under his own name: Mraya ♪♪♪½ (RealWorld, 1995, prod. John Reynolds, Jah Wobble), which features Wobble's heavy bass and vocals by Sinéad O'Connor and Middle Eastern diva Natacha Atlas (of Transglobal Underground fame). "Mraya" means "mirror," and the album is Slimani's self-portrait, expressing his devotion to his family on "Laziza," "Habibti," and "Yasmin"; his country on "Alger"; and its soccer team on "Hadi." As a member of Jah Wobble's Invaders of the Heart, Slimani can be heard singing on Take Me to God ♪♪♪ (Island, 1994, prod. Jah Wobble, Mark Ferda), most notably on "I'm an Algerian," from which his resonant, nasal tenor is not soon forgotten.

influences:
⏮ Khaled

see also: Khaled, Sinéad O'Connor, Transglobal Underground

David Poole

Sly & Robbie

Reggae

Formed 1974, in Kingston, Jamaica. Based in Kingston, Jamaica.

Lowell Fillmore "Sly" Dunbar (born May 10, 1952, in Kingston, Jamaica), drums; Robbie Shakespeare (born September 27, 1953, in Kingston, Jamaica), bass.

Sly & Robbie—aptly a.k.a. "the Riddim Twins"—are not only reggae's leading rhythm section, but have been the genre's most important producers and record executives since the mid-1970s. In addition to cutting several albums of their own, the duo has overseen scores of influential recordings for other artists. While the best known are those for such reggae names as Jimmy Cliff, Gregory Isaacs, Black Uhuru, Max Romeo, and Desmond Dekker, the duo's credits outside the usual reggae realm include Bob Dylan, Carly Simon, Mick Jagger, Joan Armatrading, Joe Cocker, Robert Palmer, Grace Jones, and Ian Drury.

Dunbar, whose first drum kit was composed of empty food cans, performed in the late-'60s reggae bands the Yardbrooms and the Collins Brothers, and the early-'70s group Skin, Flesh & Bones. Shakespeare had studied bass under Aston "Family Man" Barrett, then a member of the Hippy Boys and later of the Upsetters and the Wailers. Shakespeare in fact replaced Barrett in the Hippy Boys and played bass on Bob Marley's recordings "Concrete Jungle" and "Stir It Up."

Although they had met each other while playing at different clubs in downtown Kingston, Dunbar and Shakespeare didn't play together until the mid-1970s, when they performed on several sessions produced by Bunny Lee. Their first break came in 1976, when they played on Peter Tosh's album Legalize It and toured with Tosh's band. They remained with him until 1979, contributing to four additional albums—Equal Rights, Bush Doctor, Mystic Man, and Wanted Dread and Alive—and enjoying their global breakthrough as producers with Tosh's 1978 collaboration with Mick Jagger "(Keep on Walking) Don't Look Back."

During this time Dunbar and Shakespeare had stayed active in a variety of outside projects. After Dunbar toured England with the Mighty Diamonds, he and Shakespeare formed a dub band, the Revolutionaries. In 1978, the pair launched their own company, Taxi Productions, and formed a studio band, the Taxi All-Stars. Their first production effort under the new banner resulted in the chart-topping hit "Soon Forward" by Gregory Isaacs. Then, shortly after signing a worldwide distribution deal with Island Records, they produced their first albums—Red by Black Uhuru and Nightclubbing by Grace Jones. They subsequently toured with Black Uhuru and produced the band's albums Showcase, Sinsemilla, Chill Out, and The Dub Factor. Later came work on Dylan's album Infidels in 1983, and collaborations with producer Bill Laswell including another Mick Jagger project, his solo album She's the Boss. Dunbar and Shakespeare would then work with such hip-hop artists as KRS-One, Queen Latifah, and Young MC. The duo continued to record albums of their own as well, including the hip-hop disc Silent Assassin and Murder She Wrote, which featured a new style of reggae that they dubbed "bam bam." In 1999 they loomed large in a later-generation form of Caribbean-influenced sonic manipulation through a collaboration with British electronica auteur Howie B.

what to buy: Rhythm Killers ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1987, prod. Sly Dunbar, Robbie Shakespeare, Bill Laswell) is a super-funky session with guests including Shinehead (vocals), Bernie Worrell (piano), Bootsy Collins (guitar, vocals), and Henry Threadgill (flute, sax, vibraphone, and melodica). In addition to several originals, the album features steaming-hot renditions of the Ohio Players "Fire" and Allen Toussaint's "Yes We Can Can."

what to buy next: Dunbar and Shakespeare's first production collaboration with Bill Laswell, Language Barrier ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1985, prod. Sly Dunbar, Robbie Shakespeare, Bill Laswell) is a dub masterpiece with guest appearances by Bob Dylan, Herbie Hancock, and Afrika Bambaataa.

best of the rest:
Sly, Wicked and Slick ♪♪♪½ (Virgin, 1979)
Sly and Robbie Present Taxi ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1981)
Sly-go-ville ♪♪♪ (Island, 1982)
Kings of Reggae ♪♪♪ (Keystone, 1983)
Crucial Reggae Driven by Sly and Robbie ♪♪♪½ (Mango, 1983)
A Dub Experience ♪♪♪ (Island, 1983)
Electro Reggae Vol. 1 ♪♪♪ (Island, 1986)
Taxi Connection: Live in London ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1987)
Sly & Robbie Present Gregory Isaacs ♪♪♪½ (RAS, 1988)
The Summit ♪♪♪½ (Greensleeves, 1988)
Silent Assassin ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1989)
DJ Riot ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1990)
Murder She Wrote ♪♪♪ (Island, 1992)
1978–90—Sly & Robbie Hits ♪♪♪½ (Sonic Sounds, 1993)
Sly & Robbie Present Mykall Rose ♪♪♪ (Taxi, 1995)
The Punishers ♪♪♪ (Island, 1996)
Hail Up the Taxi ♪♪♪ (Island, 1996)
Mambo Taxi ♪♪♪ (VP, 1997)
Friends ♪♪♪½ (WEA/Elektra Entertainment, 1998)
Reggae Dance Hall ♪♪♪½ (CAS Records, 1998)
Sly & Robbie Present: The Late Great Jackie Mittoo ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino U.K., 1998)
Drum & Bass Strip to the Bone by Howie B ♪♪♪♪ (Palm Pictures, 1999)

influences:
◀◀ King Tubby, Clement "Sir Coxsone" Dodd, Arthur "Duke" Reid ▶▶ Roots Radics, Big Audio Dynamite

see also: Abyssinians, Black Uhuru, Johnny Clarke, the Congos, Culture, Manu Dibango, Gregory Isaacs, Ini Kamoze, Bill Laswell, Barrington Levy, Luciano, Mighty Diamonds, Sugar Minott, Jackie Mittoo, Pablo Moses, Maxi Priest, the Techniques, Toots & the Maytalls, Peter Tosh, Shinehead

Craig Harris

Christina Smith & Jean Hewson

Newfoundland fiddle and song

Formed 1995, in St. John's, Newfoundland, Canada. Based in Newfoundland, Canada.

Christina Smith, fiddle, cello, viola da gamba, backing vocals; Jean Hewson, lead vocals, guitar. (Both members are from Canada.)

Christina Smith and Jean Hewson both bring classical training and extensive experience with other styles to the music of their home region, the windswept Atlantic coast of Canada. Influenced by the French, Scots, Breton, Irish, and English peoples who settled in its harbors and rocky landscapes and by the sailors who flowed through its ports, Newfoundland music is the very definition of fusion. It is a distinct tradition though, and one that Hewson and Smith, each of whom are qualified music teachers and maintain extensive schedules of festival workshops and individual music instruction, are committed to sharing with the next generation.

what's available: Like Ducks! ♪♪♪ (Borealis, 1998, prod. Sandy Morris, Jean Hewson, Christina Smith) is a lively and engaging album that includes instrumental and vocal works of Newfoundland style and a version of Hank Williams Sr.'s "I'm So Lonesome I Could Cry" that makes it seem right at home among its Celtic-based neighbors.

influences:
◀◀ Emile Benoit, Rufus Guinchard, Fairport Convention, Bothy Band, Kevin Burke, Shin'ichi Suzuki

Kerry Dexter

Leo Soileau

Cajun

Born January 19, 1904, in Ville Platte, LA, USA. Died August 2, 1980, in Ville Platte, LA, USA.

Leo Soileau was one of the most popular bandleaders and recording artists in Cajun music from the late 1920s to 1940s. He grew up learning fiddle from Dennis McGee and Sady Courville, performed old-time fiddle duets with his cousin, and made two records that show him in command of this traditional form. He was also a visitor at the home of master accordionist Adam Fontenot, father of Canray Fontenot and good friend of Amédée Ardoin. Soileau's recordings with accordionists Moise Robin and Mayuse LeFleur from this period are regarded as classics, and many of the songs continue to be performed. But Soileau is remembered for neither the old-style fiddle tunes nor the accordion duets. Instead, he began to follow the string-band style that was being popularized by the Hackberry Ramblers. His band, the Three Aces (later the Four Aces and finally the Rhythm Boys), played Cajun tunes in an almost hillbilly style, with Soileau's fiddle never quite escaping its roots in the countryside outside of Ville Platte. This music and the rolling quality of Soileau's fiddle-bow strokes captivated younger practitioners like Dewey Balfa, who would carry the mark Soileau made even further in canonical contributions of their own.

what to buy: Early American Cajun Music: The Early Recordings of Leo Soileau ♪♪♪♪♪ (Yazoo, 1999, prod. Richard Nevins) brings together almost all of Soileau's formative sides on one CD. The sound quality is as good as you can expect from remastered 78s, the notes by Ann Savoy are superb, and the music is classic. Included are all four of Soileau's recordings with accordionist Mayuse LaFleur—who was shot dead shortly after the session—as well as all those with accordionist Moise Robin. An extra bonus is the two tracks Soileau made with his cousin Alius Soileau, which harken back to the classic fiddle duets of Dennis McGee and Sady Courville.

what to buy next: Pioneer Cajun Fiddler (1929–37) ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1993, prod. Chris Strachwitz) includes a couple of the classic Soileau and Robin tunes ("La Valse de Josephine" and "Demain c'est pas Dimanche"), but the rest of this release is all the rough and smoking string-band sound of Soileau and his Rhythm Boys. What's amazing is the interplay between his guitar players and the drummer, which sounds at times more like a Caribbean or African band than a hillbilly group.

worth searching for: The anthology Cajun String Bands: Cajun Breakdown ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1997, prod. Chris Strachwitz) includes four great cuts by Leo and his musical Aces. This includes the definitive version of the "Port Arthur Blues."

jamaican music 11: sonia pottinger

Sonia Pottinger was not only Jamaica's first female music producer, but, until the 1980s, its only one. She is also one of its all-time finest and most successful producers, period, her coveted catalog on many labels sanctified with an unmatched stateliness and rapture. She may trail the great Coxsone Dodd and Duke Reid in historical impact and output, but her slow-cooked productions were always suffused with feeling and unbroken in quality. Her vision was beholden to no one, as she all but ignored the trends sweeping the sound-systems and dancehalls; her simple axiom was to produce only music she loved.

In 1966, "Mrs. Pottinger" opened the Tip Top Record Shop in Kingston and released her first single. With the advent of rocksteady, Mrs. P. let loose with a batch of sure-shots that are essential listening for any reggae lover—or anyone interested in just feeling fine. Many of her charges' classics can be found on the priceless compilation Musical Feast: Mrs. Pottinger's High Note and Gayfeet Labels ♪♪♪♪♪ (Heartbeat). Albeit with a little overlap and inferior sound quality, Put On Your Best Dress: Sonia Pottinger's Rocksteady 1967–68 ♪♪♪♪½ (Attack) adds some glittering gems that are otherwise rare as the Hope Diamond. Nearly all of her rocksteady output is backed by Lynn Taitt & the Jets, an outstanding studio band with a full, blooming sound that was often unfairly overshadowed by the Supersonics and the Soul Vendors. In the '70s Pottinger produced vintage, lilting, fundamentally positive reggae music mixed by one of the most subtle engineers of the time, Errol Brown. The Reggae Train: More Great Hits from the High Note Label ♪♪♪♪♪ (Heartbeat) is a flawless and inspiring collection of landmarks, extended mixes, and rarities. When Duke Reid died in 1974, Mrs. P. was chosen to inherit his historic Treasure Isle studios and catalog. She retired in 1985, but will forever ring in history herself.

Todd Shanker

sol y canto

influences:

- Dennis McGee, Hackberry Ramblers
- Wallace "Cheese" Reed, Michael Doucet, Dewey Balfa, Harry Choates

see also: Amédée Ardoin, Balfa Brothers, Canray Fontenot, Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band

Jared Snyder

Sol y Canto

Latin

Formed 1994, in Boston, MA, USA. Based in Boston, MA, USA.

Rosi Amador, vocals; Brian Amador, guitar, vocals; Edilio Bermudez, bass, vocals (1994); Eugenio Huanca, quena, zampona, vocals (1994); Renato Thomas, conga, bongos, percussion, vocals; Jon Weeks, sax, flute; Eduardo Tancredi, keyboards, accordion, piano; Fernando Huergo, bass.

Sol y Canto is among the best of the worldbeat/Latin fusion groups to emerge from the vibrant northeastern U.S. international music scene. Fueled by the mixing of dreams and cultures from immigrants and their children, the big cities of New England have become a source for new explorations of heritage music. Husband and wife Brian and Rosi Amador founded Sol y Canto after the breakup of another well-known Latin fusion band to which they both belonged, Flor de Caña.

what's available: Sendero del Sol ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Danilo Perez Jr.) and Sancocho ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1994, prod. Brian Amador) show Sol y Canto exploring influences from Venezuela and other regions of the Latin world as well as the Afro-Antillean chain and other island rhythms. Lead vocalist Rosi Amador is featured on most of the tracks. She has a strong voice and rhythmic sense that anchors the band, whether she's singing in English or Spanish, but these are really ensemble works, with every musician contributing to the sound.

influences:

- Violetta Para, Flor de Caña

Kerry Dexter

Liu Sola

Avant-garde Chinese fusion

Born in China. Based in New York, NY, USA.

Liu Sola, whom one critic has described as "the only Chinese artist who'd qualify to play the New Orleans Jazz Festival," is an eclectic musician whose radically distinctive sound successfully melds seemingly incongruous influences, including Chinese opera, free jazz, funk, blues, and the in-between-notes singing style common to Japanese Noh theater. A graduate of the Composition Department at the Central Conservatory of Music in Beijing, Sola was among China's first generation of university students to emerge during the Cultural Revolution of the mid-'70s. In addition to being an incredibly original vocalist, Sola is also an accomplished composer and author; her song "Shu Li" and her first novella You Have No Choice each won national awards in 1985 and '88, respectively. After representing China at the Seoul Song Festival for the 1988 Olympics, Sola moved to London in response to the massacre in Tiananmen Square and the artistic repression that followed. Embracing the blues on a trip to America in 1989, she collaborated with Memphis-based musicians on what may be the world's first Chinese blues song, "Reborn." By the early '90s she had moved to America full time, collaborating with Bill Laswell, Wu Man, and a variety of jazz, blues, and world-music artists on her groundbreaking debut album Blues in the East. Since then, Sola has divided her time between recording, literary endeavors, and film-, theater-, and dance-scoring activities, with several critically acclaimed books and albums to her credit. A rock opera based on her novella Blue Sky Green Sea was recorded in 1988 with the Chinese Central Symphony Orchestra and a rock band from Hong Kong, but remains unreleased for political reasons.

what to buy: Sola's truly unforgettable singing style, which can range from free-form vocalizing and animated nonsensical emoting that make Yoko Ono look reserved by comparison, to simple folk-like melodies, is definitely an acquired taste. Haunts ♪♪♪♪ (ALSO Productions, 1998, prod. Liu Sola, Fernando Saunders) is easily her most accessible and compelling album to date; an artsy outing on which she largely eschews Chinese traditions in favor of an evocative sound so joyously original it's almost impossible to resist. True to the title, this is a haunting, stripped-to-the-bone album, with varying moods and methods that show Sola exercising considerable restraint. The lack of vocal histrionics allows the subtle textures in her versatile voice to come to the fore on gorgeous tunes like "Witch's Beads" and the title track.

what to buy next: Her debut Western release, Blues in the East ♪♪♪½ (Axiom, 1994, prod. Bill Laswell), is equally memorable but not quite as consistent. With a stellar lineup of musicians that includes organist Amina Claudine Myers, guitarist James Blood Ulmer, bassist Fernando Saunders, drummer Jerome "Bigfoot" Brailey, and saxophonist Henry Threadgill, plus storytelling from the Last Poets' Umar Bin Hassan, the album is a typically eclectic Bill Laswell fusion experiment, but one that doesn't always hit the bullseye. Still, when it does work, on songs like "Boya's Adventures," this radical collusive concept piece is as refreshingly original as anything you're likely to hear.

the rest:

(With Wu Man) China Collage ♪♪♪½ (Avant, 1996)

influences:

- Chinese Opera, Japanese Noh Theater, Yoko Ono, Junior Wells

see also: Bill Laswell, Wu Man

Bret Love

Solas /Seamus Egan

Irish traditional

Formed 1995, in New York, NY, USA. Based in New York, NY, USA.

Seamus Egan, flute, tres, nylon-string guitar, tin whistle, low whistle, uilleann pipes, bodhrán, background vocals; Karan Casey, lead vocals; John Doyle, acoustic guitar, background vocals; Winifred Horan, fiddle, background vocals; John Williams, accordion, concertina, background vocals.

Solas has established itself as one of the top Irish folk groups on either side of the Atlantic. Following the example of Washington's Celtic Thunder, Solas balances male and female contributions as well as instrumental and vocal traditions. Providing the male influence in the New York-based quintet are two All-Ireland champions, accordionist John Williams and multi-instrumentalist Seamus Egan, as well as hard-driving rhythm guitarist John Doyle. Providing the female flavor are fiddler Winifred Horan from Cherish the Ladies and the Sharon Shannon Band and singer Karan Casey, born in Ireland's County Waterford. On the instrumental numbers, Egan and Horan lead the way, pushed through the up-tempo jigs, reels, and hornpipes by Doyle and Williams. On the songs, Casey takes the foreground with her supple soprano, which is framed by her four bandmates, who play with such sympathy they might as well be harmony singers. The linchpin of Solas is Egan, the kid from Philadelphia who won All-Ireland Junior Championships on flute, tenor banjo, tin whistle, and uilleann pipes by the time he was 16—which is also how old he was when his debut solo album appeared in 1985. By age 27 he had released four solo albums, contributed to four soundtracks, recorded with Eileen Ivers, John Whelan, and Living Colour's Vernon Reid, and co-founded Solas. In 1996 he became the youngest musician ever to win the Irish Echo's Traditionalist of the Year award.

what to buy: Solas ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1996, prod. Johnny Cunningham), guided through its paces by Silly Wizard's Johnny Cunningham, immediately established this new American quintet as a major force in Celtic music. The dance tunes combine rhythmic verve and melodic invention, and the songs give the instruments as much expressive room as the vocals. The group proved the best possible setting for Egan's special gifts. On the even better follow-up, Sunny Spells and Scattered Showers ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1997, prod. Johnny Cunningham), Casey manages to make an ancient song, "The Wind that Shakes the Barley," sound as if it had been ripped from today's headlines, and to make a modern feminist anthem, "Vanished Like the Snow," sound as if it had been handed down for generations. The instrumental medleys gallop along with the aggressive energy only a young band can muster.

what to buy next: Egan's debut solo album, Traditional Music of Ireland ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1985, prod. Mick Moloney), showcased the prodigious skills of the 16-year-old multi-instrumental whiz but lacked emotional heft. That would come with the second all-instrumental album, A Week in January ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1990, prod. Mick Moloney, Seamus Egan), whose title track is one of the classics of modern Irish-American folk music. The co-producers achieved a chamber-folk intensity in their arrangements. The Brothers McMullen: Original Motion Picture Soundtrack ♪♪♪♪ (Arista, 1995, prod. Mick Moloney, Seamus Egan) may be the best introduction to Egan's work as it includes the half-dozen best tracks from A Week in January and the five best tracks from When Juniper Sleeps. It also features "I Will Remember You," a song with lyrics and a vocal by Sarah McLachlan based on Egan's "Weep Not for the Memories." The latter tune can also be found on the aforesaid When Juniper Sleeps ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1996, prod. Michael Aharon, Seamus Egan), an album that found Egan collaborating with Horan, Doyle, and Williams, and thus laying the groundwork for Solas. Three Way Street ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1993, prod. Mick Moloney) is a trio album that matches Egan with his two Philadelphia mentors, Moloney and Eugene O'Donnell, in a lovely session of mutual admiration and affection. Egan also produced Karan Casey's debut solo album, Songlines ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1997, prod. Seamus Egan). Though four-fifths of Solas are represented on it, this is very much a solo album, with Casey singing in the spare, understated style of her hero, Dolores Keane. Like her, Casey delivers the lyrics' story with crisp articulation and genuine empathy, and carries the melody in a flush tone with little embellishment. This puts the emphasis where it should be—on the song, not the singer.

the rest:

Words That Remain ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1998)

influences:

- Cherish the Ladies, Celtic Thunder
- Trian, Eileen Ivers, Sharon Shannon

see also: Cherish the Ladies, Johnny Cunningham, Dolores Keane, Mick Moloney, Sharon Shannon, Silly Wizard, Paul Winter

Geoffrey Himes

Songhai

See: Toumani Diabaté

Jo-El Sonnier

French-Cajun accordion

Born October 2, 1946, in Rayne, LA, USA. Based in Louisiana, USA.

Jo-El Sonnier is an internationally known French-Cajun accordionist. He started playing the instrument at the age of three, and by the time he was 13 had already cut his first record—"Tes Yeaux Blues" ("Your Blue Eyes"), which became a regional hit. From 1972–80 Sonnier bounced between Nashville and Los Angeles, establishing himself as a songwriter and studio musician. In 1975 he signed with Mercury Records and scored a few minor hits with "I've Been Around Enough to Know," "Always Late (With Your Kisses)," and "He's Still All Over You." In 1980 he returned to his roots and recorded Cajun Life, which was sung entirely in Acadian French. Sonnier recorded a similar album, Cajun Roots, in 1994. Keeping up his country connections, during the '80s Sonnier penned songs for George Strait, Johnny Cash, Conway Twitty, Loretta Lynn, Emmylou Harris, and John Anderson, and he backed new wave rock icon Elvis Costello on his critically acclaimed country outing King of America. In 1987 Sonnier signed with RCA and cracked the country Top 40 with "Come on Joe." The following year, his "No More One More Time" and Cajun-inflected "Tear-Stained Letter" hit the country Top 10.

what to buy: Cajun Roots ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994, prod. Michael Doucet), which is sung entirely in old-world French, shows Sonnier covering the music of his native Louisiana with style, grace, and expert musicianship—especially when it comes to the artist's accordion playing and powerful tenor. Standout tracks include "Huppes Taiauts" and "La Chere Toute-Toute," which features dazzling guitar/fiddle interplay between Sonnier and Beausoleil's Michael Doucet.

what to buy next: Cajun Life ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1980, prod. Earl Ball, Alex Broussard) shows Sonnier reveling in the traditional Acadian sounds of Louisiana's bayou country.

the rest:

The Complete Mercury Sessions ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1992)
(With Eddy Raven) Cookin' Cajun ♪♪♪ (K-Tel, 1996)
Cajun Pride ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997)

worth searching for: Come On Joe ♪♪♪ (RCA, 1988, prod. Bill Halverson, Richard Bennett) and Have a Little Faith ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1990, prod. Bill Halverson, Richard Bennett, Josh Leo) were Sonnier's two best major-label albums. Come On Joe contains his biggest hits, "No More One More Time" and "Tear-Stained Letter." The hits from Have a Little Faith, "(Blue, Blue, Blue) Blue, Blue" and "If Your Heart Should Ever Roll This Way Again," didn't chart as high, but the album has excellent covers of John Hiatt's "Have a Little Faith in Me" and "I'll Never Get Over You."

influences:

⏮ Iry LeJeune, Amédée Ardoin

⏭ Michael Doucet, Beausoleil, Wayne Toups, Zachary Richard

see also: Beausoleil

Rick Petreycik

Sorten Muld

Danish techno-folk

Formed September, 1995, in Denmark. Based in Aarhus, Denmark.

Ulla Bendixen, vocals; Martin Ottosen, keyboards; Henrik Munch, sound effects; Søren Bendixen, guitar; Thomas Holm, jew's-harp, pipes, frame drum (1995–97); Martin Seeberg, pipes, jew's-harp, frame drum (1997–present); Niels Kiele, percussion; Tommy Nissen, percussion; Johannes Hejl, double bass. (All members are from Denmark.)

Just as Steeleye Span, Fairport Convention, and their colleagues fused traditional British folk styles with psychedelic rock, so does Denmark's Sorten Muld fuse their Scandanavian heritage with modern electronic dance pop. The band's repertoire consists of original treatments of Danish folk ballads; their arrangements surround Ulla Bendixen's breathy soprano voice with a striking blend of keyboards and other electronic effects, for a metallic sheen that's colored by effective use of hurdy-gurdy, various kinds of pipes, and guitars. Sorten Muld's only full CD to date is Sorten Muld Mark II, but at presstime another was planned for release late in 1999. The band has appeared at festivals in Denmark, Germany, and Sweden; they were also nominated in eight categories for the 1998 Danish Grammys, winning the Producer of the Year and Techno Release of the Year prizes.

what's available: Sorten Muld Mark II ♪♪♪♪♪ (Sony/Pladecompagniet, 1997, prod. Sorten Muld) is definitely not your father's folk rock, even though Ulla Bendixen's vocals will remind some of Maddy Prior, Loreena McKennitt, and Enya. Her voice carries most of the melody lines, while electronic keyboards and percussion provide the high-tech rhythm pulse fundamental to late-'90s dance pop. Hurdy-gurdies (unfortunately uncredited) and bagpipes add all sorts of sharp buzzing noises to the overall sound. While that may seem rather avant-garde, the combination works quite well. A very distinctive blend of pretty folk melodies and singing with edgy cyber-rhythms.

worth searching for: Tanz & Folkfest Rudolstadt is a major world/folk/roots festival held annually in Germany. Festival organizers produce a sampler CD from each year's events, and Tanz & Folkfest Rudolstadt '97 (hei-deck, 1997) includes a live version of Sorten Muld's "Venelite" with a slightly different arrangement than the studio track. A bit less high-tech, but with a little more electric guitar riffing and improvisation.

influences:

⏮ Steeleye Span, Hedningarna, Loreena McKennitt, Värttinä

⏭ Garmarna, Afro Celt Sound System, Holderlin Express

Ken Roseman

Mercedes Sosa

South American folk

Born July 9, 1935, in San Miguel de Tucuman, Argentina. Based in Argentina.

Mercedes Sosa has a warm, honeyed alto that conveys pathos, power, and passion in every song she sings. It is one of the most impressive interpretive tools in the world of song, a tonal palette filled with such richness and conviction that Sosa can easily stand in comparison with Cesaria Evora, Edith Piaf, and Ella Fitzgerald. She has used this instrument to sing about love, rural poverty, and politically sensitive topics, earning her the enmity of the generals who ran Argentina during the '60s and '70s. Sosa started her career by winning an amateur talent contest sponsored by the local radio station while still a teenager. By 1962 she was an important member of the loosely organized nueva cancíon ("new song") movement that combined a knowledge of folk forms with a roots-based political stance at odds with the repressive governments in power throughout Latin America. In 1978 Sosa was arrested during a concert where she sang a song condemning powerful land barons and their relationship to their tenant farmers ("When They Have the Land"). The government also enforced a ban on the performance and distribution of Sosa's music within Argentina, forcing the singer to leave her homeland for exile in Europe. After living in Spain and France she returned to Argentina in 1982, and once more took up her career as artistic gadfly and spokesperson for the campesinos. She retired from active performance in 1997.

what to buy: If you could have only one Sosa album then 30 Años ♪♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram Latino, 1994), a 20-song set covering some of her finest material, would be the place to start. In addition to such Sosa standards as "La Maza" and "Al Jardin de la Republica," there is her incredibly moving version of Violeta Parra's "Gracías a la Vida," the tune that became the cornerstone of Sosa's repertoire. When she returned from her exile in Europe Sosa scheduled and performed at the concert memorialized on Mercedes Sosa En Argentina ♪♪♪♪♪ (Philips, 1983/PolyGram Latino, 1992). The result is a stunning portrayal of audience and artist glorying in each other's presence.

what to buy next: Despite the strings that float "Quiero amar mi pais" and "Madre de madres" into easy listening territory, the balance of Vengo A Ofrecer Mi Corazon ♪♪♪♪ (Philips, 1992) features Sosa in arrangements that enhance the singer's efforts to wring every last possible bit of emotion from the lyrics without getting sappy. The title tune became one of her most-requested songs in concert. Sino ♪♪♪♪ (Philips, 1992, prod. Fito Paez, Mercedes Sosa) is from the same vintage and mixes relatively upbeat material like Milton Nascimento's "Encuentros y Despedidas" and the title tune with powerful yet reflective songs including "Honrar la Vida" and "Caruso." Sosa interprets the work of Argentine rocker Charly García on Alta Fidelidad ♪♪♪½ (Mercury, 1998, prod. Say No More), stepping outside the usual folk trappings of her career. Despite her having recorded García's songs on other albums, some listeners may find it a bit weird to hear Sosa within a rock setting. Still, most of these tunes are anthemic responses to the same political repression she faced, and she relates well to the composer's lyrical vision. The result puts Sosa in a more comfortable context for her magnificent voice than would a batch of Chuck Berry-inspired riffs, but it is sometimes an awkward fit no matter how commendable the effort. The charanga-charged "El tuerto y los ciegos" with its echoes of Andean rhythms is probably the most successful arrangement on the album.

what to avoid: In the late '60s and early '70s there were a batch of albums, by a number of artists, that sought to blend Catholic ritual with folk rhythms, including Missa Luba, Misa Criolla, and Sosa's own Cantata Sudamericana ♪ (PolyGram Discos, 1972/Polydor, 1992, prod. Ariel Ramírez). Sosa's vocals are the most interesting thing about this recording; the score attempts to mine elements from all over South America's folk landscape but the composer, Ariel Ramírez, tries too hard to model the piece on the architecture of classical Western European music. Part of the problem is the harpsichord and cheesy organ playing, which bring a touch of Esquivel to the proceedings without the requisite sense of humor. Strictly for Sosa completists.

best of the rest:

Gracías a la Vida ♪♪♪½ (PolyGram Latino, 1994)
Será Posible El Sur ♪♪♪½ (PolyGram Latino, 1994)
Gestos De Amor ♪♪♪½ (PolyGram Latino, 1995)
Oro ♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram Latino, 1996)
Mi Historia ♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram Latino, 1997)
Al Despertar ♪♪♪½ (PolyGram Latino, 1998)

worth searching for: Some of Sosa's finest material has never been released in the United States, including her stunning Mercedes Sosa Interpreta a Atahualpa Yupanqui ♪♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram Ibérica, 1977). Her haunting voice covers a dozen songs closely associated with fellow nueva canción giant Yupanqui, accompanied only by acoustic guitars, bass, and her own drumming. Included in this recital are a wonderful "Piedra y Camino," a poignant "Los Hermanos," and a classic rendition of "Duerme Negrito" that compares favorably with the master's own version.

influences:

⏮ Atahualpa Yupanqui, Violeta Parra, Victor Jara, Milton Nascimento, Pablo Neruda

⏭ Lourdes Perez, Beatriz Montes

see also: Lourdes Perez, Atahualpa Yupanqui

Garaud MacTaggart

Soto Koto Band /Super Eagles /Ifang Bondi

Gumbay, Afropop

Formed 1977, in Bangul, Gambia. Based in Eindhoven, Holland.

Adbel Kabirr, vocals, keyboards, (1977–1991); Ousman Beyai, guitar, bass, keyboards; Alain Eskinasi, keyboards, synthesizer, guitar; Musa Mboob, percussion; Sankung Jobarteh, guitar, percussion; Gerald Valdor, guitar; Paps Touray, vocals (1993–present).

The Gambia is a tiny country on the West African coast, almost completely surrounded by Senegal. Senegalese music tends to dominate Gambian pop, but there are a few Gambian styles that are holding their own, including the eclectic approach of Foday Musa Suso and the "gumbay" of the Soto Koto Band, founded by Abdel Kabirr in 1977 as the Super Eagles (later known as Ifang Bondi). The Super Eagles were the first Gambian band to "go electric" and combine Western influences with traditional jali music. Although the band was widely popular in the Gambia, making a living was hard, prompting a relocation to Holland in the mid-1980s. The band has gone through extensive personnel shifts over the years, with only a small core of the original members remaining.

what to buy: Solid dance tunes, stellar playing, and impassioned vocals distinguish Gumbay Dance! ♪♪♪½ (Higher Octave, 1991, prod. M. Oko Drammeh), a solid, uplifting set from a band that has retained its African roots despite the use of Western instruments.

what to buy next: Mandingo Beat ♪♪♪ (Higher Octave, 1994, prod. M. Oko Drammeh) is a definite move to generate a bit of crossover action, with a touch of R&B in the vocals and a Latin funk influence to some of the rhythms.

the rest:

Soto Koto Band ♪♪♪½ (Higher Octave, 1993)

worth searching for: Before moving to Europe, the band put out a number of albums under the name Ifang Bondi; titles include Saraba and Mantra.

influences:

⏮ Ifang Bondi, Manding Kelepha, Guelewar

see also: Foday Musa Suso

j. poet

Soul Brothers

Mbaqanga

Formed 1974, in Hammersdal, South Africa. Based in Johannesburg, South Africa.

Studio band: David Masondo (died 1984), vocals; Moses Ngwenya, keyboards, vocals; Zenzele Mchunu, bass; Tuza Mthethwa (died 1984), vocals; Maxwell Mngadi, guitar; Sicelo Ndlela, bass; Thomas Phale, saxophones. Live band: All the above plus Bongani Nxele, drums; Javas Magubane, sax; Ernest Smith, percussion; Japan Sidoyi, vocals; Sipho Bhengu, vocals; Mbongelele Dladla, vocals; Vusi Mabuza, vocals. (All members are from South Africa.)

The original Soul Brothers vocal trio—David Masondo, Zenzele Mchunu, and Tuza Mthethwa—met while they were working in a factory in Hammersdale. To blow off steam they formed a band to play Motown, jazz, marabi (South African piano music, urbanized with electric guitars), and mbaqanga (the South African township music popularized by Paul Simon's Graceland). In 1974 they were signed to a small label, which convinced them to quit their day jobs and move to Johannesburg in search of fame. They arrived in the big city penniless, and for a while made a living backing up other groups under a series of assumed names, on a number of labels. By the late '70s they'd developed their own sound by slowing down the tempos, adding jazzy sax lines, mixing up the keyboards, and featuring a disco-fied, thumping bass/kick drum backbeat that complemented the lead vocals of the band's front line. They also introduced slang lyrics and sang to the fans in the streets. The band's new sound electrified the black population and made the Soul Brothers South Africa's best-selling band.

what to buy: Jive Explosion ♪♪♪♪ (EarthWorks, 1988, compilation prod. Trevor Herman) is a compilation of the tunes that made the Soul Brothers stars. The tracks are crammed with inventive organ parts that bring to mind the 1960s garage-band Farfisa mania of the United States, and a relentless beat, complemented by the sweet, soul-stirring harmonies of the band's three vocalists. Some of these singles probably inspired the genesis of Graceland.

what to buy next: The band is still going strong on the mid-'90s compilation Jump & Jive ♪♪♪♪ (EarthWorks, 1995, compilation prod. Trevor Herman). The production is more refined, but the earth-shaking Zulu stomp that made them favorites is still in evidence.

the rest:
Soul Mbaqanga—The Remixes ♪♪♪♪ (Riverboat, 1994)

influences:
◀◀ Philip Tabane, Zacks Nkosi, Boyoyo Boys ▶▶ Johnny Clegg, Brenda Fasse & the Big Dudes, Paul Simon

j. poet

Southern Scratch

Chicken scratch

Formed 1990, in Tucson, AZ, USA. Based in Tucson, AZ, USA.

Ron Joaquin, sax, bass; Sara Joaquin, cowbell; Alex Cruz, bass, drums, accordion; Angie Joaquin, maracas; Brandis Joaquin, drums, accordion; Richard Garcia, accordion; Jesse Puentes, bajo sexto. (All members are from USA.)

The kick drum cracks like a whip, the sax and accordion dance rings around each other, the bass thumps like an excited jackrabbit, and the people in the audience go spinning across the floor, laughing, shouting, and kicking up clouds of dust. Southern Scratch is on the scene, and the party won't wind down until the sun comes up.

Southern Scratch plays the traditional dance music of the Tohono O'odham tribe called waila ("why-la") or chicken scratch; it sounds similar to the Tex-Mex style norteño, but has a faster tempo and is performed without vocals or keyboard instruments. "Chicken scratch grew out of the fiddle bands that were formed down around El Presidio, which is now known as Tucson, in the 1860s," says Ron Joaquin, the band's leader. "The missionaries taught Indian people how to play European instruments so they could play for church fiestas." As the Tohono O'odham came into contact with Mexican, German, and Yaqui Indian musicians, they evolved their own unique style of playing. In the '50s players started using guitars, accordions, and saxophones instead of fiddles, but the basic elements of the music remained. There are no solos, no lyrics, little improvisation, and few newly composed tunes.

"Most bands play by ear," Joaquin continues. "I learned from my father, who played with the Joaquin Brothers Band, the first group to take the music off of the res. When I was starting he'd stand by the stage and shout out the chord changes for me. I passed the music on to my son, Brandis, but I think he gets most of his talent from my father. When he started playing the drums, his time was always a bit off, but two weeks after my dad died, he started nailing the rhythm. I believe he received my father's musical spirit." Like his father, Ron Joaquin wants to make chicken scratch available to all people. "We played at WOMAD (World of Music, Art and Dance—the border-breaking organization associated with Peter Gabriel) in Canada and a bunch of folk festivals on the East Coast, and people loved it." The Tohono O'odham word "waila" comes from the Spanish "bailer" ("dance"), so why do white people call the music chicken scratch? "The story they usually tell is that when you dance to this music, which is usually played outdoors, you kick up dust like a chicken scratching," Joaquin says. "But an old man just told me that when Anglos tried to imitate Indian dancing, the Indians said that they looked like chickens scratching for corn." Joaquin laughs, "I don't know which version is true."

what to buy: Chicken Scratch is bouncy dance music, and Piast Tas ♪♪♪♪ (Canyon, 1997, prod. Stephen Butler) will surely get you moving, though the style's relative subtlety within that framework—no solos, no lyrics, no grandstanding—may take some getting used to by mainstream American ears attuned to the pop cult of personality.

the rest:
Southern Scratch, Volume 1 ♪♪♪♪ (Canyon, 1991, cassette)
Southern Scratch, Volume 2 ♪♪♪♪ (Canyon, 1993, cassette) Southern Scratch, Volume 3 ♪♪♪♪ (Canyon, 1994, cassette)

influences:
◀◀ Gu Achi Fiddlers, Joaquin Brothers Band, El Conjunto Murrietta, Mike Enis & Company ▶▶ Simon & Friends, Friends, Pima Express

j. poet

Sparrow

See: The Mighty Sparrow

Spearhead

Hybrid hip-hop

Formed 1993, in Oakland, CA, USA. Based in California, USA.

Michael Franti, vocals; Mary Harris, vocals (1993–95); Le Le Jamison, keyboards (1993–96); Keith McArthur, bass (1993–96); David James, guitar; James Gray, drums (1993–96); Sub Commander Ras I Zulu, chant; Trinna Simmons, vocals (1996–present); Carl Young, bass, keyboards, string and horn arrangements (1996–present).

The best band you don't know where to find in a record store, Spearhead's handlers aren't sure if they should be marketed as hip-hop, R&B, or alterna-rock—so you might as well add "world music" to the list. Underrated but unsurpassed, Spearhead is an innovative and articulate ensemble that varies the known textures of rap into subtle but startling areas of reggae, acoustic folk, and art-rock, not to mention a foundation of classic soul and old/new/next-school hip-hop. The brainchild of musical frontiersman and recent Rasta Michael Franti—who previously shocked the system with the industro-punk Beatnigs and the agit-hop Disposable Heroes of Hiphoprisy—Spearhead is nonetheless a boisterous group effort, in both extended-family size and political bent very much the Stateside counterpart of Caribbean sound-armies like Haiti's Boukman Eksperyans. They suffer a little guilt by association as the rap group most likely to appear in an "alternative" magazine, and get grudging-to-no respect from a white critical establishment for whom hip-hoppers who don't cash in on thug-life stereotypes don't register as "authentically" black. But for those who'd rather listen to music than read about it (sorry ya had to read it here!), Spearhead throw the most visionary party in millennial pop. They may have to wait a bit while the fuses run out on the dynamite sticks they've placed in the market's myriad niches—but when the fire catches they're gonna blow up good.

what's available: The debut Home ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1994, prod. Michael Franti, Joe "The Butcha" Nicolo) is the unsung fulcrum of late-century hip-hop, most notable to world-music fans for the running commentary of resident Rasta wiseman Sub Commander Ras I Zulu and the sorta-salsa "Red Beans & Rice"—but with whole other worlds of listening to be had, from the dreamy but disturbed "Of Course You Can" to the rap-folk of "Hole in the Bucket" to the political soul of "Positive" and "Runfayalife" and beyond. Franti adds convincing Jamaican dialect to his full-time roster of vocal characters on Chocolate Supa Highway ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1997, prod. Michael Franti), with some of the most smile-evoking, self-effacing odes to the herb you're likely to find in the Rasta cannon. One of these goes all the way with a guest-star duet vocal by Stephen Marley on his dad Bob's "Rebel Music (3 O'Clock Roadblock)," suitably updated for the hip-hop generation by the usual frontman. Two other guests show Spearhead more corners of the world—Joan Osborne, with a stunning North American roots-folk interpolation into "Wayfarin' Stranger," and Zap Mama's Marie Daulne, with otherworldly African vocal revelations in the midst of the sitar-reggae of "Comin' to Gitcha." Franti returns the favor with raps both insightful ("Baba Hooker") and otherwise ("Poetry Man") on Zap's own 7 ♪♪♪♪ (Luaka Bop, 1997, prod. various). Meanwhile, future-vintage hip-hop rounds out Supa Highway, with the master storytelling of "Gas Gauge"; the party-political vibe of "Keep Me Lifted" and "Food for tha Masses" (featuring South African toaster Ishmael from Prophets of Da City); and the superlative eulogy-rap (sorry, Puffy) of "Why Oh Why."

worth searching for: Franti's world travels also lead him to a duet with Senegalese superstar Baaba Maal on "Yelle Jam (Hamady Boiro)" from Reggae on the River: The 10th Anniversary Part 1 ♪♪♪♪ (Earthbeat!, 1995, prod. various).

influences:

◀◀ Gil Scott-Heron, Last Poets, Public Enemy, Bob Marley

see also: Baaba Maal, Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers, Zap Mama

Adam McGovern

The Specials

Two-tone, ska

Formed 1977, in Coventry, England. Disbanded 1981. Re-formed 1994. Based in England.

Jerry Dammers, keyboards (1977–81); Lynval Golding, guitar; Sir Horace Gentleman (born Horace Panter), bass; Terry Hall, vocals (1978–81); Neville Staples, vocals, percussion; Roddy "Radiation" Byers, guitar; Siverton, drums (1977–78); John Bradbury, drums (1979–81); Mark Adams, keyboards, vocals (1994–present); Adam Birch, horns (1994–present); Aitch Hyatt, drums (1994–present).

A ska revival group, the Specials were the showpiece band of the U.K.'s short-lived two-tone movement of the late '70s and early '80s. Two-tone referred to the racially mixed groups that formed partly as a reaction to emerging skinhead racial violence in England. Evolving from various bands known as Coventry, the Coventry Specials, and the Specials AKA, the group had a number of U.K. singles and EP hits with their bouncy, party-friendly ska songs. The band shattered in 1981, when Neville Staples, Terry Hall, and Lynval Golding formed Fun Boy Three and Roddy Byers formed Roddy Radiation & the Tearjerkers. Jerry Dammers led a revamped lineup known as Specials AKA, then re-formed the band under its original moniker in 1994. Today, ska fans refer to the Specials' peak period as the genre's "second wave"—the first being the originals, Jamaicans such as the Skatalites, and the third being recent hit modern rock bands such as the Mighty Mighty Bosstones and No Doubt.

what to buy: The Specials ♪♪♪♪½ (Chrysalis, 1979, prod. Elvis Costello) is the group's peak, with party favorites such as "A Message to You, Rudy," "Monkey Man," "Gangsters," and "Too Much, Too Young." The best set in print is Singles Collection ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1991, prod. various), which includes "Ghost Town" and "Free Nelson Mandela," two of the group's best songs.

what to buy next: After the band regrouped, Today's Specials ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1996, prod. various) gets back on the ska track with a number of covers—particularly a scorching version of "Take Five"—but doesn't quite match the unbridled exuberance of the first album.

what to avoid: More Specials ♪♪½ (Chrysalis, 1980/Alliance, 1986, prod. Jerry Dammers, Dave Jordan), the follow-up to The Specials, lost the beat as the group veered into lounge music.

the rest:

(With Desmond Dekker) King of Kings ♪♪♪½ (Trojan, 1994)
(With Desmond Dekker) King of Ska ♪♪♪ (Trojan, 1991/Varèse Sarabande, 1998)
Guilty 'til Proved Innocent ♪♪½ (MCA, 1998) Blue Plate Specials Live ♪♪♪♪ (Big Ear, 1999)

influences:

⏮ The Skatalites, the Wailers, Madness

⏭ No Doubt, Mighty Mighty Bosstones

see also: Desmond Dekker

Lawrence Gabriel

Davy Spillane

See: Moving Hearts

Splash

See: Daniel Tshanda

Douglas Spotted Eagle

Native flute, world, new age

Born in Valley Junction, IA, USA. Based in Stockton, UT, USA.

Douglas Spotted Eagle was working at Native Restoration, the recording studio he owns and operates in the peaceful country near Stockton, Utah, when the president of Windham Hill Records called. Closer to Far Away, Spotted Eagle's first album for Windham Hill, had only been out for three weeks, but it was already #9 on Billboard magazine's new-age chart. Still, the record executive hadn't called to congratulate Spot (as he is nicknamed) on his accomplishment. "He told me 'There's too much "Hey yah, hey yah" stuff on the album,'" Spot says, laughing. "He had no idea how culturally insensitive he was being. He told me they didn't want any traditional stuff on the next album." Not unexpectedly, there was no next album for Windham Hill. The company restructured and jettisoned many of their artists, including Spotted Eagle.

For Spot, who composes, produces, and plays Native flute, keyboards, and traditional percussion, the label's disinterest was a blessing in disguise. It enabled him to finish work on Tenaya, the soundtrack to a film by documentary-maker Sterling Johnson that lets viewers sample the four seasons at Yosemite National Park. "Most of that music was recorded live in Yosemite," Spot says. "We lugged some recording equipment up there, and I played, sometimes freezing my butt off while I sat on a frosty river bank, but I wanted to capture the feel of the place." The music Spotted Eagle makes today has a deeply spiritual content, but that was not always the case. "In high school I was in a metal band. I was experimenting with the flute, but it didn't become a spiritual force in my life until I was a lot older." While Spot has some Native blood, he plays down that aspect of his life. "I was raised the Native way, and speak the language and practice the religion, but I tell people 'I'm a white guy that makes music based on the Native music I love.'"

His bloodline notwithstanding, Spot has had a major impact on Native music. He has produced almost 300 albums of Native music for pop, powwow, and traditional artists; recorded 11 albums of his own; starred in the flute instruction video Learning to Play the Native American Flute with Spotted Eagle; and written two books, Voices of Native America, an overview of Native music with a large section on how to play and make flutes, and Making Indian Bows and Arrows. Spot also created a CD-ROM for Q-Up Arts called Voices of Native America. The disc is a diverse collection of Native instrumental and vocal samples. "Every time a Native person came on screen on TV or in the movies, you heard a shakuhachi, a Japanese flute," Spot says. "I got tired of that, and put together a sampler of drumming, chanting, singing, flute-playing and other musical cues that filmmakers could use that would be more authentic." Spike Lee, Michael Jackson, and the X-Files TV series are just a few of the clients who have made use of Spot's digital dictionary of Native sounds. "Music is a bridge between the visible and invisible world" Spot says. "It doesn't matter if you're looking out to a higher power, or into your own core; the principle is the same. Music is my prayer to, and for, the world."

what to buy: Spotted Eagle contributes another laid-back combination of Native and worldbeat influences on Pray ♪♪♪½ (Higher Octave, 1998, prod. Spotted Eagle), with guests Marion Meadows, an African American/Native American sax player; Wil Numkena, the Hopi singer who was sampled for the Sacred Spirits ethno-techno disc; Native singers Herman Begay and Frank Warren from the Indian Creek Singers; and Samantha Rainbow, a contemporary and traditional Lakota singer.

what to buy next: Despite the opinion of the Windham Hill marketing department, Closer to Far Away ♪♪♪½ (Windham Hill, 1996, prod. Brian Keane) is a solid new-age/world instrumental album.

the rest:

Sacred Feelings ♪♪♪ (Natural Visions, 1989)
Legend of the Flute Boy ♪♪♪ (Natural Visions, 1990)
Stand at Center ♪♪♪ (Natural Visions, 1992)
Ultimate Collection ♪♪♪ (Natural Visions, 1993)
Human Rites ♪♪♪ (Natural Visions, 1993)
Common Ground ♪♪♪ (Natural Visions, 1994) Tenaya ♪♪♪ (Natural Visions, 1997)

influences:

⏮ Tom Ware, R. Carlos Nakai

⏭ Gary Stroutsos, Raven

see also: Robbie Robertson

j. poet

Dáithí Sproule

See: Altan, Trian

U. Srinivas

Karnatak mandolin

Born Upalappu Srinivas, February 28, 1969, in Palakol, Andhra Pradesh, India. Based in Madras, India.

Upalappu Srinivas (better known by his first initial) pioneered the use of the mandolin in karnatak (South Indian classical) music; a match that seems natural in retrospect, but was revolutionary for its time. Srinivas's first public performance at the age of nine garnered him a reputation as a child prodigy. "I thought that it's common to hear people playing classical music on the violin or veena [plucked stringed instrument], so why don't I try something new?" he recalls. "Of course, I never dreamed I would become so well-known or that the mandolin would become so popular." Inspired, his clarinet-playing father taught his son what little he knew—though with no experience in the mandolin, he had to sing karnatak music, which Srinivas would then play. In any case the artist's talent transcended his training: Srinivas currently draws diverse crowds of as many as 10,000, including rasikas, fanatical concert-goers able to detect the slightest mistake. Even in settings where the stakes aren't quite so high, he doesn't disappoint.

what to buy: For traditional Hindustani karnatak music try Rama Sreerama ♪♪♪♪ (RealWorld/Caroline, 1994, prod. Michael Brook), recorded live in one evening. Srinivas's latest is Dawn Raga ♪♪♪♪ (WOMAD, 1996), another satisfying exploration of the fresh interpretations to be coaxed from a venerable tradition.

what to buy next: Producer Michael Brook describes Dream ♪♪♪ (RealWorld/Caroline, 1995, prod. Michael Brook) as "very much 'see what happens' with Srinivas as the focus." Expect a modern mix of samples, ambiance, avant-popper Jane Siberry's voice on the title track, and Brazilian percussion phenom Nana Vasconcelos's drumming for a multicultural menu.

worth searching for: Confusions abound among Srinivas's many hard-to-find import recordings, as they nearly all have "mandolin" in the title. These releases will tend toward more traditional composition and production, compared to the three slicker ones cited above. Keep in mind that Srinivas only recently turned 30, and has improved with age, so pick the more recent recordings where possible: Mandolin (Magnasound, 1986), Magic Mandolin (Chhanda Dhara, 1989), Music on Mandolin (Super Cassette, 1990), Modern Mandolin Maestro (Globestyle U.K., 1991), Double Mandolin (Magnasound/San, 1991), Trio Mandolin (Sangeetha/Koel, 1992), Mandolin Duets (EMI, 1994), Prodigy (Sangeetha/Koel, 1994), and Mandolin Ecstasy (Oriental, 1996).

influences:
Ravi Shankar

see also: Michael Brook, T. H. "Vikku" Vinayakram

David Poole

Sunita Staneslow

Jewish, Celtic, jazz, classical Born April 21, 1962, in Ithaca, NY, USA. Based in St. Paul, MN, USA.

Truly an international performer, Sunita Staneslow's mastery of the harp grows from many roots. Calling on an extensive background in a variety of musical styles—and her travels to countries such as Israel, France, and Scotland to learn their music first-hand—Staneslow embraces a broad palette, with a versatile mastery rare to traditional harpers. Beyond sheer technical command, Staneslow also truly conveys an empathy with the joy or sorrow expressed in each piece of music. Although she plays Celtic, classical, and jazz beautifully, her artistry in her own heritage in particular has brought about a revival of Jewish music on the harp. Staneslow's credentials are many, including a master's degree from the Manhattan School of Music. She studied harp under Lucile Lawrence at Boston University, and in France with Lilly Laskine and Jaqueline Borot. She also studied privately with Judith Liber in Israel from 1985–87, meanwhile playing principal harp with the Jerusalem Symphony Orchestra and busking on the street with traditional harp music! Staneslow's resume is as long as her training is broad; she has played with the Minnesota Opera, the Des Moines Opera, and the Chicago Chamber Orchestra, as well as the jazz ensemble Vida and the Celtic group Northern Gael.

what to buy: The best showcase of Staneslow's diversity is Sunita: Solo Harp ♪♪♪♪ (Maxemillian Productions, 1991, prod. Frederick Schlomka). This unique recording displays an uncommon technical range and emotional depth—exclusively on solo harp. Traditional Polish, Irish, English, Greek, Sephardic, Ladino, and other Jewish tunes are all passionately delivered. On City of Gold ♪♪♪♪½ (Maxemillian Productions, 1996, prod. Shelley Hanson), Staneslow further displays her rich understanding of Jewish music, joined by excellent musicians on violin, cello, oboe, clarinet, and English horn. This beautiful collection of 12 tunes ranges from the elegantly traditional "On the Rivers of Babylon" to the hauntingly modern "Theme from Shindler's List," capturing the very essence of Jewish music at its best. Mist Covered Mountains ♪♪♪½ (Excelsior, 1996, prod. Sunita Staneslow, Bobby Schnitzer) features some stirring Celtic harp solos in a wide selection, including a very moving version of "Bridget Cruise." Staneslow is joined by fiddle, flute, guitar, pipes, concertina, and other instruments, although the harp takes center stage throughout.

what to buy next: Vida's Acoustic Passion ♪♪♪♪ (Maxemillian Productions, 1994) is truly world music, with a mixture of jazz, traditional, and classical strains covering a wide variety of old and modern music. This electric trio of cello, harp, and percussion is exotic and exciting. Staneslow appears with Northern Gael on Crossing the Shannon: A Musical Portrait of Ireland ♪♪♪½ (Excelsior, 1996, prod. Laura MacKenzie, Sunita Staneslow). This upbeat recording features flutes, pipes, concertina, fiddle, and a few vocals in a fine collection of Irish tunes. Romantic Harp II: A Musical Portrait of France ♪♪♪½ (Excelsior, 1997, prod. Sunita Staneslow) displays the beauty of the harp on French romantic music by such greats as Debussy, Bizet, and Ravel.

the rest:
The Romantic Harp: Music for Quiet Times ♪♪♪ (Excelsior, 1996)

influences:
Kim Robertson, Deborah Henson-Conant, Sileas, Sue Richards, Laura MacKenzie, Laura Sewell, Akiva Ben-Horin

Jo Hughey Morrison

Rigo Star

Soukous

Born in Kinshasa, Zaire (now Congo). Based in Paris, France, and Oakland, CA, USA.

Rigo Star is one of the world's great guitarists, a soukous (Congolese rumba) master who has been able to perform the delicate balancing act of maintaining a strong fan base in both the Congo and abroad. "People in the Congo are like Americans," Star says. "They're loyal to their own music; they don't like it to change too much. Because my soukous has a strong traditional foundation, people accept my innovations, like using distortion to emulate the sounds I heard Jimi Hendrix making. I did that when I played for Papa Wemba in Viva La Musica, and people flipped. That's how we stayed fresh; when inspiration came, we let it take us forward."

Star's risk-taking made him a favorite sideman, producer, and songwriter; he's added his scorching licks to more than 300 albums playing soukous, makossa (Cameroonian pop), zouk (Antillian dance-pop), and more. He's written and produced for M'Bilia Bel and Kofi Olomide, helped pioneer the "zoukous" hybrid of the '80s by adding his guitar to projects by zouk luminaries like Kassav' founder Jacob Desvarieux and Ronald Rubinel, and worked his magic for Paul Simon and Kanda Bongo Man. Star says he keeps his music fresh by producing albums of classically flavored material for the Congolese market while exploring the possibilities of fusing soukous with other forms, especially American jazz. To that end, he came to California in 1997 to record Got the Feeling, a smooth jazz set that has drawn some flack from critics for its mellow, AOR sound.

"Since I was a young man, I've dreamed of making a record in America," Star says. "In Paris, we had to make soukous the French could understand, so maybe I will get people in America to listen by mixing jazz with soukous. I think mixing styles produces good music. Soukous came from playing Cuban music in an African style, so maybe something new will come of this." At the time of writing Star was putting together a band that he planned to tour America, then the world, with what he says will be a new soukous sound. "I don't want to say too much, because I don't want another musician to steal my ideas," he says, only half joking. "I'm going to use jazz musicians, if I can teach them to play soukous, because we'll only be playing a few jazz tunes in the show. I'm also looking for a female singer who can sing soukous in English."

He won't go into too much more detail on this, but as far as his "almost" famous nom de guitar goes, the explanation was pretty straightforward. "My name is Rigobart Bamundele," he says. "In my language 'bamundele' means 'star,' and since everybody knows Ringo the Beatle, I though it would make a good stage name."

what to buy: Attention ♪♪♪♪ (IMA, 1997, prod. Rigo Star) is killer modern soukous, with plenty of Star's incendiary guitar licks and guest vocals by Sam Mangwana.

what to buy next: Star helped make singer M'Bilia Bel famous by writing, playing, and producing on her early solo albums. She returns the favor by adding her sultry vocals to the stellar Yalowa ♪♪♪♪ (IMA, 1996, prod. Rigo Star).

what to avoid: Got the Feeling ♪♪♪ (IMA, 1997, prod. Rigo Star, Jennifer Kreitzer, Kincaid Miller) isn't as bad as most smooth jazz; there's a hint of North Africa in the rhythms and Star's guitar is always interesting, but if you're looking for fireworks, this isn't the place to find them.

worth searching for: As mentioned above, Star has produced and played on more than 300 albums in the past 15 years, most for Parisian or Congolese labels. The pick of the litter includes: Phénomene ♪♪♪♪ (IMA, 1996), a reissue of M'Bilia Bel's first solo album from 1988, produced and written by Star; Sang Bleu Aziza ♪♪♪♪½ (IMA, 196), by vocalist Luciana Demingongo, arranged and produced by Star, who met Demingongo when both were featured players in Papa Wemba's Viva La Musica; Papa Wemba ♪♪♪♪ (Stern's U.K., 1988), one of Wemba's biggest hits, due in part to Star's guitar wizardry; Amour Fou ♪♪♪♪ (Ryko, 1988), a compilation of the three albums Kanda Bongo Man put out on his own Bongo Man label, with excellent guitar work by Diblo Dibala and Rigo; and a couple of early Star projects, Jotongo ♪♪♪♪ (Mayala France, 1986), credited to "Rigo and Josky"; and Ai, Ai ♪♪♪♪ (Mayala France, 1986), by "Rigo and Koffi."

influences:

◀◀ Zaiko Langa Langa, Franco, Tabu Ley Rochereau

▶▶ Kanda Bongo Man, Diblo Dibala, Loketo

see also: M'Bilia Bel, Diblo Dibala, Kanda Bongo Man, Kassav', Sam Mangwana, Tshala Muana, Papa Wemba

j. poet

Andy Statman

Klezmer, bluegrass, jazz, classical Jewish music

Born in New York, NY, USA. Based in New York, NY, USA.

One of the most versatile of contemporary traditional musicians, Andy Statman is a world-class bluegrass mandolin player, and an equally gifted clarinetist who is both a jazz cat and one of the shining lights of contemporary Hasidic music. New Yorker Statman's explorations of klezmer led him into the spiritual reaches of the Bill Monroe sound.

what to buy: Between Heaven and Earth: Music of the Jewish Mystics ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997) is a spectacular recording on which Statman and his quartet (also featuring pianist Kenny Werner, bassist Harvie Swartz, and drummer Bob Weiner) use Niggunim (18th- and 19th-century Chassidic liturgical vocal pieces) as springboards for soaring, free-jazz improvisations in the spirit of the transcendent work of '60s players like John Coltrane and Albert Ayler. Always an expressive musician, this work brings out new emotional depths in Statman's extraordinary clarinet playing; his note-bending on the opener "Maggid" is particularly remarkable.

what to buy next: Songs for Our Fathers ♪♪♪♪ (Acoustic Disc, 1996, prod. David Grisman, Andy Statman), a wonderfully reverent, sentimental exploration of traditional Jewish melodies by two masters of contemporary acoustic music—Statman and fellow mandolin virtuoso David Grisman—features a splendid supporting cast including bassists Edgar Meyer and Jim Kerwin, percussionist Hal Blaine, tuba player Zachariah Spellman, and guitarist Enrique Coria. The second release by Statman's devout jazz quartet, The Hidden Light ♪♪♪♪ (Sony Classical, 1998, prod. A. Statman), is the equal of the first. On a mixture of familiar Yiddish melodies and new instrumental pieces, Statman and company again mine the blend of spiritual questing and improvisational elegance that made their debut such a powerful and moving work.

the rest:

Andy Statman:

Flatbush Waltz ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1980)

(With David Grisman) Mandolin Abstractions ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1982)

(With David Grisman) Nashville Mornings, New York Nights ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1986)

Andy's Ramble ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994)

Andy Statman Klezmer Orchestra:

Klezmer Music ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1992)

Jewish Klezmer ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1994)

influences:

◀◀ Bill Monroe, Dave Tarras

▶▶ Klezmatics, New Orleans Klezmer All-Stars

see also: De Dannan, Itzhak Perlman

Michael Parrish

Steel Pulse

Reggae

Formed 1975, in Birmingham, England. Based in Birmingham, England.

David Hinds, vocals, rhythm guitar; Ronald McQueen, bass (1975–83); Basil Gabbidon, lead guitar, vocals (1975–81); Selwyn Brown, keyboards, vocals, percussion; Steve "Grizzly" Nisbett, drums (1976–present); Michael Riley, vocals, percussion (1976–78); Alphonso Martin, vocals, percussion (1976–present); Alvin Ewan, bass (1983–present); Carlton Bryan, guitar (1983–present). (All members are from England.)

Steel Pulse was among the first of England's reggae bands to achieve international attention. With their heavily political lyrics and righteous rhythms the group has continued to project their commitment to justice, economic freedom, and racial equality. Trouser Press Record Guide called the band "one of the world's very best self-contained reggae units." Steel Pulse came together in the Handsworth ghettos of Birmingham, England, at the suggestion of bass player Ronald McQueen. Although none of the other original members initially knew how to play their instruments, three years of intensive rehearsals led to a more refined sound. Shortly after performing their first gig at the Compton Pub in Birmingham, the group recorded their debut single, "Nyah Love." With the arrival of Phonso Martin and Michael Riley in 1976 and Steve Nisbett the following year, Steel Pulse continued to polish their musical skills.

Beginning in 1977, the band aligned itself with punk's Rock Against Racism movement. After opening shows for Generation X, the Adverts, the Stranglers, and the Slits, the group secured a prestigious gig as opening act for Burning Spear at the Rainbow Theater in London. Their highly charged performance resulted in a contract with Island Records. Steel Pulse's first single for the label, "Klu Klux Klan," was followed by their debut album Handsworth Revolution and a tour of the U.K. and Europe as opening act for no less than Bob Marley & the Wailers.

Though their next two albums—Tribute to the Martyrs and Caught You —were released by Island, they conflicted with the label and their contract was dropped in 1980, shortly before their first tour of the United States. The following year, Steel Pulse became the first British reggae band to perform at the definitive annual Reggae Sunsplash festival in Jamaica. Their fourth album, True Democracy, was released on their own label, Wise Man Doctrine, in England, and on Elektra in the U.S.

The latter label released Steel Pulse's fifth album, Earth Crisis, as well. Friction was sparked, however, when the band recorded the live Babylon the Bandit and Elektra refused to print song lyrics. Although Steel Pulse went on to receive a Grammy for the album—which included a lyric sheet financed by the band—they terminated their contract with Elektra. Three years passed before they were able to convince another label (MCA) to sign them. Their relationship with that label, however, was short-lived too. Releasing two blatantly commercial albums, State of Emergency in 1988 and Victims in 1991, which nonetheless failed to generate sales, the band became disillusioned with MCA's demand for mainstream material. After releasing a second live album, Rastafari Centennial, in 1992, and a rootsier studio album, Vex, in 1994, the group left to reactivate their own Wise Man Doctrine label. Released in 1997, Rage and Fury re-established the band's earlier roots-conscious sound.

Steel Pulse has been featured on several tribute albums including Fire on the Mountain: Reggae Celebrates the Grateful Dead in 1986, and Regatta Mondatta: A Reggae Tribute to the Police in 1997. Their song "Can't Stand the Heat" was featured in the Spike Lee film Do the Right Thing in 1989. Four years later, they became the first reggae band to perform at an American presidential inauguration.

what to buy: The two-CD set Rasthanthology ♪♪♪♪ (Wise Man Doctrine, 1996, prod. various) is a 17-song retrospective covering the band's entire recording career.

what to buy next: Sound System: The Island Anthology ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1997, prod. various) samples tunes from Steel Pulse's first three albums and includes several previously unreleased live tracks.

the rest:

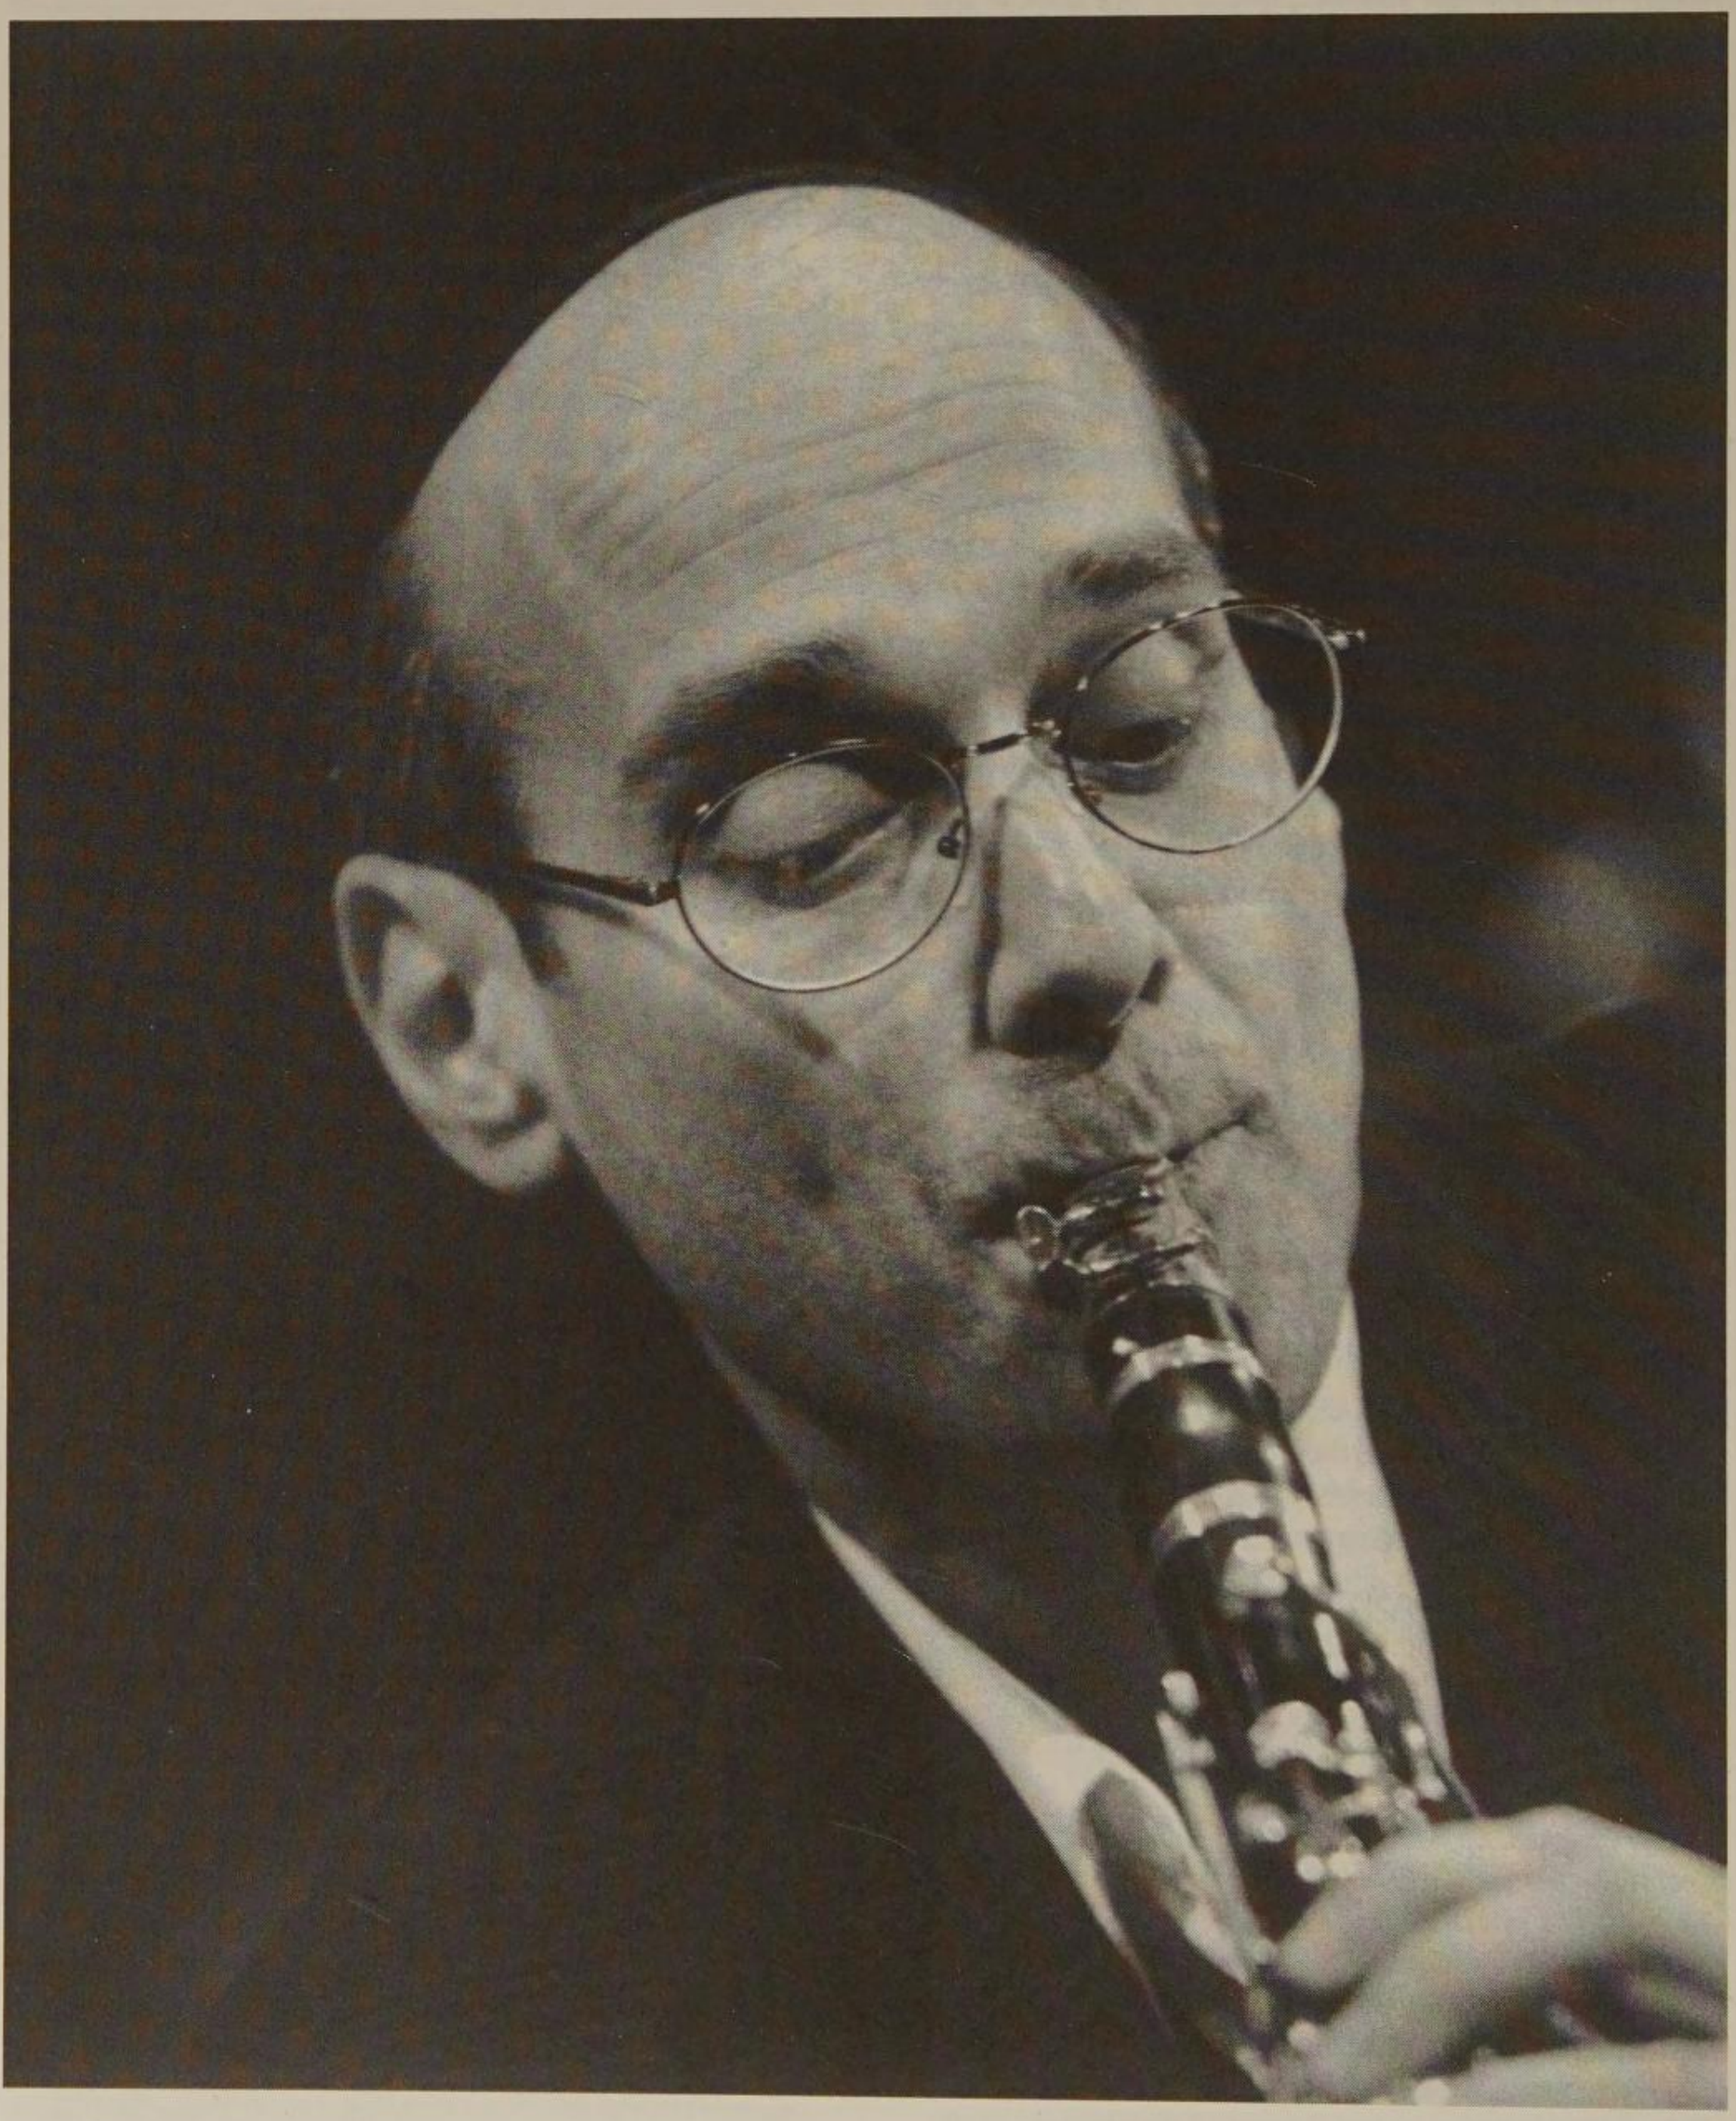
Handsworth Revolution ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1978)
Tribute to the Martyrs ♪♪♪ (Island, 1979)
Caught You ♪♪½ (Island, 1980)
True Democracy ♪♪½ (Elektra, 1982)
Earth Crisis ♪♪½ (Elektra, 1983)
Babylon the Bandit ♪♪♪ (Elektra, 1985)
State of Emergency ♪♪ (MCA, 1988)
Victims ♪♪ (MCA, 1991)
Rastafari Centennial ♪♪½ (MCA, 1992)

chris blackwell

Arguably no figure is more important than Chris Blackwell in the realization of world music as a commercial genre. While his Island Records was not the first label in the West to release what we now call "world music," none brought as many world artists to as high and lasting mainstream prominence. Though Blackwell was born in London, much of his early life was spent in Jamaica. This cultural crossroads, a hotbed of world-musical creativity, would forever influence Blackwell's tastes and guide his professional decisions. Settling there after his British schooling, Blackwell started Island, which early on hit the country's #1 chart spot with Laurel Aiken's "Little Shells." However, Blackwell soon realized that his ska singles were selling more on the burgeoning mod teen scene in England than in the style's native country. Relocating to London in 1962, Island then had one of the biggest world-music hits of the decade with "My Boy Lollipop" by 15-year-old sensation Millie. But it was the '70s that provided Island with perhaps its most history-making connection to world music: the signing of superstar-to-be Bob Marley, which would establish reggae's global presence like never before. The company later helped spur the worldwide acceptance of African pop, especially by licensing Senegalese Parisian Mamadou Konte's phenomenal festival, Africa Fête, as a North American package tour in the '90s. During Island's ascent with general-interest pop giants like U2, the groundbreaking world-music imprint Mango was also formed. But long before this subdivision, Island was unique in being the first major label with world music as its foundation rather than an afterthought. As a white man who's made at least as much of a fortune from his world acts as they have, Blackwell's motives have been questioned by some. But his results, putting artists from all over the geographical map on the musical one, are above reproach. Now parted with Island, his Palm Pictures label guarantees more success for world music's best and brightest well into the new century.

Sam Wick and Adam McGovern

steel pulse



Andy Statman

Vex ♪♪♪ (MCA, 1994)
Rage and Fury ♪♪♪½ (Wise Man Doctrine, 1997)

influences:

◀◀ Burning Spear, Peter Tosh

▶▶ The Police, Aswad, Culture

Craig Harris

Steeleye Span

British folk-rock

Formed 1969, in England. Based in England.

Maddy Prior, vocals (1969–97); Tim Hart, vocals, guitar, dulcimer, harmonium, five-string banjo, fiddle (1969–82); Ashley Hutchings, electric bass, vocals (1969–71); Terry Woods (Ireland), electric guitar, five-string banjo, mandola (1969–70); Gay Woods (Ireland), vocals, bodhrán (1969–70, 1994–present); Peter Knight, violin, vocals (1971–76, 1980–present); Martin Carthy, vocals, guitar, banjo, organ (1971–72, 1977–78); Bob Johnson, vocals, guitar (1972–76; 1980–present); Rick Kemp, bass, vocals (1972–87); Nigel Pegrum, drums, (1974–89); John Kirkpatrick, vocals, accordion (1977–78); Tim Harries, bass, keyboards, vocals (1989–present); Liam Genocky, drums (1989–98). (All members are from England except where otherwise noted.)

Steeleye Span was and is one of the most important and influential British folk-rock bands. Ashley Hutchings had developed a serious interest in traditional music after working on the seminal Liege and Lief as a member of Fairport Convention. He wanted to form a group devoted exclusively to creating new interpretations of traditional ballads and tunes, and Steeleye Span was born. Their first line-up—Hutchings, Maddy Prior, Tim Hart, Gay Woods, and Terry Woods—was short-lived, recording one album, Hark! The Village Wait, before the Woods duo left. They were replaced by Martin Carthy (already a star on the British folk scene) and Peter Knight. With this incarnation the famous Steeleye Span sound—characterized by Prior's crystal-clear soprano and the ensemble's precise choral harmonies over electric instrumental backing led by fiddle and electric guitar—began to develop. The second configuration both played live and recorded two remarkable albums, Please to See the King and Ten Man Mop or Mr. Reservoir Butler Rides Again. After those projects, Carthy and Hutchings departed. Hutchings began his life-long career of producing English-rooted contemporary music, which has included leading all the various permutations of the Albion Country Band and being involved with many special one-off projects. Carthy returned to solo work, but his résumé since has also impressively included membership in the Albion Country Band, the Watersons, Brass Monkey, and Waterson:Carthy. Stepping in for Hutchings and Carthy were Bob Johnson and Rick Kemp. With these new members, Steeleye Span was in for its headiest period yet, which included hit singles in Britain and regular concert tours of that country, North America, and continental Europe. The group's style became definitive upon this incarnation, with even tighter vocal harmonies and rhythms derived from rocked-up courtly dances. Drummer Nigel Pegrum came on board in time to record Now We Are Six, which cemented the group's "medieval Jefferson Airplane" sound. The next big changes came when Johnson and Knight left in 1977 after producing an outside recording, The King of Elfland's Daughter. Carthy rejoined, bringing with him accordionist/vocalist John Kirkpatrick. Kirkpatrick's accordion in turn brought a different color to Steeleye Span's music, and on Storm Force Ten, the group's only studio recording in this version, they presented distinctive arrangements of "The Black Freighter" (from The Threepenny Opera) and "The Wife of the Soldier." For several years after that, Steeleye Span rested until reforming in 1979 with its mid-'70s membership: Prior, Hart, Johnson, Knight, Kemp, and Pegrum. In 1976 Prior had taken some time off to record an acoustic album with June Tabor—the celebrated Silly Sisters—and in 1978 she used the break from Steeleye Span to release two albums of contemporary songs: Woman in the Wings and Changing Winds. Then, in 1980, Steeleye Span released Sails of Silver. After that, Hart left for good; he worked as a producer and issued one solo album. The next Steeleye studio album, Back in Line, appeared in 1986 and then came another "Silly Sisters" set (produced by avant-garde folkie Andrew Cronshaw), No More to the Dance, in 1988. Steeleye Span's 20th anniversary album, Tempted and Tried, appeared the following year, after which the live collection Tonight's the Night was released in 1992. In addition to all this Steeleye activity, Prior teamed with "early music" folk ensemble the Carnival Band for a series of tours and recordings that continues to this day. Gay Woods returned to the Steeleye fold in 1994, and her distinctive vocals (just a little rougher and lower than Ms. Prior's) can be heard on Steeleye Span's 1995 release Time. In late 1997 Prior officially left Steeleye Span to pursue other projects. That same year saw the release of another solo project, Flesh and Blood, which included a mini song-cycle titled "Dramatis Personae." Two years later Ravenchild appeared, with two more sets of related songs: the historical "With Napoleon in Russia"; and "In the Company of Ravens," inspired by Prior's work on a documentary about the title beast. Horkstow Grange, the first Steeleye Span album without Prior—albeit retaining the group's distinctively elegant folk-rock style—was also released in 1999.

what to buy: Some of Steeleye Span's best-loved songs ("Boys of Bedlam," "False Knight on the Road"), along with fiery instrumentals featuring Martin Carthy on electric guitar (a rare sight now!) and Peter Knight on fiddle, appear on Please to See the King ♪♪♪♪♪ (B&C, 1971/Shanachie, 1990, prod. Sandy Roberton). Below the Salt ♪♪♪♪½ (Chrysalis, 1972/Shanachie, 1988, prod. Steeleye Span, Jerry Boys) includes a number of songs that have also become Steeleye classics: the grim supernatural ballad "King Henry"; the more pastoral "Spotted Cow" and "Rosebud in June"; and the band's unforgettable interpretation of "Gaudete," a 16th-century religious piece sung entirely in Latin. The lineup that recorded Storm Force Ten ♪♪♪♪½ (Chrysalis, 1977/BGO, 1996, prod. Steeleye Span, Mike Thompson) only lasted a short time but produced remarkable music. They never toured North America, which makes this album essential for U.S. and Canadian fans. (However, a short reunion set by this configuration was one of the special treats for those who attended "Steeleye Span: The Journey," an eight-hour mega-concert held September 2, 1995, at the Forum in London, England, featuring almost everyone who'd ever been a member of the band.) Spanning the Years ♪♪♪♪½ (Chrysalis, 1995, prod. various) is a compilation sampling tracks from all periods of Steeleye Span's by-then 25-plus year history. The CD booklet includes an informal, informative essay by Prior with John Tobier and Lynda Morrison.

best of the rest:
Hark! The Village Wait ♪♪♪♪ (RCA, 1970/Shanachie, 1991)
Parcel of Rogues ♪♪♪♪ (Chrysalis, 1973/Shanachie, 1987)
Live at Last ♪♪♪♪ (Chrysalis, 1978/BGO, 1997)
Back in Line ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1986/Park, 1991)
Tempted and Tried ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1989)
Time ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1995)
Horkstow Grange ♪♪♪♪ (Park, 1999)

worth searching for: There have been two Steeleye Span concert videos released in the United States: A 20th Anniversary Celebration (Shanachie, 1989) and Steeleye Span 25 Live (Teal Entertainment/Wienerworld Limited/Anchor Bay Entertainment, 1995).

solo outings:
Maddy Prior:
Woman in the Wings ♪♪♪♪½ (Chrysalis, 1978/BGO, 1994)
Changing Winds ♪♪♪♪ (Chrysalis, 1978)
Year ♪♪♪♪½ (Park, 1993)
Memento: The Best of Maddy Prior ♪♪♪♪ (Park, 1995)
Flesh and Blood ♪♪♪♪½ (Park, 1997)
Ravenchild N/A (Park, 1999)

Tim Hart:
Tim Hart ♪♪♪ (Chrysalis 1979/BGO, 1997)

Peter Knight:
Ancient Cause ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1991)

Maddy Prior & Tim Hart:
Folk Songs of Old England Volume I ♪♪♪½ (Mooncrest, 1968)
Folk Songs of Old England Volume II ♪♪♪½ (Mooncrest, 1968)
Summer Solstice ♪♪♪♪ (Mooncrest, 1971/Shanachie, 1991)

Maddy Prior & June Tabor:
Silly Sisters ♪♪♪♪♪ (Chrysalis, 1976/Shanachie, 1988)
No More to the Dance ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1988)

Maddy Prior and the Carnival Band:
A Tapestry of Carols ♪♪♪½ (Saydisc, 1987)
Sing Lustily and with Good Courage ♪♪♪♪ (Saydisc, 1990)
Carols and Capers ♪♪♪♪½ (Park, 1991)
Hang Up Sorrow and Care ♪♪♪♪½ (Park, 1995)

Rick Kemp: Escape ♪♪♪½ (Fellside, 1997)

influences:
- The Copper Family, Young Tradition, Jefferson Airplane, Fairport Convention, the Watersons, Mr. Fox

see also: Martin Carthy, Shirley Collins, Andrew Cronshaw, Fairport Convention, Ashley Hutchings, Trevor Lucas, Ewan MacColl, Maddy Prior, Sweeney's Men

Ken Roseman

Stellamara

Worldbeat

Formed 1997, in San Francisco, CA, USA. Based in San Francisco, CA, USA.

Sonja Drakulich, voice, bendir, riqq, zills, keyboard samples; Jeffery Stott, oud, darabouka, bendir, hammered dulcimer, guitar, bells, keyboard samples. (Both members are from USA.)

Worldbeat duo Stellamara have fashioned their alternative earth-pop from familiar sources—the choral music of medieval Europe, the rhythms of North Africa, the polyphonic vocal styles of Eastern Europe, and new-age/electronica textures—but they give these elements their own uniquely melancholy spin.

what to buy: Star of the Sea ♪♪♪½ (City of Tribes, 1997, prod. Sonja Drakulich, Jeffery Stott) shows how, unlike many ethno/ambient groups, Stellamara always place the soothing synth tones in service of the music. Dead Can Dance is the obvious reference for lazy critics, but Stellamara's sound is more organic and down-to-earth.

influences:
- Madredeus, Popul Vuh, Dead Can Dance

j. poet

Andy M. Stewart

Scottish and Irish traditional

Born 1952, in Perthshire, Scotland. Based in Scotland.

Andy M. Stewart is one of the greatest living interpreters of traditional Scottish and Irish songs. As a member of the historically crucial band Silly Wizard, and later as a solo singer and as part of several duos, Stewart has taken his rich, sweet voice and produced definitive versions of some of the gems of the traditions he preserves. He has also been an important interpreter of the works of poet Robert Burns and of other folk-revival songwriters, and the author/composer of some of his own that have become revival standards. Although Stewart comes from a well-known extended family of singers, his experiences as a professional musician began in high school, in Blairgowrie, the town where he was raised. He and several schoolmates, including Dougie MacLean and Martin Hadden, formed a folk band called Puddock's Well. They gigged around the Scottish Highlands and served as the house band at their local folk club. They were happy to be playing music, and upon finishing school they all got day jobs and kept at the band in the evenings. One of the gigs Puddock's Well landed in the early 1970s was as the opening act for a trio called Silly Wizard. The two groups hit it off, and when the chaps in Silly Wizard found themselves short a few members, they called Stewart and Hadden to fill their ranks. After a few more reorganizations, the lineup stabilized with Stewart on voice and tenor banjo, Hadden on bass, Gordon Jones on voice and guitar, Phil Cunningham on accordion and keyboards, and Johnny Cunningham on fiddle. They were a powerhouse band, one of the most successful acts the Scottish folk scene ever produced. In addition to packing as much fun as he could into his years with the legendary band, Stewart made use of his association with Silly Wizard to cement his reputation as a consummate performer and songwriter. In his time with them he supplied many staples of both Silly Wizard's repertoire and the modern folk canon, including "The Queen of Argyll," "The Ramlin' Rover," "The Blackbird," "Golden, Golden," and "A Lover's Heart." In 1985, during a break from the band, Stewart was slated to go on tour with Phil Cunningham when the latter got into a bad car accident. Stewart called Irish guitarist and bouzouki player Manus Lunny. Lunny agreed to fill in, and a new partnership emerged that lasted six years and carried Stewart beyond the breakup of Silly Wizard in 1988. The two toured many times and released four albums; one as a trio with Phil Cunningham, one credited as a Stewart solo disc, and the other two as "Andy M. Stewart and Manus Lunny." By 1991 Lunny's main gig was with Scottish folk-pop band Capercaillie, and he was no longer able to be Stewart's touring partner. Another Irish guitarist, Gerry O'Beirne, stepped in to fill his shoes, and still regularly tours with Stewart today. The pair has released two CDs, credited as Stewart solo discs but arranged and produced largely by O'Beirne.

what to buy: Dublin Lady ♪♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1987, prod. Manus Lunny, Andy M. Stewart), recorded with Lunny, is a classic of the genre, on which Stewart interprets some fine old songs. Tracks include Stewart's lovely version of "Bogie's Bonnie Belle" as well as the hilarious Irish drinking song "The Humours of Whiskey," both of which are definitive performances. "Dinny the Piper," a great ballad from the 1798 rebellion in Ireland, tells of a misunderstanding involving a soldier, a bagpipe player, and an apparently carnivorous cow—perhaps the first recorded case of Mad Cow Disease? Two of the original songs on this album, "Take Her in Your Arms" and "Where Are You (Tonight I Wonder)," have become favorites on the folk revival circuit, with numerous cover versions on the market. In addition to the fine singing by Stewart, Lunny contributes vocals to one song and guitar and bouzouki accompaniment throughout the disc. Other accompanists include Phil Cunningham (accordion, keyboards), Aly Bain (fiddle), and Sean Og Potts (uilleann pipes and whistles).

what to buy next: Donegal Rain ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1997, prod. Gerry O'Beirne) is another refreshing album of folk standards and new treasures. Some of the traditional ballads recorded here will stand as the authoritative versions of magnificent songs; Stewart's version of "Matt Hyland," a rare Scottish ballad with a happy ending, hasn't been outdone on record, and his treatment of "The Banks of Sweet Dundee" is absolutely beautiful. "The Irish Stranger" is given an appropriately solemn treatment, as is "Ramblin' Irishman"; both are sad songs of emigration, but with glimmers of hope and perseverance. More lighthearted material is here as well, mostly songs of sexual dalliance like "Tibbie Fowler o' the Glen" and "Queen Amangst the Heather." Three Stewart originals fill out the album's 11 selections. The arrangements are a nice blend of the Celtic and acoustic with a touch of rock 'n' roll here and there. Man in the Moon ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1994, prod. Gerry O'Beirne) features accompaniments by O'Beirne as well as other top names in Irish and Scottish music, but the focus is on Stewart's resonant voice. Several well-known traditional songs are given the Stewart treatment, including "The Echo Mocks the Corncrake," "The Gaberlunzie Man," and "The Lakes of Ponchartrain." In addition, he has adapted words by Thomas Moore, Sir Walter Scott, and others. There are two songs in particular that will stand out in the memories of Stewart's fans. "The Errant Apprentice" was written by Bill Watkins and set to music by Stewart and O'Beirne. It's a clever, if somewhat bizarre, ballad about a failed love affair, and its hilarious words and simple tune will remind fans of "The Ramblin' Rover," one of Stewart's best-loved songs from Wizard days. "The Land of the Leal" appeared on Silly Wizard's very first (and now very hard-to-find) LP. Like that album, Man in the Moon ends with this sweet and moving song about heaven. By the Hush ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1983, prod. Phil Cunningham), released at the height of Silly Wizard's popularity, was Stewart's first album without the band. It features two songs, "The Ramblin' Rover" and "The Parish of Dunkeld," that were highlights of the Wizards' early repertoire, and these versions suffer a bit in comparison with the band's arrangements. The other songs, mostly slow sad ballads, are lovingly arranged and performed—the painful tales of Patrick Sheehan's enlistment and of an unnamed Irishman's emigration to a Civil War-torn America get a silky-smooth treatment by Stewart rather than the usual harder-edged arrangements of angrier singers. Stewart's originals deal with unhealed wounds, both personal and political. In all, this is Stewart's darkest and most melancholy album, with unfulfilled longings haunting almost all the songs; his honeyed voice is the perfect vehicle for them. As a testament to its quality, the collection was named Melody Maker's Folk Album of the Year in 1983.

the rest:

(With Manus Lunny and Phil Cunningham) Fire in the Glen ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1985)

(With Manus Lunny) At It Again ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1990)

Songs of Robert Burns ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1991)

influences:

◀◀ Archie Fisher, Lucy Stewart, Silly Wizard

▶▶ Ed Miller, Tony Cuffe see also: Boys of the Lough, Capercaillie, Phil Cunningham, Dougie MacLean, Silly Wizard

Steve Winick

Alan Stivell

Harp, Celtic rock, fusion

Born Alan Cochevelou, January 1944, in Riom, Auvergne, France. Based in Paris, France.

Alan Cochevelou (who later took the pseudonym Stivell) made his public debut playing the Breton (French Celtic) harp in 1953, at age nine. The harp had been built by Jord Cochevelou, his father, based on the plans of the famous medieval Irish "Brian Boru" harp, and was the first of this ancient type in Brittany. So Stivell can justifiably lay claim to having been the first person to play the "Breton Harp," but only with the qualifying explanation that it was built from Irish plans—a distinction not incompatible with the much wider cultural fusions he would attempt in his music later on. In time, Stivell learned to play the bombarde (Breton bagpipes); the double-reeded shawm or oboe; and the Scottish bagpipes. He joined the Bagad Bleimor, or Bleimor Pipe Band, in 1954; became the band's pen-sonneur, or head piper, in 1961; and won the 1966 pipe-band championships (also winning championships for his duo piping with friend Youenn Sicard). During the same period, he made the first-ever recordings of Breton harp music, beginning with a few singles and EPs in 1959. Still not creatively complacent after proving himself in all these ways, he set out to innovate in the fields of Breton folk, Celtic rock, and world music. Stivell's groundbreaking albums of the early 1970s chronicle his explorations of Breton music for ensembles. These albums, including Reflets (1970), Renaissance de la Harpe Celtique (1971), A l'Olympia (1972), Chemins de Terre (1973), and E Langonned (1974), revolutionized the music of his native region. They introduced the Celtic harp to the Breton recording scene, and admitted influences from the folk music of Ireland, Scotland, Wales, and the United States, as well as from classical, pop, and rock 'n' roll. The resultant catalog resembled, in Stivell's words, "an inventory of the possibilities for untried marriages of instruments." As the years progressed Stivell indeed tried everything from orchestral arrangements to new-age soundscapes to rock, all in the context of the Celtic melodies of Brittany. He is undoubtedly the single most influential figure on the Breton music scene: his ideas about arranging this music for ensembles have affected every band since his own during the early '70s, and his introduction of the harp to Brittany influenced a whole generation of performers on that instrument.

what to buy: 70/95 ZOOM ♪♪♪♪♪ (Dreyfus, 1997, prod. Alan Stivell) is a two-CD compilation of Stivell's most influential recordings from his 1970 full-length debut to 1995. It features all the styles in which Stivell has played, from early, simple harp arrangements of traditional dance tunes; through mid-period compositions evoking Breton folk stories as well as exploring acoustic ensemble playing, gentle new-age music, and fiery folk-rock; and beyond to quasi-symphonic compositions. In accordance with Stivell's Pan-Celtic idealism, there is a lot of Irish and Scottish music here alongside the more purely Breton traditionals and newer compositions. This set can serve not only as an introduction to Stivell's music, but also as a road map to his many albums; he has played in so many styles it's hard to guide listeners to any one that's definitive.

what to buy next: 70/95 ZOOM is the best point of departure, but as a rule, practically all of Stivell's LPs are worth hearing. Renaissance of the Celtic Harp ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1972/Dreyfus, 1994, prod. Franck Giboni) stands up remarkably well after more than 25 years, and shows the seeds of many of Stivell's future ideas: orchestral arrangements, proto-new-age flourishes, and rock 'n' roll influences are beginning to make their way into his music. The second side of the original LP—and last track on the CD—is a 19-minute foray into Gaelic music from Scotland, Ireland, and the Isle of Man, ingeniously compiled and boldly arranged. Live in Dublin ♪♪♪♪ (Dreyfus, 1975/1994, prod. Alan Stivell, Peter Rice) captures an important Stivell folk-rock band. A couple of years after electric guitarist Gabriel Yacoub (himself quite influential) had left to form the group Malicorne, this lineup still packed a great deal of punch when it was captured live in '75. The album's excellent players of bagpipe, bombarde, fiddle, flute, organ, bass, drums, and harp are capable of a wide variety of textures and a rich, full sound—and they deliver all they promise, from gentle harp airs to bouncy Irish dance tunes to fairly heavy rockish arrangements. Electric guitarist Dan Ar Braz (who played briefly with the English folk innovators Fairport Convention) and piper Patrick Molard have gone on to two of the most important solo and band careers in Brittany. Again ♪♪♪ (Dreyfus, 1993, prod. Alan Stivell, Kate Bush) includes new renditions of some of Stivell's seminal mid-'70s hits, with more of a world-music/pop flavor this time around—not surprising with guests like Kate Bush and the Pogues' Shane MacGowan. Harpes du Nouvel Age ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1985) is an album of harp music arranged by someone who should know: Stivell's father, the harpmaker Jord Cochevelou. It's got a lot of Irish and Scottish music on it, as well as the many requisite Breton tunes. Mostly low-key, it would be appropriate for new-age fans, as its translated title suggests. For those who share Stivell's love not only of new-age sounds but also Celtic mythology, choral arrangements, and complex compositions, Celtic Symphony ♪♪♪ (Dreyfus, 1979) should fit the bill, though it's impressive more for its scope and atmosphere than for electrifying performances. This exploration of Stivell's most grand ambitions is contrasted intriguingly by his earliest creative stirrings. Telenn geltiek—Harpe celtique ♪♪♪♪ (Dreyfus, 1994) is a reissue of the very first, all-instrumental sides the young Alan Cochevelou cut in 1959 and 1961, long out of print and forgotten until their recent resurrection. These 40-year-old recordings sound amazingly clear, and show the precocious teenage harper playing mostly Irish and Scottish material, with just a smattering of Breton. Tunes like "The Wearin' of the Green," "The Derry Air," "Ye Banks an' Braes," and "Loch Lomond" would become well-known to a much larger audience in the ensuing years, as popularized by other performers. An almost-lost revelation from before all that, Telenn geltiek is a fascinating glimpse into the pre-'60s Celtic revival period, and shows just how far ahead of the curve Stivell was at such a tender age. From there it was on to more landmarks: Chemins de Terre ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1973/Dreyfus, 1994, prod. Franck Giboni) was one of Stivell's first forays into Celtic rock with an all-star band. It's a brilliant album, which was fittingly released in the U.K. as From Celtic Roots. The live album A l'Olympia ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1972/Dreyfus, 1988, prod. Franck Giboni) features many of the same players as Chemins de Terre, but on a different set of songs, and is equally impressive. E Langonned ♪♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1974, prod. Philippe Lerichomme), one of Stivell's most underrated albums, was a sort of antidote to the previous two, with completely acoustic renditions of Breton, Irish, Scottish, and Welsh folk music. The sleeve notes, a manifesto explaining Stivell's ideas about music and life, are as interesting as the album itself. Much later, for 1 Douar (One World) ♪♪♪½ (Dreyfus, 1998, prod. various), Stivell finally went the whole hog worldbeat-wise, roping in stars Youssou N'Dour (Senegal) and Khaled (Algeria) as well as Paddy Moloney of the Chieftains (Ireland), Jim Kerr of Simple Minds (Scotland), and John Cale (Wales). Stivell's titular message of global harmony is matched by its stylistic subtext of international synthesis. A fascinating Afro Celtic connection is forged with N'Dour, his and the headliner's rather different voices intertwining as effortlessly—on two different renditions of the same song—as do the Breton harp and the West African harp-like kora backing them up.

the rest:
Reflets ♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1970/Dreyfus, 1994)
Journée à la Maison ♪♪♪½ (Dreyfus, 1978)
Legende ♪♪ (Celtic Music, 1983)
The Mist of Avalon ♪♪ (Dreyfus, 1991) Brian Boru ♪♪♪½ (Dreyfus 1995)

influences:
- Sean Ó Riada, the Chieftains, Bagad Bleimor, Goadec Sisters, Afro Celt Sound System
- Malicorne, Gabriel Yacoub, Dan Ar Braz, Kornog, Gwerz, Afro Celt Sound System

see also: Dan Ar Braz, the Chieftains, Khaled, Youssou N'Dour, the Pogues

Steve Winick

Strunz & Farah

World, new age, flamenco fusion

Formed 1979, in Los Angeles, CA, USA. Based in Los Angeles, CA, USA.

Jorge Strunz, guitar; Ardeshir Farah, guitar; Luis Conte, percussion (1980–present); Guillermo Guzman, electric bass (1990–93); Juanito "Long John" Oliva, Afro-Cuban percussion, cajon (1990–94); Luis Perez Ixoneztli, pre-Columbian winds and percussion, vocals (1990–93); Paul Tchounga, drums (1990–present); Eliseo Borreo, electric bass, vocals (1993–present); Cassio Duarte, percussion (1994–present).

While they often get pegged as flamenco or new age, this fiery worldbeat combo falls into neither pigeonhole. Led by the acoustic guitar pyrotechnics of Jorge Strunz and Ardeshir Farah, the six-piece band assimilates Afro-Latin, Arabic, and Spanish influences into a melting pot that transcends easy categorization. The group's sound has progressed and matured since its inception, moving from the raw power of Mosaico, to the nocturnal moods of Misterio, to the fascinating world fusion sounds of Primal Magic. Each album offers its own trademark, whether it's the progressive structures of Guitarras or the primal worldbeat of Americas. What keeps their music fresh is that Strunz & Farah have played in other formats. Strunz recorded four albums with the 1970s Latin/jazz fusion group Caldera, and Farah played pop music with Iranian musicians in the late 1970s. Although many world-music groups do not tend to sell in large numbers, this one has done very well over the years. Primal Magic and Americas are both close to gold status, with the latter being nominated for a Grammy as Best World Music album in 1992.

what to buy: Live ♪♪♪♪½ (Selva, 1997, prod. Strunz & Farah, Kathlyn Powell) nicely captures the band's inspiring energy. Songs from their previous three recordings are played, and the musicians really get to display their chops, from the powerful rhythm section to the extended solos of the guitarists themselves, who sound like they could race across the frets all night long. Primal Magic ♪♪♪♪ (Mesa/Blue Moon, 1990, prod. Strunz & Farah) started a new trend among young flamenco/Spanish guitar wannabes. While Flamenco stylings certainly play a part in the music, the exotic pre-Columbian winds of Luis Perez and the band's Afro-Latin rhythm section flesh out a sophisticated sound that is both mystical and uplifting, yielding an inspired recording. Americas ♪♪♪½ (Mesa/Blue Moon, 1992, prod. Strunz & Farah) followed this path and is also quite noteworthy. Mosaico ♪♪♪♪ (Mesa/Blue Moon, 1982) features some truly blistering guitar work that will not fail to move you. There is no such thing as a bad Strunz & Farah record, but fans of their other 1990s material will probably find Misterio ♪♪♪ (AudioQuest, 1991) very mellow; it consists of the headline duo and guitarist Ciro Hurtado (on three tracks) without a rhythm section. But it still stands on its own, and offers romantic guitar musings perfect for late-night listening.

the rest:
Frontera ♪♪♪½ (Milestone, 1984)
Guitarras ♪♪♪½ (Milestone, 1985)
Heat of the Sun ♪♪♪½ (Selva, 1995) Wild Muse ♪♪♪♪ (Selva, 1998) see also: Dr. L. Subramaniam

Bryan Reesman

Dr. L. Subramaniam

Indian classical/fusion

Born 1947, in Madras, India. Based in India, Europe, and Los Angeles, CA, USA.

Violin playing seems to run strongly in Dr. L. Subramaniam's family. At the age of five he began studying the South Indian karnatak style of the instrument with his father, master violinist V. Lakshminarayana—who also taught his brothers, L. Shankar and L. Vaidyanathan, both later distinguished in this area as well. It seems fitting that Subramaniam would eventually become famous in the West for his excursions in East-West fusion, as the Indian violin was itself the result of such a fusion at the beginning of the nineteenth century. Subramaniam's interest in the music of other cultures began at an early age, when he heard elements of Indian classical music in a composition by Bach. His father encouraged him to keep "an open ear and an open mind." After establishing himself as a respected karnatak musician in his native land, Subramaniam came to Los Angeles, and by the late '70s and early '80s was collaborating with jazz legends like Stanley Clarke, Herbie Hancock, and Tony Williams on recordings that fused Indian classical influences with jazz, rock, funk, and even flamenco. Since the mid-'80s he has primarily concentrated his energies on commissioned orchestral pieces, and soundtrack work for the films of Indian director Mira Nair (Mississippi Masala and Salaam Bombay!). He also continues to head an annual fusion-music festival started in India in 1991, but has released no new material since the tragic death of his wife. An unfinished reunion project with former collaborator and fellow violinist Stephane Grapelli, featuring Herbie Hancock and guitarist Larry Coryell, currently remains unmixed on the shelf.

what to buy: Although Subramaniam has performed extensively in a variety of East-West contexts, much of this work falls short of that by contemporaries like Zakir Hussain, Trilok Gurtu, and even his brother, L. Shankar, as it fails to utilize Subramaniam's Indian musical background to its full potential. For a pure, unadulterated glimpse of this phenomenal violin virtuoso at his finest, check out Raga Hemavati ♪♪♪♪♪ (Nimbus, 1990), a masterful, 64-minute epic classical raga featuring Subramaniam's hypnotic melodic runs on violin and deft accompaniment by percussionist K. Shekar, all building to an invigorating crescendo that will leave you breathless. Only slightly less rewarding is the more melancholy Three Ragas for Solo Violin ♪♪♪♪½ (Nimbus, 1991), which was dedicated to his father and guru, who had recently passed away. The tone of these three unaccompanied ragas is somber and reflective, but the mesmerizing melodies delicately explored therein are possibly even more gorgeous than those on Raga Hemavati.

what to buy next: Though none of Subramaniam's fusion recordings are absolute must-haves, Spanish Wave ♪♪♪½ (Milestone, 1983, prod. L. Subramaniam) is a compelling experiment mixing elements of jazz, rock, funk, Indian classical music, and flamenco into a uniquely distinctive sonic smorgasbord. The tracks featuring Spanish guitarist Jorge Strunz, tabla drum legend Alla Rakha, and karnatak percussionist Guruvayoor Dorai work best, standing out among a relatively tepid batch of tunes that occasionally border on the wanky sort of noodling that gives jazz fusion a bad name.

the rest:
Indian Express ♪♪ (1984, Milestone)
(With Stephane Grapelli) Conversations ♪♪½ (1984, Milestone) Mani & Co. ♪♪♪ (1986, Milestone)
Sarasvati (Water Lily Acoustics, 1990)
Kalyani (Water Lily Acoustics, 1990)

worth searching for: Thankfully, in the '90s Subramaniam has steered away from jazz fusion and stuck more toward the traditional side of his sound, with brief but enjoyable excursions into soundtrack work as well. Two of his most brilliant Indian classical recordings, South Indian Strings and The Virtuoso Violin of South India, only recently went out of print, but you may still be able to locate copies on cassette if you start looking now, and look you should. On the soundtrack side, his original scores for the films Mississippi Masala and Salaam Bombay! are both impressive, with the former exploring an intriguing East-West hybrid far more rewarding than any of his mid-'80s work.

influences:
◀◀ V. Lakshminarayana, Oregon, Shakti, Ravi Shankar ▶▶ Material, Cornershop, Talvin Singh

see also: L. Shankar, Strunz & Farah, T. H. "Vikku" Vinayakram

Bret Love

Sukay

Andean

Formed 1975, in San Francisco CA, USA. Based in San Francisco, CA, USA.

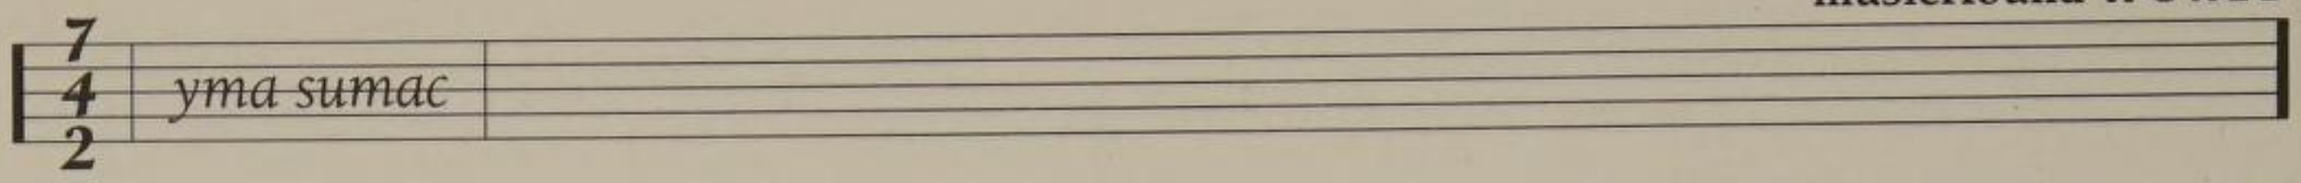
Quentin Howard (a.k.a. Quentin Howard Navia, USA), vocals, wind instruments; Eddy Navia (Bolivia), charango, guitar, bass, mandolin (1989–present); Gabriel Navia (Bolivia), charango (1993–present); Isaac Lopez, wind instruments (1995–present); Enrique Coria (Argentina), guitar, bass (1990–93); Alcides Mejia (Bolivia), wind instruments, percussion (1990–94); Yuri Ortuño (Bolivia), vocals (1986–87, 1995); Mauricio San Martin (Bolivia), wind instruments (1991–93); Omar Sepulveda (Chile), charango (1985–88, 1992–94); Carlos Crespo (Bolivia), wind instruments (1985–88); Edmond Badoux (USA), (1975–85); Javier Canelas (Bolivia) (1978–81); Gonzalo Vargas (Bolivia) (1978–84). (Instruments of some members unspecified; some members exchange listed instruments.)

Andean music derives much of its aural impact from the timbral qualities of its ancient wind instruments. One of these is the Andean pan-pipe, called the siku or zampoña, a closed-end set of pipes that produces a pungent, sibilant sound (and which can range in size from 7 inches to 54 inches for the largest, bass variety). Another is the kena, a simple flute with a plaintive tone. The oldest scales played on these wind instruments were pentatonic, and the traces of these mournful patterns still shape Andean music today. A more modern addition to the Andean ensemble is the charango, a 12-stringed treble guitar with a body often fashioned from an armadillo shell. The arrangement of the strings into pairs gives the charango a sound that is quite akin to that of a mandolin, and the rapid strumming often employed on charango provides a rhythmic complement to the melody of the sikus and flutes.

Sukay was formed by Quentin Howard, a graphic artist from Brooklyn, New York. Upon hearing Andean traditional music for the first time in the 1970s at a folk festival in upstate New York, Howard felt a strong attraction to its spiritual, mysterious quality; as Howard describes it, "that sound went right to the heart of me." Soon she was heading to South America, where she spent 15 months traveling with musician and folklorist Edmond Badoux in Peru, Bolivia, and Ecuador, studying the music and culture of the Andean region and digging up traditional songs. Along with Badoux and a pair of musicians they met in Bolivia, she formed the first incarnation of Sukay in 1975, releasing an album, Music of the Andes, in 1978, and eventually making a flurry of recordings with a newly configured group in the mid-1980s. With the addition of famed Bolivian charango master Eddy Navia in 1989, Sukay took a turn toward refined arrangements and musical experimentation. But the group has never strayed too far from direct (albeit urbane) interpretations of various traditional genres known to its chosen region's Aymara and Quechua peoples. Perennially in demand as leading ambassadors of Andean music and culture, the members of Sukay appear at conferences, workshops, and concerts worldwide.

what to buy: Of Sukay's recent releases, Return of the Inca ♪♪♪♪½ (Sukay World Music, 1991, prod. Sukay) is the finest. Recorded with help from bluegrass legend David Grisman, Inca adds a degree of sophistication to the typical raw Andean sound, with Navia and Grisman providing masterful string flourishes. The Sukay Workbook ♪♪♪♪♪ (MelBay Publications, 1998) is a delightful book-and-CD combination, written and beautifully designed by Howard. The book includes sheet music for various Sukay songs; lessons on kena, zampoña, and charango technique; and even a set of instructions on how to build a kena. The disc, Instrumental Music of the Andes, compiles cuts from Sukay's years on the Flying Fish label and more recent releases, with the whole package costing only a few dollars more than the CD would alone.

what to buy next: While most Sukay albums are largely instrumental, Love Songs of the Andes ♪♪♪♪ (Sukay World Music, 1995, prod. Eddy Navia, Quentin Howard) presents an appealing variety of vocal selections.



the rest:
Instrumental Music of the Andes ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1989/Sukay World Music, 1996)
Cumbre (The Summit) ♪♪♪½ (Sukay World Music, 1990/1995)
Naivdad Andina ♪♪♪½ (Sukay World Music, 1993)
Encueritros (Meetings) ♪♪♪½ (Sukay World Music, 1995)

worth searching for: The out-of-print Flying Fish releases culled on The Sukay Workbook are all worth having in whole if you can find them; scan the used record shops for: Music of the Andes ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1978), Socavon ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1985), Tutayay ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1986), Mama Luna ♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1987), and Huayrasan ♪♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1988).

solo outings:
Eddy Navia:
En Charango (Sukay World Music)
Mozart en Machu Picchu ♪♪♪♪ (Sukay World Music, 1995)

influences:
⏮ Village music of the Andes

Jeffrey Muhr

Yma Sumac

Incan and South American folk

Born Zoila Emperatriz Charrari del Castillo, c. 1921–28, in Ichocan, Peru. Based in Los Angeles, CA, USA.

The woman North America came to know as Yma Sumac developed a phenomenal voice with what is often reported to have been a five-octave range. (Granted, this sounds unlikely, but objective observers documented that she could indeed span four-and-a-half octaves.) She was discovered at an early age and performed on radio and in movies throughout South America. In the 1940s she came to the U.S., and in 1950 signed with Capitol Records, where she was paired with the incomparable Les Baxter as arranger. Sumac made a career singing Americanized versions of Incan and South American folk songs, until leaving the label in 1959. She continued performing regularly and recording whenever there was interest—just as she does today.

what to buy: Voice of the Xtabay ♪♪♪♪ (The Right Stuff, 1996, prod. Les Baxter) is a reissue compiling Sumac's original Voice of the Xtabay and Inca Taqul albums, her most popular releases; the former includes some great work by Baxter. Mambo! Yma Sumac ♪♪♪½ (The Right Stuff, 1996, reissue prod. Tom Cartwright) is exactly what the title advertises, with tracks such as "Bo Mambo," "Goomba Boomba," "Malambo No. 1," and "Five Bottle Mambo."

the rest:
Sampler Exotica ♪♪♪ (EMD/Capitol, 1996)
Legend of the Sun Virgin ♪♪♪ (The Right Stuff, 1996)
Legend of the Jivaro ♪♪♪ (The Right Stuff, 1996)
Fuego Del Ande ♪♪♪ (The Right Stuff, 1996)

worth searching for: Miracles ♪♪♪ (London, 1972) is an uncommon rock outing. Sumac also cut a track for Stay Awake: Interpretations of Vintage Disney Films ♪♪½ (A&M, 1988), an homage to the mouse factory by various modern artists.

influences:
⏮ Les Baxter, Perez Prado, Xavier Cugat, Martin Denny, Juan Garcia Esquivel, Rosemary Clooney ⏭ Combustible Edison, Love Jones

Jim DeRogatis

Ron Sunsinger

Traditional Native American, electronic, ambient

Born 1957, in California, USA. Based in Albuquerque, NM, USA.

An adopted grandson of the Cheyenne, Lakota, and Hopi tribes, Sunsinger is a musician, studio-owner, ceremonial artist, and craftsman (he makes ritual objects used by tribal shamans). A collaboration with studio wizard Michael Stearns resulted in 1994's Singing Stones, an exploration of the aural and spiritual mysteries of Native American religious practice. Use of ceremonially decorated "singing stones" struck on granite outcroppings at certain ritual sites in the Southwest was discovered to produce chimes of the utmost clarity and depth. Archaeological evidence indicates such places were sacred at a time long before recorded history. Sunsinger and Stearns got permission from tribal elders to bring recording equipment to one site, and captured sonic phenomena of an almost eerie beauty and power. The two later collaborated with Steve Roach on Kiva.

what to buy: Singing Stones ♪♪♪♪♪ (Fathom/Hearts of Space, 1994, prod. Michael Stearns, Ron Sunsinger), with its resonant title implements backed by traditional Native American singers and instrumentation, as well as synths, tape-loops, a Tibetan singing bowl, and the ambient coyotes and crickets of the Apache Ridge, is a brilliant achievement. Soaring, rippling, indeed hallucinogenic tones combine with the elemental dignity and simplicity of the subject matter to produce a music evocative of ghosts and ancient belief. It is majestic, visionary work, and a must-have for lovers of world music and psychic innerspace.

what to buy next: Musical world explorer Steve Roach joined the pair for Kiva ♪♪♪♪ (Fathom/Hearts of Space, 1995, prod. Steve Roach, Michael Stearns, Ron Sunsinger). A "kiva" is described as "an unbroken circle of the Earth . . . the church within her womb," and the album attempts to capture the ecstasies of four types of Native American ceremony. Sunsinger's

"Mother Ayahuasca" is a 15-minute meditation inspired by a psychedelic sacrament made from the bark of a South American jungle vine. All three artists collaborate on the ethereal closing track, "Trust and Remember." The album is a very worthy follow-up to Singing Stones, but without the former's free-fall spaciness.

influences:
Tangerine Dream, Mother Earth
see also: Steve Roach

Ron Garmon

Super Rail Band of Bamako

See: Rail Band

Super Cat

Dancehall, ragga

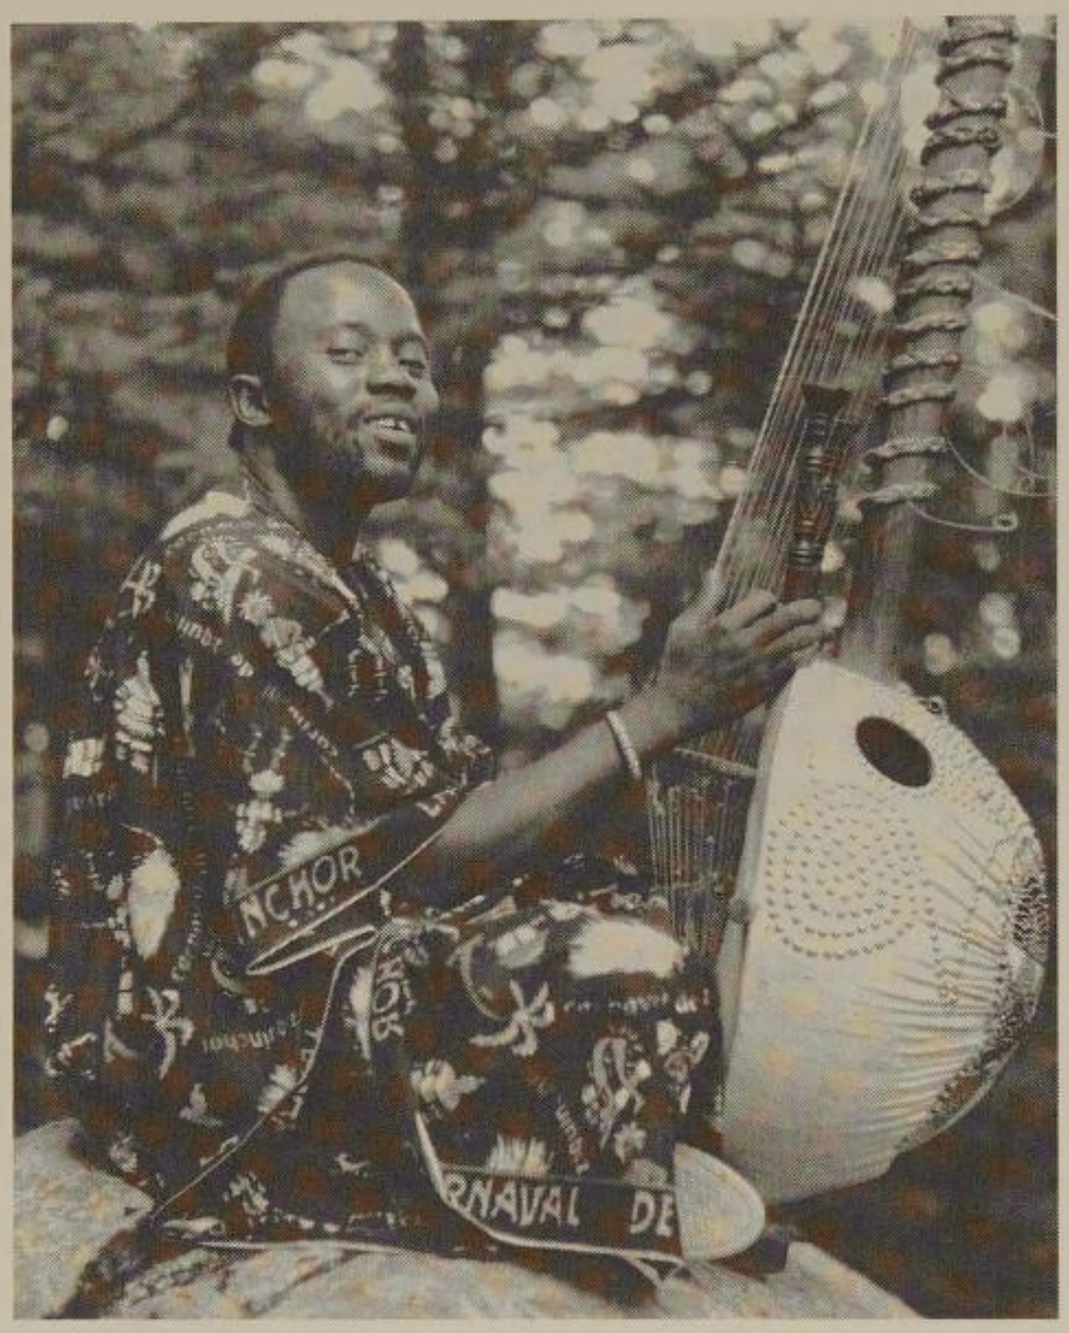
Born William Maragh, 1963, in Kingston, Jamaica. Based in Kingston, Jamaica.

Born of mixed African and East Indian descent, William Maragh's surname is Hindi for "great king" or "king of kings," though his music has always championed the pauper. Maragh was dubbed Super Cat while serving a term in Jamaica's General Penitentiary in the early '80s—mainly because of his ability to always land on his feet. Once free, Super Cat approached the microphone with a new ferocity, and became the top deejay at Stereo Mars and Kilimanjaro Sound Systems. At the latter, fellow deejay Early B gave him the second half of his nickname—"The Wild Apache"—in punning reference to his heritage. Super Cat first distinguished himself on wax in 1985 with "Trash & Ready," an excellent toast (reggae rap) over the famed "Sleng Teng" rhythm. A year later, with former Technique Winston Riley producing, he released "Boops," a memorably humorous rant about wealthy sugar daddies and their sweet-toothed young female companions. The song is now considered a deejay classic in Jamaica and at the time spawned a string of sequels from other artists. Blessed with an international perspective, his superb "Mud Up" single featured some extraordinary hip-hop scratching and turntablism. In the late '80s, Super Cat founded the Wild Apache imprint and subsequently released the 12-inch "Too Greedy," an excoriating insider depiction of the ravages of crack cocaine, which had just made a deadly incursion onto the island. In 1991, he teamed with Jamaican-born rapper Heavy D. and dancehall singer Frankie Paul on the compelling "combo" single "Big and Broad." However, rumors swirled when he was pummeled with beer bottles after a poor performance at that year's Sting concert (an annual reggae showcase not related to the gentleman riddim-dabbler of same name) and responded by threatening to draw a gun on the audience. Mere months later, Super Cat was arrested for the murder of deejay Nitty Gritty, who was shot dead just outside the Super Power record shop in Brooklyn. The Cat was cleared in 1992, though the murder remains unsolved. Wasting no time, Super Cat instantly claimed redemption on the hip-hop–influenced Don Dada, the title cut a Godfather-wise microphone rebuke to newly rising deejays Shabba Ranks and Ninjaman. 1995's The Struggle Continues sustained Super Cat's place as a deejay elder with a keen and eloquent ability to express the realities of the "sufferah"'s life. His description of ragga (digital reggae) music in the book Reggae Routes (Kevin Obrien Chang, Temple University Press) could just as easily be an assessment of his own spellbinding microphone excursions: "It's from people coming out of the street. Out of the ghetto. And these are not people that live soft. They live hard. Suffer hard. So what they got to sing about is nothing too soft. They singing about everyday living. Sufferation. What's going on in the ghetto."

what to buy: The Good, the Better, the Best ♪♪♪♪ (Sony, 1999, prod. various) is armed to the hilt with many of Super Cat's greatest and edgiest microphone adventures, including "Ghetto Red Hot," "Too Greedy," "Forgive Me Jah," a wicked hip-hop remix of "Don Dada," the marauding "Scalp Dem" (with Wu-Tang Clan's Method Man), and the old-school dancehall reminiscence "A-Class Rub-a-Dub," a terrific collaboration with deejay originator U-Roy and dancehall progenitor Sugar Minott—from the roots to the fruits, kid! Also included is much of Super Cat's work with his Wild Apache crew, most notably the Jamaican smash "Cabin Stabbin'," which is not a tale about a remote murder, but rather ragga slang for a particularly voracious version of the wild thing. It's a pity that "Boops" and many of the original Jamaican mixes of the above singles were not included.

what to buy next: Available as an import from Ernie B's Reggae (P.O. Box 5019, El Dorado Hills, CA 95762, phone: (916) 939-0578, e-mail: ErnieB@calweb.com), Si Boops Deh ♪♪♪½ (Techniques, 1986, prod. Winston Riley, Prince Jammy) is a nice companion to the compilation above, as it does include "Boops"—the prized, dancehall-ruling single that showcases Super Cat's aggressive, tongue-rolling style and shrewd, imaginative lyrical flow over Steely & Clevie's digital renovation of the glorious rocksteady rhythm from Marcia Griffiths's "Feel Like Jumping." The album also features Super Cat's excellent take on the "Sleng Teng" riddim, "Trash & Ready," and one of his most dramatic, thoughtful and socially conscious ragga-raps, "Cry Fi De Youth." Don Dada ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1992, prod. various) contains the original mixes of both the sage title cut and "Ghetto Red Hot," along with the first U.S. release of the rare "Mud Up" single.

foday musa suso



Foday Musa Suso

the rest:

Sweets for My Sweet ♪♪♪ (VP, 1990)
(With Nicodemus, Junior Cat, and Junior Demus) The Good, the Bad, the Ugly & the Crazy ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1994)
(With Nicodemus and Junior Demus) Cabin Stabbin' ♪♪♪ (VP, 1994)
The Struggle Continues ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1995)

influences:

- Winston Riley, Buro Banton, Tenor Saw, Nicodemus, Lone Ranger, U-Roy, Sugar Minott, Chaka Demus fans of this artist may also like:

- Apache Indian, Shabba Ranks, Lukie D., Junior Cat, Cutty Ranks, Mad Cobra, Bounty Killer, Merciless

see also: Marcia Griffiths, Sugar Minott, Shabba Ranks, the Techniques

Todd Shanker

Foday Musa Suso

Traditional and experimental Manding griot kora music

Born 1950s, in Gambia. Based in Chicago, IL, USA.

Foday Musa Suso spans the ancient world of Gambia's Manding griots (oral historians) and the most modern of musical settings, from jazz and techno to new age and even the contemporary classical of Philip Glass. Suso was raised to play the 21-string harp/lute called the kora, and to recite the ancient glories of the Manding people. But from his childhood, when he first saw an airplane flying overhead and wondered whence it came, he was destined to do far more than that. Suso went to Ghana to teach kora in 1974, and a couple of years later, during the hubbub surrounding the publication of Alex Haley's Roots, Suso got the idea that Americans might be interested in his traditional music. He moved to Chicago in 1977, and wound up playing music for the famed book's filmed version. Once in the U.S., Suso made connections, including Don Cherry—a partner in Suso's first American group, Mandingo Griot Society—and Herbie Hancock, with whom Suso went on to make a number of recordings. Suso's 1984 release Watto Sitta revealed him as an early innovator in the area of Manding electric pop. He has continued to collaborate and innovate, including memorable sessions with Bill Laswell, Philip Glass, and the Kronos Quartet. In 1995, during one of his frequent visits to Gambia, Suso helped to create a landmark recording, Jali Kunda, which reunites the wandering adventurer with the ongoing rituals and settings of griot music back home.

what to buy: Jali Kunda ♪♪♪♪½ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1996, prod. Bill Laswell) has Suso returning to his ancestral home for an intimate series of sessions in the field. The release comes with a beautiful book of photographs and text (and is reviewed at greater length in the Compilations section of this volume). Dreamtime ♪♪♪♪ (CMP, 1990, prod. Bill Laswell, Foday Musa Suso) is a fine example of Suso's work in America, featuring the acoustic side of his music.

what to buy next: Village Life ♪♪♪½ (Columbia, 1985, prod. Bill Laswell, Herbie Hancock) captures the early and promising moments of Suso's fruitful collaboration with Herbie Hancock.

what to avoid: New World Power ♪♪½ (Axiom, 1991, prod. Bill Laswell) puts Suso in a driving but drab electronic context.

influences:

- Jali Nyama Suso, Malamini Jobarteh

see also: Kronos Quartet, Bill Laswell, Adam Rudolph

Banning Eyre

Dave Swarbrick

British folk and folk-rock

Born April 5, 1941, in New Malden, Surrey, England. Based in Coventry, England.

Dave Swarbrick's friend Beryl Marriott deserves the thanks of music fans everywhere—she is the one believed to have persuaded the young "Swarb" to switch instruments from piano to fiddle. Swarbrick made the fiddle his lover; he made it sing and groan, he danced and crooned with it, he wore out his instruments and, in turn, let them nearly wear him out. Swarbrick began as a "straight" folk artist with the Ian Campbell Folk Group. After guesting on folk-rock institution-to-be Fairport Convention's Unhalfbricking, he joined the group for its seminal Liege and Lief. Fairport, which transformed so many who passed through it, changed Swarbrick into a singer and composer as well as a fiddler. He remained with the group until 1979, and his departure ended the band, however briefly. Years of electrified fiddling had left him nearly deaf, but he continued working—mostly in acoustic settings—with fellow Fairport alum Simon Nicol, with Martin Carthy (a duet partner going back to 1968), and in the group Whippersnapper with Chris Leslie (who would join Fairport in 1997). He was also in the Keith Hancock Band with Ruari MacFarlane and Carthy. Swarbrick has suffered some health problems of late, which seem to be what led to an impressive, albeit premature, obituary in the London Daily Telegraph of April 20, 1999. ("It's not the first time I've died in Coventry," he later quipped.) He still performs in small groups and shows up at Fairport's reunion festivals from time to time. His imprint on that band—as a performer and as a personality—is its most consistent characteristic. As a solo artist and in his other projects, Swarb is likewise full of fire and passion, romanticism and rough-hewn minstrelsy.

what to buy: Smiddyburn/Flittin' ♪♪♪♪♪ (Raven, 1981/1996) is the essential Swarb starter kit. Swarbrick says in the liner notes that both of the collected albums were recorded within a two-week period in July 1981. Joining Swarbrick are Simon Nicol, Dave Pegg, Dave Mattacks, Richard Thompson, Beryl Marriott, Bruce Rowland, John McCormick, and Roger Marriott in various configurations. Aside from the marvelous instrumentals, Swarb sings Sandy Denny's "It Suits Me Well"—and it does indeed. Folk on 2 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Cooking Vinyl, 1996), recorded for the BBC in 1991 as a commemoration of Swarb's 50th birthday, is an excellent collection of solo and group recordings, including several with Fairport Convention.

what to buy next: Swarbrick/Swarbrick II ♪♪♪♪♪ (Transatlantic, 1976–77/Castle, 1996, prod. Bruce Rowland), a re-release of Swarbrick's first two solo albums on one CD, features many of his cronies, including Carthy. The 1991 performance released as Live at Jackson's Lane ♪♪♪♪ (Gadfly, 1996) is rather spare—just voice and fiddle—but it's a rare chance to hear Swarb in concert, droll comments and all.

influences:

⏮ Beryl Marriott, Ian Campbell, Martin Carthy

⏭ Sandy Denny, Ric Sanders, Eliza Carthy, Ashley MacIsaac

see also: Ian Campbell Folk Group, Martin Carthy, Fairport Convention, A.L. Lloyd

Pamela Murray Winters

turlough o'carolan

One of Ireland's greatest composers and poets, Turlough O'Carolan (1670–1738) was born in County Nobber, Ireland, to a poor farm family. When O'Carolan lost his sight, he was taught how to play the harp by his patron, Màire MacDermott Roe, and took up the vocations of wandering minstrel, composer, and music tutor. Of the over 200 O'Carolan tunes that survive today, the bulk were written in honor of friends, patrons, or those who offered him hospitality during his travels. O'Carolan's heavily ornamented compositions form the backbone of traditional Irish music as we know it. Although he wrote for the harp, his tunes have been widely performed on other instruments, notably fiddle, guitar, and pipes. O'Carolan's works were profoundly influenced by Italian classical composers of his day, including Vivaldi, Corelli, and Gemaniani. Indeed, O'Carolan's lush, vivid melodies would probably be considered classical music today if they had been written in a salon in Italy rather than in a series of farms and estates in Ireland.

Michael Parrish

The Swedish Sax Septet

Jazz, folk, traditional Swedish

Formed 1990, in Sweden. Based in Sweden.

Roland Keijser, tenor and soprano saxophone; Kjell Westling, soprano saxophone, clarinet; Anders Rosén, alto saxophone; Jonas Simonsson, bass; Sten Källman, baritone saxophone, soparino; Thomas Ringdahl, soprano saxophone; Jonny Wartel, tenor saxophone, soparino.

Combining a love of American jazz idioms with traditional Scandinavian forms and a wickedly subtle sense of humor, the Septet's music is an astringent and bracing melange of jazz and world influences. Starting from a commitment to honor and preserve such classical genres as the polska (polka) and the halling (a traditional male dance demanding great acrobatic skill and endurance), their music blends such vastly divergent influences as Thelonious Monk, Miles Davis, the European avant-garde, and Moroccan and Afro-Caribbean horn styles. All seven members are multi-instrumentalists who have been active in the Scandinavian recording scene for decades.

7/4/6 sweeney's men

what's available: Riff-Ola ♪♪♪♪ (NOMAD, 1996, prod. Anders Rosén) is the Septet's only release to be had in the U.S. at this writing, and is well worth seeking out for those interested in the farther reaches of jazz. With spare production, biting performances, and arrangements that veer brilliantly from the haunted to the hilarious, the band effortlessly achieves a high-modernist "shock of the new" within the context of an unflagging folkie classicism. Tracks like "Limping Waltz," "Thaw Tune," "When the Devil Danced on the Ruins of Fredrikshad," and the title piece attain incredible levels of aural beauty. The soloists work the simple tunes into delicate and spidery shapes, with the whole taking on an at-once austere and good-humored dignity that approaches Miles Davis or Rashaan Roland Kirk. One longs for the outfit's next release (or even a live album), and MusicHound recommends it unheard.

influences:

◀◀ Greig, Scoenberg, Miles Davis, Theolonious Monk

Ron Garmon

Sweeney's Men

Irish folk

Formed 1966, in Galway, Ireland. Disbanded 1969.

Andy Irvine, mandolin, harmonica, guitar; Johnny Moynihan, bouzouki, tin whistle; Terry Woods, six- and 12-string guitar. Other members included Joe Dolan, guitar; Henry McCullough, guitar.

During the late 1960s in Ireland, a new kind of folk group began to emerge. Influenced by the head-on ballad-singing style of the Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem, by the urban grit of the Dubliners, by the English folk club scene, and by Sean Ó Riada's ideas as expressed by the Chieftains, young people began to blend sensitive singing, basic accompaniment, and arranged instrumental passages in a totally new way. Among the first of these groups to make recordings was Sweeney's Men. Usually remembered as the great Irish folk group of the '60s, Sweeney's Men was formed in Galway in 1966, but spent much of its time on the Dublin and London folk scenes in the late '60s. The group consisted on its recordings of Andy Irvine (later of Planxty and Patrick Street), Johnny Moynihan (later of Planxty and De Dannan), and Terry Woods (later of Steeleye Span and the Pogues), who replaced original member Joe Dolan. Rock guitarist Henry McCullough, later of the Grease Band, was a member in between their two LPs and greatly influenced the later one. Indeed, many have contended that McCullough's period in Sweeney's Men was one of the earliest manifestations of folk-rock in either Britain or Ireland.

what's available: The compilation Time Was Never Here 1968–69 ♪♪♪♪ (Transatlantic/Demon, prod. Bill Leader) features almost all the music from the band's two LPs, Sweeney's Men 1968 and 1969's The Tracks of Sweeney, and echoes with historic moments. You'll hear, among other landmarks, the first time that most beloved of Greek imports, the bouzouki, was used in Irish music; it was Moynihan who started that trend. There's also the first time "Willy O' Winsbury" was sung to its now-familiar tune, as popularized by Ann Briggs, Pentangle, and other artists; Irvine erred when cross-referencing a ballad collection with its tune index, and connected the wrong melody to these words. It's a fabulous combination, and Irvine's sweet voice never sounded better than it does on this simple solo track. Still, Time Was Never Here isn't a history lesson, but a vibrant recording of contemporary Irish folk. Listened to as such, it has many other pleasures to offer. Woods's banjo and singing sound remarkably Appalachian, while Irvine's guitar, mandolin, and harmonica and Moynihan's bouzouki and whistle clearly foreshadow the Planxty/De Dannan style of playing that was yet to develop. Overall the originals haven't held up as well as the traditionals (heck, they were already a century old in 1968, so how were a few more years going to matter?), but most of the goods are wonderfully played, if quirkily sung, and still quite fresh. Another bonus here is the sleeve notes, which contain a lot of information taken from interviews with band members and friends. Everything adds up to a rare and wonderful glimpse of a remarkable band and a pivotal moment in history—this is an absolute must for serious Irish music fans.

worth searching for: Sweeney's Men 1968 ♪♪♪♪ (Transatlantic, 1969), now out of print, contained mostly traditional material that stands the test of time.

influences:

◀◀ The Clancy Brothers & Tommy Makem, the Dubliners, the Chieftains

▶▶ Planxty, De Dannan, Patrick Street, East Wind, Steeleye Span, the Pogues, Horslips see also: De Dannan, Andy Irvine, Patrick Street, Planxty, the Pogues, Steeleye Span

Steve Winick

Sweet Honey in the Rock

International folk

Formed November 1973, in Washington, DC, USA. Based in Washington, DC, USA.

Variable membership over many years, most recently including: Bernice Johnson Reagon, vocals; Nitanju Bolade Casel, vocals; Aisha Kahlil, vocals; Ysaye Maria Barnwell, vocals; Shirley Childress Johnson, vocals; Evelyn Maria Harris, vocals.

Growing out of a theater workshop that Bernice Johnson Reagon hosted at the Black Repertory Company in Washington, D.C., in the early 1970s, Sweet Honey in the Rock have surpassed even their founder's vision. Performing mostly a cappella and using tradition-rooted harmonies, the women sing out against racism, economic struggle, and sexual oppression. From their inception, Sweet Honey's mixture of spirituals, gospel, jazz, blues, rap, and traditional African songs has made them one of the top-ranked contemporary folk groups. They were nominated for a Grammy for their song "Emergency" in 1990, and got one the next year for their interpretations of two Leadbelly compositions, "Sylvie" and "Gray Goose." One of the first groups to feature a full-time American Sign Language interpreter (Shirley Childress Johnson), Sweet Honey celebrated their 20th anniversary with the book We Who Believe in Freedom, published by Anchor/Doubleday in 1993. The group has been showcased in numerous films and television documentaries; a performance in celebration of Martin Luther King Day was broadcast nationally on PBS, and their version of Sojourner Truth's tribute to the Colored Michigan regiment, set to the music of "John Brown's Body," was heard in the acclaimed historical series The Civil War. Noways tired, they run on as an institution of international folk and of "world" music from right where they are.

what to buy: With 34 tracks covering Sweet Honey's first dozen years on record, the double CD Selections 1976–1988 ♪♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1997, compilation prod. Bernice Johnson Reagon) is a masterpiece of inspiring harmonies, African-American hand percussion, and politically conscious lyricism.

what to buy next: Recorded during a November 1987 performance, At Carnegie Hall ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1988) captures the dynamic energies and awareness-raising of the band's concerts. The first of Sweet Honey's albums to be produced by a member other than Reagon, 25 ♪♪♪½ (Rykodisc, 1998, prod. Ysaye M. Barnwell) not only celebrates the group's first quarter-century, but signals a new direction with the addition of drums and percussion. The album ranges from the church-like tunes "Greed" and "Sound Bite from Beijing," to the wordless "Chant" (inspired by an African Ituri rainforest Pygmy tribe), a harmony-filled rendition of Bob Marley's "Redemption Song," and a re-make of Reagon's "Sometime," which first appeared on the group's album Good News.

the rest:

Sweet Honey in the Rock ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1976)
B'lieve I'll Run On . . . See What the End's Gonna Be ♪♪♪ (Redwood, 1978)
Good News ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1982)
The Other Side ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1986)
Feel Something Drawing Me On ♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1989)
Breaths ♪♪♪½ (Flying Fish, 1989)
All for Freedom ♪♪♪½ (Music for Little People, 1989)
In This Land ♪♪♪ (Earthbeat!, 1992)
I Got Shoes ♪♪♪ (Music for Little People, 1992)
We Who Believe in Freedom ♪♪♪ (Earthbeat!, 1993)
Still on the Journey ♪♪♪½ (Earthbeat!, 1993) Sacred Ground ♪♪♪ (Earthbeat!, 1995)

worth searching for: A live version of "Crying for Freedom" is included on Ben & Jerry's Newport Folk Festival: Turn of the Decade ♪♪♪ (Red House, 1991, prod. Bob Feldman).

influences:

⏮ Odetta, Paul Robeson, the Freedom Singers, Pete Seeger

⏭ Tracy Chapman, Toshi Reagon, Casselberry-Dupree, Kim & Reggie Harris

Craig Harris

Synergy

World-flavored, classically influenced percussion music

Formed 1974, in Sydney, Australia. Based in Sydney, Australia.

Core membership (since 1987): Michael Askill, artistic director, percussion; Ian Cleworth, drums, koto; Rebecca Lagos, percussion, timpani, cimbalom, piano; Colin Piper, percussion, piano. (All members are from Australia.) The group is joined by three associate percussionists/assistants for 12 month periods each.

Not Larry Fast's pioneering electronic project, this Synergy was dreamed up by founding member Michael Askill during rehearsals with the Sydney Symphony Orchestra. Combining the "elements of Sydney and energy," the ensemble (also known from time to time as Sydney Percussion, the Sydney Percussion Ensemble, and Synergy Percussion Limited) debuted in 1974 when experimental musician David Ahearn presented their first performance as part of his A-Z Music series. Their first official appearance as "Synergy" was in 1978 at the Art Gallery of New South Wales. Michael Askill, Colin Piper, Ian Bloxsom, and Ron Reeves were the founders, and David Clarence, Graeme Leak, and Richard Miller have been part of the group. Synergy's repertoire includes works by Béla Bartók, Pierre Boulez, Benjamin Britten, John Cage, Maki Ishii, Red Norvo, Somei Satoh, and Steve Reich; they have performed everything from fife and drum music of the American Revolution to percussion music of West Africa. Numerous guest musicians, choirs, dance companies, actresses—even an Indonesian gamelan ensemble—have performed with Synergy all over Australia, as well as in Paris, Taipei, Hong Kong, the U.K., and New Zealand. Synergy is one of its country and region's preeminent forces in new music, promoting the works of composers from Asia and the Pacific Rim. Michael Askill himself has become one of Australia's most important musical figures, working with such other ensembles as Southern Crossings and John Williams's septet, and also celebrated as a composer and soloist. Synergy is Australia's longest-running contemporary music group, and while percussion remains at the heart of its performances, Askill, Cleworth, Lagos, and Piper also include elements of music-theater and electronics in their repertoire.

what to buy: Matsuri ♪♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1994, prod. Synergy) demonstrates the incredible influence Japanese music has had on the core quartet.

what to buy next: Taiko ♪♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1996, prod. Synergy) is inspired by the philosophy and sounds of Japan's taiko drumming tradition. The quartet joins with Japanese flutist/composer Sen Amano and shakuhachi flute master Riley Kelly Lee in a series of musical dialogues. The sounds range from the traditional Japanese flute called shinobue to the taiko and gongs of the ensemble Arahan. Cleworth contributes a composition utilizing percussion instruments, shells, and found objects.

the rest:
Impact ♪♪♪♪ (ABC Classics, 1996)

worth searching for: Fata Morgana ♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1995, prod. Michael Askill) is the collaboration between Michael Askill and Turkish virtuoso instrumentalist Omar Faruk Tekbilek. Ghassan Barakat, Ian Cleworth, and Rebecca Lagos also lend their talents to this musical exploration of the Middle East, Asia, and West Africa, as well as Western jazz and classical. Salomé ♪♪♪♪ (Black Sun, 1998, prod. Michael Askill) is the duo's traditional soundtrack to the Bible story. Askill is on Black Sun's Heinrich Schütz Der Schwanengesang (The Swan-Song) —performed by Roland Peelman and the Song Company in the Sydney Opera House—and is credited with the superb production of Tango ♪♪♪♪ (Black Sun, 1996, prod. Michael Askill), featuring Daniel Binelli and his self-titled septet recorded in Buenos Aires. Free Radicals: Voice Percussion & Didgeridoo ♪♪♪♪ (Black Sun, 1997, prod. Michael Askill) is the combined force of Michael Askill/David Hudson/Alison Low Choy/Alison Addington. This is the soundtrack to the stage production Free Radicals by Graeme Murphy of the Sidney Dance Company. Fine experimental work with the title components (including the last-named Australian Aboriginal drone instrument).

solo outings:
Michael Askill:
Australian Percussion (Black Sun, 1995)
(With Riley Lee and Michael Atherton) Shoalhaven Rise ♪♪♪♪ (Black Sun, 1995) Rhythm in the Abstract N/A (Black Sun, 1999)

Ian Cleworth:
Yarrageh: Nocturne for Percussion and Orchestra (ABC/PolyGram)

influences:
Classical, Japanese, avant-garde, Australian Aboriginal repertoire

see also: David Hudson, Omar Faruk Tekbilek

Stacy Meyn

Philip Nchipe Tabane /Malombo

South African jazz fusion

Born 1930s, in Mamelodi, Pretoria, South Africa. Based in Mamelodi, Pretoria, South Africa.

The respect guitarist Philip Tabane commands among his fellow musicians has never been mirrored in his treatment by record labels, although he has shared stages with such jazz legends as Miles Davis, Herbie Hancock, and Ella Fitzgerald in the United States and Europe, and toured extensively during the 1970s and 1980s. Not by design, Tabane's performances today take place principally in the vicinity of his Mamelodi township home, near Pretoria. His trio Malombo—the Venda language's word for "spirits"—was formed in the early 1960s; it has united Tabane with two dynamic percussionists, Oupa Mahapi Monareng on Malombo drums and Raymond Mphune Motau on various hand percussion, since 1976. Considered South Africa's preeminent guitar hero by many, Tabane (who also sings and plays flute, drums, bass, and pennywhistle) works in a style strongly rooted in traditional idioms from the Sotho, Amandebele, and Venda cultures of the northern Transvaal province. On this foundation he has built a style of free-form acoustic jazz based on soft percussion and intricate chords, resulting in the unique Malombo sound.

Tabane turned professional after winning the 1964 Castle Lager Jazz Contest and, since that time, has produced one of the smaller—but more significant—catalogs in world music. Although he left school at age 12, Tabane was awarded an honorary doctorate of music by the University of Venda in 1998, presented by Chancellor Cyril Ramaphosa, former secretary general of the African National Congress. "Ke A Bereka," from Tabane's recent CD of the same name, won the award for best single at the 1998 South African Music Awards. A 1986 Montreux Jazz Festival video provides a rare look at Tabane, and a film about the three original band members—Tabane, Abbey Cindi, and Julian Bahula—has been planned for South African television. Recently, Malombo's music was heard on Facing the Truth, Bill

Philip Nchipe Tabane

Moyers's PBS special examining personal implications of South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission hearings.

what's available: In this instance, buy anything you can get your hands on. Unh! ♪♪♪♪♪ (WEA/Elektra/Nonesuch, 1989) is generally available in the States. Malombo also has tracks on both Thunder before Dawn: Indestructible Beat of Soweto, Vol. 2 (Earthworks/Caroline, 1987) and Freedom Fire: Indestructible Beat of Soweto, Vol. 3 (Earthworks/Caroline, 1990), each of which is reviewed in this book's Compilations section. To experience Tabane's undiminished artistic vitality from several perspectives within his long career, you'll thank yourself for digging up his most recent South African recording, Ke A Bereka ♪♪♪♪♪ (Tusk, 1996), and the older Pele Pele ♪♪♪♪♪ (Tusk, 1976, prod. Peter Davidson, Philip Tabane), as well as a 1997 re-release of Malombo on the German label Kijim.

influences:

⏮ Wes Montgomery, John McLaughlin

⏭ Sakhile, Bayete, Amampondo, Malopoets

Linda Vartoogian

Tabou Combo

Compas

Formed 1968, in Port-au-Prince, Haiti. Re-formed 1971, in Brooklyn, NY, USA. Based in Brooklyn, NY, USA.

Roger Eugene (Haiti), lead vocals; Yvon Andre (Haiti), percussion, vocals; Yves Joseph (Haiti), congas, vocals, songwriter; Herman Nau (Haiti), drum kit, vocals; Elysee Pyronneau (Haiti), lead guitar; Jean Claude Jean (Haiti), rhythm guitar; Albert Chancy Jr. (Haiti), guitar (1968–69); Gary Resil (Haiti), rhythm guitar; Yves Albert Abel (Haiti), bass guitar; Adolph Chancy (Haiti), bass (1968–69); Raynald Valme (Haiti), congas; Daniel Pierre (Haiti), keyboards; Tom Mitchell (USA), sax (early 1990s); David Weeks (USA), sax; Ken Watters (USA), trumpet (early 1990s); Curtis Ebe (USA), trumpet; Jason Forsythe (USA), trombone (early 1990s); Andre Atkins (USA), trombone; Ernst Crepsac (Haiti), keyboards, (1987–90).

Although they've been playing together for more than 30 years, the five-man core of Tabou Combo—Roger Eugene, Yvon Andre, Yves Joseph, Herman Nau, and Elysee Pyronneau—remains the same, an almost unheard-of feat in popular music, "world" or otherwise. Tabou Combo bases its sound on compas, a Haitian folk form that grew out of the collision of African rhythms with the French dance music of the slavemasters. In the early 1960s sax man Nemours Jean-Baptiste created "compas-direct" by adding Cuban music, especially the mambo, to the mix, and supercharging it with a hot horn section. In the mid-1960s younger bands began adding rock and salsa to the stew, scaling down the lineup to guitar, keys, bass, and drums. The result was dubbed "mini-jazz." (The mini refers to the mini skirt, a popular craze at the time, and in Haiti all bands play "jazz.")

Tabou Combo started as Nau's band, Los Incognitos de Petionville. Nau was already an influential musician; his use of traditional rhythms—he played the kata on his ride cymbal—had boosted the western drum kit to a position of prominence in compas bands. After a series of personnel shifts, the core of today's Tabou Combo came together in 1968. They began adding hints of James Brown, the Rolling Stones, and Sly Stone to the mix, and their first album, Haiti, was an immediate sensation. In 1969 one of the founding members, Albert Chancy Jr., quit the band, and things fell apart. The country, under the dictatorship of Papa Doc Duvalier, was also falling apart, and one by one the Tabous drifted up to New York City, which has the biggest Haitian population of any city outside of Port-au-Prince.

When the band members rediscovered each other in Brooklyn, they began playing again, hooked up with Fred Paul, who had just started Mini Records to service the growing needs of New York's Haitian fans, and began recording. Their second album, 8th Sacrament, took off like a shot behind the single "New York City," a catchy tune that included French, Spanish, and English lyrics. When the album was released in France it quickly rose to the top of the charts on the strength of that single, which remains one of the band's most-requested tunes. The album went gold in France and made Tabou Combo international stars.

In the late 1970s the band added an American horn section and began writing charts with an R&B flavor, hoping to crack the African American market and become some sort of Caribbean Earth, Wind & Fire. They also changed their logo, using heavy metal/sci-fi funk lettering, and began dressing in "space suits" a la Funkadelic. Luckily, they didn't try to change their sound to go with the new image, and the hits kept coming. In the 1980s the band got political and began asking people to consider the problems of racism and poverty, although the music's energy and groove remained constant. As general interest in world music intensifies, the Combo has begun to pick up more non-Haitian fans. Their yearly summer concerts in New York City's Central Park draw upwards of 20,000 people, and they've become a regular attraction at the New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival.

what to buy: 8th Sacrament ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mini, 1974) is the album that rocketed Tabou Combo to the top of the world-music charts, and contains their monster hit "New York City." Every track is strong; it's almost a greatest hits package all on its own.

what to buy next: Once you get bitten by the Tabou bug you may not be able to get enough, so Best of Tabou Combo, Volumes 1–5 ♪♪♪♪ (Sonodisc, 1995), a French release that collects most of the hits the band has cut over the past 30 years, should give you a good start into the back catalog. But be warned: Tabou Combo is a very popular band throughout the French-speaking world and, as with any group with a spectacular three-decades-and-counting history, their hits and their "best of" albums have been packaged and repackaged many times, by many labels, in many countries. Read the track listings and take note of copyright dates to make sure you're not buying the same songs in a different wrapper.

best of the rest:

Haiti ♪♪♪♪♪ (Ibo, 1969)
The Music Machine ♪♪♪♪½ (Mini, 1978)
Superstars ♪♪♪♪½ (Disques Esperance, 1988)
Aux Antillies ♪♪♪♪½ (Zafem, 1989)
Live au Zenith ♪♪♪♪ (Mini, 1990)
Zap Zap ♪♪♪♪½ (Zafem, 1991)

influences:

◀◀ Nemours Jean-Baptiste, Ibo Combo, Coupé Cloué, Shleu Shleu

▶▶ Boukman Eksperyans, Ra Ra Machine, Zin, Zéklé

j. poet

Rachid Taha

Rai, Arabic pop, world-dance

Born 1958, in Oran, Algeria. Based in Paris, France.

Rachid Taha got his first taste of show business spinning records at African and Arabic clubs in his adoptive home of Lyons, France. "I played a real patchwork: Arabic, salsa, rap, funk, anything you could dance to," Taha recalls. The crowd's reaction to his international smorgasbord made Taha want to make his own music. He started a band called Carte de Sejour ("Green Card"). Like many immigrants, Taha was torn between his Algerian roots and the French and European culture that now surrounded him: Carte de Sejour played Arabic music in the manner of the Clash, very loud, almost metal." The band's first—and only—album was produced by former Gong guitarist Steve Hillage, who had become interested in the music of Egyptian pop diva Umm Kulthum. Hillage and Taha continued their collaboration after Carte de Sejour broke up, blending Arabic, pop, and dance music with Taha's radical, politically charged lyrics. Diwân, Taha's forth solo effort and his fifth project with Hillage, is also the most Arabic record of his career, an album Taha has characterized as "my version of John Lennon's Rock 'n' Roll album; covers of the Arabic singers and writers that inspired me to make music when I was young. I chose songs for their strong rhythms and the political poetry of their lyrics. Arabs in France are like blacks in the U.S., integrated yet separate. Music may be the best way we have to come to a real understanding of each other."

what's available: In Arabic, "Diwân" means a collection of poetry or songs. Diwân ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1998, prod. Steve Hillage) is Taha's most pleasing and most traditionally Arabic album; the vocals are full of passion, and the players include Egyptian master percussionist Hossam Ramsy. On Olé Olé ♪♪♪ (Mango, 1995) Taha mixes Arabic and club-friendly beats for an entertaining but not essential collection.

influences:

Khaled, Mohammed El Anka, Dahmane El Harrachi, Nasa El Ghiwane

see also: Hossam Ramzy

j. poet

Tahitian Choir

Traditional Polynesian vocal music

Based in Oparo, Tahiti.

The music of remote Rapa Iti would still be unknown were it not for the efforts of French record producer Pascal Nabet-Meyer. He visited Tahiti in 1981, inspired by the paintings of the French artist Gaugin, and heard about Rapa, an island 1,000 miles southeast of Tahiti that, with its 300 residents, was the last inhabited land before Antarctica. Told about a vocal group on Rapa that sang in quarter-tonal voices, he was determined to visit and record their singing. The recording trip took place in 1991, on Nabet-Meyer's return to Tahiti. When Nabet-Meyer finally arrived on Rapa he met Tetaria, the island's pastor, who introduced him to the people who practice himene, which is Tahitian for "song." Nabet-Meyer recorded the choir singing their oldest songs, those written before the arrival of the first European missionaries centuries before, as Rapa Iti. He returned again in 1994, to both record the native music and document native Rapa culture. "Within the choir, each group has its own melodic part," explains Nabet-Meyer, "and as there can be up to 16 groups, a complex web of voices develops. They sing a micro-tonal scale that has so far resisted the attempts of ethnomusicologists to chart it. We will need a new system to represent the drops between notes that give the glissando effect and polyphonic structure to the songs. The myths of Rapa tell us chants were once used to enter into other worlds; with these recordings I hope to let people step into the world of the Rapa."

what's available: Rapa Iti ♪♪♪♪ (Triloka, 1992, prod. Pascal Nabet-Meyer) is a magical recording of what may be the only Oceanic vocal music to remain uncontaminated by Western influences, full of odd meters, shifting time signatures, rhythmic grunts, and falsetto cries of ecstasy. Tahitian Choir, Vol. II ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1994) is slightly underproduced, but that only adds to its other-worldly charm.

see also: Rurutu Choir

j. poet

Takadja

West African traditional and traditional-based music

Formed 1989, in Montréal, Canada. Based in Montréal, Canada.

Francine Martel (Canada), djembé, djallé, wassakhumbas, berimbau; Oumar N'Diaye (Guinea), lead vocals, kenkeni, dundumba, djembé, boloï, cowbell, kirin, m'beng, gongoma; Robert Lépine (Canada), balafon, djembe, dundumba, kenkeni, vocals; Youssou Seck (Senegal), vocals, kenkeni, dundumba, m'beng, lamb, xin, n'der, gongoma; Nathalie Dussault (Canada), cora, vocals; Alassane Fall (Senegal), vocals, guitar, m'beng, balafon, taman, lamb, wassakhumbas (1996–present); Naby Camara (Guinea), balafon, vocals (1989–96).

Some white folks catch the vibe of Third World music and then just steal back across the border and revel in the rewards; others cross the culture line without ever double-crossing. Francine Martel is one of the latter, a French Canadian scholar and musician who's immersed herself in the discipline of West African drumming with seriousness and good faith. Upon returning to Canada from her first trip to Africa in 1980, she remembers, "a part of me had decided to stay"—so, over the subsequent two decades she would return regularly to Africa, managing to bring the continent home to North America as well by founding the ensemble Takadja. Aptly named after the Côte d'Ivoirian Guéré language's term for "to vibrate while dancing," Takadja is in many ways the world's most modest supergroup, its members quietly devoted to their craft while counting among them some of the most impressive credentials in international music. The group's Canadian members have all studied under African master drummers in the Motherland itself, and Takadja's African contingent has ancestral or professional roots in griot (musical/oral historian) lineages, the revered cultural preservation institution Koteba Ensemble of Abidjan, and the blockbuster worldbeat band Fatala (from which fellow African-in-Canada Alpha Yaya Diallo launched his acclaimed solo career). Takadja's sound is based around a flexible and formidable arsenal of drums, soulful vocals, and the delicate yet dynamic intertwine of the chiming balafon (African xylophone) and kora (African harp-lute). The repertoire is ritualistic and traditional, featuring some ancient pieces but actually many more originals, written with both fidelity to the old ways and strikingly new imagination. The music sparked by this meeting of cultures and bridging of centuries is irresistible: a rare and magical mix most Western listeners will find totally unfamiliar but instantly engaging.

what's available: Takadja has but two albums to show for a rigorous and wide-ranging touring history, but the competing demand for the group's live spectacle must be served, and most bands would be thankful to accomplish in an entire career what this band has in its earliest recordings. The life-affirming Takadja ♪♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1995, prod. Steve Roach) and Diyé ♪♪♪♪♪ (Black Sun, 1996, prod. Steve Roach) are two of the finest West African–oriented releases, and together represent one of the most listenable and legitimate Afro-Euro music fusions ever recorded. The first album's rhythms are by turns celebratory, sober, and stately, with rich choral vocals and duet interplay; spontaneous but precision musicianship; and sophisticated, attention-holding drumming in a spectrum of textures. The crystalline kora and balafon settings are interspersed with expert drum-ensemble workouts which are themselves downright melodious in their range of resonances, varied in tempo and mood like a symphonic suite—actually more so, as the elementality of the instrumentation forces an ingenuity on the ensemble that Western classical players need not engage. Drum groups highlight the second album too, which introduces even more melody through the prominent use of the traditional serdou flute. There are joyous rhythms; beautiful asymmetrical interweaves of vocals; structures epic in depth as well as length; and surprising but well-considered accompaniment from outside the native African musical sphere, including drones on the Australian Aboriginal didgeridoo and Brazilian berimbau. Both albums welcome the listener even further with informative and readable liner notes on song origins, group members, and instruments used—everything this captivating music will make you want to know.

influences:

◀◀ Sékou Camara Cobra, L'Ensemble Koteba d'Abidjan

▶▶ Frå Senegal Til Setesdal

Adam McGovern

Talking Heads

Pop, experimental

Formed 1975, in New York, NY, USA. Disbanded 1992.

David Byrne (Scotland) vocals, guitar; Tina Weymouth (USA) bass, synth; Chris Frantz (USA) drums; Jerry Harrison (USA) keyboards, guitar (1977–92).

Many current world-music fans were first turned on to African rhythms and Latin beats by Talking Heads. Encouraged by the eclectic listening habits of their producer, Brian Eno, David Byrne was checking out Fela Kuti, guitarist Jerry Harrison was experimenting with a fusion of American country and western and African highlife finger-picking, and Chris Frantz adapted African polyrhythmic drumming styles. By their last album Naked the band recorded with a full, international ensemble including the star of Mali's Rail Band Mory Kanté on kora (African harp-lute), and lesser-known session players like Abdou M'Boup on congas and talking drums, Yves N'Djock on guitar, and Manolo Badrena on percussion. Byrne's distinctive vocal expression and the band's knack for tight pop tunes belied the exotic origins of much of their music, but not so much that a new audience for international sounds wasn't inspired to go to the sources for more of what they'd enjoyed about Talking Heads.

what to buy: The band's fullest exploration of world music is on the ensemble performance of Naked ♪♪♪♪ (Sire, 1988), particularly on "Blind" with M'Boup's talking drums, N'Djock's highlife guitar, and Wally Badarou's synthesized conga drums. Riding in on the wave of his international success, Kanté made a guest appearance with his agile kora playing on "Mr. Jones" and "The Facts of Life."

what to buy next: You'll hear a gospel choir on "Road to Nowhere," the twang of country guitar, a hint of zydeco, blues, samba beats, and quirky U.S. pop on the best-of compilation Popular Favorites 1976–92: Sand in the Vaseline ♪♪♪♪ (Sire, 1992, prod. various). Fear of Music ♪♪♪ (Sire, 1979, prod. Brian Eno, Talking Heads) is noteworthy for "I Zimbra," based loosely on a track by legendary Nigerian bandleader Fela Kuti.

what to avoid: While the collaboration between Byrne and producer Eno on My Life in the Bush of Ghosts woof! (Sire, 1981) is often cited as the template for their subsequent ambient/worldbeat experiments, it has not aged well, and at best is an interesting piece of conceptual art.

the rest:

Talking Heads: 77 ♪♪♪ (Sire, 1977)
More Songs about Buildings and Food ♪♪♪ (Sire, 1978)
Remain in Light ♪♪♪½ (Sire, 1980)
The Name of This Band Is Talking Heads ♪♪½ (Sire, 1982)
Speaking in Tongues ♪♪♪ (Sire, 1983)
Stop Making Sense ♪♪♪ (Sire, 1984)
Little Creatures ♪♪♪♪ (Sire, 1985) True Stories ♪♪ (Sire, 1986)

influences:

◀◀ Fela Kuti, the Rail Band, Brian Eno, Silvio Rodriguez, Caetano Velozo, Gilberto Gil, Los Van Van, David Bowie

▶▶ Peter Gabriel, Arto Lindsay

see also: David Byrne, Brian Eno, Mory Kanté, Fela Kuti, Rail Band

David Poole

Tam Tam 2000

Funana, coladeira, zouk

Formed c. 1980, in Cape Verde. Based in Paris, France.

Belmiro Moniz, drums, percussion; Manuel Fernandez, percussion; Manuel Brito, bass, vocals; Adolphe Pauloby, lead guitar, vocals; Isidro Dominguez Bands, rhythm guitar, vocals; Edouard Moniz, lead vocals, percussion; Jean-Luc Lemble, keyboards. (All members are from Cape Verde.)

The dance band Tam Tam 2000 formed in Cape Verde, but is now based in Paris, where its members mix eclectic African and Caribbean strains with their Verdean rhythms. The group landed a track on the early Earthworks sampler, Afric Typic Collection, which gave them a big international boost.

what's available: The Best of Tam Tam 2000 ♪♪♪♪ (Melodie France) compilation has no info. on the label, but features "Zouk en Avant," which was included on Afric Typic Collection, and showcases the band's credible attempts at zouk (Antillean hybrid pop), soukous (African rumba), and son (Afro-Cuban folk), as well as Verde's own dance styles funana and coladeira (which sounds a bit like Trinidadian soca) and its bluesy morna. Sintia ♪♪♪♪ (Melodie France) has another blank label, but the recording quality and raw, unpolished performances would indicate it as an early effort, a down-home collection of morna, funana, and coladeira. No liner info on Sabe Cabo Verde ♪♪♪♪ (Melodie France) either, but this compilation is slickly produced and includes remakes of a couple of tunes from Sintia. Less international, with great interplay between the guitars and the keyboards and plenty of live (not programmed) percussion.

influences:

◀◀ Bulimundo, Finaçon

▶▶ Mendes Brothers

j. poet

Tambu

Soca

Born Chris Herbert, in Trinidad. Based in Port of Spain, Trinidad.

Tambu was the lead singer and main songwriter of Roots, a session band that backed up many famous soca singers in the studios of famed calypso label Charlie's Records. (Soca is a hugely popular modern variant of calypso.) When labelhead Rawlston Charles told Roots members they should think of doing gigs as a live band, they agreed. Charlie bought them their equipment and, as a tribute to his generosity, they became "Charlie's Roots." The group began its career with a regular Thursday night gig at the Atlantis Club in Port of Spain, where members added a bit of funk and pop

david parsons

David Parsons and his tape recorder have traveled the world to capture exotic sounds for mass consumption. A series of culture-specific surveys has set a new, high standard for world-music projects. The quality sonics, dogged research, and handsome presentation make each one a coveted artifact and an infinite source of pleasure and learning. The world owes David Parsons a vast reward for his years of patiently preserving—conveniently boxed and annotated for posterity—ethnic music traditions from Armenia, Cambodia, Vietnam, Bali, and across the Islamic world.

Beginning as a jazz-rock drummer, Parsons first made his name as a composer of new-age synthesizer music melded with field recordings of chants and nature sounds. Luckily he had the good sense to apply his ear for the uncommon to recording other musicians, as his own albums are conceptually interesting but actually rather dull. "The sound of the River Ganges in India" looks good on paper, but funneled through Parson's arsenal of nine synths and displaced from its original setting it loses any power it might have possessed—a clear case of you-had-to-be-there.

In contrast, Parsons's scholarly yet anything-but-academic compilations put you there. Inspired by the sitar music of Ravi Shankar, his first trips abroad were to study the culture of India. He recorded Tibetan chants for the Sacred Ceremonies CDs (Celestial Harmonies, 1994), and has produced such historic collections—all reviewed in this book's Compilations section—as The Music of Armenia (1997), The Music of Bali (1994), The Music of Cambodia (1994), The Music of Islam (1998), and The Music of Vietnam (1994), all on the Celestial Harmonies label as well.

When not living a nomadic existence, Parsons resides in his native New Zealand. The Celestial Harmonies projects have absorbed most of his time in recent years, but Parsons's bread and butter comes from his second life as a composer for New Zealand's TV, radio, and film industries. Now that's unusual.

David Poole

to the group's mix. Now that they were playing on their own they needed material, and Tambu began writing tunes. He also asked his friend David Rudder to contribute, and in 1986, when Tambu had laryngitis, he asked Rudder to sing during Carnival. Rudder's "The Hammer" swept all Carnival titles that year, and he and Tambu have been sharing lead vocals ever since. Tambu's tunes tend to be less political than Rudder's, but they're just as catchy. He won the Road March title in 1987 with "This Party Is It," a tune that became an instant standard.

what's available: The rhythm-heavy Culture ♪♪♪♪ (Sire, 1997, prod. Joe R. Brown) is a classic. After the rave-up of "This Party Is It," the band shifts into a mid-tempo groove that accents the drumming and Tambu's celebrations of Trini culture. "How Many More Must Die," one of the first calypso ballads, surprises with its strong political lyric and decidedly Stax/Volt groove.

influences:
Sparrow, Arrow, Super Blue

see also: David Rudder

j. poet

Tannahill Weavers

Scottish traditional

Formed 1968, in Paisley, Scotland. Based in Scotland.

Roy Gullane, guitar, vocals; Phil Smillie, flute, bodhrán, whistles, vocals; Leslie Wilson, guitar, bouzouki, keyboards, bass pedals, vocals; John Martin, fiddle, cello, mandolin, viola, vocals; Duncan Nicholson, Highland bagpipes, Scottish small-pipes, whistles, keyboards. (All members are from Scotland.)

Ever since their earliest years, the Tannahill Weavers have established their niche deep in the heart of traditional music, staying almost purely acoustic in nature, and using predominantly traditional Celtic tunes, or new material that sounds so traditional it is indiscernible from the old. This has made them virtually unique in the field of Celtic music, where most groups that start with their feet firmly rooted on traditional soil soon find themselves wandering into new territory, usually to stay. Combining this solidly anchored tradition with skilled instrumentalists, tight harmonies, an intensity of rhythm, and a well-rounded sound, the band has defined a new voice in Celtic music. Boasting a cast of more than 20 members during nearly three decades as a group, the Tannahill Weavers have seen a variety of talent come and go while always managing to maintain the integrity of their sound. The signature of the Tannies has to be the use of the Highland bagpipes in their music. The first professional Scottish folk group to include full-sized pipes on stage, they quickly drew the attention of music-lovers and critics alike. The various pipes, combined with hearty vocals, soaring flute lines, and a fiery violin, carry the group through a wide variety of traditional tunes, keeping listeners humming along. The cast of pipers has included Alan MacLeod, Iain MacInnes, Kenny Forsyth, and Duncan Nicholson. Phil Smillie's flute lines and Roy Gullane's work on guitar and mandolin combine to add to the depth of the music, and their vocal work is the essential icing on the cake. The Tannahill Weavers have been creating hearty, enjoyable music for so much longer than most bands can be expected to, there can't be any end in sight.

what to buy: The group reached a musical peak with The Mermaid's Song ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1992) and Capernaum ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1994). Both albums display top-of-the-line piping by Kenny Forsyth and some amazing fiddle work by John Martin. The choice of material on these albums is particularly wonderful, mixing delightful dance tunes and heartfelt ballads, perfectly distributed throughout. In the States Capernaum won the National Association of Independent Record Distributors' 1994 Indie Award for Celtic Album of the Year.

what to buy next: Their latest release, Epona ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1998), is representative of the current lineup and shows the group's depth of musical passion and their excellent taste in track selection. Although it lacks the pipe sound characteristic of the Tannies during the rest of their career, their first album, Are Ye Sleeping Maggie ♪♪♪♪ (Plant Life, 1976/Hedera, 1993), contains a wonderful assortment of tunes passionately performed by the group. The thunderstorm sound that begins the opening title track, "Are Ye Sleeping Maggie," is indicative of the highly charged performance to come. Also from their early days, Tannahill Weavers ♪♪♪♪ (Plant Life, 1979/Green Linnet, 1982/Hedera, 1993) won the group the Scotstar Award for Best Folk Group in 1980. Tannahill Weavers IV ♪♪♪♪ (Plant Life, 1982/Green Linnet, 1982/Hedera, 1993) rounds out the "top of the Tannies" set, with a collection of exciting and memorable dance tunes.

what to avoid: Passage ♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1984) was a definite diversion for the group, in which they toyed with electric instruments and a more modern sound. It contains some excellent numbers, but doesn't stand out like the rest of their work. Their two "favorites" albums, The Best of the Tannahill Weavers 1979–89 ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1989) and Choice Cuts 1987–96 ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1997), are both good collections, but true fans will want the rest of the material on the original albums. Since neither compilation contains anything unreleased elsewhere, they are somewhat superfluous.

Taraf de Haïdouks fiddler Pasolan

the rest:
Old Woman's Dance ♪♪♪♪½ (Plant Life, 1978/Hedera, 1993)
Land of Light ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1985)
Dancing Feet ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1987)
Cullen Bay ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1990)
Leaving St. Kilda ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1996)

influences:
⏮ Davy Spillane, Alan MacDonald ⏭ Silly Wizard, Capercaillie

see also: Ossian

Jo Hughey Morrison

Taraf de Haïdouks

Traditional Romanian wedding and folk music

Formed 1990, in Clejani, Romania. Based in Clejani, Romania.

Ion Manole, violin, vocal; Nicolae Neacsu, violin, vocal; Dumitru Baicu, cymbalum, vocal; Ilie Iorga, vocal; Paul Giuclea, vocal, violin, accordion; Marin P. Manole, accordion; Anghel Gheorghe, violin; Constantin Lautaru, violin, vocal; Ionel Manole, accordion; Marin Manole, accordion; Gheorghe Falcaru, flute; Ion Tanase, small and big cymbalum; Marinel Sandu, cymbalum; Viorel Vlad, bass; Pasolan, fiddle. (All members are from Romania.)

Nicolae Neacsu, fiddle player, singer, and storyteller, is a walking encyclopedia of Gypsy and Romanian folklore and one of the leaders of the Romanian Gypsy band Taraf de Haïdouks. The two albums the Haïdouks have cut for Belgium's Crammed Discs label have brought Neacsu and his band of self-proclaimed brigands international superstardom. This unexpected interest in his music came at exactly the right time. A few years ago Neacsu was living alone in a one-room sod house in the village of Clejani, his fiddle set aside, doing little more than watching the spring thaw and waiting to die. That same spring Stéphane Karo, a Hungarian musician based in Brussels, and Michel Winter, an Israeli of Hungarian origin, were in the CD library at Brussels' Mediatech, looking for material for their band, which played classical Arabic music. They discovered a CD containing Romanian Gypsy ballads, and Karo decided to seek out people still playing this music. While Romania was in political turmoil under the waning years of the Ceausescu regime, Karo journeyed to Clejani and met Neacsu, who was surprised to find someone from Belgium interested in his music. Karo recorded Neacsu, with a few younger players, on a Walkman. "It was a bad recording," Winter recalls, "but you could feel the madness of this music. We talked about going back to make a real recording, but then the revolution started."

In 1990, after the political climate cooled, Karo and Winter went to Clejani and discovered 200 professional musicians, all of them Gypsies. After a summer listening to the village's music, they decided to organize a European tour for their new friends. The group settled on the name Taraf de Haïdouks, a haïdouk being a Robin Hood–like brigand from Romanian folklore, a rogue who defeats powerful lords with quick thinking and craftiness, while taraf is Turkish for a loose band of musicians. Winter and Karo picked six of the best performers, including Neascu and Ion Manole, a singer with a style of guttural modulations that may well die when he does. Under pressure from the village, the first touring band grew to 11 members, the youngest being 13-year-old cymbalum (Middle Eastern hammered dulcimer) player Marinel Sandu. That initial outing led to a recording contract with Crammed Discs, which released Musique des Tziganes de Roumanie in 1991. The band went on to knock out crowds at the WOMAD (World of Music, Arts and Dance), Montreux, and other festivals, as well as at concert halls and clubs all over Europe. The mix of young and old satisfied audiences, Winter explained, because "The old people do more ballads, the young like to play at 200 miles per hour, and are open to different styles, including Bulgarian, Yugoslavian, and Turkish influences. The old men are more traditional, but they like the music of the young. They're happy to see traditional music evolve and love the way children are changing it." what to buy: The Haïdouks are irresistible. On the dance tunes, the band's rhythms are pumped out by a couple of accordions and anchored by a slappin' bass that rocks like some kind of mutant Arabic rockabilly, while the fiddles and cymbalum soar off on dizzying flights of fancy. On the ballads Manole's vocal pyrotechnics and melancholy violin take you back to the times of flickering campfires, when Gypsy tears twinkled as bright as the stars in the sky. The raw, driving music on Musique des Tziganes de Roumanie ♪♪♪♪♪ (Crammed Discs, 1991), from a band that lives the tradition, is one of the most exciting folk albums ever recorded. The second collection, Honourable Brigands, Magic Horses, and Evil Eye ♪♪♪♪♪ (Crammed Discs, 1994), is just as primal and exhilarating as the first; you probably need 'em both.

the rest:

Dumbala Dunba ♪♪♪♪½ (Crammed Discs, 1998)

influences:

- Fanica Luca, Trio Pandelescu, Sandor Fodor, the Szazcsavas Band

j. poet

Tarika /Tarika Sammy

Malagasy folk music, Afropop

Tarika formed in London, England, 1993. Tarika Sammy formed 1982, in Antananarivo, Madagascar. Tarika based in London, England; Tarika Sammy based in Madagascar.

Tarika (1993–present): Hanitra Rasoanaivo, korintsana, ambio, tsikadraha, vocals; Tina Norosoa Raharimalala, korintsana, ambio, tsikadraha, vocals; Dieudonné Randriamanantena, marovana, valiha, accordion, jejy voatavo; Victor Randrianasolomalala, kabosy, drums, vocals. Tarika Sammy #1 (1982–91): Sammy Andriamalalaharijaona, kabosy, marovana, kaiambarambo, valiha, fiddle, harmonica, percussion, vocals; Tiana Ratianarinaivo, kabosy, guitar, valiha, vocals; Hanitra Rasoanaivo, korintsana, ambio, tsikadraha, vocals; Tina Norosoa Raharimalala, korintsana, ambio, tsikadraha, vocals. Tarika Sammy #2 (1994–present): Sammy Andriamalalaharijaona, kabosy, marovana, kaiambarambo, valiha, fiddle, harmonica, percussion, vocals; Tiana Ratianarinaivo, kabosy, guitar, valiha, vocals; Johnny Andriamamahirana Zafimahery, guitar, bass, kabosy, valiha, n'lapa, vocals; Claudia Marie Noëll Ramasimanana, vocals; Hanitra Razaonialimiarina, vocals. (All members are from Madagascar.)

When Hanitra Rasoanaivo, band leader of Tarika, walks on stage, people gasp. She has a supermodel's looks and an elegant charisma that wakes up the crowd even before the music starts. When the band finally does launch into a high-energy Malagasy rave-up, the air becomes electric. "Ironically, Malagasy music is more popular outside Madagascar," Rasoanaivo says. "In Madagascar you're surrounded by people playing music—your family, all your friends—so we take it for granted, like the lemurs or the forest."

In 1983 London's Globestyle label led an expedition to Madagascar to record the local folk and pop music. The result was four stunning CDs of Malagasy music. Rasoanaivo had studied English at university and acted as the group's translator, introducing the Globestyle gang to musicians like Sammy Andraimanahirana. "Sammy was about to give up music, because folkloric musicians can't make a living. I convinced him to make a group for the Globestyle sessions, then joined the band." Tarika Sammy, fronted by Rasoanaivo, her sister Norosoa, and Andraimanahirana, got several tracks on Globestyle's Current Modern Music of Madagascar, as well as Henry Kaiser's A World out of Time compilations. Eventually Tarika Sammy signed to Green Linnet's Xenophile imprint and went on to become Madagascar's most well-known musical export. "I'm ambitious," Rasoanaivo says. "There are 12 ethnic groups in Madagascar, all with different styles that I'd like to reconcile. I also want to use other African rhythms." Andraimanahirana wanted

Hanitra Rasoanaivo of Tarika

7 5 8 dave tarras

to stay true to traditional rhythms, and left the band in 1991 to play folk music again.

Andraimanahirana's version of the band's ups and downs is considerably different from Rasoanaivo's, and in concert he often talks about the women who "stole" his band from him. It's difficult to choose sides in this disagreement, especially since both bands are producing compelling—and completely different—styles of Malagasy pop. Tarika Sammy's latest, Beneath Southern Skies, is a collection of traditionally flavored originals, while Tarika's current project is Son Egal, an attempt to meld Malagasy music with other African forms. Senegalese drumming, provided by members of Baaba Maal's band, gives Rasoanaivo's new compositions a sharp Pan-African edge. "In Madagascar when people get money, they go buy Western music," Rasoanaivo says. "I want to bring Malagasy music to the West, so our people will realize we have something unique to contribute to the world."

what to buy: In 1947 the Malagasy people tried to throw out the French colonials, who responded by hiring Senegalese mercenaries to put down the revolt. Ever since, there has been enmity between the people of Madagascar and Senegal. With Son Egal ♪♪♪♪♪ (Xenophile, 1997, prod. Simon Emmerson, Martin Russell) Rasoanaivo attempts a musical and spiritual healing by having Senegalese and Malagasy musicians play a set of politically charged tunes. The result won the Indie Label Grammy for World Music Album of the Year in 1998.

what to buy next: On Beneath Southern Skies ♪♪♪♪ (Xenophile, 1996) Tarika Sammy returns in fine form with a set that mixes instrumental prowess and sparkling vocals.

the rest:
Tarika Sammy:
Fanafody ♪♪♪♪ (Xenophile, 1992)
Balance ♪♪♪♪ (Xenophile, 1994)

Tarika:
Bibiango ♪♪♪♪ (Xenophile, 1994)

influences:
◀◀ Rakotofra, Tsimialona Volambita, Ny Sakelidalana, Rossy ▶▶ D'Gary, Les Smockers

see also: Baaba Maal

j. poet

Dave Tarras

Klezmer

Born 1897, in Russia. Died 1989, in New York, NY, USA.

Clarinet player Dave Tarras was one of the greatest influences on the U.S. revival of klezmer, the dance music of Eastern European Jews. His enthusiastic melodies, heard in cartoons and films, as well as with big bands including Joseph Cherniavsky's Yiddish-American Jazz Band, had a profound effect on such other influential jazz clarinetists as Benny Goodman and Don Byron. According to Henry Sapoznik, founder of the Archive of Recorded Sound at the Institute for Jewish Research in New York, Tarras's recordings were like "three-minute Rosetta Stones." A native of Russia, Tarras escaped religious persecution and emigrated to the United States in 1921. A highly trained musician, he became a regular performer in Yiddish theaters and the vaudeville circuit. First recording in 1925, he remained active until the mid-1950s.

what's available: Yiddish-American Klezmer Music ♪♪♪ (Yazoo, 1992, prod. Henry Sapoznik) features cuts from old 78s, radio transcriptions, and commercials recorded between 1925 and 1956. Although covering a shorter period, 1929–49: Master of Klezmer Music ♪♪♪ (Global Village, 1995) further documents the strength and range of Tarras's music.

influences:
◀◀ Abe Schwartz's Orchestra, Naftule Brandwein ▶▶ Benny Goodman, Ziggy Elman, the Andrews Sisters, Klezmorim, the Klezmer Conservatory Band, Klezmatics, Don Byron's Bug Music

see also: Kapelye, Klezmer Plus!

Craig Harris

Tau Moe Family

Hawaiian traditional group falsetto singing with steel guitar

Formed 1934, in Hawaii (now USA). Disbanded 1980s.

Tau Moe (Samoa), steel guitar; Rose Kaohu Moe (Hawaii; died December 18, 1998), vocals; Lani Moe (Japan), vocals, ukulele; Dorian Moe (India), vocals and guitar.

The story of the Tau Moe Family is one of the most amazing in all of show business. Tau and Rose left Hawaii as teenagers to work for Madame Riviere, a woman sent by the French government to Tahiti, then a French colony. Mme. Riviere's Hawaiians, as their troupe was known, visited the colonial outposts of Europe and performed for the wealthy for seven years. After the group broke up, the Moes struck out on their own to tour the world for another 50 years, bringing the joy of Hawaiian music to the finest venues in dozens of countries. In the later years of World War II, Tau Moe led a big band in Bombay, India, with musicians from China, Russia, and Hawaii. The entire family finally returned home to Hawaii in the early 1980s, and continued to perform well into that decade, when Hawaiian music practitioner/preservationist Bob Brozman connected with them and recorded a wonderful retrospective album in 1988. It appeared in 1989, and 10 years later, even without Rose, Tau is carrying on with recording as he enters his 90s.

what's available: The recordings of this group are rare, and The Tau Moe Family with Bob Brozman: Ho'omana'o I Na Mele O Ka Wa U'i (Remembering the Songs of Our Youth) ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989, prod. Bob Brozman) is a better-than-the-originals recreation of those old songs. Every effort was made to get the exact instrumentation, timbre, rhythm, and harmony of the 1920s and 1930s. Tau played rhythm guitar in his uncle's old style, Rose sang, and Brozman played steel guitar with the intent of getting Tau's old 1929 sound.

worth searching for: Tau Moe Family completists will want to seek out two compilations showcasing rare recordings by related bands. Vintage Hawaiian Music: The Great Singers 1928–34 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989, prod. Bob Brozman) includes three tracks from Mme. Riviere's Hawaiians along with other first-class cuts by Kalama's Quartet, Sol Hoopii, and other unforgettable Hawaiian vocalists. Two 1952 songs recorded by Tau Moe and His Original Hawaiians appear on Tickling the Strings 1929–52: Music of Hawai'i ♪♪½ (Harlequin, 1993, prod. Bruce Bastin). In general, anything on the Harlequin label is a winner, but this particular release lacks the fire of the Rounder compilation, no doubt because Brozman was not involved.

influences:

◀◀ Joe Kekuku, M.K. Moke, John Almeida, David Kaili, Sol Hoopii

▶▶ Bob Brozman, Robert Armstrong, Allen Dodge

Sandy Miranda

Te Vaka

Tokelauan folk and popular music

Formed in Auckland, New Zealand. Based in Auckland, New Zealand.

Opetaia Foa'i, lead vocal, guitar, percussion, log drum; Neil Forrest, log drum, percussion, electric guitar, vocals; Andrew Dukeson, drum kit, log drums; Luavasa Foa'i, bass, vocals; Lutila Kalolo, vocals; Nick Prater, wooden flute; Auburn, didgeridoo. (All members are from New Zealand.)

Opetaia Foa'i was born in Samoa and raised in New Zealand, but his parents are from Tokelau and Tuvalu, small islands in the mid-Pacific. Foa'i grew up in New Zealand's Tokelauan community, where he learned music from his uncles and stayed close to his people's traditional cultural expressions, particularly the log drum that provides the basic rhythm for his compositions. The band also uses Pacific conga and tumba drums, which were traditionally headed with sharkskin, though cow and goat are more commonly used today. Foa'i sings in the Tokelauan language, which has managed to retain its own unique character despite years of contact with other Polynesian and European dialects.

what's available: Foa'i's compositions are based on Tokelauan folklore, but on Original, Contemporary Pacific Music ♪♪♪♪ (ARC England, 1997, prod. Malcolm Smith, Opetaia Foa'i) he blends this music with elements from all over the Pacific and the world. The most stirring thing about the album, aside from its strong melodies and the gorgeous harmonies of the singers (including a guest appearance by the Auckland Tokelauan Choir), is the drumming. The log drums have a sharp, exciting sound, and the driving polyrhythms are on a par with the work of the best Afropop bands.

influences:

◀◀ Bob Marley, Auckland Tokelauan Choir, Yothu Yindi

j. poet

The Techniques

Rocksteady, reggae, ska

Formed 1962, in Kingston, Jamaica. Disbanded 1972; re-formed 1982; disbanded 1983.

Keith "Slim" Smith, vocals (1962–66); Winston Riley, vocals (1962–72, 1982); Franklin White, vocals (1962–64); Frederick Waite, vocals (1962–66); Junior Menz, vocals (1964–66); Pat Kelly, vocals (1967–68); Bruce Ruffin, vocals (1967–69); Morvin Brooks, vocals (1967–70, 1982); Lloyd Parks, vocals (1968–69); Jackie Parris, vocals (1968–70); Dave Barker, vocals (1968–69); Tyrone "Don" Evans, vocals (1982). (All members are from Jamaica.)

The Techniques sported many fine vocalists in their storied heyday. Most of them ventured into successful solo careers; one suffered a lonely and premature demise. In 1962, under the leadership of founding members Winston Riley and Slim Smith, the fresh-scrubbed Techniques began performing their dramatic, refined Jamaican soul music at Kingston Senior School and future Jamaican Prime Minister Edward Seaga's Chocomo Lawn Youth Club. The combination of an inspirational performance at the 1964 Jamaica Festival, their first single, "No One," and their first hit single, the ska-charged "Little Did You Know," sent the Techniques' reputation soaring across the musical hotbed of Kingston. Popular ska singer Stranger Cole set up a meeting with Treasure Isle Studio honcho Duke Reid, who immediately produced the band's classic 1965 debut Little Did You Know, an LP that spotlighted Smith's quavering-with-emotion lead vocals in tandem with the group's chilling, sophisticated harmonies. Smith left in 1966 and released a number of hits on his own and with his next band, the Uniques, essentially a clone of the Techniques in style and substance. Pat Kelly, a subtler vocalist with a rapturous sense of phrasing and a distinctive falsetto, moved into the lead spot for a string of famed rocksteady singles, including "You Don't Care" (a #1 hit in Jamaica), "Queen Majesty" (a soul-nourishing and novel interpretation of the Impressions' "Minstrel and Queen"), a cover of the Temptations' "I Wish It Would Rain," "Run Come Celebrate," and the extraordinarily sublime "It's You I Love." All are now regarded as exemplars of vocal mastery in the rugged, electric bass-driven, rocksteady groove. Also added to the group at this time was the deeper-voiced Bruce Ruffin, who added guts to the existing vocalists' glory. In 1968 Riley formed his own Techniques label with his brother Buster, who was a member of the Sensations. Riley self-produced the Techniques on songs that were every bit the equal of their eminently sensitive work for Duke Reid, including "Man of My Word," "One Day," "What's It All About," and "Go Find Yourself a Fool." Ex-Termites vocalist Lloyd Parks then joined the group, which by now was considered an academy for elite vocalists. But as Riley focused more on production and rhythm-creation during the reggae era, the Techniques separated and pursued solo careers. In 1970 Riley produced former-Technique Dave Barker's U.K. #1 hit single "Double Barrel" and the follow-up smash "Monkey Spanner," a song also notable as the first recording session of Sly Dunbar (of now-legendary rhythm section/production team Sly & Robbie). Ruffin recorded some unjustly neglected singles for Leslie Kong, including "Dry Up Your Tears," "Free the People," and a dynamite cover of the Five Stairsteps' "Ooh Child." Pat Kelly had a #1 single in 1969 with "How Long Will It Take," the first Jamaican record to feature a string arrangement. Original Technique Frederick Waite managed and fathered two members of Musical Youth, whose 1982 hit "Pass the Dutchie" (based on the Mighty Diamonds' "Pass the Kouchie") still stands as one of reggae's biggest international hits. Riley went on to become a prominent architect of dancehall music and one of the most important deejay producers in the land, launching the careers of General Echo and Super Cat in addition to the great dancehall singers Frankie Paul and Tenor Saw. Riley also created the wicked "Stalag" riddim, which would thrive in and at times dominate the dancehall over the next two decades. In 1982 Riley briefly revived the Techniques with Brooks and Tyrone "Don" Davis (formerly of the Paragons) and released I'll Never Fall in Love. Slim Smith overcame recurring mental illness to become one of Jamaica's most memorable vocalists. However, in 1973, he was locked against his will in a poorly run mental asylum. In a desperate attempt to escape, Slim severed a vein when he punched his bare fist through a small glass window. Unfitting and unfair as it may seem for a man who contributed so much to Jamaica's culture, Smith bled to death alone in his sanitarium cell.

what to buy: The yearning beauty of the Techniques' seductive harmonizing is demonstrated on Run Come Celebrate: Their Greatest Reggae Hits ♪♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1994, prod. Duke Reid, Winston Riley), which includes the utterly alchemical title cut, "Queen Majesty," and the wise and mellifluous "Love Is Not a Gamble," along with previously unreleased rarities like "Festival '68." Rock Steady Classics ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino U.K., 1994, prod. Duke Reid) fills in the gaps on the Heartbeat collection with must-have groove-de-forces "You Don't Care," "There Comes a Time," and the thoroughly intoxicating "Drink Wine," which will leave you feeling buzzed and ecstatic without even a drop of the title sauce. Little Did You Know ♪♪♪♪ (Treasure Isle, 1965, prod. Duke Reid) contains early Techniques gems "Don't Leave Me," "When You Are Wrong," and the title cut, all of which showcase Smith's striking, passion-packed falsetto and somewhat frenzied edginess. The peerless Don Drummond (trombone) and Lynn Taitt (guitar) provide stunning instrumental moments as well.

the rest:
Unforgettable Days: 1965–72 ♪♪♪♪ (Techniques, 1981)
I'll Never Fall in Love ♪♪♪ (Techniques, 1982)
Classics, Vols. I & II ♪♪♪♪ (Techniques, 1991)

worth searching for: Techniques in Dub ♪♪♪♪ (Pressure Sounds, 1997, prod. Winston Riley) is a re-release of the classic 1976 Meditation Dub LP with a number of previously unreleased tracks. This is a pleasantly woozy and spacious dub album that, unlike most other recordings in the sometimes heavy-handed genre, contains an abundance of lovely melodic elements—primarily because the melodies and rhythms originate from vintage Techniques sides. These no-frills instrumentals are bolstered by top-rank musicians like Jackie Mittoo, Sly & Robbie, "Chinna" Smith, and ex-Skatalites Roland Alphonso and Tommy McCook. While it still packs a rhythmic knockout punch that ranks with even the most heavyweight dub, this is also one of the most listenable and soothing albums of its kind you will find, perfect for those hesitant but curious dub novices out there.

influences:
- Sam Cooke, Nat King Cole, the Impressions, Curtis Mayfield, the Temptations, the Blues Busters, Jackie Edwards, Owen Gray
- The Uniques, the Mighty Diamonds, the Chosen Few, Chain Reaction, Joseph Cotton, Sanchez, Nora Dean, Tenor Saw, Cutty Ranks, General Echo, Frankie Paul, Lone Ranger, Super Cat, Sons of Jah, Papa San, Admiral Tibet, Musical Youth

see also: Jackie Mittoo, Musical Youth, the Skatalites, Sly & Robbie, Super Cat

Todd Shanker

Omar Faruk Tekbilek /Omar Faruk Tekbilek & the Sultans

Turkish and Middle Eastern folk, classical, and religious music

Born in Istanbul, Turkey. Based in Rochester, NY, USA.

Born to a Turkish father and Egyptian mother in Istanbul, Faruk (as he prefers to be called) began his career at age nine while working in a music store. He credits the owner of the store for giving him the opportunity of a lifetime. "It is he who taught me to read music and told me to work there as a salesman, to play and watch. And I would absorb everything," says Faruk. Indeed he did, learning to play an incredible variety of Turkish instruments and becoming especially known for his work on the ney, a long, end-blown flute made of cane. By age 12 Faruk was gigging professionally in Istanbul with the great Turkish musicians of the time, such as flute and saxophone player Ismet Siral and famous percussionist Burhan Tonque. At 17 Faruk was working with the great teacher and jazzist I. Siral (no relation to Ismet). During the '60s Faruk made a name for himself as one of the world's foremost performers of Middle Eastern music. In 1971, also established as one of the top Turkish studio musicians, he began touring Europe and the States, relocating to New York state in 1971, where he settled and married an American woman. Faruk has recorded and performed with many internationally known musicians, including arranger Arif Mardin, jazz notables Don Cherry and Karl Berger, and rock drummer Ginger Baker. He has made prestigious concert appearances worldwide, including the Kool Jazz Festival and the Israeli Music Festival. Introduced to the Celestial Harmonies label by accomplished composer and guitarist Brian Keane, Faruk went on to collaborate with him on several projects. Label owner Eckart Rahn then offered Faruk an opportunity to compose solo works for Celestial Harmonies. Rahn is also credited with introducing Faruk to one of Australia's leading percussionists, Michael Askill of the ensemble Synergy, thus setting Faruk on yet another rewarding path in his always-eventful creative journey.

what to buy: Süleyman the Magnificent ♪♪♪♪½ (Celestial Harmonies, 1988, prod. Briane Keane) is the soundtrack for the film about the life of the great Sultan of the Ottoman Empire. Süleyman reigned from 1520–66 and was known as a reformer of law and administration. The album features Turkish melodies and Keane's original ones on a combination of authentic Turkish instruments, including the tanbur (long-necked lute), daire (drum), kanun (plucked boxed zither), and kaval (rim-blown flute, a pastoral instrument associated with shepherds and nomads). The film aired on PBS and was a winner of the American Film Festival and Ohio State Film Festival awards.

Although the U.S. guitarist and Turkish multi-instrumentalist hail from different backgrounds, they developed a close musical rapport and an ongoing collaboration. Fire Dance ♪♪♪♪½ (Celestial Harmonies, 1990, prod. Briane Keane) is a natural progression from Süleyman, blending a plethora of Middle Eastern and North African instruments with synthesizers, guitar, and sophisticated orchestrations. The compositional focus of Fire Dance also expands beyond Turkey to include music from Egyptian and other North African, Middle Eastern, and Arabic sources. Selections feature the oud (similar to the lute), the zurna (like an oboe), and a wide array of percussion instruments. Beyond the Sky ♪♪♪♪½ (Celestial Harmonies, 1992, prod. Briane Keane) has Faruk and Keane joined by Ara Dinkjian, one of the foremost oud players in the world, and Armenian percussionist Arto Tuncboyaciyan, a bandmate of Dinkjian's in the ensemble Night Ark, which is well known in Greece, Turkey, and the Middle East. Also joining the project in his recording debut is Hassan Isikkut, with a unique and dazzling style of playing the kanun.

what to buy next: Whirling ♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1992, prod. Briane Keane) is Faruk's debut as a solo artist, reuniting him with Dinkjian (oud), Isikkut (kanun), and Tuncboyaciyan (percussion). Brian Keane adds guitar and his subtle, atmospheric orchestrations. Whirling is a musical tribute to Sufi religious music, and references the dervishes, who enter trance-like states of reverence while whirling in place. The various-artists compilation Gypsy Fire ♪♪♪♪ (Traditional Crossroads, 1995, prod. Richard A. Hagopian) incorporates the influence of Gypsy music from around the world with traditional Turkish sounds and instruments. Mystical Garden ♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1996, prod. Brian Keane) has Keane, Isikkut, Tuncboyaciyan, Dinkjian, and Dan Pickering joining Faruk to explore the garden theme important in the Turkish Sufi mythos. Crescent Moon ♪♪♪♪½ (Celestial Harmonies, 1998, prod. Brian Keane) gets Faruk and Keane at it again, along with guest Steve Roach, to offer homage to the history of the crescent moon, an important Islamic religious symbol. Fata Morgana ♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1995, prod. Michael Askill) is a collaboration between Michael Askill and Faruk, suggested by Celestial Harmonies-head Rahn, preceded by phone exchanges of ideas between the two artists, and recorded in two days right after their first actual face-to-face meeting. Ghassan Barakat, Ian Cleworth, and Rebecca Lagos also lend their talents to 15 selections reflecting the musical cultures of the Middle East, Asia, West Africa, and Western jazz and classical music. In Salomé ♪♪♪♪ (Black Sun, 1998, prod. Michael Askill), Askill and Faruk provide a traditional soundtrack for the Bible story.

worth searching for: The Best of the Sultans ♪♪♪♪ (Dynamic, 1997) is a compilation of tunes by Omar Faruk Tekbilek & the Sultans. Originally named the Sultans Middle Eastern Band, the group was formed in 1976 by Faruk and his brother-in-law Ibrahim Turmen, a darbuka (Turkish percussion instrument) master. Other members included Egyptian Sherif Sarakby performing on keyboards and accordion and Greek Nick Mouganis playing bouzouki, guitar, and bass. The Sultans released five dynamic recordings; this collection, which captures and enhances their best performances, was remastered for CD. World Resonance ♪♪♪♪ (DRK, 1998) is a collaboration between Faruk (ney, bendir drum, and darbuka), Mitzie Collins (Celtic hammered dulcimer), and Al Saint John (Caribbean steel drums) of the Trinidad & Tobago Steel Band. The CD insert contains photos detailing the instrumentation and its history, as well as personal anecdotes about the musicians and the way they came together for this four-year project.

influences:
I. Siral

see also: Steve Roach, Synergy, Vas

Stacy Meyn

Terem Quartet

Russian folk music

Formed 1986, in St. Petersburg, Russia. Based in St. Petersburg, Russia.

Andrei Konstantinov, soprano domra, vocal; Igor Ponomarenko, alto domra, vocal; Andrei Smirnov, accordion, vocal; Mikhail Dziudze, bass balalaika, vocal. (All members are from Russia.)

St. Petersburg has a reputation for being a bohemian city, and the "punk folk" of the Terem Quartet might not have happened anywhere else in Russia. This quartet of classically trained musicians met at the then Leningrad Conservatory and play Russian folk music that includes Gypsy dance tunes, traditional ballads, pop songs arranged as "traditional" material, and even a bit of Tchaikovsky. The Quartet has astonishing technique; their playing is energetic and totally devoid of the academic stodginess that can often make listening to traditional music a chore. They've been credited with re-energizing interest in Russian folk music among the younger generation.

what's available: Terem ♪♪♪♪ (RealWorld, 1992, prod. Tony Berg) is a wild Russian hootenanny that never lets up. The domra is a small three-stringed guitar plucked like a mandolin that produces a rippling shower of arpeggios to carry the music forward at breakneck speed.

influences:
Theodore Bikel, Sasha Polinoff, Vladimir Vysotsky

j. poet

Texas Tornados

Tex-Mex, country, rock 'n' roll

Formed 1989, in San Francisco, CA, USA. Based in Texas, USA.

Doug Sahm, vocals, guitar; Freddy Fender, vocals, guitar; Flaco Jimenez, accordion, vocals; Augie Meyers, keyboards, vocals. (All members are from USA.)

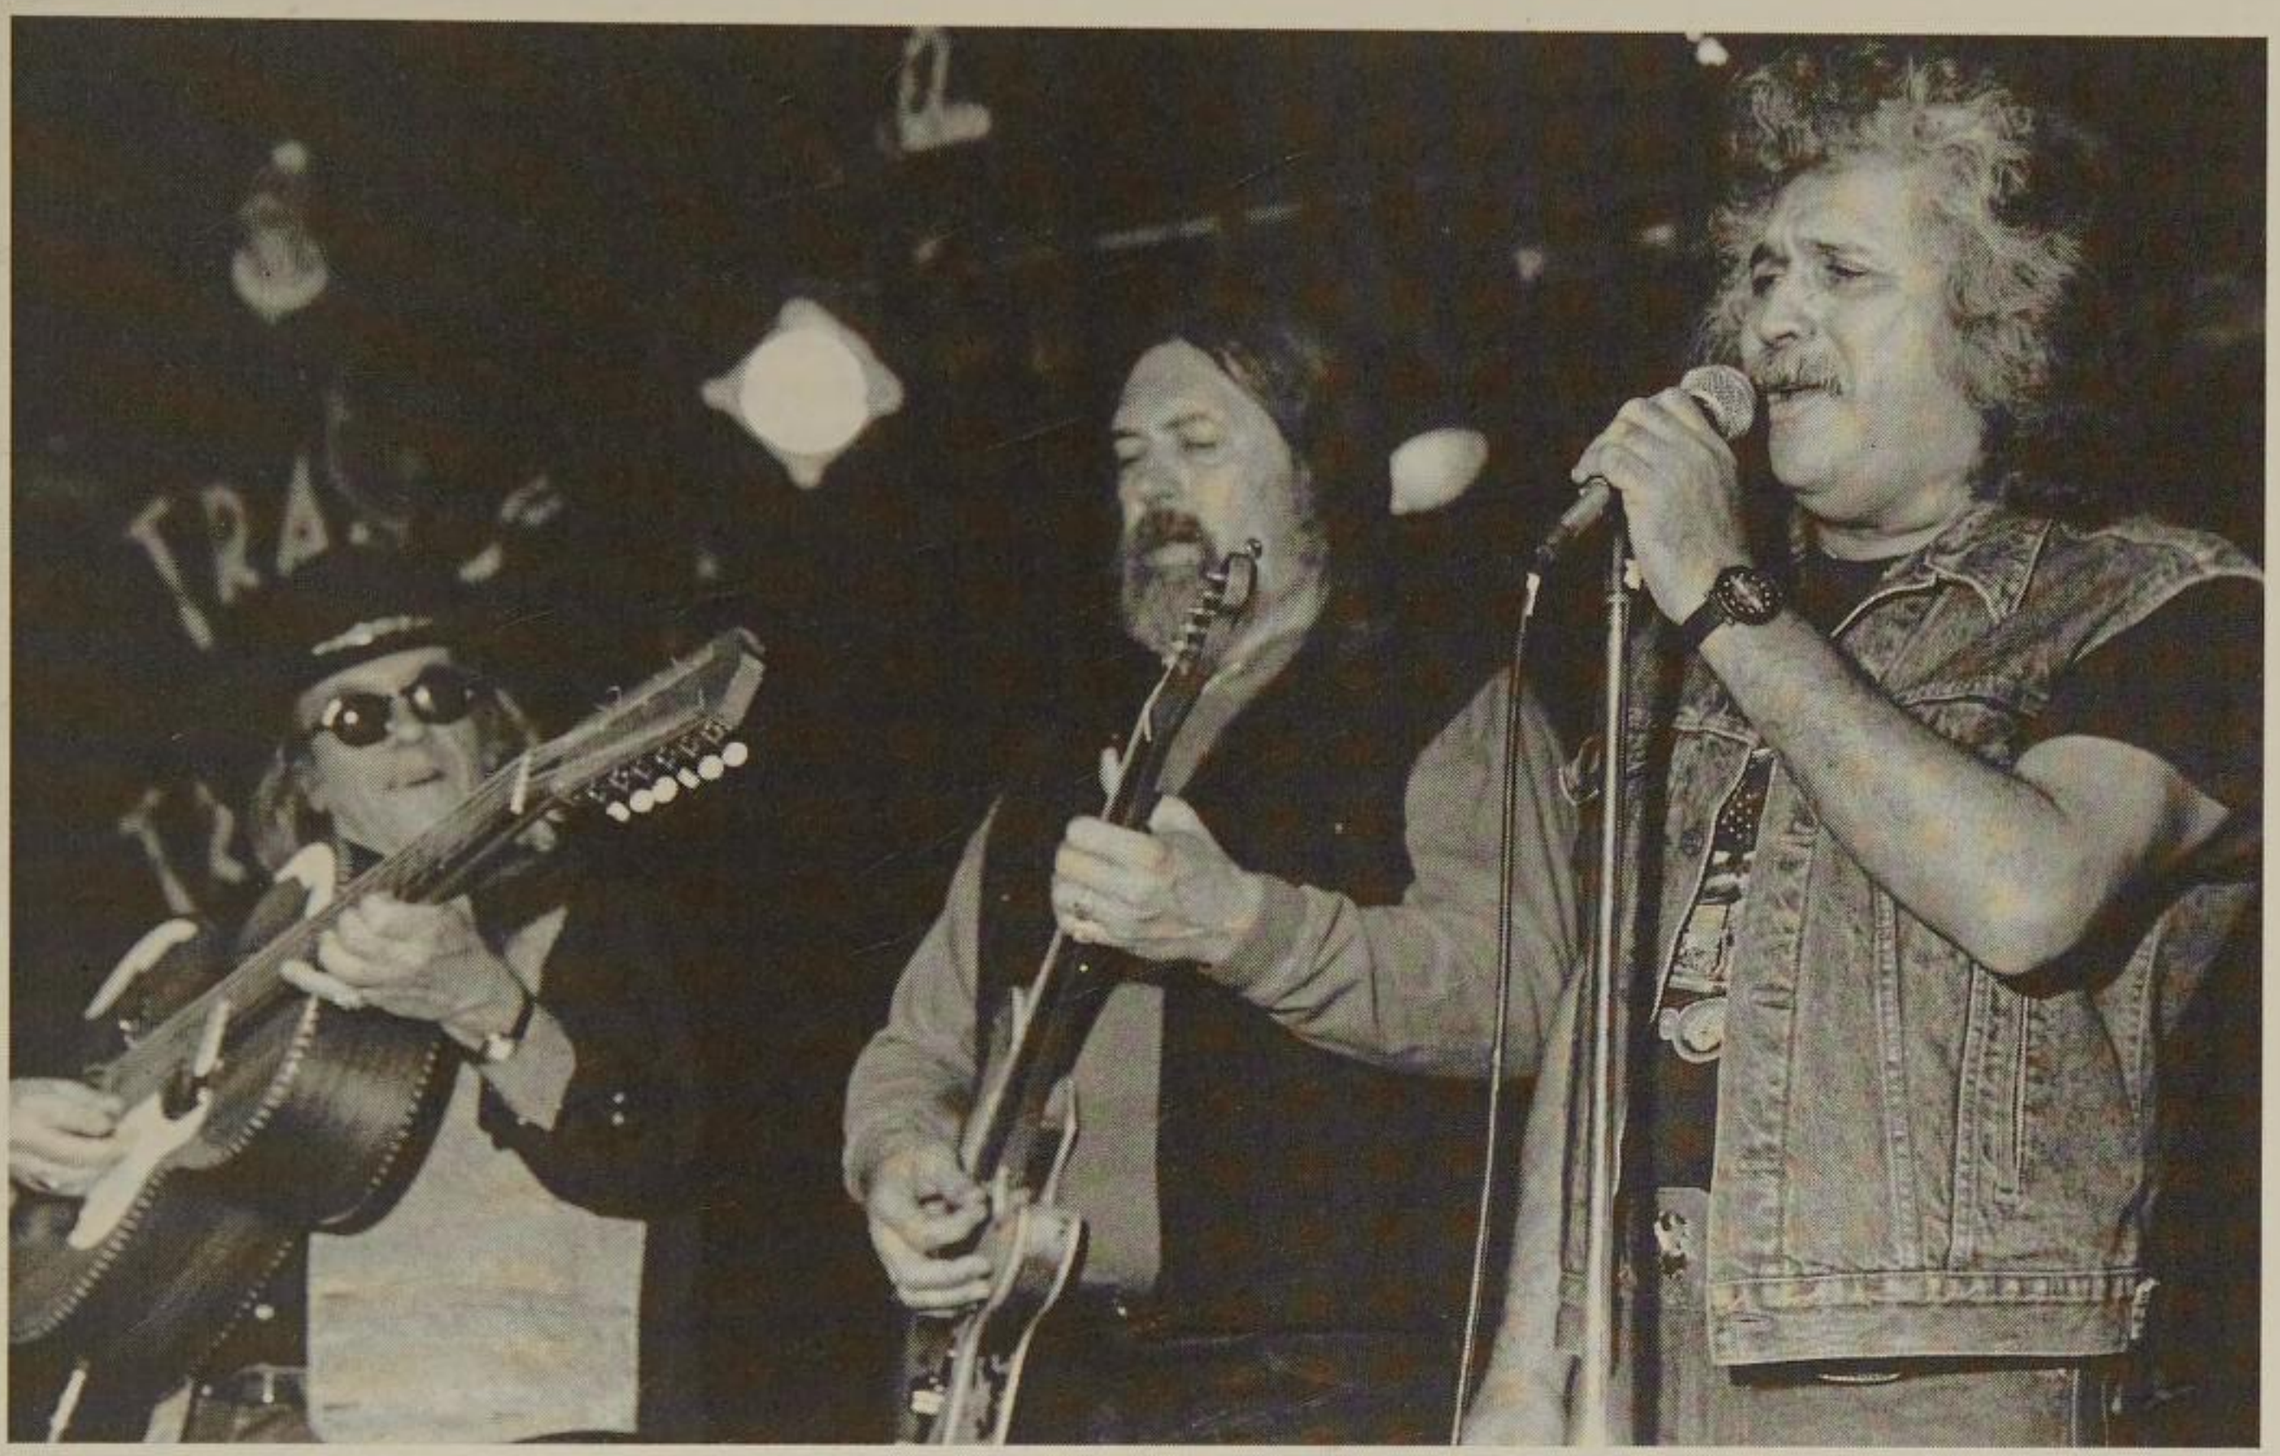
For those seeking encyclopedic knowledge of Texas music over the past three decades or so, you could do a lot worse than to begin your search with a serious study of the Texas Tornados. From the Anglo side come rockers Doug Sahm and Augie Meyers, who brought arid border breezes to the rest of the nation in the '60s with the Sir Douglas Quintet and songs like "She's about a Mover" and "Mendocino." From the Latino side come balladeer non pareil Freddy Fender, who charted with "Wasted Days and Wasted Nights" and "Before the Next Teardrop Falls," and accordionist Flaco Jimenez, who has enjoyed crossover success by rocking up traditional Mexican conjunto and norteño styles. The Tornados play party music, pure and simple, with an occasional Fender ballad or Sir Douglas oldie thrown in like a couple of swigs of cerveza between bites of hot Texas chili. Given how mercurial the individual members of the group are, that they can get together to make music this engaging—aw, hell, just plain fun—is nothing short of awe-inspiring.

what to buy: The Tornados' best album is their debut, Texas Tornados ♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1990, prod. Bill Halverson, Texas Tornados). Featuring songs sung in Spanish and English, the group scores with the Sir Douglas–style "Who Were You Thinkin' Of" and the high-stepping conjunto number "(Hey Baby) Que Paso." Fender contributes the heart-tugging ballad "A Man Can Cry," and Sahm takes an admirable run at Butch Hancock's brilliant "She Never Spoke Spanish to Me." The album is also available in a Spanish-only version, Los Texas Tornados ♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1990, prod. Bill Halverson, Texas Tornados).

what to buy next: The Best of Texas Tornados ♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1994, prod. Bill Halverson, Texas Tornados) is just that, collecting tunes from each of their albums, including updates of Fender's "Wasted Days and Wasted Nights" and Sahm's "Is Anybody Goin' to San Antone."

what to avoid: The Nada Mixes woof! (Reprise, 1997) contains dance remixes of "A Little Bit Is Better Than Nada" from 1995's 4 Aces. In this case, nada would have been better.

the rest:
Hangin' on by a Thread ♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1991)
Zone of Our Own ♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1992)
4 Aces ♪♪♪♪ (Reprise, 1995)



(l to r) Doug Sahm, Augie Meyers, and Freddy Fender of the Texas Tornados

influences:

- Don Santiago Jimenez, the Dave Clark Five, Ritchie Valens, Bob Dylan
- Emilio, Los Lobos, Santiago Jimenez Jr., Los Super Seven

see also: Flaco Jimenez, Los Super Seven

Daniel Durchholz

Mikis Theodorakis

Greek modern and classical Born 1925, on Chios Island, Greece. Based in Athens, Greece.

Mixing Greek bouzoukis, modern classical, and a heavy dose of Marxist politics, the music of Mikis Theodorakis is not everyone's cup of ouzo. His career as a political firebrand—which has gotten him tortured, imprisoned, and exiled—has attracted as much attention as his music. Theodorakis wrote his Symphony No. 1 in 1945 in the heat of the Greek civil war, while engaged in street fighting against the royalists and the British. He was also jailed and tortured during World War II, yet managed to lead his first concert of choral music and publish a poetry chapbook, both at age 17. He has continued to write lyrics since, while his brother Yannis has also written words to many of his compositions. Many of Theodorakis's best-known works are musical settings of poetry by Pablo Neruda, George Seferis, Yannis Ritsos, and others. He has composed much choral music since his first symphony, considering the human voice to be the most beautiful instrument—though his own thin vocal performances stand in contrast to the powerful female singers who have interpreted his work best, including Maria Farandouri and Agnes Baltsa.

Theodorakis studied composition at Athens Conservatory in the '40s, and in Paris under Olivier Messiaen in the '50s. He rose to prominence in the mid-'60s as founder of the Greek Communist Youth Organization and the Patriotic Front, and as composer of the hit film soundtrack Zorba the Greek. When a military dictatorship seized power in 1967 Theodorakis was imprisoned in a concentration camp and then banished until 1970; sale or performance of his music was illegal during that period. While in exile he scored the films Z and Serpico. After the junta fell in 1974 he returned home triumphantly to resume an active musical and political life, closely entwined as ever. These activities included finding time to compose several symphonies and involvement in controversial work with Turkish protest singer Zülfü Livandi. A heavyset bear of a man, Theodorakis suffered a heart attack in 1980 while conducting his own work at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C. He recovered to become a communist Member of Parliament the following year, a seat he held off and on until 1993, spending two of those years as a government minister as well. At the same time he directed the Greek Radio Symphony Orchestra and composed theme music for the Barcelona Olympics—seemingly with his left hand. On the cusp of the Millenium this dynamo had composed at least 1,000 songs, seven symphonies, seven ballets, four operas, and 13 soundtracks . . . and counting.

third world

what to buy: For an introduction to Theodorakis's traditional folk side, Opyavikó ♪♪♪♪ (Minerva, 1987) is bouncy bouzouki music that transforms any room into a Greek coffee shop or taverna. For his heavier, artier side, To Axion Esti ♪♪♪♪ (Minos/EMI, 1988) brings it all together: a double CD of haunting bouzouki melodies, Turkish-tinged sounds, majestic orchestral work, and singing, intercut with poems by Nobel Prize winner Odysseus Elytis.

what to buy next: The Ballad of Mauthausen/Six Songs ♪♪♪ (Fidelio/Sound-Products) is about as heavy as you can get; bitter songs based on an Austrian concentration camp and similarly grim subject matter. Vocalist Maria Farandouri is at the height of her powers, while the composer conducts.

what to avoid: Theodorakis Sings Theodorakis ♪♪ (Intuition, 1991, prod. Wolfgang Loos) is for fans only; at age 66 his voice is well past its prime. Still, songs like "Repudiation" are haunting despite the thin, uncertain vocals. Another completists-only disc is Canto General ♪ (RCA/BMG/Ariola, 1975/1991): massive settings of Neruda poems recorded live before huge stadium crowds in Greece shortly after the fall of the junta. Today it sounds badly dated and pompous. Even Maria Farandouri is strident and histrionic, though male vocalist Petros Pandis delivers moving solos. The audience is riotous with excitement; guess you had to be there.

the rest:

PANTAP ♪♪½ (Minos, 1981)

Symphony No. 4 (of the Choral Odes) ♪♪♪½ (Athens Symphony Orchestra, cond. Lukas Karytinos) (Intuition, 1984/98)

Alexis Zorbas Ballet Suite ♪♪♪ (Hungarian State Orchestra, cond. Theodorakis/Lukas Karytinos) (Intuition, 1989)

Canto Olympico ♪♪♪ (Greek Radio Symphony Orchestra) (Intuition/Lyra, 1992)

Zorba: The Ballet (excerpts) ♪♪½ (Intuition, 1992/96)

worth searching for: Greek mezzo-soprano Agnes Baltsa's collection Songs My Country Taught Me ♪♪♪♪ (Deutsche Gramophone, 1986) includes several Theodorakis elegies backed by bouzouki and orchestra—a wonderful entry gate. The Very Best of Maria Farandouri ♪♪♪♪ (Minos, 1987) is a fascinating mix, featuring tunes by Theodorakis along with other Greek and international heavy-hitters. Arja & Mikis—Paijaa mua ♪♪♪ (MTV Musiikki/AXR, 1993) is an oddity, with Theodorakis conducting live performances of his poppier tunes sung in Finnish by tango vocalist Arja Saijonmaa.

influences:

- Olivier Messiaen, Wolfgang von Beethoven, rembetiko music
- Maria Farandouri, Agnes Baltsa

see also: Stavros Xarhakos & Nicos Gatsos

Wif Stenger

Third World

Reggae, pop

Formed 1973, in Kingston, Jamaica. Based in Jamaica.

Stephen "Cat" Coore, guitar; Michael "Ibo" Cooper, keyboards; William "Bunny Rugs" Clark, vocals (1977–present); Milton "Prilly" Hamilton, vocals (1973–77); William "Willie" Stewart, drums (1977–present); Cornel Marshall, drums (1973–77); Richard Daley, bass; Irvin "Carrot" Jarrett, percussion (1973–89). (All members are from Jamaica.)

When classical cellist/guitarist Cat Coore (son of Jamaica's Minister of Finance) and keyboardist Ibo Cooper formed Third World in response to the dearth of live reggae music in 1973, they had no idea that they would still be meeting the need over 25 years later. Barnstorming the island with other cohorts Richard Daley, Cornel Marshall, and Prilly Hamilton, Third World soon became the buzz of Jamaica with their original tunes and covers of U.S. R&B hits. Aided by a loan of £4,000, they traveled to London with one thing in mind—securing a contract with Island Records, home of Bob Marley & the Wailers. Within weeks, they signed and opened for Marley at the legendary Lyceum concert preserved on his Live LP. In late 1976 the label released Third World's groundbreaking, self-titled debut. Neither in the roots nor militant styles of reggae that predominated at the time, Third World was an audacious, decidedly pop-rock version of the form; more Santana, Kool & the Gang, and Beatles than Abyssinians or Burning Spear. Unfortunately, the album also revealed the band's weakness: inconsistency. The next year Third World replaced Hamilton and Marshall with Bunny Rugs Clark and Willie Stewart and created their masterwork, 96 Degrees in the Shade. A killah mix of anthemic originals ("Jah Glory," "Rhythm of Life," the title tune) with an inspired, almost definitive version of Bunny Wailer's "Dreamland," this is a triumph of reggae genre expansion. Nonetheless, 96 Degrees in the Shade was not well received—but its follow-up, Journey to Addis, was. Propelled by the radio/club smash "Now That We Found Love," the album crossed Third World into the pop mainstream. Now a truly global reggae band, Third World slipped into a long-term strategy of diminishing returns: they would reduce their touring to select venues and make records with one or two blockbusters and cool but underachieving filler tracks. The hits—"Try Jah Love," "Sense of Purpose," "Lagos Jump"—followed (albeit sporadically), but by the mid-1980s the band was relegated to nostalgia-act status. They continue with their salad-days membership intact, but seem sadly past their time.

what to buy: 96 Degrees in the Shade ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mango, 1977/1996, prod. Third World) is ground zero for reggae-pop. Sure, Bob Marley is the King, but this album is fighting for a corner of his throne. Essential.

what to buy next: Reggae Ambassadors: 20th Anniversary ♪♪♪½ (Island Chronicles, 1993, prod. various) is not the definitive Third World anthology. Although it contains a few songs from the band's Columbia and later Mercury tenures, this is basically a by-the-numbers hits package. There's just not enough from crucial out-of-print Island discs Prisoner in the Streets, Third World, and Arise in Harmony or the Columbia stuff. Hopefully, someday justice will be done.

what to avoid: Early in the 1990s the group self-released its albums, but Live It Up ♪♪ (Third World, 1995) leaves you wondering if they'd have been able to get another label interested anyway.

the rest:
Reggae Greats ♪♪♪½ (Mango)
Rock the World ♪♪½ (Columbia, 1981/1989)
You've Got the Power ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1982)
Sense of Purpose ♪♪½ (Columbia, 1985)
Hold on to Love ♪♪ (Columbia, 1987)
All the Way Strong ♪♪ (Columbia, 1989)
Serious Business ♪♪½ (Mercury, 1989)
Committed ♪♪½ (Mercury, 1992)
The Best of Third World ♪♪♪ (Legacy, 1993) Generation Coming ♪♪♪ (Gator, 1999)

worth searching for: Aiye Keta ♪♪♪½ (Edsel U.K., 1973/1997) is an interesting if intermittently successful collaboration with Steve Winwood.

influences:
◀◀ Bob Marley, Santana, the Paragons ▶▶ Foundation, Steel Pulse, UB40, 311

see also: Bob Marley, Bunny Wailer

Tom Terrell and Gary Graff

Eric & Suzy Thompson

See: California Cajun Orchestra

Richard Thompson /Linda Thompson /Richard & Linda Thompson

Rock, Anglo-Celtic folk-rock

Formed 1972, in England; discontinued work as duo, 1982. Richard Thompson based in London, England, and Los Angeles, CA, USA. Linda Thompson based in London, England.

Richard Thompson (born April 3, 1949, in London, England), vocals, guitar; Linda Thompson (born Linda Pettifer, 1948, in London, England), vocals.

Richard Thompson, an original member of the innovative folk-rock band Fairport Convention, has in the intervening years carved out a niche as a supremely gifted songwriter and guitarist. With his deep, burnished vocals and generally dark songs, he has modernized the British folk idiom in several ways; his expressive, often baroque fretwork conjoins a number of different traditions—imagine a Celtic Hendrix in Morocco—and has hugely influenced Mark Knopfler of Dire Straits, among many others. It was Richard Thompson's fellow Fairport Convention alum Sandy Denny who first introduced him to her friend Linda Peters (born Pettifer), who sang in folk clubs and recorded commercial jingles. They married during the early '70s, converted to Islam in 1974, and divorced in 1982 (Richard subsequently married Nancy Covey). Richard began his solo career first, with 1972's Henry the Human Fly, then joined forces with Linda for some of the most emotionally bare music ever produced in the pop idiom. After they split up Richard reactivated his solo career; worked with avant-gardists Fred Frith, Henry Kaiser, and John French; was a busy gun-for-hire (Nick Drake, J.J. Cale, Robert Plant, Bonnie Raitt, Crowded House, Suzanne Vega, the Golden Palominos, Syd Straw); and wielded enough influenced to inspire a 1994 tribute album featuring a bevy of cutting-edge acts. Linda moved into theater before releasing a solo album in 1985 and a retrospective in 1996.

what to buy: The couple's Shoot out the Lights ♪♪♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1982, prod. Joe Boyd), the release of which barely preceded their divorce, is a devastating, virtually flawless set of performances and the last of their collaborations. Their first release, I Want to See the Bright Lights Tonight ♪♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1974/Rykodisc, 1991, prod. Richard Thompson, John Wood), is an equally gripping and somewhat happier dialogue.

what to buy next: Richard's first solo album, Henry the Human Fly ♪♪♪♪½ (Warner Bros., 1972/Rykodisc-Hannibal, 1991, prod. Richard Thompson, John Wood) is saturated with his fondness for English roots music. Richard's best solo work is collected in the hefty but consistently engaging three-disc set Watching the Dark: The History of Richard Thompson ♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc/Hannibal, 1993, prod. various). Linda's Dreams Fly Away ♪♪♪½ (Rykodisc/Hannibal, 1996, prod. various) is a 20-track overview of her career, from before Richard to her post-divorce work.

the rest:

Richard Thompson:
(Guitar, Vocal) ♪♪½ (Island, 1976/Rykodisc-Hannibal, 1991)
Strict Tempo! ♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1981)
Hand of Kindness ♪♪♪½ (Hannibal, 1983/Rykodisc-Hannibal, 1991)
Small Town Romance ♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1984)
Across a Crowded Room ♪♪♪ (Polydor, 1985)
Daring Adventures ♪♪♪½ (Polydor, 1986)
Mirror Blue ♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1994)
You? Me? Us? ♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1996)
(With Danny Thompson) Industry ♪♪♪½ (Hannibal/Carthage, 1997)
(With Philip Pickett and the Fairport Rhythm Section) The Bones of All Men ♪♪ (Hannibal, 1998)

French, Frith, Kaiser & Thompson:
Live, Love, Larf, and Loaf ♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1987) Invisible Means ♪♪♪ (Windham Hill, 1990)

Richard & Linda Thompson:
Hokey Pokey ♪♪♪ (Hannibal, 1975/Rykodisc-Hannibal, 1991)
Pour down like Silver ♪♪♪½ (Hannibal, 1975/Rykodisc-Hannibal, 1991)
First Light ♪♪♪ (Carthage, 1978/Rykodisc, 1992) Sunnyvista ♪♪♪ (Carthage, 1979/Rykodisc, 1992)

Linda Thompson:
One Clear Moment ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1978)

worth searching for: Two of Richard's best albums are out of print at the moment. Rumor and Sigh ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1991, prod. Mitchell Froom) reveals his passionate concerns about the global condition. A solid set of compositions includes the anti-imperialist "Yankee, Go Home"; the Dylanesque "Jerusalem on the Jukebox," about the media trivialization of religion; and "Pharaoh," where "Maggie's Farm" meets "Go Down Moses." Amnesia ♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1988, prod. Mitchell Froom) attacks former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher with a blistering "Mother Knows Best," but it's also a showcase for his gift for musical mimicry, with a Scottish polka for record collectors ("Don't Sit on My Jimmy Shands") and a ballad about motorcycle-based romance ("1952 Vincent Black Lightning"). The Kurt Weill–influenced "God Loves a Drunk" is one of Richard's masterpieces. The Richard & Linda Thompson disc Strange Affair ♪♪♪½ (Silver Rarities, 1994) offers Thompson followers a chance to hear selections from the couple's 1977 concerts, featuring long, mystical electric guitar solos and lyrics influenced by Sufi devotional poetry. The two-disc set also includes some of the couple's best unreleased material from 1978 and 1980. Henry Kaiser's album Hope You'll Like Our New Direction ♪♪♪½ (Reckless, 1991, prod. various) includes Kaiser's buddy Richard on two tracks: "Kanaka Wai Wai," a Hawaiian slack-key guitar piece with Raymond and Elodea Kane; and "Annihilation in Allah," a traditional Muslim song movingly sung by Richard in the original Arabic.

influences:
⏮ Wes Montgomery, Django Reinhardt, Jimi Hendrix, Nick Drake, Van Morrison, Bob Dylan ⏭ Dire Straits, Elvis Costello, Jeff Buckley, Womack & Womack, Billy Bragg

see also: Sandy Denny, Fairport Convention, Home Service, Ashley Hutchings, Ray Kane, Trevor Lucas, Oyster Band

Simon Glickman, Gary Graff, and Pamela Murray Winters

Simon Thoumire /Seannachie

Scottish folk

Born July 11, 1970, in Edinburgh, Scotland. Based in Scotland.

Based upon the volume of work he's done in such a relatively short period of time, Simon Thoumire could be labeled the "Mark O'Connor" of the concertina. Just as O'Connor—a former bluegrass fiddle prodigy from the States—was a perennial prizewinner in his youth before developing into the mature artist we know today, Thoumire's early career as a concertina player foreshadowed his current remarkable skills. His precocious triumphs included BBC Radio 2's Young Tradition Award and kudos from the British magazine Folk Roots for the year's "most innovative performance," both in 1989. To add to these distinctions he has toured all over Europe and North America; played with such well-regarded elder statesmen as Aly Bain, Phil Cunningham, and Dónal Lunny; taught the art of concertina playing in both the U.K. and the United States; appeared on various radio and television shows; and worked with Yehudi Menuhin's "Live Music Now!" program bringing high-quality performances into a variety of communities. With the exception of March, Stratspey & Surreal none of Thoumire's material is readily available in the U.S., although the rest can probably be ordered through the Internet. A self-taught musician, Thoumire started playing the bagpipes when he was nine years old and moved on to the concertina when he was 12, supposedly after hearing a broadcast that featured Hamish Bain. His first professional gigs occurred in 1989 as a member of the tradition-oriented group Seannachie, with whom he was later to make a pair of well-received albums. But Thoumire has actually done his most interesting work as a band leader, or co-leader, with the guitarist Ian Carr and keyboard player Fergus MacKenzie. As the force behind the Simon Thoumire Three, he has forged a spirited blend of traditional Scottish folk-roots with high-flying jazz riffs. Their first album, Waltzes for Playboys, only set the stage for the wonders of their second release, March, Stratspey & Surreal. Thoumire has also kept himself busy with a series of often ad hoc ensembles, including Simon Thoumire's Reel Life Ceilidh and the Simon Thoumire Orchestra. Perhaps his most quirky project has been the pseudonymous "Hamish MacGregor and the Blue Bonnets" album Trip to Scotland.

what's available: March, Strathspey & Surreal ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1996, prod. Simon Thoumire) is probably the finest blend of traditional Scottish folk tunes and jazz ever played on a concertina. Kevin MacKenzie's guitar and Simon Thorpe's bass lines provide much of the disc's jazz feel, but Thoumire has a flair for improvisation as well. Rhythmic flexibility is the key phrase here, but not the kind of willy-nilly beat sure to confound dancers; rather a pulse that ebbs and flows with a virtuosic naturalness.

the rest:
(With Ian Carr) Hootz ♪♪♪½ (Black Crow, 1990)
Waltzes for Playboys ♪♪♪½ (Celtic Music, 1993)
(With Fergus MacKenzie) Exhibit A ♪♪♪ (Iona, 1995)

worth searching for: Trip to Scotland ♪♪♪ (Tartan Tapes, 1997, prod. Hamish MacGregor) is a hoot because it features Thoumire with a few members of the Mollys on a disc created specifically for the tourist trade. The group calls itself Hamish MacGregor & the Blue Bonnets for this set, but nowhere on the jacket is there any information that would connect Thoumire with the project. Fiddle and pipes are the main instruments on the album, and the players whip through a set of traditional folk melodies.

solo outings:
Seannachie:
Take Note ♪♪♪ (Raven, 1988) Devil's Delight ♪♪♪½ (Raven, 1992)

influences:
⏮ Hamish Bain

see also: The Mollys

Garaud MacTaggart

cecil sharp

At the close of the 19th century, British folk songs and dance were passed down almost entirely in the oral tradition. Late in his life and early in the subsequent century, Cecil Sharp (1859–1924) undertook a vigorous campaign to preserve and document the traditions of British folk culture. Traveling around England on his bicycle, Sharp began writing down the songs and dances of different regions of the country and released a series of books, beginning with Folk Songs from Somerset in 1904, that made the fruits of his collections available to the masses. In 1911 Sharp founded the English Folk Song and Dance Society, an organization that remains a potent force in preserving British folk traditions. In 1916 Sharp traveled to America, where he spent two years in rural areas of southern Appalachia and collected nearly 2,000 songs and dances that reconfirmed the strong links between the folk cultures of that region and those of Great Britain. Today, Sharp's archives are kept at the Cecil Sharp House in North London, a mecca for traditional and contemporary folkies that served as a wellspring of material and inspiration for revivalists like Ashley Hutchings (who presented a one-man tribute to Sharp in the mid-1980s) and Richard Thompson.

see also: Appalachia (sidebar), Ashley Hutchings, Maddy Prior, Richard Thompson

Michael Parrish

3 Leg Torso

Eastern European cabaret-tango

Formed 1996, in Portland, OR, USA. Based in Portland, OR, USA.

Béla Balogh, violin; Gabe Leavitt, cello; Courtney Von Drehle, accordion. (All members are from USA.)

3 Leg Torso was formed in early 1996 when a cellist, a violinist, and an accordionist discovered their common musical cause. Béla Balogh is a third-generation violinist whose grandfather was the leader of a Hungarian gypsy orchestra. Gabe Leavitt turned to the cello after years as a guitarist and electric bassist. The trio's primary composer, Courtney Von Drehle, has scored music for dance, theater, television, and radio. Their work is a natural mix of serious compositional forms with a populist bent. Not surprisingly they bring to mind others who have sought to make similar leaps, such as Kurt Weill and Astor Piazolla. Since their inception the Portland, Oregon-based trio have become key participants in their hometown's International Performance Festival, and have had works commissioned by the Portland Institute for Contemporary Arts. And yes, they take a firm stand on using the digit, rather than the word "three."

what's available: 3 Leg Torso ♪♪♪♪ (3 Leg Torso, 1997, prod. 3 Leg Torso, Jim Greve) is a perfect debut, making a gentle but forceful declaration of the group's arrival. Von Drehle is a deft composer, writing the bulk of the work on this set. Never strident, the melodies and their arrangements turn from humor to romance with ease. This is not an easily classifiable album or outfit, but then new and original voices never are.

influences:
⏮ Astor Piazolla, the Kronos Quartet, Kurt Weill

David Greenberger

3 Mustaphas 3

Worldbeat

Formed August 6, 1982, in Szegerely, somewhere in the heart of the Balkans. Disbanded early 1990s.

Hijaz Mustapha, guitar, bouzouki, violin; Daoudi Mustapha, sax, clarinet; Houzam Mustapha, drums, vocals; Kemo Mustapha, keyboards, accordion; Niaveti 3 Mustapha, flute, accordion; Sabah Mustapha, bass, vocals; Uncle Patrel Mustapha, saz; Expen$ive Mustapha, trumpet.

3 Mustaphas 3 amazed international audiences with their uncanny grasp of world music from the moment they landed in London in 1982. The number of people on stage would fluctuate from gig to gig, but the revolving troupe of family members was informally led by brothers Hijaz, Houzam, and Sabah, the three Mustaphas of the group's title. "In our country," says Hijaz Mustapha in lightly accented English, "people do not think of music as a way of making a living. It's like Ireland, or Louisiana. If you say 'I play music' they answer 'Yes, so do we, but what do you do for a living?' So for many years we played at a club in our hometown of Szegerely called the Crazy Loquat Club, even though we didn't know we were musicians. We learned to excel on our instruments by playing tunes from the radio, local tunes, and the requests of the truck drivers who came there from all over the world. It is very good to play requests from the audience, because it makes you aware of many kinds of music. We like our own Balkan music, starting with wedding music and going on from there, because it has interesting tempos; 7/8, 9/8, 11/8, 13/14—it's very irregular and good for circle dancing or dancing in a line." Hijaz says that the transformation of the Mustaphas from "local" players to professional musicians had a lot to do with the jukebox at the Crazy Loquat. "They don't keep music on records in our town, they just play it for today. So the first records we heard were in the jukebox at the Crazy Loquat Club bar. A man came and filled the machine with records, so we didn't have to buy any. We heard African music, American country music, and your Elvis who is very good."

Since the Mustaphas came West, many legends have grown up around the band, including one that says they were smuggled out of Szegerely in refrigerators. "I have read that story, yes," says Hijaz. "I'd like to believe it was true in fact, but it is only true in fiction. There are not so many political problems in our homeland as people believe. We left because it is good to travel, to expand your awareness of other people." No matter how they got to London, the Mustaphas' worldbeat bag caused a sensation. "Mustaphas like expansive music, pleasing music—music with the local touch still left in." When pressed for a definition of "local" music, Hijaz says, "Local music is authentic, played by musicians for an audience of local people. We like Indian film music, like the soundtrack to the movie Pren Tapasya, and records by Sunya Ganguly, who is an Indian man that plays your American steel guitar for Indian films; the vallenato music of the Colombian accordion; the Black Sea music called Kara Demiz; bands like Select from Haiti. They are local musicians because they don't want to be national music like your Bobby Rydell or Pat Boone. We don't like that kind of music because there's no local feeling; the next day you don't remember you were in a concert. There's nothing there for local people to enjoy—they make it for as many people as possible, like an appliance that you take home and never use."

what to buy: Heart of Uncle ♪♪♪♪½ (Rykodisc, 1989, prod. David Young), released at the height of Mustapha mania, showcases the band's excellent international chops with grooves from Kenya, India, Greece, and Santa Domingo, as well as a few inspired originals.

what to buy next: Soup of the Century ♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1990) was the band's swan song, with another crazy mixed-up excursion to Japan, Greece, India, Spain, Bulgaria, Albania, and London.

the rest:
Shopping ♪♪♪½ (Globestyle, 1987)
Friends, Fiends & Fronds ♪♪ (Globestyle, 1991)

influences:
⏮ D.O. Misiani, Foday Musa Suso, Mohammad Rafi, Olatunji, Harry Belafonte

⏭ Paul Simon, Annabouboula, Boiled in Lead, Baka Beyond see also: Abana Ba Nasery, Stella Chiweshe, Pépé Kallé, Sabah Habas Mustapha

j. poet

Tianjin Buddhist Music Ensemble

Buddhist devotional music

Formed 1983, in Tianjin, northeast China. Based in Tianjin, China.

Li Jinwen, gu, guanzi, nao, chazi; Wang Fenrui, sheng, guanzi, dangzi, yunluo; Zhang Shicai, sheng, nao; Zhang Shenglu, dizi, gezi; Pan Shizong, yunlao, guanzi, bo, dizi; Zhang Yuije, go, sheng. (All members are from China.)

During the Chinese cultural revolution, Buddhist ritual was suppressed, including any performances of Buddhist music. In the 1980s interest in pre-revolutionary culture resulted in the appearance of some outfits reviving Buddhist traditions. The Tianjin Buddhist Music Ensemble was founded by Li Jinwen, a former Buddhist priest who is one of the country's leading masters of the guanzi (Chinese oboe). The ensemble also consists of three other musicians who, like Li, are in their 70s, along with two younger players. The group's music is primarily an instrumental blend of reed instruments, gongs, and other percussion.

what's available: The group's single CD, Buddhist Music of Tianjin ♪♪♪ (Nimbus, 1994), documents their 1993 European tour. Beautifully recorded, the ensemble's exotic blend of wind instruments with a variety of reeds, gongs, and drums makes for a profoundly moving, ethereal listening experience.

influences:

⏮ Gyuto Monks

⏭ Tan Dun

Michael Parrish

Kathryn Tickell

British folk, Celtic

Born June 8, 1967, in Wark, North Tyne Valley, Northumberland, England. Based in Northumberland, England.

Kathryn Tickell has almost single-handedly brought the Northumbrian smallpipes to international fame, establishing herself as an outstanding folk musician along the way. Tickell's technique on the bellows-blown pipes is only excelled by her general musicianship, allowing emotion to flow through the pipes as she plays. From hard-driving, almost rocking reels and hornpipes to evocative airs and waltzes, Tickell covers a broad spectrum of musical colors while performing. She is not only an excellent piper, but has also distinguished herself as an award-winning fiddler.

Tickell grew up in a family of musicians: her father is a ballad singer, her mother a concertina player, and both grandfathers were musicians as well. She began on piano at the age of six and started learning both the smallpipes and the fiddle by the age of nine. At 13 Tickell was winning piping competitions and appearing at major folk music festivals. A local radio station encouraged her to make her first recording while she was still in high school, which resulted in On Kielder Side, a brilliant debut. That same year, Tickell was named official piper to the Lord Mayor of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Through the ensuing years she has become a musical force to be reckoned with, having five more albums under her belt and a long list of self-authored tunes. She has collaborated with numerous fine musicians as well, including Sting, John Surman, and the Chieftains. She also works to encourage new folk players, both through personal appearances and through a charity she established to assist lower-income children in receiving music lessons.

what's available: Tickell's most recent release, The Northumberland Collection ♪♪♪♪½ (Park, 1998, prod. Kathryn Tickell), is a beautifully crafted recording featuring Tickell's brilliant pipe and fiddle work and the skills of a variety of Northumberland musicians on melodian, harp, vocals, and other instruments. This is a well-rounded overview of music from the Northumberland region, with the traditional and the modern each represented. Both the music selection and the recording quality are impeccable. The Gathering ♪♪♪♪ (Park, 1997, prod. Kathryn Tickell) also showcases a mix of traditional and original music. Tickell's own tunes are soulful, playful, and, while traditional in nature, sometimes branch out rebelliously towards rock 'n' roll. This recording displays Tickell's mature understanding of music, her highly developed expert technique, and the fiery passion typical of her work.

worth searching for: On Kielder Side ♪♪♪½ (Saydisc, 1984, prod. Keith Proud), Tickell's debut, features traditional music from Northumberland, Ireland, and Scotland, all brilliantly played when she was only a teenager. From the lively full-band sound on "The Peacock Followed the Hen," featuring pipes, fiddle, keyboards, and guitar, to the exciting smallpipe solo "Jean's Reel," Tickell shows her versatility and virtuosity. Other highlights include a moving Shetland tune, "Da Slockit Light," and an uplifting air-and-hornpipe set, "Border Spirit/A.B. Hornpipe/Billy Pigg's Hornpipe."

influences:

⏮ Alistair Anderson, Tom Anderson, Will Atkinson, Joe Hutton, Willy Taylor, Mike Tickell

⏭ Chris Ormston, Billy Bragg, the Pogues, the Oyster Band

Jo Hughey Morrison

Timbalada

Axe

Formed 1993, in Salvador Da Bahia, Brazil. Based in Salvador Da Bahia, Brazil.

Carlinhos Brown, leader, percussionist (1993–present); a large roster of other musicians.

The brainchild of percussionist Carlinhos Brown, Timbalada represents the next generation of Bahia's blocos afros cultural organizations like Ile Aiye and Olodum. The group took the rolling thunder of the blocos' Carnival drumming groups and successfully recreated it in a pop format, with electric guitars, horns, and keyboards. The group has listed as many as 60 people as members on its albums, and during Carnival time thousands of Salvadorans march as part of Timbalada's parade. But the group does have a more compact touring ensemble—of about 20 members.

While Brown has written some of Timbalada's songs and produced all of its albums, he does not sing with the group, relinquishing those duties to an extensive bullpen of vocalists including Patricia Gomes, Xexeu, and the gray-haired Ninha. Now their trademark, the group's members always appear shirtless with white-painted lines, swirls, dots, and circles decorating their bodies, a practice that reputedly began because they had no money for costumes. Since those lean beginnings, though, Timbalada has been able to achieve critical and popular success, even raising enough money to establish a combination recording studio/education center in its home base, the neighborhood of Candeal. Despite its occasional rhythmic experimentation, the group's albums increasingly have a sameness to them—especially in contrast to the diverse sounds on leader Brown's 1997 solo album, Alphagamabetizado. Perhaps it was timely, then, that with the release of Timbalada's Mae de Samba the following year, Brown told reporters the group was a three-act concept of three albums each, and would dissolve after its ninth release in 2001.

what to buy: Timbalada ♪♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram, 1993, prod. Carlinhos Brown, Wesley Rangel) is the group's raw, powerful debut. The drum-and-chant format sounds surprisingly full, even without additional instrumentation, and the excitement and exuberance is palpable. What the follow-up, Cada Cabeça é um Mundo ♪♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram, 1994, prod. Carlinhos Brown, Wesley Rangel), may lack in power, it makes up for with more sophisticated arrangements and production. This second effort basically established the template for the rest of the group's output, and has not been equaled yet.

what to buy next: Andei Road ♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram, 1995, prod. Carlinhos Brown, Wesley Rangel) maintains its predecessor's format, but does it with strength and consistency almost all the way through.

what to avoid: Timbalada Dance ♪♪½ (PolyGram, 1996) is an ill-advised collection of remixes, adding heavy electronic beats to what already was wonderfully polyrhythmic music.

the rest:
Mineral ♪♪♪½ (PolyGram, 1996)
Mãe do Samba ♪♪♪½ (PolyGram, 1998)
Timbalada Live (1998)

solo outings:
Carlinhos Brown:
Alphagamabetizado ♪♪♪♪ (Emd/Blue Note, 1997)
Omelete Man N/A (Emd/Blue Note, 1999)

influences:
◀◀ Ile Aiye, Olodum ▶▶ Bragadá

see also: Daude, Olodum, Caetano Veloso

Marty Lipp

Willie Toors

Folk, modern folk

Born 1921, in Mobyn, Sweden. Based in Malung, Sweden.

Willie Toors began playing fiddle at age nine, and learned from many living legends of Swedish folk. In his 20s Toors studied and played classical music, but also kept playing folk music at weddings, public dances, and Forest Balls—parties put on by farmers in Sweden's back country, away from cities and police. After his military service, Toors wandered the country playing with small groups and picking up many different styles from Swedish Gypsies. He composed most of the music on his long-overdue debut disc, Från Logar, Skogar, Zigenarläger, och Cirkustält, though the tunes are often based on traditional themes. On some tracks Toors is backed by a small acoustic group—keyboards, bass, and guitar—but the main attraction is his fiddle. He has a full-bodied, lyrical style, full of smoldering Gypsy soul. There's something timeless and magical about this music, and since Toors makes his bread and butter by playing at social events, the tunes have a sprightly feeling that recalls dancing snowflakes and flickering bonfires.

what's available: Från Logar, Skogar, Zigenarläger, och Cirkustält ♪♪♪♪♪ (Hurv, 1997, prod. Anders Rosén) is one of the best albums of tradition-based Swedish fiddling ever. Toors is an amazing technician, but his chops are always in the service of his passionate playing. Even if you think you hate instrumental music, this album will win you over. In the CD booklet (English translation included), Toors gives his recollections of each tune, where he heard it, or how he came to compose it, and his stories add an extra dimension to the music—especially "Wedding Banquet," a tribute to a woman he loved and lost, and "Forest Hymn," an ode to the whistling of the wind through the trees.

influences:
◀◀ Rudolf Sundqvist ▶▶ Mats Edén

see also: Anders Rosén

j. poet

Toots & the Maytals

Reggae

Formed 1962, in Kingston, Jamaica. Based in Kingston, Jamaica.

Frederick "Toots" Hibbert (born 1946, in Maypen, Jamaica); various collaborators.

Toots & the Maytals were one of the pioneers of reggae. In fact, it was their 1968 recording "Do the Reggay" that gave the genre its name. Initially known in the United States for their songs "Sweet and Dandy" and "Pressure Drop," included on the soundtrack of the 1972 film The Harder They Come, the group continued to make its presence felt throughout the world with a soulful mixture of Jamaican rhythms and American R&B. Enigmatic lead vocalist and songwriter Frederick "Toots" Hibbert has been called "the Otis Redding of Reggae." The son of a Revival Zion preacher, Hibbert grew up singing in a church choir. Shortly after moving to Kingston in 1962 he formed a trio with Nathaniel "Jerry" Mathias and Ralphus "Raleigh" Gordon. As the Vikings, they recorded several singles for Clement "Sir Coxsone" Dodd's Studio One label, including "Hallelujah" and "Six and Seven Books of Moses." In 1964 the by-now rechristened Maytals left Dodd and began working with rival producer Prince Buster. Under Buster's supervision, the group performed and recorded with Byron Lee & His Ska-Kings Band from 1964 to 1966.

The success of Hibbert's song "Bam Bam," which earned him the first of three first-place songwriting awards at the Jamaican Song Festival, was overcast by his arrest and 12-month imprisonment for possession of marijuana. The experience resulted in the classic "54–46 (That's My Number)," recorded with producer Leslie Kong. This partnership continued until Kong's death in 1971, when the band began recording with Kong's former partner, Warrick Lyn. Tracks produced by Kong and Lyn included all-time-favorites like "Do the Reggay," "Monkey Man" (their first single to chart in England), and "Sweet and Dandy," which won the Jamaican Song Festival competition in 1969. Shortly after the release of The Harder They Come the group, now performing as Toots & the Maytals, earned its third Jamaican Song Festival award with Hibbert's tune "Pomp and Pride."

Signing a contract with Island in 1975, Toots & the Maytals released their first album in the United States, Funky Kingston, which combined two previous albums—Funky Kingston and In the Dark —and included a reggae rendition of John Denver's "Country Roads." They first toured the country as an opening act for the Who. Although the original group disbanded in 1981 Toots continued to work as soloist with famed producers and rhythm section Sly Dunbar and Robbie Shakespeare. A new version of the Maytals was formed in the early 1990s, with a late-decade Grammy nomination for Ska Father cementing the act's historical status and verifying its continued vitality.

what to buy: Time Tough: Anthology ♪♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1996, prod. various) spans the full recording career of Toots & the Maytals. The 40-song, two-CD set includes many rare singles and previously unreleased tunes.

what to buy next: The first American release by Toots & the Maytals, Funky Kingston ♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1975, prod. Warrick Lyn, Chris Blackwell, Dave Bloxham) remains one of reggae's greatest albums. Accompanied by the driving horn section Sons of the Jungle, the band offer a soulful set that includes their Jamaican hits "Pomp and Pride," "Pressure Drop," and the title track, as well as reggae-fied versions of John Denver's "Country Roads" and Richard Berry's "Louie Louie."

the rest:
Reggae Got Soul ♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1976)
Reggae Greats ♪♪♪ (Island, 1984)
Toots in Memphis ♪♪♪ (Island, 1988)
Ska Father ♪♪♪♪ (Artist Only!, 1998)

influences:
◀◀ The Wailers, the Skatalites, the Upsetters
▶▶ Third World, UB40

see also: Joe Higgs, Jackie Mittoo, Sly & Robbie

Craig Harris

Yomo Toro

Salsa

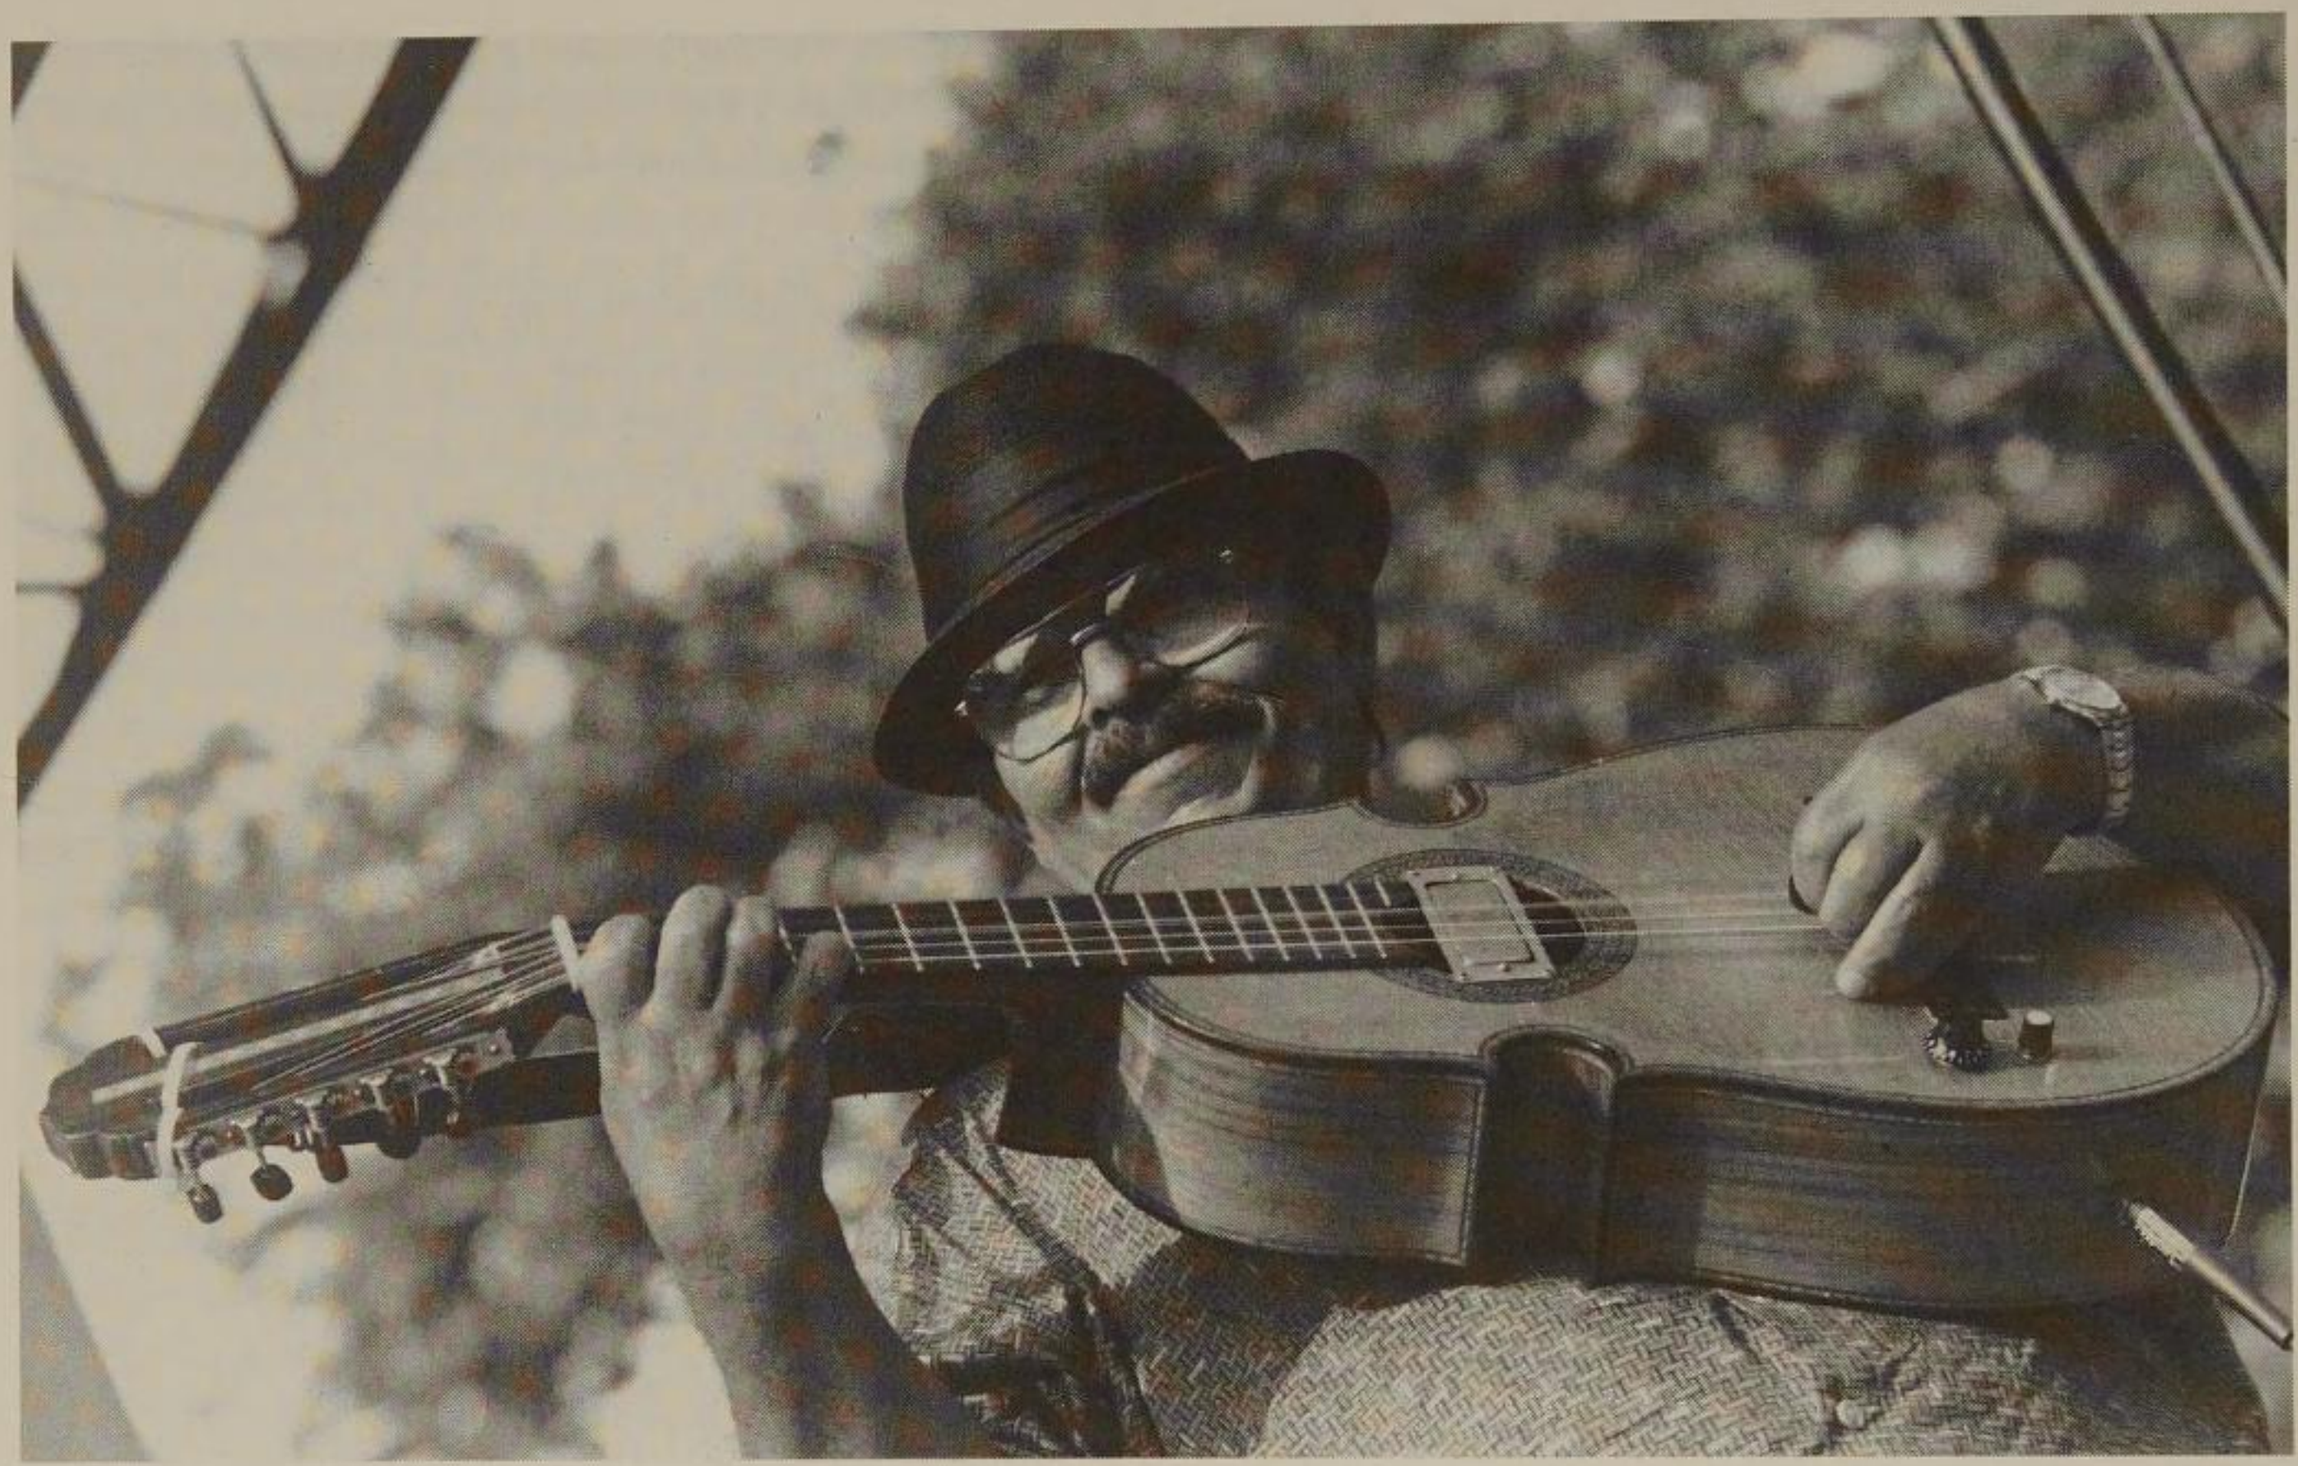
Born July 26, 1933, in Ensenada, Puerto Rico. Based in the Bronx, NY, USA.

Yomo Toro is a master of the cuatro, a small Puerto Rican folk guitar descended from the viheula of Spain. Since emigrating to New York in 1956, Toro has been an influential presence in the Latin-music community. In addition to recording as a soloist, he has toured and recorded with the Fania All Stars and guested on albums by Willie Colon, Daniel Ponce, Eddie Palmieri, Tito Puente, and Hector LaVoe, as well as Harry Belafonte, Paul Simon, the Barry Sisters, and Linda Ronstadt. The son of an amateur guitarist and cuatro builder, Toro began playing his father's instruments at the age of five. Making his first trip to the United States in 1953, Toro performed eight shows a week at the Puerto Rican Theater in New York and created a stir with his unique approach to the Jibaro folk music of Puerto Rico. He teamed with Larry Harlow's Orchestra to record the influential album Tribute to Arsenio in 1969, and reunited with Harlow to form the Latin Legends Band in 1994.

what to buy: Funky Jibaro ♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1988, prod. Robert Musso) is a successful balance of Toro's traditional approach and more modern sensibilities.

what to buy next: Toro's lightning-fast cuatro melodies are accompanied by members of Puerto Rican group Batacumbele and Ruben Blades's Seis del Solar, and vocalists Jerry Medina and Dalia Silva, on the joyous tribute to the yuletide season Celebramos Navidad ♪♪♪½ (Ashe/Rounder, 1996, prod. Rachel Faro, Sammy Figueroa).

the rest:
Gracias ♪♪♪ (Island/Mango, 1990)
Manos de Oro (Hands of Gold) ♪♪♪ (Crepescule, 1994)



Yomo Toro

influences:

◀◀ Eddie Palmieri, Tito Puente

▶▶ Fania All Stars, the Latin Legends Band, Ruben Blades

see also: Ruben Blades, Willie Colon, Larry Harlow, Eddie Palmieri, Tito Puente

Craig Harris

Roberto Torres

Salsa, vallenato, charanga, son

Born c. 1948, in Güines, Cuba. Based in Miami, FL, USA.

Miami-based Roberto Torres is, above all else, a great sonero, a master of Cuban song. Torres has that rare combination of voice and improvisatory chops that mark the great singer in this style. His flexibility as a performer comes from a singing career that began when he was 16, and from working with legendary outfits like Orquesta Aragón and bandleaders like Beny Moré. Torres left Cuba in 1959 and headed straight for Miami. He was soon making his own records, eventually founding his own label, Güajiro. Outside the Latin music scene, Torres is known for having created a sound called charanga/vallenato. Perhaps only in Miami could a musician combine the rather elegant charanga tradition from Cuba—which features percussion, strings, and flute—with the rural sound of vallenato from Colombia, which features percussion, electric bass, and button accordion. Bringing these two divergent styles together to create a new one is no easy task, but Torres was up to it. The sound is much lighter than any vallenato records, but the reedy accordion changes the dynamic of the traditional orchestral charanga, giving it a thicker quality. In some ways Torres's innovations foreshadowed the movement of vallenato from a rural music to one with almost a pop following now in Colombia.

what to buy: El Rey del Montuno ♪♪♪♪½ (SAR, 1996, prod. Roberto Torres) is Torres in real Cuban form. No fusion here, just a very solid band, good songwriting, and Torres's great voice.

what to buy next: Though Torres's Cuban recordings are better than his charanga/vallenato fusion, Y La Charanga Vallenato ♪♪♪♪ (SAR, 1992, prod. Roberto Torres) is pretty good music.

You can here how the two divergent styles are brought together under Torres's watchful ear.

the rest:
Con el Sabor de . . . Roberto Torres ♪♪♪♪ (SAR 1992)
Exclusivamente Lo Mejor ♪♪♪½ (Sony, 1992)
Homenaje a Beny Moré ♪♪♪♪ (SAR, 1992)
Y La Charanga Vallenato, Vol. 3 ♪♪♪½ (SAR, 1992)
Corazon de Pueblo ♪♪♪♪ (SAR, 1992)
Recuerda a La Sonora ♪♪♪♪½ (SAR, 1994)
Y Su Charanga Vallenato ♪♪♪ (SAR, 1994)
Castigador ♪♪♪♪ (Salsoul, 1996)
La Fiesta ♪♪♪ (SAR, 1996)
Vallenatos a Mi Estilo, Vol. 1 ♪♪♪♪ (SAR 1996)
Juntos ♪♪♪½ (Salsoul, 1997)
Viva el Bolero ♪♪♪♪ (SAR, 1998)

worth searching for: Recuerda al Trio Matamoros ♪♪♪♪ (SAR, 1993, prod. Roberto Torres) is not a fusion, but an homage to one of the great trios of Cuban music, in which Torres brings his wit and talent to these classics.

influences:
⏮ Benny Moré, Trio Matamoros, Mario Rivera

see also: Benny Moré, Orquesta Aragón

Jared Snyder

Peter Tosh

Reggae

Born October 9, 1944, in Westmoreland, Jamaica. Died September 11, 1987, in Barbican, St. Andrew, Jamaica.

Of the three original Wailers—along with Bunny Livingston and Bob Marley—Peter Tosh was certainly the most limited vocally, his gruff baritone being no match for Livingston's mystical warmth or Marley's sage-like delivery. But as the reggae supergroup became Marley's show, the street-wise tenacity in Tosh erupted. A swaggering bravado, which would provide backup to no man, took over, and the solo work he had dabbled with in the Wailers became a full-time endeavor. And perhaps not so surprisingly, his career brimmed with a rebellion and staunch Rastafarian ideology that neither Marley nor Livingston (commonly known as Bunny Wailer by the 1970s) approached in their respective romantic noodlings and murky spirituals. The same man who announced "I'm the Toughest" in the 1960s charged into the 1970s championing marijuana, simultaneously butting heads with the police (who nearly beat him to death in 1978) and releasing deep-rooted reggae albums that were as gritty as they were uncompromising. Though his work waned during the 1980s, Tosh remained a strident mouthpiece against the Jamaican government, which some feel led to his murder in 1987. To this day accusations fly that the three pistol-waving men who killed the singer were carrying out a political execution. Two other people were fatally shot and four more wounded in the course of the robbery (as it was officially reported) of Tosh's home.

what to buy: Tosh's first two efforts, Legalize It ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1976, prod. Peter Tosh) and Equal Rights ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1977, prod. Peter Tosh), stand as defiant cornerstones of both reggae and Tosh's refusal to be eclipsed by Marley's stardom. Legalize It hoists ganga up the topical flagpole while Equal Rights blisters with both political and personal warnings, as in the sharp " Stepping Razor."

what to buy next: A decidedly more mainstream album, complete with a Motown-like duet, Wanted Dread and Alive ♪♪♪½ (EMI, 1981, prod. Peter Tosh) makes up for Tosh's Marvin Gaye flip-out with the captivating "Reggae Mylitis"; this ode to reggae "disease" is an unexpected playful peak, while the more typically defiant title track and "Cold Blood" stand among his best work.

what to avoid: Since it's out of print, Mystic Man ♪♪½ (Rolling Stones, 1979) is easy to avoid. It suffers mostly from uneven material and an abundance of murk.

the rest:
Bush Doctor ♪♪♪ (Rolling Stones, 1978)
The Toughest ♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1988)
Dread Don't Die ♪♪½ (EMI, 1995)
Honorary Citizen ♪♪♪♪ (Legacy, 1997)

influences:
⏮ The Wailers, Bob Marley, Bunny Wailer, Desmond Dekker

see also: Bob Marley, Bunny Wailer

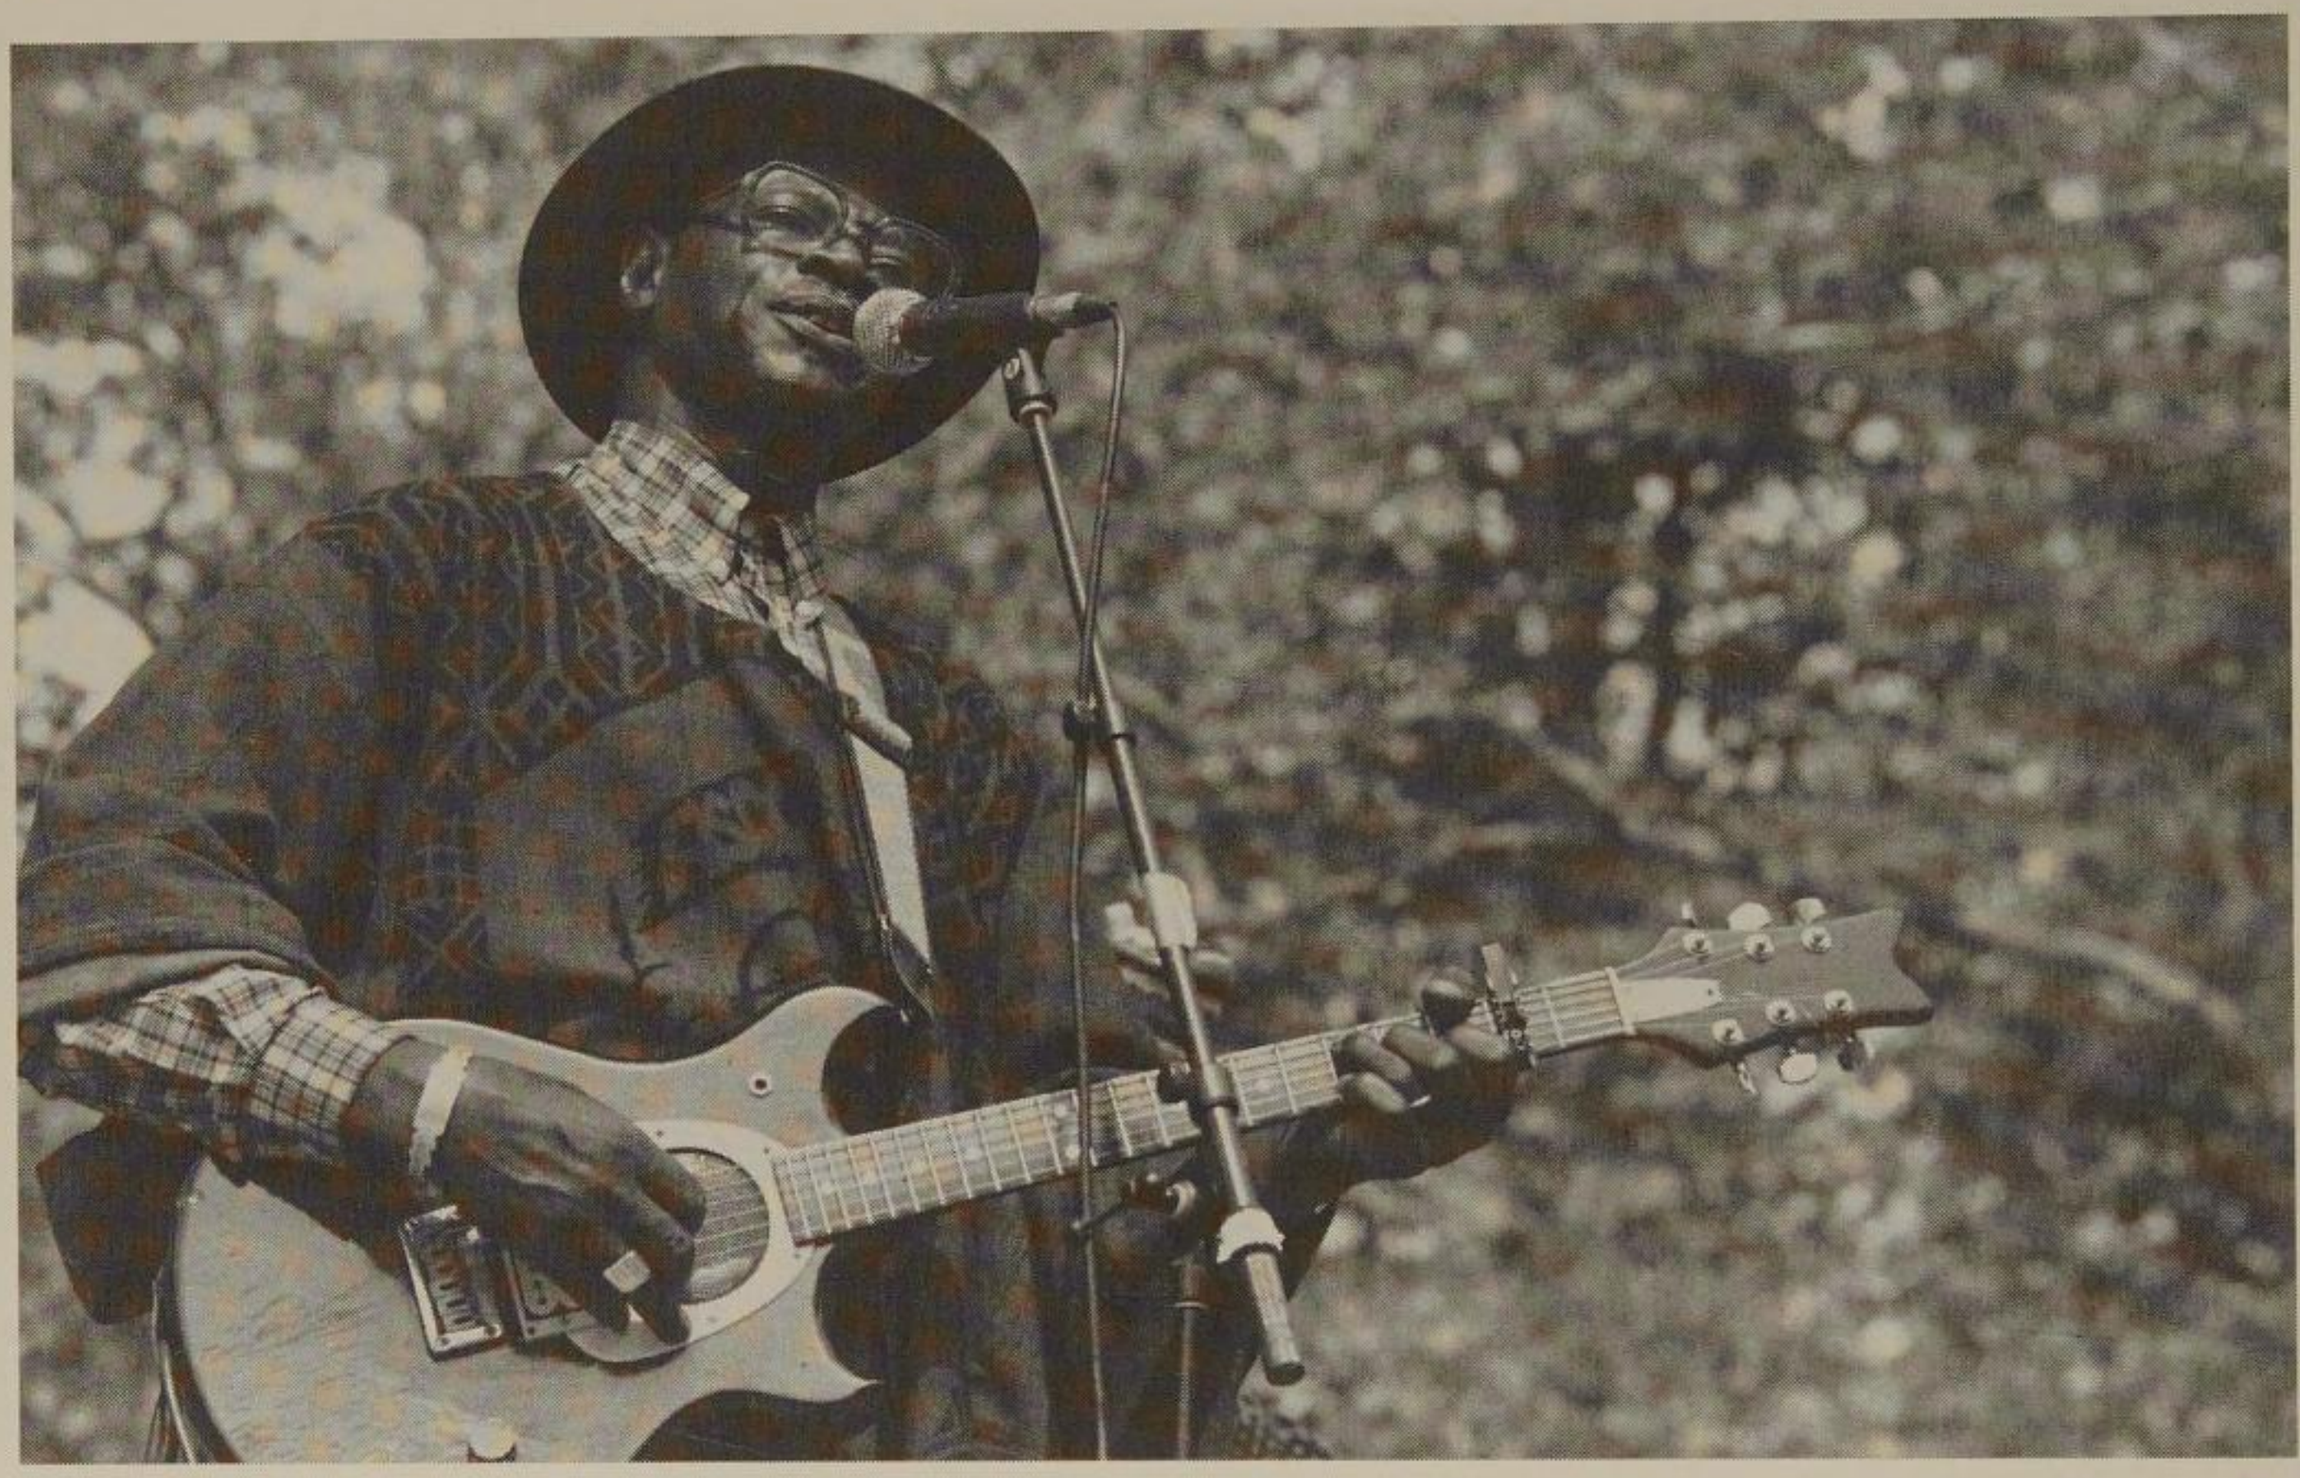
Allan Orski

Ali Farka Touré

African blues

Born 1939, in Gourmararusse, Mali. Based in Mali.

The blues of the Mississippi Delta are fused with the musical traditions of West Africa by guitarist and vocalist Ali Farka Touré. Though often compared to U.S. bluesmen like John Lee Hooker and Muddy Waters—already the best company imaginable—Touré, who mostly sings in his native language, has created his own musical legacy. Touré began playing guitar at age 10 and mastered the instrument by age 17, yet he worked as a sound engineer until 1980. He had recorded his first single in France in 1976, but wasn't known in the United States until the 1988 release of his impressive self-titled debut album—after which he had a steady ascent as one of the all-time most successful world-music artists on the U.S. charts and the global stage.



touré kunda

Ali Farka Touré

what to buy: Touré's collaboration with born-in-the-U.S.A. guitar virtuoso and world-music patron Ry Cooder, Talking Timbuktu ♪♪♪♪♪ (World Circuit, 1994, prod. Ali Farka Touré), is a groundbreaking meeting of two cultures. The album held the top slot on Billboard's world-music charts for 32 weeks—a still-unbroken record—and won a Grammy as best world-music album. Guests include guitarist Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown and drummer Jim Keltner.

what to buy next: Touré's unique approach to the blues makes The Source ♪♪♪♪½ (Hannibal, 1991, prod. Ali Farka Touré) a memorable fusion of his West African-inspired playing and U.S.-based style. Famed genre-crossing blues guitarist Taj Mahal is featured on two cuts.

the rest:
Ali Farka Touré ♪♪♪♪½ (Island, 1988)
The River ♪♪♪ (Island, 1990)
African Blues ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1990)
La Drogue ♪♪♪ (Sonodisc, 1994)
Timbarma ♪♪♪ (World Circuit, 1996)
Radio Mali ♪♪♪ (World Circuit, 1996)
Niafunke N/A (World Circuit/Hannibal, 1999)

worth searching for: To hear other artists on each end of the African/blues connection Touré has come to personify, enjoy the superb collection Mali to Memphis: An African-American Odyssey ♪♪♪♪½ (Putumayo, 1999, compilation prod. Dan Storper), which is also reviewed in this book's Compilations section.

influences:
⏮ John Lee Hooker, Lightnin' Hopkins, Muddy Waters, West African musical tradition ⏭ Ry Cooder, Taj Mahal

see also: Ry Cooder, Taj Mahal

Craig Harris

Touré Kunda

International Senegalese pop

Formed 1981, in Paris, France. Based in Paris, France.

Amadou Tilo Touré (died 1983), drums, percussion, vocals; Ismaila Touré, drums, percussion, vocals; Sixu Tidiane Touré, drums, percussion, vocals; Ousmane Touré (1983–90), drums, percussion, vocals. (All members are from Senegal.)

Touré Kunda loosely translates as "Family of Elephants," and during their long career they've certainly laid down a strong, stomping beat. Touré was the first African band to make an impression on the U.S. market, and its mix of African and Caribbean beats has made group members major stars in France and most of West Africa.

Diaby Touré, the father of the Touré brothers, had five wives, each from different tribal backgrounds. The four brothers hit it off from an early age, and began traveling around with local griots (oral historians), learning drumming and the kora (African harp-lute). After their father died, Amadou, Ismaila, and Sixu joined a theatre group where they learned stagecraft, dance, costume design, music, and theatrical presentation, all of which would later inform their shows. By the late 1960s the brothers were playing in bands that ranged from folkloric troupes to Congolese-style rumba groups, but the corruption of the music business in Africa convinced Ismaila that Paris would be better suited to his talents.

By 1981 all three brothers had relocated to Paris and put together a band of their own. Ismaila had lived briefly in London and discovered the reggae beat, which reminded him of djabdong, a ritual rhythm from the brothers' native Senegal. When the band began writing tunes based on a fusion of the two forms, it hit a winning combination. The title track of the group's first album, Em'ma, was a worldwide smash, and Touré was soon signed to Celluloid, a pioneering Paris-based world-music label. In 1983, during a stage show, Amadou died of a heart attack. The brothers asked Ousmane to come to Paris, and Touré Kunda continued, releasing the stunning, folkloric album Casamance au Clair de Lune. By the mid-1980s Touré Kunda was a major draw in Africa and Europe. After experimenting with a new African-based international style the brothers recorded Natalia, with Bill Laswell producing and Funkadelic keyboard player Bernie Worrell adding his intergalactic funk to the mix. Touré was one of the first Afropop bands to tour the United States, and with each new release continued to explore and diversify its music. In 1987 there was another disaster; most of the backing band jumped ship to join the dance-craze cash-in group Kaoma, and for a while Touré's future looked grim. During long, drawn-out litigation with their former label over this breach, Ousmane got fed up and left the band. Eventually the dust cleared; Ismaila and Sixu found new backing musicians and carried on. Although some of the creative spark is lacking in more recent releases, the brothers continue to forge ahead with their groundbreaking Afropop sound.

what to buy: Few live albums live up to their name, but Touré Kunda Live—Paris—Ziguinchor ♪♪♪♪♪ (Celluloid, 1983, prod. Touré Kunda) delivers, with extended versions of some of the band's best tunes from its early period. There were two editions of this CD released; make sure to get the reissue with all 10 tracks on it. It's right up there with Otis Redding's Live in Europe and James Brown's Live at the Apollo.

what to buy next: Every Touré Kunda album from the 1980s is solid, but the 18-track overview of the band's landmark Celluloid recordings, Dance of the Leaves ♪♪♪♪½ (Restless, 1993), is the best introduction to its back catalog. The group is still making compelling music in the 1990s, but the early stuff gives off a heat that some of the more recent discs lack. The French compilation Best Of ♪♪♪♪ (Celluloid, 1984) only duplicates two tracks from the Restless collection, and may be easier to find.

best of the rest:
Natalia ♪♪♪♪♪ (Celluloid, 1985)
Karadindi ♪♪♪♪½ (Celluloid, 1989)
Touré Kunda—1981–82 ♪♪♪♪ (Celluloid, 1990)
Touré Kunda—1983–84 ♪♪♪♪ (Celluloid, 1990)
Salam ♪♪♪♪ (Trema France, 1990)
Touré Kunda Collection ♪♪♪♪ (Putumayo, 1996)
Mouslaï ♪♪♪½ (Mesa, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Pascal Diatta, Kassav' ▶▶ Mory Kante, Ismael Lo, Baaba Maal

see also: Kaoma, Bill Laswell

j. poet

Horace Trahan

Cajun

Born June 12, 1976, in Lafayette, LA, USA. Based in Ossun, LA, USA.

Horace Trahan is a Cajun traditionalist, a student both of Cajun music and Cajun culture. Perhaps only Eddie LeJeune or Cory McCauley play a more traditional style of Cajun accordion. Though only in his early 20s, Trahan sings with great sincerity and authority. He wasn't born until the third year of the Festival Acadian, which had only one performer under 40 in its first year. Like most of the kids of his generation he started out on guitar wanting to play rock 'n' roll. Once that had lost its romance, he started playing country music. When he became interested in the accordion, he went to his father for guidance. The elder Trahan took Horace to visit his cousin Felix Richard, an accomplished Cajun accordionist who had taught Zachary Richard. "Mr. Felix" tutored Trahan almost daily after school. It was not just music, but an appreciation for Cajun culture that the teacher imparted to the impressionable young man. Trahan was frustrated by his limited mastery of the language that went with it, and made a pact with family and friends to speak only French so he could improve—in the process becoming aware of how important the culture is to the music, and of how easy a thing it is to lose. As Trahan's career took shape, he honed his skills on his own and by touring and recording with D.L. Menard and Kristi Guillory.

what to buy: Ossun Blues ♪♪♪♪♪ (Swallow, 1996, prod. Terry Huval) is as good a Cajun record as has been made since The Balfa Brothers Play Traditional Cajun Music. While Trahan's accordion playing is truly something special (the best comparison may be Eddie LeJeune), his singing is his most impressive talent. He also has a true, unaffected Cajun voice; there are no hints of rock 'n' roll or country in his style, and comparisons can certainly be made to a very young Dewey Balfa or Iry LeJeune in his full-throated sound. Trahan has picked a mix of classics from these two, Nathan Abshire, and D.L. Menard, and mixed in originals of his own that fit into the style seamlessly.

what to buy next: Reveille: The New Cajun Generation ♪♪♪ (Swallow, 1994, prod. Terry Huval) is billed as a Kristi Guillory and Bill Grass album, but it features Trahan playing rhythm guitar and sharing lead vocals with Guillory. Each member of this band was under 20 at the time of the recording, but the only way you'd know it is from the friskiness of their playing. Trahan's rich voice evokes the great historical Cajun singers on traditional tunes like "T'en a Eu, T'en Auras Plus" and "L'Anse aux Pailles." His and Guillory's deep vocals intertwine on "Les Veuves de la Coulée" and "Les Flammes d'en Fer" a bit like Marc and Ann Savoy's duets.

worth searching for: The American Fogies, Vol. I ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Ray Alden), an anthology of U.S. bands playing roots music, includes a track of Trahan playing Douglas Belair's "Les Barres de la Prison" with the Mamou Prairie Band and Mitch Reed of Tasso.

influences:

⏮ Nathan Abshire, Balfa Brothers, Iry LeJeune

⏭ Tasso, Balfa Toujours

see also: Balfa Brothers, Eddie LeJeune, Iry LeJeune, D.L. Menard, Zachary Richard, Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band

Jared Snyder

Trance Mission

World-jazz, ambient

Formed 1991, in San Francisco, CA, USA. Based in San Francisco, CA, USA.

Beth Custer (USA), Bb, alto and bass clarinet, vocals, percussion; Stephen Kent (U.K.), didgeridoo, vocals, percussion; John Loose (USA), tar, bodhrán, morsing, kanjire, riqq, percussion, vocals; Kenneth Newby (USA), suling, p'iri, khaen, gongs, sampling, klunting, percussion.

Didgeridoo player Steven Kent—born in England, raised in Uganda, and a frequent traveler to Java, Australia, and Vancouver in western Canada—kept running into Kenneth Newby, a composer and Javanese music fanatic who specializes in exotic (at least to U.S. ears) wind instruments like the suling, p'iri, and khaen. After they both landed in the Bay Area in the early 1990s, they began collaborating on their own version of a world-music-meets-free-jazz combo. They enlisted the help of Beth Custer, a well-known avant garde player and founding member of the Club Foot Orchestra and John Loose, who'd played with Rhythm & Noise and the Blue Rubies, and Trance Mission was born. The expert chops and innate musicality of the group keep their free-form explorations lively as they bounce from chamber-jazz swing, to outback ambient drone, to the tribal stomp of "Bo Didgeley," the track that introduced them to the world with its mixture of rock, funk, and good humor.

what to buy: One of the first "world jazz" discs, Trance Mission ♪♪♪½ (City of Tribes, 1992, prod. Oliver DiCicco) stands out because of Kent's immense talent on the Aboriginal Australian didgeridoo—he plays the instrument with more innate musicality than anyone else today—and the sterling support of the rest of the band. Every track shines, with each player providing an amazing depth of textures, rhythms, and timbres.

what to buy next: Meanwhile ♪♪♪½ (City of Tribes, 1993, prod. Simon Tossano) has better production values, but the band's enigmatic vibe remains compelling and its deep, tribal jazz still swings.

the rest:

Head Light ♪♪♪♪ (City of Tribes, 1996)

influences:

⏮ Lights in a Fat City, Yothu Yindi, Club Foot Orchestra

⏭ Deep Forest, Loop Guru

see also: Steve Roach

j. poet

Transglobal Underground /Natacha Atlas

Ethno-techno fusion

Formed 1991, in London, England. Based in London, England.

Members have included: Alex Kasiek, keyboards, vocals, flute, melodica, programming; Count Dubulah, bass, guitar, programming; Hamid Mantu, drums, percussion, keyboards, programming; T.U.U.P., vocals, congas; Natacha Atlas, vocals; Coleridge, vocals, djembe; Johnny Kalsi, dhol.

Transglobal Underground is a loose-knit multicultural collective that has involved numerous musicians over the years, and describing their eclectic sound is even more difficult than defining their ever-evolving line-up. Some have called Transglobal's music "world techno," but that only begins to scratch the surface of the influences at work in their trance-like style, which splices inspirations ranging from hip-hop, dub reggae, and drum 'n' bass to African drumming and Middle Eastern chants. The tie that binds this fusionist mish-mash is a penchant for exotic yet accessible grooves whose hypnotic repetition makes them perfect for dancefloors from New York City to Marrakesh. The group's most powerful secret weapon is the entrancing Arabic vocals of Natacha Atlas, whose more traditional solo albums, each produced by the Transglobal collective, delve even deeper into her Middle Eastern roots. All politically correct debates about the co-opting of traditional forms aside, Transglobal Underground is providing the instant heritage of the next millennium's musical mix-and-match.

what to buy: For such an enigmatic ensemble, Transglobal's output has been surprisingly consistent, but Rejoice, Rejoice ♪♪♪½ (Nation/MCA, 1998, prod. Transglobal Underground) seems like the definitive fruition of their experimental efforts. Atlas is in top form, weaving spellbinding melodic tapestries with her voice, and collaborations with Bapi Das Baul and especially qawwali (Pakistani devotional) group Musafir (on "Ali Mullah," which is dedicated to Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan) lead the group to ecstatic creative heights.

what to buy next: Psychic Karaoke ♪♪♪ (Nation/MCA, 1996, prod. Transglobal Underground) is almost as fully realized, albeit with a slightly less organic approach that relies more heavily on layered world-ly samples and ambient house loops than live instrumentation. Still, Atlas carries the day, her sublimely lovely voice at times proving transcendent.

the rest:
Dream of 100 Nations ♪♪♪½ (Nation/Beggars Banquet, 1993)
International Times ♪♪♪ (Nation/Beggars Banquet, 1994) Interplanetary Meltdown ♪♪♪ (Nation, 1995)

solo outings:
Natacha Atlas:
Diaspora ♪♪♪½ (Nation/Beggars Banquet, 1995)
Halim ♪♪♪♪ (Nation/Beggars Banquet, 1997)
Gedida ♪♪♪½ (Beggars Banquet, 1999)

influences:
⏮ Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan, Peter Gabriel, Ofra Haza, Yma Sumac ⏭ Talvin Singh, Loop Guru, Trance Mission, Banco De Gaia

see also: Abdel Ali Slimani

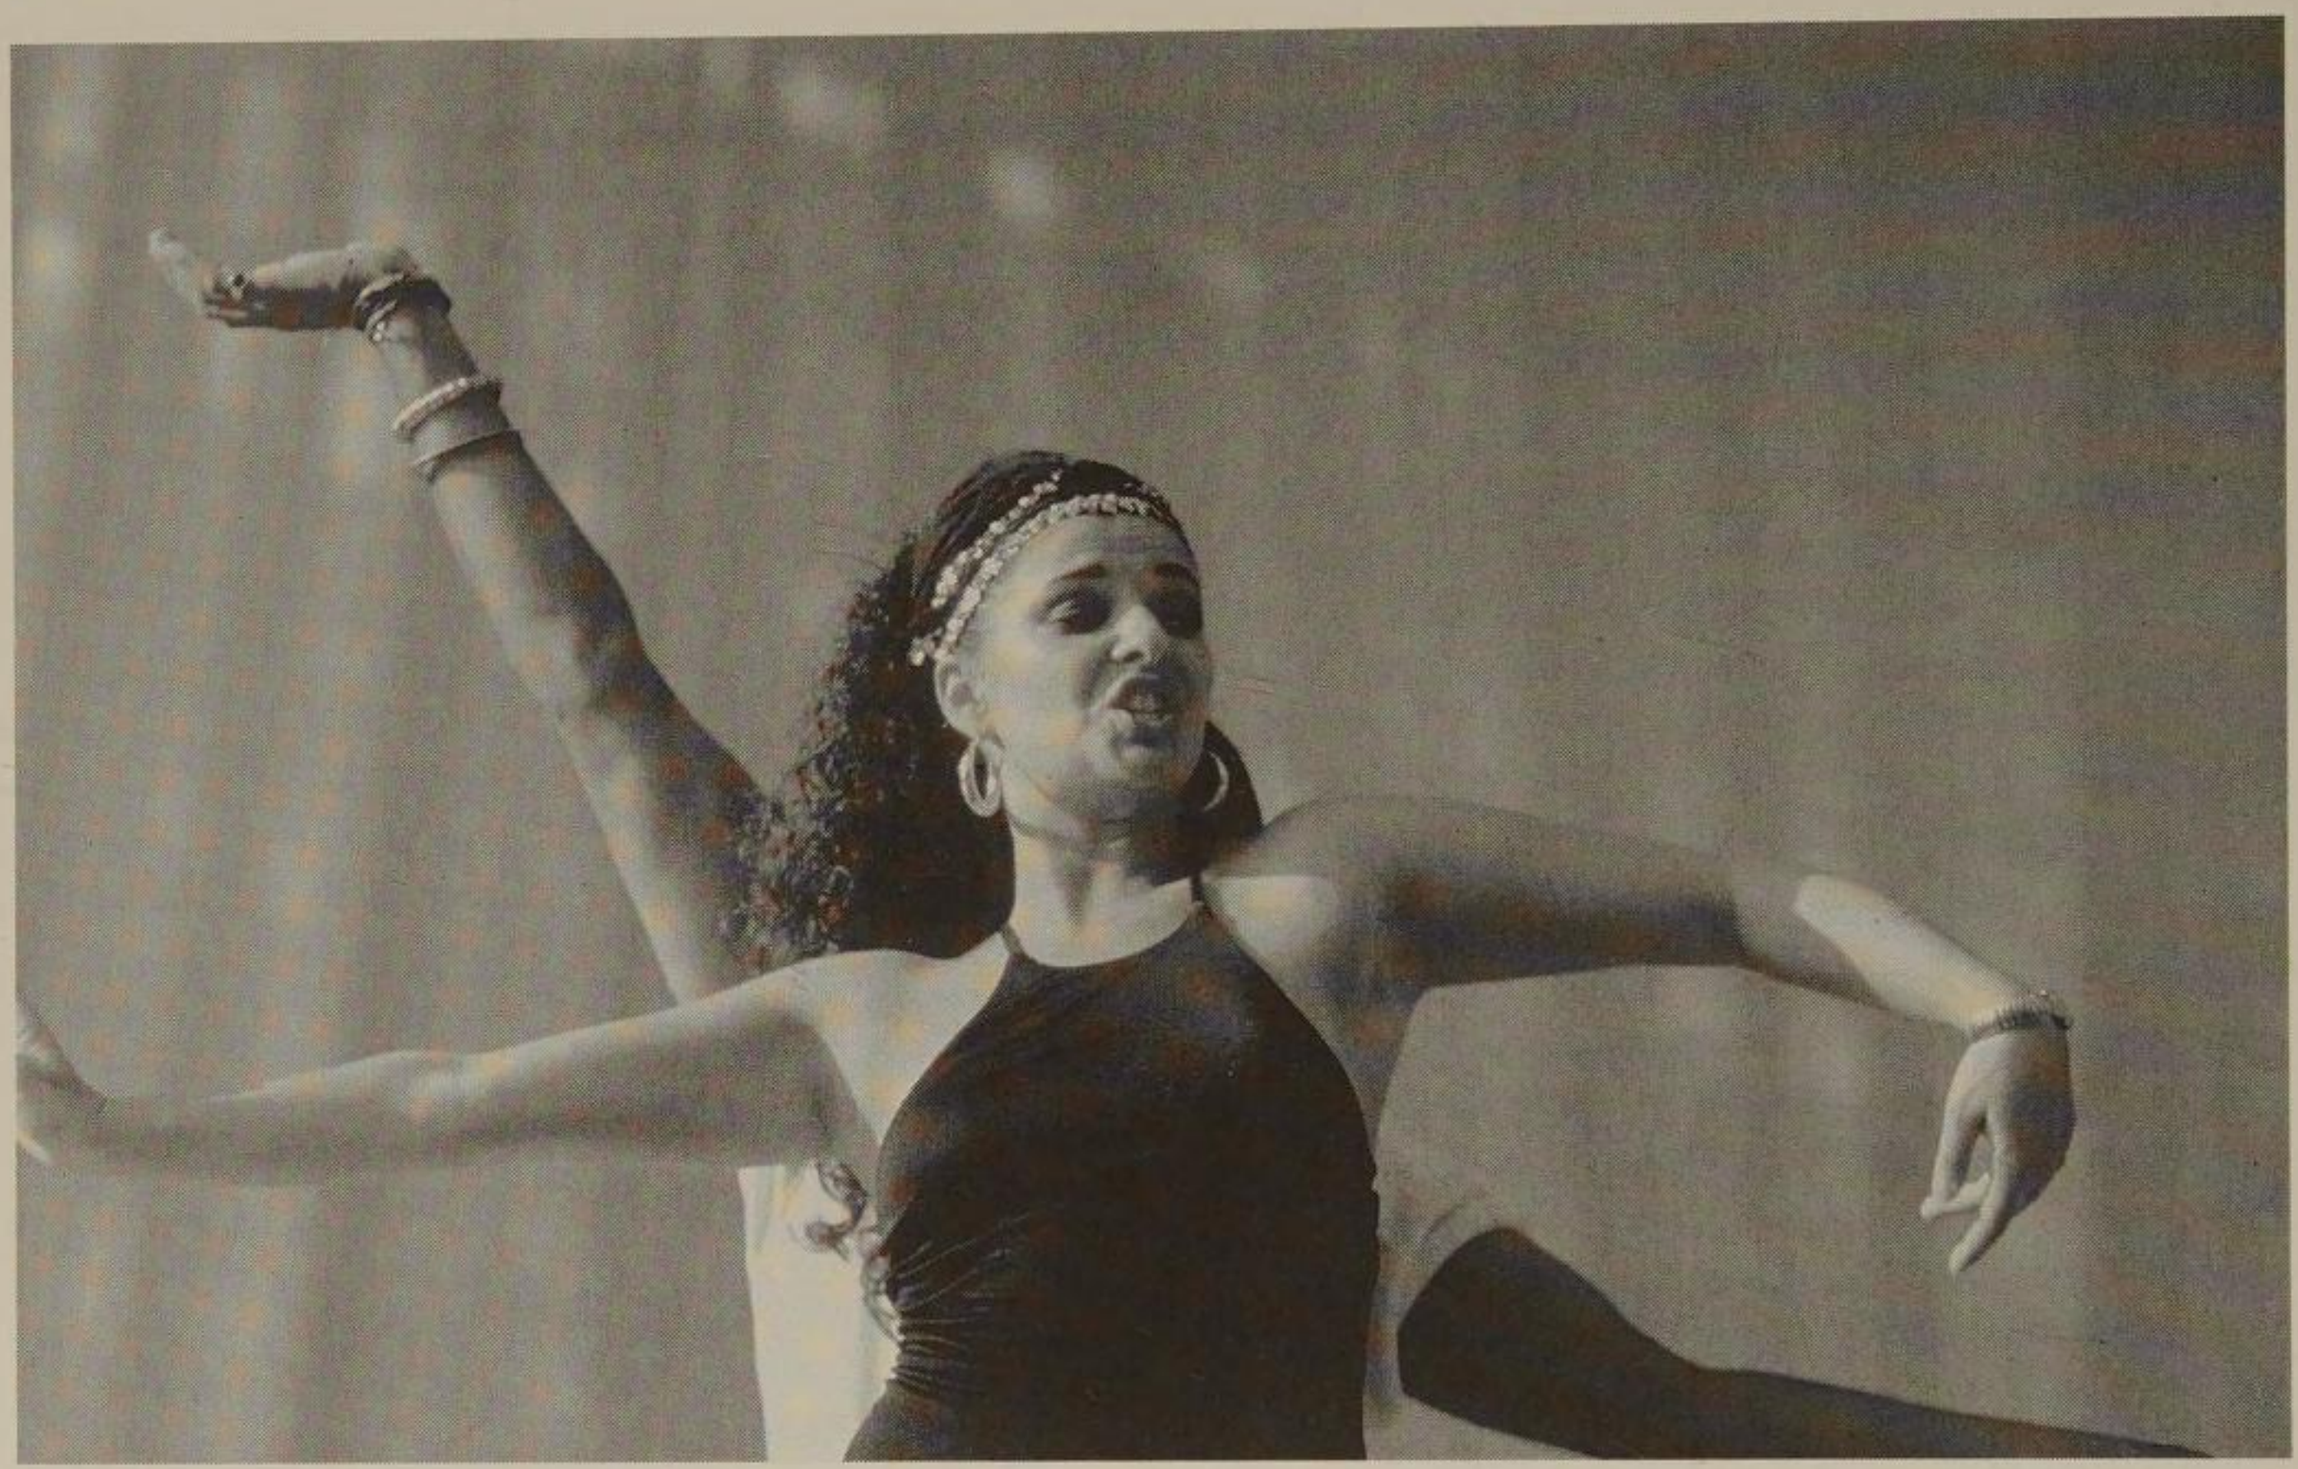
Bret Love and Barry M. Prickett

jim wilson

Jim Wilson is a prolific musician and producer who's done much to advance the art-form of ambient techno and the cause of Native American recognition. Dispelling rustic stereotypes with state-of-the-art electronics even as he draws heavily on the rhythms and found voices of his own and other indigenous cultures, Wilson is at the forefront of emphasizing the First Peoples' contemporary presence while preserving their ancient heritage. Helping ex-Band leader Robbie Robertson fashion the textural soundscapes for the groundbreaking 1994 TV documentary score The Native Americans, Wilson next invested the electronic genre with uncommon personality and nuance—while sacrificing none of its cybernetic edge—with his Little Wolf project's two landmark suites of atmospheric ancient-futurism, Dream Song ♪♪♪♪½ (Triloka, 1995) and Wolf Moon ♪♪♪♪½ (Triloka, 1997). As cultural impresario, Wilson assembled a collection surveying the breadth of contemporary Native devotional musics, Songs of the Spirit ♪♪♪½ (Triloka, 1996), a characteristically substantive take on new-agey material. Bringing many traditional artists to mainstream attention on that anthology, Wilson also helped connect another mainstream icon with her roots: his production of former chart-ruler Rita Coolidge's vocal trio with her sister and niece, Walela, played a major role in making the group favorites of both the Native and non-Native world-music audiences immediately upon the release of their debut album, Walela ♪♪♪½ (Triloka, 1997). As interested in the convergence of cultures on the social level as he is in the convergence of styles on the artistic one, Wilson has helped guide American musical mystic Krishna Das, and gave sonic life to Russian psychiatrist Olga Kharitidi's odyssey into the world of Siberian shamanism on the haunting Entering the Circle ♪♪♪♪½ (Triloka, 1996), which accompanies her book of same name. Wilson's worldwide all-star project Tulku is more standard-issue ethno-techno, but from time to time he's entitled to fall back on the conventions of a genre he helped pioneer. With Jim Wilson at the controls, silenced societies are patched into the system and wired for sound.

Adam McGovern

trebunia family band



Natacha Atlas with Transglobal Underground

Trebunia Family Band

Polish dance music

Formed in Zakopane, Tatra Mountains region, Poland. Based in Zakopane, Tatra Mountains region, Poland.

Whadislaw Trebunia, fiddle, flutes, vocals; Kryzsztof Trebunia, fiddle, vocals; Stanislaw Trebunia Sr., fiddle, vocals; Stanislaw Trebunia Jr., basy, vocals, dance; Hania Trebunia, fiddle, vocals; Jas Trebunia, fiddle; Helena Trebunia Sr., vocals; Helena Trebunia Jr., vocals; Janina Czernik, vocals; Katarzyna Trebunia, vocals, dance; Andrez Chowaneic, dance. (All members are from Poland.)

The 11-member Trebunia Family Band spans three generations of musicians from Zakopane, a cultural center and resort area high in the Tatra Mountains region of Poland. Their single recording is a field session done in Poronin, Poland, in 1994. The group's sound is dominated by fiddles, four or five of which are played simultaneously, augmented by the basy (three-stringed, cello-sized bass), one or more vocalists, and several dancers.

what's available: The 10 tracks on Music of the Tatra Mountains ♪♪♪ (Nimbus, 1995, prod. R. Broadbank, K. Cwizewicz) capture the ebullient sound of this venerable family band performing a variety of styles of Polish dance music including waltzes and, of course, polkas.

influences:

- Polish regional tradition
- Brave Combo

Michael Parrish

Trian

Irish traditional

Formed 1987, in Baltimore, MD, USA. Based in USA.

Billy McComiskey (USA), button accordion, concertina; Dáithí Sproule (Ireland), guitar, vocals ; Liz Carroll (USA), fiddle.

Trian easily ranks among the best traditional Irish groups in North America. Indeed, only top acts from abroad, like Altan, even come close to their superb musicianship. All of the group's members were renowned before forming Trian, and, as with many groups on the North American Irish music scene, they had played together in various formations for years before coming together as a touring ensemble. Raised in an exclusively Irish neighborhood, Billy McComiskey was exposed to the country's music very early in his life. He began to play accordion during the 1960s, influenced first by Bobby Gardiner and then by the great Sean McGlynn. In 1970 he came in second in the all-Ireland accordion championships, becoming the first American to place so highly. In 1975, having moved to Baltimore, he formed the Irish Tradition, in its day the most successful traditional Irish music group in the Baltimore/Washington, D.C., area. After that band's members went their separate ways in the 1980s McComiskey remained active in the traditional music scene. He reckons it was about 1987 when he formed Trian with Liz Carroll and Dáithí Sproule. Carroll took up the fiddle when she was nine years old, and honed her technique in sessions with Chicago musicians like Johnny McGreevy, Joe Shannon, and Jimmy Keane. In 1974 she won the junior all-Ireland fiddle championship, and returned the following year to capture the senior title. She has been a member of some of the outstanding lineups of traditional Irish music in the States, including the Green Fields of America and Cherish the Ladies. She is currently known not only as a member of Trian, but also as a solo fiddler and a composer of magnificent tunes. Dáithí Sproule's early musical influences were mostly from U.S. and British folk artists like Joan Baez and Bert Jansch. He combined this love of folk music with his strong interest in Celtic culture when he formed the Irish-language singing group Skara Brae with the three siblings Tríona and Maighread Ní Dhomhnaill and Mícháel Ó Domhnaill in the early 1970s. When Skara Brae broke up, Tríona and Mícháel went on to found the Bothy Band, while Sproule went south to Dublin. During the late 1970s he emigrated to the United States, where he quickly became part of the nationwide Irish music community by joining forces with fiddler James Kelly and accordionist Paddy O'Brien. This trio appeared regularly and recorded two LPs, cementing Sproule's reputation as one of the foremost guitar accompanists and bilingual singers in the Irish-music world. He is currently a member of two of the top Irish traditional bands in existence, Trian itself and the aforementioned Altan, and is in heavy demand as an accompanist, arranger, and solo artist. The trio of McComiskey, Carroll, and Sproule did not immediately settle on the name Trian as a moniker for the band. They first used it as the title of their 1991 debut album, which is credited to them under their individual names. In the next few years, as their reputation grew and demand for them increased, they settled on Trian, the signature of their first triumph, as the banner for their subsequent ones.

what to buy: Trian ♪♪♪♪♪ (Flying Fish, 1991, prod. Liz Carroll, Dáithí Sproule, Billy McComiskey) is truly one of the landmark Irish CDs of the 1990s. Most of the album is made up of dance tunes played by all three musicians. In these trio arrangements McComiskey's accordion and Carroll's fiddle entwine effortlessly, sounding like one instrument, while Sproule's guitar keeps the rhythm with interesting and precise picking. Listen closely to McComiskey's accordion and you'll hear ornamentation you never would have thought possible from 10 fingers. Carroll's fiddle playing is equally impressive, and Sproule's guitar makes sure your feet keep tapping. In addition, McComiskey and Carroll each give us a few solo tunes to prove their mettle, and leave the listener in awe, if not in tears. Sproule's lovely, shrill singing voice graces four songs, two in Gaelic and two in English; of these, Peggy Seeger's "My Dearest Dear" stands out as the best.

what to buy next: Trian II ♪♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1995, prod. Billy McComiskey, Liz Carroll, Dáithí Sproule), the unimaginatively named follow-up to Trian, is another brilliant recording featuring McComiskey and Carroll's tight melodic duets accompanied by Sproule's bright, quick guitar work. A bit less flashy and ferocious, more subtle and controlled, than its predecessor, it takes the collaboration a step further, featuring more original compositions and more challenging arrangements. Sproule's songs on this outing include his melodic setting of the old ballad "The Death of Queen Jane," which he had given to Mícháel Ó Domhnaill in the early 1970s; Ó Domhnaill recorded it with the Bothy Band, but this is Sproule's own first crack at it.

solo outings:

Liz Carroll:

(With Tommy Maguire) Kiss Me Kate ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1978)
A Friend Indeed ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1979)
Liz Carroll ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1988)

Billy McComiskey:

Makin' the Rounds ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1981)

Dáithí Sproule:

(With Tommy Peoples) The Iron Man ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1985)
A Heart Made of Glass ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1993)

influences:

⏮ Skara Brae, the Irish Tradition, Green Fields of America, Sean McGlynn, Johnny McGreevy, John Healy

⏭ Altan, Cherish the Ladies

see also: Altan, the Bothy Band, Liz Carroll, Ceoltoiri, the Irish Tradition, Maighread Ní Dhomhnaill, Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill

Steve Winick

John Trudell

Native American, rock, spoken-word

Born February 15, 1946, in Omaha, NE, USA. Based in USA.

Not many musicians can claim that they've garnered enough

780 daniel tshanda

notoriety to warrant a hefty FBI file, but John Trudell can. Granted, the Feds' interest in Trudell relates not to his poetry or music, but to his involvement with the Indians of All Tribes organization, which occupied Alcatraz Island in 1969, and the American Indian Movement, which he chaired from 1973 to 1979. A Santee Sioux from Nebraska, Trudell has suffered for his militancy—in the late '70s, his three children, wife, and mother-in-law were killed in a suspicious fire that authorities refused to investigate, leading Trudell to conclude the government may have been behind the blaze. Eventually, Trudell channeled his rage into art, resulting in books of poetry and albums with lyrics that he speak-sings over rock music. He hooked up with Jackson Browne to produce his debut, which Bob Dylan praised extravagantly. Still intensely political, Trudell continues to struggle for Native American rights. He's recorded infrequently, which is a shame.

what to buy: AKA/Grafitti Man ♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1992, prod. Jackson Browne) contains some material Trudell recorded with his friend and guitarist Jesse Ed Davis (who later died) for a mail-order cassette, plus some new tracks as well. Songs range from the opening statement of purpose, "Rockin' the Res," to "Bombs over Baghdad," an angry screed against the Gulf War, to "Baby Boom Ché," which posits Elvis as America's most potent revolutionary. Trudell reads in a clear, confident voice while the blues-tinged rock and native chants thunder behind him. It's a fine, fiery combination. With "Rant and Roll," the first track on Johnny Damas and Me ♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1994, prod. Terry Becker, Ricky Eckstein, Mark Shark), Trudell puts a name on his style of music and poetry. The album also addresses women's rights ("See the Woman," "Shadow over Sisterland") and social inequity ("All There Is to It"). Friends and admirers Jackson Browne and Jennifer Warnes sit in on a couple of tracks.

the rest:
Blue Indians ♪♪♪ (Dangerous Discs, 1999)

worth searching for: In addition to poetry and music, Trudell has added acting to his repertoire of skills, performing in films such as Thunderheart, On Deadly Ground, Extreme Measures, and Smoke Signals. His latest book of poems is Stickman (Inanout Press, 1995).

influences:
⏮ Bob Dylan, Russell Means, Leonard Peltier

⏭ Jackson Browne, Bob Dylan, Robbie Robertson

see also: Oku Onuora, Robbie Robertson

Daniel Durchholz

Daniel Tshanda /Dalom Kids /Splash

Bubblegum

Formed mid-1980s, in Johannesburg, South Africa. Based in Johannesburg, South Africa.

South African "bubblegum" is a more commercial style of mbaqanga (the "township jive" music first popularized among U.S. listeners through Paul Simon's Graceland) that features synthesizers and drum machines in place of guitars and drums. It began its ascent during the turbulent days preceding majority rule, and is now one of the dominant forms of black pop music in South Africa. The vocal styles and the use of countermelodies continue, but to the untrained ear this music sounds similar to any international pop based on rock and disco beats. With his groups Splash and the Dalom Kids, Daniel Tshanda was one of the main architects of this new sound. Like hit pop producers all over the world, Tshanda composes all his bands' music and controls all aspects of their careers, their many spin-off projects, and their ever-changing personnel.

what's available: A Dalom Kids and Splash Collection ♪♪♪ (Putumayo, 1996, prod. Daniel Tshanda) is a serviceable compilation of the most popular groups from Tshanda's stable of stars. Reggae, R&B, and disco pop up in the arrangements and the vocals are smooth and slick, often in English rather than Zulu.

worth searching for: Both bands have at least half-dozen albums available on import, but they're mostly interchangeable. A greatest-hits compilation like the one above is probably the way to go.

influences:
⏮ Mahlathini, Boyoyo Boys, Soul Brothers

⏭ Yvonne Chaka Chaka, Brenda Fassi, Stello "Chicco" Twala

j. poet

23 Skidoo

Proto-ethno-techno

Formed early 1980s, in England. Disbanded late 1980s.

Fritz Haaman, bandleader; numerous other performers.

Fritz Haaman headed up the enigmatic 23 Skidoo, considered one of England's most experimental avant-dance ensembles. Fond of tape loops and various styles of ethnic percussion, 23 Skidoo created a unique dance/funk style that became even more experimental and ethnically influenced with each release. Their catalog has not been released on CD. The curious will have to dig for LPs, but 23 Skidoo's work is well worth hearing.

worth searching for: In quirky 23 Skidoo manner, the EP Seven Songs ♪♪♪♪½ (Fetish, 1982/Illuminated, 1985, prod. Fritz Haaman) lists eight tracks, actually has nine, and was re-released with 12. It's a brilliant mix of loops, funk, and African percussion. The Tearing Up the Plans ♪♪♪♪½ (Pineapple-Fetish, 1982, prod. Fritz Haaman) EP is more of the same. The first side of The Culling Is Coming ♪♪♪½ (Operation Twilight, 1983/Bel. Laylah, 1988, prod. Fritz Haaman) features 23 Skidoo live at the WOMAD (World of Music, Arts and Dance) Festival and is almost too experimental, with its traffic-jam of tape loops and undisciplined percussion. Side two contains the more soothing sounds of the Balinese gamelan. In that vein, Urban Gamelan ♪♪♪♪ (Illuminated, 1984, prod. Fritz Haaman) uses glass jugs and carbon-dioxide cylinders to mimic the signature tuned-percussion sounds. For a taste of everything up to that point, Just Like Everybody ♪♪♪♪ (Bleeding Chin, 1986, prod. Fritz Haaman) is a collection of previously released tracks.

influences:
Nurse with Wound, Death in June

see also: Paban Das Baul & Sam Mills

Stacy Meyn

The Twinkle Brothers

Reggae

Formed 1962, in Falmouth, Jamaica. Based in London, England.

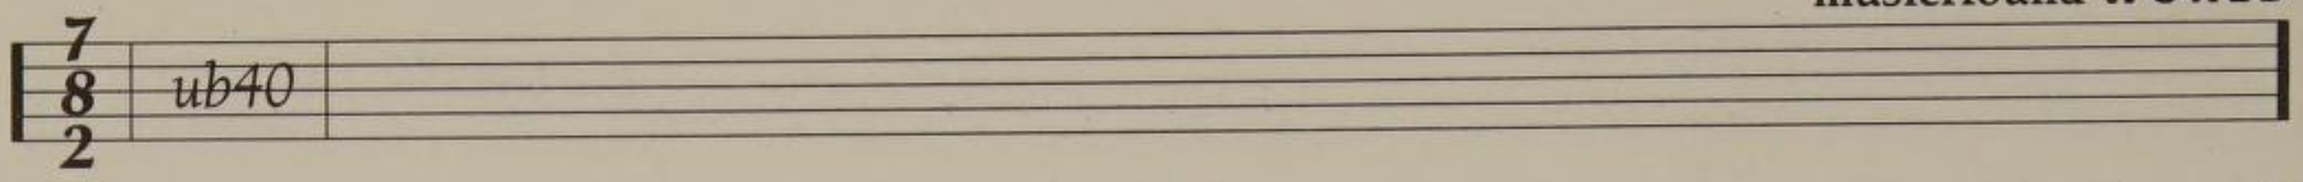
Norman Grant, vocals, drums (1962–present); Ralston Grant, vocals, rhythm guitar (1962–81); Derrick Brown, bass (1977–81); Eric Barnard, piano (1962–81); Karl Hyatt, vocals, percussion (1962–81); Albert "Bongo Asher" Green, congas, percussion (1962–81). (All members are from Jamaica.)

To say it is a crime that the Twinkle Brothers' finest releases are scarcely available domestically is to emphasize just how impressive these extraordinary proto-Rasta roots-reggae albums really are. Rasta Pon Top, Love, and Countrymen provide definitive thrills and chills in the studied art of "steppers" music, a ferociously rhythmic and "dread" serious form of reggae popular from the late '70s into the early '80s. The magical harmonizing on these records emerges from the thunderous riddims like a sunbeam through a cloudburst. All of the original members of the band were born in Falmouth, Jamaica, and throughout the '60s and into the early '70s, their music retained a softer, sunnier, North Coast drift that contrasted with the knife-edged toughness of the sounds emanating from Kingston. During these years the Twinkles wore matching outfits and toured the northern hotel circuit. In 1975, after Norman Grant had saved enough money from his work as a solo artist to finance a truly independent project, the Twinkle Brothers waxed the intrepid Rasta Pon Top, which includes potent hymns like "Beat Them Jah Jah" and "Barabas." This led to a deal with Virgin Front Line and a series of heavyweight rootical classics, including "Since I Threw the Comb Away," "Never Get Burn," "Jah Kingdom Come," and "Watch the Hypocrites." In the early '80s the band was dropped from Virgin, and Grant briefly joined Inner Circle after lead singer Jacob "Killer" Miller died in a car accident. He then moved his base of operations to England, and has since recorded prolifically on his own Twinkle label, with results as varied as the rotating cast of musicians and singers. The Twinkle imprint is widely esteemed as an assiduously ethical label and has introduced such artists as Aisha, Princess Sharifa, Sista Rebeka, and Steve Santana. Of the Twinkles' more recent releases, perhaps most intriguing are Grant's beautiful and distinctive recordings with the Tribunia-Tutee Family—a Polish wedding band based in Warsaw. Ultimately, under Grant's direction, the Twinkle Brothers have all but ignored the evolution of dancehall reggae and digital ragga, and instead have steadfastly adhered to creating and exploring culture-rich roots and dub music, much to the satisfaction of their loyal fans in the U.K. and Eastern Europe.

what to buy: The Twinkle Brothers' greatest sets—Rasta Pon Top ♪♪♪♪½ (Twinkle, 1975, prod. Norman Grant), Love ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin Front Line, 1977, prod. Norman Grant), and the stone-cold classic Countrymen ♪♪♪♪½ (Virgin Front Line, 1980, prod. Terry Barham, Paul Smykle)—are all long overdue for reissue in America. However, the import-only Free Africa ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin Front Line, 1990, prod. various) collects the very best from Love and Countrymen and the cream of the crop from the otherwise spotty Praise Jah ♪♪½ (Virgin Front Line, 1979, prod. Norman Grant). This titanic compilation and Rasta Pon Top are available from ErnieB's Reggae, Box 5019, El Dorado Hills, CA, 95762; e-mail: ErnieB@calweb.com; phone: (916) 939-0691.

what to buy next: Enter Zion ♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1983, prod. Norman Grant) is one of the best of the post-Virgin Twinkle Brothers albums. The title cut is an underground Rasta masterpiece that showcases some heavenly harmonies. Interested in sampling some honest-to-God international reggae? Then check the sometimes gleeful, sometimes sorrowful, always unique collaborations between Norman Grant and Warsaw's Tribunia-Tutee Family. Don't Forget Africa ♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1992, prod. Norman Grant), Dub with Strings ♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1992, prod. Norman Grant), Higher Heights (Twinkle Inna Polish Stylee) ♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1993, prod. Norman Grant), and Comeback Twinkle 2 ♪♪♪ (Ryszard, 1994, prod. Norman Grant) feature the Family T.T. enthusiastically singing Polish folk songs over a double-take-inducing mix of fat steppers rhythms and evocative violins and cellos.

the rest:
Me No You, You No Me ♪♪½ (Twinkle, 1981)



Underground ♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1982)
Dub Massacre, Parts 1-5 ♪♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1982–90)
Burden Bearer ♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1983)
Live from Reggae Sunsplash (Sunsplash, 1984)
Right Way ♪♪♪♪ (Shaka Music, 1985)
Kilimanjaro ♪♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1985)
Anti-Apartheid ♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1985)
Respect and Honour ♪♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1987)
Twinkle Love Songs ♪♪ (Twinkle, 1987)
All the Hits from 1970–88 ♪♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1988)
New Songs for Jah ♪♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1989)
Rastafari Chant ♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1989)
All Is Well ♪♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1990)
Live in Warsaw ♪♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1990)
Unification ♪♪ (Twinkle, 1990)
Wind of Change ♪♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1990)
Old Cuts (in Dub) ♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1991)
Twinkle Love Songs Vol. 2 ♪♪ (Twinkle, 1992)
Babylon Rise Again ♪♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1992)
Rasta Surface ♪♪ (Twinkle, 1993)
Dub Feeding Program ♪♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1994)
DJ's Selections ♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1994)
Other Side ♪♪ (Twinkle, 1995)
Dub Plate ♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1995)
Chant Down Babylon ♪♪♪♪ (Twinkle, 1998)

influences:

⏮ The Abyssinians, the Melodians, the Mighty Diamonds, Morwells, Jah Shaka

⏭ Bim Sherman, African Head Charge, Dub Syndicate

Todd Shanker

UB40

Pop reggae

Formed 1978, in Birmingham, England. Based in England.

Ali Campbell, guitar, vocals; Robin Campbell, lead guitar; Astro, vocals; Earl Falconer, bass; Mickey Virtue, keyboards; Brian Travers, saxophone; James Brown, drums; Norman Hassan, percussion.

UB40 widened the audience for reggae by blending the rhythm-heavy, traditional Caribbean music with a British pop sensibility. Taking its name from the English unemployment form (something with which the eight band members were quite familiar), UB40 received its first major exposure opening for the Pretenders during that band's first U.S. tour. UB40 rapidly became a college radio favorite, and its 1983 rendition of Neil Diamond's "Red, Red Wine" scored with the masses. Socially conscious on- and off-record, UB40 was particularly proud to be one of the first Western acts to perform in the Soviet Union. With its lineup remarkably intact, the band enjoys a true worldwide following, taking its typical tours to no less than six continents. One tip: you can find UB40's albums in the reggae rather than the pop sections in more than a few record stores.

what to buy: Sitting squarely in the middle of the discography, the self-titled UB40 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1988, prod. UB40) finds the band at a career peak with pointed songs like "Come Out to Play," "Where Did I Go Wrong," and "Breakfast in Bed," a duet with early benefactor Chrissie Hynde of the Pretenders. The band's first album, Signing Off ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1980/1994, prod. Roy Falconer, Bob Lamb, UB40), features its first U.K. hit, "King," as well as the standouts "Food for Thought" and "Tyler." Labour of Love ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1983, prod. Roy Falconer, UB40) showcases the band applying its reggae-pop flavoring to 10 covers, including "Red, Red Wine" and "Please Don't Make Me Cry."

what to buy next: Two strong best-of compilations were released simultaneously. Volume One ♪♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1995, prod. various) features earlier, edgier work, while Volume Two ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1995, prod. UB40) features more radio-friendly fare from the recent past.

what to avoid: Little Baggaridm ♪♪ (A&M EP, 1985, prod. Ray Falconer, UB40) is an unsatisfying winnowing of the Baggaridm album that went unreleased in the U.S.

the rest:
Present Arms ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1981/1992)
Present Arms in Dub ♪♪ (A&M, 1981)
Live ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1983)
1980–83 ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1983)
Geoffrey Morgan ♪♪♪ (A&M/Virgin, 1984)
Rat in the Kitchen ♪♪♪♪ (A&M/Virgin, 1986)
CCCP—Live in Moscow ♪♪♪ (A&M, 1987)
Labour of Love II ♪♪ (Virgin, 1989)
Promises and Lies ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1993)
Guns in the Ghetto ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1997)
Labour of Love III N/A (Virgin, 1999)

worth searching for: The import Best of UB40, Volume 1 (Virgin U.K., 1987, prod. various) is a thorough representation of the group's prime period.

solo outings:
Ali Campbell:
Big Love ♪♪♪ (Virgin, 1995)

influences:

⏮ Bob Marley, Gregory Isaacs, Bim Sherman

⏭ Rancid, Big Mountain, Chrissie Hynde

see also: Ian Campbell Folk Group

Gary Plochinski

Udi Hrant

Turkish/Armenian classical Born Hrant Kenkulian in 1901, in Adapazar, Turkey. Died August 29, 1978, in Istanbul, Turkey.

Hrant Kenkulian was considered blind from birth, but didn't give up the idea of having his eyes repaired until very late in life. In 1915 his family fled Adapazar because of a pogrom against ethnic Armenians, finally settling in Konya where the young Kenkulian started learning how to play the oud (lute). The style he picked up is one that differs considerably from the kind heard throughout the bulk of the Islamic world. (The instrument used in Turkish music is somewhat shallower-bodied than the variety of oud preferred in Egypt or other Middle Eastern countries, with a brighter, higher-pitched sound affecting the way Turkish virtuosi—whose ranks would eventually include Kenkulian—attack the strings.) By the 1920s Kenkulian was playing in cafes and selling musical instruments. It was also during this time that he made the first of many foreign journeys to fix his eyesight, traveling to Vienna, Austria, for an unsuccessful treatment. Even though his skills were constantly improving and he had already recorded a series of 78 rpm discs, Kenkulian found no regular jobs with any of the day's performing ensembles until after his marriage in 1937. He finally caught the ear of Serif Içli, a musician/composer whose connections led to Kenkulian playing concerts on Ankara Radio. It was there that he started to build and solidify his reputation as an oud virtuoso and composer. Soon Kenkulian was so admired that he became known as Udi Hrant, the "Udi" being an honorific for "Master of the Oud." He went to the United States in 1950 in another failed attempt to gain his eyesight, and while there was convinced to undertake a concert tour of the country. He then returned to Turkey to teach and perform on the radio, both as a soloist and with the Radio Istanbul Orchestra. His final international tour took place in 1963, hitting France, Greece, Lebanon, Armenia, and the United States. He died from cancer mere months after performing his last concert in Istanbul.

what to buy: Start at the beginning. The Early Recordings, Volume 1 ♪♪♪♪ (Traditional Crossroads, 1995, compilation prod. Harold G. Hagopian) and The Early Recordings, Volume 2 ♪♪♪♪ (Traditional Crossroads, 1995, compilation prod. Harold G. Hagopian) contain exquisitely re-mastered performances from the cream of Kenkulian's early 78s. There are examples of his singing, his violin artistry, and, above all, his way of playing the improvisational taqâsîm technique on the oud. Volume 2 contains "Hastayim Yasiyorum," his most famous song, while Volume 1 has the lovely "Siroon Aghcheek," written for his wife Agavini.

what to buy next: During his 1950 tour of the United States, Kenkulian taped some pieces that were probably not meant for general release. Still, Udi Hrant ♪♪♪♪ (Traditional Crossroads, 1994, compilation prod. Harold G. Hagopian) is a wonderful document of his mature style, including some fine examples of taqâsîm.

influences:

⏮ Tanburi Cemil Bey, Udi Yorgo Bacanos, Udi Krikor Berberian

⏭ Richard Hagopian, Münir Nurettin Beken, Mutlu Torun

see also: Richard Hagopian

Garaud MacTaggart

Áine Uí Cheallaigh

Irish traditional

Born Ann McPartland in Belfast, Northern Ireland. Based in Ring, County Waterford, Ireland.

In 1995, sean-nós ("old-style") singer Áine Uí Cheallaigh was catapulted from near obscurity to relative fame in Ireland thanks to her single contribution to the Riverdance stage show and its Grammy-winning soundtrack: her exquisite vocals on "Lift the Wings," a tender song of emigration and longing for the homeland. In fact, her performance turned many a head at home and abroad, even before it was adopted by Aer Lingus, Ireland's national airline, as their piped-in music for U.S. callers put on hold. Unlike the other performers who found themselves enjoying the spotlight that Riverdance shone on them, Uí Cheallaigh was, strictly speaking, neither a young hopeful looking for her first break, nor a seasoned career artist lending her talents and name recognition to the project; she was a schoolteacher who was just beginning to get noticed as a singer. One person who'd been impressed when he heard her on the radio was Bill Whelan, who wrote "Lift the Wings" especially for her.

Born Ann McPartland in her father's native Belfast, she grew up there listening to his renditions of the Ulster singing tradition. By 1982 she was using her married name and had relocated to her mother's original home: the tiny Irish-speaking community of Ring, near Dungarvan, County Waterford. There she immersed herself in the Munster province's sean-nós tradition of delicately ornamented, unaccompanied singing, and started competing nationally. She won the coveted Corn Uí Riada prize in 1990 and again in 1992. The bilingual Idir Dhá Chomhairle/In Two Minds is her only solo release to date. Following her Riverdance success, Uí Cheallaigh opted to return to her school-teaching job in Ring rather than tour the world with the show, but the interest in and demand for her voice has lead to more appearances: a recording for another Bill Whelan project and some songs on an album commemorating the 1798 rebellion. Tracks from her solo release are starting to surface on compilations in the U.S., and you don't have to be a school child to experience her teaching skills. She gives master classes in seannós singing at festivals around Ireland. Uí Cheallaigh's modest recording career to date belies her considerable abilities.

what to buy: Idir Dhá Chomhairle/In Two Minds ♪♪♪♪½ (Gaellinn, 1992) is a wonderful showcase of both the Munster seannós style (in Irish) and the Ulster singing style (in English). While largely unaccompanied, some understated contributions are made here and there by piper Liam O'Flynn and a few others. One highlight is "Peace in Erin," a plea for reconciliation as relevant today as it was when it was written in the 1830s by schoolmaster Hugh McWilliams from County Antrim.

worth searching for: Bill Whelan's The Roots of Riverdance (Celtic Heartbeat, 1997) includes Uí Cheallaigh singing the otherwise unavailable "Cill Liadáin," a new setting of a well-known Irish-language poem by the blind 18th-century folk poet Raftery. Who Fears to Speak—The Official 1798 Bicentenary Commemorative Album (RTE, 1997) sees Uí Cheallaigh take turns with guest singers Liam Clancy and Len Graham.

influences:

⏮ Nioclás Tóibín, Labhrás Ó Cadhla, Paddy Tunney

⏭ Liam O'Flynn, Bill Whelan, Liam O Maonlai, Karen Casey

see also: The Clancy Brothers, Liam O'Flynn, Bill Whelan

John C. Falstaff

The Ukrainians

Alternative Ukrainian folk-rock

Formed 1988, in Leeds, England. Based in Leeds, England.

Peter Solowka, guitars, mandolin, backing vocals; Len Liggins, vocals, violin; Stepan Pasicznyk, accordion, vocals; Dave Lee, drums; Paul Dino Briggs, bass; Roman Remeynes, mandolin. (All members originally from England.)

Leeds, England, has always been remarkably multi-ethnic, with small but active populations from various Central European countries to complement the English, Indian, West Indian, Pakistani, and Irish segments of the city. But about the last place anyone would have expected Ukrainianism to raise its head was with The Wedding Present, the Energizer Bunnies of the post-punk scene. Solowka was a guitarist with the band, and persuaded leader Gedge to do some traditional Ukrainian material. The idea took off, and very soon the Ukrainians were a separate, established identity, with their own personnel and recording contract. Their eponymous first album debuted in 1991 to excellent reviews. Basically, they charged headlong into traditional music, or self-composed tunes that seemed traditional enough. It was close-to-the-edge, someone's-gonna-get-their-babushka-kicked-in-tonight style, more fun than an evening swilling vodka. From there they took a slight musical detour, an EP of the Smiths covers (Pisni Iz the Smiths) that was nothing less than a delight—an unlikely but perfect marriage. A second album, Vorony, includes one track from that EP, as well as a cover of the Velvets' "Venus in Furs." It's more of the same, but played with even more confidence and enjoyment. This is just as true of their third (and so far seemingly final) effort in 1996, Kultura. As the real Ukraine's former Soviet dominators would ruefully agree, all good things must come to an end . . . .

what to buy: Kultura ♪♪♪½ (Cooking Vinyl, 1996, prod. Ukrainians) is the ne plus ultra of the catalog, and with the Smiths EP appended, their work doesn't come any better.

the rest:

The Ukrainians ♪♪♪ (Omnium, 1991)

Vorony ♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1993)

influences:

⏮ The Smiths, the Velvet Underground

Chris Nickson

Ulali

See: Pura Fé

Urubamba

See: Los Incas, Paul Simon

Jai Uttal

World pop/jazz

Born Doug Uttal, in New York, NY, USA. Based in Los Angeles, CA, USA.

This talented vocalist/multi-instrumentalist studied classical piano as a child before also learning to play banjo, harmonica, and electric guitar. His diverse musical abilities were reflected in his picking up a wide range of styles and absorbing everything from Jimi Hendrix to John Coltrane to modern classical. By age 19 he became entranced by the work of world famous Indian musician Ali Akbar Khan, and was compelled to move to California to study voice and the 25-string sarod under Khan's guidance. Uttal was later able to apply his Indian classical training to the other forms of music he played during the 1970s and 1980s, including reggae, punk, Motown, and blues. Also during the 1970s (after changing his name to Jai), he made many pilgrimages to India, while still studying music in California under various tutors. One of those Indian treks was incredibly influential—he lived and played amongst the Bengali street musicians known as Bauls, communicating with them entirely through music, and the lessons learned there would permanently alter his musical course. Uttal has been categorized both as a world and jazz musician, but his work blends those elements with pop and jazz-fusion to form a signature sound that is full of warmth and romanticism. He began his recording career with the 1990 debut Footprints, an album that found him taking his inspirational journeys to India (particularly his time spent with the Bauls) and applying them to his Western heritage. In other words, the improvisational nature of certain Indian styles was appropriated into more structured forms such as pop and electronic music. Uttal then formed the Pagan Love Orchestra (which includes multi-instrumentalist Peter Apfelbaum and keyboardist Kit Walker) to interpret his early works live—and when he saw the greater possibilities of working with a live band, there was never another of his albums on which the outfit didn't appear. Their sound includes guitar, trombone, violin, bass, and percussion. The electronic influences of his debut gave way to more pop-based ones, which later led to fusion and even a few reggae inflections. Uttal's main instrument is the dotar, which sonically resembles a sitar but possesses a crisper sound with less twang. It dominates his first two albums, but as his music has matured, he has let the other contributions of the Pagan Love Orchestra become stronger and more independent. No matter what album you listen to, though, the sound of Uttal and his orchestra is very distinct. Uttal has also performed on albums by the Hieroglyphics Ensemble, Tulku, the Peter Apfelbaum Sextet, and Gabrielle Roth & the Mirrors, and has produced two albums for Ali Akbar Khan.

what to buy: While his latter two releases are more orchestrated and quite sonically rich, his debut has more of an immediate, and lasting, visceral impact. Footprints ♪♪♪♪ (Triloka, 1990, prod. Jai Uttal) is primarily a solo project and features a larger amount of electronic-based pieces. The intense trance sounds of "Madzoub (God Intoxicated)" and "Bus Has Come" are engrossing, as is the Tangerine Dream–like sequencer freefall of "Snowview." Trumpeter Don Cherry and vocalist Lakshmi Shankar lend their talents to some of the tracks. Jai Uttal and the Pagan Love Orchestra's latest, Shiva Station ♪♪♪♪ (Triloka, 1997, prod. Jai Uttal), was mixed by Bill Laswell, and it features songs with lyrics and chants in Sanskrit, Hindi, Bengali, and English. It shows the group getting tighter and more cohesive, with the album possessing a more lush and orchestrated feel than previous works. While not as groundbreaking as the other releases, it is a warm, passionate affair. Some of it rocks, a couple tunes get jazzy, and Uttal's romantic lyrics are more personal and less conventional this time.

what to buy next: Uttal's second outing, Monkey ♪♪♪♪ (Triloka, 1992, prod. Jai Uttal), is the first disc with the Pagan Love Orchestra and features some well-done pop ballads with intriguing Eastern twists. Uttal's impassioned singing elevates them above standard world-pop fare. There are also plenty of catchy world instrumentals featuring Uttal's dotar-playing at their center, and while the sound here is sparser than subsequent works, it's engaging. Beggars and Saints ♪♪♪♪ (Triloka, 1995, prod. Jai Uttal) is another good release, which grows on you with each listen. The Pagan Love Orchestra is given more of a chance to shine, integrating Indian instruments with Western rock and brass arrangements. The album leans more towards a fusion and less towards a pop sound than before, and subliminal ambient touches weave into different spots.

influences:

◀◀ Ali Akbar Khan

▶▶ Tulku

see also: Peter Apfelbaum, Krishna Das, Ali Akbar Khan, Bill Laswell, Lakshmi Shankar, Jim Wilson (sidebar)

Bryan Reesman

V

Vadå

Folk-rock

Formed 1995, in Sweden. Based in Sweden.

Christer Suneson, vocals, guitar; David Kronlid, bass, keyboards; Stefan Brisland-Ferner, violin, hurdy gurdy, jew's-harp; Gotte Rinqvist, lute, flute, jew's-harp; Lars Forslund, drums; Björn Eriksson, bass. (All members are from Sweden.)

Suneson and Kronlid met in the mid-1980s and began playing a punk-edged folk music, but they weren't satisfied with the sound until Brisland-Ferner and Rinqvist, who also play with Garmarna, signed up in 1995. Under the name Jezebel they recorded two singles, then broke up. After rethinking their direction, they re-formed as Vadå, emphasizing a crunching, metallic guitar approach with lots of droning industrial background noise. The Swedish press flipped over their first, and so far only, album. Some said it was the best folk-rock album ever, others hated it. In 1996 they recorded an English-language version called Red White and Gray. It was released in North America by the Canadian Phyrric label and, strangely enough, when it reached Sweden, did better than the original.

what to buy: Vadå ♪♪♪♪ (Massproduktion, 1995, prod. Sank) is a loud, dark, dirty album crammed with grinding guitars, rumbling bass, deadly plodding drumbeats, and lots of ambient noise; think Nine Inch Nails in a sauna on belladonna. This is more rock than folk, and more grindcore than rock.

influences:

- Garmarna, Hedningarna, Hoven Droven

see also: Garmarna

j. poet

Vadya Lahari

South Indian karnatak music

Formed 1987, in South India. Based in South India.

A. Kanyakumari, violin; Mannargudi A. Easwaran, mridangam; Kumari N. Vijayalakshmi, vina; Mambalam K.S. Siva, nadaswaram; Yarpanam K. Ganesh Pillai, tavil. (All members are from southern India.)

Formed by noted female violinist A. Kanyakumari, Vadya Lahari is an unusual experiment within South India's deep tradition of karnatak music that could only have taken place in the modern era. Until recently, it would have been nearly impossible to conceive of an ensemble pairing the delicate, sitar-like sound of the vina with the piercing roar of the nadaswaram, an enormous oboe-like reed instrument primarily used in outdoor ceremonies. In a world without amplification, the subtleties of the vina and the violin would be drowned out by the intrusion of any percussion instrument, let alone the booming of the tavil drum (also used by this group) and the nadaswaram, whose sounds are meant to penetrate every corner of the neighborhood. To most Indian listeners Vadya Lahari must seem like a bold experiment indeed, but for Kanyakumari, who once played a 29-hour non-stop recital, it is an opportunity to open minds and ears to a whole new world of karnatak music.

what's available: Vadya Lahari: South Indian Instrumental Ensemble ♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1992, prod. Bob Haddad) is a thrilling introduction to the surprisingly accessible karnatak style, which in general is much livelier and more focused on the ensemble than the classical music of northern India. The interweaving of melodic lines on violin, vina, and nadaswaram is particularly engrossing, as the three musicians trade off on solos, diverge in harmony, and then reunite in unison to great effect. The rhythmic exchanges are also impressive, especially on the 24-minute "Rāma Kathā Sudhārasa," where Easwaran shows why he's considered one of the finest mridangam masters in the world today with jaw-droppingly complex beat cycles that will leave percussion fans in awe. The album is also notable for its closing track, "Ragupati Rāghava Rājarām," a devotional song Mohandas K. Gandhi used to open all his political meetings.

influences:

- L. Shankar, Sri. K. Swaminatha Pillai, Dr. M.L. Vasantha Kumari

Bret Love

Bebo Valdes

Cuban jazz

Born October 9, 1918, in Quivican, Cuba. Based in Sweden.

Bebo Valdes is the father of renowned Cuban pianist Chucho Valdes, but he deserves to be considered on his own merits. Certainly by the time he left Quivican for Havana in 1936, the senior Valdes had already acquired an impressive keyboard technique, enabling him to find a series of jobs in many local bands. In addition to his work as musical director at Havana's famous Tropicana Night Club, Valdes can also be credited as one of the primary forces in the Cuban jam session (known as a descarga) alongside bassist Cachao (Israel Lopez). He also appeared in many radio and television concerts during the late 1950s with his group, Sabor de Cuba. Valdes left Cuba in 1960 for Mexico, where he became associated for a short time with a record label as a musical director and pianist. He then lived in Spain, touring with a reconstructed version of the legendary Lecuona Cuban Boys, before moving to Stockholm, Sweden.

what to buy: Bebo Rides Again ♪♪♪♪♪ (Messidor, 1995, prod. Paquito D' Rivera), the first album Bebo Valdes had recorded in 35 years, finds the pianist/arranger in fine form. Amid an impressive array of Latin talent, the master finds room for a solo spot ("Oleaje"), on which he trips lightly through a lovely fantasia with impeccable elan.

what to buy next: The 20 songs on the collection Mayajigua ♪♪♪♪ (Caney, 1995, prod. various) were recorded in Havana in 1957 and 1960, documenting one of the best Cuban ensembles of the day, Bebo Valdes y Su Orquesta Sabor de Cuba. There is a nice array of rhythms displayed in the program, from montunos, mambos, and boleros to rumbas, guarachas, and danzones. The big band's playing and arranging are all quite good, especially a tremendous trumpet section featuring Alejandro "El Negro" Vivar and "Chocolate" Armenteros on the classic "El Manisero," to name one highlight. Valdes also recorded for the Panart label, and some of those sides appear on Todo Ritmo ♪♪♪♪ (T.H. Rodven, 1992). The packaging is muy cheesy but the performances are classic and, at times, witty. "Persian Shah" is a bit of a novelty, with a clarinet echoing a stereotypical Ottoman style, proving that title and atmosphere don't have to have anything to do with reality.

the rest:
Descarga Caliente ♪♪♪♪ (Caney, 1995)

influences:
⏮ Rene Hernandez, Ernesto Lecuona, Arsenio Rodriguez

⏭ Gonzalo Rubalcaba, Chucho Valdes

see also: Cachao, Paquito D'Rivera, Chucho Valdes

Garaud MacTaggart

Carlos "Patato" Valdes

See: Patato

Chucho Valdes

Cuban jazz

Born Jesus Valdes, October 9, 1941, in Quivican, Cuba. Based in USA.

Chucho Valdes has been one of the major forces on the Cuban jazz scene since the late 1960s, when he formed Orquesta Cubana de Musica Moderna with trumpeter Arturo Sandoval and reed player Paquito D'Rivera. From there the trio helped the acclaimed Irakere outfit get off the ground in 1973. Son of Cuban music legend Bebo Valdes, Chucho is a formidable pianist in his own right and a composer of some repute. As a jazz piano player, he owes much to Art Tatum and McCoy Tyner, but leavens that with roots sunk deep in the rhythms of his homeland.

what to buy: The finest album available by Valdes is Bele Bele en la Habana ♪♪♪♪♪ (Blue Note, 1998, prod. Réne López). The music is alive and the pianist is supported by a trio of youngbloods with bright futures. Raúl Piñeda Roque, the drummer, is a particular find, as demonstrated from the very first tune, "Son Montuno." The last song on the disc, the rhythmic guaguancó (modern rumba rhythm) "Los Caminos," was composed by the great Cuban songwriter Pablo Milanés. Cuba Jazz ♪♪♪♪½ (TropiJazz, 1996, prod. Ralph Mercado, Eddie Rodriguez), one of the strongest Latin-jazz albums of the 1990s, is billed as "Paquito D'Rivera presents Cuba Jazz featuring Bebo and Chucho Valdes," but it is Chucho's album more than anyone else's. His piano playing and arranging touches are all over the album, and his duet with the senior Valdes (on "Peanut Vendor") is marvelous.

what to buy next: Listening to Valdes's performances on Lucumi: Piano Solo ♪♪♪♪ (Messidor, 1988, prod. Gotz A. Worner) makes one realize where Cuban players like Gonzalo Rubalcaba and Hilario Diaz got their roots. He wrote all the material, and his playing is superb, with supple ballads like "Jica" acting as wonderful counterweights to dance-inflected tunes like "Mambo Influenciado" and "Osun." Valdes has created a solo piano album for Latin jazz fans that may serve as a touchstone for future generations.

the rest:
Solo Piano ♪♪♪♪½ (World Pacific, 1993)
Pianissimo ♪♪♪ (Molito, 1994)
(With Omara Portuondo) Desafíos ♪♪♪♪ (Nubenegra/Alula, 1997/1998)
Chucho Valdes Live ♪♪♪ (RMM, 1998)

worth searching for: Valdes composed and arranged all the material on Irakere's Live at Ronnie Scott's ♪♪♪♪½ (World Pacific, 1993, prod. Pete King, Chris Lewis), which offers a good sense of Valdes's perspective on his long-standing ensemble. Of particular note is his playing on "Cuando Canta el Corazon," while the greatest workout is the nearly 13-minute "Flute Notes."

influences:
⏮ Ernesto Lecuona, Horace Silver, Art Tatum, McCoy Tyner, Bebo Valdes

⏭ Hilario Diaz, Gonzalo Rubalcaba

see also: Paquito D'Rivera, Irakere, Pablo Milanés, Arsenio Rodríguez, Arturo Sandoval, Bebo Valdes

Garaud MacTaggart

Ritchie Valens

Latino Rock

Born Richard Valenzuela, May 13, 1941, in Pacoima, CA, USA. Died February 3, 1959, in Clear Lake, IA, USA.

Best known for his updating of the traditional Mexican folk song "La Bamba," Ritchie Valens was the first Chicano rock star. Only 17 when he died along with Buddy Holly and J.P. Richardson ("The Big Bopper") in a plane crash outside of Clear Lake, Iowa, Valens had become a regular presence on the charts with such self-penned hits as "Donna" and "Come on, Let's Go." Valens's career lasted a brief two years. After performing with a high school band, the Silhouettes, he was signed to a record contract with the Del-Fi label by producer Bob Keene in the spring of 1958. That year, he nearly reached the top 40 with "Come on, Let's Go," later covered by Tommy Steele and Los Lobos. His biggest hit came with a song inspired by a girlfriend, "Donna," the A-side of the single that included "La Bamba"—which itself reached #2. In 1959 Valens was in the film Go Johnny Go and made several appearances on Dick Clark's nationally broadcast American Bandstand TV show. Valens's short life was memorialized in the 1987 film La Bamba. A recording of the title track by his phenomenal Latin-rock descendants Los Lobos became a #1 hit.

what to buy: Rockin' All Night: The Best of Ritchie Valens ♪♪♪½ (Del-Fi, 1995, compilation prod. Bob Perry, Rob Santos) is a thorough examination of Valens's brief career. In addition to the hits, the 22-song collection includes nearly every tune he recorded.

Chucho Valdes

what to buy next: Released after Valens's death, In Concert at Pacoima Jr. High ♪♪♪ (Del-Fi, 1960, prod. Bob Keene) was the first live rock 'n' roll album and documents a time when rock shows were relegated to school sock hops. The six-song set includes Valens's hits and a memorable rendition of Eddie Cochran's "Summertime Blues." The album is rounded out by demos of five songs Valens planned to release but never finished.

influences:

⏮ Little Richard, Elvis Presley, Mexican folk music

⏭ Los Lobos, Chris Montez

Craig Harris

Justin Vali

Malagasy folk and popular music

Born October 1964, in Fierenana, Madagascar. Based in Paris, France.

Justin's actual last name is Rakotondrasoa, but he's called "Vali" after the valiha (Madagascar's zither), of which he is the master. Vali was born into a musical family—his father and grandfather both knew hundreds of folk melodies. The family was also noted for the instruments they made. Vali began developing his own style as a youth; he picked the strings with his fingernails, rather than the pads of his fingers, giving the instrument a brittle, chiming quality. He also began fingerpicking long, single-note interludes with a jazzy improvisational quality that astounded listeners. In 1982 he joined a folkloric group and toured the world. When he reached Paris, he relocated there and formed his trio. The success of his first two albums, Rambala and Bilo, led to worldwide tours that included dates at Woodstock '94 and a gig serenading Nelson Mandela at the French Embassy in South Africa.

what's available: Ny Marina—The Truth ♪♪♪½ (RealWorld, 1995, prod. Tchad Blake) is easier to find than Rambala and Bilo, but it's decidedly less traditional in style. There are flamenco handclaps, waltzes, "raps" in Malagasy (the language of Madagascar), more percussion—some of it with a decidedly Latin feel—and plenty of opportunities to experience Vali's incredible fingerpicking technique. If you can locate it, Rambala ♪♪♪½ (Silex France, 1991, prod. Sir Ali) offers stripped-down Malagasy folk music, with abundant fancy picking and rumbling harmonies from the three male principals.

influences:

⏮ Martin Rakotoarimanana, Rokotofra, Tsimialona Volambita

⏭ Les Smockers, Tarika

j. poet

Carlos Varela

Nueva trova, nueva canción

Born c. 1969, in Cuba. Based in Havana, Cuba.

Carlos Varela is following in the tradition of Cuban poet José Martí and political singers Silvio Rodriguez and Pablo Milanés. Sometimes appearing with an acoustic guitar and sometimes with heavily rocked-up backing, he offers thoughtful lyrics from the perspective of a young Cuban looking at the politics and emotions of his home country. However, his work has not been released in Cuba itself. Despite this, Varela intends to stay in his homeland, finding there his subject matter and muse.

what's available: Jalisco Park ♪♪♪♪ (Eligeme, 1993) is Varela's debut disc, recorded in Spain, which brought his music to the world and marked him as a presence in the nueva trova or "new ballad" movement, a personalized take on Latin America's folk-inspired, activist nueva canción ("new song") genre. Monedas del Aire ♪♪♪♪ (Qbadisc, 1994) and Como Los Peces ♪♪♪♪ (RCA International, 1995) show the further development of his lyrical commentary and musical style. These discs aren't the easiest to find, but are worth seeking out.

influences:

⏮ Victor Jara, Pablo Milanés, Silvio Rodriguez

Kerry Dexter

Värttinä

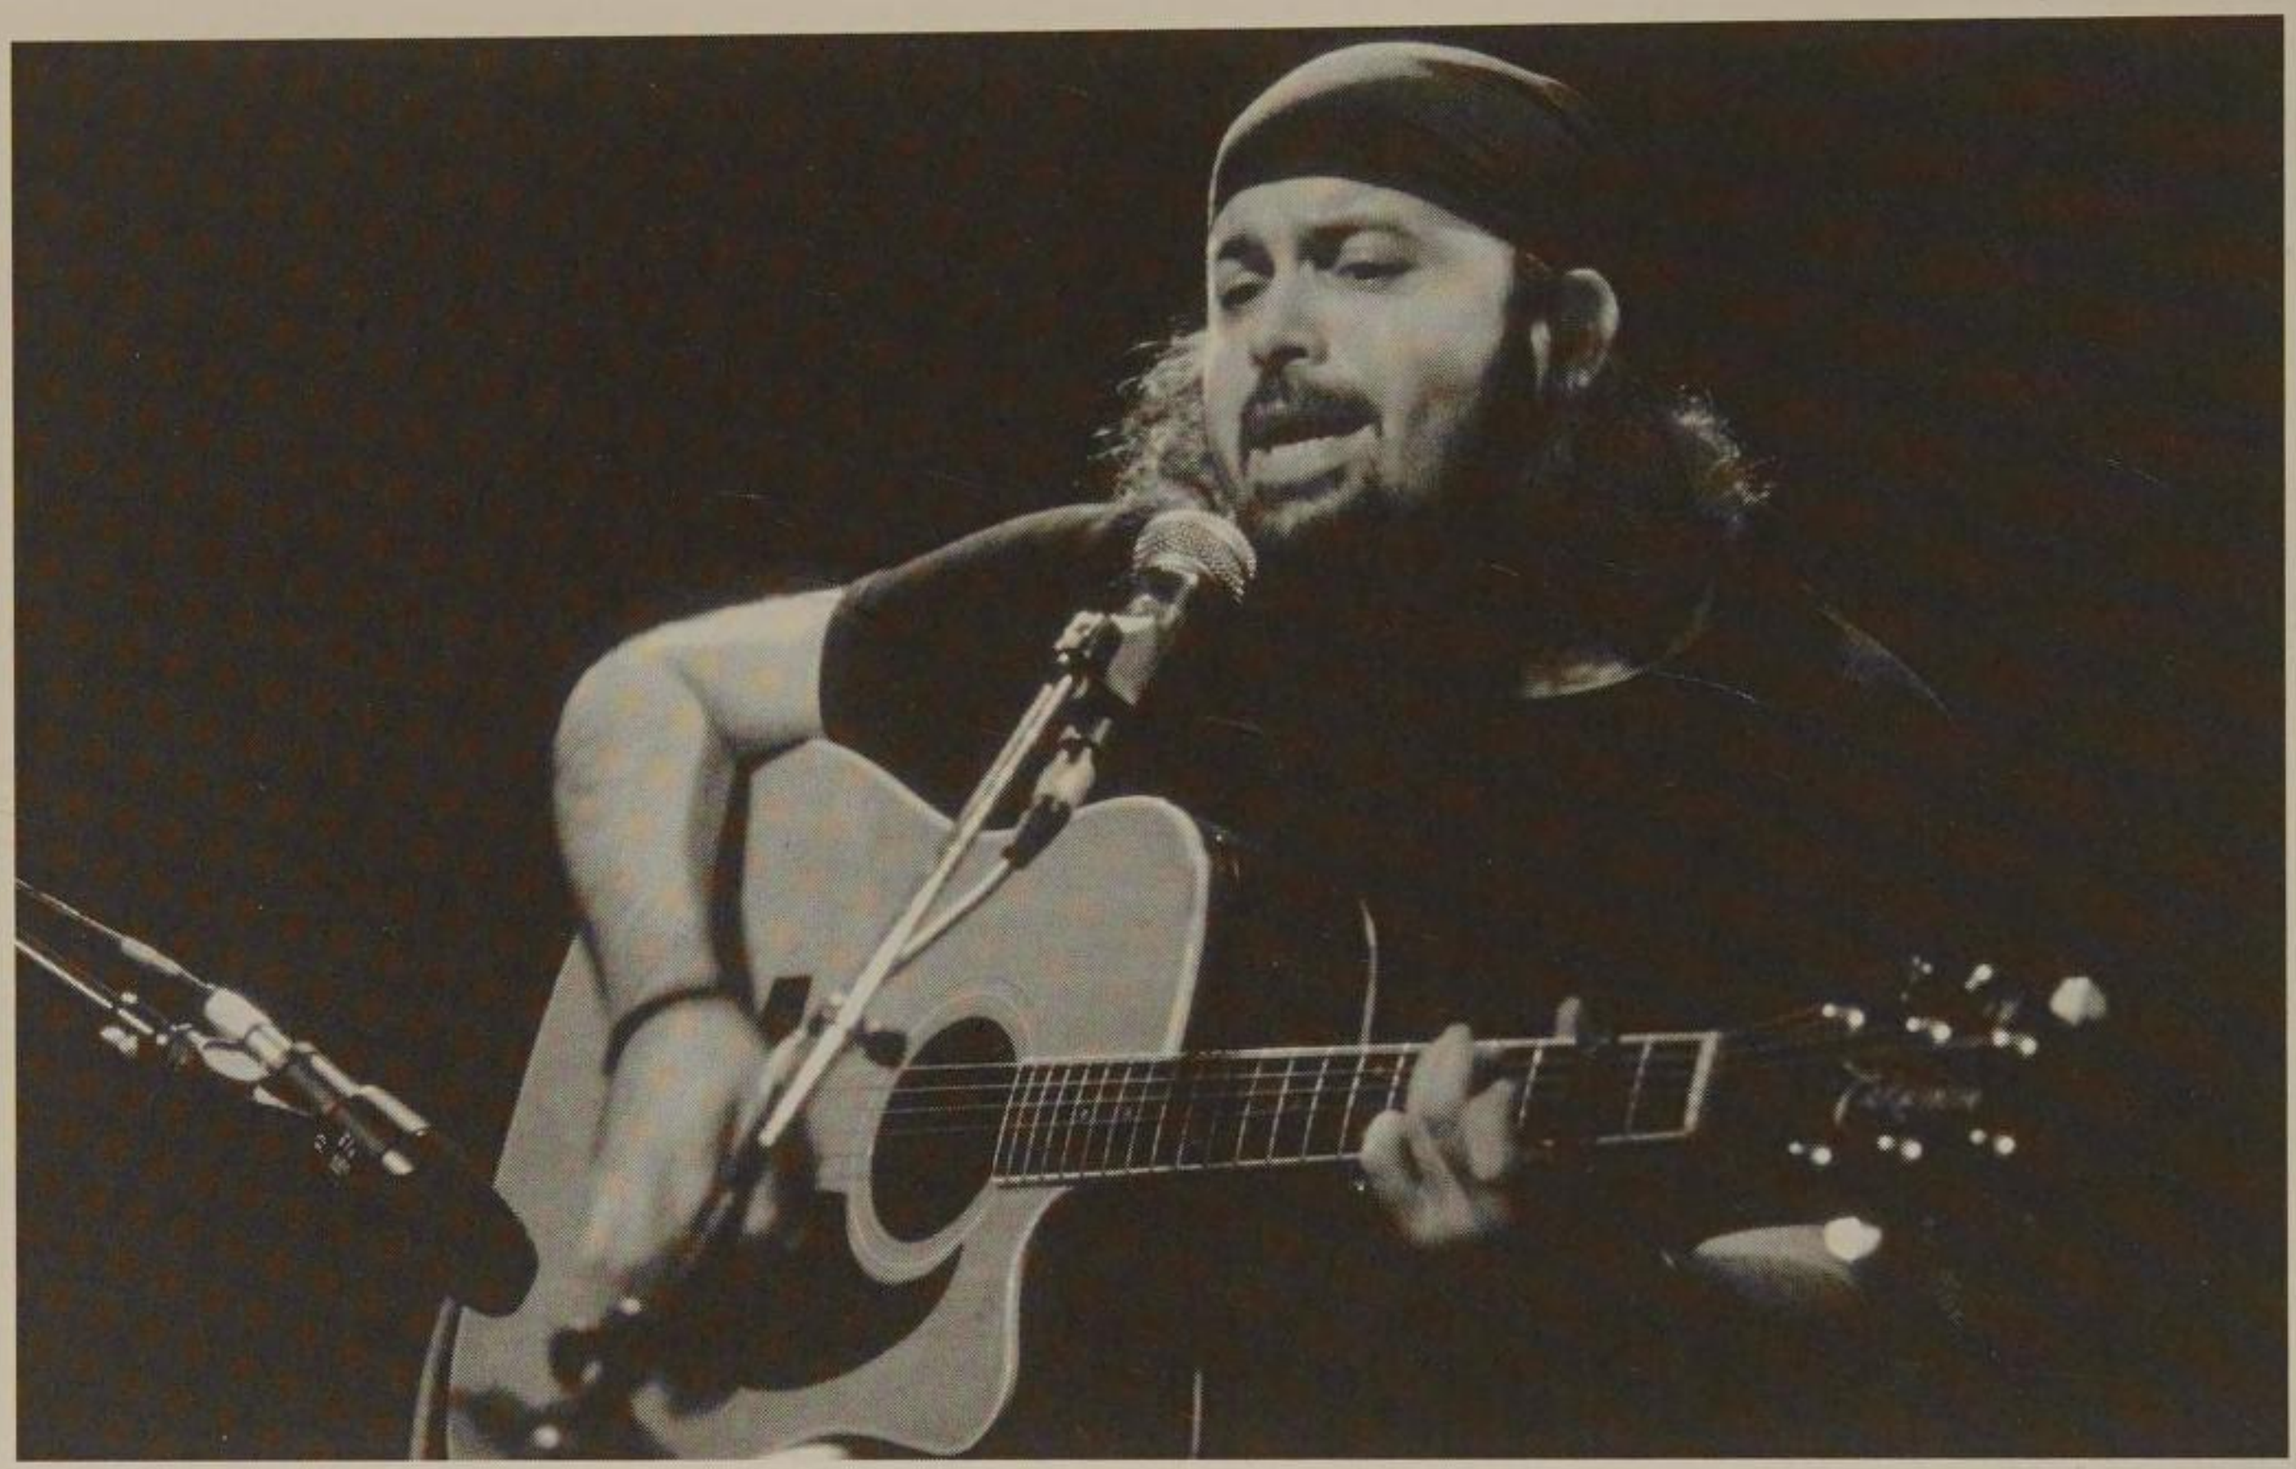
Modern Finnish folk

Formed 1983, in Finland. Based in Finland.

Sari Kaasinen, Mari Kaasinen, Kirsi Kähkönen, Sirpa Reiman, all vocals, with various backing musicians. (All members are from Finland.)

Our story starts in 1983, in Rääkkylää, in the Karelia area of southeastern Finland, near the Russian border. Fifteen girls and six boys, singing and backed by the kantele (zither), whistle, saxophone, bass, flute, and possibly kitchen sink, began exploring the folk music of the area, with its irregular rhythms and strong vocal tradition. They even traveled into the then-Soviet Union to collect songs from the Mari and Setu peoples—all part of the Finno-Ugric (linked Finnish, Siberian, and Hungarian) tradition. What made the band so distinctive was the fact that it was led by women, with an instinctively feminist approach, and that there was also no attempt to be cute by donning traditional costume. This was exuberant and young; quite punk in its own little way. The group issued one record in 1989 (Musta Lindu) before thinning the ranks a couple of years later for its second album Oi Dai, which became one of Finland's all-time best-sellers. These girls could be bad, dallying 'round the corner with the boys and asking them to spend the night—but more than lyrical content, it was the harmonies that thrilled, dangerous and taken at high speeds. The trip continued on the next two albums, Värttinä and Seleniko, but they really hit top gear a couple of years later with Aitara, which saw them negotiating edgy vocal turns that left awed spectators wondering if it would all spin out of control. By now, they'd garnered a world audience through their energetic performances and were ready to move on to bigger and better things. In 1996 there was a new label, Nonesuch, and a new record, Kokko, that was mature and . . . disappointing. To an extent, they'd gone pop. It was like hearing the girls from Abba singing folk; not particularly inspiring. Nonetheless, sales were good and critical reception respectable, but in spite of this, they switched labels again in 1998 to Wicklow, the Chieftains' Paddy Moloney's new label, with the stunning return to form Vihma and renewed progress toward world domination.

790 värttinä



Carlos Varela

what to buy: Aitara ♪♪♪♪ (Xenophile, 1994, prod. Janne Haavisto) shows that voices can be dangerous—don't try this at home, or you could end up rupturing your vocal cords. Vihma ♪♪♪♪ (Wicklow, 1998, prod. Janne Haavisto, Richard Horowitz) has all the trademark vocal qualities interlocking like jigsaw puzzles, plus some fantastic rhythms that offer a very modern edge without resorting to the drum machine.

what to avoid: Kokko ♪♪ (Nonesuch, 1996) is a lackluster attempt to go pop that fizzles like a wet Helsinki Monday morning.

the rest:
Oi Dai ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1991)
Seleniko ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1992)

worth searching for: Musta Lindu ♪♪♪ (Olarin Musiikki Oy, 1989) and Värttinä ♪♪♪ (Mipu Music, 1992/Finlandia, 1998) are two choice items that, surprisingly, have yet to find an American-label home—though, happily, the latter's Finlandia reissue is one of many fine offerings on the powerhouse Warners subsidiary that are making their way into American record bins.

solo outings:
Sari Kaasinen and Mari Kaasinen:
Can We Have Christmas Now? ♪♪♪½ (NorthSide, 1998)

influences:
Traditional Finnish folk music

see also: Maria Kalaniemi

Chris Nickson

Vas

Ambient vocal worldbeat

Formed 1995, in Los Angeles, CA, USA. Based in Los Angeles, CA, USA.

Azam Ali (Iran), voice, hammered dulcimer, bendir; Greg Ellis (USA), percussion (including udu, dumbeck, madal, nagara, bendir, bowls, bells, shakers, tambura), vocal drones, keyboards.

Many artists collected here lament the broadness of the "world music" label. But Vas would probably jump at the chance to switch labels with them. The unearthliness of Azam Ali's pipes, the cyclical, devotional quality of her and Greg Ellis's compositions, and the understated temperament of their sound gets Vas tagged as "new age," but this is anything but background music, and anything but anonymous. The band seeks as many audiences as it has influences, and those influences are wide—Vas means "vessel," and this particular chalice is deep enough to contain the sensibilities Ali gained from her Iran-to-India-to-the-U.S. upbringing, and which Ellis acquired from casting beyond his suburban American one. Yet what flows back out from the vessel is measured and well blended, a stream of mostly Middle Eastern-sounding chants from Ali (although Mediterranean, Eastern European, and other influences occasionally bubble through it), in a remarkable yet restrained range of percussive textural settings from Ellis. Vas take a novel approach to one of America's main fears of world music: You don't have to worry about not speaking the language of the singer, because she doesn't either. Ali prefers an improvised vocalese that she feels more flexibly meets her expressive needs, and broadcasts under the babble of mere words to communicate on a universal emotional frequency. The band's style is one which, like Ali's lyrical feelings, defies naming. They may not get to be called "world," but Vas's music is out of it in the way that counts the most.

what's available: Vas's unassuming material doesn't demand repeated listenings, but it does welcome and reward them. Like the mysteries it implicitly celebrates, this music reveals its wealth to you with persistence and patience. The band's sound will evolve thoughtfully over time, so if you like one of their thus-far two albums you'll probably like the other. Each has its surprises, but start with the slightly tighter debut, Sunyata ♪♪♪♪½ (Narada, 1997, prod. Azam Ali, Greg Ellis). Ali's entrancing vocals and Ellis's formidable yet subtle musicianship get the band off to a great beginning. Sophisticated but sensual, theirs is a spiritual sound that takes as much joy in this life as the next. Offerings ♪♪♪♪ (Narada, 1998, prod. Azam Ali, Greg Ellis) may stretch out a bit, but anything it lacks in directness it makes up for in experimentation. Although Vas still plays live as a duo, a Who's Who of accompanists joins them here, including Ellis's former Billy Idol bandmate Steve Stevens (true story!) and sought-after Turkish flutist Omar Faruk Tekbilek. But to say that this album's arrangements are expanded is not entirely accurate—you'll hear instruments you didn't on Sunyata, but even at its most minimal the music has always been rich.

worth searching for: Ellis wrote the introductory liner notes and contributed "Minus One," a solo percussion variation on Sunyata 's title track, to the compilation Mondo Beat: Masters of Percussion (Narada, 1998, executive prod. Dan Harjung), a stellar survey of rhythm's reigning talents including Tito Puente, Airto Moreira, the Musicians of the Nile, Babatunde Olatunji, Mongo Santamaria, and Mickey Hart.

influences:
Dead Can Dance, Glen Velez

see also: Omar Faruk Tekbilek

Adam McGovern

Nana Vasconcelos

Brazilian folklore, jazz, and fusion

Born August 2, 1944, in Recife, Brazil. Based in Brazil.

Along with Airto Moreira, Nana Vasconcelos is one of the most important purveyors of the colorful and polyrhythmic percussion style that is a treasure of his native Brazil. What makes him especially valuable is his ability to adapt his multicultural approach to a variety of musical genres. Making an early debut with his father's band while still in his teens, Vasconcelos would work for a time with the celebrated Milton Nascimento before coming to the United States in the 1970s as a member of Gato Barbieri's band. Later that decade, the percussionist teamed with fellow Brazilian Egberto Gismonti before helping to form the group Codona, which combined a variety of world-music styles and featured trumpeter Don Cherry. Throughout this period, Vasconcelos recorded for the ECM label with various ensembles, including a memorable early-1980s stay with the Pat Metheny Group. His most recent efforts have found him performing with, among others, Jan Garbarek and Scottish percussionist Evelyn Glennie. The foundation of Vasconcelos's multilayered sound, which often includes vocals, guitar, and hand percussion, is the berimbau. This native instrument includes a hollow gourd and attached, bowed piece of wood which stretches a wire strand, its resonance closely resembling that of a slack guitar string. As a proponent of the rich musical legacy that Brazil has to offer, Vasconcelos remains one of the country's most valuable exports.

what to buy: Saudades ♪♪♪♪♪ (ECM, 1979, prod. Manfred Eicher) is a great place to experience Vasconcelos's talent; a tour de force of his resplendent approach. Duas Vozes ♪♪♪♪½ (ECM, 1984, prod. Manfred Eicher) is a session co-led with Egberto Gismonti that finds the pair exploring a variety of traditional songs and spontaneous duets with fascinating results.

what to buy next: Storytelling ♪♪♪♪ (EMI, 1995, prod. Nana Vasconcelos) has Vasconcelos utilizing a more contemporary approach. The overall effect is still one of multilayered textures, yet electronics have a more prominent role.

the rest:
Lester ♪♪♪½ (Soul Note, 1985)
Bush Dance ♪♪♪½ (Antilles, 1986)
Rain Dance ♪♪♪ (Antilles, 1988)
Fragments: Modern Tradition ♪♪♪ (Tzadik, 1997)

worth searching for: Egberto Gismonti's Danca das Cabecas ♪♪♪♪½ (ECM, 1976, prod. Manfred Eicher) features several lengthy pieces for percussion and Gismonti's guitar that highlight the unique rapport shared by these two major talents. Pat Metheny and Lyle Mays's As Falls Wichita, So Falls Wichita Falls ♪♪♪♪ (ECM, 1980, prod. Manfred Eicher) is one of the three sets that Vasconcelos recorded with Metheny, and it's the best of the bunch due to the expansive title track, which benefits greatly from Vasconcelos's uncanny percussion work. Codona's Codona 3 ♪♪♪½ (ECM, 1983, prod. Manfred Eicher) summarizes the chamber-music approach of this atypical group, which owed much of its vitality and rhythmic variety to Vasconcelos.

influences:
◀◀ Brazilian folk tradition

see also: Michael Brook, Eliane Elias, Egberto Gismonti, Milton Nascimento, Flora Purim, Badal Roy, Caetano Veloso

Chris Hovan

Väsen

Traditionally influenced Swedish folk

Formed 1990, in Sweden. Based in Sweden.

Olov Johansson, nyckelharpa; Mikaęl Marin, viola; Roger Tallroth, guitar; Andre Farrari, percussion.

Take the tradition of Uppland in Sweden, a world-champion nyckelharpa (keyed fiddle) player, a manic guitarist, a violist who's written a piece for the Kronos Quartet, and a percussionist with a taste for Native American costume, and you've got something a little different. Johansson, who'd been the nyckelharpa world champ after taking up the instrument at 14, played the traditional score for the performance of Hamlet that inspired fellow ground-breakers Garmarna to form in 1990. Teaming up with Marin and Tallroth, Johansson founded Väsen, performing not only music from the Uppland tradition, but also a number of original compositions. The group was quickly noticed, and between 1990 and 1996 released four albums on Sweden's Drone label—Väsen, Vilda Väsen, Essence, and the live Levande Väsen—tracks from all of which were compiled on their first U.S. release in 1997, Spirit. Although resolutely acoustic, that's hardly dampened the musical adventures, or the wit of the sounds. Johansson in particular was singled out by appreciative critics, fans, and colleagues alike for his instrumental expertise, and has performed with the Kronos Quartet, playing the nyckelharpa on a piece written by Marin. The roots have remained a part of the band's sound, but on their most recent album, Whirled, where they added percussionist Farrari, they show themselves more than capable of tackling anything with grand style, from polska dances to tangos and jigs. Far from being academic, everything is done with a sly (and sometimes not-so-sly) humor. The band has grown slowly and steadily, building up audiences across Europe and now America. Accessible, skilled, exciting, they're the cream of an acoustic crop.

what to buy: Spirit ♪♪♪♪½ (NorthSide, 1997, prod. Väsen, Olle Paulsson, Magnus Dahlberg) collects tracks from their first four releases and shows the growth of their sound, which wasn't tentative even in the beginning. This is a band that knows how to rock without playing rock music. Whirled ♪♪♪♪½ (NorthSide, 1998, prod. Väsen) introduces the percussionist as a full and vital member of the band, expanding their sound and showing that they've moved from being merely exceptional to world-class. It all seems effortless, and every note is a delight.

worth searching for: Väsen ♪♪♪ (Drone, 1990, prod Väsen) is the start of the story, while Levande Väsen ♪♪♪♪ (Drone, 1995, prod. Magnus Dahlberg) captures the live experience—truly the best way with a band like this. If you want a Hendrix of the nyckelharpa, it has to be Johannson (okay, so there aren't too many candidates), as evidenced on his 1998 solo album Storvarten ♪♪♪♪ (NorthSide, 1998).

influences:
◀◀ Swedish folk tradition

see also: Dervish, Garmarna, JPP

Chris Nickson

Glen Velez

Worldbeat, jazz

Born in Dallas, TX, USA. Based in New York, NY, USA.

Velez is internationally recognized as a master musician, with a specialty in frame drums—the large tambourine-like hand drums that include the Egyptian riq and the Irish bodhrán. Glen's father was a trumpet player who made his living in Latin dance bands, but it was through an uncle that Velez got interested in drumming. He had his first kit at age 10, and by 14 he was exploring jazz and improvisation. After a stint in the army playing in the army band, Velez studied percussion at the Manhattan School of Music and became a member of the Steve Reich Ensemble in 1972. He added the Paul Winter Consort to his résumé in 1983. Although Velez is widely recognized as a hand drummer, he also plays steel drums, mbira (thumb piano), drum kit, and world percussion. He has a large collection of drums—more than 300—which allows him to produce a never-ending variety of textures, timbres, and rhythms. Velez has an eclectic style that makes him a highly desired session musician for pop, jazz, and world-music dates, and he's added his talents to more than 150 recordings by Suzanne Vega, Eddie Gomez, Glen Moore, Rabib Abou-Khalil, and many others. Velez has also recorded about a dozen albums under his own name, as well as a number of well-received instructional videos on hand drumming.

Glen Velez

what to buy: Hand Dance ♪♪♪♪♪ (Latitudes, 1996, prod. Bob Haddad) is a digital reissue of the 1985 album that introduced Velez to world-music buffs; his first outing as a leader, with music that's subtle, driving, and thoroughly intoxicating.

what to buy next: On Rhythmcolor Exotica ♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1996, prod. Jamey Hadad) Velez leads his Handance Frame Drum Ensemble through a percussive world-music travelogue that touches down in Brazil, North Africa, India, and other uncharted inner ports of call.

best of the rest:
Internal Combustion ♪♪♪½ (CMP, 1985)
Assyrian Rose ♪♪♪♪ (CMP, 1989)
Doctrine of Signatures ♪♪♪♪ (CMP, 1991)
Pan Eros ♪♪♪½ (CMP, 1994)
Rhythms of the Chakras ♪♪♪♪½ (Sounds True, 1998)

influences:
Diga Rhythm Band, Zakir Hussain, Oregon

see also: Steve Gorn, Enzo Rao, Mike Richmond, Badal Roy, Paul Winter

j. poet

Caetano Veloso

MPB (Brazilian Popular Music)

Born August 7, 1942, in Santo Amaro da Purificacao, Bahia, Brazil. Based in Brazil.

At once as gentle as a rainbow and as powerful as equatorial sunshine, Caetano Veloso neatly sums up the Brazilian musical personality. While his music can be melodic, beguiling, and sweetly sublime, it can also be "dangerous" enough to get him exiled from his homeland, as it did in the late 1960s. But the story of Veloso, one of the most influential Brazilian musicians of this century because he helped launch the "Tropicalismo" or "Tropicalia" movement, begins several years earlier, when the budding musician and filmmaker discovered the bossa nova of João Gilberto. Totally smitten by music, he put his other artistic ambitions aside. Later, while at university, he and his sister, Maria Bethânia (soon to be a noted singer in her own right), began playing around Salvador, Bahia's big city. In 1964 Veloso hooked up with a team of would-be ground-breakers—Gilberto Gil, Gal Costa, Tom Zé, and Carlos Coqueijo—to mount the stage production Nos, por Ejemplo. He subsequently moved to Rio de Janeiro and slowly began to gain fame with such songs as "Um Dia," but it was his mixing of rock with native Brazilian forms—as on the 1967 song "Alegria Alegria"—that made Veloso a revolutionary. Influenced by the quick-shifting cultural currents of the day, Veloso and other members of the tropicalista vanguard shocked Brazilians with their musical mix-and-match. Fado and funk, samba and soul were blended together, as on the album Tropicalia, recorded with Costa, Zé, Gil, and others. It's hard to believe now, but what would later be hailed as a step forward for Brazilian music was derided by the military dictatorship of the time as "chaos." In 1968 Veloso was thrown in jail for four months and then fled to exile in England for two years. Upon returning to Brazil, he was still as experimental as ever. In concert, he danced like Carmen Miranda, alarming observers on all points of the political spectrum because of his androgyny. However, ordinary Brazilians began to take him to their hearts, and in the 1980s he became a national star. It helped that he was doing some of his best work, such as the stirring Estrangeiro in 1989. Also during this period Veloso's American reputation began to grow, thanks to exposure from compilations on former head Talking Head David Byrne's Luaka Bop label. A 1997 U.S. tour brought Veloso to the West Coast for the first time, while he also scored the soundtrack for the Brazilian film Tieta do Agreste. After more than 30 years, Veloso is finally getting his due. With his heavily percussive 1999 Livro album and acclaimed North American journey in support of it the same year, he proves that just because he's getting older doesn't mean he's growing any less vital.

what to buy: For Americans weaned on rock who are just waking up to the brilliance of Brazilian music, Veloso's 1980s and 1990s material is the best place to start. The edgy yet graceful Estrangeiro ♪♪♪♪½ (Elektra/Musician, 1989, prod. Peter Scherer, Arto Lindsay) is a knockout display of Veloso's musical and lyrical skills. His poetic fire even comes through to those who don't understand a word of Portuguese. He's helped here by some of Brazil's best musicians, including percussionists Nana Vasconcelos and Carlinhos Brown, not to mention such other noted names as Bill Frisell and Marc Ribot. On Circulado ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra/Nonesuch, 1991, prod. Arto Lindsay), even Japanese ground-breaker Ryuichi Sakamoto helps out on a couple of tracks.

what to buy next: Veloso's career has spanned such a long time and he has recorded so many albums—more than 30—that it's hard to pinpoint a couple of discs that sum up what he's about. That's where compilations come in, offering hints of each of Veloso's eras. Without Handkerchief without Document—The Best of Caetano Veloso ♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram/Verve, 1990, prod. various) is one of the best, featuring 19 tracks and intelligent liner notes written by Gerald Seligman, who later went on to found the respected worldbeat label Hemisphere. All the early breakthrough songs are here: "Alegria, Alegria," "Soy Loco por Ti, America," "Tropicalia," and "Atras do Trio Electrico."

the rest:

Livro ♪♪♪♪ (Nonesuch, 1999)

worth searching for: The four-CD box set Caetano ♪♪♪♪♪ (PolyGram Brasil, 1994, prod. various) is available as an import in the United States, and it has just about everything a Velosoraptor could want, including bilingual sleeve notes. An album with Gilberto Gil, Tropicalia 2 ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra/Nonesuch, 1994, prod. Liminha, Gilberto Gil, Caetano Veloso), reunites these two giants of Brazilian music and finishes a story interrupted by oppression and closed-mindedness in the 1960s.

influences:

◀◀ Astrud Gilberto, João Gilberto, Antonio Carlos Jobim

▶▶ Carlinhos Brown, Marisa Monte, Paralamas, Chico Science & Nacao Zumbi

see also: Maria Bethânia, Gal Costa, Celia Cruz, Gilberto Gil, João Gilberto, Virginia Rodrigues, Ryuichi Sakamoto, Timbalada, Nana Vasconcelos, Tom Zé

Cary Darling

Veritas

Croatian folk music

Formed 1987, in Hamburg, Germany. Based in Hamburg, Germany.

Mile Spejar, first lead tamburica; Gordana Grgie, second lead tamburica; Kristina Spejar, harmony tamburica; Robert Spejar, harmony

Caetano Veloso

tamburica; Zoran Zavrski, rhythm tamburica; Drago Spejar, bass tamburica; Marica Perinic, vocals. (All members are from Croatia.)

Veritas is a tamburica (eastern European lute) ensemble that plays traditional folk and dance music from Croatia; the group was formed by a Croatian family (now living in Germany) to preserve their musical culture. For most of us in the West, Croatia is merely a trouble spot in the former Yugoslavia, plagued by genocide and civil war. Perhaps the music of Veritas will help put a more human, and considerably more happy, face on the Croatians.

what's available: The tamburica is a small guitar-like stringed instrument that sounds like a cross between a Greek bouzouki and a mandolin, with a high-pitched, cheery timbre. There are several types of tamburica: small instruments, samica, which play the leads; medium-sized bugarijas, which play chords and melody; and the berde or bas, for the bass parts. The tunes on Folk Music from Croatia ♪♪♪♪♪ (ARC, 1997, prod. Robert Spejar)—mostly merry, up-tempo jigs—sound similar to Greek folk music, but they're more sprightly and less melancholy. The tamburica picking is exhilarating throughout, and Marica Perinic's vocals are always heartwarming.

influences:
◀◀ P. Ilic, M. Von Farkash

j. poet

T.H. "Vikku" Vinayakram

South Indian percussion

Born 1932, in Madras, India. Based in Madras, India.

One of the foremost percussionists in the South Indian karnatak style, Vikku Vinayakram is also acknowledged as the world's greatest master of the ghatam, a large clay water pot that is stroked with the fingers, slapped, and sometimes tossed into the air in a burst of high spirits. Initially trained under his father, Harihara Sarma, at his renowned school of percussion, Vikku gave his first public performance at the age of 13, and was immediately touted as a rising star. Vinayakram's career in the West started to take off in the late 1960s, when he began touring Europe extensively with artists such as violin virtuosos L. Subramaniam and L. Shankar and mandolin prodigy U. Srinivas. In 1974 he began teaching at the Centre for World Music at Berkeley, where he eventually joined forces with jazz guitarist John McLaughlin, tabla drum master Zakir Hussain, and L. Shankar to create Shakti, an influential ensemble that combined elements of jazz and Indian classical to create a new East-West hybrid. But this was just the beginning of Vikku's involvement in the burgeoning Indian/jazz fusion movement, and the two decades since Shakti's dissolution have seen him recording with artists ranging from Mickey Hart's Grammy Award–winning Planet Drum ensemble to Bill Laswell's ever-evolving Material. Although he has yet to make much of a mark in the United States as a bandleader in his own right, Vinayakram remains in high demand as a sideman, and as a ghatam teacher at his own school in Madras, recording classical albums in India whenever his busy schedule permits. Indian newspapers reported that he performed with Sankara, a new fusion group led by karnatak percussionist Subhas Chandran, in early 1999, but there is no word yet on whether the ensemble plans to record.

what to buy: Vinayakram's only solo Western release is Together ♪♪♪♪ (Magnasound/OMI, 1996, prod. G. Suresh), a percussion-heavy venture that showcases Vikku's formidable talents alongside those of his sons, kanjira (tambourine) specialist Selva Ganesh and rising ghatam master Uma Shankar. The album's centerpiece, "Family Matter," is a 30-minute epic that may turn off non-percussion fans, but the other four songs use Rikhi Ray's pastoral guitar textures to great effect, creating a strangely enjoyable, non-traditional vibe perfect for weekend afternoons spent lounging in the sun. Every Indian music fan should own a copy of The Best of Shakti ♪♪♪♪♪ (Moment/Sony, 1994, prod. John McLaughlin), a nine-song masterpiece that captures four instrumental wizards at their mind-blowing peak. Although there have been hundreds of Indian/jazz fusion experiments since Shakti recorded its last album, none have quite captured the breathtaking passion that seems to explode from every single song on this 76-minute classic. A definite must-have!

what to buy next: L. Shankar's Raga Aberi ♪♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1995, prod. the Epidemics) is a brilliant recording featuring three-fourths of Shakti—Shankar, Vikku, and Zakir Hussain. Far more traditional in nature than their work with John McLaughlin, this 48-minute raga composed by Shankar allows each of these masterful musicians ample room to show off his dazzling improvisational skills, with Vikku and Zakir trading remarkably complex percussive riffs that build to an earth-shattering climax.

the rest:
(With L. Shankar) Soul Searcher ♪♪♪♪ (Axiom, 1990)
(With L. Shankar) M.R.C.S. ♪♪♪♪ (ECM, 1991)
(With Mickey Hart) Planet Drum ♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1991)
(With Material) Hallucination Engine ♪♪♪♪ (Axiom, 1994)

worth searching for: Vinayakram has recorded a number of albums in India, many of which can be found in Indian specialty stores. Generations is especially worth searching for, as it features some of the karnatak style's most prominent musicians, including Vikku, his two sons, and, on the 30-minute "Tidal Waves," some magnificent drumming and konnakkol (spoken percussion) from Subhas Chandran.

influences:

◀◀ Harihara Sarma

▶▶ Subhas Chandran, Selva Ganesh, Uma Shankar

see also: Mickey Hart, Zakir Hussain, Bill Laswell, Shakti, L. Shankar, U. Srinivas, L. Subramaniam

Bret Love

Vinx

Soul, drum ensemble, jazz, funk, Afropop fusion

Born Vincent De'Jon Parrette, in Kansas City, MO, USA. Based in Watertown, MA, USA.

For all of Vinx's achievements—including scoring the second-best triple jump in the world to qualify for the 1980 Moscow Olympics (the games the United States boycotted)—it's amazing that he's not more renowned as a multidimensional performer, athlete, author, visual artist, and even diplomat. A singer and percussionist who started his career playing with Taj Mahal in 1978, Vinx continued to pursue his Olympic goals, moving to Los Angeles in 1984. Sidelined by an injury at the trials, however, he turned his attention to music. His first recording session, with saxophonist Ernie Watts (Musician), earned a Grammy in 1986. The following year, crooner Tom Jones recorded a Vinx tune, "Touch My Heart." Vinx's reputation grew when he appeared in 1988 commercials for Levi's 501 jeans and Sprite. That year also saw him touring with Rickie Lee Jones, Teena Marie, the Bus Boys, and Toni Childs. But just as his own career was taking off, Vinx experienced a brutal loss: his father was murdered during a mugging while visiting family in Detroit. Despite losing his biggest musical influence, Vinx continued performing and touring, heading to Europe with his drum band, the Barkin' Feet, and appearing on Herbie Hancock's Showtime Coast to Coast program with Bonnie Raitt, Bruce Hornsby, B.B. King, Lou Reed, and Woody Harrelson.

After he joined Sting on the latter's The Soul Cages, Sting and I.R.S. Records head Miles Copeland (brother of ex-Police drummer Stewart) signed Vinx to Sting's own short-lived I.R.S. imprint, Pangea—whose very name invokes a one-world concept (it's the geological term for the hypothetical single landmass that broke apart to form the modern continents). Vinx's debut release was Rooms in My Fatha's House, with Taj Mahal, Herbie Hancock, Sting, Sheryl Crow, Branford Marsalis, and other guests. A baritone compared vocally to Al Jarreau, Bobby McFerrin, Donny Hathaway, and Nat King Cole, Vinx proved a commanding (and funny) stage act as the opener and percussionist/backing vocalist for Sting's Soul Cages tour. He also performed with Peter Gabriel, Sinéad O'Connor, Elton John, and Zucchero. His song "While the City Sleeps" became the soundtrack to the opening dance segment of the Fox TV show In Living Color. In 1992 Vinx headed to Santa Fe, where he sold his first painting and released his next CD, I Love My Job, with a jazz/soul approach and internationally influenced guests such as Patrice Rushen, Zap Mama, and Hiroshima's Don Kuromoto. Another Vinx composition, "There I Go Again," was heard on TV's Northern Exposure and became the subject of so many inquiries it wound up on a compilation of the show's most-requested songs. Among the artists Vinx opened for in 1992 were Steel Pulse, Third World, Drummers of Burundi, Richard Elliot, Big Country, and Manhattan Transfer. During 1993 Vinx released his third album, The Storyteller, with Stevie Wonder and Cassandra Wilson, and moved to Boston to be near his future wife. The following year, he turned out a pilot for Oprah Winfrey's Harpo Productions, and played and co-emceed at Woodstock '94. He also hit the road with the Spin Doctors, Cracker, and the Gin Blossoms.

In 1995 Vinx's multitalented, multicultural leanings earned him an appointment as a U.S. State Department cultural attaché on a four-month tour of Africa as part of a drum trio. He then toured with renowned bassist Me'Shell Ndegéocello, and opened for such renowned world acts as Baaba Maal, Yothu Yindi, and King Sunny Adé. His fourth CD, Lips Stretched Out, was released in 1996 on his own Internet label H.O.E. (Heroes of Expression) Records. He also wrote a children's book and made a belated appearance at the Olympics—this time as a performer at the summer games in Atlanta. In 1997 he took his own band, Jungle Funk (with Will Calhoun and Doug Wimbish of Living Colour and Bernie Worrell of Parliament/ Funkadelic), on a tour of Europe. Not a bit afraid to genre-jump, his eclectic abilities allow him to cross over in a broad range of categories, from worldbeat, reggae, salsa, and pop to funk, R&B, jazz, soul, and blues. A true man of the world, Vinx is always likely to turn up exactly where he might least be expected—as he did at the 1997 NFL playoff game between the New England Patriots and the Pittsburgh Steelers, where he sang "The Star-Spangled Banner."

what to buy: Rooms in My Fatha's House ♪♪♪♪ (Pangea/I.R.S., 1991, prod. Sting, John Eden, Greg Poree, Vinx) is an inviting place—subtle, passionate, witty, never overdone, and filled with charisma. Among the friends hanging out are Taj Mahal, Herbie Hancock, Sheryl Crow, and Branford Marsalis.

what to buy next: The Storyteller ♪♪♪ (Pangea/I.R.S., 1993, prod. Greg Poree, Vinx) features a huge list of contributors, including Stevie Wonder (piano), Harvey Mason (drums), and Cassandra Wilson (vocals). It's sometimes categorized as rock, but is full of eclectic fusions and non-categorizable, uniquely Vinx sounds. I Love My Job ♪♪♪ (Pangea/I.R.S., 1992, prod. Greg Poree, Vinx) is equally offbeat, soulful, and clever.

the rest:

Lips Stretched Out ♪♪♪ (H.O.E., 1996)

worth searching for: You'll thank yourself for seeking out Cassandra Wilson's Blue Light til Dawn (Blue Note, 1993), on which Vinx delivers percussion and vocals, and Sting's The Soul Cages (A&M, 1991), on which he plays percussion.

influences:

⏮ Gerald Albright, Nat King Cole, Herbie Hancock, Al Jarreau, Bobby McFerrin, Leslie Jackson Parrette Sr., Prince, Sting, Stevie Wonder

⏭ Bobby McFerrin, Cassandra Wilson

Lynne Margolis

Viva la Musica

See: Papa Wemba

Carlos Vives

"Techno vallenata"

Born Carlos Alberto Vives Restrepo, 1964 or 1965 (sources vary), in Santa Marta, Valle de Upar, Colombia. Based in Colombia.

There was a time when you could say that Carlos Vives wasn't a vallenata musician but he played one on TV. He had received some early musical training on the piano from his grandmother, and his father used to make him sing at family reunions, but music took a back seat to acting when Vives enrolled at the School of Dramatic Art in 1979. By 1982 he was making his mark as an actor in a Colombian television series called Tiempo sin Huellas. Vives later went on to be a fixture in the Hispanic soap opera world, culminating with his starring role as the title character in Escalona, as in "Raphael," a series based on the life of the legendary vallenata figure. Combining Vives's handsome, charismatic screen presence with his persuasive tenor delivered unheard-of demographics to the show's producers, and inspired national pride in one of Colombia's native musics. The corresponding soundtrack album, released in 1990, helped point the direction for Vives's future career. The accordionist on these projects was Egidio Cuadrado, a superb musician whose impeccable roots-oriented credentials provided the traditional base for Vives's music for the rest of the 1990s.

Vallenata revolves around the trinity of accordion, bongos, and guiro (a rhythmic scraped instrument), while the lyrics tell tales of love and civic pride. Unlike cumbia, Colombia's other major musical export, vallenata had remained a bit more rural and rootsy, giving it a slightly more transparent "feel." These characteristics were tweaked in 1993 with Vives's release of Clasicos de la Provincia, an album that was to change the face of the music with sales of over a million copies worldwide. Vives and his band La Provincia embraced a traditional genre only to weave in electric instruments and a drum kit, taking the form into the future even as they were paying tribute to composers of its past. In many ways this is an accomplishment in Colombian music that ranks with what Fairport Convention and Milton Nascimento's Clube da Esquina did in their respective countries. If vallenata has been dragged into the late 20th century, then Clasicos de la Provincia (along with Gloria Estefan's album Abriendo Puertas) played a major role in making the music relevant to a younger demographic. Vives's variation has been labeled by some critics as "techno vallenata," but from the viewpoint of the performer himself, it is an ever-evolving hybrid. Tengo Fe, Vives's latest album, adds cumbia and jíbara rhythms to the basic mix, although Cuadrado's accordion always anchors the music.

what to buy: Vives's most influential album is an unqualified pop masterpiece, Clasicos de la Provincia ♪♪♪♪♪ (Sonolux/PolyGram Latino, 1993, prod. Eduardo De Narvaez), propelled to multi-platinum sales by the Emiliano Zuleta–penned hit "La Gota Fria." Egidio Cuadrado's notable interpretations of vallenata style are almost as experimental with the form as some of Dino Saluzzi's tangos. Ditto for Luis Angel Pastor, one of the most interesting bassists in the Western Hemisphere.

what to buy next: While not as big a seller as Clasicos de la Provincia, La Tierra del Olvido ♪♪♪♪½ (Sonolux/PolyGram Latino, 1995, prod. Carlos Vives, Richard Blair) still makes some interesting choices as Vives blends the music of Colombia's Andean slopes with his "techno vallenata." Most of the material is generated from La Provincia, including tunes either written or co-written by Vives, guitarist Ernesto Ocampo, and accordion wizard Egidio Cuadrado. Rock also starts to make a strong appearance with this album, as Ocampo whips a few lines from the Stax/Volt rhythm catalog on "La Cachucha Bacana" before traditional percussion riffs and Andean pan flutes drive the music back toward its roots. Drifting ever closer to mainstream Latin pop, Vives released Tengo Fe ♪♪♪♪ (EMI/Latin, 1997, prod. Carlos Vives). There are moments of melodrama seemingly aimed at the same demographic that goes nuts for Luis Miguel, but Vives usually manages to spring the vallenata card and make routine tunes rise above expectations. He had a hand in writing all the songs except "Cabalito," a hard-charging arrangement of a Colombian folk song that is almost a throwback to Clasicos. Much of the original La Provincia is gone but Cuadrado and Pastor are still with Vives, and key to his sound.

worth searching for: Before there was Clasicos de la Provincia, there was Escalona un Canto a la Vida ♪♪♪♪ (Sony Discos, 1992, prod. Josefina Severino). This is more of a traditional vallenata album, with less prominent roles for the bass guitar and drum kits. Everything was written by Rafael Escalona, one of the genre's most honored songwriters, and the musicians play the music sans anything but the most traditional of embellishments. Vives's vocals are catchy and Cuadrado's accordion playing does the past justice while doing the future proud. This album was the follow-up to the Escalona soundtrack.

influences:

⏮ Leandro Diaz, Rafael Escalona, Charlie García

⏭ Amparo Sandino, Shakira, Tulio Zuluaga

see also: Bloque

Garaud MacTaggart

Vocal Sampling

Son

Formed 1990, in Havana, Cuba. Based in Havana, Cuba.

Members have included: René Baños, vocals, musical director; Sergio Pereda, vocals; Reinaldo Sanler, vocals; Abel Sanabria, vocals; Carlos Díaz, vocals; Luis Alzaga, vocals; José Rolando Duran, vocals; Renato Mora, vocals. (All members are from Cuba.)

Vocal Sampling replicates the sound of a salsa band using nothing but their vocal chords and a few well-placed hand claps. The six singers, who have all played in traditional Cuban bands, met while studying music and began refining their unique vocal take on the son (Afro-Cuban folk music) during after-class vocal jam sessions. In 1992 Poney Gross of the Belgian company Zig Zag Productions brought them to Europe and convinced them to make their "hobby" their career. The band's "vocalese salsa" may sound like a gimmick, but when they start singing they make it obvious they're musicians as well as entertainers. Abel Sanabria's vocal congas and José Duran's deep booming basslines lay down a groove so deep a dinosaur couldn't climb out of it. Carlos Diaz and Reinaldo Sanler add a faux horn section of trumpet and trombone while Luis Alzaga and René Baños, the group's founder, share lead vocals, adding incredible ornamentation to the end of each line. Your ears tell you there's an orchestra on stage, but your eyes confirm the fact that everything you hear, including the fat, swooping sound of a fretless bass, is coming from the mouths of the six singers. And despite the "gimmick," Vocal Sampling writes solid original material. If they were fronting a traditional band and singing these songs, they'd still be an impressive outfit. The fact that they do it all vocally is nothing short of astonishing.

what to buy: Live in Berlin ♫♫♫♫ (Ashé, 1998, prod. Zig Zag, René Baños) includes some of the band's strongest material, recorded before an adoring—and amazed—crowd. The "bass solo" on the doo-wop-flavored bolero "Sueño Contigo" gives you a good idea of the band's vocal and improvisational chops.

what to buy next: The merengue "Eso Está Bueno" on De Vacaciones ♫♫♫♫ (WEA Latina, 1996, prod. Vocal Sampling, Rachael Faro) is another example of the vocal prestidigitation the band is becoming famous for.

WOMAD

Celebrating diversity was WOMAD's goal long before it was a corporate buzzword. By the time Peter Gabriel released his third self-titled solo album in 1980, he'd begun to break out of the U.S./Anglo rock continuum and into world music—a landmark for-instance being the South African drums and chants (not to mention bagpipes) of the anti-apartheid anthem "Biko." So it's not surprising that in the same year Gabriel catalyzed a group of people to create WOMAD—World of Music, Arts & Dance. The effort was conceived as a meeting ground of the traditional and the modern from cultures around the world. The primary venue for this vision would be an annual festival, though WOMAD also supports cross-cultural educational efforts and recordings. The first WOMAD gathering, held in England in 1982, succeeded artistically but left a pile of debt, which Gabriel was able to pay off by holding a benefit reunion concert with his old band Genesis. After that dodgy start, the organization grew in strength. The WOMAD Foundation was established in 1983 to support multicultural education, and it runs workshops in schools, colleges, and community centers throughout England. In 1988, WOMAD enhanced its international scope by offering festival programs in Denmark and Canada. It has since held more than 90 events in 20 countries. The format acted as a template for such American touring festivals as Lollapalooza and H.O.R.D.E.—performances take place on two or three stages, surrounded by participatory workshops in music, arts, and dance, as well as vendors of globe-spanning crafts and foods. Today, WOMAD boasts a family-oriented atmosphere featuring activities to keep children happy in their parents' spirit of cultural adventure. The week-long festival in Reading, England remains the cornerstone of the organization's worldwide year-round schedule; WOMAD's outpost in Seattle, Washington, puts on an annual event that keeps the former capital of Alternative Nation a full-time mecca of world music.

see also: Peter Gabriel

Salvatore Caputo

Vocal Sampling (with Renato Mora, front)

the rest:
Una Forma Mas ♪♪♪♪ (Sire, 1995)

influences:
Juan Luis Guerra, Bobby McFerrin, Beny Moré, Orquesta Aragón

j. poet

Waaberi

See: Maryam Mursal

Mohamed Abdel Wahab

Arabic pop

Born March 13, 1907, in Cairo, Egypt. Died May 3, 1991, in Cairo, Egypt.

The Big Four of Egyptian music during the first half of the 20th century were the legendary singers Umm Kulthum and Abd el-Halim Hafez, the flamboyant oud (lute) virtuoso Farid al-Atrash, and the meticulous composer, musician, singer, and actor Mohamed Abdel Wahab. While it was al-Atrash's unfulfilled wish to write material for Kulthum (the most-loved vocalist in Arabic music history), Wahab did write one of her biggest hits, "Enta Omri," in 1964. By the time he died, Wahab was the most honored musician in the Arab world, with a backlist of over 1,500 songs and a secure reputation as one of the finest, most imaginative oud players to emerge from the early days of the 20th century.

His career spanned an era of turbulence in Arabic society as a whole and Egyptian society in particular. As a child Wahab was just starting his life as an entertainer, singing in a theater, as Egypt was swaying under the burden of a dual occupation, by the Ottoman Empire and the British Empire. After years spent studying music in the classical Arab tradition, Wahab was introduced to the music of Western Europe. Coincidentally, the British and French governments had effectively strengthened their control of the Middle East, and King Farouk I was sitting on the Egyptian throne. This last fact was important for Wahab's future, since he was to become friends with Farouk's poet laureate—and Wahab's first major mentor—Ahmad Shawky. When the monarchy finally bit the dust in 1952, Wahab—who had previously played up to royalty and the monied classes and done well by it—proved that he could adapt to the times as he churned out a regiment of patriotic songs glorifying life in the new republic. Wahab's reputation had spread all over the Middle East by this time, due in part to Egypt's cultural primacy within the region, and since he was the most famous Arab composer of his day, it seemed only natural that Wahab write music for the national anthems of Egypt, Oman, and the United Arab Republic.

In many ways the region's budding nationalism sought to blend traditional ways with modern ones; the resulting cultural climate was a bubbling cauldron of contrasting ideas and Wahab was one of the major alchemists. Overlayed on his traditional training he wove Western elements into his music, especially the scores for movies that he starred in. He meshed flamencos, waltzes, and tangos with Arabic themes in much the same way his compatriot Farid al-Atrash did, even including the electric guitar in his later aural palette. Despite breaking new ground for future Arab composers, Wahab often retreated into traditionalism in his own '50s-era recordings, and by the mid-'60s had ceased singing, choosing to concentrate on writing for others. This album drought lasted until 1988, when Wahab was moved to enter the studio for one last recording.

what to buy: Kollina Nehib Elquamar: 1920–1935 ♪♪♪♪ (Mélodie/CMM Productions, 1996, compilation prod. Philippe Zani) is a fine historic overview of Wahab's early career, when his singing and playing were solidly within the classical Arab tradition. "Ya Tara Ya Nesma (I Ask the Wind)" is a true gem, featuring Wahab's fluid tenor set against his accomplished solo oud playing. This set also includes a recording of Wahab at the precocious age of 13, "Waylahou ma hilati (God, what can I do?)." Min Gheyr Leh ♪♪♪♪ (EMI Arabia, 1989, prod. John G. Deacon) was the last recording session for Wahab, but his first studio date as a singer in over 20 years. Essentially a two-part suite with lyrics by Morsi Gameel Aziz, the title work "Min Gheyr Leh" upset quite a few religious conservatives who thought the song mocked man's place in the universe, a direct assault on the teachings of the Koran. Wahab was cleared in a religious court and the album went on to be one of his biggest hits.

what to buy next: While most of Wahab's recordings feature his performance within the context of an orchestra, Besoto Ala El Aoud ♪♪♪♪ (Soutelphan, c. 1960) reveals the master singing and playing his oud in a solo setting, with a small studio audience occasionally voicing their approval of Wahab's prowess. While not necessarily as important historically as the other two recommended albums, this may be the perfect disc for novices to hunt up and listen to.

best of the rest:
Les Archives, Vols. 1-10 ♪♪♪♪ (Club des Disque Arabes, 1991–93)
Abdel Wahab Plays Abdel Wahab ♪♪♪½ (EMI Music Arabia, 1997)

worth searching for: Simon Shaheen's tribute album The Music of Mohamed Abdel Wahab ♪♪♪♪ (Axiom, 1991, prod. Bill Laswell, Simon Shaheen) is a succinct condensation of Wahab's career, with Shaheen playing oud and violin in front of an Arabic orchestra and chorus.

influences:
◀◀ Said Darwish, Ahmad Shawky

▶▶ Simon Shaheen, Hossam Ramzy, Saad M. Hassan

see also: Farid al-Atrash, Umm Kulthum, Simon Shaheen

Garaud MacTaggart

Bunny Wailer

Reggae

Born Neville O'Riley Livingston, April 10, 1947, in Kingston, Jamaica. Based in Kingston, Jamaica.

The last surviving member of the Wailers, Bunny Wailer has continued the group's legacy with several solo albums of Rastafari-inspired reggae. In addition, he has explored such post-reggae styles as dub, dancehall, and rap-reggae. Wailer was raised as Bob Marley's step-brother from the age of nine, when his father, Thaddeus "Toddy" Livingston, became Marley's mother Cedella's live-in lover in 1957. After Wailer and Marley met Peter Tosh (Winston Hubert McIntosh) in Joe Higgs's Third Street Year, the three vocalists formed a trio, the Teenagers. Changing their name to the Wailing Wailers, the group recorded their first single, "Simmer Down," in 1963. The song became a number-one hit in Jamaica. Although Marley temporarily moved to Delaware in 1966 to raise money for his own record label, Wailer continued to perform in the group (which had shortened its name to the Wailers), with Rita Marley's cousin Constantine "Dream Vision" Walker taking Marley's place. While the original lineup was reorganized after Marley's return in 1967, Wailer was arrested for possession of marijuana and imprisoned for a year and a half. Following his release in September 1968, the original Wailers recorded two albums produced by Lee Perry—Soul Rebels in 1970 and African Herbsman in 1973—and two albums for the Island label—Catch a Fire and Burning (which included Wailer's composition "Pass It On")—also within just two months in 1973.

Wailer's aversion to flying kept him from accompanying the group on an early-'73 tour of the United States. Although he then agreed to tour England in November of that year, he and Tosh soon left the band and returned to Jamaica. Wailer had been considering a solo career as early as 1972, when he launched his own record label, Solomonic, and released a solo single, "Search for Love." After his departure from the group, however, Wailer maintained his association with Marley and Tosh. His 1976 debut album, Blackheart Man, features guest appearances by both vocalists. In 1984, three years after Marley's death, Wailer joined with Tosh, Junior Brathwaite, and Walker to record an album featuring vocals of Marley taken from a tape recorded between 1968 and 1971. The resulting album was released in 1993 as The Never Ending Wailers. Wailer later received Grammy awards for his own album-length tributes to Marley's songs, Time Will Tell in 1991 and Hall of Fame: Tribute to Bob Marley's 50th Anniversary in 1995. Wailer finally performed his first show in the U.S. in 1986. His subsequent tours have featured accompaniment by Sly Dunbar, Robbie Shakespeare, the Roots Radics, and members of the Skatalites. Wailer has also toured and recorded with Tosh's eldest son, Andrew. His future plans include the publication of an autobiography, Old Fire Sticks.

what to buy: With his first solo album, Blackheart Man ♪♪♪♪½ (Mango, 1976, prod. Bunny Wailer), featuring guest vocals by Bob Marley and Peter Tosh and musical accompaniment from members of Bob Marley's Wailers including Aston "Family Man" Barrett (bass), Carlton "Carlie" Barrett (drums), and Tyrone Downie (keyboards), Wailer stepped out of Marley and Tosh's shadows and showcased his strengths as a lead vocalist and songwriter.

what to buy next: Wailer is at his best singing the songs of his late step-brother, deservedly winning Grammy Awards with his two Marley tributes, Time Will Tell ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1991, prod. Bunny Wailer) and Hall of Fame: Tribute to Bob Marley's 50th Anniversary ♪♪♪♪½ (RAS, 1995, prod. Bunny Wailer).

the rest:
Struggle ♪♪♪ (Solomonic, 1980)
Bunny Wailer Sings the Wailers ♪♪♪♪½ (Mango, 1981)
Rock 'n' Groove ♪♪♪ (Solomonic, 1983)
Live ♪♪♪♪½ (Solomonic, 1985)
Marketplace ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1987)
Protest ♪♪♪ (Mango, 1987)
Roots Radics Rockers Reggae ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1987)
Rootsman Skanking ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1987)
Rule Dance Hall ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1989)
Liberation ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1990)
Gumption ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1992)
Dance Massive ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1993)
Just Be Nice ♪♪♪ (RAS, 1995)

influences:
◀◀ Joe Higgs, Clyde McPhatter, Curtis Mayfield ▶▶ Ziggy Marley, Andrew Tosh

see also: Cedella Marley Booker, Joe Higgs, Bob Marley, Rita Marley, Lee "Scratch" Perry, the Roots Radics, the Skatalites, Sly & Robbie, Peter Tosh

Craig Harris

Wailing Souls

Roots reggae, dancehall reggae

Formed 1968, in Trenchtown, Jamaica. Based in Kingston, Jamaica.

Winston "Pipe" Matthews, vocals; Lloyd "Bread" McDonald, vocals; George "Buddy" Haye, vocals (1968, 1974–85); Oswald Downer, vocals (1969–74); Norman Davis, vocals (1969–74); Joe Higgs, vocals (1974); Rudolph "Garth" Dennis, vocals (1976–85); Winston "Ziggy" Thomas, vocals (1985–present). (All members are from Jamaica.)

The Wailing Souls are one of Jamaica's greatest vocal harmony groups, anchored throughout their long and fruitful career by the impassioned voices and conscious songs of "Pipe" Matthews and "Bread" McDonald. After being tutored in their native Trenchtown by Bob Marley–mentor Joe Higgs on the art of imaginative harmonizing and songwriting, the group recorded a stunning series of singles for Studio One, later collected on two albums released in the '70s—their self-titled debut and Soul & Power. They also provided stirring background harmonies on the Wailers' "Trenchtown Rock" single. Joined by original Black Uhuru vocalist "Garth" Dennis in 1976, the Souls re-recorded tempestuous "rockers" versions of some of their previous triumphs including "Back Out with It" (a Jamaican #1 single), "Fire Coal Man," and the amazing and chilling "War" at Channel One, all backed by the thunderous rhythms of the Revolutionaries. They also seized artistic and financial independence by launching the Massive label and releasing such stone-cold classics as "Bredda Gravalicious," "Feel the Spirit," and "Very Well," all collected on the essential Wild Suspense. In the dancehall era, the Wailing Souls proved their majestic harmonies could flourish in any musical environment. They joined forces with producer "Junjo" Lawes and the unstoppable Roots Radics band on Fire House Rock, with the title cut and "Kingdom Rise Kingdom Fall," now universally regarded as prime examples of roots harmony songcraft. The follow-up was another quality collaboration with Lawes and the Radics, the unjustly overlooked Inchpinchers. On Sly & Robbie's Taxi label, the Souls released "Old Broom," a song that is still beloved in Jamaica nearly 20 years later and was reworked by Tony Rebel on his big 1992 hit "Sweet Jamdown." In the '90s, the band tried to cross over with a more generic "worldbeat" sound, with a modicum of success—namely "Shark Attack," which briefly hit the U.S. pop charts in 1992. Though often compared with the Wailers, the Wailing Souls maintain a musical legacy that stands alone as one of sustained originality, astonishingly spiritual vocal expression, and songwriting that oozes wisdom and common sense.

what to buy: The magnificent Wild Suspense ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mango, 1979, prod. Wailing Souls) is a Wailing Souls primer, loaded with classics like "Very Well," "Feel the Spirit," and "Bredda Gravalicious," and the CD version adds the Revolutionaries' thrilling, plunging, echo-embellished dubs. The band's revelatory self-titled debut LP Wailing Souls ♪♪♪♪ (Studio One, 1971, prod. Clement "Coxsone" Dodd) unabashedly explores their rural, "country-reggae" roots. It includes the first glorious versions of "Back Out," "Row Fisherman Row," "Walk, Walk, Walk," and "Mr. Fire Coal Man," and showcases the group's words of wisdom voiced in soul-based harmonies with a gospel-like fervor. Fire House Rock ♪♪♪♪ (Greensleeves U.K., 1981, prod. Henry "Junjo" Lawes) is also chock full of treasures, including the aforementioned "Kingdom Rise Kingdom Fall" and the beautiful, criminally neglected gems "A Fool Will Fall" and "See Baba Joe."

what to buy next: Psychedelic Souls ♪♪♪ (Pow Wow, 1998, prod. Wailing Souls) is easily the wildest album in the group's catalog, consisting entirely of their interpretations of rock and psychedelic anthems from 1962 to 1972. The Who's "My Generation," Jimi Hendrix's "May This Be Love (Waterfalls)" and the Beatles' "Tomorrow Never Knows" are a few of the top-notch relics soulfully refashioned into reggae sure-shots.

the rest:
Face the Devil ♪♪♪ (Hitbound, 1979)
Inch Pinchers ♪♪♪½ (Greensleeves U.K., 1983)
On the Rocks ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1983)
Stranded ♪♪♪ (Greensleeves U.K., 1984)
Best Of ♪♪♪½ (Hit Bound, 1984)
Lay It on the Line ♪♪♪ (Live & Learn, 1986)
Kingston 14 ♪♪ (Live & Learn, 1987)
Very Best Of ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1987)
Stormy Night ♪♪♪ (Rohit, 1989)
All Over the World ♪♪♪½ (CBS/Sony, 1992) Tension ♪♪ (Pow Wow, 1997)

influences:
⏮ Joe Higgs, the Abyssinians, the Wailers, Alton Ellis, the Techniques, Ken Boothe, the Heptones

⏭ Garnett Silk, Tony Rebel, Wayne Wonder

see also: Black Uhuru, Joe Higgs, Barrington Levy, Freddie McGregor, the Roots Radics

Todd Shanker

Walela

Pop, gospel, Native American

Formed 1994, in Hollywood, CA, USA. Based in Los Angeles, CA, USA.

Rita Coolidge, vocals; Priscilla Coolidge, vocals; Laura Satterfield, vocals. (All members are from USA.)

Walela—the Cherokee word for "hummingbird"—is an appropriate name for the close-harmony trio of Rita Coolidge, her sister Priscilla Coolidge, and Priscilla's daughter Laura Satterfield. Their harmonies, like those of many family singing groups, blend into a single mystical voice, greater than the sum of its parts, and their music, a seamless fusion of Native, pop, and gospel influences, produces a profoundly spiritual and deeply moving effect. Rita, Priscilla, and Laura have been singing together for years, but it's only recently that they became a professional unit. "It was natural," Satterfield says. "When you're with family, you don't edit yourself, you just let it fly. We first got together on one of Rita's albums, doing a song called 'Cherokee.' Robbie Robertson heard it, and asked us to sing on his Music for the Native Americans album. That was the real beginning of the group." Walela recorded their eponymous debut with producer Jim Wilson, a Native musician known for his groundbreaking work with his own band, Little Wolf. "Jim's a wonderful arranger," Rita Coolidge says. "He's easy-going, knowledgeable about Native music, and strong enough to stand back and let us put our stamp onto the music."

what's available: On Walela ♪♪♪½ (Triloka, 1997, prod. Jim Wilson), Wilson's understated production perfectly complements the strong vocals of the group's three principals. Players include keyboardist Mike Utley from Jimmy Buffet's band, Geoffrey Gordon—Jai Uttal's percussionist—and Native flautist Andy Vasquez, but the instrumental layer stays in the background, a faint echo that supports the women's voices without overwhelming them.

influences:
⏮ Rita Coolidge, Booker T. Jones, Delaney & Bonnie, Bonnie Raitt

see also: Robbie Robertson, Jim Wilson (sidebar)

j. poet

The Waterboys

Celtic rock

Formed 1981, in London, England. Disbanded 1993.

Mike Scott, vocals, guitar, piano, Hammond organ; Steve Wickham, fiddle, Hammond organ, vocals; Anthony Thistlethwaite, saxophone, mandolin, organ, harmonica; Colin Blakey, whistle, flute, Hammond organ, piano; Noel Bridgeman, drums, percussion; Jay Dee Daugherty, drums; Sharon Shannon, accordion, fiddle; Trevor Hutchinson, bass, bouzouki; Karl Wallinger, bass, keyboards; Roddy Lorimer, trumpet.

The history of the Waterboys is the story of Mike Scott's ever-evolving musical and spiritual quest. "I've always followed my heart or where my latest musical fascination is, which is rarely where popular trends have been going," says Scott. True to these wanderings, the band was known for a continually changing cast of characters supporting Scott, with one anchor being the musical versatility of Anthony Thistlethwaite. The Waterboys originated the "Big Music," an epic, sprawling, feverish sound of layered acoustic guitars, ecstatic horns, and charging, obscure, expansive poetics reminiscent of the myth-making of William Butler Yeats and William Blake. At its best, the music was transcendent, leading the listener into a new, exotic land brimming with imagery and feeling, and owed a debt to the earlier work of fellow shamans Patti Smith, Van Morrison, and Bruce Springsteen, as well as the Beatles. Scott then changed tactics for the band's fourth album, the astounding Fisherman's Blues, bringing his Celtic passions to the forefront and toning down the Big Music. That particular "raggle taggle" version of the band broke up after two albums; the Waterboys became Scott and a slew of session players, and the music returned to harder guitar riffs, with disappointing results. A recent solo outing by Scott is much closer to the spiritual essence he sought with Fisherman's Blues, and on the tour supporting that album Scott promised that next time around, he'd return with a band. So perhaps a new generation of the Waterboys is just around the corner.

what to buy: Different eras of the Waterboys produced distinctly different music. Early Waterboys is best sampled on A Pagan Place ♪♪♪♪ (Chrysalis, 1984, prod. Mike Scott), featuring the strumming acoustic majesty of the title cut. This Is the Sea ♪♪♪♪♪ (Chrysalis, 1985, prod. Mike Scott, Mick Glossop) is a fully realized epic that showcased the Scott-Wallinger partnership and included the shimmering "This Is the Sea," "The Whole of the Moon," "Spirit," and "Old England." Late Waterboys is captured in all its glory on Fisherman's Blues ♪♪♪♪♪ (Chrysalis, 1988, prod. John Dunford, Mike Scott) with its embrace of the Celtic tradition. Commencing with the luminous title cut (recently resurrected for the film Waking Ned Devine), the album includes a stirring cover of Van Morrison's "Sweet Thing" and the last recorded song written by Scott and Wallinger (with Hutchinson), "World Party." A masterpiece from start to finish.

what to buy next: Best of the Waterboys ♪♪♪♪ (Chrysalis, 1991, prod. Mike Scott) is a good retrospective of the band, with the addition of "Killing My Heart," an early electric version of "When Ye Go Away," and a live "Old England." The Secret Life of the Waterboys ♪♪♪♪ (Chrysalis, 1994, prod. Mike Scott) is a collection of unreleased studio recordings, radio sessions, live tracks, and "lost" B-sides recorded between 1981 and 1985.

what to avoid: Dream Harder ♪♪ (Geffen, 1993, prod. Mike Scott, Bill Price) is a lackluster attempt to do the Waterboys without the Waterboys, and is hopefully Scott's last attempt to become a guitar god.

the rest:
The Waterboys ♪♪♪½ (Ensign, 1983)
Room to Roam ♪♪♪ (Ensign, 1990)
Pagan Place ♪♪♪½ (Alliance, 1997)
Best of '81–'90 ♪♪♪♪ (Alliance, 1997)
The Live Adventures of the Waterboys ♪♪♪♪ (Pilot, 1999)

worth searching for: A variety of CD singles and 12-inch releases dates most prominently from the Fisherman's Blues era onward. They include: And a Bang on the Ear/Raggle Taggle Gipsy (1989); The Whole of the Moon/Golden Age Medley (1991); Fisherman's Blues/Medicine Bow (1991); and Bring 'Em All In (with three previously unreleased songs), all on Chrysalis; and The Return of Pan/Karma/Mister Powers (Geffen, 1993).

solo outings:
Mike Scott:
Bring 'Em All In ♪♪♪♪ (Chrysalis, 1995)
Still Burning ♪♪♪ (Minty Fresh, 1998)

Anthony Thistlethwaite:
Aesop Wrote a Fable ♪♪♪ (Rolling Acres, 1993)

influences:
- Bob Dylan, Patti Smith, the Beatles, Bruce Springsteen, Van Morrison, the Chieftains
- U2, Sinéad O'Connor, World Party

see also: Sharon Shannon

Martin Connors

Waterson:Carthy

See: Eliza Carthy, Martin Carthy

The Watersons

See: Eliza Carthy, Martin Carthy

Papa Wemba

Soukous, African pop

Born Shungu Jules Wembadia, 1953, in Kasai province, Zaire (now Congo). Based in Paris.

Papa Wemba is one of the most towering and controversial figures to emerge from the musical colossus of Congo. Not content with his status as a mere superstar of soukous (African rumba), Wemba went on to break the sacred rules of that, the most influential dance-music style Africa has produced, and forge new ground on his own terms. His father was a village chief and his mother was a "pleureuse," a woman who sang and wept at funerals. The makings of a royal crooner with a bold streak and a soft touch were all there in those remote, rural beginnings.

Papa Wemba

Wemba moved to the capital of Congo, Kinshasa, just as the rumba-rock revolution was swinging into high gear. He gained instant celebrity in the front line of the hottest band in the city, Zaiko Langa Langa, formed in 1969. Wemba lavished Zaiko's guitar-intensive soukous sound with spinning-saw-blade tenor vocals and loose-limbed dancing. A stylish dresser from the start, he also helped to pioneer the phenomenon of the "sapeur"—part eccentricity, part expression of modern African freedom; in this case the freedom to wear Italian designer clothing. As is the pattern for star singers in Congolese bands, he broke off to form his own group, Viva la Musica, in 1974.

Rootsy rhythms from the Kasai region found their way into Wemba's pumped-up Congolese rumba, all right in step with President Mobutu's call for "authenticity" in the country's society and arts. But by the mid-1980s, when African pop was winning worldwide acceptance, Wemba was itching to veer from the strict regimen of his style. His eponymous 1988 release used non-Zairean musicians, song forms, and stylistic touches, and established him as a world-class African singer. At the same time, Wemba was chosen to be the pop act in a touring extravaganza of African traditional music, Africa Oyé. Many saw this as a strange choice, given Wemba's desire to break with even his country's more modern traditions. On the other hand, Wemba has always stayed faithful to those funky Kasai rhythms, no matter how fused and electronic his sound has become.

In the ensuing decade-plus Wemba has maintained a difficult balancing act, performing and recording both with Viva la Musica and his international band. His star may have fallen with Congolese traditionalists, but it has definitely risen worldwide. Ten years after Africa Oyé, Wemba returned to America as part of Africa Fête, a who's-who wherein none could question his presence. With one of the sweetest and most evocative voices of any African singer, and no shortage of innovative ideas, Wemba remains the only artist to successfully move beyond the soukous sphere into the larger arena of international pop.

what to buy: Viva la Musica's Pole Position ♪♪♪♪ (Sonodisc, 1995, prod. Papa Wemba) shows the sophistication and class Wemba brought to straight-ahead soukous. Papa Wemba ♪♪♪♪ (EMI, 1988, prod. Papa Wemba), the moment when Wemba moved away from soukous, stands up very well. Emotion ♪♪♪♪½ (RealWorld, 1995, prod. Stephen Hague) is his most polished international release.

best of the rest:
Le Voyageur ♪♪♪♪ (EarthBeat!, 1992)
Molokai ♪♪♪♪ (RealWorld, 1998)

worth searching for: Three old Viva la Musica records, Love Kilawu ♪♪♪♪½ (Sonodisc, 1987), Nouvelle Generation à Paris ♪♪♪♪ (Sonodisc, 1988), and La Naissance de L'Orchestre Viva la Musica, 1977, 1978 ♪♪♪♪ (Répartition Ngoyarto, prod. Bella Bella), are especially good finds. Foridoles ♪♪♪♪½ (Sonodisc, 1994) is a fine recent release from the band.

influences:
⏮ Tabu Ley Rochereau, Franco ⏭ Reddy Amisi, Lokua Kanza, Dominic Kanza

see also: Cheikh Lô, Zaiko Langa Langa

Banning Eyre

Floyd Red Crow Westerman

Native American folk

Born 1936 or 1940 (sources vary), in SD, USA. Based in Palm Springs, CA, USA.

Floyd Red Crow Westerman has made a major contribution to the increasing pride and self-awareness of Native Americans. A country folksinger in the early 1970s, Westerman has focused most of his recent attention on acting. In addition to playing the role of Ten Bears in the 1990 Oscar-winner Dances with Wolves, Westerman appeared in such films as Renegade in 1989 and Clearcut in 1992, and narrated the TV documentaries Legends of the West in 1993 and Lakota Woman—Siege at Wounded Knee in 1994. He also appeared as Jim Morrison's spiritual guide in the biopic The Doors, and has guested on such shows as MacGyver, Hardball, The X-Files, Roseanne, Dharma and Greg, L.A. Law, and Northern Exposure. A committed political activist, Westerman has spoken numerous times on Native American and environmental concerns. In 1992, he was a featured speaker at the World Uranium Hearing in Salzburg.

Born on the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Reservation in northeast South Dakota, Westerman, whose Indian name is Kanghi Duta, attended an Indian boarding school 80 miles away. After returning to the reservation for high school, he left again to study speech, theater, and art at Northern State University in Aberdeen, South Dakota, and graduated with a degree in secondary art education. Westerman traveled to New York in the late 1960s, and signed a record contract in '69. His debut album, Custer Died for Your Sins, was released shortly after the publication of the book of same name by Vine Deloria Jr. His second album, The Land Is Your Mother, was released in 1982. Westerman has performed often in Europe, making more than 50 trips overseas. One of his first worldwide tours was a benefit for the Rain Forest Foundation Project, and also featured Sting and Raoni, the chief of the Kayapo Indian Nation from the Zingu River region of the Amazon.

what's available: Although neither of Westerman's albums is currently available in the United States, they were recently combined and reissued on CD in Germany as Custer Died for Your Sins/The Land Is Your Mother (Tritont, 1997).

influences:

⏮ Traditional Native American music, Buffy Sainte-Marie, Patrick Sky

⏭ Bill Miller, R. Carlos Nakai, John Trudell

Craig Harris

Randy Weston

Jazz, world-jazz

Born April 6, 1926, in Brooklyn, NY, USA. Based in USA.

Randy Weston has been a pioneer in emphasizing the African roots of jazz, something he was doing even before he lived in Africa for six years. In addition, he is a superb pianist and composer whose jazz waltz "Hi-Fly" has become a standard. Weston is greatly respected by his fellow musicians and by hard-core jazz fans, but has not received the mainstream acclaim a creator of his accomplishments would seem to merit, which has resulted in too much of his catalog lapsing from availability.

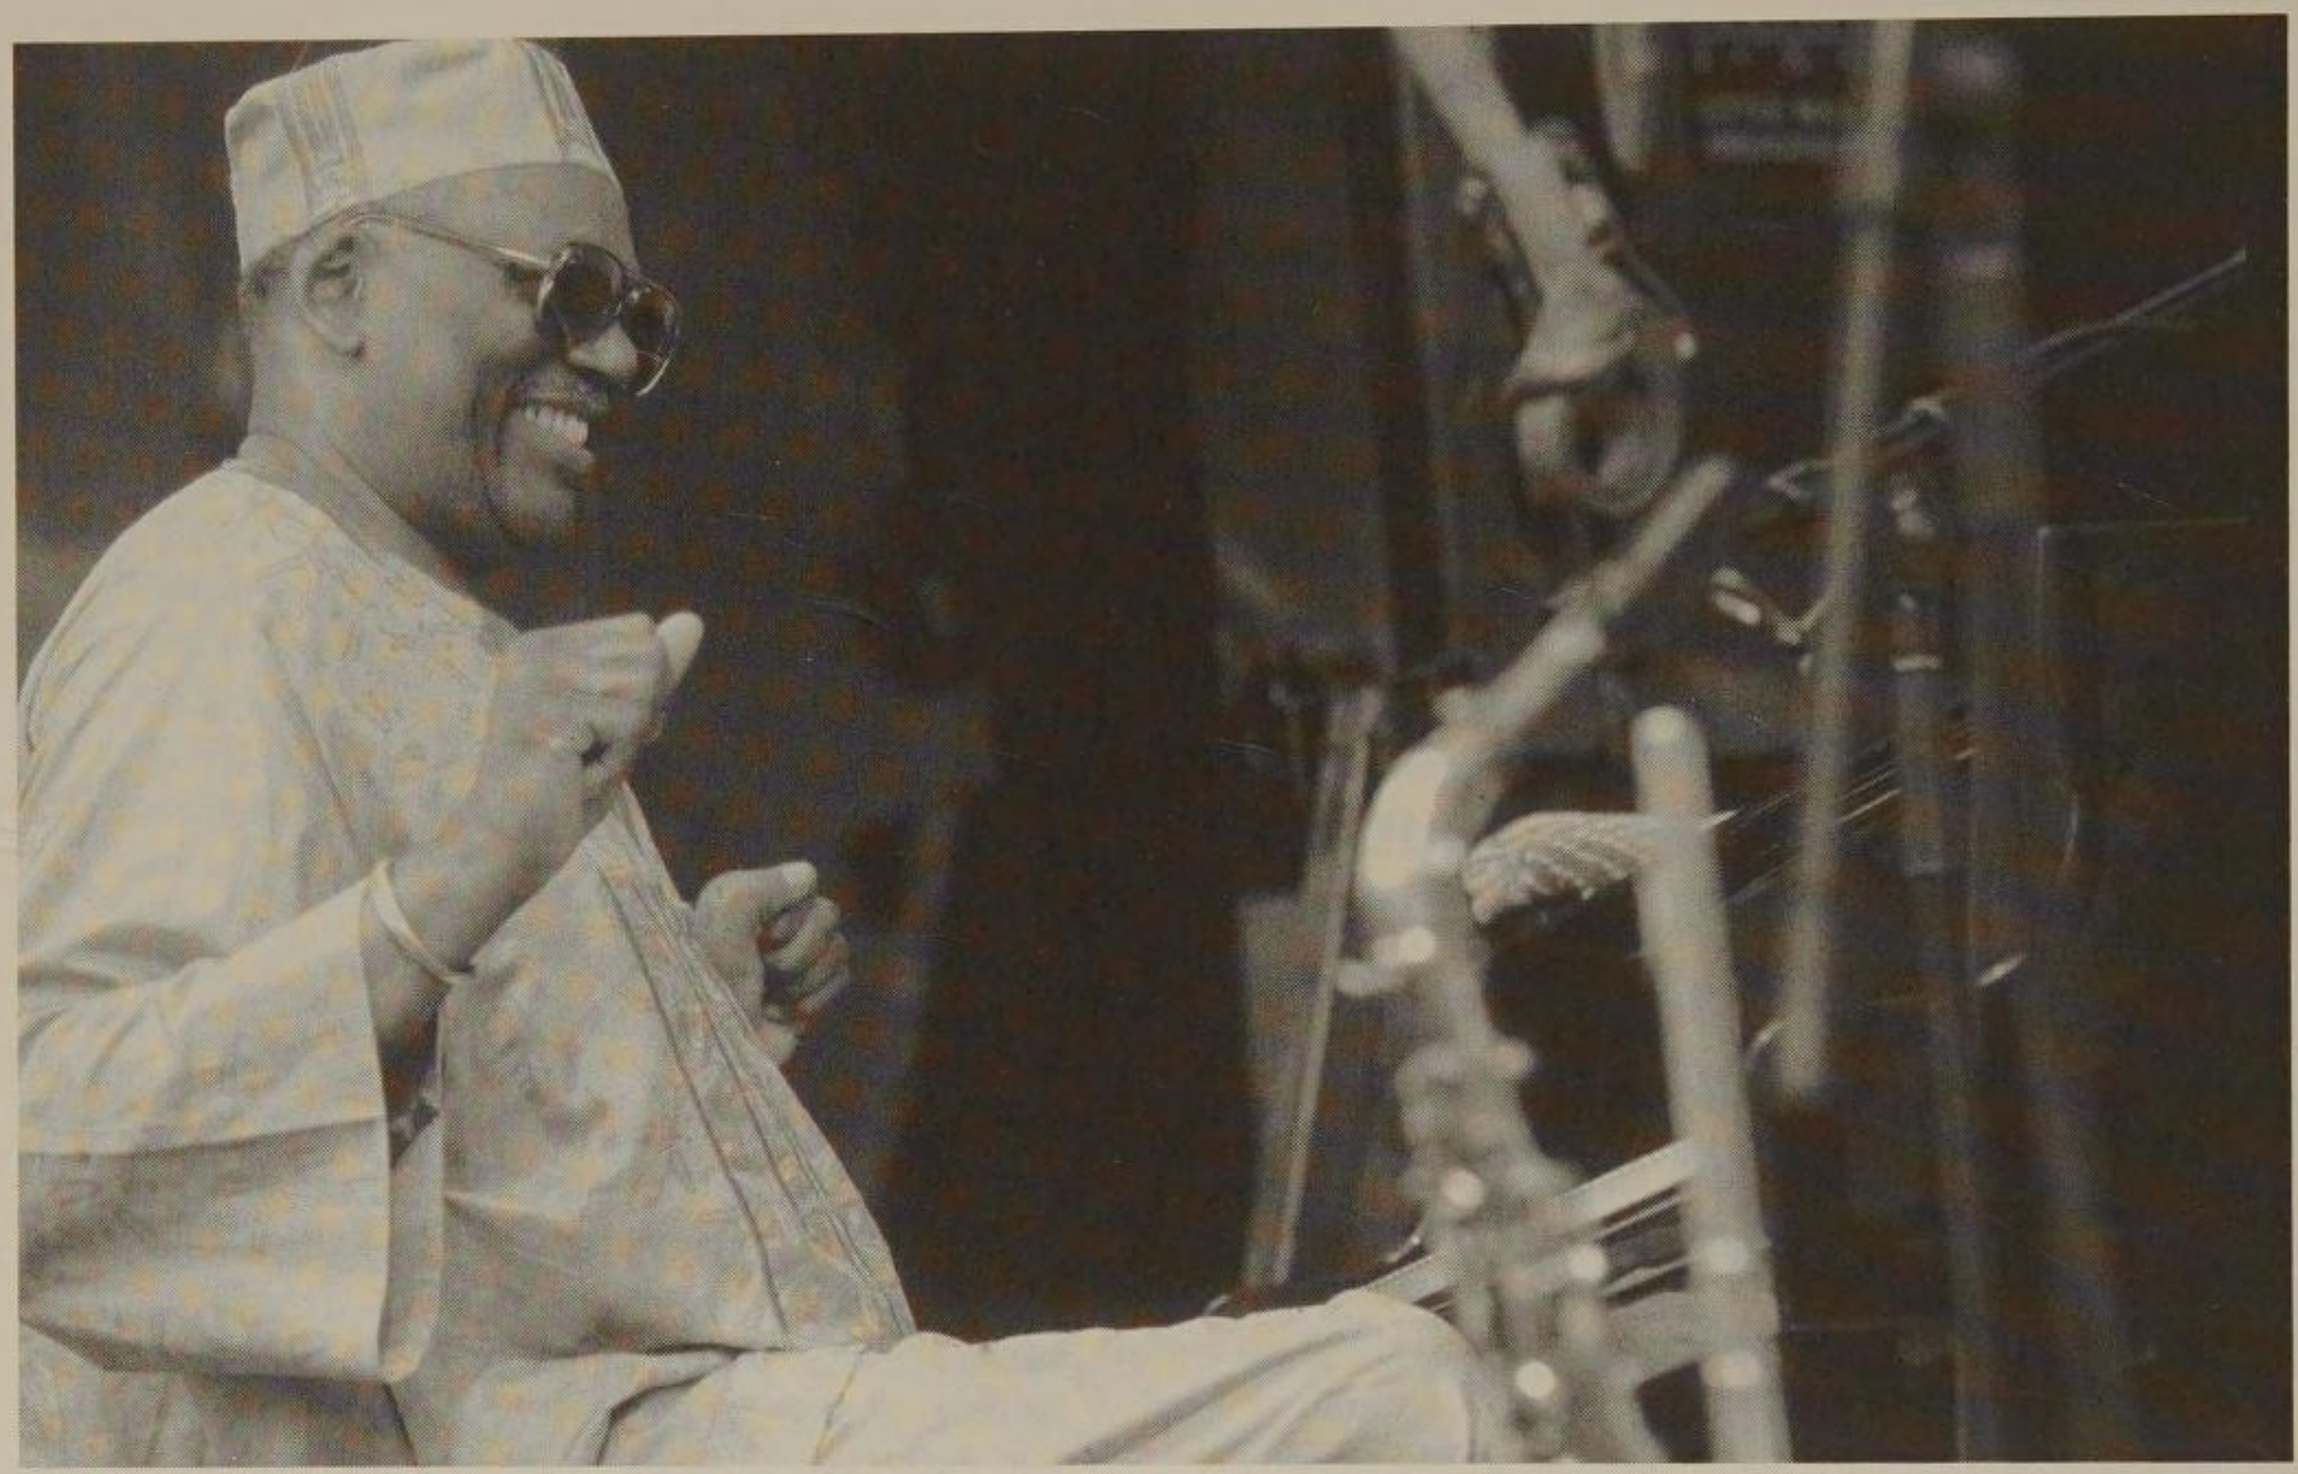
Weston grew up in Brooklyn, where his father operated a West Indian restaurant frequented by jazz musicians. Weston has often commented on the sense of community he felt growing up in that environment, and many of his sidemen, such as Cecil Payne, were childhood friends. It was Weston's father who first taught him about African history and who encouraged his piano studies. He started his professional career later than many, at age 23, and then not in a jazz context but rather as accompanist to blues singer Bull Moose Jackson. Subsequent jobs were with Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson, trumpeter Kenny Dorham, and drummer Art Blakey, and Weston became friends with Thelonious Monk, studying informally with him. In 1954 Weston became the first modern musician to record for the fledgling Riverside label, and it was his albums for that company that first gained him a nationwide reputation. "Hi-Fly," "Little Niles," and a number of other jazz waltzes became popular vehicles for other musicians, establishing him as an important writer.

In 1960 Weston recorded an influential album for Roulette, the five-movement suite Uhuru Afrika. It used large-group arrangements by trombonist Melba Liston, who had previously arranged for Weston's quintet, and with whom he has worked off and on ever since. Uhuru Afrika showcased an all-star ensemble that prominently featured the percussion of Babatunde Olatunji, Candido, and Armando Peraza, plus drummers Max Roach, Charli Persip, and G.T. Hogan, along with 13 star horn players. It was the strongest expression yet of Weston's interest in Africa. By this time he was regularly featuring drummer Big Black in his groups, emphasizing the African element even outside of such special projects. The following year Weston visited Nigeria, returning in 1963. A similar album was recorded that year, Highlife, which has been combined with Uhuru Afrika on a limited-edition CD. Weston and his sextet also spent a year touring New York City elementary schools with a History of Jazz program, giving 40 concerts that traced the history of the genre from Africa through the Caribbean, the black church, New Orleans jazz, and so on. The program was sponsored by Pepsi Cola and the players worked for union scale.

Weston toured North Africa in the beginning of 1967, sponsored by the U.S. State Department, and decided to settle there. He spent most of his time until 1973 on the continent, opening his African Rhythms Club in Tangier, Morocco. In that period he released no records, a drought broken by the atypical 1972 album Blue Moses, which found Weston pressured into playing electric piano—which he continued to do for a few tracks on his followup record, the much better Tanjah, where he once again worked with Melba Liston. He continued to release records during subsequent sojourns in France and Africa, and eventually returned to the United States in the early 1990s, beginning a fruitful association with the Verve label that has yielded Weston's most mature statements. He still works in Morocco on occasion, and recorded an album with some of the Gnawa musicians whose style has had the strongest influence on his own, as heard in the magnificent "Blue Moses" and "The Healers." Weston's small ensemble African Rhythms, which works as a sextet or septet, was his touring group for much of the 1990s.

what to buy: Recommendations will concentrate on albums that include world-music elements. The bold, questing two-CD set The Spirits of Our Ancestors ♪♪♪♪♪ (Antilles, 1992, prod. Randy Weston, Brian Bacchus, Jean-Philippe Allard) explores jazz's Africanicity, with Weston's angular piano style set jewel-like amidst Melba Liston's arrangements for an almost-big band. Guests Pharoah Sanders, on tenor sax and gaita (a high-pitched African horn), and trumpet legend Dizzy Gillespie show how expansive the parameters of Weston's vision are, but everything's grounded in loping rhythms that swing no matter how far-out the playing gets. The CD set contains a number of classic Weston tunes, from "Blue Moses," "The Healers," and "African Cookbook" to "African Village Bedford-Stuyvesant" (heard in two versions), "African Sunrise," and "A Prayer for Us All"—10 tracks total, and though there's a one-CD selection available, the entire original album is a must-own. On his most recent

bill whelan



Randy Weston

work, Khepera ♪♪♪♪♡ (Verve, 1998), Weston looks at the common links between jazz and music from Africa and China. His compositions are simple but richly layered, elegant but earthy, ritualistic but spontaneous, hypnotic but rhythmically exciting. Guest artists include trombonist Benny Powell, saxophonist Pharoah Sanders, and pipa (Chinese lute) player Min Xiao Fen.

best of the rest:

Uhura Africa/Highlife ♪♪♪♡ (Roulette, 1961/1964, Capitol, 1990)
Blues to Africa ♪♪♪♡ (Freedom, 1975)
Splendid Master Gnawa Musicians of Morocco & Randy Weston ♪♪♪ (Antilles, 1994) Marrakech in the Cool of the Evening ♪♪♪♪ (Verve, 1994)

influences:

⏮ Thelonious Monk, Art Tatum, Duke Ellington

⏭ Rodney Kendrick

see also: Yacub Addy, Babatunde Olatunji

Steve Holtje

Bill Whelan

Irish traditional and neo-traditional

Born May 22, 1950, in Limerick, Ireland. Based in Dublin and Galway, Ireland.

Composer Bill Whelan has put traditional Irish music on the worldwide map even more than the Chieftains, Clannad, and Enya have in long years of recording, and he's done it with just one album: the Grammy-winning soundtrack to the phenomenal Riverdance stage show. The keyboardist and percussionist did not spring out of nowhere; his long apprenticeship included two years with Planxty in their later period, a brief stint in a prototype Moving Hearts, extensive experience with musicals (from Gilbert & Sullivan to Andrew Lloyd Webber & Tim Rice), five years as the Yeats Festival's composer-in-residence at Dublin's famed Abbey Theatre, and arranging and production work for Paul Brady, Andy Irvine, the Dubliners, U2, Van Morrison, Kate Bush, Elvis Costello, and many more.

The seeds of Riverdance can certainly be traced back to the early '90s, when the cascading cross-rhythms of Whelan's percussive keyboards joined forces with bouzouki player Andy Irvine, piper Davy Spillane, accordionist Mairtin O'Connor, saxophonist Ken Edge, percussionist Noel Eccles, Bulgarian multi-instrumentalist Nikola Parov, and Hungarian singer Márta Sebestyén for East Wind. Though the release was credited to Irvine and Spillane only, all arrangements and production were by Whelan. The album incorporated Irvine's trademark Balkan-influenced playing with the passion and excitement of Moving Hearts (with whom both Spillane and Eccles had served many years) and the exotic sounds of Sebestyén and Parov. Spillane, O'Connor, Edge, and Parov resurfaced together alongside Whelan on the Riverdance score.

Whelan's main efforts in the years immediately prior to Riverdance were dedicated to two large-scale works: The Seville Suite, scored for full orchestra and soloists Spillane, O'Connor, and members of Milladoiro from the Celtic area of Galicia in Spain; and The Spirit of Mayo, featuring an 85-piece orchestra, Spillane, violinist Máire Breatnach, a female soprano, and over 200 singers, including the choral group Anúna. (Only part of the latter has been recorded and released so far.) One thing was clear from all of these projects: Whelan posessed big ambitions, a broad vision, a great affinity for both Irish and orchestral writing, and a deep understanding of music as a force to move people.

Riverdance took Ireland—and then the U.K. and U.S.—by storm following its explosive stage debut in Dublin in early 1995. A dance extravaganza spearheaded by two charismatic Irish-American champion dancers, Michael Flatley and Jean Butler, the show overhauled an old (and oft-ridiculed) cultural artifact with such style and panache that all but the most jaded were immediately captivated by it. Suddenly Irish dancing was all the rage among young and old alike, thanks to the show's sensuous take on this traditionally staid form. Central to the project's unparalleled and ongoing worldwide success is the all-original score by Bill Whelan. A dynamic new blend of Irish styles forms the basis for much of the instrumental music, mixed with haunting vocal pieces, and distinctive and convincing nods to Spanish and Balkan traditions. Soundtracks for two films prove that while the world waits to see what Whelan will follow Riverdance with, he has not been idle. Neither has Michael Flatley: his spin-off show Lord of the Dance may have been a box-office hit, but the mediocre and derivative score he commissioned from Irish jingle-writer Ronan Hardiman is destined to be soon forgotten.

what to buy: Riverdance ♪♪♪♪♪ (Celtic Heartbeat, 1995, prod. Bill Whelan) is a stunning snapshot of a musical culture in transition: every tune on it is original, yet within a short time half a dozen of the pieces had entered the consciousness of Irish people at home and abroad as quintessential expressions of a proud, vibrant, multi-dimensional, and thoroughly modern Irishness. With this album, more than any that preceded it, Irish music truly took the world stage, while the accompanying show helped feed a growing international hunger for all things Celtic. Riverdance rose from modest enough beginnings: its title track debuted as the interval song-and-dance number during the 1994 Eurovision Song Contest, broadcast live to a vast TV audience around the continent. The extraordinary reception that telecast met with eventually prompted thoughts of a full stage show the following year; that too was a hit on a scale undreamed of. Variety is an essential ingredient here, in the writing, playing, and presentation. From the nouveau-Irish "Countess Cathleen" and "Slip into Spring," which are distinguished by Máire Breathnach's flawless fiddle and Mairtin O'Connor's exquisite accordion, respectively, to the refreshing choral contributions from Anúna; the surprisingly convincing Spanish and Balkan pieces; Davy Spillane's heart-stopping slow piping on "Caoineadh Cu Chulainn (Cu Chulainn's Lament)"; Áine Uí Cheallaigh's sublime singing on the touching "Lift the Wings"; and "The Harvest," a high-energy tour-de-force written for Irish-American fiddling sensation Eileen Ivers when she joined the production in mid-1995—this is an album without peer.

what to buy next: The Roots of Riverdance ♪♪♪♪ (Celtic Heartbeat, 1997, prod. Bill Whelan) is in essence a Bill Whelan sampler, including tracks from all of his 1990s projects, from East Wind to Riverdance itself and a 1996 film score. Two items released here for the first time are excerpted from the otherwise-unrecorded Spirit of Mayo suite: a setting of a well-known poem in the Irish language by the blind 18th-century Mayo folk poet Raftery, sung by the incomparable Áine Uí Cheallaigh; and another fine slow air for pipes, played by Declan Masterson. The orchestral Seville Suite ♪♪♪♪ (Tara, 1992/Celtic Heartbeat, 1997, prod. Bill Whelan), subtitled "Kinsale to La Coruqa," was commissioned by the Irish government as part of Ireland's National Day at Expo '92 in Spain. (Who says good art can't be state-sponsored?) It tells the story of the flight to Spain of the defeated forces of Red Hugh O'Donnell after the disastrous Battle of Kinsale in 1601. Spillane's piping is gorgeous, especially on the slow "O'Donnell's Lament," and O'Connor's graceful and stylish accordion is the perfect counterfoil for the orchestra on "Father Conroy's Jig," which also features wonderfully mournful low whistle from Spillane. The string writing is impressionistic, assured, and powerful. Galician harp, whistles, and pipes (played by members of Milladoiro) join in for a joyous conclusion. Inevitably, an Irish work about a sea journey, featuring orchestra and pipes, invites comparison to Shaun Davey's landmark The Brendan Voyage (1980), but amazingly Whelan largely manages to steer a clear course for himself in the treacherous waters of musical influence. Included as a bonus is a new version of "Timedance," a non-LP track from Planxty during Whelan's tenure with them in 1981 (this recording sees the original band—minus Christy Moore—reunited). While lacking in cohesion, East Wind ♪♪♪♪ (Tara, 1992, prod. Bill Whelan) offers some great moments, and as a precursor to Riverdance it has earned its place in history. In one sense it's an Eastern European variation on what Moving Hearts achieved, including pieces in time signatures such as 5/16, 7/16, 11/16, and 15/16 (which are not normally attempted by Irish musicians!), all driven along with consummate skill by Whelan on keyboards, Irvine on bouzouki, and Parov on gadulka, kaval, and gaida. Two vocal pieces are included, both sung by Sebestyén (Irvine's distinctive voice is silent); despite their Macedonian and Bulgarian origins, Sebestyén's delicate ornamentations make the pieces sound almost Irish.

the rest:
Some Mother's Son ♪♪♪½ (Celtic Heartbeat, 1996)
Dancing at Lughnasa ♪♪♪½ (Sony Classical, 1998) worth searching for: The first Irish release of Riverdance (Celtic Heartbeat/K-Tel, 1995, prod. Bill Whelan)—distinguished by an orange sleeve rather than the more familiar blue version—contains fewer tracks but is notable for the inclusion of two songs (unavailable elsewhere) that Whelan wrote for the Atlanta gospel group the Deliverance Ensemble, led by Rev. James Bignon, which formed an integral part of the initial stage production. One of these songs, "Freedom," is still featured in the show.

influences:
- Seán Ó Riada, Planxty, Andy Irvine, Moving Hearts, Dónal Lunny, Davy Spillane, Shaun Davey, Jimmy Webb, Fairport Convention
- Anúna, Eileen Ivers, Ronan Hardiman, Leahy, Phil Coulter, Shaun Davey, William Jackson

see also: Anúna, Máire Breathnach, Shaun Davey, Andy Irvine, Eileen Ivers, Milladoiro, Moving Hearts, Patrick Street, Planxty, Márta Sebestyén, Áine Uí Cheallaigh

John C. Falstaff

Fredrick Whiteface

Jazz, Native American

Born 1922, in Martin, SD, USA. Based in Rapid City, SD, USA.

Like many Native people, Whiteface grew up bi-cultural, and after learning guitar as a young man played in "white" dance bands (Native bands that covered pop tunes), jazz combos, and swing bands. But his first love was always the traditional Lakota songs of his youth. For most of his life Whiteface worked non-musical day jobs and played jazz at night, while working on a system to create formal scales for Lakota music. He finally wrote some charts, based on the changes of Lakota songs, that his jazz combo could play, and went into the studio with both the combo and some traditional singers and drummers to create Mato Hota. "My approach is tri-cultural," Whiteface says. "I use the melodic structure of European music, the improvisational spirit of the African American jazz tradition, and the freedom of Lakota melodies that have been handed down for centuries. By using all three cultures, hopefully I've made something that all cultures can listen to and enjoy."

what's available: On Mata Hota ♪♪♪♪ (Natural Visions, 1996, prod. Tom Bee), Whiteface's melodic and mellow sax explorations are anchored in the Kansas City style he grew up listening to, while the traps of Chuck Childs mesh perfectly with the Lakota rhythms of the singers and drummers, making the tunes instantly accessible to non-Native ears.

influences:
- Count Basie, Duke Ellington, Harry James, 1930s swing bands

j. poet

David Wilkie

"Cowboy Celtic"

Born 1948, in San Francisco, CA, USA. Based in Turner Valley, Alberta, Canada.

It looks like a shotgun wedding at first sight: cowboy and Celtic musics reluctantly joining hands by the camp fire. But don't judge too soon. David "Mandoline Kid" Wilkie's Scottish grandmother had exposed him to Scots dancing and piping early in life at family gatherings in California, but it was cowboy culture that really grabbed him by the scruff of the neck. Following a move to Canada in the fall of 1966, Wilkie issued his first western album there in 1977, and was soon hosting a country/cowboy radio show in Calgary and playing for Ian Tyson and Diamond Joe White. He visited the U.K. in 1981 as part of the Calgary Stampede Wild West Show, and in 1985 founded the Great Western Orchestra back in Alberta. This provided, er, stable work over the next eight years, and several albums resulted.

Following a tour of Ireland in 1993, Wilkie realized that many of the rugged adventurers who took possession of western Canada and America starting in the mid-19th century were displaced Celts, and in 1994 he decided the time was right to assemble a collection of Celtic-based cowboy tunes. He rounded up members of Edmonton's esteemed McDade musical family (Terry McDade on Irish harp, Jeremiah McDade on tin whistle and pipes, Solon McDade on bass, and Shannon Johnson on fiddle), and soon unleashed the Cowboy Celtic album upon an unsuspecting world. Thus a genre was born, re-hitching the Old West and the Auld Sod and played with grace and charm. Wilkie's vision is a sort of counterpoint to bluegrass, that more eastern assimilation of Irish and Scots music into Americana.

For many of the tracks on the follow-up, Cowboy Ceilidh (the latter term a Gaelic word for communal dances), Wilkie recorded in Ireland and Scotland. He enlisted fiddler Matt Cranitch, flute and whistle player Johnny McCarthy, and harper Laoise Kelly for the Irish sessions, and accordionist Phil Cunningham and singer Arthur Cormack for the Scottish sessions. With Denise Withnell deputizing for Wilkie on vocals at times, a wider range of material was also possible.

Where can Wilkie take it from here? That remains to be seen. Has he really launched a trend? Perhaps, but hardly a stampede—and compared to his imitators thus far, Wilkie still rides tall in the saddle. Whatever lies around the bend, his gift to world music has been to eloquently remind us of a forgotten role Celtic music played for the hardy settlers out there on the western prairies all those years ago.

what's available: Cowboy Celtic ♪♪♪♪ (Red House, 1996, prod. David Wilkie), like its successor, takes the listener on a delightful romp through the plains of Alberta and Montana, with some tunes that are familiar ("Shenandoah," "The Colorado Trail," "The Gal I Left behind Me"), and others that sound it but aren't ("Custer Died a Runnin'" and "Tempting the Salmon to Come to the Fly," each doing the 19th century proud by way of their 20th-century author, Wilkie). The playing and production are both seamless. Cowboy Ceilidh ♪♪♪♪ (Red House, 1997, prod. David Wilkie) sounds just as cohesive, despite having being recorded in installments in four different countries. Great notes on the choices are provided, and the instrumentals include "The Water Is Wide" and the staple "Bridget Cruise" (by the seminal 18th-century Irish harper Turlough O'Carolan), but it's the songs that really shine here. Michael Martin Murphy contributes a wonderful vocal recorded in New Mexico on "The Cowboy's Song," whose Irish origin ("The Bard of Armagh") is better known to Americans in its "Streets of Laredo" incarnation. Two more of Wilkie's historical re-creations, "Wind in the Wire" (also covered by Randy Travis) and "The Ballad of Nate Champion," again show what a careful student of his sources—and what a fine songwriter by any measure—Wilkie is. Two of the tracks here drive home this music's surprising resonance for folks on both ends of the diaspora. While Withnell was preparing to sing Badger Clark's "Border Affair" in the studio, the Irish musicians recognized the tune as "Níl Sé Ina Lá"—and of course the band ended up recording both. The album finishes with Arthur Cormack singing the moving "Farewell to Coigach" from 1911, which is probably the only Scots Gaelic song written in Montana in this century. Thanks to Wilkie, it's back in circulation in Scotland.

influences:

- Jethro Burns, Tiny Moore, Dash Crofts, Levon Helm, Bill Monroe, Turlough O'Carolan, Phil Cunningham, Four Star Trio (Johnny McCarthy, Pat Ahern, Con Ó Drisceoil)

see also: Silly Wizard

John C. Falstaff

Nathan Williams /Nathan & the Zydeco Cha Chas

Zydeco

Born March 24, 1963, in Lafayette, LA, USA. Based in Lafayette, LA, USA.

With Buckwheat Zydeco out on the road playing to an international audience, Nathan Williams has hung back to champion the blues- and R&B-inflected zydeco sounds of both artists' native Lafayette. Williams plays the full-size piano accordion with a vigor and skill equal to all but the great Clifton Chenier. His bands are tight and tend to have stinging guitar solos as well as sweaty zydeco grooves. Although Williams's covers can range far, like Stevie Wonder's "Isn't She Lovely," his music doesn't sway off into the rock-dominated sound that appears too readily in the work of other young zydeco performers. While the diatonic-accordion, minor-riff fashion seems to dominate at the moment, Nathan remains true to the Creole blues of Chenier and the traditional Creole French culture.

what to buy: Creole Crossroads ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1995, prod. Scott Billington) works as an unintentional tribute to the great Clifton Chenier by two artists whom he greatly influenced: Nathan Williams and Michael Doucet. Chenier recorded "Black Girl" with his uncle Morris on fiddle, and Williams and Doucet provide an update. Two of the album's duet pieces echo another great Creole/Cajun pairing (that of Creole Amédée Ardoin and Cajun Dennis McGee). Elsewhere, it is a joy to hear Doucet solo over the Cha Chas' crackerjack rhythm section instead of the sometimes-porous Beausoleil. Doucet is at his bluesiest here, emulating Canray Fontenot and Bradford Gordon, the black fiddlers with whom he studied. While not the perfect example of Williams's sound, this CD is his most entertaining work.

what to buy next: It's almost impossible to capture the excitement of a live zydeco band on record, but I'm a Zydeco Hog ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997, prod. Scott Billington) comes close. You'll just have to imagine the heat of a full house and the way the band plays off the dancers and the dancers in turn inspire the musicians. Williams and the band deliver one crushing dance groove after another, from the start of "Tante Rose" to the closing notes of "Zydeco Road," only pausing for the "Grand Prix" waltz. The guitar and bass drop out for "Hey Bebe Bebe" when Nathan trades licks with "Cat Roy" Broussard's saxophone, sounding a bit like a merengue band lost in the Achafalya swamp. Mostly you get a really tight zydeco outfit in a current version of the classic Clifton Chenier sound. This record is the perfect example of the Nathan Williams experience, but lacks the diversity that will make Creole Crossroads more appealing to those less familiar with zydeco.

8 1 2 nathan williams

Nathan Williams of Nathan & the Zydeco Cha Chas

the rest:
Steady Rock ♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989)
Your Mama Don't Know ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1990) Follow Me Chicken ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1993)

influences:
◀◀ Clifton Chenier, Rockin' Sidney, Buckwheat Zydeco ▶▶ Geno Delafose, Lynn August

Jared Snyder

Willie & Lobo

New age, nuevo flamenco, polyglot world music

Formed 1991, in Puerto Vallarta, Mexico. Based in USA (Willie), and Mexico (Lobo).

Willie Royal (USA), violin; Wolfgang "Lobo" Fink (Germany), guitar.

Willie Royal and Wolfgang "Lobo" Fink create the sort of music that seems to be from everywhere and nowhere at once. That's not surprising when you consider that Royal grew up a U.S. Air Force brat, living all over the world and picking up various musical influences along the way. Fink is a German classical guitarist who studied flamenco music in France. The two met while playing in different sections of the same bar, Mama Mia's, in San Miguel de Allende, Mexico. They jammed together for nearly a decade before formally joining forces in 1991. Once playing and recording together, the duo wasted no time in becoming a new-age/world-music sensation. The diverse elements in their style include jazz, flamenco, Cajun, Celtic, and Middle Eastern influences among the new-age musing. More so than is true of most groups, the world is Willie and Lobo's oyster.

what to buy: There's a certain sameness to the duo's offerings, which isn't necessarily a bad thing since they're operating at a relatively high level. You can feel confident that any of their albums you pick up will be just fine. On that basis, Caliente ♪♪♪ (Mesa/Bluemoon, 1997, prod. Rick Braun, George Nauful) is as good a place to start as any, with the searching, Middle Eastern–flavored "Desert Sun," the flamenco guitar showcase "Lunada," and the sweet reverie "Napali." what to buy next: Between the Waters ♪♪♪ (Mesa/Bluemoon, 1995, prod. Dom Camardello, George Nauful) kicks off with the lively title track and features the jazzy "Vallarta Boogie" and the contemplative "Ola Mistica."

what to avoid: There's certainly nothing wrong with Willie and Lobo's contributions to Music from Puerto Vallarta Squeeze: The Novel by Robert James Waller ♪♪ (Mesa/Bluemoon, 1996, prod. Rick Braun, George Nauful, Robert James Waller), which is primarily a compilation of their earlier material. The involvement of hack novelist Robert James Waller spoils the fun, though. Waller, a fan of their music, wrote them into the first chapter of his novel Puerto Vallarta Squeeze, which he reads here before offering a selection of his favorite Willie and Lobo tracks. You can program Waller out, of course, but for Willie and Lobo, there's the remaining guilt by association. With friends like these, who needs critics?

the rest:
Gypsy Boogaloo ♪♪♪ (Mesa/Bluemoon, 1993)
Fandango Nights ♪♪♪ (Mesa/Bluemoon, 1994)

worth searching for: If you know anyone who vacationed in Puerto Vallarta in the early '90s, check their record collection for Willie and Lobo's self-released live album, Playing Hard (1991), which the duo sold from the stage at Mama Mia's.

influences:
◀◀ Stephane Grappelli, Jean-Luc Ponty, Paco de Lucia

Daniel Durchholz

Joemy Wilson

"Baroque Irish chamber music"

Born September 1, 1945, in Fort Worth, TX, USA. Based in CA, USA.

Joemy Wilson has been hailed by critics on both sides of the Atlantic as one of the world's foremost interpreters of the music of Turlough O'Carolan, the legendary blind 18th-century Irish harper and composer. Raised in a musical family in New Haven, Connecticut, Wilson studied piano and violin as a child and began voice lessons in high school. While attending Barnard College in New York, she received her first fretted dulcimer, using it to accompany her singing, and then she took up the hammered dulcimer in 1979. She toured for several years as the musical half of Mime Musica, a performing duo with her husband, Jon Harvey. In 1984, they created their independent label, Dargason Music. "Dargason," an English country dance tune, is the title track of Wilson's debut album, Dargason: A Dulcimer Sampler, which features fretted dulcimer and vocals. Her subsequent recordings showcase her brilliant hammered dulcimer playing, with a splendid ensemble of Celtic harp, classical guitar, flute, violin, and bodhrán (Celtic frame drum). As one of the pioneers of the dulcimer renaissance and the Celtic revival of the early 1980s, Wilson calls her style "Baroque Irish chamber music." Irish critic John Paddy Browne writes, "Now, at last, we have a new interpreter who has converted the great man's exquisite music to the hammered dulcimer and restored it to its natural classical setting." In addition to four Celtic titles, Wilson has recorded three Christmas albums, a collection of Beatles tunes, and a collection for children—Dulcimer Lullabies was showcased on the ABC special In a New Light starring Arsenio Hall and Paula Abdul.

what to buy: Carolan's Cup ♪♪♪♪ (Dargason Music, 1984, prod. Joemy Wilson, Scott Fraser) is the first in a series of Celtic recordings and exclusively features the works of Turlough O'Carolan, from the well-known "Sheebeg and Sheemore" to the less-familiar "Number 171," which is from a collection of numbered O'Carolan tunes without titles. The Carolan Consort of musicians that accompanies Wilson's hammered and fretted dulcimer includes Anisa Angarola (guitar), Valarie King (flute, piccolo, alto flute, bass flute), Miamon Miller (violin), and Sylvia Woods (Celtic harp). Carolan's Cottage ♪♪♪♪ (Dargason Music, 1986, prod. Joemy Wilson, Scott Fraser) is Wilson's second recording devoted to the music of O'Carolan and includes a beautiful version of "Morgan Megan." Celtic Dreams ♪♪♪♪ (Dargason Music, 1989, prod. Joemy Wilson, Scott Fraser) is the third Wilson recording devoted to O'Carolan, but also includes other tunes from Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, such as "Coilsfield House." Celtic Treasures ♪♪♪♪ (Dargason Music, 1994, prod. Joemy Wilson, Scott Fraser) includes four O'Carolan pieces as well as works by two other Irish harpers, Cornelius Lyons and Rory Dall O'Cahan. The assortment of jigs, reels, airs, and a hornpipe makes this recording a treasure-chest of Celtic delights. The liner notes on each collection are exceptionally well presented, with the complete historical background of every tune.

what to buy next: Beatles on Hammered Dulcimer ♪♪♪½ (Dargason Music, 1989, prod. Joemy Wilson, Scott Fraser) is a fun collection of 12 Lennon-McCartney masterpieces played on the hammered dulcimer as instrumentals. Wilson is accompanied by the same talented musicians as in her Celtic recordings. Dulcimer Lullabies ♪♪♪½ (Dargason Music, 1991, prod. Joemy Wilson, Scott Fraser) is subtitled "Quiet-time Music for Children on Hammered Dulcimer." These lullabies come from Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Holland, Germany, and the U.S., and include a lovely Wilson original, "Naya's Song." All of the above recordings are available from Dargason Music, P.O. Box 189, Burbank, CA 91503 or through e-mail at dargason@earthlink.net. (Some of Wilson's and the label's offerings are also reviewed in this book's Compilations section.)

the rest:
Gifts ♪♪♪ (Dargason Music, 1985)
Gifts, Volume II ♪♪♪ (Dargason Music, 1987) Gifts III ♪♪♪ (Dargason Music, 1990)

worth searching for: Joemy Wilson's debut recording, Dargason: A Dulcimer Sampler ♪♪♪ (Back Lot Recordings, 1982/Dargason Music, 1986, prod. Joemy Wilson, Scott Fraser), a cassette-only release, features her fretted dulcimer skills and also includes some nice vocals, which are not heard on any of her subsequent recordings.

influences:
- The Chieftains, Derek Bell, Seán Ó Riada, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart
- Madeline MacNeil, Carrie Crompton

Heidi Cerrigione

Wimme

Late 20th-century joik

Born Wimme Saari, 1959, in Finland. Based in Finland.

The yoik, or joik, has nothing to do with eggs or Brooklynites. It's a singing style of the Saami people (once known as Laplanders), and can be found in their cultures all across the north of Scandinavia. Of the three distinct joiking dialects, Wimme was raised in the North Sami Luohti tradition, probably the most widely known; it's a form that uses a pentatonic scale (no halftones), and the joik centers on a specific subject. However, Wimme is far from traditional in his approach to joiking, using accompaniment that often includes samples, loops, and a band. His mother was from a joiking family, but by Wimme's days those links to the past had been broken. In fact, it wasn't until 1986, while working at the Finnish Broadcasting Company, that Wimme discovered tapes of his uncle joiking, and from them learned the older vocal techniques. These he incorporated into his music—though that music was far more impressionistic than its models, featuring lyrics about fog or even the Milky Way. Essentially, Wimme gave new life to the tradition by putting it in a new context. Many were impressed by what he was doing, including producer Hector Zazou, with whom he recorded for the collection From the Cold Seas. In 1995 Wimme released his own eponymous debut, accompanied by musicians from the well-known Finnish band Rinneradio. This debut was voted Folk Music Album of the Year in his home country, and the following year Wimme's muse took him further afield. He'd recorded a joik titled "Texas," and suddenly found himself invited to appear at the South by Southwest festival in Austin—which much impressed his bandmates, who urged him to record another called "Hawaii." "Texas," along with other tracks by Wimme and Rinneradio, appeared on a subsequent record, File Under: Finnish Ambient Techno Chant. Wimme became a fixture on the Scandinavian Festival scene, often sitting in with Hedningarna, and in early 1999 he released another new album to instant acclaim.

what to buy: Wimme ♪♪♪♪♪ (NorthSide, 1997, prod. Tapani Rinne) is as atmospheric and soaring as anything in the new-age bins, but with the added bonus of real substance. The human voice—at least Wimme's voice—can evoke fog, thunder, and boiling springs. What more can you ask from one man? On the electrifying Gierran ♪♪♪♪♪ (NorthSide, 1999), Wimme's voice aims for the stratosphere while his and Rinneradio's music heads in multiple stylistic directions but never loses sight of its Saami home base. From mesmerizing solo tracks that will remind Stateside ears of Native American chants, to full-band flirtations with art-rock and avant-jazz, each one of this sometimes sublime, sometimes whimsical album's experiments pays off.

the rest:
File Under: Finnish Ambient Techno Chant ♪♪♪♪ (Catalyst/BMG, 1997)

influences:
The Finnish joiking tradition

see also: Hedningarna

Chris Nickson

Paul Winter

Jazz, new age, world music

Born Paul Theodore Winter Jr., August 31, 1939, in Altoona, PA, USA. Based in Litchfield, CT, USA.

Soprano saxophonist Paul Winter is one of the pioneers of world music. In addition to combining elements of African, Asian, Latin, and Russian music with American jazz, Winter was one of the first to incorporate the sounds of nature and wildlife into his compositions. Winter, who studied saxophone from the age of nine, was initially rooted in the jazz tradition. After performing with school-age bands including the Little German Band and the Silver Liners, he went on his first tour at the age of 17. Although he majored in English composition at Northwestern University in Chicago, he frequented the city's jazz clubs. With the Paul Winter Sextet, he won the Intercollegiate Jazz Festival competition in 1961 and, at the invitation of Jacqueline Kennedy, became the first jazz musician to perform at the White House. Signed by John Hammond to Columbia Records, Winter and the sextet recorded a self-titled debut album the same year. A 23-country cultural exchange tour of Latin America, sponsored by the U.S. State Department in 1962, inspired Winter to add the bossa nova of Brazil to his musical vision. The music so captivated him that he remained in the Ipanema section of Rio for nearly a year recording with Brazilian musicians. In 1967, Winter formed the Paul Winter Consort, naming the group in the manner of the house bands of the Elizabethan Theater. Their first studio album, Icarus, was released in 1970 and produced by former Beatles mentor George Martin. Shortly afterwards, original members Ralph Towner, Paul McCandless, Colin Wollcott, and David Darling left to start the experimental acoustic jazz band Oregon.

The sounds of nature fascinated Winter, who first heard the songs of humpback whales in 1968. After hosting a whale-watching/music-making workshop in Baja, California, in 1977, Winter and the Consort combined the sounds of whales, wolves, and birds with their acoustic improvisations on their next album, Common Ground. In 1980, Winter and the group became artists-in-residence at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, the world's largest Gothic cathedral, in New York, and launched their own record label, Living Music. While most of their albums have been recorded in a studio that Winter built in a barn, the Paul Winter Consort has recorded in such locales as the cathedral, the General Assembly of the United Nations, and the Grand Canyon. They have earned numerous awards for their albums—in 1983 Sun Singer was named "Best Jazz Album" by the National Association of Independent Record Distributors, and the Consort received their first Grammys back-to-back, for Spanish Angel in 1994 and for Prayer for the Wild Things the following year. Winter has collaborated with a variety of artists. He toured the United States with Russian poet Yevgeny Yevtushenko in 1985, and joined with a Russian chorus, the Dmitri Pokrovsky Ensemble, to record Earthbeat three years later—each groundbreaking artistic achievements and risky social statements during the Cold War. Winter collaborated with marine biologist Roger Payne and actor Leonard Nimoy to record an album of humpback whale songs, Whales Alive!, in 1986. He provided musical accompaniment for beat poet Gary Snyder on the 1991 album Turtle Island, and produced Pete Seeger's Pete, which received the "Best Traditional Folk Album" Grammy in 1996. His own most recent albums are squarely in the world-music canon: the self-explanatory Brazilian Days and Celtic Solstice.

what to buy: Producer George Martin called Icarus ♪♪♪♪♪ (Epic, 1970, prod. George Martin), the first studio album by the Paul Winter Consort, "the best album I've ever been associated with." Considering that Martin produced nearly all the albums of the Beatles, the remark carried much importance. With Winter's soprano sax accompanied by the musicians who went on to form the innovative jazz band Oregon, the album is a masterpiece that serves as a bridge between small-combo jazz and world music. Common Ground ♪♪♪♪½ (A&M, 1977, prod. Paul Winter) was the first album to blend musical influences from around the globe with the natural sounds of humpback whales, wolves, and eagles. Brazilian Days ♪♪♪♪½ (BMG/Living Music, 1998) is a collaboration with Oscar Castro-Neves, the Brazilian guitarist who first inspired Winter's interest in the bossa nova nearly 40 years before. Celtic Solstice ♪♪♪♪♪ (BMG/Windham Hill, 1999) draws from the stellar Celtic musicians who have played at Winter's annual Winter Solstice Celebration at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. Many of the album's tracks were recorded in the cathedral, and it's a cornucopia for Celtic fans, including appearances by uilleann piper Davy Spillane, singer Karan Casey from Solas, tin whistle player and flutist Joanie Madden from Cherish the Ladies, and fiddler Eileen Ivers of Riverdance fame, not to mention a full Irish, African, and South American percussion ensemble.

the rest:
Road: 1968–1970 ♪♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1971)
Wintersong ♪♪♪♪ (Living Music, 1979)
Callings ♪♪♪♪ (Living Music, 1980)
Missa Gaia/Earth Mass ♪♪♪½ (Living Music, 1982)
Sun Singer ♪♪♪♪ (Living Music, 1983)
Concert for the Earth ♪♪♪♪ (Living Music, 1985)
Canyon ♪♪♪½ (Living Music, 1985)
Whales Alive! ♪♪♪ (Living Music, 1987)
Canyon Lullaby ♪♪♪½ (Living Music, 1988)
Wolf Eyes ♪♪♪♪ (Living Music, 1988)
Earthbeat ♪♪♪½ (Living Music, 1988)
Retrospective ♪♪♪ (Living Music, 1989)
Earth: Voices of a Planet ♪♪♪ (Living Music, 1990)
(With Gary Snyder) Turtle Island ♪♪♪ (Living Music, 1991)
Anthems ♪♪♪½ (Living Music, 1992)
Spanish Angel ♪♪♪♪ (Living Music, 1994)
Prayer for the Wild Things ♪♪♪♪ (Living Music, 1995)

influences:
- American jazz, African, Asian, Latin, and Russian music, whales, wolves, and birds
- Oregon, Will Ackerman, Shadowfax

see also: Cherish the Ladies, Eileen Ivers, Joanie Madden, Solas

Craig Harris

Jah Wobble

See: Abdel Ali Slimani

Wolfstone

Celtic rock

Formed 1988, in Scotland. Disbanded 1997.

Duncan Chisholm, electric fiddle; Ivan Drever, vocals, acoustic guitar; Stuart Eaglesham, acoustic and electric guitars, vocals; Struan Eaglesham, keyboards; Mop Youngson, drums; Wayne MacKenzie, bass; Stevie Saint, bagpipes, whistles. (All members are from Scotland.)

Sounding like a collision between a traditional dance band and a grungy rock outfit, Wolfstone merged the old with the new, the acoustic with the electric, and in so doing breathed new life into old tunes, energized their fans, and made traditional music accessible to rock and pop audiences. The seven members of Wolfstone were from the highlands of Scotland, but eschewed the commonly romanticized version of their homeland, presenting a more realistic picture of the everyday joys and struggles of a resilient and musically rich people. Wolfstone began during the late '80s when Duncan Chisholm and some friends formed a professional band to play music for ceilidhs (public dances). The potent combination of fiddle, bagpipes, and a rock rhythm section played well to an audience wanting more from traditional music. The original Wolfstone, including Struan Eaglesham on keyboards and brother Stuart Eaglesham on guitar, subsequently welcomed accomplished guitarist and songwriter Ivan Drever into the fledgling group. Wolfstone's first album, Unleashed, released on Iona Records in Scotland, quickly became the label's biggest seller, earning the band a Silver Disc Award from the Scottish Music Industry Association. With the release of The Chase in 1992, Wolfstone's touring schedule expanded to include Europe and North America. Their success at the international Tonder Festival in Denmark made them the only band ever invited to perform for three consecutive years. The excitement generated at Wolfstone concerts was almost legendary; unfortunately, due to a combination of management problems and record-company squabbles, the band called it quits at the end of 1997.

what to buy: The Chase ♪♪♪♪♪ (Iona, 1992/Green Linnet, 1994, prod. Phil Cunningham), the group's groundbreaking second album, garnered rave reviews from critics all over the world. "Tinnie Run," opening with an in-your-face electric guitar riff and segueing into a set of pumped-up traditional tunes, perhaps best exemplifies the Wolfstone sound. The Chase also includes one of the band's most-requested songs, "The Prophet." Stuart Eaglesham rocks passionately as he sings of a mysterious sage of Scottish legend. "The Appropriate Dipstick" is a showcase for guest piper Dougie Pincock. The album ends with "Cannot Lay Me Down," a set that ranges from the title song, written and sung by Drever, to the gorgeous finale "Lady of Ardross," written by Eaglesham.

what to buy next: Guided by Chris Harley, a producer for bands like Runrig, The Half Tail ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1996, prod. Chris Harley) shows a more rocked-up and polished Wolfstone, with more emphasis on the rhythm section. Included is the standout "Bonnie Ship the Diamond," which exquisitely combines a well-known traditional whaling song with "The Last Leviathan," a newer song from the dying whale's point of view. The track begins with an ethereal wash of synthesizer and percussion followed by the exuberant piping of Stevie Saint. Other notable numbers are "Gillies," one more pipe-infused stomper, and "Glenglass," a bit more laid-back mix of keyboards and fiddle. From the opening drum roll to the final pipe drone, Year of the Dog ♪♪♪♪ (Green Linnet, 1994, prod. Phil Cunningham) kicks with frenetic fiddling, sparkling piano, and spirited flutes, whistles, and pipes, paired with a grungier background than the two albums that preceded it. Year of the Dog broke the band out of their earlier, more acoustic mode while still appealing to Celtophiles; hard-core traditionalists could be found dancing along with rock fans to the tunes from this album. The original numbers range from pithy social and political commentary to tender love songs. Producer Phil Cunningham once again contributes several tunes and places his well-regarded sonic stamp on the project.

what to avoid: Wolfstone I and Wolfstone II are very early versions of the band that even they would rather not have in circulation. The owner of the master tapes began rereleasing them when Wolfstone started getting worldwide attention.

the rest:
Unleashed ♪♪♪♪ (Iona, 1991/Green Linnet, 1992)
Burning Horizons EP ♪♪♪½ (Iona, 1993)
Pick of the Litter ♪♪♪½ (Green Linnet, 1997)
This Strange Place (Green Linnet, 1998)

worth searching for: The 68-minute video Wolfstone: Captured Alive Video (Grampian Television/Wolfstone Partnership, 1992), shot at a concert in Aberdeen, Scotland, is a good look at the band's live shows and gives a sense of their storied energy.

influences:
◀◀ Silly Wizard, Battlefield Band, Runrig, Bothy Band, Planxty ▶▶ Burach, Paperboys, Rock Salt and Nails, Rawlins Cross

see also: Phil Cunningham, Runrig

Denise Sofranko

Wolga Balalaika Ensemble

Russian folk music

Formed in Koblenz, Germany. Based in Koblenz, Germany.

Mischa Taschenkow, alto balalaika, vocals; Nicolai Malinow, bass balalaika, vocals; Ivan Nesterow, prime (lead) balalaika, vocals. (All members are from Russia.)

This trio of Russians, based in Germany, play Russian folk music with plenty of fire and brimstone, providing the perfect soundtrack for an evening of vodka sipping and borscht-fueled joviality.

what to buy: In the Land of the Tsarevitsch ♪♪♪♪½ (ARC England, 1992, prod. Wolga) is set up like a typical evening's revels; each tune is faster, crazier, and more energetic than the last. Like the blues, Russian music displays a deeply plaintive quality, even when the band is playing at a breakneck pace. This set includes "Padmoskownyije Wjetschera," which Kenny Ball "borrowed" for his hit "Midnight in Moscow."

what to buy next: Kalinka ♪♪♪♪½ (ARC England, 1998, prod. Wolga) is another energetic outing from these balalaika virtuosos. Includes some incendiary accordion playing by an uncredited cohort.

the rest:
Songs from the Taiga ♪♪♪♪½ (ARC England, 1996)

influences:
◀◀ Theodore Bikel, Dmitri Pokrovsky Ensemble

j. poet

Stevie Wonder

Universal pop synthesis

Born Steveland Morris, May 13, 1950, in Saginaw, MI, USA. Based in USA.

Stevie Wonder's Secret Life of Plants is part of the secret history of world music. Released the same year as David Bowie and Brian Eno's proto-worldbeat album Lodger—and surely no less financially successful at the time—Plants cultivated the same global grab-bag approach that bloomed into some of the most familiar excesses and singular accomplishments of later world-music, and was no doubt equally influential on future waves of culture-crossing artists. Wonder had dabbled in international styles before—and has since—but this commercially obscure album was the one on which he most intensively pursued the we-are-the-world vibe with which, interestingly, he became more associated in the popular imagination somewhat later.

what to buy: For purposes of this book, you want to start with the recording most people pass up. Stevie Wonder's Journey through the Secret Life of Plants ♪♪♪♪ (Tamla/Motown, 1979, prod. Stevie Wonder), partially begun as the soundtrack to an instantly forgotten environmentalist documentary, was Wonder's paean to all of Mother Earth's species and cultures . . . and styles, including not only the attempts at Japanese, Indian, and West African forms that land it in the world-music column, but also a sometimes-kitschy, often-visionary spectrum of jazz, scat, ambient, lounge piano, church organ, muzak ragtime, baroque funk, neo-classical, karaoke medley, proto-sampling, and prophetically early techno, not to mention some of his most overlooked smooth-soul balladry. Wonder duets with a Japanese children's choir on "Ai No Sono," and performs live in Africa (an interesting choice for a concept album) on "A Seed's a Star and Tree Medley." He doesn't even come close to raga on "Voyage to India" (though for better or worse he anticipates new-age mall music more clearly than Eno ever did), but he nails a West African kora-and-talking-drum trad-pop sound on "Kesse Ye Lolo De Ye"; there's been nothing like it on any mainstream American album since.

what to buy next: Justly famed as a stylistic omnivore, Wonder has, throughout the mature phase of his career, touched on world-music textures as regularly as on those of any other genre. "Don't You Worry 'Bout a Thing" from Innervisions ♪♪♪♪♪ (Tamla/Motown, 1973, prod. Stevie Wonder) has become a salsa standard, and the less-known "Bird of Beauty" from Fulfillingness' First Finale ♪♪♪♪♪ (Tamla/Motown, 1974, prod. Stevie Wonder) merits a similar honorary place in the annals of MPB (Brazilian Popular Music). Wonder has dabbled more or less convincingly in reggae and associated forms over the years: "Master Blaster (Jammin')" from Hotter Than July ♪♪♪♪ (Motown, 1980, prod. Stevie Wonder) and the Characters ♪♪♪♪ (Motown, 1987, prod. Stevie Wonder) album's "You Will Know" in the "more" category; Fulfillingness's "Boogie On, Reggae Woman" and "Tomorrow Robins Will Sing" from Conversation Peace ♪♪♪ (Motown, 1985, prod. Stevie Wonder) in the "less" category. On Songs in the Key of Life ♪♪♪♪♪ (Tamla/Motown, 1976, prod. Stevie Wonder) Wonder and a small army give "Another Star" a memorable Latin jazz feel, while all by himself he achieves an interesting synth-flamenco sound on "Ngiculela/Es Una Historia/I Am Singing" (delivered in Zulu, Spanish, and English). Also on the hybrid side, Wonder offers intriguingly electronicized takes on Caribbean rhythm and African polyrhythm, respectively, with "Chemical Love" from Jungle Fever ♪♪♪♪♪ (Motown, 1991, prod. Stevie Wonder) and "It's Wrong" from In Square Circle ♪♪♪♪ (Motown, 1985, prod. Stevie Wonder)—to say nothing of Fever's hit title track, assisted by African drum master Babatunde Olatunji.

influences:

⏮ Marvin Gaye, Duke Ellington, Babatunde Olatunji, Bob Marley, Woody Guthrie

⏭ Boyz II Men, Sting, every soul and pop artist since the beginning of the 1970s

Adam McGovern

Gary Wright

Rock, African/Brazilian worldbeat

Born April 26, 1943, in Creskill, NJ, USA. Based in California, USA.

Best known for his '70s smash hits "Dream Weaver" and "Love Is Alive," Gary Wright has spent three decades exploring the world of music and searching for his niche. Wright's distinctive vocal style and authoritative use of keyboards and synthesizers distinguish his music from the morass of '70s flashes-in-the-pan. Wright began his career with a tour of Germany as a singer/songwriter, and soon joined the rock band Spooky-tooth. He has collaborated with the likes of George Harrison, Eric Clapton, Phil Collins, Jeff Lynne, and Ringo Starr, and has worked on a variety of movie scores. His all-keyboard album Dream Weaver was considered groundbreaking for the pop genre at the time. Wright discovered the lure of Brazilian percussion on a visit to that country, coming home with a recording of several of the best percussionists in the area. Years later, while working with Sayuka from South Africa, he heard the call of African vocal music. These influences eventually combined to drastically change the direction of Wright's own work. The result, a mix of mainstream pop with tribal rhythms and chants, was released in 1995 as First Signs of Life —though at presstime there were some doubts as to the second sign, as Wright's upcoming Human Love album was reported to be a return to his pre-worldbeat style.

what to buy: Wright's one world-music album is First Signs of Life ♪♪♪ (Triloka Records, 1995, prod. Franz Pusch, Gary Wright). Wright explores a fusion of pop/rock with African vocals and Brazilian rhythms, creating a fascinating blend of driving beat, rich but simple vocals, and modern keyboards. This recording evokes a wonderful tribal feeling with a modern edge. Nigerian Singer Ayo Adeyeni and Brazilian guitarist Ricardo Silviera add sparkle, pizzazz, and authenticity.

what to buy next: Considered a classic by many, Dream Weaver ♪♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1975, prod. Gary Wright) contains the hits "Dream Weaver" and "Love Is Alive," which are its two standouts. Wright's pioneering keyboard style is also well showcased on Headin' Home ♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1979, prod. Gary Wright) and Touch and Gone ♪♪ (Warner Bros., 1977, prod. Gary Wright).

influences:

⏮ Traffic, George Harrison, Paul Simon

Jo Hughey Morrison

Wu Man

Chinese classical and fusion

Born 1963, in Hangzhou, China. Based in Boston, MA, USA.

Wu Man, one of the most outstanding masters of the pipa (a four-stringed Chinese lute), is equally comfortable playing traditional Chinese music, more contemporary sounds, and even unprecedented stylistic fusions. She began her professional training at the age of nine and in 1977 won first place in the national entrance exam to the Central Conservatory of Music in Beijing. There she studied the Pudong school of playing under a number of pipa masters. After winning the First National Academic Competition for Chinese Instruments and earning China's first master's degree in the pipa, she took her place among an exciting new generation of Chinese composers, though, as much as any of them, she found her expression restrained by the ruling regime. Moving to the U.S. in the '80s, she joined Music from China, a New York ensemble formed in that decade to promote both the traditional and modern work of her people. In more than 300 concert appearances around the world, she has collaborated with the Kronos Quartet, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Los Angeles Philharmonic New Music Group, the New York New Music Consort, the Pittsburgh New Music Ensemble, and the Vienna Radio Symphonic Orchestra. A recent invitation to play at the White House with famed cellist Yo-Yo Ma underscored her success, while by no means culminating her eclectic and ambitious musical quest.

Wu Man

what to buy: For a brilliant overview of traditional and contemporary Chinese music at its finest, check out Wu Man's Western recording debut, Chinese Music for the Pipa ♪♪♪♪ (Nimbus, 1993), a virtuosic solo performance of seven compositions that highlight her extraordinarily emotive playing. From lively folk suites and plaintive ballads to modern works by composers like Chen Yi, Wu Man handles each song with equal aplomb, creating a wonderful showcase for the myriad sounds one can create with ten fingers and four strings. Chinese Traditional & Contemporary Music ♪♪♪♪½ (Nimbus, 1996) is even better; a more mature effort that places Wu Man in a chamber-music setting alongside Liu Qi-Chao on flute, Yang Yi on plucked zither, and Tien-Juo Wang on bowed violin. The quartet works exceptionally well together on songs like "Niao Tou Lin (Birds in the Forest)" and "Xiyang Xiaogu (Flute & Drum at Sunset)," crafting lush, exotic melodies packed with vivid imagery evoking playful wildlife and gorgeous Eastern landscapes. A captivatingly accessible introduction to the music of China.

what to buy next: Far more unusual is Wu Man's first album with the Kronos Quartet, Ghost Opera ♪♪♪♪ (Nonesuch, 1997, prod. Judith Sherman), a fascinatingly inventive conceptual piece composed by Tan Dun. Pipas, violins, one-stringed lutes, and cellos merge with drums, cymbals, stones, gongs, bells, and haunting, spectral vocals to tell the story of a little girl (voiced by Wu Man) who has lost her parents. The tradition of ghost opera is thousands of years old, but in keeping with its dominant theme of dialogue between past and future, spirit and nature, Tan Dun and the quintet of musicians have fashioned a timeless treasure, poignant across languages and beyond words.

the rest:
(With Liu Sola) Blues in the East ♪♪♪½ (Axiom, 1994)
(With Liu Sola) China Collage ♪♪♪½ (Avant, 1996)
(With Martin Simpson) Music for the Motherless Child ♪♪♪♪ (Water Lily Acoustics, 1997)

worth searching for: In addition to recording a number of albums available only in China, Wu Man also composed the scores for two Ang Lee films, 1993's The Wedding Banquet and 1994's Eat Drink Man Woman. Both soundtrack albums are now long out-of-print but are worth snapping up if you can track them down. You also won't regret seeking out Wu Man's performances on other artists' albums, including T.A.Z. ♪♪♪♪ (Axiom, 1994) with Hakim Bey, Carry the Day ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1995) with Henry Threadgill, and Early Music ♪♪♪♪ (Nonesuch, 1997) with the Kronos Quartet.

influences:
Lin Shicheng, Liu Dehai, Chen Zemin, Kuang Yuzhong Kronos Quartet, Liu Sola

see also: Kronos Quartet, Bill Laswell, Liu Sola

Bret Love

X

Stavros Xarhakos & Nicos Gatsos

Rembetiko

Formed 1964, in Athens, Greece. Based in Athens, Greece.

Stavros Xarhakos; Nicos Gatsos. (Both artists are from Greece.)

Rembetiko is the outlaw music of Greece. It first flourished in the 1930s when sailors returned to their homeland with tales of drinking, exotic women, and opium dens. The lyrical themes came to include political oppression during the Greek civil war in the 1950s, and again mirrored the country's angst during a dictatorship in the 1970s. For most of its history rembetiko had remained underground due to censorship, but with the fall of the dictatorship it was rediscovered by some of the most prominent Greek songwriters and composers, elevating this once-taboo form into one of the most popular Greek genres today. Along with respected composer Mikis Theodorakis, the songwriting team of Stavros Xarhakos and Nicos Gatsos not only rediscovered rembetiko, but redefined it. Xarhakos and Gatsos are widely credited with bringing rembetiko to Greek cinema. Their beautiful arrangements and dramatic music made them the perfect team for the medium, and they have written songs for the most beloved movie stars of Greece, including Aliki Vouyouklaki. And along with the music of rembetiko comes the dances. The hasapiko or Greek sailor dance and the tsefeli or belly-dance became integral parts of Greek cinema, thanks to the music of Xarhakos and Gatsos. Their contributions expanded their country's and the world's perception of one of Greece's richest cultural offerings, and made them, now and forever, the Rodgers and Hammerstein of Greece.

what to buy: Ta Rembetika ♪♪♪♪♪ (CBS, 1983, prod. G. Kostandopoulo) is Xarhakos and Gatsos's seminal album. Written for the movie of same name by Kostas Ferri, the music follows the lives of main characters Marika Nikou and Vassilis Titsanis, reflecting on estrangement and redemption. With memorable choruses and the primal wailing of singer Xorodia, this album reflects the turmoil of post-war Greece. The later flourishing of rembetiko was largely due to this enormously successful soundtrack. Following its success, Xarhakos and Gatsos released Hrises Epitihies ♪♪♪♪½ (EMI Minos), a collection of some of the most significant rembetiko songs released from 1962 to 1974. The album is filled with Xarhakos's trademark style of bouzouki playing and Gatsos's keen lyrics.

what to buy next: While the 1970s and '80s were the most important years of Xarhakos and Gatsos's career, they still continue to compose and arrange albums of a high caliber. 6+6 ♪♪♪♪ (Xenophone Records, 1996) and Spiti Mou, Spitaki Mou ♪♪♪♪½ (Xenophone Records) reaffirm that rembetiko music has taken a central place in the heart and soul of Greece. Nana Mouskouri's appearances on the latter collection are not to be missed. That disc also marks a shift in lyrics from broad political and social matters to more personal ones, concerning the family life, which is a vital part of Greek culture.

worth searching for: Since Xarhakos and Gatsos have done so much of their work as the compositional masterminds behind other artists, the discography of their releases on their own is minuscule in comparison. Nonetheless there have been many reissues of these recordings, though most of them are hard to find in America. Labels such as EMI Minos, CBS, and Mercury will assure clarity of sound, and all three labels have done a good job of selecting vital songs from the composers' repertoire. If you enjoy the kind of music you hear on any of the releases mentioned above, you'd like to check out the various-artists Greek import double CD Flying with Greek Music Vol. 1 & 2: The Best Instrumentals ♪♪♪♪ (Eros, 1998). This compilation is not easy to find, but it does a wonderful job of showcasing important composers and bouzouki players.

influences:

◀◀ Manos Hadjiahis, Mikis Theodorakis

▶▶ Stevros Kokostas, George Dalaras see also: Mikis Theodorakis

Helen Giano

Xit

Native American rock

Formed 1969, in Albuquerque, NM, USA. Disbanded 1976; re-formed 1977; disbanded 1981.

Xit #1: Tom Bee, leader, songwriter, guitar, Native percussion; Lee Herrera, drums; Mac Suazo, bass; R.C. Gariss Jr., lead guitar; A. Michael Martin, vocals, lead guitar (1968–72); Obie Sullivan, keyboards (1973–76); Tyrone King, backing vocals, Native percussion, dancing (1973–76); Chili Yazzie, backing vocals, Native percussion, dancing (1973–76). Xit # 2: Tom Bee, leader, songwriter, guitar, Native percussion; Mac Suazo, bass; various other sidemen.

Today Tom Bee is president of Sound of America Records (SOAR), the country's most aggressive marketer, distributor, and promoter of Native music, but his history in the biz stretches back to the late '60s, when he put together the first all-Native rock band. Xit (Exit) started out like most bands, playing cover versions of Top 40 hits in local clubs and bars, but then Bee had a vision: a Native band that would combine traditional music and militant lyrics, and deliver them with the clout of a full-tilt rock 'n' roll outfit. Bee began writing tunes and shopping the band's demo tape; one of those demos got to Motown Records, which used one of Bee's songs, "(We've Got) Blue Skies," for a Jackson 5 album. When Motown started the Rare Earth imprint in 1971 as a venue for non-black acts, Xit became the first all–Native American rock group to get a label deal with a company that had access to the cultural mainstream. While signed to Motown, Bee also wrote and produced tunes for the Jackson 5 and Smokey Robinson. Xit eventually splintered; their militant lyrics and support of the American Indian Movement (AIM) led to a noticeable lack of bookings outside of reservation gigs and the odd college folk festival. After the original band fell apart, Bee and bass player Mac Suazo carried on with various other musicians sitting in, playing their last gig in Lucerne, Switzerland, in 1981. Bee went on to work as a record salesman and concert promoter before starting SOAR in 1988. "The lyrics I wrote for Xit are pretty tame by today's standards," Bee says, "but at the time, nobody had ever heard the story from the Indian's side. We had some good times, and I think we opened up the doors for today's generation of Red Rockers." Xit's albums had all gone out of print, but after starting SOAR Bee bought back the masters and began reissuing the band's catalog. At press time a collector's edition of Plight of the Redman, completely remastered and with new art work, was due in mid-1999.

what to buy: Silent Warrior ♪♪♪½ (SOAR, 1991, prod. Tom Bee) is a time-machine back to the many popular styles of 1973, when this album was first released. Pop-rock, proto-metal, and singer/songwriter are all here, and all drenched with powwow drums and orchestral strings. It's also one of the first albums to deal with the growing ecological disasters being brought on by advancing technology, way before environmentalism moved from activist cause to pop vogue.

what to buy next: Most tracks on Plight of the Redman ♪♪♪½ (SOAR, 1988), originally released in 1970, start with Native drumming and singing in Native languages—a remarkably anti-commercial move despite the Hendrix-drenched guitar stylings and Motown-on-the-reservation rhythm tracks. A bit overearnest at times, but forgivable, especially in light of the self-pity the average white singer/songwriter was putting down at the time.

the rest:
Drums across the Atlantic—Live ♪♪♪ (SOAR, 1988)
Relocation ♪♪♪ (SOAR, 1990) Entrance ♪♪♪ (SOAR cassette, 1993)

solo outings:
Tom Bee:
Color Me Red ♪♪♪ (Rare Earth, 1979)

influences:
◀◀ A. Paul Ortega, Buffy Sainte-Marie ▶▶ Redbone, John Trudell, Indigenous, Clan/Destine

see also: Robby Bee & the Boyz from the Rez

j. poet

Yabby You

Roots reggae, dub

Born Vivian Jackson in 1945, in Kingston, Jamaica. Based in Kingston, Jamaica.

When Vivian Jackson, a.k.a. Yabby You, sings about suffering, he sings from experience. By the time he was 17, Jackson was so malnourished that he had to be hospitalized. The side effects were terrible—severe arthritis and crippled legs. Jackson couldn't work, but he had a remarkably pure voice, and in 1972—through divine inspiration, as he describes it—performing with the aid of crutches, he formed the Prophets, one of Jamaica's foremost harmony trios. The Prophets' first single (and, eventually, the title track of their debut album) was "Conquering Lion," the first hit of many on Jackson's own Prophets record label. King Tubby mixed B-side dubs to most of Jackson's singles, and also gave Jackson his nickname, Yabby You. In addition to his own band, Jackson launched the careers of Michael Prophet, Wayne Wade, and Tony Tuff, as well as Willie Williams, Ras I-buna, and Half Pint. The hallmarks of his production technique were a distinctive bass line mixed with organs, horns, and an emphasis on beautiful vocal harmonies for a spiritual feel. Jackson appeared to have retired between 1985 and 1991; in fact, he had still been recording, and got firmly back in business with new material like Fleeing from the City and "old" releases from during his hiatus.

what to buy: One Love, One Heart ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1983, prod. Yabby You, Randall F. Grass) is hit after hit with no filler. The rootsy Fleeing from the City ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1991, prod. Yabby You) is a strong return from retirement, with a good balance of Christian hymns ("Praise Jahovia") and love songs ("Love Me, Love Me Girl"). Updating the mix with the notorious Mad Professor at the controls, Yabby You Meets Mad Professor ♪♪♪♪ (ARIWA Sounds, 1993) is a more light-hearted record. Jackson cut five dub albums with King Tubby; the first (and currently the only one available) is King Tubby's Prophesy of Dub ♪♪♪♪½ (Prophets, 1976/Blood & Fire, 1995, prod. Vivian Jackson), with deep rhythms and mind-bending mixes of "Conquering Lion," "Jah Vengeance," and "Born Free."

what to avoid: From the same period, Jesus Dread (1972–1977) ♪♪♪ (Blood & Fire, 1997, prod. various) is an example of reissue overkill. While the packaging is a work of art, there are too many versions of each track—an original vocal mix, a dub version, a deejay version, and sometimes an utterly redundant instrumental version featuring saxophonist Tommy McCook. The material is first-rate, but hampered by exhaustive duplications.

worth searching for: Only recently deleted is Jackson's third collaboration with King Tubby, Beware Dub (Prophets, 1978/Shanachie, 1995).

influences:
◀◀ Bob Marley
▶▶ Buju Banton

see also: King Tubby, Mad Professor

David Poole

Stomu Yamash'ta

World jazz-fusion

Born March 15, 1947, in Kyoto, Japan. Based in Japan.

Percussionist, keyboardist, and composer Stomu Yamash'ta is one of Japan's most internationally acclaimed contemporary musicians. In addition to touring with the Chicago Chamber Orchestra and the jazz-rock trio Come to the Edge, Yamash'ta has composed for theatrical works, including Red Buddha and The Man from the East; film soundtracks, including The Devils and The Man Who Fell to Earth; and ballet scores, including the British Royal Ballet's Shukumei. In the mid-1970s, Yamash'ta toured and recorded with Go, an international all-star band featuring British keyboardist Stevie Winwood, German synthesizer player Klaus Schulze, and Americans Al Di Meola on guitar and Michael Shrieve on drums. Yamash'ta studied percussion at the Berklee College of Music in Boston, and then returned to Japan and formed the Red Buddha Theater in 1971. A 35-member collective of actors, dancers, and musicians, the Theater toured Europe during the summer of 1972. Establishing residency at the Carre Thorigney, a then-new theater in Paris, the ensemble performed Yamash'ta's lengthy compositions "Red Buddha" and "The Man from the East" nightly until January 1973. After leaving the Red Buddha Theater, Yamash'ta continued to work with Come to the Edge, a jazz-rock band featuring drummer Morris Pert, electric pianist Peter Robinson, and bassist Alyn Ross, and also performed with Red Buddha. Yamash'ta reached his commercial peak after forming the jazz-fusion group Go in 1976. They recorded three albums before disbanding the following year: Go, Go Live from Paris, and, after Winwood left, Go Too. Although he temporarily withdrew from music in 1980 and moved into a Buddhist temple, Yamash'ta recorded the cosmic-minded album Sea and Sky in 1983, featuring synthesizers, taped sound effects, orchestral instruments, and percussion.

what to buy: A summit meeting of innovative musicians from throughout the world, Go Live from Paris ♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1976, prod. Stomu Yamash'ta) was recorded during a concert performance on June 12, 1976.

what to buy next: The soundtrack Red Buddha ♪♪♪ (Vanguard, 1974, prod. Stomu Yamash'ta) best illuminates Yamash'ta's unique blending of Japanese traditions and Western influences.

the rest:
Contemporary ♪♪ (L'oiseau, 1972)
The Man from the East ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1973)
Freedom Is Frightening ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1973)
One by One ♪♪ (Island, 1974)
Raindog ♪♪ (Island, 1974)
Go ♪♪♪½ (Island, 1976)
Go Too ♪♪♪½ (Arista/One Way, 1977)
Sea and Sky ♪♪♪½ (Kuckuck, 1984)
Solar Dream, Vol.1: The Eternal Present ♪♪ (Kosei, 1993) Solar Dream, Vol. 2: Fantasy of Sanukit ♪♪ (Kosei, 1993)

influences:
◀◀ Tangerine Dream, Pink Floyd, Karlheinz Stockhausen ▶▶ Airto Moreira, Nana Vasconcelos

Craig Harris

Yat-Kha

Tuvan folk-rock

Formed 1991, in Tuva. Based in Tuva.

Albert Kuvezin, vocals, guitar, shanzi, yat-kha, khomuz, bass; Aldyn-ool Sevek, vocals, morin-huur; Alexei Saaia, bass shanzi, morin-huur; Zhenya Tkach'v, drums, vocals. (All members are from Tuva.)

Named for a zither-like instrument featured in its music, Yat-Kha is a unique group that combines the ancient folk traditions of Tuva—the Central Asian republic best known for its distinctive, unearthly style of "throat-singing"—with Western pop and rock sounds. Yat-Kha was formed by Albert Kuvezin, a founding member of unlikely throat-singing supergroup Huun-Huur-Tu, who sought to break free from the narrow folkloric interpretations of Tuvan music imposed by the Soviet Union, which controlled the republic from 1944 until its own collapse in the early '90s. To that end, Kuvezin made the somewhat radical decision to include rock instruments like electric guitars, bass, and trap drums in the band's eclectic sound, adopting a rebellious, politically charged ethos that favors lyrics about pride, freedom, and independence. After winning the prestigious Grand Jury Prize from Radio France Internationale's "Rock and Pop in the East" competition in 1996 and performing at Austin's South by Southwest music conference in 1997, a copy of the group's album Yenisei-Punk (which had risen as high as #2 on the European world-music charts) found its way into the hands of Chieftains leader Paddy Moloney, who quickly signed them to a multi-album deal with his label, Wicklow Records.

what's available: The band's only Stateside release, Dalai Beldiri ♪♪♪♪ (Wicklow, 1999, prod. Lu Edmonds), is a mesmerizing piece of work that takes Tuva's ancient shamanic roots several daring steps into the future, subtly mixing in elements of pop, rock, dub, and (yikes!) even funk to create a wholly original, almost surrealistically exotic sound that somehow manages to work. Kuvezin and Sevek both prove adept masters at a variety of throat-singing styles, including sygyt, kargiraa, and khöömei, with Kuvezin's impossibly low-pitched drones standing in impressive contrast to the rich, warm tenor of Sevek (whose fitting name literally means "Golden Boy"). But however deep this rooting in ancient ways, nearly every song here offers an interesting modern twist, from the hypnotically echoing guitar of "Khemchim" to the funky groove of "Kazhan Tören Karam Bolur." Along with the similarly inventive Back Tuva Future from Yat-Kha's sensational countryman Kongar-ool Ondar, Dalai Beldiri is evidence of a unique musical community increasingly unwilling to rest on tradition.

worth searching for: The band released two albums in Europe before they were signed to Wicklow. Antropofagia (1991) may be impossible to hunt down, but, due to its popularity, the critically acclaimed Yenisei-Punk (1995) may still be available in Europe.

influences:
◀◀ Huun-Huur-Tu, Oorzhak Khunashtaar-ool, Sainkho Namtchylak

see also: Huun-Huur-Tu, Kongar-ool Ondar

Bret Love

8 2 4 eva ybarra

Eva Ybarra

Conjunto

Born in San Antonio, TX, USA. Based in San Antonio, TX, USA.

Conjunto is dance-band music, the accordionist and the bajo sexto guitarist leading the dancers in a lively evening's entertainment. Sometimes the singers with the band are women, but the band leader? Never—until Eva Ybarra. She's developed that prime requirement of conjunto stars, a distinctive style on the accordion, and proven herself in a still male-dominated realm. She also composes most of her own music in a field whose artists usually make their reputations as interpreters of traditional tunes. At press time she was set to build on an already burgeoning legacy with a new album on the Viva Voce label in 1999.

what to buy: Ybarra is adept at various strains of Tex-Mex music, which crosses more than a geographical border to meld the styles of Mexico's Spanish-influenced culture and immigrant Texas's Eastern European–derived one. A Mi San Antonio ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994, prod. Cathy Ragland) is a fine example of her lively way with ranchera, huapago, and polka.

the rest:

A Bailar con Eva ♪♪♪ (Hacienda, 1995)
Pobre Palomita ♪♪♪ (Hacienda, 1995)
Romance Inolvidable ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1996)

influences:

◀◀ Narciso Martinez, Flaco Jimenez

Kerry Dexter

Yellowman

Dancehall, toasting

Born late 1940s, in Jamaica. Based in Jamaica.

Vocalist/deejay Yellowman (so nicknamed for his albino complexion) is an originator of toasting, the fast-talking, pre-rap style that developed in Jamaica alongside reggae. With his rapid-fire words weaving in and out of instrumental dub versions of reggae tunes or pop hits, Yellowman took toasting from the "sound systems" of Jamaica's ghettos to the international stage. Raised in a state-run orphanage, Yellowman turned to performing as an escape from the teasing he experienced for his ultra-light skin. A prolific recording artist, Yellowman has released more than 50 albums. On the downside for many listeners, he's also been at the forefront of toasting's increasing use of sexist and anti-gay themes.

what to buy: Yellowman's talent for mesmerizing an audience is evident on Live at Reggae Sunsplash, '83 ♪♪♪ (Genes, 1983, prod. Yellowman), as he espouses his views about sex with "Me Too Sexy," "Me Have Too Much Women," and "Get Me to the Family Court on Time"; violence with "Gunman"; and his commitment to Rastafarianism with "Jah Jah Made Us for a Purpose."

what to buy next: On King Yellowman ♪♪♪ (Columbia, 1984, prod. Yellowman) the title monarch tempered the sexism of "Girls Can't Do What the Guys Do" with classic tunes like "Reggae Calypso" and unique covers of Frankie Ford's "Sea Cruise" and John Denver's "Take Me Home, Country Roads."

best of the rest:

Party ♪♪♪ (RAS, 1991)
Prayer ♪♪♪ (RAS, 1994)
Divorced (For Your Eyes Only) ♪♪♪ (Burning Sounds, 1996)
Meets the Paragons ♪♪♪ (House of Reggae, 1996) Live at Maritime Hall ♪♪♪ (Artists Only, 1998)

influences:

◀◀ Clement "Sir Coxsone" Dodd, Arthur "Duke" Reid, General Echo

▶▶ Shabba Ranks, Lavindeer

Craig Harris

Yosefa

International Middle Eastern–influenced pop

Born Yosefa Dahari in 1951, in Eilat, Israel. Based in Israel.

While Israel has produced its share of pop/rock stars whose music is just like that of the U.S. or Western Europe but for its Hebrew lyrics, other performers have emerged whose style reflects Israel's multi-ethnic character. Vocalist Yosefa Dahari is one of those artists. Born to parents of Yemenite and Moroccan descent, Yosefa's music fuses modern, high-tech dance-pop with Middle Eastern roots. She began singing while in the Israeli army, and at one performance near Lebanon had a remarkable experience. "I sang a few Yemenite songs. People on the other side of the fence heard me and understood the words. They didn't know what to think. When the song ended , there was a silence and then they began clapping. It was so very moving." Yosefa's first album, Yosefa, topped the European Broadcasting Union's world-music chart in May 1994. In June 1995, she appeared at Sofia, Bulgaria's International Festival Golden Orpheus, and won the audience over with "Compassion" from her second album The Desert Speaks; that same performance earned Yosefa a UNESCO International Music Council prize.

what's available: The singer's debut Yosefa ♪♪♪♪ (Triloka, 1993, prod. Zvika Kagan) is an homage to her Yemenite and Moroccan heritage. Several of the album's most memorable songs were written by Yemenite composer Aharon Amram, whom Yosefa cites as a major influence. There are also two traditional Moroccan songs and a traditional Yemenite one. But Yosefa is no simple acoustic folk recording. Yosefa and producer Kagan went for the latest high-tech rhythm grooves; many of the tracks have an aggressive dance-pop beat. The ethnic elements come from Yosefa's own singing style, from the melodies, and from the use of regional instruments like the oud, kanoon, and various hand drums sprinkled throughout the arrangements. The Desert Speaks ♪♪♪♪½ (EMI Hemisphere/metro blue, 1995, prod. Zvika Kagan) is different. It's a great fusion of pop song construction and contemporary dance-music production with Middle Eastern accents. Most of the songs are contemporary and were contributed by several songwriting teams. All of the tracks are sung in Hebrew (except for a brief English interlude in "Before the Night Is Gone"), and Yosefa does seem more comfortable in that language. In addition, the arrangements seem better fitted to Yosefa's voice than on the previous effort; the rhythm tracks are not so dominant and the other instruments—keyboards, guitars, bass, drums, percussion, violin, soprano sax, clarinet, flute, Arabic flute, accordion—are used in a more supportive way.

influences:
◀◀ Aharon Amram, Peter Gabriel, Ofra Haza

▶▶ Natacha Atlas

Ken Roseman

Masakazu Yoshizawa

Traditional Japanese folk, new age

Born in Japan. Based in Los Angeles, CA, USA.

Masakazu Yoshizawa is probably the world's best-known player of the various styles of Japanese flutes, particularly the beloved shakuhuachi. Trained at the Tokyo University of Fine Arts, Yoshizawa now resides in California and works in numerous areas of the music industry. In addition to composing for himself, he has played on a diverse roster of soundtracks including Jurassic Park and Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles III. He performs as a soloist, and also works with the innovative trio Kokin-Gumi, which features Hirio Hashibe on koto (13-string flat harp) and vocals, and Tateo Takahashi on shamisen (a three-stringed traditional Japanese lute). Yoshizawa has had sessions with a variety of Western musicians as well, including the Crusaders, R. Carlos Nakai, and Berlin.

what to buy: Kyori (Innervisions) ♪♪♪♪½ (Fortuna, 1998, prod. Masakazu Yoshizawa), Yoshizawa's American major label debut, is a fusion of traditional sounds and more contemporary explorations, featuring two solo tracks and two collaborations with new age keyboardist Osamu Kitajima.

the rest:
Yu (Play) ♪♪♪ (Soundcastle)

solo outings:
Kokin Gumi:
Sorin ♪♪♪ (Sound Castle, 1995)
Wakyo (Sound of Japan) ♪♪♪½ (Sound Castle, 1997)

influences:
▶▶ R. Carlos Nakai

Michael Parrish

Yothu Yindi

Aboriginal rock, worldbeat

Formed 1986, in Yolngu homelands, Arnhem Land, Australia. Based in Sydney, Australia.

Mandawuy Yunupingu, guitar, vocals; Witiyana Marika, bilma, dance, vocals; Makuma Yunupingu, yidaki, vocals, bilma; Stuart Kellaway, bass; Mangatjay Yunupingu, dance; Banula Marika, vocals, dance; Bunimbirr Marika, yidaki; Cal Williams, guitar; Natalie Gillespie, vocals; Galarrwuy Yunupingu, vocals, bilma, clan leader; Milkayngu Munuggurr, yidaki; Gurrumul Yunupingu, guitar, vocals, keyboards; Jodie Cockatoo, vocals. (All members are from Australia.)

Yothu Yindi was created by singer/guitarist Mandawuy Yunupingu to explore a fusion of Yolngu (Aboriginal Australian) and Balanda (non-Aboriginal) music and introduce the world to the beauties of an Aboriginal culture, which can trace itself back about 60,000 years. Yunupingu is from Northeast Arnhem Land and the band's name means "child and mother," which refers to the kinship relations between various segments of the Yolngu people. Many of the tunes the band performs are based on the traditional songs of the Gumati and Rirratjingu clans of Northeast Arnhem Land, and incorporate bilma (clapsticks that sound similar to Cuban claves) and yidaki (or didgeridoo, the mesmerizing blown instrument whose synthesizer-like sounds have increasingly captivated the West). The band's choreography is also based on traditional dances that mimic crocodiles, wallabies, brolga, and other indigenous animals. "We operate on two levels of reality," says Mandawuy, who's also the band's leader and spokesperson. "One is restricted (sacred); the other is unrestricted (public). That's why I can come into the white man's world, then go back to my world without fear of losing it. I'm using white skills and Yolngu skills to make a new beginning."

what's available: Tribal Voice ♪♪♪½ (Hollywood, 1992, prod. Mark Moffatt) is a pleasing folk/rock excursion with some Aboriginal flavoring. The most interesting tracks are the four examples of traditional singing and didgeridoo playing, which open non-Aboriginal ears to a startling beauty. Recorded after their amazing success down under, Freedom ♪♪♪ (Hollywood, 1996, prod. Lamar Lowder) takes a slightly more mainstream approach, but the didgeridoo and tribal vocals are still evident.

mary youngblood

influences:

- Midnight Oil
- Alan Dargin

j. poet

Mary Youngblood

Native American flute

Born in Seattle, WA, USA. Based in USA.

"I believe these songs came from those who walked before me. I am simply a vessel between the creator and this sacred instrument," says Mary Youngblood of her work on the Native American flute. In Native American culture and in contemporary Native recordings, the flute is typically played by men, but Youngblood did not let that deter her from exploring the instrument. Of Seminole and Aleut ancestry, she did not start out on the Native variety, however—she was classically trained on several others including the transverse flute, and also developed as a singer, finding inspiration in the voices of James Taylor, Ella Fitzgerald, and Karen Carpenter. Youngblood's compositions on the Native American flute were first introduced to nationwide audiences in the United States on the PBS special American Indian Circles of Wisdom and in the film Naturally Native.

what's available: The Offering ♪♪♪♪♪ (Silver Wave, 1998, prod. James Marienthal, Tom Wasinger, Mary Youngblood) is Native American flute stripped to the essence; just the instrument, the breath, and the ideas of the composer. Youngblood's 17 original compositions were recorded deep inside the Moaning Caverns in California, and the resonances and subtle water sounds add just enough atmosphere to allow you to imagine being there. She employs several types of flutes to express her ideas on such subjects as first love, the gift of music, the places and people in her life, and the winds of change. This is the first disc a Native American woman has recorded on Native flutes for national distribution, and as such, Youngblood's work has been compared to that of the premier male Native American flutist, R.Carlos Nakai—and it meets the comparison.

influences:

- Buffy Sainte-Marie, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, James Taylor, Ella Fitzgerald, Karen Carpenter

Kerry Dexter

Atahualpa Yupanqui

South American folk, nueva canción

Born Héctor Chavero on January 31, 1908, in El Campo de la Cruz, Argentina. Died 1992, in Paris, France.

Along with Antonio Pantoja, Victor Jara, and Violetta Parra, Atahualpa Yupanqui can be counted as one of the founders of the nueva canción ("new song") movement that promoted an awareness of South American folk culture through research, composition, and performance. It was in doing such research that Yupanqui and others experienced the richness of Andean folk music and the poverty of the people living in the Andes. This led to writing and concertizing songs rooted in the modes and lives of Andean peoples, inspiring the careers of musicians like Inti-Illimani and Mercedes Sosa. It also led to exile, voluntary and otherwise, for some of these performers as the military juntas in power at the time took umbrage at the lyrical content of songs describing the conditions of the downtrodden.

Born Héctor Chavero, Yupanqui took his stage name from the last of the Inca kings. He learned how to play the violin and guitar before he was 10, wrote his first serious poems at the age of 14, and composed his landmark "Caminito del Indio (The Path of the Indian)" when he was only 19. Yupanqui first tried getting work as a journalist, despite having little in the way of formal education. When that didn't work out he traveled around South America, visiting Argentine provinces along the Andean spine before exploring Bolivia, Peru, Venezuela, Ecuador, Columbia, and Chile, documenting the musical traditions of rural peoples. Their rhythms, the zamba, the chacarera, and the milonga, inspired his music while their lives helped inform his poetry. Yupanqui made himself into a regular renaissance man, publishing his first book of poetry (Piedra Sola) in 1940 and unveiling his first play (Cerro Bayo) in 1943. He would later write books in a variety of idioms, including many volumes of poetry, an autobiographical sketch (El Canto del Viento), and essays on Japan (where he toured in 1968), the music of the Andes, and the French writer LaFontaine. Yupanqui's first trip to France took place in 1948, when he appeared on stage with Edith Piaf prior to touring around Europe in 1949. He was so impressed with his reception by the French during the course of his frequent European treks that he finally moved to Paris in the early 1960s. In 1986, the French government bestowed upon Yupanqui the title of Knight of the Order of Arts and Letters for his life's work as a musician and voice of social conscience. Looking back during an interview that took place a few days before he died (with Manuel Osorio for the UNESCO Courier), Yupanqui noted that "I contribute what I have—my songs, a touch of atmosphere, of color, the sufferings and the hopes of my native land, that immense continent we know as Latin America."

what to buy: Thirty Years of Singing ♪♪♪♪♪ (Chant du Monde, 1992, prod. Robert Prudon) is the best place to start exploring Yupanqui's catalog. Everything heard here is distilled from the monumental five-disc set L'Integrale Atahualpa Yupanqui, and it serves as a superb career sampler that will leave you hungering for more. The classic "Duerme Negrito" is worth the price alone. Camino del Indio: Sus Primeros Exitos, 1942–1944 ♪♪♪♪

(Blue Moon, 1995, prod. various) is well recorded and mastered, revealing early versions of understated musical masterpieces (the title tune, "Viento, Viento" and "Me Voy"). Yupanqui was just starting to unveil his political agenda during these years, but there was still time for a few instrumentals ("Malambo," "Vidala del Silencio," and "Huajra") based on Andean folk melodies and emphasizing his skills as a guitarist more than his wordplay.

what to buy next: Be careful! There is a Yupanqui album out there, La Zamba Perdida (Blue Moon, 1996), which contains the same performances as El Poeta ♪♪♪½ (ANS, 1997), and in the same order, but at a higher price. That said, this is a good companion for either of the albums listed above, and the singing and playing is fine. The sonics of these Argentinean recordings are a tad constricted when compared to the later Paris ones, but not enough to affect a listener's enjoyment.

the rest:

Don Ata ♪♪♪ (Tropical Music, 1992)
Y Su Guitarra ♪♪♪ (Legacy Latino, 1996)
(With Antonio Pantoja y su Conjunto) Se poblaban de musica los Andes . . . ♪♪♪♪ (Blue Moon, 1996)
Amistad ♪♪♪½ (ANS, 1996)

worth searching for: L'Integrale Atahualpa Yupanqui ♪♪♪♪½ (Chant du Monde, 1992, prod. Robert Prudon) is a five-disc set that covers all the material Yupanqui recorded with Prudon during the years 1968–1980. You will never find another batch of recordings that so fully documents his genius. It even includes the remarkable 726-verse poem/song "El payador perseguido," which times out at over 41 minutes!

influences:

⏮ Antonio Pantoja

⏭ Mercedes Sosa

see also: Mercedes Sosa

Garaud MacTaggart

Z

Zaiko Langa Langa

Congolese rumba-rock, soukous

Formed 1969, in Kinshasa, Zaire (now Congo). The two groups now using this name work between Kinshasa, Congo, and Brussels, Belgium.

Enormous, often undocumented membership over the years. Some key members have included: N'Yoka Longo, vocals; Lengi-Lenga, vocals; Papa Wemba, vocals; Bimi Ombale, vocals; J.P. Buse, vocals; Matima, lead guitar; Manuaku Waku, lead guitar; Beninko Poli, lead guitar; Petit Poisson, lead guitar; Zangilu Beniko, lead guitar; Enoch Zamuangana, guitar; Jimmy Yaba, guitar; Avedila, guitar; Popolipo, guitar; Muaka "Oncle" Bapius, bass; Kabama Vonvon, bass; Meri-Jo, drums; Belobi, drums; Bakunde, drums. (All members are from Congo.)

In 1969, electric African rumba had become the most widely disseminated dance music on the continent. Rumba's epicenter was the city of Kinshasa, the bustling, sleepless capital of Zaire, now the Democratic Republic of Congo. In Kinshasa's musical quarter, Matonge, rumba blared from clubs and record shops 24 hours a day. That was the year that a group of high school students decided to weigh in with a rougher, readier take on the sound. The new group paid its dues to rumba giants like Franco and Le Grand Kalle, but also took into account international forces like the Rolling Stones and American soul. They called the band Zaiko Langa Langa, which roughly translates as "Zaire of our ancestors." Zaiko's rumba-rock shook the Kinshasa music colossus at its roots, and for the next 15 years—the very years when the Zaire sound would travel all over the world under the name soukous—Zaiko remained the standard by which all others were measured.

Theirs was an inclusive sound that amalgamated the best of older rumba with strong folkloric elements and aggressive modernity. It was also tremendously disciplined music. Zaiko's songs began with slow rumba, but turned on sharp arranging points, moving first to a mid-tempo section with interactive, harmonized vocals involving up to five singers, and then to the diabolical seben section, where the snare drum snapped out a propulsive beat, guitars tangled ecstatically, and the singers chanted clever phrases of "animation" and rallied club audiences with outrageous choreography. Guitars came to the fore in the Zaiko sound, while horns went by the wayside. Indigenous rhythms fit with then-President Mobutu's doctrine of "authenticity," while designer clothes reflected a desire to appropriate foreign fashion. Most of all, dancers demanded the Zaiko seben style in clubs all over Africa.

Driven by fierce competition for better songs, better dances, better chants, better clothes, and more surprises in the musical arrangements, Zaiko's sound led the way into a period of rich innovation by all Kinshasa bands. Inevitably, the competition took its toll on Zaiko. Singing star Papa Wemba was one of the first to leave and make his own band, Viva la Musica. Lead guitarist Manuaku Waku followed suit by creating Grand Zaiko Wawa, and Langa Langa Stars became another spinoff. Coming into the 1990s, the core band split, with singer-composer N'Yoka Longo keeping the original name and singers J.P Buse and Lengi-Lenga creating Zaiko Langa Langa Familia Dei. All of this bifurcation makes the mountains of Zaiko-related recordings something of a puzzle, but it's a puzzle well worth grappling with. For Zaiko is more than a band. It is a sub-genre of Zairian music, and it represents one of the most creative and influential movements in modern African dance pop.

what to buy: L'Authenticite ♪♪♪♪♪ (Disques Esperance/Sonodisc, 1992) is a particularly excellent example of the full-force early-'80s Zaiko magic. Zaire-Ghana 1976 ♪♪♪♪½ (Retroafric, 1993, prod. Henri Bowane) goes back even further with a powerful, raw snapshot of the original band live in the studio.

what to buy next: Out of Africa ♪♪♪♪ (Sabam), by the Familia Dei Zaiko, and Jetez L'Eponge ♪♪♪♪ (Carrere, prod. Prozal), by N'Yoka Longo's Zaiko, are fine examples of the two bands' slicker, more high-tech 1990s sounds. Turn-on-a-dime arranging, lush vocals, and deep grooves still put the Zaiko stamp on the music.

influences:

⏮ Franco/OK Jazz, Thu Zaina

⏭ All modern soukous acts see also: Franco, Papa Wemba

Banning Eyre

Zamfir

Romanian folkloric, international popular instrumental

Born 1941, in Romania. Based in Romania.

Zamfir, master of the panpipe (or pan flute) and star of constant late-night television commercials hawking his proto-new-age albums, has a first name—it's Gheorghe. He has a nationality—he's Romanian. He even has a long history as a recording artist, first charting in Britain with the 1976 hit "Doina De Jale," the melody of which was lifted from a traditional eastern European funeral piece. Most important, Zamfir has a following as one of the world's premier easy-listening artists, integrating folk melodies and classical compositions into his soothing soundscapes. He has also recorded a significant amount of film music, most notably the compositions of soundtrack innovator Ennio Morricone (The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly).

what to buy: On Lonely Shepherd ♪♪♪♪ (Mercury, 1984, prod. Jean-Pierre Hebrard, Will Hoebee, James Last), Zamfir turns his flute magic on a collection of pop standards new and old, including the Bee Gees' "Run to Me," Charles Chaplin's "Theme from Limelight," and Andrew Lloyd Webber's "Don't Cry for Me, Argentina."

what to buy next: Zamfir is still plying his panpipe trade on Gypsy Passion ♪♪♪½ (Special Music, 1995), which is something of a departure from his romantic standards into a more focused folk-music setting. Also of particular interest for readers of this book are two other more traditionally based releases, Folksongs from Rumania ♪♪♪½ (Laserlight, 1991) and Midsummer Night Dreams ♪♪♪½ (Foulane, 1996), which revisit his roots both culturally (they're heavy on the Romanian folk tunes) and commercially (several of the mournful doinas with which he first made his name are included).

what to avoid: Romance of the Pan Flute ♪♪½ (Philips, 1982) isn't abysmal, but you can get better quality Zamfir elsewhere. And who really needs to hear pan flute covers of the Beatles' "Yesterday," Elton John's "Your Song," or Billy Joel's "Just the Way You Are"?

the rest:

Fantasy: Romantic Favorites for Pan Flute ♪♪♪ (Laserlight, 1985)

worth searching for: The Ennio Morricone Anthology: A Fistful of Film Music ♪♪♪♪½ (Rhino/BMG, 1995, prod. David McLees) features Zamfir's magic flute in the context of the film composer's work, along with other Morricone themes and songs performed by artists such as Joan Baez, Baldo Maestri, and Alessandro Allessandroni.

influences:

⏮ Gandalf, Paul Winter

⏭ Vangelis, Yanni, John Tesh

Ben Greenman

Zap Mama

Folkloric worldbeat, international roots-pop

Formed 1990, in Brussels, Belgium. Based in Brussels, Belgium.

Varying membership on record and stage throughout the years, including: Marie Daulne, vocals, percussion; Cécilia Kankonda, vocals (1990–94); Céline 'T Hooft, vocals (1990–93); Sabine Kabongo, vocals (1990–96); Sylvie Nawasadio, vocals (1990–96); Marie Cavanaile, vocals (1993–94); Sally Nyolo, vocals, percussion (1994–96); Marie Afonso (1994–96); Tanya Saw, vocals (1997–present); Angelique Wilkie, vocals (1997–present); Wahtanga Rema, vocals (1997–present); Lene Norgaard Christensen, vocals (1997–present); Manou N'Guessan, bass, vocals (1997–present); Bilo Donneux, drums (1997–present). (Members are from countries throughout Africa and Europe.)

You think you've got problems? Everybody does, and for those who suspect they don't have enough there's always the American rock 'n' pop industry, where lovelorn longing and teenage angst are permanent best-sellers. The figurative blues-singing of suburbanites finds its doppleganger in the music of Zap Mama, whose founder, Marie Daulne, has morphed the most traumatic of childhoods into the most spirit-lifting of songs.

When her Belgian father perished in the civil strife and anti-European backlash that followed her homeland of Zaire (now Congo)'s liberation from his, Daulne's Bantu mother (then pregnant with Marie) and her three other children fled to the forest Pygmy communities for sanctuary. There the young Marie learned ways of social and environmental harmony against formidable odds, and was introduced to ways of making stunning art with humble means. Going on to spend much of her upbringing in Belgium, Daulne remembers that it was ironically her mother who encouraged her and her siblings' integration with European society, while the white side of the family inspired her to explore her African heritage, which she did on later return visits to the Pygmies while also establishing a music career. Eventually the cultural convergences in her own makeup, in the bi-continental life she led, and in the cosmopolitan surroundings where she lived most of it, were personified by the multiracial (and often mixed-race) ensemble with which she changed the international pop landscape: Zap Mama. Their eponymous debut, released Stateside as volume one in the Luaka Bop label's Adventures in Afropea series, is one of the all-time best-selling and most critically acclaimed world-music albums in the U.S. With it, Zap Mama became the standard to which every subsequent culture-crossing band would be compared.

Aiming from the start to dynamically mix African and European influences in art as they had in life, the outfit chose a name that conjured both the telecommunications age and humanity's origins. Sticking to a phenomenal a cappella sound for much of their career, Zap Mama's music often evoked technology (sometimes enthusiastically, sometimes satirically) while always announcing their independence from it (a statement that persisted even after their sparing adoption of mostly acoustic instruments). All they ever needed were their ideas—astonishingly varied in both concept and sonics on disc, and on stage rivaling the most blockbuster pyrotechnics with nothing but smart choreography and costuming. Zap Mama's optimistic polyglot groove was an instant and deserved hit, drawing on the musics of Africa, Jamaica, Cuba, the Middle East, India, Aboriginal Australia, medieval and contemporary Europe, African America, and beyond, and singing to nearly every conceivable audience in its own language at one time or another—but in any case communicating a buoyant energy that needed no translation. The band has an unerring instinct for global-jukebox rainbows of sound that go straight to your subconscious Top 10, and its members' multitude of cultural backgrounds—and Daulne's educational one as a degreed ethnomusicologist—have allowed them to touch a striking breadth of bases with authority and discretion; awesome but never overwhelming, eclectic but never perfunctory. Daulne's considerable talents as a leader of women prompted a reconfiguration of Zap Mama into much more of a solo project for the third (and, at this writing, most recent) release, and the music suffered from the decrease in communal input. But the album still had its share of gems, and there's no reason not to expect at least as many from the 1999 follow-up and others to come.

what to buy: Zap Mama showed an entire generation of world-beaters how it's done, and Adventures in Afropea 1: Zap Mama ♪♪♪♪♪ (Luaka Bop, 1993, prod. Vincent Kenis) was too prescient to not sound as fresh now as the day it was released. Whether in the service of sublime song or jaw-dropping sound effects, the Mamas' vocal abilities amaze from start to finish, showing an equal command of chant, madrigal, Cuban son, African reggae, swing, and soul balladry. The band is particularly impressive—moving, even—on the Congolese folkloric material (which rescues ethereal women's worksongs from archival obscurity) and the Pygmy chants—one of the original "ambient" styles, invoking the forest's animal and elemental sounds and evoking its eternal calm, which must have come as a comfort to Daulne in her literal wilderness years, and which she and her band do great justice. Throughout the album the Mamas recreate an orchestra of instruments and innovate a spectrum of ryhthms, oddly effective vocalese, and, on one memorable occasion, the sputters, honks, and crashes of a traffic jam and pileup. Infectious grooves, one-world positivity, jokes, and a car chase—what more could you ask for? Sabsylma (What's Your Name?) ♪♪♪♪½ (Luaka Bop, 1994, prod. Marie Daulne) provided an answer, and yet another forehead-smiting for anyone who'd thought the band was out of surprises. An exhilarating musical-chairs of Islamic, Aboriginal, and Indian explorations; airborne continental pop; African folk; and the two English-language smashes, "Mr. Brown" (a back-handed organic hip-hop homage to James) and the title tune, the album cemented Zap as a many-hit wonder. A tendency towards overwrought political laments starts here, but not for many minutes of the overall running time. And in addition to opening numerous ears to a whole 'nother planet-full of music, with the aforesaid title track the band anticipates—and outdoes—the neo-swing craze by half a decade.

what to buy next: On 7 ♪♪♪♪ (Luaka Bop, 1997, prod. various), the now ostensibly solo Daulne's academic leanings sometimes dry out her songwriting, while political overstatement pounds some other songs flat. Of the album's two bids for single-dom, a cutesy reading of Phoebe Snow's "Poetry Man" is unforgivable, but an impassioned rendition of the blues standard "Damn Your Eyes" is unforgettable. Which, though it's the song that closes the album, is as good a way as any of leading into this set's many other strengths. Daulne's stylistic sweeps bring in some of the most astonishing inter-genre innovations on any Zap album, including the rap-in-Morocco masterwork "Baba Hooker" (one of many fruits of Daulne's recurrent collaborations with world-hop leader Michael Franti of Spearhead); the riveting Afro-Caribbean-Islamic footrace of "Jogging a Tombouctou"; the stark, atonal cabaret jazz of "Timidity"; the dazzling rhythmic complexity, tribal scat, and horror drone of the suite-like "Warmth"; and much more. Daulne's voice alone can't do as much as she thinks it can, but she still gets a lot of good help; and the instruments aren't really needed, but sure don't get in the way.

Zap Mama

the rest:
A Ma Zone N/A (Luaka Bop, 1999)

worth searching for: Both as a unit and as a pseudonym for Daulne, Zap Mama has guided a number of like-minded pioneers—most notably Spearhead, Vinx, and the Roots—across stylistic borders. A fine example of the results can be heard on Spearhead's Chocolate Supa Highway ♪♪♪♪♪ (Capitol, 1997, prod. Michael Franti), on which Daulne lends distinctive and unearthly vocals to "Comin' to Gitcha."

influences:
⏮ Miriam Makeba, Mahotella Queens ⏭ Les Go de Koteba, Sally Nyolo

see also: Sally Nyolo, Spearhead, Vinx

Adam McGovern

Hukwe Zawose

Tanzanian traditional

Born 1940, in Doduma, Tanzania. Based in Bagamoyo, Tanzania, and London, England.

Hukwe Zawose is a national treasure of mythic proportions in his homeland of Tanzania. With a voice that can freely range five octaves and virtuoso marimba and thumb-piano playing, not to mention his academic work, Zawose is a vital force in the traditional music of his country. Somehow he also managed to find time to father 15 children by four wives. A larger-than-life character, Zawose performs with his son Charles in a bright costume of coral-bead jewelry, headdress, feathered skirt, and ankle bells. Zawose and his son hold their thumb pianos at waist height and jangle their ankle bells as they dance in time to the music. The kalimba, or thumb piano, is a wooden box whose stiff metal keys are plucked to effect a clockwork plunk amplified by the wooden casement. The piano can be played very rapidly with only two thumbs. This is Zawose's most distinctive sound, though his resonant throat singing is matched only by traditions in Tuva.

Zawose is not modest about his reputation, as he writes in the liner notes to the album Chibite : "As a young man my voice was so sweet that people would often cry when I sang. In fact, sometimes I would hear myself and even I would cry," he boasts, redeeming himself in conclusion, "wondering what I had done to deserve such a precious gift." Zawose grew up as a cattle herder and that background imbues his music with a love of the land and a profound connection to folk traditions, unlike the pop stars of Dar Es Salaam. Inspired by his older brother, Zawose originally took up the marimba, then switched to the stringed izeze, an instrument favored by his father, adding nine extra strings to suit his rapid-fire finger picking. Tanzania's first president, Julius Nyerere, heard of the boy's reputation, and called him to the state residence in Dar Es Salaam. Mixing traditional stories with political celebration (no wonder the president took a liking to him), his style is called wagogo. While Tanzanian pop music can sound similar to tunes from Kenya and the Congo, the traditional music is unique. Zawose has only one release available in the U.S., and at most record stores it will be the only example of his country's rich folkloric tradition.

what's available: On Chibite ♪♪♪♪ (RealWorld, 1996, prod. Richard Evans), the lyrics to "Sisitizo La Amani Duniani" reflect on the lessons from the horror of Hiroshima, but Zawose's music is not all grand statements. "Nyangawuya" is a macabre tale of a man whose sister-in-law so calms his baby that he beheads her so as to always be able to use the familiar face to stop the baby's crying. The gruesome subject matter is belied by the upbeat music. Other tracks have no particular meaning, like the polyphony of "Chilumi," which recalls Pygmy chants.

worth searching for: The Master Musicians of Tanzania's two albums, The Art of Hukwe Zawose ♪♪♪♪ (JVC/Victor Japan) and Tanzania Yetu and Mateso ♪♪♪♪ (Triple Earth U.K.), both spotlight Zawose's resonant thumb-piano playing. The group is also referred to as the National Musical Ensemble of Tanzania.

influences:

- Remmy Ongala, Nuta Jazz Band
- Vijana Jazz Band

David Poole

Tom Zé

MPB (Brazilian Popular Music)

Born Antonio José Santana Martins, 1937, in Irara, Brazil. Based in Sao Paulo, Brazil.

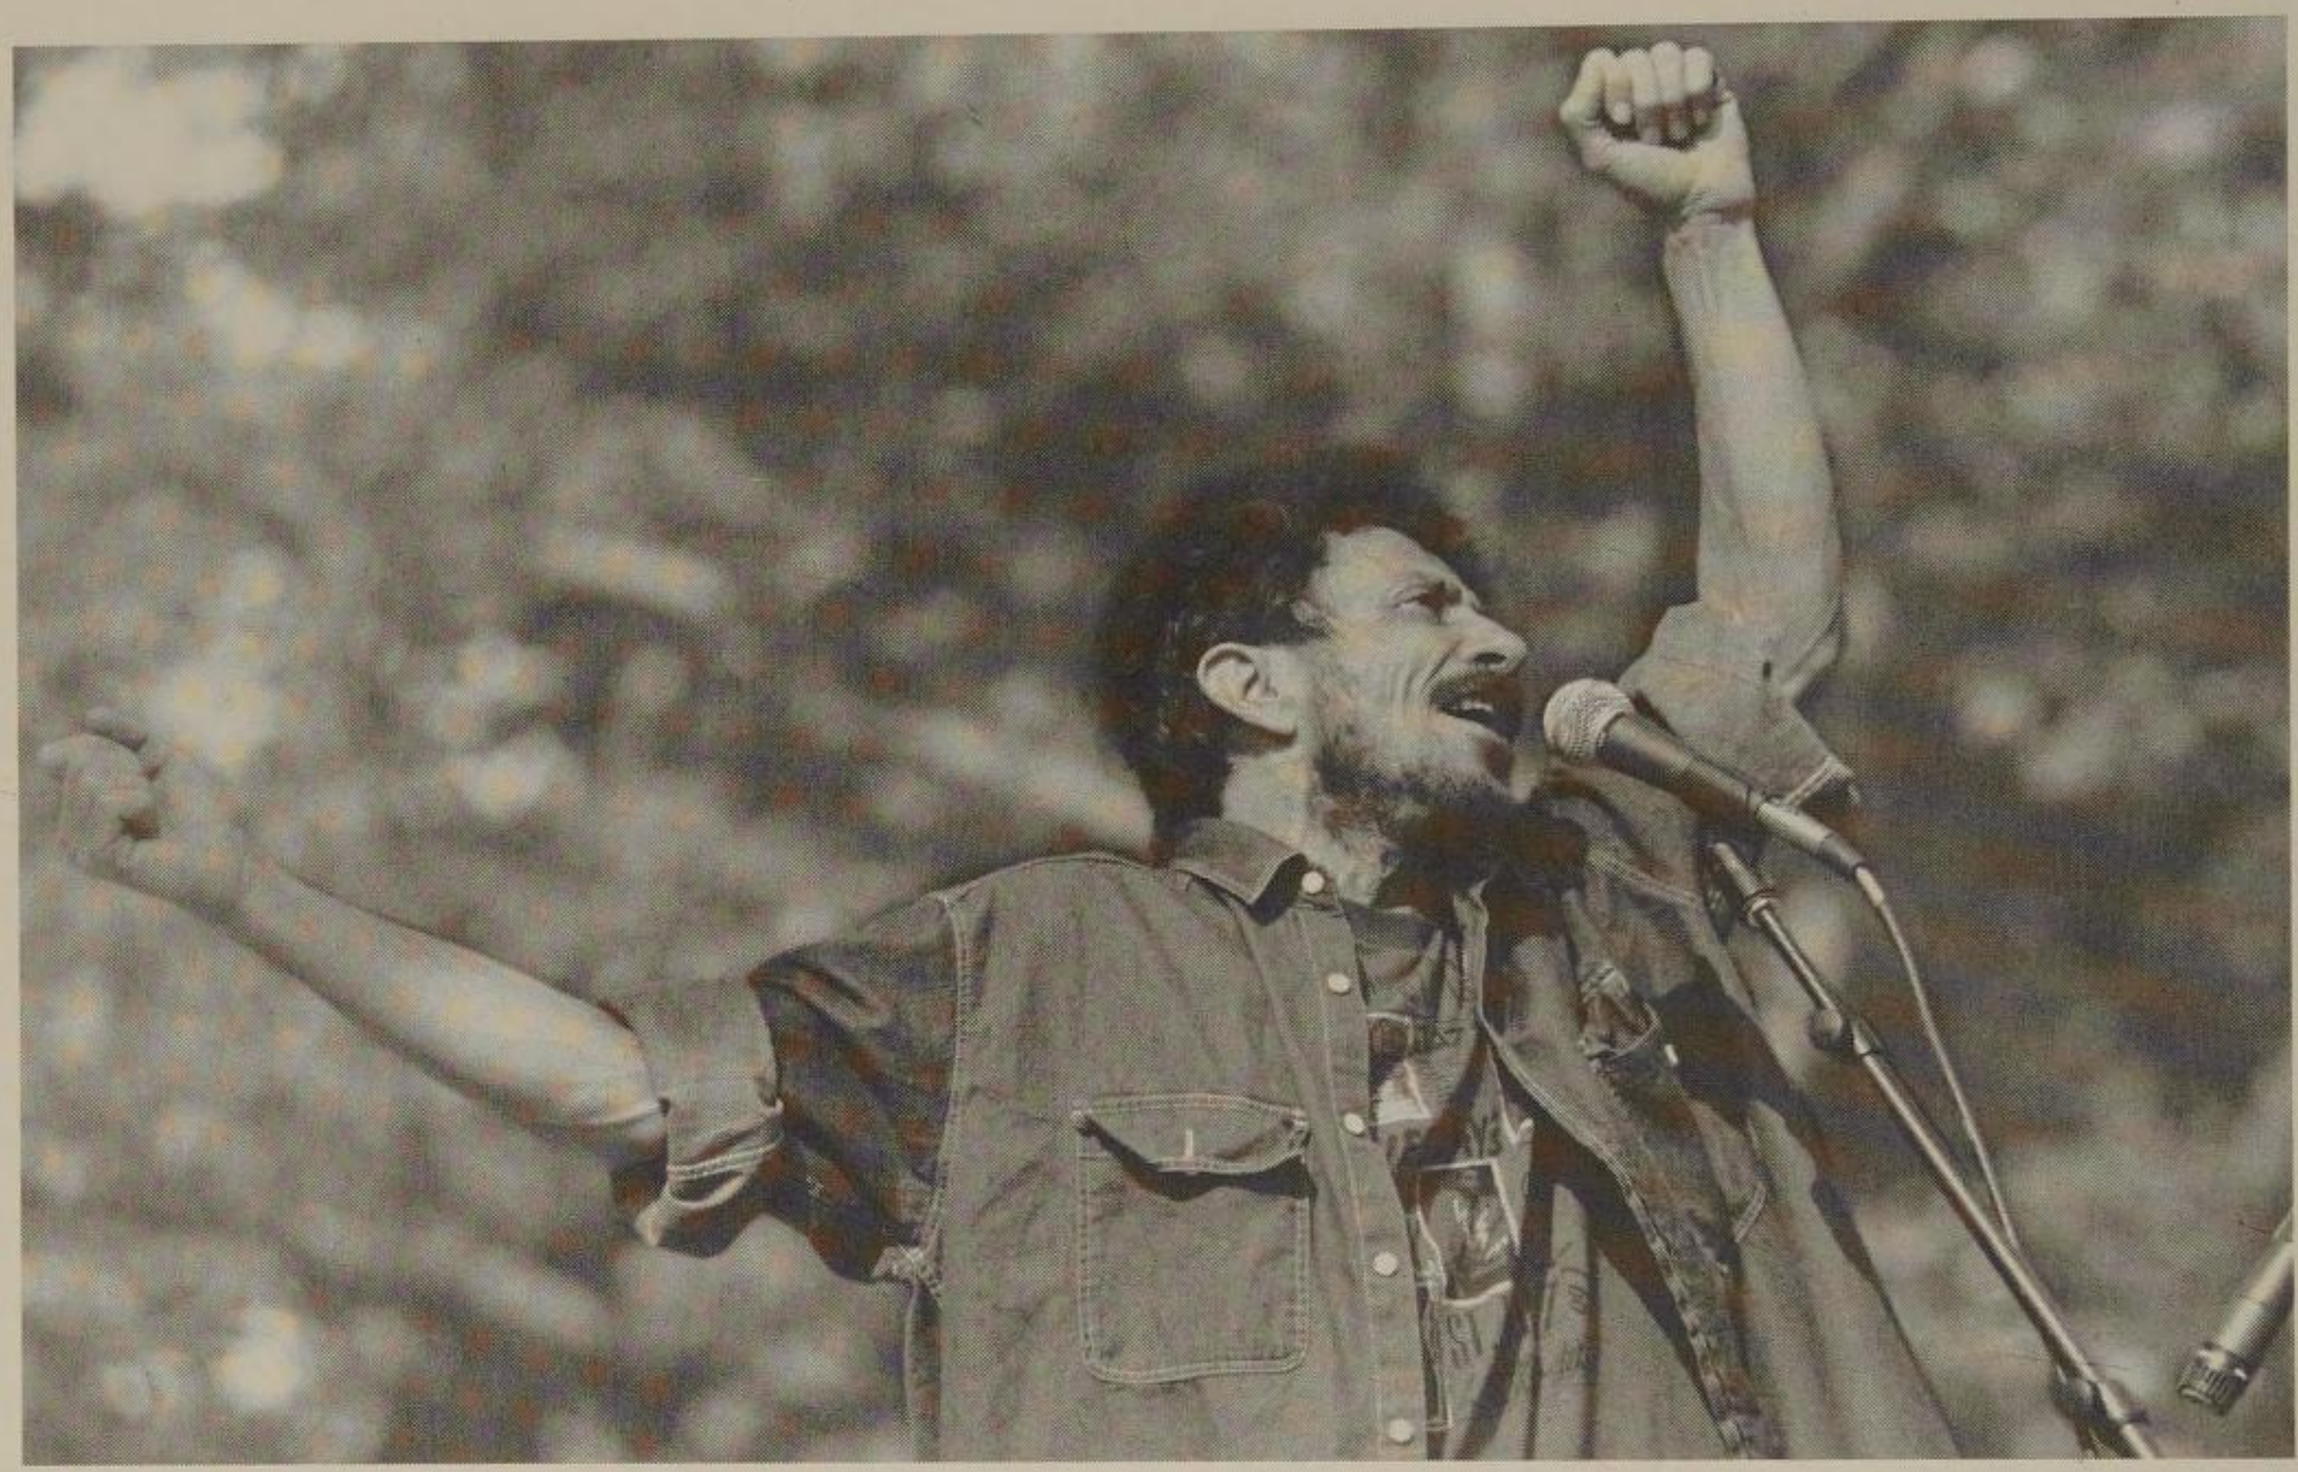
Tom Zé ("zee-ay") is one of Brazil's most unique—and some say oddest—singer-songwriters. He has used electric blenders, manual typewriters, and floor-polishers as rhythm instruments, and his surrealistic lyrics, unique vocal phrasing, and disjointed sense of rhythm place him far outside the mainstream of Brazilian music; a strange but compelling mixture of John Cage, Villa-Lobos, Brecht, and Frank Zappa.

Zé was born in a small town in Bahia, which is one of Brazil's poorest provinces, though it's also known for the richness of its Afro-Brazilian culture. He had to move to Salvador as a teenager because there was no high school in his hometown. He wasn't a good student, but when a guitar-playing friend showed him a song he'd written himself, Zé saw the light. He bought his own instrument and began composing. One of Zé's first public performances set the tone for his coming career. He appeared on a pop TV show called Escada Para O Sucesso—"Stairway to Success." He composed a song for the occasion, "Rampa Para O Fracasso"—"Ramp to Failure"—and followed it up with others satirizing the city's political realities. The show provided entrée to a group of young, radical performers and songwriters, including future stars like Gilberto Gil, Gal Costa, and Caetano Veloso. In addition, Zé entered the College of Music at the University of Bahia and studied composition, counterpoint, harmony, piano, guitar, and cello.

Zé was preparing for his finals in 1967, and was on the verge of becoming established as a classical player of note, when Veloso suggested they go to Sao Paulo and try their hand at pop music. In the next few years Zé and his friends created the Tropicalismo movement, which incorporated rock 'n' roll and Afro-Brazilian folkloric music in a reaction against the smooth bossa nova sound (they called their style the "intellectual samba"). He began recording his highly original compositions in 1968 on an album called Tom Zé, which he followed with . . . Tom Zé in 1970 and, um, Tom Zé in 1972. By the time he cut Todos os Olhos (All the Eyes) a few years later, he'd become interested in experimental music, and his albums began selling less and less. Although Zé was able to survive due to a strong cult following, and by writing jingles for leftist politicos, he dropped off the map as his music became more and more bizarre. By the time David Byrne released the Best of Tom Zé compilation in 1990, Zé was laboring in relative obscurity, even in Brazil. Zé still dislikes travel, and although he's played some European dates to support his recent Luaka Bop albums, he prefers to stay at home with his family, working on music that continues to confound and delight his listeners.

what to buy: On Brazil Classics, Vol. 4: Best of Tom Zé ♪♪♪♪♪ (Luaka Bop, 1990), David Byrne runs through Zé's back catalog to produce a streamlined introduction to this unique musical maverick. The album, ironically subtitled Massive Hits, is sparse, poetic, rhythmically challenging, and totally original,

benjamin zephaniah



Tom Zé

possessing all the assets great music should have. The quirks that sound odd at first begin making sense on repeated listings. Like Thelonious Monk, Zé has his own unique perception, one that makes perfect sense once you set aside your preconceptions.

what to buy next: Zé's 1998 offering, Com Defeito de Faricaçño (Fabrication Defect) ♪♪♪♪½ (Luaka Bop, 1998, prod. Brian Martin), is his most accessible Luaka Bop outing, but that said, it still has quirks to spare. Songs can clock in at a minute or go on for five, but they're always exploring interesting territory from farro to musique concrète to the samba and the tango. The "effects" David Byrne adds to some tracks often take the music to the edge of Talking Heads territory, but Zé's skewed vision always prevails.

the rest:
The Hips of Tradition ♪♪♪♪½ (Luaka Bop, 1998) worth searching for: From the evidence of these three American albums, Zé's Brazilian work should be worth tracking down. The titles are: Tom Zé (1969), Tom Zé (1970), Tom Zé (1972), Todos os Olhos (All the Eyes) (1974), Estudando o Samba (Studying the Samba) (1976), Correio da Estação do Brás (1978), and Nave Marie (1979).

influences:
◀◀ Agusto de Campos, Villa-Lobos, Jackson do Panderio

see also: Gal Costa, Gilberto Gil, Caetano Veloso

j. poet

Benjamin Zephaniah

Dub poetry

Born 1958, in Handsworth, Birmingham, England. Based in London, England.

Zephaniah, the U.K.'s other famous dub poet, is both a household name and a one-man cottage industry in England—a prolific and loquacious foil for Linton Kwesi Johnson's measured taciturnity. What sets him apart first and foremost from his more dour compatriot, though, is a highly wrought sense of the farcical and the absurd. Zephaniah prefers to document the outrages of Babylon's Albion branch in comic doggerel that's often howlingly, scathingly funny.

Like many black Britons of his generation, Zephaniah spent much of his childhood in the Caribbean (Jamaica, in his case), returning just in time for the national epidemic of racist paranoia of the late 1960s and '70s. Falling temporarily into his typecast role (the public discourse of the time criminalized all young blacks), he became a juvenile delinquent and functional illiterate. While serving a jail sentence for burglary, he underwent a spiritual epiphany, and left prison both a writer and a Rasta. Though he began his poetic career as the dreadlocked bard of neighborhood events and political rallies, the gregarious performance style he adopted for his motormouth "rants" soon gained him an appreciative national audience. He quickly developed a canny flair for self-promotion and media celebrity, and before long he was appearing on the popular soap Eastenders (to this day he's a dedicated community activist in East London) and writing radio plays for the BBC. By 1989, he found himself shortlisted for a poetry professorship at Oxford—prompting a virulent outbreak of tabloid bigotry of the "would-you-let-your-coed-near-this-man?" variety. These days, he's more likely to be found writing children's books for Penguin or doing commercial spots for the Vegan Council—though at press time he was also considered a long shot (or, in the incorrigibly racist parlance of the gutter press, "dark horse") for successor to Ted Hughes as Poet Laureate.

Zephaniah's poems are determinedly democratic and unapologetically oral. Composing for the most part in his head, he relies on an aesthetic that's immutably metrical and relentlessly rhyming, propelled as much by the bounciness of the English ballad stanza and the plummy inflections of white working-class speech as by the relaxed rhythms of reggae or the clipped tones of black British Pan-Caribbean Creole. While some critics mistake Zephaniah for a kind of "clown prince" of dub poetry, "court jester" would be more accurate. His mischievous, sing-songy delivery belies a d(r)ead seriousness: in the middle of a genial rant, his booming bass-baritone can turn on a dime and—as befits his prophetic name—take on the roaring, declamatory sonority of an Old Testament harangue. Under cover of disarming humor, Zephaniah is always conveying some more sober critique.

worth searching for: Call it an anti–dub poetry conspiracy: since 1995, none of Zephaniah's recordings have been in print in the U.S. Though it's more slickly produced (and perhaps more commercially oriented) than much of his work, the first album to seek out is the excellent Us an Dem ♪♪♪♪½ (Mango, 1990, prod. Paul "Groucho" Smykle). It ranges adroitly from a didactic riff on Bob Marley's call to historical literacy ("History") to an unabashed love letter to an immigrant ma ("Me Love Me Mudder"). In between is a wry, ska-powered reconsideration of the relative iniquity of owning and robbing banks ("Big Time Gangsters"). The show-stopper (CD version only) is the album's final cut, "Green"—an epic, a cappella, stentorian rail against Johnny-come-lately bourgeois environmentalists: "Fe years/Yu hav been fighting wars an destroying the scene/An now dat yu dying/Yu start turn Green." Zephaniah's early singles are difficult to find, but readily available as imports are: his first complete album, Rasta ♪♪♪½ (Upright, 1983/Workers Playtime, 1990, prod. Benjamin Zephaniah), which includes the grim-humored "Dis Policeman Keeps on Kicking Me to Death," and whose CD reissue adds cuts from the 12-inch single "Free South Africa/Stop De War" (Upright, 1986), featuring the original Wailers; Back to Roots (Acid Jazz, 1995), which Zephaniah describes as "done the old way" with live musicians, where "once again you can hear the fingers on the strings"; and Belly of de Beast ♪♪♪♪ (Ariwa, 1996, prod. Mad Professor), whose thudding, bass-heavy mix will likewise satisfy reggae traditionalists. Zephaniah has also appeared on (and produced) several compilations, including the soundtrack to his television special Dread Poets Society ♪♪½ (T'Bwana, 1993, prod. T'Bwana Sound), with Levi Tafari and Lillian Allen. In many respects his best work—where his voice really shines—is his "poetry without music": Radical Rapping ♪♪♪♪½ (African Arts Collective, 1988/BZ Associates, 1993, prod. Benjamin Zephaniah), Overstanding ♪♪♪♪ (BZ Associates, prod. Benjamin Zephaniah), and Reggae Head ♪♪♪♪♪ (57 Productions, 1997), the first two being cassette-only releases. These and other items, along with audio clips of Zephaniah's work, are available at his website: www.oneworld.org/zephaniah/. His numerous books include The Dread Affair (Arena, 1985), City Psalms (Bloodaxe, 1992), and Propa Propaganda (Bloodaxe, 1996).

influences:
Linton Kwesi Johnson

see also: Lillian Allen, Linton Kwesi Johnson

Michael Eldridge

Zimbabwe Legit

Zimbabwean rap

Akiro Ndlovu, vocals; Dumisani Ndlovu, vocals. (Both members are from Zimbabwe.)

The hook with this duo was that its members were natives of Zimbabwe who rapped in their native tongue. What Zimbabwe Legit turned out to be, though, was an exercise in whimsy by their label, Hollywood BASIC.

what's available: Their only release, Zimbabwe Legit ♪ (Hollywood BASIC, 1992, prod. various), is a tough call. The EP's lead song, "Doin' Damage in My Native Language," is completely forgettable, as are the different vocal and instrumental mixes from such producers as Black Sheep's Mista Lawnge. But the EP is completely worth the money—and might even have collector-type value, too—because of "Shadow's Legitimate Mix," a seven-minute opus that marks the official recording debut of DJ Shadow. This instrumental cut, based on Idris Muhammad's version of Grover Washington Jr.'s "Loran's Dance," was actually supposed to have vocals, but BASIC head Dave Funkenklein was so enamored of Shadow's version that he left it as is. A year later, Mo Wax's James Lavelle heard the song and was inspired to track Shadow down and sign him.

influences:

Fab 5 Freddy, Last Poets

DJ Shadow

Jazzbo

Jalal Zolfonun

Persian classical music

Born 1937, in Abadeh, Iran. Based in Tehran, Iran.

Jalal Zolfonun is considered a master of the setar (not to be confused with the North Indian sitar), a four-stringed, long-necked lute descended from the ancient Iranian tambur, which is credited as the ancestral form of nearly all Eastern lutes. Born into a musical family, Zolfonun studied violin with his brother before taking up the tar (a Middle Eastern lute) at the Tehran School of Art, and later taught himself to play setar with some instruction from the late Mousa Khan Maroufi. Inspired by early recordings of the great Persian masters, Zolfonun went on to learn from such leading heirs to the tradition as Nour Ali Khan Boroumand and Dr. Dariush Safvat. Upon completion of his university studies, he became involved with the Center for the Preservation and Propagation of Iranian Music, and soon began teaching traditional Persian music at Tehran University. Now considered among the world's finest Persian musicians, Zolfonun has apparently passed down the family legacy to his son Soheil, who has developed into a fine setar virtuoso in his own right, accompanying his father on his albums and at his international performances.

what's available: There are few recordings of authentic Persian classical music available in the U.S., which makes an album like Kord Bayat ♪♪♪♪½ (Music of the World, 1995, prod. Gholamhosain Janati-Ataie, Bob Haddad) an absolute treasure. Accompanied by his son and percussionist Bijan Zangeneh, Zolfonun delivers dazzlingly complex melodies ripe with mysticism and magic. Much of the music has no steady beat, but rather proceeds with a pacing closely related to the rhythms of Persian poetry. Traditional Persian music is almost always devotional, and one can feel a deep sense of spirituality resonating in these stately compositions. Mystic Journey ♪♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1999, prod. Bob Haddad) is slightly less traditional, with significant reliance on folk motifs and a number of original compositions that utilize harmony, which is rarely found in traditional Persian music. With more significant input from Soheil and the addition of Neel Murgai on percussion, this album truly establishes the Zolfonuns as a musical force to be reckoned with.

influences:

Mousa Khan Maroufi, Nour Ali Khan Boroumand, Dr. Dariush Safvat

Soheil Zolfonun

Bret Love

Soheil Zolfonun

See: Jalal Zolfonun

Tappa Zukie /Tapper Zukie

Reggae, dub, toasting

Born David Sinclair, July 2, 1955, in Kingston, Jamaica. Based in Kingston, Jamaica.

A devotee of the local sound systems in Kingston's ghettos from an early age, Tappa (a.k.a. Tapper) Zukie was performing publicly, improvising his own lyrics over the latest dance tunes, by the time he was 12. He was also quickly wanted by the law, so his mother packed him off to England to steer him away from the trouble both she and he associated with the reggae scene. But once there, Zukie began his recording career at age 16. Unknown outside London's Caribbean community, his break came with a mid-'70s invitation to the Hammersmith Odeon from proto-punk singer Patti Smith. When the already-revered Smith introduced Zukie from the stage as a major influence, he became headline news overnight. Smith released Zukie's debut album on her own MER label in 1976, and his hits have kept on coming ever since, both under his own name and on his production jobs for such artists as Beres Hammond and Gregory Isaacs. Hugely influential on current dancehall rap, Zukie now heads a retail store, record-pressing plant, and label (Stars), from which he launches the latest by his own heroes like U-Roy.

what to buy: To hear Zukie's early hits check out the excellent From the Archives ♪♪♪♪♪ (RAS, 1995, prod. Tappa Zukie), which contains the classics "M.P.L.A.," "Don't Get Crazy," "Pick Up the Rocker," and the anthem to herb "Chalis to Chalis." For dub versions of those songs and more buy In Dub ♪♪♪♪ (Frontline, 1976/Blood & Fire, 1995, prod. Tappa Zukie), whose vibrant packaging is as award-worthy as its music. If Deejay Was Your Trade: The Dreads at King Tubby's, 1974–1977 ♪♪♪♪½ (Blood & Fire, 1994) is worth purchasing for Zukie's one early track alone. "Jah Is I Guiding Star" is one of the most moving tracks in reggae—Zukie toasts an avowal of his Rastafarianism closer to the beat-poem confessional of Allen Ginsberg's "Howl" than any typical DJ rap. When he sings "Been down in'a Babylon a very long time/time to go home now," you can hear him choking back tears with a strong conviction behind his words.

what to buy next: Zukie's gritty voice graces roots classics on both Deep Roots ♪♪♪ (RAS, 1996, prod. Tappa Zukie) and the latest installment on the Zukie plan, Man from Bosrah ♪♪♪ (Stars, 1996, prod. Tappa Zukie).

worth searching for: The Zukie discography is woefully peppered with deletions, even including his fine debut Man Ah Warrior ♪♪♪♪ (Klik, 1974/MER, 1977). The following were printed in small runs of vinyl LPs, and would be a lucky find: M.P.L.A. (Klik, 1976/Frontline, 1976), Peace in the Ghetto (Frontline, 1979), Tapper Roots (Frontline, 1979), Black Man (Mobiliser, 1979), Raggy Joey Boy (Mobiliser, 1982), Earth Running (Mobiliser, 1983), and Ragamuffin (World Enterprises, 1986).

influences:

◀◀ U-Roy, I-Roy, Dennis Alcapone

▶▶ Patti Smith, Beenie Man, Josey Wales

see also: King Tubby

David Poole

Zulu Spear

Worldbeat, Zulu pop

Formed 1983, in Oakland, CA, USA. Based in Oakland, CA, USA.

Sechaba Mokoena, vocals, founder (South Africa); Gideon Bendile, bass, vocals; Motome Somo, vocals, percussion; Babatunde Garaya, keyboards, vocals; Paajoe Amissah, bass (South Africa); Jerome Leonard, drums, vocals (USA); Mathew Lacques, guitars; Ron Van Leewaarde, guitars, vocals (Holland).

Sechaba Mokoena, Zulu Spear's founder, main songwriter, and exuberant frontman, came to the United States from South Africa during the days of apartheid in 1981. He was one of the leads in Ipi Tombi, a government-sponsored South African musical that was supposed to show the world how happy black South Africans were. When the troupe played in Berkeley, California, after an eight-month run in Las Vegas, Mokoena led a mass defection and obtained political asylum in the United States. His first project thereafter was the U-Zulu Dance Theater, which combined drama, music, and dance to portray the real everyday lives of black South Africans. O.J. Ekemode, an expatriate superstar from Nigeria, hired the U-Zulus to sing and dance with his band, but soon after Mokoena met keyboardist Sergi Shkurkin, an American who had played in Swahili Top 40 bands in Kenya. They formed the first version of Zulu Spear in 1983, at a time when the Bay Area's worldbeat scene was beginning to draw national attention. But despite their energetic live shows, the band's personnel remained unstable, with several mass defections of its own breaking the momentum at critical points. Zulu Spear settled down, with most of the musicians listed above, in 1990, the sole survivor of the regional worldbeat movement that had looked so promising only five years before. In one of those once-in-a-lifetime music-industry quirks of fate, Jimmy Bowen, president of Capitol Records' country music division, saw the band in a Nashville club and signed them to Liberty Records, home of Garth Brooks. They cut their debut, Welcome to the USA, and received the full promo treatment, but even in the post-Graceland era American radio still didn't have a clue about South African pop. After this brush with success the band splintered yet again: one faction continued on as Spear, while Mokoena still perseveres under the Zulu Spear banner.

what's available: Welcome to the USA ♪♪♪½ (Liberty, 1992, prod. Ron Terry, Zulu Spear) is a worthy worldbeat debut (and finale?) led by Mokoena's Otis-meets-Toots vocals, solid songwriting, and the chiming twin guitars of Mathew Lacques and Ron Van Leewaarde.

influences:

◀◀ Malathini, Boyoyo Boys, West Nkosi

▶▶ Paul Simon, Spear

j. poet

Zydeco Force

Zydeco

Formed 1987, in Lawtell, LA, USA. Based in Lawtell, LA, USA.

Jeffery Broussard, one-row and three-row accordions; Shelton Broussard, guitar; Kent Perre August, guitar; Robby "Mann" Robinson, bass; Herbert Broussard, frattoir; Raymond Thomas, drums. (All members are from USA.)

Robby "Mann" Robinson, originally from Opelousas, Louisiana, honed his chops working the northern California blues circuit with acts like Etta James. When he relocated back to his home state, he worked with local performers like Roy Carrier in Lawtell. It was there that he met Jeffery Broussard, the son of late, great Creole accordionist Delton Broussard. The two joined to create Zydeco Force in 1987. While their best playing tends to emphasize one-chord vamps and solid grooves similar to the great Lawtell Playboys, with which Delton Broussard played for years, Robinson has fueled the transition to a slicker, urban brand of zydeco that distinguishes the Force from most other rural groups in their genre.

zydeco hurricanes

what to buy: It's La La Time ♪♪♪♪ (Flat Town, 1995, prod. Robby "Mann" Robinson) shows the almost schizo nature of Zydeco Force. The traditional tunes are here, including Leo Thomas's updating of Canray Fontenot's "Tit Monde" as "Why You Wanna Make Me Cry?," and "Broken Hearted" from the repertoire of John Delafose. But the band sways between this sound and a more urban one almost cut by cut.

what to buy next: The flip between the urban and rural strains of zydeco is what makes Zydeco Force unique. On Zydeco Push ♪♪♪ (Maison de Soul, 1993, prod. Robby "Mann" Robinson), it's the more urban sound that dominates. Maybe it's just that Robinson's originals, which make up most of the set, lack the grit and funk of the more rural side this group shows in live performance.

the rest:
The Sun's Going Down ♪♪♪ (Maison de Soul, 1995)

worth searching for: Zydeco Shootout at El Sid O's ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1991, prod. Scott Billington), a sampler of zydeco bands live at the famous title club, features two classics by Zydeco Force. "Madeline" is a tune made popular by Cajun fiddler and songwriter Adam Hebert, and it's syncopated into a hard-driving zydeco dance number by the group. Meanwhile, "I'm on My Way" has that odd, old, blues waltz feel that shows up in Creole music like Canray Fontenot's "Bonsoir Moreau" or Beau Jocque's "Moreau." It's a hypnotic kind of groove that is alone worth the price of the recording.

influences:
⏮ Rockin' Dopsie, Clifton Chenier, John Delafose

⏭ Keith Frank, Geno Delafose, Chris Ardoin

see also: Roy Carrier, John Delafose and the Eunice Playboys, Canray Fontenot, Beau Jocque

Jared Snyder

Zydeco Hurricanes

Zydeco, blues, R&B

Formed 1992, in Lafayette, LA, USA. Based in Lafayette, LA, USA.

Selwyn Cooper, guitar, vocals; John Wilson, accordion, vocals; Alonzo Johnson Jr., bass; Nathaniel Jolivette, drums; Adam "Razor Blade" Robinson, washboard. (All members are from USA.)

Fans of the zydeco genre know this group's pedigree well. Drummer Nathaniel Jolivette has played extensively behind Buckwheat Zydeco. Bassist Alonzo Johnson and guitarist Selwyn Cooper have both worked for Clifton Chenier and Rockin' Dopsie. A popular session man and touring pro, Cooper has also played behind such luminaries as C.J. Chenier, Lynn August, Fernest Arceneaux, and the aforementioned Buckwheat Zydeco. The group's sound accentuates the R&B and blues side of zydeco, with Cooper's riffs running hot and free alongside John Wilson's light, soulful vocals. Though scarcely known in the Americas, the Zydeco Hurricanes have become a popular attraction at folk and blues festivals worldwide.

what's available: It's not exactly groundbreaking work, but Louisiana Zydeco ♪♪♪ (Mardis Gras, 1994, prod. Jerry Embree) is a pretty entertaining mix of guitar-based blues and churning, squeezebox zydeco. Selwyn Cooper pays tribute to his old boss Clifton Chenier on a few numbers ("I'm Coming Home," "Tante Na Na," "Do Right Sometime," "Hot Tamale Baby"), and attempts to liven up some genre standards ("Big Mamou," "The Night Time Is the Right Time") in hit-and-miss fashion. However, the finest moments on this disc are the sans-accordion straight-blues performances ("Do You Love Me," "I Woke Up This Morning"), which are rendered with heart and style.

worth searching for: Those who dig Selwyn Cooper's fluid blues guitar work and soul-oriented vocals should check out Louisiana Swamp Blues (The Sound of New Orleans, 1999, prod. Gary Edwards), the session wizard's first solo effort.

influences:
⏮ Clifton Chenier, Buckwheat Zydeco, Rockin' Dopsie

see also: Buckwheat Zydeco, C.J. Chenier, Clifton Chenier, Rockin' Dopsie

Ken Burke

musicHound

WORLD

Resources and Other Information

Compilation Albums

Books and Magazines

Web Sites

Record Labels

Concert Venues

Radio Stations

AFRICA

Adventures in Afropea 3: Telling Stories to the Sea ♪♪♪♪♪ (Luaka Bop/Warner Bros., 1995, compilation prod. David Byrne, Yale Evelev)

Angola, Cape Verde, São Tomé et Príncipe genre: Coladeira, morna, funaná, Luanda merengue, bonga

Bonga (Angola); Vum Vum (Angola, Germany); Cesaria Evora (Cape Verde); André Mingas (Angola); Africa Negra (São Tomé); Waldemar Bastos (Angola); Tulipa Negra (Cape Verde, Portugal); Bana and Paulino Vieira (Cape Verde); Livity (Netherlands, Cape Verde); Pedro Ramos (Cape Verde); Jacinta Sanches (Cape Verde); Dany Silva (Cape Verde, Portugal).

The third CD in David Byrne's series of musical meetings between African and European cultures, Telling Stories to the Sea is a marvelous assortment of Afro-Portuguese music from Angola and two island groups just off the western coast of Africa, Cape Verde and São Tomé et Príncipe. All three nations were once Portuguese territories, and the similarities between their musical cultures reflect this common colonial heritage. Yet the exact blend of influences heard in the music of each country is unique, as if strains of melody had echoed from Portugal to Brazil and Cuba, back to the African mainland in Angola and then on to the islands, mixing with native forms and innovations along the way. Ironically, the driving force behind some of this musical diffusion was Portugal's trade in slaves and goods spanning both sides of the Atlantic, as well as a bloody war in Angola that brought thousands of Cuban troops there in the 1970s and '80s. The cultural cross-pollination set in motion by those events has made the music of "Afro-Portugal" elusive, refreshing, and sometimes baffling if you're trying to make guesses about what you're listening to. Taking São Tomé as an example, Africa Negra's dance romp "You Let the Dog Bite You" sounds like it came straight out of Central Africa, while the lush melancholy of Cape Verdean Cesaria Evora's gorgeous "Sodade (Homesick)" displays an unmistakable debt to Brazilian music. The sultry echoes of Brazil can also be heard in Angolan Waldemar Bastos's "N Gana," and it's a delightful surprise to discover that the merengue-cum–South African jive of "Tulipa Negra" (both band name and song title) comes from Cape Verde. David Byrne once again shows his skill as a compiler, culling an exciting variety of tracks and wrapping them in a clever, amusing package, including a booklet crafted as a miniature work of art. What's more, Telling Stories to the Sea is one of a relatively few available discs with music from Cape Verde and São Tomé, making it an essential buy.

Jeffrey Muhr

Africa Never Stand Still ♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1994, compilation prod. Brooke Wentz)

International
genre: Tuku, krio, salegy, iscathamiya, rai, fuji, taarab, mbaqanga, marrabenta, soukous, mbira, semba, chimurenga, Luo benga, kwassa kwassa, mbalax, highlife, juju, benga

Oliver Mtukudzi (Zimbabwe); Robson Banda and the New Black Eagles (Zimbabwe); Thomas Mapfumo and the Blacks Unlimited (Zimbabwe); Stella Chiweshe and the Earthquake (Zimbabwe); Remmy Ongala and Orchestre Super Matimila (Tanzania); Zuhura Swaleh with Maulidi Musical Party (Tanzania); Abdul Tee-Jay's Rokoto (Sierra Leone); Tarika Sammy (Madagascar); Ladysmith Black Mambazo (South Africa); Lulu Masilela (South Africa); Soul Brothers (South Africa); Bellemou and Gana El Maghnaoui (Algeria); Ali Farka Touré (Mali); Oumou Sangare (Mali); Salif Keita (Mali); Mandinka Musicians (Gambia); Les Têtes Brulées (Cameroon); Chief Dr. Sikiru Ayinde Barrister and Africa's International Music Ambassadors (Nigeria); Sir Shina Peters (Nigeria); Dulce and Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Mozambique (Mozambique); Pierre Akendengue (Gabon); Baaba Maal (Sene-

compilation albums: africa

gal); Youssou N'Dour (Senegal); Pépé Kallé and Nyboma (Congo); Aurlus Mabele and Loketo (Congo); Le Zagazougou (Ivory Coast); Mendes Brothers (Cape Verde); Abdel Gadir Salim All-Stars (Sudan); Papa Wemba (Congo); Kanda Bongo Man (Congo); Ndere Troupe (Uganda); Khalifa Ould Eide and Dimi Mint Abba (Mauritania); Kapere Jazz Band (Kenya); Gabriel Omolo and His Apollo Komesha (Kenya); Farafina (Burkina Faso); Seleshe Demassae (Ethiopia); Gnawa Musicians of Marrakesh (Morocco); Martin K. Obeng (Ghana); Bonga (Angola).

There may be no better place to begin a serious study or lifelong love of African music than right here, with this marvelously eclectic, 192-minute, three-disc collection juxtaposing the continent's circa mid-'90s superstars with relatively unsung performers. Nearly all the usual suspects are here (King Sunny Adé and Fela Kuti are notable exceptions), and the selected tracks are duly representative of them. Tarika Sammy's "Eh Zalahy" thrives on call-and-response vocals, urgent rhythms, and lovely acoustic instrumental textures, while a cappella favorites Ladysmith Black Mambazo turn in a rising and falling tide of lush harmonies, fluttering lead singing, and clicking mouth sounds on "Ngingenwe Emoyeni," and Ali Farka Touré offers haunting guitar blues on the reggae-tinged "Heygana." Name acts from the second CD include Baaba Maal, with the flickering kora (African harp-lute) and expressive wailing of "Mariama"; Papa Wemba, with the liquid six-string lines, soukous (African rumba) rhythms, and wall of vocals and percussion on "M'Fono Yami"; and Thomas Mapfumo, with the throaty singing and tricky chimurenga beat of "Mhondoro." The final disc offers such favorites as the sparkling electric-acoustic instrumental textures and hybrid kwassa kwassa dance groove of Kanda Bongo Man's "Sai"; the exotic funk punch of Salif Keita's "Nyanafin" (with keyboard support from Weather Report founder Joe Zawinul); and the beehive of swirling sonics on Youssou N'Dour's "Fakastalu." Contributions from other justly or should-be-famous artists like Oliver Mtukudzi; Les Têtes Brulées; Dulce and Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Mozambique; Pépé Kallé and Nyboma; Robson Banda and the New Black Eagles; the Mendes Brothers; the Gnawa Musicians of Marrakesh; Martin K. Obeng; Sir Shina Peters; and Aurlus Mabele and Loketo number among the other highlights of this 39-song spectacular. Food for the soul and fuel for the feet are to be found everywhere on the beautifully packaged set, accompanied by an informative 48-page booklet packed with musician biographies and revealing photos.

Philip Booth

African Tranquility ♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1996, compilation prod. Al Evers)

Senegal, Uganda, Algeria, Mali, Madagascar, South Africa, Sudan, Guinea genre: Folk/traditional

Musa Dieng Kala (Mawahibou); Samite of Uganda (Uganda); Vieux Diop (Senegal); Baly Othmani & Steve Shehan (Algeria/USA); Tunde Jegede (Mali/UK); Mahaleo (Madagascar); Geoffrey Oryema (Uganda); Rossy (Madagascar); Ladysmith Black Mambazo (South Africa); Tarika Sammy (Madagascar); Hamza El Din (Sudan); Sona Diabate (Guinea).

"The Contemplative Soul of Africa," this is subtitled, and if you just want to mellow out, here you go. But if you're looking for something not just tranquil but involving, this compilation shoots blanks half the time. Its first half is mostly boring (exception: "Jali," an arresting trance-out by Senegal's Vieux Diop), crossing the wrong side of the fine line between meditative calm and dull new-age noodling—it's sure to make some listeners feel Culturally Significant, but it doesn't do jack for the rest of us. The second half is better, starting with Ugandan Geoffrey Oryema's "Makombo," a drop-dead gorgeous blues surrounded by pools of subtle echo, and peaking (of course) with a Ladysmith Black Mambazo hymn. But if you're really looking to bliss out Motherland-style, skip African Tranquility and buy Ladysmith's Classic Tracks, one of the loveliest albums ever assembled. And if you get Tranquility as part of Shanachie's African Heartbeat box set, the tracks to include on your mix tape are 3-7-8-9-10. Got that? Good.

Michaelangelo Matos

The Arthur S. Alberts Collection: More Tribal, Folk, and Café Music of West Africa ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1998)

International
genre: African folk music

Performers from the following tribes: Malinke (Guinea); Mano (Liberia); Igbo (Nigeria); Ashanti (Ghana); Baule (Ivory Coast); Fanti (Ghana); Loma (Liberia); Bindendela (Congo); Bobo-Dioulasso (Burkina Faso).

Listening to this batch of vintage field recordings—released as part of the Library of Congress Endangered Music Project series (reviewed in its entirety on page 916)—conjures the feeling of passing through a series of African communities where music is being made informally with skill, passion, and playfulness. In that sense, it is an accurate representation of the journey from which the recordings emerged, a 4,000-mile trek through West Africa that aficionado Alberts and his wife made by jeep in 1949. In their travels they encountered, for example, Mano men cutting stone for a building; the workers took a break to sing for Alberts, striking their hammers and chisels for percussion. Like most of the people he recorded, Alberts was a musical amateur, but if his notes are stunted his ears are open and fresh. His approach must have been easy on the musicians, who sound unanimously liberated and at peace in performance, none more than the Congolese people we hear making a percussive symphony by slapping the surface of a river. And the acoustic rumba also recorded in Congo offers an irresistible snippet of village soukous (the Cuban style's African variant)—here is the music that shook the disco, unplugged and backstage, loping along as if there were no tomorrow.

Chris King

Bayaka: The Extraordinary Music of the BaBenzélé Pygmies ♪♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1995, prod. Bernie Krause)

International genre: African folk

Unidentified BaBenzélé Pygmy groups who roam an area in West and Central Africa.

By mixing ambient sounds from the Congo basin—the audio backdrop of rainforest life—with recordings of the BaBenzélé Pygmies, producer Bernie Krause and author/explorer Louis Sarno have come up with a fascinating audio document and an equally worthy tome. The ellipsis arts . . . label has bound the two formats into a package deal, with the hardback, 96-page book containing its companion CD in a little pouch on the inside back cover. Even though polychoral writing has a long and honorable history in the Western world, this project demonstrates that a seemingly simple society like that of the Pygmies may have a similar tradition predating the work of composers like Gabrielli and Palestrina, whose experiments in the 16th century with space and multiple voicings were considered groundbreaking. The album showcases the Pygmy use of song in everyday life; echoing, yodeling, and bouncing sound off the rain forest canopy without a thought to the complex, forward-thinking musicality of what they've been doing. The Pygmies play counterpoint with arboreal rhythms of life: the click, whir, and ratcheting of insects; the hooting and howling of primates; the calls and songs of avians. The results are beautiful and awe-inspiring.

Garaud MacTaggart

Black Star Liner ♪♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1992)

Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Liberia
genre: Reggae

Sonny Okosun (Nigeria); Sabanoh 75 (Sierra Leone); Cloud "7" (Nigeria); Bongos Ikwue and the Groovies (Nigeria); Victor Uwaifo and his Titibitis (Nigeria); Miatta Fahnbulleh (Liberia).

Reggae in Africa (much like Cuban forms on the continent) is an interesting example of the reverse flow of music back to the Motherland, and has produced several world-class exponents. Even though many of the acts here include reggae as part of a wider repertoire, the explorations of the genre on this collection are exceptionally good and mostly of the "roots" persuasion, as these recordings date from the mid-'70s to early '80s. Aptly named after early-20th-century black nationalist Marcus Garvey's "back to Africa" Black Star Line shipping company, this compilation illustrates the cultural rather than physical migration that has eventually transpired. A close listen will reveal the African elements present to a lesser or greater extent on all tracks, especially Victor Uwaifo's composition from 1978. Of interest is how completely and naturally reggae has lodged in the hearts of Africans from many countries, as has the spiritual message of the Ethiopian-inspired Rastafarian belief. In this sense of kinship with its Western cousin, African reggae often concerns itself with social and political matters, as on Sonny Okosun (a.k.a. Okosuns)'s two vital recordings here. The sound quality, with plenty of vinyl clicks and scratches, leaves something to be desired, but it is more than made up for by the quality of the music itself, and compiler Ken Bilby's excellent liner notes make this a keystone collection in a still-evolving genre.

Derek Rath

Desert Blues ♪♪♪♪♪ (Network, 1995, compilation prod. Christian Scholze, Jean Trouillet)

Nubia, Mali, Algeria, Ethiopia, Sudan, Gambia, Senegal, Guinea, Morocco, Mauritania genre: African folk, American blues, African/blues hybrids

Hamza El Din (Nubia); Oumou Sangare (Mali); Baly Othmani/Steve Shehan (Algeria/USA); Ali Farka Touré/Ry Cooder (Mali/USA); Aster Aweke (Ethiopia); Baaba Maal (Senegal); Abdel Gadir Salim (Sudan); Mahmoud Ahmed (Ethiopia); Tata Dindin (Gambia); Abou Djouba (Senegal); Kanté Manfila (Guinea); Hassan Hakmoun/Adam Rudolph (Morocco/USA); Dimi Mint Abba (Mauritania); Ali Farka Touré/Taj Mahal (Mali/USA); Ensemble El Moukhadrami (Mauritania); Sali Sidibe (Mali); Sona Diabate (Guinea).

Beautifully packaged and drawing from the catalogs of many labels, Desert Blues is an in-depth, two-CD exploration of the tangible, visceral connections between the music of Western and Northern Africa and the blues of America. Rather than instrumental or structural similarities, the focus is on the voice and the role of singers as repositories of news, stories, and tradition (like the jalis or griots of West Africa), as well as their soulful evocation of the human spirit and desires. Highlights abound among impeccably chosen selections from a wealth of major talent, showcasing myriad styles from Ethiopia to Gambia, along with some interesting contemporary fusion experiments. The recordings of Malian singer-guitarist Ali Farka Touré and American Ry Cooder are perhaps the best-known and most obvious example, but other pairings like Baly Othmani and Steve Shehan show equally inventive respect for roots and possibilities for new expression. Many of the individual men and

compilation albums: africa

women represented here (such as, notably, Malian rising star Oumou Sangare) are major vocal talents regardless of specific style or culture. Well annotated in German, French, and English and with plenty of bibliographic information, Desert Blues is an essential collection that should be on anyone's world-music Top 10 list.

Derek Rath

Electric and Acoustic Mali ♪♪♪♪ (Hemisphere, 1994, compilation prod. Gerald Seligman)

Mali
genre: Folk, pop

Sekouba "Bambino" Diabaté (Guinea); Kagja Tangara; Lobi Traore; Dounanke Koita; Bougouniere Diarrah Sanogo; Les Soeurs Sidibe; Issa Bagayogo; Djeneba Diakite; Kagbe Sidibe; Wassolon Fenin; Ami Koita; Kerfala Kante (Guinea). (All artists are from Mali, except where noted otherwise.)

As in many African countries, in Mali there is no conflict between folk and pop styles. You might call the music here "evolving folk" just as well as "pop." The main traditional instruments—balafon (xylophone) and kora (harp-lute)—play side-by-side with drum kit, electric guitar (if often played in a style that closely mimics the rhythms and tonalities of the kora), and synthesizers. Although most artists on this disc are unknown outside of Mali, their music has a non-stop groove and exuberant energy that wouldn't be out of place on dancefloors anywhere in the world. Highlights include Dounanke Koita's funky mix of electric guitars and traditional percussion; the acoustic "blues" of Issa Bagayogo; and the searing vocal prowess of Ami Koita. The two artists from Guinea share common cultural roots with Mali's Malinke people, and their music fits easily into the album's mosaic.

j. poet

Ethiopian Groove: The Golden Seventies ♪♪♪♪ (Abyssinian, compilation prod. Francis Falceto)

Ethiopia
genre: Eskita, R&B

Alemayehu Eshete; Hirut Bekele; Tamrat Ferendji; Aster Aweke; Bzunesh Bekele; Wallias Band; Ayalew Mesfin; Asseletetch Ashine/Getenesh Kebret. (All artists are from Ethiopia.)

Taken from the roster of Kaifa Records, these 16 cuts were all recorded in the 1970s period considered a golden age in Ethiopian music. A curious melange of traditional Ethiopian sounds and imported grooves from American R&B, jazz, and European pop, this is a hybrid that has never been emulated anywhere else. The local vocal styles, redolent of the Middle East and Africa in equal amounts, seem at first listen to be at odds with the churning funk and jazz grooves laid down by police and military bands—the wellspring for virtually all musicians of the period—but once accustomed to the sound it is easy to recognize some extremely soulful performances. The recordings were done in rudimentary circumstances, often in hotels or clubs with just one or two microphones, but what they lack in fidelity they make up for in immediacy and vitality. Some landmark sides are contained herein, including the first outings from Aster Aweke, probably Ethiopia's best-known star internationally, and support from some of the best back-up outfits including Shebelle's, Wallias, Dahlak, and the Black Lion Band. Soon after these tracks were made the military cracked down and the nightlife that spawned this music was snuffed out, leaving a tiny legacy of historically important and highly entertaining recordings such as those preserved here.

Derek Rath

Holding Up Half the Sky: Voices of African Women ♪♪♪♪½ (Shanachie, 1997, compilation prod. Randall Grass)

International
genre: Popular African music

The Mahotella Queens (South Africa); Angélique Kidjo (Benin); Kiné Lam (Senegal); Äicha Koné (Ivory Coast); Stella Chiweshe (Zimbabwe); M'Bilia Bel (Congo), Ami Koita (Mali); Malouma Mint Miadeh (Mauritania); Miriam Makeba (South Africa); the Lijadu Sisters (Nigeria); Malika (island of Naum in Kenya); Tshala Muana (Congo); Netsanet Mellesse (Ethiopia); Dorothy Masuka (Zimbabwe).

Often restricted in both classic and current roles, on this album—part of a series also spotlighting women in reggae (reviewed on page 914) and Celtic and Asian music (page 913 and 856, respectively)—African female performers get to stretch out. Some have an advantage, such as those in the griot (oral historian) culture of West Africa, where women have great involvement in the music-making, while others jam in the increasing number of nightclubs as much of the old conservatism dissipates from region to region. The Mahotella Queens, gigging since the early 1960s, have been hitmakers longer than any other female African group. Angélique Kidjo (très moderne, with her French production team) offers a standout performance of her international hit "Batonga"—a story of a young woman who annoys the rich by dancing like a princess. Stella Chiweshe is the only prominent female player of mbira (thumb piano) music—a style usually reserved for males. The influence of Miriam Makeba is so significant that her nickname is "Mama Africa." Malika (meaning "queen"), whose birth name is Asha Abdo Suleiman, is a master of the East African (particularly Swahili) tarabu style. Dorothy Masuka has sung with Makeba and is known as "Queen of Zimbabwe Blues and Jazz." Holding

Up Half the Sky: Voices of African Women helps these and the other stellar performers continue to prove that sisters are indeed doin' it for themselves—and for us.

Stacy Meyn

The Igede of Nigeria: Drumming, Chanting and Exotic Percussion ♪♪♪½ (Music of the World, 1991, prod. Robert Nicholls, Bob Haddad)

Nigeria
genre: Igede traditional

Ainu Center Choir, soloist Eje Onminyi; Etuh Ensemble; Ijege Ensemble; Obohu villagers; Onyeweh Children's Ensemble; Ogirinye Ensemble; Aitah Ensemble of Obohu; Aitah Ensemble of Andibla. (All artists are from Nigeria.)

The Igede people of Benue State are far removed from the Yoruba culture of Nigeria's capital Lagos and from the legacy of Nigerian pop stars like King Sunny Adé or Fela Kuti. It is hard to assess how musically significant the Igede are, being just one of more than 400 ethnic groups in Nigeria, yet music plays a central and highly regarded role in their traditional life. Igede men join an ensemble so that a group exists to play at their own funeral (funerals are not sorrowful events but a celebration of that person's achievements). These groups will play at all ceremonies from births and marriages to social dances or worship. A wide range of their improvised tunes are represented in this collection, including wakes, Christian hymns sung polyphonically by children's choirs, and songs reflecting the Igede's own beliefs. The sound quality of these 1978 recordings is clear, though the voices are given priority over instruments in the mix. As to the latter, the album features choirs from various villages chanting as they play percussion. They hammer an iron spear, or ijachi, into the ground, where clappers attached to the spear vibrate and clatter. The chime of the ojeh, a metal gong; the rattle of icheche (pebble-filled shakers); and the beat of the ubah (skin drum) are accompanied by the high-pitched aji (tin whistle) and bellowing oko (gourd trumpet) for a raw and lively experience.

David Poole

The Indestructible Beat of Soweto ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1986, compilation prod. Trevor Herman) Thunder before Dawn: The Indestructible Beat of Soweto, Volume Two ♪♪♪♪ (Earthworks, 1987, compilation prod. Trevor Herman) Freedom Fire: The Indestructible Beat of Soweto, Volume Three ♪♪♪♪ (Earthworks, 1990, compilation prod. Trevor Herman)
The Kings & Queens of Township Jive: Modern Roots of the Indestructible Beat of Soweto ♪♪♪♪♪ (Earthworks, 1990, compilation prod. Trevor Herman)
Jive Soweto: The Indestructible Beat of Soweto, Volume Four ♪♪♪♪ (Earthworks, 1992, compilation prod. Trevor Herman)
A Taste of the Indestructible Beat of Soweto ♪♪♪♪ (Earthworks, 1993, compilation prod. Trevor Herman)

South Africa
genre: Mbaqanga

Udokotela Shange Namajaha; Nelcy Sedibe; Umahlathini Nabo; Amaswazi Emvelo; Mahlathini Nezintombi Zomgoashiyo; Moses Mchunu; Nganeziyamfisa No Khambalomvaleliso; Johnson Mkhalali; Ladysmith Black Mambazo; Dilika; Abafakasi; Jozi; Makgona Tshole Band; Malombo; Mahotella Queens; Inkunzi Emdaka; J.J. Chauke & the Tiyimeleni Young Sisters; Isaac Sibiya; Bra Sello; Abafana Baseqhudeni; Lulu Masilela; Mbazo; Thomas Phale; Soul Brothers; West Nkosi; Ihashi Elimhlophe; Sipho Mabuse; Amadoda Ahlangene; Mbongeni Ngema; Steve Kekana; Mzwakhe Mbuli. (All artists are from South Africa.)

The single most important series of world-music albums ever put out in England or the U.S. is also the best. Thirteen years after its initial release, The Indestructible Beat of Soweto still carries the kind of knockout punch its title promises: if I may put it mildly, this is a perfect album, one of the greatest compilations of any style ever assembled, and in particular perhaps the single best African pop release of all time. From the pinched, spellbinding electric-guitar twang of Udokotela Shange Namajaha's "Awungilobolele," which opens the album, to the keening violin of the same band's instrumental "Sobamba," which brings it to its mid-point climax, to Ladysmith Black Mambazo's haunting a cappella "Nansi Imali," which closes it, Indestructible doesn't step wrong for a minute. Anyone unconvinced of the mbaqanga style's majesty after hearing this has tin ears.

That first Indestructible fostered a series of titles in its image, and although none of the numbered volumes that followed quite lives up to the original (how could they?), each is worthy enough on its own terms. Thunder before Dawn hews closest to the first album's formula, and had it not followed such a masterpiece it might have been accorded a bit more of the respect it deserved. Highlights include Johnson Mhhalali's joyous instrumental "Sunshine Boots" and a trio of cuts by the great goat-voiced "groaner" Mahlathini. Freedom Fire stretches out, going for an hour and slackening a bit on selection. Titles like Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens' "Thuto Kelefa" and J.J. Chauke & the Tiyimeleni Young Sisters' "Madyisa Mbitsi" are still pretty indestructible, but also pretty slick—in step with changing times in South Africa, but still disappointing to fans of the rougher earlier editions. Jive Soweto is longer still (67 minutes), and while the series ensures brand-name quality, it's a rather sad sign when the best cut on the album (Mahlathini & the Queens' "Jive Makgona") is a glossed-up remake of a readily available, far superior track from the same series.

The original "Jive Makgona" is on The Kings & Queens of Township Jive, which for my money is every bit as enjoyable as the 1986 album, if not quite as galvanic. This is a straight-up party record, and pity any gathering that can't groove to it: Abafana Baseqhudeni's "Mubi Umakhelwane" leads it off angular and in-the-pocket, while instrumental gems like Thomas Phale's sax-led "Platform 14" and West Nkosi's "Chillis 500" (featuring the best wah-wah guitar part this side of Hendrix's "Voodoo Child") raise the roof of any building you play them in. Absolutely essential.

The Indestructible series wasn't the original's only legacy: Earthworks spawned a minor cottage industry in its wake, highlighting artists featured on the compilations by giving them their own albums. The company therefore released A Taste of the Indestructible Beat of Soweto, a sampler volume of all but the first in the series plus related titles. While many find the album as classic as the first Indestructible and Kings & Queens, it's actually rather stiff. There's great stuff here, but the sequencing—a key element of the other albums' success—is indifferent: Taste doesn't flow, leaving it flat and disappointing. Besides, who just wants a taste when you can eat the whole meal?

Michaelangelo Matos

Jali Kunda: Griots of West Africa & Beyond ♪♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1996, prod. Bill Laswell, Foday Musa Suso)

International genre: West African folk

Hundreds of musicians, all from the Senegambia region.

The griots (a.k.a. jali) of West Africa are oral historians and troubadours who have passed down and preserved their region's culture for more than 800 years. The music on this magnificent CD, which was selected and arranged by legendary griot Foday Musa Suso and produced by his frequent collaborator, the ever-prolific first-world fusionist Bill Laswell, is gloriously vibrant, collecting songs performed by some of West Africa's most outstanding talents. The majority of the tunes prominently feature the lyrical beauty of the kora, the 21-stringed harp-lute favored by many griots, but you'll also hear the balafon (a wooden xylophone with gourd resonators); the kutiro drums; the newo (metal percussion played exclusively by women); and the nyanyer (a one-stringed fiddle). Coming in a box including a 96-page book filled with gorgeous photos and entensive background on the tracks and the region, this package provides a great overview of West African musical history—but collaborations with the likes of Laswell, experimental composer Philip Glass, and jazz saxophonist Pharoah Sanders show that this is not a culture content with resting on that history, however illustrious.

Bret Love

Juju Roots: 1930s–1950s ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1985, prod. Chris Waterman)

Nigeria
genre: Juju

Irewoloede Denge and Dickson Oludaiye; Tunde King and His Group; Ayinde Bakare and His Group; Ojo Babajide and His Ibadan Juju Group; Jolly Orchestra; S.S. Peters and His Group; Lagos Mozart Orhestra; Julius Olofin and His Group; Rafiu Bankole and His Group; Ojoge Daniel and His Juju Band; C.A. Balogan and His Abalabi Group; J.O. Araba and His Rhythm Blues; J.O. Oyesiku and His Rainbow Quintette; Irewolede Denge and His Group. (All artists are from Nigeria.)

Juju Roots traces the growth and diversity of a style of Nigerian music that has been popularized around the world by stars King Sunny Adé and Ebenezer Obey. Arising from a soup of influences in Lagos around the late 1920s and early '30s, juju developed chiefly in the Yoruba community, serving as entertainment, political commentary, and social ritual at weddings, funerals, and naming ceremonies. At the same time, juju's broad audience—traders, clerks, and sailors from many nations—reflected the "melting pot" nature of Lagos. Following the lead of juju pioneer Tunde King, many early ensembles made use of four people: a guitar- or banjo-playing singer, a tambourine player, a gourd rattle player, and a triangle player doubling on vocals. The first half of the CD presents some songs from these early groups, showing their debt to the simple verse-chorus palm-wine guitar-and-percussion ensembles that preceded them. The guileless charm of "Ojo Davies" and "Abasi Olubadan," for instance, derives from the melody of British folk music filtered through a palm-wine aesthetic. The remainder of the CD follows juju through the postwar period, presenting several progressive styles as well as one called toy motion, which revisits the old palm-wine with renewed energy. Notable are "Sowemimo" by Rafiu Bankole, with its funky interplay of guitar and percussion, and "Egan Mik Ko Ye O" by C.A. Balogun, a very bluesy example of the Abalabi style. Also included to give a sense of context are several cuts from other genres that were popular at the time, such as the brass-band sound of the Lagos Mozart Orchestra. As with the Mbube Roots CD (reviewed on page 846), the detail of the liner notes makes the listening better by pointing out instrumental or melodic details that might otherwise pass unnoticed. Overall, a great sonic and scholarly success!

Jeffrey Muhr

Madagasikara One: Current Traditional Music of Madagascar ♪♪♪♪ (Ace/Globestyle, 1986, prod. Ben Mandelson, Roger Armstrong)

Madagasikara Two: Current Popular Music of Madagascar ♪♪♪♪ (Ace/Globestyle, 1986, prod. Ben Mandelson, Roger Armstrong)

Madagascar

genre: Gorodao, Hira-Gasy, salegy, waltz, sova, vakisova, jijy, zana kira, tromba, sigaoma

Rakotofra; Martin Rakotoarimanana; Daniel Tombo; Marceline Vaviroa; Georges Norbert; L. Honore Rosa; Rabenaivo Group; David Andriamamonjy; Tsimialona Volambita; Zeze (Rabenja Ravelonandro); Groupe "Son"; Rossy; Mahaleo; Trio "Fa"; Ny Sakelidalana; Les Smockers; Tarika Sammy; Nonot Kidza. (All artists are from Madagascar.)

This pair of CDs presents a broad cross-section of styles, played by some of Madagascar's finest musicians. Like the island's culture as a whole, Malagasy (the adjectival form of "Madagascar") music absorbs elements from many other places. The valiha, for example, a Malagasy zither with strings stretched around a central bamboo shaft, closely resembles an instrument found in New Guinea, while the jejo vaotavo stick zither looks quite like a monochord used in Southeast Asia. Indeed, Madagascar's first inhabitants are thought to have journeyed across the Indian ocean from as far away as Southeast Asia and the Polynesian islands to the African mainland before arriving on their island home of today. Following these original pioneers were Bantus and other mainland Africans, Arab traders, and the inevitable Portuguese, British, and French colonial settlers. While Malagasy music forges elements from all of these peoples, it is absolutely unique. It has an unmistakable jauntiness and sense of rhythm that are difficult to pin down, but immediately set it apart from other African music. These features are readily apparent on tracks like "Kilalao" by valiha master Zeze and Groupe "Son," which incorporates delicate melodic passages, unusual percussive punctuation, and cascading runs on the valiha.

Though the set consists of a "traditional" and a "popular" CD, the distinction between the two is somewhat ambiguous. Malagasy musicians seem to have resisted succumbing to Western pop music all at once. Instead, many have modernized their ensembles a bit with electric instruments, and experimented with or "stretched" tradition without abandoning it altogether. Often the inspiration for new forms of Malagasy pop still comes not from Western music but from traditional regional styles. For instance, Rossy and his eight-piece band, who kick off the second CD, play a music called sova or vakisova, which is intended to unite the music of all six of Madagascar's provinces. Such forms of fusion are at once a testament to the creativity of Malagasy musicians and to the vitality of the traditional forms they have drawn upon. Yet Malagasy artists are certainly not averse to cross-pollinating their music with other influences. Rossy, it might be argued, despite his regard for native genres, contributes the most glossy pop-oriented songs on the set. Les Smockers, a working band around the capital Antananarivo's clubs, plays a cut called "Sarotra" that, like many on the second volume, is undeniably infused with mainland African pop. On the traditional (but still otherwise-influenced) end of the spectrum, Andriamamonjy contributes "Nilentika/Tazana Kely," a lovely medley of waltzes on solo accordion that was written "by a lady in Tamatave" but undoubtedly owes a debt to the sea chanteys of colonial times. With its spectrum of some of the island's most important performers, this set is a great starting point for a collection of Malagasy music. The informal text and storytelling of the liner notes by compiler Ben Mandelson (a secret member of mad worldbeat fusionists 3 Mustaphas 3) are an excellent complement to the relaxed variety of music found here.

Jeffrey Muhr

Makossa Connection: The Best Of, Volumes 1–4 ♪♪♪ (Sonodisc, 1993, prod. Aladji Toure)

Cameroon

genre: Makossa

Prince Eyengo; Guy Lobe; Emile Kangue; Manulo; Moni Bille; Ben Decca; J.C. Mbimbe; Salle John; Lapiro De Mbanga; Ndidy Dibango; Petit Pays; Gilly Doumbe; Hoigen Ekwalla. (All artists are from Cameroon.)

Those familiar with the makossa style only through Manu Dibango's '70s hit "Soul Makossa" will be plenty surprised by this series. Drawing from the collection of Paris-based T.J.R. Music, it showcases some of the bigger names in the genre, many of whom are relatively unknown outside of it. The sound is close to soukous (African rumba) from neighboring Congo, but less strident. Perhaps because of the Paris connection it also shares a production quality with the late-'80s sound of zouk from Guadalupe and Martinique's expatriates in France. Stylistically it has some of zouk's tropical sway, with just a little of its own inherent Cuban influence, as much Oriente as rumba. The best cuts are those that feature more live musicians than synthesizers, and many of these extended opuses swing inventively and hard. But the aforesaid lackluster and cheesy electronic sound mars several offerings, and the low-budget packaging contains absolutely no information on the artists or the music, rendering this less than satisfactory as an introduction to the genre.

Derek Rath

Master Drummers of Dagbon: Drumming from Northern Ghana, Vols. 1–2 ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992, prod. John Miller Chernoff)

Ghana
genre: African drumming

Alhaji Ibrahim Abdulai, group leader; individual members not identified. (All artists are from Ghana).

Ethnomusicologist John Miller Chernoff began his studies in Africa with the ambitious hope of learning about the continent's entire panorama of music. Realizing, after a year in Ghana, that he could not hope to master even a fraction of that one nation's traditions, he settled on documenting a musical form that inspired him—the percussion music of the Dagbamba people of Dagbon in northern Ghana. Drumming has a central place in Dagbamba society—drummers perform for festivals, dances, and ceremonies; to honor neighboring peoples by learning their beats; to drum the "praise-names" of great chiefs or ancestors; even to drum episodes from the history of Dagbamba culture. As Chernoff describes it, Dagbamba drumming blends "the clarity of the music of the savannah cultures with the driving power of the music of the forest cultures." Indeed, the 36 drum beats compiled on this two-volume set exhibit plenty of emotional power and driving force. What's more, their intricate polyrhythmic patterns, made with ensembles composed of two types of drums, are performed with exhilarating virtuoso musicianship. Chernoff, though a careful scholar in his liner notes, is not afraid to let us cut loose and enjoy the music—in fact, he suggests that the visceral impact of the live ensemble is best reproduced "by using headphones at high volume."

Jeffrey Muhr

Mbube Roots: Zulu Choral Music from South Africa, 1930s–1960s ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1987, prod. Veit Erlmann)

South Africa
genre: Mbube

Bantu Glee Singers; Crocodiles; Fear No Harm Choir; African Zulu Male Voice Choir; Solomon Linda's Original Evening Birds; Solomon Linda and Evening Birds; Shooting Stars; Morning Light Choir; Dundee Wandering Singers; Natal Champions; Durban Crocodiles; Scorpions; King Star Brothers; Ladysmith Black Mambazo. (All artists are from South Africa.)

Mbube Roots documents the growth and development of a style of South African a cappella music popularized internationally by the group Ladysmith Black Mambazo in recent decades. Mbube, or "lion" music, gets its name from a classic song of the genre recorded by Solomon Linda's Original Evening Birds in the late 1930s and included on the compilation. This song would later become a hit in the U.S. as "The Lion Sleeps Tonight" by the Tokens. Mbube arose from a blend of influences that included traveling American minstrel music, local wedding music, and hymns from rural missionary churches, and it moved in several stylistic directions. One of the earliest styles, isikhunzi, was based on minstrel songs, and can be heard here on "Ina Ma Wala" by the Fear No Harm Choir. A more strident style with loud vocals, called ibombing, is heard on "Yek Emarabini" by the Shooting Stars. Groups in the 1960s would react against this trend, creating isicathamiya, the "walk softly" style, which reached a pinnacle in the sweet, tightly harmonized, imploring sound typified by tracks like the King Star Brothers' "Ukuqubuda" and Ladysmith Black Mambazo's "Umama Lo." Originally, mbube performances and singing contests drew an audience consisting chiefly of Zulu migrant workers in cities such as Durban and Johannesburg, but the music garnered a wider following throughout South Africa when it began to receive airplay on the South African Broadcasting Service (SABC) in the late '60s. Around the same time, Ladysmith Black Mambazo would bring the vocal art to a higher level of refinement, fueling its popularity both at home and abroad. This CD features superbly illuminating liner notes, and the track selection includes a number of songs from the archives of the SABC that were never released commercially. The soulful sound of the recordings and the attention to historical detail in the text make this a valuable acquisition for those interested in the development of African popular music, or lovers of vocal music in general. Anyone who enjoys this CD will no doubt savor its companion, Juju Roots, which is reviewed on page 844.

Jeffrey Muhr

The Moon and the Banana Tree: New Guitar Music from Madagascar ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1996, prod. Paul Hostetter)

Madagascar
genre: Guitar

Ralanto; Johnny; D'Gary; Dama Mahaleo; Haja; Colbert; Germain Rakotomavo; Solo Razaf; Etienne Ramboatiana; Dédé. (All artists are from Madagascar.)

This outstanding compilation of Malagasy guitar music features chiefly lesser-known musicians, along with a few stars like D'Gary and Mahaleo whose work has been released outside of Madagascar. With over 20 cuts, there's plenty of good music to listen to, with influences from funk, jazz, and even country & western, ranging from the Kottke-esque fingerstyle of Johnny on "Manina," to the classical symmetry of Germain Rakotomavo's contributions. While all the artists show impressive instrumental skills, perhaps a more important strength of these guitarists is their ability to avoid modern homogeneity by keeping one foot planted in native traditional music. Whether by playing recognizably traditional melody and rhythm, or by re-creating the timbre and tone of native instruments, the musicians here imaginatively adapt the guitar to traditional styles. Haja and Johnny, for example, damp their strings by stuffing a fragment of foam rubber or leather under the bridge, creating a sound much like that of the marovany, a native harp similar to the valiha, Madagascar's "national instrument." Haja uses this technique, called guitare etouffee, to produce a bright, staccato tone that highlights his expert runs on "Fiainana," while Johnny's "Mailaka," equally skillful, creates a softer, mellower sound. Some of the artists featured here also appear on the compilation series A World Out of Time, reviewed on page 852.

Jeffrey Muhr

Morocco: Crossroads of Time ♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1995, compilation prod. Randall Barnwell, Bill Lawrence)

Morocco
genre: Traditional Moroccan folk

Abdelkrim Rais Ensemble; Rais Najib Ensemble; Binizi-Zoughari; Jilala; Isaac Ouanounou; Guedra; Ganawa; Halima Chedli Ensemble; Najat Aatabu; Nouamane Lahlou. (All artists are from Morocco).

Morocco has one of the world's richest cultural traditions, inspiring creative geniuses including artist Henri Matisse, writers Paul Bowles and William S. Burroughs, and musicians ranging from jazz legends like Ornette Coleman and Pharoah Sanders to rock stars like Jimi Hendrix and the Rolling Stones (whose member Brian Jones, coincidentally, first introduced the Western world to the country's acclaimed Master Musicians of Jajouka). Listening to Morocco: Crossroads of Time, it's easy to see why these artists were so fascinated with this mystical culture whose geographical location on ancient trade routes led to its incorporation of elements from the musical traditions of Asia, Africa, Europe, and the Middle East. Through 10 songs and two ambient sound recordings made in the medinas (or marketplaces) of Fez and Marrakesh, the listener is taken on an aural tour of this magical land, from Bowles's 1959 recording of Abdelkrim Rais's Andalusian orchestral ensemble, to Binizi-Zoughari's hypnotic Ganawi (a.k.a. Gnawa) rhythms, to Isaac Ouanounou's spiritual Jewish folksong and Guedra's syncopated Sufi-style healing chants. Including a mixed-media book with 64 pages of gorgeous photos, enlightening cultural insights, and detailed track listings, this album is the cheapest ticket to an enriching Moroccan cultural experience you're likely to find.

Bret Love

Music from Rwanda ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1999)

Rwanda genre: Rwandan folk

Hutu, Tutsi, and Twa tribal ensembles and individuals, not all credited.

Rwanda spells genocide in the 1990s, and given that unshakable connotation, you will hear war in these songs. There is a song in praise of an army corps, sung to a hand-clapped martial rhythm, though it comes from the Twa ethnic group, which was marginal to the 1994 Rwandan tragedy. A Hutu man sings "The War Cry is Long," accompanying himself on a musical bow, which sounds like a lute strummed by a pair of clacking scissors. Actually, the track here that will curdle your blood has nothing to do with war: it's a late-night drinking song improvised by Tutsi cowherds, pierced by ululations that probably mean something like "yeah buddy!" but sound exactly like a scream from a slit throat. These field recordings were made in the mid-'50s when genocide still had a Nazi ring (with American undertones, given Hiroshima). The liner notes are skimpy, but still suggest the cultural divisions—a massive Hutu peasant majority ruled by a tiny Tutsi royalty—that have erupted periodically in warfare, none more devastating than the 1994 Hutu-led genocide. Perhaps we can enjoy the driving Tutsi royal drums, though, without imagining the peasant cowherds they terrified, and the Tutsi court bards have charm regardless of their attachment to power. It's the Hutu, however, who sound most ordinary in these selections. They sing a wedding anthem with hand-clapping that ranks among the classics of African choral song. There are two Hutu flute pieces; one, called "Difficult Woman" and intended to drive away cattle marauders, imitates its title and is sure to do its job. The real beauty here, though, is a hummable, Afropop-ready Hutu ditty sung against a thumb piano, the title of which is demurely translated as "Too Old to Procreate." From the same mouth issues love, gripes, and war cries; the same hands strum strings, finger flute holes, and slide machetes across the throats of neighbors. This paradox is not Rwandan, nor African, but human, hideously human.

Chris King

Music of the !Kung Bushmen ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian Folkways, 1962)

Botswana genre: !Kung music

Artists unidentified.

This legendary field recording has the feel of a relic. Part of its mystique is that its performers and recording location are nameless. The technician, a young Canadian mining engineer

compilation albums: africa

named John Phillipson, was not even sure in what country he made the recording. He gives the location in the vast Kalahari Desert only by approximate longitude and latitude—apparently Botswana. As explained in the fascinating field notes, his interaction with the subjects was completely non-verbal. The Bushmen, now preferably referred to as the San or !Kung San, had—and to some degree still maintain—one of the oldest lifestyles in the world. These nomads have lived in much the same way in southern Africa for at least 4,000 years, long before the now-dominant Bantu herding tribes migrated into the region, let alone any palefaces. As nomads in an extremely dry, hot climate, the San traditionally took next to nothing with them as they traveled, even weak or handicapped members of the tribe. Yet music is an almost continual part of their lives, so their few possessions include light, compact instruments. These include a kalimba-like thumb piano, which produces a wavery plucking sound, and a one-stringed bamboo "fiddle." Its reedy screeching sound suggests that of a virtuoso cricket. The third instrument included here is the voice: giggles, hums, nursery rhymes, and the characteristic San tongue click (represented by the exclamation point in "!Kung"). The sound quality is good considering the conditions and equipment—Phillipson was backpacking alone. Tracks stop and start abruptly, adding to the eerieness. The overall effect is rhythmic, soothing, hypnotic, almost psychedelic. This is the sound of a dry, harsh garden of Eden.

Wif Stenger

The Nairobi Beat (Kenyan Pop Music Today) ♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1989, compilation prod. Douglas B. Patterson)

Kenya
genre: Afropop

D.O. 7 Shirati Jazz; Mbiri Young Stars; Super Bunyore Band; Original Kilimambogo Stars; Maroon Commandos; Gatundu Boys; Migori Super Stars; Kalambya Sisters; Bana Likasi; Mayanja Bungoma Jazz Band. (All artists are from Kenya.)

Nairobi, Kenya's capital city, is far more than a national musical hub; it is a crossroads for musicians from across the continent. And although Swahili is the most widespread language in African music, this album spotlights a variety of tongues, from the Kikuyu of the Gatundu Boys and the Mbiri Young Stars' Luo, to songs in languages including Kamba, Bukusu, and Luhya. While The Nairobi Beat is a good overview of Kenya's sounds of the '80s, it is no longer exactly "Kenyan Pop Music Today." These musicians are obviously enjoying the novelty of drum machines and synthesizers, but their music sounds dated.

David Poole

Ngoma: Music from Uganda ♪♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1997, compilation prod. Wade Patterson, Bob Haddad)

Uganda
genre: Folk music

Wat-mon Cultural Group; Edukut.William; Tebifaanana Abifuna Cultural Group; Nebbi Community Adungu Group; Nsawo Mbaire Group; Ndere Troupe; Sande, Peter Kabodha, and Musee Kasata. (All artists are from Uganda.)

Ngoma —which means both "drum" and "dance" in many Bantu languages—is the savory first fruits of a wonderful initiative: Uganda's premier folkloric group, the Ndere Troupe, traveling their nation's rural areas with top-notch documentary technology, recording grass-roots performance. We can't see the dancing on a CD, of course, but the drumming (always accompanied by rich, raw choral singing) is feisty and dynamic, even when the drum is the earth, beaten by sticks to drive out termites for collection and consumption. The material ranges from that humble endeavor to a traditional royal dance, the Baksimba, which also has a gastronomic aspect, since the drum pattern imitates a king's praise song upon drinking the kingdom's first batch of banana beer. This record feasts the ear with more than percussion and singing: the charming tones of the akogo (thumb piano) accompany a song admonishing a drunkard; an adungu (harp) and rigurigi (fiddle) drive a youth protest song; and the enanga (zither) backs a bard's epic musings and the stomping feet of a communal dance. This record is as full of life as the seven ethnic groups represented.

Chris King

Queens of African Music ♪♪♪♪♪ (Music Club, 1997, compilation prod. Rick Glanvill)

International
genre: World music

Angélique Kidjo (Benin); Mahotella Queens (South Africa); Soukous Stars (Congo); Tarika (Madagascar); Nahawa Doumbia (Mali); Oumou Diobate (Mali-Guinea); Ami Koita (Mali); Oumou Sangare (Mali); Yvonne Chaka Chaka (South Africa); M'Bilia Bel (Congo); Tshala Muana (Congo); Nayanka Bell (Ivory Coast).

Hearing this record is like standing on a street corner in an African hub city, catching brief sights and sounds from travelers bringing new stories with them. In this case most of the travelers are women, and most are those whose music is evolving using contemporary percussion techniques. They also share concerns of identity, both as individuals in relationships and citizens in the midst of change in their nations. A track that brings these elements (and many of the singers) together is Yvonne Chaka Chaka's "Legends," a celebration of the pioneers of African consciousness in music.

Kerry Dexter

Resting Place of the Mists: New Valiha and Marovany Music from Madagascar ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1996, compilation prod. Paul Hostetter)

Madagascar
genre: Folk music

Akombaliha; Tiana and Sammy; Trio Ratovo; Sylvestre Randafison; Rajery; Lemaditsy; Done and Dede. (All artists are from Madagascar.)

The valiha and marovany are Malagasy harps that produce some of the warmest tones on earth. ("Malagasy" is the adjectival form of "Madagascar.") The valiha, recognized as Madagascar's national instrument, is a bamboo tube with strings stretched lengthwise all around it; the marovany is a box-like wooden adaptation of the valiha with its origins most likely in bamboo scarcity. The instruments have a vast traditional repertoire, and there are many contemporary masters conversant with it, as well as with modern compositions and borrowings from other traditions (waltzes, for one). This album documents Madagascar's greatest valiha and marovany players plucking a superlatively pleasant, lush set of traditional and modern tunes. The playing is consistently at the level of, say, Leo Kottke at his most melodic, and the occasional accompanying vocals and flutes add gorgeous new tonal dimensions. This and the companion volume of Malagasy guitar tunes, The Moon and the Banana Tree (reviewed on page 846), are essential listening for lovers of melody.

Chris King

The Rough Guide to the Music of Kenya & Tanzania ♪♪♪♪♪ (World Music Network, 1996, compilation prod. Phil Stanton)

Kenya, Tanzania
genre: Benga, Islamic taarab, ngoma

Simba Wanyika (Kenya); Victoria Kings (Kenya); Samba Mapangala (Kenya); D.O. Misiani & Shirati Jazz (Kenya); Abana Ba Nasery (Kenya); Henry Makobi (Kenya); Ogwang Lelo Okoth with Paddy J. Onono (Kenya); Master Musicians of Tanzania (Tanzania); "Moheme" Dance Tanzania (Tanzania); Mlimani Park Orchestra (Tanzania); Juwata Jazz Band (Tanzania); Zein Musical Party (Tanzania); Culture Musical Club (Tanzania).

The Rough Guide travel books and their conjugal CD series devote themselves to exposing every worthwhile nook and cranny for the novice traveler to explore. For the CDs, this means that, while every volume has at least a few gems, most sacrifice flow for completism. The greatest exception to that rule is The Rough Guide to Kenya & Tanzania —partly because East Africa is so rich with great music, and partly because this Rough Guide moves through its terrain so expertly. The album leads off with four breathlessly exuberant shirati grooves (Victoria Kings' "V.B. Pod Wamol" is on my short-list of favorite Afropop cuts ever). These are followed by three similar-sounding tracks—same rhythms; same pretty, gritty guitar playing; just as melodically indelible—which ease up the drums and slow things down. Then the album's centerpiece: a hypnotic, traditional-sounding song by the Master Musicians of Tanzania, and an astonishing field recording of a Wagogo initiation dance, taped in Dodoma in the early '90s. The music's Islamic influences slowly push their way forward on these cuts, and blossom in the last four songs, which feature keener vocals and slower grooves than the four that opened the album. This disc moves you from A to B with extraordinary grace, which is what a tour guide is supposed to do.

Michaelangelo Matos

The Rough Guide to the Music of Zimbabwe ♪♪♪♪♪ (World Music Network, 1996, compilation prod. Phil Stanton)

Zimbabwe
genre: Mbira, chimurenga, jit, rumba

Thomas Mapfumo & the Blacks Unlimited; the Bhundu Boys; the Four Brothers; Stella Rambisai Chiweshe; Oliver Mtukudzi & the Black Spirits; Machanic Manyeruke & the Puritans; Black Umfolosi; Biggie Tembo; the Mbira Masters of Zimbabwe; the Real Sounds. (All artists are from Zimbabwe.)

This 69-minute disc offers a good cross-section of the current scene in Zimbabwe, from traditional mbira thumb-piano music, to its updating in the chimurenga style, to the more modern jit sound and African rumba variants. The music's polyrhythms develop at length; only one track here is shorter than five minutes. Leading off the album is the most famous Zimbabwean musician in the West, Thomas Mapfumo, a pivotal figure in the country's music for his band's adaptation of mbira figures to guitar, the basis of his chimurenga ("liberation war") style. Showing its acoustic origins are Stella Chiweshe and the Mbira Masters of Zimbabwe. Followers of Mapfumo's style heard here include the Four Brothers and Oliver Mtukudzi & the Black Spirits. The four-piece Machanic Manyeruke & the Puritans operate outside the mainstream with their gentle electric gospel. Sounding quite South African, Black Umfolosi is an a cappella vocal group. Originally from Zaire (Congo), the Real Sounds speed up their rumba style to fit the Zimbabwean norm. The most overtly pop-oriented group here are the Bhundu Boys, whose jit style is also evident in the track by sometime-member Biggie Tembo. Though this CD's selection is good, no texts, translations, or even lyric summaries are included, and the liner notes are incomplete.

Steve Holtje

Singing in an Open Space: Zulu Rhythm and Harmony 1962–1982 ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1990, prod. Rob Allingham)

South Africa
genre: Zulu traditional, mbaqanga

Mhleneleni Mtambo; Frans Msomi; Raymond Mbele; Aaron Nezimtobi; Amos Mkhiza; John Bhengu; M. Shezi Nezimtombi Za Kwazulu; Norman Sibisi & Izintombi Zakwa Zulu; Ishoba Lembongolo; Moses Mchunu Nezintombi Zengoma; Amagugu; Phuzushukela; Philemon Mchunu; Abafana Bomdabu. (All artists are from South Africa.)

Traditional Zulu music has evolved from acoustic guitar to a full band and the sophisticated choral productions of Ladysmith Black Mambazo or the mbaqanga style of stars like Mahlathini. This album surveys the early artists who laid the foundations for today's South African music. Their uplifting voices and guitars lilt magically; lyrics deal with the troubles of the new urban life in Durban and Johannesburg: the loneliness of separation from rural relatives is evoked in "Write Home," as are the dangers of warring Zulu gangs in "The Crooks Are Coming." Royalties were rare when a number of these recordings were made, and the flat fee paid instead meant that many of these talented musicians did not even consider a career in music, and only recorded once or twice. Some were killed in tribal conflict; some preferred to concentrate on their taxi business or return to cattle herding. On the other hand, Zululand's greatest star was John Bhengu, whose acoustic guitar blues can be heard here on "Diki Diki" and "Isidwaba." Bhengu influenced many of those who followed him, particularly the high-voiced Frans Msomi (also on this collection), who went on to form the traditional group Phuzushukela.

David Poole

The Soul of Cape Verde ♪♪♪♪ (Tinder, 1996, prod. François Post)

Cape Verde
genre: Morna, coladeira

Cesaria Evora; Humbertona & Piuna; Maria Alice; Djoshina; Luis Morais; Tito Paris; Ana Firmino & Travadinha; Teofilo Chantra; Bau; Chico Serra; Bana; Titina; Mindel Band; Simentere; Voz de Cabo Verde; Amandio Cabral; Cenina Pereira; Paulino Vieira. (All artists are from Cape Verde.)

A few years ago, most people didn't even know what continent Cape Verde was considered part of. Since Cesaria Evora has become an international star, they know Cape Verde is a collection of islands off the coast of Africa, but are still probably unaware of the archipelago's rich Creole culture, a combination of West African and European influences that has produced an amazing variety of styles. These include coladeira, a politically charged dance music likened to the calypso of Trinidad; funana, a fractured (to American ears) dance rhythm that could be the Verdean cousin of Haitian compas; and mazurka, a kind of Africanized waltz music; as well as the blues-like morna that Evora has made popular. This compilation was originally released on Lusafrica (a company that specializes in the music of Portuguese Africa), and includes a constellation of Verdean stars playing their trademark selections. Highlights include Humbertona & Piuna's gentle instrumental version of "Miss Perfumado," an Evora hit from the pen of one of Cape Verde's master composers, B. Leza; the horn-heavy sound of Teofilo Chantra's bouncy "Pais di Mel"; Bana's mellow vocals on "Serpentina"; Amandio Cabral's seductive "Cutch Cutch"; "Galo Bedjo" by Titina, another singer of morna with a style that contrasts nicely with Evora's; and "Suade" by Cenina Pereira, a singer with a more traditional morna approach.

j. poet

The Spirit of Cape Verde ♪♪♪♪♪ (Tinder, 1998)

Cape Verde
genre: Morna, funana, coladeira, batuco, tabanca

Cesaria Evora; Ildo Lobo; Tito Paris; Boy Gé Mendes; Fantcha; Bau; Maria Alice; Simentera; Mindel Band; Katchupa Rica; Mobafuco; Téofilo Chantre; Luis Morais; Celina Pereira; Vox de Cabo Verde. (All artists are from Cape Verde.)

The Cape Verde Islands, on the Atlantic trade route from Africa to South America, have evolved a unique musical tradition in which West African and Brazilian motifs coalesce with the fado of colonial Portugal to produce one of the world's richest musical heritages, the most well-known form of which is the blues-like morna. Morna's reigning queen, Cesaria Evora, starts off this 16-track compilation, setting the stage for an astonishing variety of singers and styles. As astonishing is the uniformly high standard of performance, with many of these singers primed to lose their "unknown" status. Like Brazil, a lot of the music is light and acoustically driven with the vocals sung in Portuguese, but you can also hear occasional echoes of Caribbean zouk or even a suggestion of Colombian cumbia. The music swings, even at the often-slow tempos, and the exquisite melancholy of the morna vocal styles in particular only heightens the romantic appeal. Most of the selections are less than five years old, making this both an extremely valid introduction for beginners and a valuable update for aficionados.

Derek Rath

Super Guitar Soukous ♪♪♪♪ (Tinder, 1996, prod. Gerald Seligman)

Congo
genre: Soukous

Kanda Bongo Man; Dave Depeu (Ivory Coast); Patience Dabany; Tabu Ley Rochereau; Dindo Yogo; Gueatan System (Ivory Coast); Joyce Delly; Zoukunion (Ivory Coast); Olives Guede (Ivory Coast); General Defao; Pépé Kallé and Empire Babuka; Seliko. (All artists are from Congo, except where noted otherwise.)

When soukous (a form inspired by Cuban rumba) came roaring out of Zaire (now Congo) in the late '70s, it swept Africa, and later much of the Francophone world, with its mixture of breakneck tempos and wild guitar pyrotechnics. The music's instrumental approach—the lead and tenor guitars usually play different but interlocking lead lines—set off sparks that made the style irresistible to both dancers and musicians. In the early '80s many of the genre's strongest players, led by Kanda Bongo Man and his legendary guitarist Diblo Dibala, moved to Paris, where they began adding the international touches to their sound that helped create the current interest in world music. As the global profile and commercial fortunes of soukous rose, bands all over Africa and Europe began playing it, although the compilation at hand centers on Congolese practitioners and an Ivory Coast hybrid of the style called polihet. Every track is solid, with standouts being Kanda Bongo Man and Seliko's exceptional contributions; the simmering horn charts on Dave Depeu's "Africa"; the staccato guitar work of Zoukunion's T. Matilene on "N'Nanele"; and the beautiful vocals of the late Pépé Kallé on "Soso Na Ngai."

j. poet

Township Jazz 'n' Jive: 18 South African Urban Swing Classics from the Jivin' '50s ♪♪♪♪ (Gallo Africa/Music Club, 1997, compilation prod. Graeme Ewens)

South Africa
genre: Jazz, jive

The Four Yanks; Kippie Moeketsi & the Marabi Kings; Spokes Mashiyane; the Jazz Dazzlers; the Royal Players; the Solven Whistlers; the Skylarks; the Father Huddlestone Band; Nacy Jacobs & Her Sisters; Dolly Rathebe; Orlando Seven; the Manhattan Brothers; Lemmy "Special" Mabuse; Dorothy Masuka; Solomon Linda's Original Evening Birds; Reggie Msomi's Hollywood Jazz Band. (All artists are from South Africa.)

South Africa's record industry blossomed during the 1950s to the sound of marabi, a swinging blend of township dance beats and American jazz. Eric Gallo recorded the emerging stars of Johannesburg, like Hugh Masekela on "Ndenzeni Na?" Masekela performed with Father Huddlestone's band, who generously donated Masekela's first trumpet at a time when brass instruments were in short supply. As a member of the Skylarks you can hear one of Miriam Makeba's first recordings on "Holilili," prior to the outspoken black nationalism that became her trademark in the '60s. Makeba also appears here on a couple of songs with the Manhattan Brothers. Listen for the bridge between these marabi dance tracks and the later crop of mbaquanga pop in the pennywhistle kwela melodies of songs by the Solven Whistlers or Lemmy Mabuse's "Kwela Blues." All together, Township Jazz 'n' Jive is an upbeat overview of the evolution of South African music, and the beginnings of some of its still-greatest stars.

David Poole

Viva Zimbabwe ♪♪♪♪ (Earthworks, 1983, prod. D.A. Vanrenen)

Zimbabwe
genre: African pop

Deverra Ngwena Jazz Band; the Four Brothers; Thomas Mapfumo and the Blacks Unlimited; the New Black Montana; Super Sounds; Nyami Nyami Sound; Patrick Mukwamba; James Chimombe and the O.K. Success; Elijah Madzikatire and the Brave Sun. (All artists are from Zimbabwe.)

This intense dance music from the 1980s makes even South African jive sound sluggish in comparison. While the melodic instinct and style of adept guitar riffing found on this CD have much in common with Central African pop music of the period, the lyrical content is sometimes spiced with the kind of revolutionary zeal found in Zulu jive from the South. Indeed, Thomas Mapfumo, with his chimurenga music (heard here on "Drums Have Woken Me Up"), made his name and galvanized Zimbabwe by incorporating pointed political statements against the white Rhodesian regime into songs built around Shona folk music. But most of the bands found here play straight three-chord African pop with adroit guitar fills, and cover lighter fare lyrically. The common thread of these tracks is a powerful dance rhythm. The Four Brothers follow the frenetic opening cut ("Solo and Mutsai" by the Deverra Ngwena Jazz Band) with the bass-driven celebratory romp "Congratulations," and by the fourth track, "Fatty," by the New Black Montana, the pace has elevated to a fever pitch—one is almost grateful that "He Refuses Advice," a song by Super Sounds exhorting a street drunk to change his ways, slows the tempo down a bit despite its pile-driving drums. The remainder of the disc continues in much the same buoyant vein, and will provide plenty of satisfaction for listeners in search of a party-starter or in need of a mood lift.

Jeffrey Muhr

The Wassoulou Sound: Women of Mali ♪♪♪♪ (Stern's)

Mali
genre: Wassoulou

Sali Sidibe; Oumou Sangare; Coumba Sidibe; Dienaba Diakité; Kagbe Sidibe. (All artists are from Mali.)

852 compilation albums: africa

Women comprise 90 percent of the singers in wassoulou, a genre based in songs of praise to the hunt (to which the men dance), but more recently encompassing songs of love and passion. The Arabic heritage is apparent both vocally and instrumentally, but this south-Mali style boasts its own elliptical rhythms and graceful vocals. Although the artists heard here collectively represent 30 years of popularity in the genre, it is the younger generation, such as Sali Sidibe and especially the startling Oumou Sangare, who have brought it to the foreground of world music. Every artist featured here exhibits great feminist self-confidence and vocal strength; singing in English they would be the equal of any soul songstress. Though the traditional roots are very visible, the album's nine tracks benefit from a contemporary production that heightens the magical web these trance-like performances weave on the listener. Traditional kamal ngoni lute and djembe drum are variously combined with keyboards and electric bass in a very natural and harmonious manner, respecting ancient and modern sensibilities alike. The brief liner notes give a concise background to the music while providing no details on the individual tracks, but nonetheless this album will appeal to both novice and advanced listener.

Derek Rath

A World Out of Time: Henry Kaiser and David Lindley in Madagascar, Vols. 1–3 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1992/1993/1996, prod. Birger Gesthuisen, Henry Kaiser, Paul Hostetter) genre: Kabary; vakisoava; salegy; kalon 'ny fahiny; Dama picking; Hira-Gasy; guitarre etouffee

Madagascar

Ramilison; Tarika Ramilison group; Paul Bert Rahasimanana (Rossy); Rossy group; Sameola Andriammalalahanjaona (Sammy); Sammy group; Dama Mahaleo; Mahaleo group; Rakoto Frah; Tarika Rakoto Frah group; Voninavoko group; Roger Georges; Sylvestre Randafison; Germain Rakotomavo; Ernest Randrianasolo (D'Gary); Ratovonirina Ranaivovololona (Tovo); Tovo group; Mama Sana; Johnny; Lemaditsy. (All artists are from Madagascar.)

Considering the amazing diversity, charm, and accessibility of the music heard on this set of CDs, it's hard to believe that, prior to 1991, no Malagasy music (music from Madagascar) had been released in the U.S. Late that year, guitarists David Lindley and Henry Kaiser brought the recording team of Birger Gesthuisen and Bernhard Ramroth (of the German Feuer und Eis label, which had recently released a series of CDs of Malagasy music called Madagaskar) to Antananarivo, the capital of the island, to help them sample the country's music and record jams with the local artists. Their collaboration yielded spectacular results—three excellent CDs, a Grammy nomination for the second one, and an explosion of interest in Malagasy music. In fact, A World Out of Time helped lift a number of Malagasy performers to prominence on the world-music circuit. Lindley, a virtuoso string player best known as a backing guitarist for artists such as Jackson Browne, Warren Zevon, and Linda Ronstadt; and Kaiser, reputed for his quirky forays into jazz and the avant-garde, deserve praise for staying out of the spotlight. Most of the time they wisely avoid using the musicians as a backing group to showcase their own ideas, instead serving as quiet catalysts to the musical process. Much of the time, the listener is not even aware of their presence. When they do emerge from the mix, it feels just right, as when Kaiser's peculiar, psychedelic solo closes "Tsaiky Mboly Hely," a salegy dance tune. Yet Lindley provides some of the most charming moments on the CDs by throwing old Western tunes in the direction of the Malagasy musicians to see how they will be transformed. For instance, the accordion-driven "I Fought the Law" delightfully defies pigeonholing with its Irish jig-cum-Zulu jive shape, while "I'm a Lonesome Fugitive," with Lindley on the lead vocal, redeems its tepid pop synthesizer opening when the lead guitar line is taken by a valiha bamboo zither player, with a totally endearing result. Any sense of dislocation caused by hearing these songs out of their familiar instrumental context is wiped out by the positive energy of the musicians, who seem totally relaxed working with major chord changes not that different from their own. The Malagasy artists consistently shine. High points include the remarkable valiha jam "Lemavo" by Mama Sana, which has the intensity of a gritty blues; the crystalline flute, zither, and vocal song "O Isa" by Rossy and Rakoto Frah; the country oldie "You Done Me Wrong," which begins as a Lindley slide guitar solo and is spontaneously transformed into a soulful, beckoning call by flutist Rakoto Frah; and the dignified "classical" form of the choral-and-guitar song "Ralanto," sung by Ralanto and Tarika Sammy. The first two CDs are compiled exclusively from the original field recordings of 1991, while the third combines some remaining 1991 tracks with new ones made by Paul Hostetter in 1995, as well as some live and studio tracks recorded in the U.S.

Jeffrey Muhr

The World's Musical Traditions 8: Yoruba Drums from Benin, West Africa ♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1996, compilation prod. Marcos Branda Lacerda)

Benin

genre: African drumming

The Bata Repertoire for Egungun in Pobe; Rhythm for Shango in Pobe; the Bata Repertoire for Shango in Sakete; Three Rhythms of the Dundun Ensemble from Adjarra; Two Rhythms of the Dundun Ensemble from Atchoukpa; Repertoire for Gelede in Ketou; Repertoire for Oro and Ifa in Ketou. (All artists are from Benin.)

How politically incorrect is it to criticize music that's an important part of a Third World culture? No matter how you see it, drum solos can be tedious, in rock or any type of music. But techno or hip-hop mavens should definitely check out the real beatmasters here—extensive, comprehensive liner notes (though not really for the layperson) and pictures come along with what turns out to be an instructive history lesson (other volumes in the series, and their reviews, are sprinkled across the globe and the Compilations section of this book). Still, even African music fans who dig Adé, Fela, or Ladysmith will be thrown for a loop by the minimal repetitive rhythms. This style of music is very spare and almost cries out for the visuals that are a part of its presentation. Great pains were taken to provide a very authentic recording of ancient rituals (with clear, clean audio no less)—so much so that Western ears may have a hard time getting a hold of this music. Although somewhat amelodic, the interweaving polyrhythms create depth and some variety, usually with fast tempos. The problem is that it's not varied enough for the different ensembles and tracks to be easily told apart. Seekers of African drum music might instead want to look up Avant's Drums of Death compilation, which has more detailed, complex, and exciting drum sounds, though it's not as well-recorded or educational. For raw field recordings, the less scholarly minded Westerner may prefer the Pygmies of Cameroon (on Heart of the Forest from Hannibal) and Congo (Mbuti Pygmies of the Ituri Rainforest from Smithsonian).

Jason Gross

Zulu Jive: Umbaqanga (Urban and Rural Zulu Beats from South Africa) ♪♪♪♪ (Carthage, 1984)

South Africa
genre: Mbaqanga, jive

Aaron Mbambo; Joshua Sithole; the Rainbows; Shoba. (All artists are from South Africa.)

This CD features the relentless energy, frenetic riffing, and tight rhythmic musicianship of several South African mbaqanga bands (a genre identified slightly differently in the album's title). Mbaqanga, a word meaning "dumpling" or "homemade," is applied to a raw style of South African "jive" or popular music that features choral call-and-response vocals; thick, driving dance rhythms; strident guitar playing; and three-chord melodic structures. Often thrown into the mix are instruments such as penny-whistle, accordion, and electric organ. Included here are several cuts from the early 1980s by each of three artists: Aaron Mbambo, Shoba, and Joshua Sithole, with additional tracks by Sithole's band, the Rainbows. All of the contributions make delightful listening. The blissful instrumental cuts by the Rainbows, with their driving accordion and chicken-scratch guitars, are wonderful ("Mashonisa" is particularly noteworthy for its hypnotic beat), while the buoyancy of Mbambo's "We Have Caught the Chairman" belies its ominous title. The only small complaint about this collection is that it seems to be a little on the short side—indeed, some of the tracks seem to fade out prematurely, though it's hard to tell whether this is a result of overzealous editing or the compelling quality of the music. Those who enjoy this CD will probably also like two other Carthage compilations: Viva Zimbabwe, reviewed on page 851, and Phezulu Eqhudeni ♪♪♪♪, a collection of classic (and slightly more understated) jive tracks from the mid-1970s.

Jeffrey Muhr

ASIA

Bali: Gamelan and Kecak ♪♪♪♪½ (Elektra/Nonesuch, 1989, prod. David Lewiston)

Indonesia
genre: Gamelan, kecak, gong kebyar

Gamelan Gong Sekaha Sadha Budaya, directed by I Wayan Rai S, Chokorda Raka, and I Made Sadia; I Nyoman Artika; I Made Meji; Genggong Batur Sari, Batuan, directed by I Nyoman Artika; Gamelan Salunding, Tenganan, directed by Nyoman P. Gunawan; Sadha Budaya Gamelan Gong Suling, directed by Anak Agung Raku Cameng; Gender Wayang, Sukawati, directed by I Wayan Loceng; I Wayan Sarga; I Wayan Nartha; I Ketut Balik; Sekaha Ganda Sari, Bona, directed by Gusti Putu Putra; Gamelan Gong Kebyar Sekolah Tinggi Seni Indonesia, Denpassar, directed by Dr. I Made Bandem. (All artists are from Bali.)

Twenty years after recording the famed Balinese LP Music from the Morning of the World (reviewed on page 859), producer David Lewiston returned to the island to compile further recordings and assess changes in Bali's musical culture. The CD that came out of this return journey, Bali: Gamelan and Kecak, captures the breadth and vitality of Balinese music perhaps even better than its predecessor did. As on that album, Lewiston selects a variety of gamelan (tuned percussion) styles, including the kecak chant; gong kebyar gamelan such as the exquisitely tense "Gending Kebyar Kosalya Arini"; gamelan sunding, a very ancient form played on an equally ancient, sacred ensemble of metallophones forged from iron rather than the typical bronze; and the important gender wayang ensemble, a stripped-down gamelan that backs the Balinese shadow-puppet performance. Several non-gamelan styles are also represented. The astringent "Genggong Duet" for bamboo jew's-harps and the yearning flute ensemble of "Tabuh Teleh" show a laid-back side of Balinese musical culture that, while quite pleasing, is sometimes passed over by compilers in favor of the more dramatic gamelan pieces. Lewiston's liner notes recount some interesting episodes from his return to Bali and provide commentary on each track. While deploring the negative changes that have swept through Bali, he makes it clear that the Balinese have not lost touch with their culture and their past. Indeed, the performances serve as clear evidence that, even under the pressure of tourism and Westernization, the Balinese continue to produce profound and vital music. With its diverse track selection, great musicianship, sparkling digital sound, and intriguing accompanying text, this disc has just about everything an excellent world-music compilation could need. The only thing missing here is a performance of the stunning jegog bamboo ensemble, and those hooked by this delightful recording will find one on the Music of Bali set reviewed on page 860.

Jeffrey Muhr

Bukhara: Musical Crossroads of Asia ♪♪♪½ (Smithsonian, 1991, prod. Theodore Levin, Otanazar Matykubov)

Uzbekistan genre: Sozanda, mavrigi, shashmaqam, liturgical chant

Tofakhon; Ensemble Nozanin—Gulmira Rakkhimova; Tamara Kandova; Gunchekhra Mamedova, Raya Borukhova, Saifullah Abdullaev; Hussein Kasimov; Madhi Ibodov; Ochil Ibragimov; Suleiman Takhalov; Izro Malakhov; Mahmudjan Tojiboev; Zakir Bobotonov; Saifullajan Musaev; Orif Bobo Hamro; Rakhamim Yakutelov; Yakub Meer Ochildiev; Muhammad Aminjon Nasriddinov (Tajikistan, Uzbekistan); Isaac Kataev. (All artists are from Uzbekistan except where otherwise noted.)

Since before the time of Alexander the Great, the city of Bukhara, located along the ancient "Silk Route" in Central Asia's Uzbekistan, served as a trading post and cultural center for peoples from a vast number of lands, and the diversity of people still living here, including Persians, Turko-Mongolians, even Persian-speaking Jews, is reflected in the wealth of Bukharan music. In this compilation, musicologists Levin and Matykubov select four genres from the Bukharan canon: sozanda social music; mavrigi music; the shashmaqam repertory of central Asian "classical" music; and liturgical chant. Sozanda, which takes its name from the professional female musicians who traditionally played it, is a style for performance at social occasions, such as births, weddings, veiling ceremonies, or any of the toy (celebration) events that are put on for almost any reason in Bukhara. Essentially, the music is designed to provide pure entertainment. Rousing and rhythmic, it makes for invigorating listening. Heard between the sozanda suites are a pair of mavrigi tunes. This style, traditionally performed by males who trace their ancestry to Iranian Shiite Muslim slaves brought into Bukhara, parallels sozanda in being played for similar occasions and having similarities in its structure and accompaniment. Next heard are a pair of shashmaqam songs. These "art" songs prospered in the Muslim court from the late 1700s until the Soviet revolution swept into the region. Played on the Uzbek tambur (an ancestor of the Indian sitar), or the Kashgar rabab (spike fiddle), these melodies, set to classical verse, seem to hybridize the music of the Islamic Middle East and Asia with that of the Indian subcontinent. Finally we hear a set of liturgical chants, such as the Muslim "call to prayer" and readings from Jewish kabbalistic texts. The minutely detailed annotation provided by Levin and Matykubov will be a goldmine of information for those with a specific interest in this region, but probably a bit too scholarly for the more casual listener. Those who want to explore Central Asian music in even greater depth will want to take a look at Levin's book and CD, The Hundred Thousand Fools of God.

Jeffrey Muhr

Burmese Music Series ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997, prod. Rick Heizman, Henry Kaiser)

Burma (Myanmar)
genre: Pat waing, saing waing, saung gauk

Kyaw Kyaw Naing; U Phone; U Yee Nwe; Daw Yi Yi Thant; U Ohn Lwin; U Tin Yi; Ko Ba Htay; Zaw Win Maung; Kko Kyaw Swe; Ko Thien Htay; Ko Yint Sein; U Kyi; U Tin Maung. (All artists are from Burma.)

Consisting of three CDs, grouped here for review purposes but available separately—White Elephants and Golden Ducks: Enchanting Musical Treasures from Burma, Pat Waing: The Magic Drum Circle of Burma, and Sandaya: The Spellbinding Piano of Burma—this wonderful series captures an unforgettably rich musical canon. Like much music from Southeast Asia, Burmese music puts an emphasis on percussion such as tuned drums or gongs, and often uses seven-note (heptatonic) scales—yet its frenetic, intricate sound is absolutely unique. Burmese melodies, broken into unusual phrases, flow in directions that don't sound intuitive to the Western ear, yet feel exquisitely refreshing. The most common ensemble in Burmese music is the saing waing, a group consisting of two sets of gongs called the kyi waing and maung zaing; a double-reed oboe called the hne; two sets of tuned drums called the chauk lon bat and pat waing; siwa finger cymbals; and a few other instruments. Various instruments from this group can be played solo or combined in different permutations. The Burmese have also made several Western adoptions, including the piano, slide guitar, and mandolin.

The White Elephants disc summarizes the basic Burmese sounds, with quite a variety of ensembles presented. One of the many highlights is the pair of tracks featuring the saung gauk, a gorgeous harp that is one of the classic instruments of Burma. On "Phu Pwae Lat Tin (The Hug)" it accompanies a delicate vocal, and on "Nan Bhon Thi Har Bway (Distinguished Palace for Royalty)" it trades masterful solos with a pattala bamboo xylophone. Another astonishing moment is "Ar Kar Na Ban (Heavenly Space)," a mandolin solo of staggering beauty. The Pat Waing and Sandaya discs focus more tightly on specific instruments, but also offer a variety of music. The piano, featured on Sandaya, was first imported to Burma around the late 1800s, and has come to play an important part in the nation's music. It is played solo, with a vocalist, or with various ensembles. Burmese pianists have learned to play heptatonic music in the style of the saung gauk on the diatonic keyboard using the "extra" notes as embellishment. On tracks like "Than Yoe (Simple Melody)," a learning melody, we gain a bit of insight into how root melodies are used as "skeletons" upon which elaborate improvisations are built. Yet these melodies remain wonderfully evasive, giving the songs a mysterious flavor and fostering the illusion that they are completely improvised on the spot, like some kind of traditional Asian free jazz. While each CD is well worth having, those on a limited budget can start with the fine overview provided by White Elephants without missing too much. At presstime two more volumes, Saung Gauk: The Enchanting Harp of Burma and Silver Strings of the Golden Land: Slide Guitar, Mandolin, Banjo, Violin, and Zither of Burma are planned for release and eagerly awaited.

Jeffrey Muhr

China: Time to Listen ♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1998, compilation prod. Josef Bomback)

China
genre: Chinese classical

The Huaxia Chamber Ensemble; Shan Wen Tong; Thundering Dragon; Sisi Chen; Wu Man. (All artists are from China.)

It is indeed "time to listen" to Chinese music, the traditions of which predate Western music by thousands of years. Its principles are quite different from what Westerners expect, but perhaps all the more fascinating for this. Every song comes from a story, which provides an essential historical or folkloric subtext for Chinese listeners. Composition relies on melody rather than Western-style harmony, which can sound jarring or lacking in progression and resolution to Western ears. Chinese instrumentalists will play with little concern for harmonizing with fellow musicians, their melodies operating independently—yet within strict rules and traditions. In China, professional musicians tend to be highly educated and receive a paycheck from the state, with little pressure to meet commercial demands as in the West. This cultivates confident musicianship and stable lifestyles, while also offering little incentive for musicians to push the limits of their art form. So, while this three-volume set showcases a wide variety of styles, there is little sense of an avant-garde or of rapid evolution in the music. But that music's tradition is rich enough as is, especially to unfamiliar Western listeners. It is absurd that so little Chinese music is available in the USA when China contains one-fifth of the world's population, so it is a pleasure to have this collection's window on the current state of the art.

David Poole

Deep in the Heart of Tuva: Cowboy Music from the Wild East ♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1996, prod. Ralph Leighton)

Tuva
genre: Throat-singing, overtone singing, höömeï

Oleg Kuular; Oorzhak Khunashtaar-ool; Bilchi-Maa Davaa; Shaktar Shulban; Kongar-ool Ondar; Kaigal-ool Khovalyg; Nadezhda Kuular; the Tuvan State Ensemble Sayani; Sainkho Nahchylak; Mikhail Alperin (Russia); Huun-Huur-Tu; the Bulgarian Women's Choir Angelite (Bulgaria); Albert Kuvezin; Yat-Kha; Paul "Earthquake" Pena (USA). (All artists are from Tuva except where noted otherwise.)

Largely unknown to Westerners just a few years ago, the remote corner of Asia known as Tuva is now a popular destination on the world-music map. The exotic sound of Tuvan "throat-singing," or höömeï, can be heard on a spate of CDs, and Tuvan musicians such as the group Huun-Huur-Tu now tour the world regularly. The manner in which this state of affairs came to pass is as strange and intriguing as the music itself.

The story begins with the Nobel Prize–winning physicist Richard Feynman. Feynman had been fascinated with the idea of Tuva since he came across some odd-looking postage stamps from the nation as a child. Sitting over dinner with friend Ralph Leighton in the late 1970s, Feynman proposed a trip there on a whim, even though neither of them knew a thing about Tuva. Since it was under the domination of the Soviet Union at the time, getting there turned out to be insanely difficult, even for a man of Feynman's stature. Along the way, Feynman and Leighton obtained some records of Tuvan music from a professor in Moscow, which they passed on to a local world-music DJ after recovering from the shock of the strange vocalizations they had heard. They even set up a little club they dubbed "The Friends of Tuva." Ironically, musical scholar Theodore Levin made it there (and recorded Tuva: Voices from the Center of Asia) while Feynman was still struggling to get official clearances from the Soviets. In a final twist of fate, a letter from Soviet authorities granting Feynman approval to travel in Tuva arrived just days after he died of cancer, but his efforts helped to establish a solid relationship between Tuva and the American academic community. The road paved, Tuvan music would burst onto the scene in the U.S. following the demise of the Soviet Union.

Produced by Leighton, Deep in the Heart of Tuva is a pleasurable tour through the Tuvan music scene, with an emphasis on some of the cross-cultural experimentation that has taken place in the wake of Tuva's world-music popularity. The album assembles cuts from a number of CDs in wide release, as well as some rare tracks previously available only on imports or "Friends of Tuva" editions. The first section of the CD contains several examples of "primal" or "pure" höömeï (see the review of Tuva: Voices from the Center of Asia, on page 865, for more on the technique). Included here are two tracks from the legendary singer Oorzhak Khunashtaar-ool that boggle the mind with their bizarrely resonant, flowing, robotic sound. The next part highlights songs with instrumental accompaniment such as the khomus mouth harp or the igil two-stringed fiddle. Notable here is the touching "Shamanic Prayer for Richard Feynman," sung to the beat of a dungur animal-skin drum. The final portion documents a number of cross-cultural experiments between Tuvans, Russians, Bulgarians, and Americans, like the kargyraa style throat-song by American blues singer "Earthquake" Pena. Some of these efforts work better than others, but the nobility of the attempt is what counts here. The CD is accompanied by a pleasantly designed booklet; Leighton's text, a bit of an amble through Tuvan culture, is nicely illustrated with color photographs. In all, Deep in the Heart of Tuva is a nice place for the curious to start the same voyage of discovery made by Leighton and Feynman themselves.

Jeffrey Muhr

Holding Up Half the Sky: Voices of Asian Women ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1999, compilation prod. Randall Grass)

International
genre: Asian traditional and contemporary

Liu Sola (China); Najma Akhtar (India/England); Shizura Ohtaka (Japan); Euis Komariah (Java); Nenes (Okinawa); Yulduz Usmanova (Uzbekistan); Nasida Ria (Indonesia); Yungchen Lhamo (Tibet); Idjah Hadidjah (Java); Sainkho Namchilak (Tuva); Chawiwan Damnoen (Thailand); Aidysmaa Kandan and Chirgilchin (Tuva); Daw Yi Yi Thant (Burma/Myanmar); Choying Drolma and Steve Tibbetts (Tibet).

In Asia, the only regular outlet for female musicians is the voice, which the women wield as storytellers of traditional ways and advocates against patriarchal societies. This album (one of a series whose African, Celtic, and reggae volumes are reviewed on pages 842, 913, and 914, respectively) is the first representative collection of Asian female vocalists, offering up 14 tracks representing 13 nations. The classically trained Liu Sola teams up with über-producer Bill Laswell to create "The Broken Zither (Introduction)," a jazzy, experimental collaboration about seeking adventure that ranges from Chinese opera to Japanese Noh theater. The English-born Najma (who usually goes by her first name) was to be a chemical engineer before discovering her Indian background through the ghazal—a short devotional lyric poem. She has worked with contemporary artists ranging from Jah Wobble to Page & Plant. Shizuru Ohtaka rose to fame via backup singing (Kyu Sakamoto's hit "Sukiyaki") and TV commercials, making her known as "the voice of seven colors." Having joined forces with Mott the Hoople's Morgan Fischer and Nubian luminary Hamza El Din, she has a unique style combining singing, speaking, vocal effects, and, in 1997's "Lovetune," an imaginary language. Euis Komariah and Idjah Hadidjah came up through the Indonesian gamelan (tuned percussion ensemble) and puppet theater respectively, and are now demonstrating the incredible range and emotion in their own music and vocals. Yulduz Usmanova had the honor of authoring a national anthem for Uzbekistan—here, she escapes former Soviet repression with a 1995 Euro-pop/Uzbeki lament entitled "Ona." Yungchen Lhamo's name translates to "goddess of song," and she fulfills this role to make the world aware of the plight of Tibetan exiles like herself. Sainkho (another usually one-name artist) is better known in avant-garde and jazz circles than traditional, but she pays attention to her Tuvan roots with the danceable 1992 "Tanola Nomads," which is produced by Belgian avant-garde/jazz impresario Hector Zazou. Also collaborating with "outside" producers, this time Rick Heizman and Henry Kaiser, Daw Yi Yi Thant delivers the sweet "Kyar Chi Yan," a Burmese royal court solo piece. Tibetan Buddhist nun Choying Drolma and American guitarist Steve Tibbetts released Cho in 1997; from that album, "Kyema Mimin" includes the nuns of the Nagi Gompa Buddhist Nunnery in Nepal. There are even more tracks here by artists and ensembles from Indonesia and Tuva, as well as Okinawa (featuring shima uta, a.k.a. island songs) and Thailand (the poetic mor lam from the Laos and Isan regions). With resourcefulness and resiliency, this album's lineup has talent to burn and not a woman to spare.

Stacy Meyn

Homrong: Musicians of the National Dance Company of Cambodia ♪♪♪ (RealWorld, 1991, prod. Richard Evans, Richard Blair, Bill Lobban)

Cambodia
genre: Pinpeat

But Channa; Chap Siphat; Em Theay; Hun Sarath; Keo Snguon; Kreal Chan Thol; Meas Saem; Nol Mech; Sin Samadekcho; Sok Mom; Sok Torng; Yem Dong. (All artists are from Cambodia.)

Homrong features the music of a pinpeat ensemble, a type of percussion-based orchestra heard in Cambodia, Thailand, and Laos. Traditionally, such orchestras functioned within the royal courts of the region, playing for ceremonies and backing refined classical dance performances that were held to entertain the nobility. During the reign of the Khmer Rouge in Cambodia, the pinpeat, "classical" dance, and the culture they stood for were wiped out. Only recently have these arts begun to grow anew in Cambodia, and in the process to be recognized as a cultural treasure rather than a royal vestige. The lively, busy sound of the pinpeat is oriented rhythmically toward reflecting the intricate, elegant movements of the dancers that it often accompanies. But on Homrong, the full ensemble, which includes the ranat wooden xylophone, khong gong row, srlay oboe, and several strings and drums, only comes into play on a couple tracks such as "Preah Chinnavong" and the "Tep Monorom Dance." On most of the cuts, various portions of the orchestra are used to back vocal folk songs, as on "Nor Kor Reach," in which the three-stringed chappay opens the piece with an elegant modal solo, then settles in to accompany the vocal. Though the tracks are quite endearing and crisply recorded, the CD suffers from poor liner notes, which make mention of the horrors of the Khmer Rouge era but say next to nothing about the pinpeat, its instruments, or other details that might help to draw unfamiliar listeners into the music. For a more thorough treatment, you might want to check out any of the three volumes of Celestial Harmonies' Music of Cambodia series, reviewed on page 860.

Jeffrey Muhr

The Hugo Masters: An Anthology of Chinese Classical Music ♪♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1992, prod. Aik Yew-goh)

China
genre: Chinese classical

Members of the Beijing Opera; Shanghai Chinese Orchestra; Shanghai Film Chinese Orchestra; Xinhai Music Conservatory of Guang; Conservatory of Music Shanghai; Frontline Dance and Music Group. Soloists: Li Ming-Xiong; Deng Jian-Dong; Yun He-Yun; Hua Yan-Jun; Shen Feng-Quan; Zeng Jia-Qing; Liu Tian-Hua; Min Hui-Fen; An Zhi-Shun; Zhu Kan-Fu; Yang Wei; Ma Mei Ye; Wu Jiang; Liu Bo; Han Zhi Ming; Li Yi; Xu Feng Xia; Du Chong; Rao Ning Xin; Wang Wei; Cheng Gong Liang; Wu Zhao Ji; Li Bian. (All artists are from China.)

This is the most comprehensive single collection of Chinese classical music, selected from engineer Aik Yew-goh's Hugo record label. Aik traveled across China to record traditional music as played by artists old enough to have performed prior to the revolution and therefore still be part of the oral tradition that has been passed down for the last 3,000 years. Chinese classical music was transformed in the 20th century by the introduction of Western instruments by the Russians and the Chinese state's use of music as propaganda. The music is rarely found in a written form, and as the bearers of the oral tradition pass away, documentation such as this album is crucial to its survival. The Hugo Masters is divided into four volumes, each spotlighting, though not exclusive to, a particular category of instrument. The lutes and zithers of Volume 1: Bowed Strings and Volume 2: Plucked Strings vary greatly in their number of strings, frets, and overall size. These can be heard in group and solo settings on soothing songs about nature. One of the "stars" of Volume 3: Wind Instruments is the xun, an egg-shaped instrument that is blown at the tip and played along the side. The oldest of these to be found thus far is made of stone and dates back 7,000 years; others have been made of bone or ivory. The most widespread wind instrument of course is the flute, of which there are many varieties in China. Percussion instruments serve the same effect in this music as harmonies do in Western music, that is to form an underlying expression, set a contrast, and propel the music forward. Volume 4: Percussion features drums, gongs, and cymbals of varying sizes and tones, always as part of an ensemble, evoking "The Rumbling Ocean," the march of "The General's Victory," and the grandeur of "Flying Dragons and Jumping Tigers."

David Poole

Istanbul 1925 ♪♪♪♪½ (Traditional Crossroads, 1994, compilation prod. Harold G. Hagopian)

Turkey
genre: Turkish classical (fasil), Arabesk

Sükrü Tunar; Mahmut Celalettin; Münir Nurettin Selçuk; Udi Hrant Kenkulian; Deniz Kizi; Kanuni Artaki Candan-Terzian (Armenia/Turkey); Sadettin Kaynak; Kemani Haydar Tatliyay (Greece/Turkey); Suzan Yakar (Armenia/Turkey); Udi Marko Çolakoglu; Kuçuk Nezihe Hanim (Greece/Turkey); Kemani Nubar Tekay-Çömlekçiyan; Perihan Altindag; Rakim Elkutlu; Hanende Agyazar Efendi. (All artists are from Turkey except where noted otherwise.)

The Ottoman Empire was headquartered in Constantinople and covered a large portion of the eastern Mediterranean including Turkey, Armenia, and Greece. After the decline of the empire and the installation of Kemal Atatürk as president of the Turkish republic in 1923, Constantinople became Istanbul. The city, just as in the heyday of the Empire, was a cultural magnet, attracting artists from all over Asia Minor. During the '20s Istanbul became fertile territory for record companies seeking to document and sell the work of the country's leading musicians. In addition, Mohamed Abdel Wahab's experiments in Egypt with Western musical instruments were beginning to make an impression with some of the more adventuresome performers in Turkey, though not enough to displace the still-strong Turkish classical tradition. Kanuni Artaki Candan-Terzian was a renaissance figure within this musical ferment. He was a scholarly musician and composer who played the zither-like kanun, but he also managed a recording studio for the Turkish branch of HMV and supervised all the music heard on this album. Each of the performers here (especially Udi Hrant Kenkulian, a.k.a. Udi Hrant) was very popular in his or her day, and these recordings document a bygone era the impact of which is still being felt by modern Turkish musicians.

Garaud MacTaggart

Japanese Noh Music: The Kyoto Nohgaku Kai ♪♪♪♪½ (Lyrichord, prod. Katsumasa Takasago)

Japan
genre: Noh

Mitsuharu Morita; Hiroshi Sowa; Katsuxo Taniguchi; Kinichi Kodera. (All artists are from Japan.)

Japanese court theater or gagaku is divided between the popular kabuki and the highbrow noh, in which Buddhist stories are underscored with shrill flute playing (nohkan) and drummers who call to each other, chanting a drawn out "yoh" to mark time between beats. Noh music colors the symbolic gestures of the dancers, who wear grotesque carved masks to denote demon, deity, warrior, or noble lady. Like a soundtrack isolated from its movie, noh music lacks the plot and visual impact of the complete performance, yet for Westerners it still evokes medieval Japan, Kurosawa films, and the exotic qualities of Buddhist culture. These nine compositions were recorded in Kyoto and offer a taste of the Nohgaku school of noh theater, one of five existing in Japan today.

David Poole

The King Records World Music Library: Indonesian Music Titles, Vols. 1–31 ♪♪♪♪½ (King Records, 1991–97, prod. various)

Indonesia
genre: Gamelan

Diverse artists and ensembles over many volumes, including: Gamelan Selonding Guna Winangun; Langen Praja Mankunegaran, directed by R. M. Mg. Rana Suripta; Amag Sip; Amag Sanep; Rebana Desa Nyelot; Gamelan Telek Desa Batu Tulis. (All artists are from Indonesia.)

The 31 Indonesian titles from Japanese label King Records' massive "World Music Library" are one of the largest collections of CDs dedicated to Indonesian music. Beautifully digitally recorded, they cover a huge swath of musical ground, mainly through the islands of Java and Bali, and include many of the major styles of gamelan music. Gamelan is the name given to an ensemble of instruments composed chiefly of metal gongs and metallophones (xylophones with metal keys). The roots of the gamelan extend into Asian prehistory. The earliest proto-gamelan instrument was the "gong-chime," a kind of metal gong bossed with a central nipple and suspended on a rack horizontally. This instrument apparently originated in Java in the Asian Bronze Age around the third century B.C. From there, the gong-chime spread across Southeast Asia, eventually to play a significant role in music throughout the region, from Burma to the Philippines. In Java, a variety of other bronze instruments came to be developed, and by A.D. 347 the first known gamelan ensemble, the gamelan munggang, had been created.

Today, a typical gamelan consists of several hanging gongs of various sizes, several types of kettle-gongs or gong-chimes, and as many as six types of keyed metallophones suspended over different types of resonators. Stringed zithers, a two-stringed fiddle called the rebab, bamboo flutes, drums, and vocalists might be included. The sound of gamelan, whether played in rapid and frenetic or slow and meditative style, is shimmering and reverberant. Based on elaboration around a repeating series of beat cycles, gamelan music is typically "stratified"—the lowest-pitched instruments play the slow skeletal framework, while the highest in pitch play rapid melodic elaborations. The major centers of gamelan today are the islands of Bali and Java, and the King Records series covers both extensively. Also covered are a number of other genres of Balinese ensemble music, along with a few musical forms from Lombok and Sumatra. A few of the many highlights from the series:

The Gamelan of Cirebon presents a unique gamelan style heard on the coast of Java northeast of Sunda. More cheerful than the stately central Javanese court ensembles, Cirebonese gamelan often backs a local improvisational dance called the tayuban, a masked dance known as wayang topeng, or a puppet show called wayang golek. Played on iron instruments rather than the more common bronze, the performances on the CD have a soft, pleasing tone, and the big, low gongs come through with much force. As they follow the flow of the dance or puppet performance, the musicians control the dynamics of volume and tempo expertly, alternating between lively passages that make use of what sound like kecer cymbal clappers to punctuate the beat, and smooth, meditative interludes. On Gamelan Selonding "Guna Winangun," Tenganan we hear an iron gamelan once again, this time from Bali. The instruments for this type of sacred ensemble are said to have dropped from the heavens in the form of thunder, and few recordings of gamelan selonding have been permitted. Oddly, selonding ensembles have no gongs, using only several sets of metallophones and a ceng-ceng, a small cymbal. Lacking the frenetic quality of much modern Balinese gamelan, the music is measured, delicate, and sparkling, and its use of pauses to create a "roaring silence" is particularly striking. Music of Mangkunegaran Solo I presents the classic gamelan of Surakarta or "Solo" in central Java. A deeply meditative and stately style, Solonese gamelan has been recorded often, but seldom this beautifully. Arguably as atmospheric as the classic LP Javanese Court Gamelan Vol. 2 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Nonesuch, 1977, prod. by Robert E. Brown), this disc has a gorgeous ambient sound, capturing many thunderous lows, yet clearly resolving the individual character of the instruments. The music of the ancient "Rain of Love" and "Rain of Perfume" ensembles heard here seems to transcend time and geography altogether, leaving the listener enraptured. Finally, The Music of Lombok takes us to an island just east of Bali with a distinctly different musical culture. Unlike their Hindu neighbors in Bali, the native Sasaks of Lombok were Islamicized in the 1500s and their music naturally takes some of its inspiration from the Muslim world. An important musical instrument here is the rebana, a single-headed drum that came from the Arabic peoples and is associated symbolically with the spread of Islam. Pentatonic gamelan-like melodies are pounded out with sticks on tuned groups of these drums, and we hear three such rebana tracks on the disc. Also featured are a set of duets for genggong or jew's-harp. These recordings, made in a hut during a strong rain, radiate a beautiful sense of peace. Finally, we hear the gamelan telek, a rapid and rhythmically simple style that includes plenty of embellishments from the drum accompaniment. While a few King titles are usually available in record stores, most will have to be special-ordered (King Record Co., Ltd., 1-2-3, Otowa, Bunkyo-ku, Tokyo 112-0013 Japan; telephone: 81-3-3945-2134; fax: 81-3-3945-4806; e-mail: kokusai@kingrecords.co.jp). It's worth the extra effort to obtain them, because they provide a broad insight into one of the most complex and rewarding musical cultures in the world.

Jeffrey Muhr

Music from the Morning of the World ♪♪♪♪♪ (Elektra/Nonesuch, 1966/1988, prod. David Lewiston)

Indonesia
genre: Gamelan, kecak, gong kebyar

Artists not identified. (All artists are from Bali.)

Probably one of the first albums of Balinese music to appear on a non-academic label in the U.S., this disc showcases a broad spectrum of the island's gamelan (tuned percussion) music and includes excerpts from the spine-chilling kecak performance. This dance, which opens and closes the CD, has an odd history. Created by Dutch expatriate artist Walter Spies in the 1930s, the kecak took the a cappella vocal element from the ancient exorcism trance ritual called the sanghjang, placing it in the context of the Hindu Ramayana epic. The result was a new style of music for performance, driven by spooky cries of "chak" from a male chorus as they play the part of the armies of the monkey-god Hanuman in battle with the demon Ravana. Between these kecak excerpts can be heard examples of several gamelan styles, the best known being the gamelan gong kebyar. Set to dances or played as a pure instrumental, the gong kebyar features a shimmering gamelan orchestra of metallophones with bronze keys, bronze gongs, drums, and other instruments. Kebyar, which means "bursting into flame," accurately describes the dramatic, explosive sound produced as the gamelan players interweave their notes using a technique called kotekan. This "interlocking" instrumental practice allows pairs of metallophone players to perform single melodic lines with incredible speed. The wonderfully strident dynamics on the baris dance performed here sound like a giant clockwork gone wild or a musical thunderstorm, while the barong dance, played on the five-note pelog scale (like much of the gamelan music on the CD), carries a powerfully hypnotic resonance—a characteristic of many styles of Balinese music. The recording also includes several non-gamelan tracks, including flute solos, vocal solos, and the sekehe gambuh flute ensemble. These selections, generally sedate and gentle, constitute a nice counterpoint to the overwhelming power of the gamelan ones. In all, this is one of the best short compilations of Balinese music available—and best starting points for the curious. In 1987, Lewiston returned to record the follow-up, Bali: Gamelan and Kecak, reviewed on page 853.

Jeffrey Muhr

The Music of Armenia Vols. 1–6 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1995, prod. David Parsons, Kay Parsons)

Armenia
genre: Armenian traditional

The Haissmavourk Choir; Shoghaken Ensemble; Sharakan Early Music Ensemble; Gevorg Dabagian; Gregor Takushian; Eduard Harutunian; Kamo Khachaturian; Karineh Hovhannessian. (All artists are from Armenia.)

Armenia has a history of poor luck, sandwiched between Russia and Iran, persecuted by the Turks, suffering a devastating earthquake in 1988 and an ongoing war with neighboring oil-rich Azerbaijan. Armenian music is appropriately melancholy, as is well documented in this six-volume survey. Excommunicated along with all the Near Eastern Christian churches in A.D. 451, Armenia's Christian hymns developed their own unique timbre. Volume One: Sacred Choral Music will appeal to fans of Gregorian chant, albeit sung in Armenian Grabar. Given the country's location, the familiar harmonies of a European-style church choir are mixed with modal melodies that evoke Asian forms. The acoustics are tremendous in the Holy Echmiadzin Cathedral and the Geghard Monastery. Rather than an a cappella choir, Volume Two: Sharakan features many of the same songs arranged for the soloist Armenuhi Seiranian and a chamber ensemble. The hymns, and the volume's title, are all drawn from an early Christian songbook. The last four volumes survey Armenian "folk" song, though the sophistication of the troubadour's compositions place them within the classical tradition. Vocalists are accompanied by duduk (oboe), kanon (zither), and various other traditional instruments on Volume Five: Folk Music/ Shoghaken Ensemble and Volume Six: Nagorno/Karabakh, while vocal-less versions spotlight these settings themselves on Volume Three: Duduk and Volume Four: Kanon. Volume Six was recorded in the Nagorno/Karabakh war zone, and it is extraordinary to hear the artists sing with such vigor during such strife. Indeed, the overall tone of this survey is meditative and oddly calming, evoking an ancient and sophisticated civilization. While the stories behind the songs are often tragic or somber, the music itself is soothing and graceful—a fusion of styles unique to this vibrant yet ill-fated country.

David Poole

The Music of Bali, Vols. 1–3 ♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1997, prod. David Parsons)

Indonesia
genre: Gamelan, jegog, kecak, tektekan

Swara Cipta Priyanti; Tojan; Rama Budaya; Gamelan Tirta Sari. (All artists are from Bali.)

The Music of Bali is notable for its clear sound and its attention to styles that have not often been recorded. The first disc is devoted entirely to jegog, an ensemble of marimba-like bamboo instruments that produces melodies of earth-shattering impact. The largest of these instruments, called jegogan, consist of eight enormous bamboo tubes, and are so massive that their players must straddle atop them as they strike the tubes with rubber mallets. The primary melody is played by these and several other lower-octave instruments, and enlarged on by several higher-octave ones. Jegog is chiefly played for entertainment rather than ritual, and exhausting competitions are often held in which the rival ensembles beat the living daylights out of their instruments and even attempt to drown one another out by playing at the same time. (The style's throbbing low harmonics give it a visceral and spooky ambience that belies the light-hearted manner in which it is most often performed.)

The second disc presents legong gamelan (a dance form of the well-known gamelan tuned-percussion genre), which merges aspects of the ancient seven-tone semar pegulingan ("gamelan of the Love God") with the frenetic modern gong kebyar. Though in general its sound is very familiar to those who have heard Balinese gamelan before, it has certain specific characteristics, such as a trebly note range, that suit its use as dance music. A notable track from this disc is the kebyar-styled "Ujan Mas," which opens with a lightning-quick interlocking melody, then moves into a watery solo for reyong, a row of small upturned gongs balanced in a wooden frame. The piece closes in rousing fashion as the full ensemble and drums kick into action.

The most intriguing music heard on the final disc is tektekan, a ritual form that is used to dispel malevolent spirits or employed as a means of purification. Derived from beleganjur, a marching music played widely in religious processions throughout Bali, tektekan adds the use of bamboo slit-drums. The repetition of the main rhythm, occasionally punctuated with accelerated passages in which crashing cymbals and shrieks from the musicians bring the music to a crescendo, is ominous and absolutely riveting. Illustrated booklets with each disc provide clear, brief summaries of the styles covered. With 70 minutes of music per disc, this set is a good value as a follow-up to introductory collections of the island's music such as Music from the Morning of the World (reviewed on page 859).

Jeffrey Muhr

The Music of Cambodia, Vols. 1–3 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1993, prod. David Parsons)

Cambodia
genre: Pi phat, pinpeat, mahori, taam ming

Diverse artists and ensembles, not all identified. Vol. 3: Yeum Sang; Prach Chhuon; Sok Duch; Khan Heuan; Yon Khien. (All artists are from Cambodia.)

This path-breaking set of CDs surveys many important musical styles of Cambodia, some of them for the first time. Recorded at the ancient Angkor Wat temple complex, the first volume, called Nine Gong Gamelan, includes several tracks of the unusual taam ming funeral ensemble, an orchestra consisting of a set of nine gongs, another large gong, an oboe-like instrument called the srlay, and drums. While calling this ensemble a gamelan (Indonesia's famed tuned-percussion ensemble) is a misnomer (a fact readily admitted by producer Parsons in his text), its somber sound does resemble the form; the cyclic rhythmic structure is strongly reminiscent of Javanese-style gamelan, with the srlay filling the melodic role that the rebab fiddle handles in the Indonesian ensemble. The remainder of the first disc records the trot, a dance music of the Samreh people of Cambodia's northern border, and a rural pinpeat ensemble. Like the pinpeat of Thailand, the Cambodian variant includes wooden xylophones called ranak, a keyed metallophone, and numerous gong-chimes (knobbed gongs that are set horizontally into circular frames). The lively music of the pinpeat is captured with a notably clear sound; the shimmering of the gongs seems to come through more than that on most such recordings.

The second disc, Royal Court Music, covers a delightful variety of genres, including a courtly, "professional" version of the pinpeat ensemble, as well as a "popular music orchestra" known as the mahori, which combines the pinpeat lineup with several wind and string instruments. This yields a smoother texture, as on the bright "Laang Preah Poun Leah," in which the flutes, fiddle, and hammered dulcimer seem to reveal a Chinese melodic influence. Perhaps the most intriguing music on this disc is the arak, a tribal form with roots in shamanism that is used chiefly for healing and magic. One of the strangest arak tracks, "Craen," features a bizarre reed instrument that sounds like a cross between a clarinet and a flute, embellishing the melodic line of a vocalist with wild note-bending and trills.

The final disc covers several unusual instruments in solo settings, such as the kse diev, a monochordal string instrument said to be the oldest in Khmer culture. Its soundbox is a halved hollow gourd that is pressed against the player's chest, producing an amazing visceral resonation that sounds something like a jew's-harp. Another unique sound comes from the pey or, a bamboo reed; when a piece of paper is applied to one of its sound holes it emits, in Parson's words, a "peculiar buzzing." Beautifully digitally recorded and supplemented with plenty of descriptive text, The Music of Cambodia is easily the best widely available survey of Cambodian music. Each of the discs is available separately, or the entire set can be purchased in a slip case.

Jeffrey Muhr

The Music of Indonesia, Vols. 1–17 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian, 1991–99, prod. Philip Yampolsky)

Indonesia (Sumatra, Java, Bali, Lombok, Sumba, Sumbawa, Timor, Borneo, Kalimantan, Celebes, Sulawesi, Flores, Riau, Mentawai, New Guinea, Irian Jaya)

genre: Gandrung Bayuwangi, kroncong, dangdut, langgam Jawa, gambang kromong, lagu lama, lagu sayur, hoho, gendang Karo, gondang Toba, topeng Betawi, tanjidor, ajeng, saluang, rabab pariaman, dendang pauah, wor, yospan, zapin, mak yong, mendu, ronggeng, talempong, didong, kulintang, salawat dulang, wayang Sasak, jemblung, wayang Banjar, topeng Banjar

Diverse artists and ensembles over many volumes.

Stunning in its breadth and unsurpassed in its detail, the Music of Indonesia series is one of the most ambitious regional world-music compilations ever attempted. Begun in 1991 and nearly complete as of mid-1999, the series was conceived by Anthony Seeger, the Director of Smithsonian Folkways Records, and musicologist Philip Yampolsky, as a collaborative effort with Indonesian researchers to document a wealth of music never heard before outside that nation. Stretching between mainland Asia and Australia, Indonesia's diverse and sprawling territory consists of 13,000-odd islands, including portions of some of the largest in the world such as Sumatra, Borneo, and New Guinea, and is home to several hundred unique cultures. Musically, much of Indonesia outside of Java and Bali has remained terra incognita even to many within the country. Seeger and Yampolsky comment: "Of the hundreds of distinct genres and styles of national and regional or ethnic music in Indonesia, only a handful have been represented on commercial recordings available in the West. Commercial releases have concentrated on . . . only a few genres (mainly the classical gamelan traditions)."

The Music of Indonesia series fills this void in spectacular fashion, covering vocal, choral, solo instrumental, and ensemble music made by scores of cultures from more than a dozen of Indonesia's major islands. While the sheer unfamiliarity and strangeness of the music will be enough to scare off the casual or average listener, the series will reward patient and careful attention with all manner of discoveries. The listening experience is guided and enhanced by marvelously detailed liner notes. Humbly described by Yampolsky as "initial forays into uncharted territory," the notes go far beyond mere track descriptions, exploring the musical and cultural context of the recordings. If the dozen or so pages of text and bibliographic material included with each volume are not enough, errata, additional commentary, and lyric transcriptions are available on the Smithsonian Institution's web site at http://www.si.edu/folkways/Indonesia/indonesia_start.htm. The site also has sound samples for each volume if you want to get an impression of the music before you buy. With three more volumes planned to complete the series, here is a rundown of the 17 titles released as of this writing:

Vol. 1: Songs before Dawn introduces to the West an entertainment genre called gandrung Bayuwangi from an isolated region of Eastern Java. The gandrung is a night-long affair in which a female dancer and singer performs a kind of stylized erotic dance with paying male guests. The sultry music, featuring vocals backed by an ensemble of drums, several gongs, and a biola violin, sounds a little bit like the better-known jaipongan of Sundanese West Java.

Vol. 2: Indonesian Popular Music includes three styles with mass appeal in Indonesia, kroncong, dangdut, and langgam Jawa. Dangdut, a music popular among youth from lower economic classes, combines elements of Middle Eastern, Indian, and Western pop. Kroncong makes use of Western instruments such as guitar, ukulele, flute, violin, and even Hawaiian guitar. While it is strongly rooted in Portuguese music from the colonial era, it has developed a distinctive gentle and rhythmic twist. And langgam Jawa twists kroncong a bit further by using the Indonesian seven-tone pelog scale as its melodic palette.

Vol. 3: Music from the Outskirts of Jakarta presents an ensemble music called gambang kromong with a sound that can only be described as bizarre to the Western ear. Combining Chinese, Indonesian, and Western instruments, the gambang kromong has a dual repertoire: the old lagu lama, which synthesizes Chinese and Indonesian folk music, and the lagu sayur, which incorporates pre–World War II American jazz. Both are played in a loose organization that grants a lot of freedom to the individual instruments as they dance around the core melody. The juxtaposition of styles and instruments is quite novel, as when Indonesian gongs play rhythm alongside brass and a riffing Hawaiian guitar on "Stambul Bila."

Vol. 4: Music of Nias and North Sumatra features several genres from the island of Nias and the area surrounding Lake Toba in North-Central Sumatra: the gendang karo of the Karo people, with its simple gong cycles overlaid with oboe riffs and elaborate rhythms on sets of tiny drums; the hoho chorus of the Oho Niha people; and two types of gondang toba, a frenetic and complex ensemble of tuned drums, oboes, and bossed gongs that is propelled like a runaway train by the dense melodicism of the taganing tuned drums and sarune oboe.

Vol. 5: Betawi and Sundanese Music of the North Coast of Java returns to the area surrounding Jakarta to sample more of the region's diverse musical riches. Notable are the ajeng, a full-blown gamelan (ensemble dominated by tuned percussion) that uses a double-reed instrument called the tarompet in place of the typical rebab violin and plays with the jagged rhythmic sensibility of Balinese gamelan; and the surreal, languid strains of the brass tanjidor ensemble.

Vol. 6: Night Music of West Sumatra documents the music of the Minangkabau of West Sumatra and includes saluang, a spooky and claustrophobic vocal poetry backed with flute; rabab pariaman, a similar form that replaces the flute with rebab; and a storytelling song style called dendang Pauah. Given the narrative nature of the music, complete translations of the lyrics would have been helpful.

Vol. 7: Music from the Forests of Riau and Mentawai compiles music from the central Sumatran province of Riau and from the nearby island group of Mentawai. It's a well-rounded variety of music, with highlights including the energetically ornamented xylophone and gong-row music of the Petalangan people of Riau; a percussive shamanic healing ritual; and a vocal curing song from Mentawai that sounds like the shadow of a spiritual song from the American South.

Vol. 8: Vocal and Instrumental Music from East and Central Flores and Vol. 9: Vocal Music from Central and West Flores are landmark volumes collecting an incredible proliferation of vocal music from the island of Flores. Yampolsky elaborates on its variety: "there is singing in parallel intervals, harmony based on thirds (like standard Western-music harmony), harmony not based on thirds, melody with drone, unison and multi-part choruses, and occasional instances of true counterpoint." A veritable feast for students and fans of vocal music.

Vol. 10: Music of Biak, Irian Jaya presents the music of an island on the northwest coast of Irian Jaya. Notable are some beautifully harmonized informal hymns sung by a women's choir in Sor, and a series of wor choral-and-percussion songs that serve to entertain, provide social commentary, and challenge the ability of the singers as they carry out a sort of vocal "battle."

Vol. 11: Melayu Music of Sumatra and the Riau Islands compiles several dance and theater genres of the ethnic Malay residents of the Riau islands off Singapore and Malaysia (administratively linked to the Riau province covered on Volume 7), as well as adjoining areas of Sumatra. Two of these styles are zapin, a distinctly Middle Eastern form with possible roots in Yemen; and ronggeng, a dance similar to jaipongan or gandrung Bayuwangi in its performance structure. A notable example is "Damak," which presents an elegant and amusing urbane take on ronggeng that incorporates an accordion to carry the melodic line.

Vol. 12: Gongs and Vocal Music from Sumatra revisits the Minangkabau and introduces us to the music of the Gayo and Melinting people. Beaten out on rows of shimmering gongs, the beautifully sophisticated cyclical melodies of the talempong and kulintang seem to induce a perfect balance between stimulation and relaxation in the listener.

Vol. 13: Kalimantan Strings takes us to the Indonesian portion of the island of Borneo, where stringed lutes such as the Melayu gambus and the Dayak kacapi or "boat lute" play an important musical role. On the kacapi (also known as the sampeq in certain regions), melodies are played against one or two drone strings, using scales that have a "sharpness" to the Western ear. They can move along with plenty of rhythmic attack, as on the violin-driven "Karangut Saritan Nampui Kambang," or bring one to the verge of tears, as on the gentle duet "Sampeq Urau," played by Kenyah musicians originally from the interior jungle. The song, said to be about a lone survivor returning from a Japanese prison after World War II, sounds to romanticizing Western ears almost like a requiem for the Dayak themselves. Transcendental listening.

Vol. 14: Lombok, Kalimantan, Banyumas: Little Known Forms of Gamelan and Wayang is the only CD in the series covering Indonesia's best-known music, the percussive gamelan ensemble, but it seeks to document the unconventional. We hear Wayang Sasak from Lombok, played by an ensemble closely resembling a Balinese gambuh. Spiced with metallic clappers, the gong, drum, and flute ensemble, sounding like a diminutive blacksmith shop, backs the action of the all-night wayang kulit puppet show. Also heard is the ingenious Central Javanese jemblung, a form of theater presented by a group of "actor-singers" who perform a wayang and imitate the backing gamelan with vocals only! Included as well is some refreshingly raw and amateur village wayang gamelan from Kalimantan.

Vol. 15: South Sulawesi Strings provides diverse and exciting examples of entertainment music of the Bugis, Makasar, Kajang, Mandar, and Toraja peoples of Sulawesi (the Celebes). A notable highlight is the rubbery, rapid-fire, virtuoso performance of Abdul Halim's kacapi lute ensemble. This includes songs, stories, and even parodies of Indonesian pop stars, and in the live setting is fronted by a sort of contortionist-buffoon who writhes, dances, and carries on while the real musicians play behind him.

Vol. 16: Music from the Southeast: Sumbawa, Sumba, Timor is a whirlwind tour through the island region known as Nusa Tenggara. There's plenty to enjoy, such as the tracks from Sumba featuring funerary gong ensembles that sound a bit like muted Caribbean steel bands; the snaky note-bending of a drone lute player; and the modal howling of a Timorese vocalist backed by a drone string band.

Vol. 17: Kalimantan: Dayak Ritual and Festival Music returns to the indigenous people of Borneo, covering choral music, gong ensembles, and a bamboo-tube ensemble akin to the gambang group of Bali without the metallophones. One of the many delights is the chunky, hypnotic gong-and-drum ensemble of the Benuaq people of East Kalimantan, which is played in the context of community and shamanic rituals such as the 24-day nguguq tautn harvest ceremony.

Jeffrey Muhr

The Music of Vietnam, Vols. 1–3 ♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1994–95, prod. David Parsons, Kay Parsons)

Vietnam

genre: Traditional and contemporary Vietnamese music

Phan Kim Thanh; Le Tu Cuong; Trieu Tien Vuong; The Dan; Pham Van Ty; Dang Xuan Khai; Nguyen Thi Hong Phuc; Leu Kim Thu; Thao Giang; Nguyen Xuan Hoach; Dinh Quang Huan; Lai Thi Cam Van; Nguyen Quac Ngu; Tran Dai Dung; Tran Bo; Nguyen Tan Hong; Cao Chanh Giau; Huynh Anh Tuan; La Nguyen; Duong Van Lan; Vo Minh Thanh; Nguyen Ngoc Lam; Nguyen Thi Thanh Binh; Tran Thi Nguyet Nga; Phan Thi Bach Hac; Phan Thi Thu Thuy; Phan Thi Bach Hoa; Tran Thi Thu Van; Le Thi Dieu Hy; members of the Hue Traditional Art Troupe. (All artists are from Vietnam.)

Recorded by composer and musical adventurer David Parsons and his life/artistic partner Kay Parsons, The Music of Vietnam is not so much an overview of Vietnamese music as a snapshot of a couple of its aspects. The first two volumes, recorded in Hanoi, bring together a sort of "supergroup" of 15 of Vietnam's greatest traditional musicians and set them to playing all kinds of traditional ensemble music. But instead of producing slavishly faithful renditions learned by rote, the group shines with creativity, verve, virtuosity, and innovation. As John Schaefer points out in his commentary to these volumes, the Vietnamese think of their traditional music as a living, evolving entity worth building upon as well as preserving. In some cases they have adopted Western styles and instruments, but always in a measured, thoughtful manner that adds to the music while maintaining its integrity. The resulting hybrid generates much excitement with its variety, novel combinations, and delicate textures. Some notable moments of this aesthetic expansion are when traces of Western harmony suddenly emerge, then disappear, as in the traditional "Dance of the Tay Nguyen Highlands," and when the sounds of neighboring Thailand and China simultaneously echo through "Stream of the T'rung." The most incredible moment may be when Le Tu Cuong adroitly coaxes a host of startling textures from a tribal Hmong lam kep reed-flute on "Calling Sounds of the Khen (sic) Pipe," sounding in turn like a saxophone, a shawm, a Thai khaen mouth organ, and a traffic jam.

The third disc, recorded in the ancient Vietnamese capital of Hue and performed by members of the Hue Traditional Art Troupe, compiles ceremonial music and kingly dances from the days of the Imperial Court. The music here is strictly traditional, showing two faces—the majesty and pomp of the Dai Nhac, or "great music," and the exuberance and cheer of the Tieu Nhac, or "elegant music." While the disc is greatly enjoyable, as a sort of historical retrospective it has to be listened to with different expectations than the first two. By the same token, the notes for the Hue volume are quite different from those of the compilation albums: asia

others; written by a pair of Vietnamese experts, they are scholarly and thorough, but a bit dense and dry in comparison to the conversational commentary by Schaefer on the Hanoi discs.

In sum, The Music of Vietnam does an admirable job of covering both progressive and historical aspects of Vietnamese traditional music. While it should not be taken as a comprehensive anthology, since it leaves a lot of territory (like tribal music, vocal music, and the less-sophisticated regional ensembles) uncovered, the revelatory Hanoi discs alone make the set a bargain.

Jeffrey Muhr

New Music Indonesia, Vols. 1–3 ♪♪♪♪♡ (Lyrichord, 1992, prod. Jody Diamond, Larry Polansky)

Indonesia
genre: Musik murni, musik total, komposisi baru

Suhendi Afryanto; Dody Satya Ekaghustdiman; Harry Roesli; Nano S.; Pande Made Sukerta; Otok Bima Sidarta; B. Subono; I Wayan Sadra. (All artists are from Indonesia.)

This series highlights the efforts of a group of experimental musicians from West Java (Sunda), Central Java, and Bali who are creating fresh and unique sounds in a musical culture that typically focuses on its ancient traditions. Produced by Jody Diamond, a veteran researcher of Indonesian music, and Larry Polansky, the disc grew from an idea that Diamond had while documenting the state of new music, or komposisi baru, in Indonesia. To give financially strained composers the freedom to create, Diamond and Polansky decided to go beyond mere research and commission new compositions from pioneering artists, carrying out recording sessions in Bandung, West Java, and Surakarta, Central Java.

The first disc, Asmat Dream, covers the Bandung session. Featuring six fascinating pieces by four Sundanese composers, it is an inventive explosion in terms of both compositional technique and spontaneous energy. The opening piece, the free-form "Diya," summarizes some of the musical ideas that recur through the series, including the use of minimalist textures; the stringing together of contrasting loose sections or "movements" called merangkai; a sense of musical discovery in the use of found objects such as sandpaper, tin cans, bottles, and woks; and a random feel à la John Cage that paradoxically builds drama despite its spontaneity. "Galura," by the veteran classical and pop composer Nano S., sticks to more familiar and traditional elements—such as the Sundanese combination of kacapi zither and suling flute—but puts them in a different context to create a tense sound not unlike that of Philip Glass.

The second disc, Mana 689, recorded in Surakarta, features another group of four composers. Like Asmat Dream, it merges a sense of adventure with a respect for tradition. We hear, for example, a composition for treble gamelan (tuned metallic percussion) instruments called "Griting Rasa," which, in its overall sound and alternation of instrumental "overtures" with narrative passages, resembles the music of a Javanese wayang kulit puppet-show (so it is no surprise to find out that its composer, Blacius Subono, is also a dalang or puppet-master). Likewise, "Stay a Maverick," played on a conventional gamelan array, shows a healthy regard for traditional structures, yet violates them by combining the slendro and pelog scales, which are not typically used together.

The final disc, Karya, spotlights a single composer, the Javanese-born I Wayan Sadra. On "O-A-E-O," Sadra, who is also a visual artist, uses repetition to build tension, a method that is deeply rooted in traditional Indonesian gamelan music with its colotomic rhythmic cycles. Sadra also makes use of electronic and multi-tracking studio techniques on "Snow's Own Dream," which builds a rich, ghostly drone, and he draws from other cultures with his use of Sufi zikir (a.k.a. zikr) devotion and Buddhist chant on "Miba." Affirming Indonesia's continued musical vitality, New Music Indonesia is an exciting, surprising, and rewarding listen.

Jeffrey Muhr

The Sultan's Pleasure: From the Palace of Yogyakarta ♪♪♪♪♡ (Music of the World, 1989, prod. Roger Vetter)

Indonesia
genre: Gamelan

Musicians of the palace of Sultan Hamangku Buwana IX, Yogyakarta, Java. (All artists are from Indonesia.)

Though long-since politically powerless, the Javanese sultans hold an important place in the artistic life of Indonesia, specifically in Yogyakarta and Surakarta, two of the country's key cultural centers. In Yogyakarta, for example, the sultan's palace, or kraton, holds a large number of ancient and venerated gamelan ensembles. These lovingly preserved sets of instruments, some of which are several hundred years old, are composed chiefly of gongs, metallophones, and drums, and have even been given names like "Tempting to Love" or "The Torrent of Honey." Such names aptly describe the flowing, elegant sounds these instruments make as they are played by large groups of musicians using five- and seven-note scales. The Sultan's Pleasure excerpts a group of special performances made on three of these historical gamelans. Each year in celebration of the Sultan's birthday or Seitu-Paing, a set of selections called Uyon-Uyon Hadiluhung ("Glorious and Beautiful Gamelan Playing") is performed. This set comprises six full gamelan compositions and two vocal performances. It includes a couple of unusual pieces like "Ladrang Mares Kumencar," a mares or march that adds a set of marching-band tenor drums to the ensemble to punctuate the beat; and the closing track, "Ladrang Sri Kondur," a nice example of the archaic "loud" style, which is played in a vigorous fashion, typically on old gamelans with massive instruments. All told, this is a worthwhile recording; if the sound were a bit better and the descriptive notes a little longer, it might warrant a higher recommendation.

Jeffrey Muhr

Tibet: The Heart of Dharma ♪♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1996, prod. David Lewiston)

Tibet
genre: Chant

Monks of Drepung; Monks of Khampagar. (All artists are from Tibet.)

Some 40 years ago the Chinese communists destroyed or shut down Tibet's 6,500 monasteries. This album records the prayer chants of Tibetan monks who have taken refuge in monasteries in India. Many recordings of Buddhist prayer are available, yet the basis for musical comparison is hard to establish. The prayer is not intended as music, although the mesmeric effect of listening to the droning bass voices intoning their mantras certainly has musical properties. On the criteria of recording quality at least, it is clear that this disc meets the highest standards. The accompanying book offers evocative photography of the monasteries, background information on Buddhist tradition, and the stories behind these specific prayers. The Drepung Monastery prayers were selected by the abbot, who hand-picked 25 monks adept at jokkhah, or chordal chanting, in which up to three notes are sounded simultaneously by one voice, not unlike the Tuvan style of "throat-singing." The monks also employ an arda or crescendo—a style in which melodies open softly, at a very low pitch, rising gradually to a full, high-pitched hum. At their peak a distinctive cadence is introduced by the addition of a deep vocal drone. At Khampagar Monastery the ritual of Tsedrup features chants spiced up with the ringing of the drilbu (handbell) and the clash of the rolmo (cymbal); a foghorn blast comes from a pair of dung (eight-foot-long trumpets). The ritual is intended to bless the participants with long life and robust health, and the monks get to knock back a little beer, which they refer to as the very "liquor of life."

David Poole

Tibetan Invocations ♪♪♪♪♪ (Music Club, 1998, prod. Huan Tung Sun)

Tibet
genre: Chant, spiritual, religious

Song Huei Liou; Ya Ging Ging; Sheng Horng; Sheng Yan. (All artists are from Tibet.)

Recently chants from Native American religions, medieval Catholic liturgies, and Bulgarian Easter services have found their way into world-music prominence. Here is an entry in that category from the mountain fastness of Tibet. The primary religion of that country is Buddhism, and part of its spiritual discipline involves the repetition of words to aid meditation. Three such songs comprise this disc; music of unusual—and for much of the Western world, still unfamiliar—beauty.

Kerry Dexter

Tuva: Voices from the Center of Asia ♪♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian, 1990, prod. Ted Levin, Eduard Alexeev, Zoya Kirgiz) Tuva: Among the Spirits ♪♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian, 1999, prod. Ted Levin, Joel Gordon)

Tuva
genre: Throat-singing, overtone singing, höömeï

Fedor Tau; Mergen Mongush; Anatolii Kuular; Sundukai Mongush; Tumat Kara-ool; Andrei Chuldum-ool; Anchimaa Sonat; Anchimaa Khert; Anchimaa Targin; Mikhail Dopchun; Marzhimal Ondar; Ensemble Amirak; Vasili Chazir; Vasilii Khuurak; Shozhul Salchak; Polina Ore-ool; Doluma Lopsanchap; Khuren Oorzhak; Shimet Soyan; Alexander Davakai; Tatyana Sat; Balgan Kuzhuget; Bilchit-Maa Davaa; Kok-ool Khovalig; Saskur-ool Mongush; Dosumaa Mongush; Valentina Kulaar; Raisa Mongush; Lenmaa Kuular; Soskul Mongush; Kazak Sandak. (All artists are from Tuva.)

Recorded and annotated by eminent musicologist Theodore Levin, these are perhaps the two most important releases of Tuvan music, and they are without a doubt two of the most remarkable world-music issues in recent years. Though they are not sold as a set and were recorded years apart, their contents are perfectly complementary. Voices from the Center of Asia, made in the late 1980s, is a straightforward effort to survey styles of Tuvan music that had not yet been displaced or transformed by pop introduced from elsewhere or standardized Soviet "folk" imposed from within. Among the Spirits, on the other hand, attempts to recapture the primal sound-world of the Tuvans using more adventurous recording techniques and performances.

Isolated by its remote, mountainous location between Mongolia and Siberia, and by decades of domination by the Soviet Union, Tuva has, to some extent, managed to escape the cultural homogenization suffered by much of the world at the hands of the West. Like their ancestors for centuries, many of the inhabitants of this wild, windswept region are still nomadic pastoralists, hunting, raising cattle and horses, and following the contours of the landscape in search of the best pastures through the seasons. Essentially, the music of the Tuvans is a direct outgrowth of their physical environment and of a timeless lifestyle that includes an animistic respect for nature and the practice of shamanism. As described by Levin, their "music forms a discourse with nature that reinforces their sense of place, purpose and self." At the simplest level, the sonic palette that Tuvans draw upon to make music is derived from the landscapes and living creatures that surround them. Levin calls this process "sound mimesis," from the Greek word for imitation. On Voices from the Center of Asia, for example, musicians can be heard making masterful imitations of reindeer, wolves, birds, or domestic animals with simple vocalizations as well as instruments like the amirge hunting horn.

But the real heart of Tuvan music is an astonishing vocal technique called throat-singing, overtone-singing, or höömeï. By holding the mouth, tongue, and lips in certain configurations while vocalizing, the throat-singer can produce two or more pitches at the same time, creating, in effect, a chord. The tones generated can range from a low, earthy growl emanating from the voice box and chest, to a piercing whistle emerging from the roof of the mouth, depending on the specific technique used. Examples of all five important throat-singing styles are heard on Voices, including the throbbing, whipping borbangnadyr, said to resemble the gallop of a horse; and the soaring, flute-like sigit.

Though it sounds unearthly to the urbanized listener, in Among the Spirits Levin shows that the inspiration for throat-singing (as with other Tuvan musical expression) can be found, not surprisingly, in such natural phenomena as animal sounds, rushing brooks, waterfalls, wind, and caves, and even in other musical instruments used by Tuvans, especially the khomus, a kind of jew's-harp used throughout Central Asia for centuries. On cuts like "Höömeï on Horseback" and "Borbangnadyr with Stream Water," the interactive character of the music and its deep connection with nature are revealed with exhilarating clarity. More recent styles of Tuvan music place throat-singing in the context of folk song structures with backing from instruments like the igil two-stringed fiddle and the doshpuluur lute. A few examples of such songs are presented on these discs, but listeners who want to hear that aspect of Tuvan music will be better served by listening to groups like Huun-Huur-Tu and Shu-De, profiled in this book's main section.

Jeffrey Muhr

Women of Istanbul ♪♪♪♪♪ (Traditional Crossroads, 1998, compilation prod. Harold G. Hagopian)

Turkey
genre: Cabaret music

Faide Yildiz; Zehra Bilir; Fahriye Hanim; Safiye Ayla; Suzan Yakar Rutkay; Roza Eskenazi; Müzeyyen Senar; Saadet Hanim; Hamiyet Yüceses; Müserref Hanim; Mahmur Handam Hanim; Perihan Altindag Sözeri; Necmiye Ararat Hanim; Kücük Nezihe Uyar; Nedime; Nezihe; Sabite Tur Gülerman. (All artists are from Turkey.)

In the 1920s, the new secular Turkish republic turned against Ottoman court music, diverting many generations of intense musical development into the nightclubs of Istanbul, and opening space for women singers. Women from the marginalized ethnic minorities (Armenians, Greeks, Jews) took the spotlight, though in many cases they did not actually perform live but only recorded for the radio, which provided a kind of veil, hiding them from shame. This collection brings those recordings brilliantly to life through expert remastering and detailed notes. These are the outpourings of deep and responsive souls, registered in rich voices: Saadet Hanim running trills that make your tonsils hurt in empathy; Mahmur Handam Hanim singing like a Turkish dove sprung from a French cabaret; Nezihe keeping breathless pace with some nervy runs on the oud (Arabic lute) fretboard; and Perihan Altindag Sözeri lilting like Billie Holiday on her way to a savage breakdown. If one suspects menace and danger in the life of an Istanbul cabaret singer, it certainly appears in the songs. In an anguished moan Nedime sings, "I have had enough torture and poison from you." I loaned this album to an Egyptian chef friend, but he returned it, saying, "I love this record, it makes me weep, but if I play this in my restaurant, the food will taste like death."

Chris King

The World's Musical Traditions 6: Song Creators in Eastern Turkey ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian, 1993, prod. Ursula Reinhard)

Turkey
genre: Âşik

Şeref Taşliova; Murat Çobanoglu; Mevlut Şafak Ihsani; Rahim Saglam. (All artists are from Turkey.)

Song Creators in Eastern Turkey, the third CD in a fine series released by the Smithsonian Institution (see the review of Bunggridj-bunggridj on page 867 for the series' convoluted history), documents the music of four poet-singers from the towns of eastern Turkey. These bards, originally called ozan, traditionally wandered through Central Asia singing songs of, among other things, shamanic religion and praise to rulers or tribal leaders. After the Turkic peoples of Asia adopted Islam, ozan music came to incorporate the Shiah system of Islamic belief and aspects of Sufi thought. It was at this time that ozan singers were given the name âşik, which means "singer of love songs," in reference to their passionate devotional songs. The âşik have also played the role of social critics, singing on behalf of the poor and oppressed. But with the emergence of a modernized and Westernized middle class in Turkey, not to mention an oppressive government fearful of their polemics, the âşik have found it necessary to tone down this aspect of their presentation. Today epic stories are a common source for song material, because they contain elements of entertainment and traditionalism, and because social criticism can be veiled in the narrative. Episodes from the epic of Köroglu, a legendary renegade poet-singer of the 16th century, are frequently drawn upon. Often sung today in teahouses in the towns of eastern Turkey, âşik songs are performed with accompaniment only on the saz lute. Sometimes âşik will sing in groups, but solo singing is most common. Because of their timbral homogeneity, and because Turkish structures and scales are so different from those of European music, the 20 songs heard here might sound indistinct at first. But repeated listening is richly rewarded as the wonderful subtleties of the music start to emerge; one begins to notice more clearly, for instance, the diverse coloring provided by the lute on different tracks. The accompanying booklet of commentary is a big help in this regard, as the listener can follow along with detailed descriptions of the songs and full translations of the lyrics. At presstime Song Creators in Eastern Turkey was sadly out of print, but worth a search and, like so much world music in the States, likely not far from its next reissue.

Jeffrey Muhr

The World's Musical Traditions 10: Tabla Tarang: Melody on Drums ♪♪♪♪½ (Smithsonian, 1996, prod. Walter Quintus)

India

genre: Raag

Pandit Kamalesh Maitra, Trilok Gurtu. (Both artists are from India.)

This CD, the seventh in a special series released by the Smithsonian Institution (see the review of Bunggridj-bunggridj on this page for the series' convoluted history), compiles sparkling performances for the tabla tarang, a set of tuned tabla drums. Unlike a typical tabla set, which consists of a treble drum called, confusingly, the tabla, and a bass drum called the bayan, the tabla tarang uses from 10 to 16 treble drums, each tuned to a specific pitch falling within a two-octave range. Tuning is accomplished by applying a paste of rice, iron powder, and water to the center of the drum heads. In order to play specific scales, drums are added or removed from the set. The tabla tarang is a relatively recent innovation dating to the late 1800s, and its use is still rare, perhaps due to the high level of skill required to perform on it. Indeed, Pandit Kamalesh Maitra, who plays the tracks on this CD (with backing from Trilok Gurtu on tabla), is probably the only person ever to perform full-length raags (improvisations based on specific melodic frameworks) on tabla tarang. The CD consists of four raags of differing lengths; all are variations on the raag called Todi, a melodic pattern considered to invoke moods of "quietness and devotion" and also associated with the morning (raags are typically tied to times of day and their feelings). Maitra plays these in truly scintillating fashion, by turns subtle, relaxed, and forceful. The recording quality is also outstanding; the unique method used by producer Walter Quintus, which involves miking the instruments from the performers' perspective, results in a sound that is both intimate and incredibly clear. The CD includes a 54-page booklet with brief notes on tabla history and construction, biographies of the performers, a discussion of raag music theory, and descriptions of each track.

Jeffrey Muhr

AUSTRALIA

The World's Musical Traditions 4: Bunggridj-bunggridj: Wangga Songs by Alan Maralung ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian, 1993, prod. Allan Marett)

Australia

genre: Wangga songs

Alan Maralung, vocals and click-sticks; Peter Manaberu, didgeridoo. (Both artists are from Australia.)

Bunggridj-bunggridj is the first volume of an excellent world-music series released by the Smithsonian Institution. The odd numbering of the CD calls for a bit of historical explanation: the now defunct International Institute for Traditional Music in Berlin, Germany, had released three volumes of a series called "Traditional Music of the World" when they asked the Smithsonian to pick up the series starting with the fourth volume. After the Smithsonian had issued six of the volumes in a beautiful slip-case format under the same name as the German releases, they were threatened with legal action by another record label for using the phrase "Music of the World." Forced, at great expense, to reprint all of the existing packaging to read "The World's Musical Traditions," the Smithsonian had to take a couple volumes out of print for lack of money. As it stands, all of the existing volumes, numbered 4–6 and 8–10, are reviewed in this book; the seventh volume, Ritual Music of Brazil, is out of print.

8 6 8 compilation albums: caribbean

In any case, Bunggridj-bunggridj archives a series of wangga songs by the late Aboriginal song master Alan Maralung. Performed both for ceremonial and non-ceremonial purposes, these songs are unusual in a number of respects. First, they are not composed, but dreamed! Aboriginal musicians receive the songs from wahru, or spirits, while asleep or in altered states of consciousness. In Maralung's case, the two spirits Bunggridj-bunggridj, who is a small bird, and Balandjirri, the ghost of a dead musician, "gave" him the songs recorded here, usually in dreams. Another peculiarity of the songs is that their vocal portions do not contain ordinary lyrics, but rather are sung using "special song words" that are only sometimes given symbolic meanings. The vocals are also filled out with "nonsense-syllables" that act to enhance the rhythmic flow of the song.

Accompanied by Peter Manaberu on the blown drone instrument the didgeridoo, Maralung sings and plays a set of clicksticks. Many of his songs are inspired by nature, wildlife, or supernatural phenomenon, like the strange "Minmin Light," which is named for a frightening illuminated spirit that appeared to him in a dream. Though careful research by producer Allan Marett clearly documents the structural complexities of the music, one need not intellectualize anything to experience the poignant simplicity in the songs' spirit. This humble spirit is embodied in Maralung's intonation of the name of his wahru Bunggridj-bunggridj at the end of each song, which serves as an affirmation that the power of his music is not primarily his own.

Jeffrey Muhr

CARIBBEAN

Afro-Cuba: A Musical Anthology ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1994, prod. Morton Marks)

Cuba
genre: Afro-Cuban

Intermittently identified artists in field and studio recordings. (All artists are from Cuba.)

Cuba's sugar plantations demanded a vast influx of slaves between the years 1835 and 1864. These 400,000 Africans made up 40 percent of Cuba's population and had a profound effect on Cuban culture. Rather than focus on the well-documented and explosive mix of African and Hispanic styles, this collection examines the four dominant communities of African descent—the Lucumi, Arara, Abakua, and Kongo—whose music has remained relatively intact. African traditions were maintained by the societies or cabildos these communities formed to pursue their own religious rituals. Most influential were the Lucumi, who sang in Yoruban. Their style was adapted by singers like Celia Cruz and Mercedes Valdes; one adaptation can be heard here with Gina Martin's "Song for Ogun." Known as the "white queen of black rhythms," Martin sings accompanied by a bell, a single drum, and the percussive playing of the piano. This album's recordings of various cabildos' performance groups range from simple chanting and drumming—as with the Yoruban song of praise for the god of creation, Ododua—to more sophisticated harmonies and varied percussion. The rumbas and Carnival music of the second half of the collection are sung in Spanish, yet the rhythms are still distinctly African. By focusing on Cuban music's African roots, the album unravels elements that today appear to be a seamless whole, but which in fact represent a fortunate meeting of two vibrant cultures under unfortunate circumstances.

David Poole

Angels in the Mirror: Vodou Music of Haiti ♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1997, compilation prod. Holly Nicolas, Y.M. David Yih, Elizabeth McAlister)

Haiti
genre: Vodou

Mapou Fo; Gwoup Premye Nimewo; Sanba Zawo and Djakata; Lakou Badjo; Rara La Fraicheur de L'Anglade. (All artists are from Haiti.)

Vodou (voodoo) is often misunderstood as black magic—in fact it is a way of life for the people of the Caribbean island nation of Haiti. "Vodou" means "spirit," and Haitians see a spiritual element in everything; as the title of this compilation suggests, they perceive this essence as existing just below the surface of everyday life. Vodou music is a way to communicate with spirits by singing, drumming, and dancing, with lyrics in Creole or the African Yoruba language. Angels in the Mirror is a field recording of traditional drumming styles and Vodou ceremonies by a variety of Haitian musicians. The accompanying guidebook provides thorough historical and photographic background on Vodou culture. Elements of this music can be heard in more commercial recordings like the Vodou/rock fusion of Boukman Eksperyans.

David Poole

Best of Straker's: Ah Feel to Party ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1996, prod. Granville Straker)

Trinidad & Tobago
genre: Calypso

Shadow; Lord Melody; Count Robin; Squibby; Chalkdust; Black Stalin; Ken "Professor" Philmore; Lord Nelson; Singing Francine; Cro Cro; Protector; Marcia Miranda; Nappy Mayers; Bill Trotman; Calypso Rose; Blakie; Winston Soso (St. Vincent); Machel Mon-tano; Poser; Duke; Brother Ebony; Explainer. (All artists are from Trinidad and Tobago except where noted otherwise.)

The Brooklyn-based Straker's label was created by Trinidadian expatriate Granville Straker in the early 1970s, and quickly established itself with a string of hits from the best calypso talent available, most of whom are featured on this two-CD set. Curiously, it was the Mighty Sparrow, arguably the most famous calypsonian ever, who gave Straker his break when he offered his old friend the chance to record a live album at no charge—yet he is about the only artist not represented here. Starting with Shadow's classic "Bass Man" from 1974, this is a high-quality excursion through an interesting point in calypso's evolution, more or less in chronological order. Consequently the first cuts tend to have a rootsier feel with echoes of earlier stars like Lord Kitchener, but already the style was shifting toward the party sound of calypso's successor, soca. The Straker's sound itself was strong, echoing the vitality and exuberance of its "live" origins, and due in large part to the participation of ace steel drum maestro Frankie McIntosh and the Equitables as house band for more than half of the 25 selections here, taken mostly from the mid-'80s to early '90s. Lyrically the songs tend to be less specifically political than the time-honored calypso norm, save for universal themes such as streaking, AIDS, or raising families, centering instead on partying, sexual innuendo, and dancing as per the soca legacy. This collection is a sure sign of Straker's' persistence at the forefront of promoting must-hear Trinidadian music.

Derek Rath

By the Rivers of Babylon: Timeless Hymns of Rastafari ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997, compilation prod. Randall Grass)

Jamaica
genre: Reggae

Ras Michael & the Sons of Negus; the Abyssinians; the Melodians; Yabby You & the Prophets; Joe Higgs; Culture; Judy Mowatt; the Ethiopians; Maxie, Niney & Scratch; Rita Marley; Augustus Pablo; Mutabaruka; Winston Jarrett; Count Ossie & the Mystic Revelation of Rastafari. (All artists are from Jamaica.)

Named after Ras Tafari Makonnen, a.k.a. Ethiopian emperor Haile Selassie, the Rastafarian religion views the political leader—crowned in 1930—as a spiritual savior for the black race, notably those Africans relocated by the slave diaspora to the Caribbean and America. These 14 well-chosen tracks from the 1960s–'90s document the importance of Rastafarian hymns (many with melodies borrowed from Western Christian ones) on the development of reggae. The most familiar is the classic title number by the Melodians (featured on the seminal soundtrack to The Harder They Come), but every song hits home with pointed grace, including "New Name" by Ras Michael; "Blackman Know Yourself" by Joe Higgs (who goes into a South Africanesque "Lion Sleeps Tonight" falsetto); Winston Jarrett's cover of the Wailers' great "Selassie Is the Chapel"; "So Long" by the pivotal Mystic Revelation of Rastafari; and—the highlight in a disc of highlights—a super-session version of "Babylon Burning (Fire, Fire)" by Lee "Scratch" Perry, Niney the Observer, and Max Romeo. A fantastic collection.

Bill Ellis

Calypso Breakaway ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1990, compilation prod. Dick Spottswood, Keith Warner)

Trinidad & Tobago
genre: Calypso

Keskidee Trio; King Radio; Felix and his Krazy Kats; Growler; Lion; Lord Executor; Al Philip Iere Syncopators; Tiger; Lord Beginner; Atilla the Hun; Lord Invader; Lionel Belasco's Orchestra; Lion and Atilla the Hun; Wilmouth Houdini; Caresser; Codello's Top Hatters Orchestra. (All artists are from Trinidad and Tobago.)

These 20 songs are representative of an extremely musically sophisticated period in the evolution of calypso. Transcribed from vintage recordings, the songs are politically and socially topical to their period, yet there is plenty of humor, wisdom, and wit inherent in the calypsonians' lyrics to relate to the human condition in any age. Calypso has always acted as a kind of bulletin board of the times, with politics, weather, and news stories intermixed with racy double entendres on love and relationships, and these tunes are no exception, save being from a slower, more naïve period of history. The music, with overt influence from American jazz, Cuba, and (more distantly) Africa, is, if anything, richer and more musically informed than today's counterpart stylings, and although the instrumentation has changed over the years, much of this music swings hard and will stand the test of time long after the overly synthesized soca variant of our time has been forgotten. Many of these artists were performing in cabarets and night clubs in New York and London at the time, and several went on to international acclaim. Calypso Breakaway is both a great introduction for the newcomer and a priceless, carefully mastered document for the aficionado, though its liner notes are not very specific or informative about the artists.

Derek Rath

Calypsos from Trinidad: Politics, Intrigue & Violence in the 1930s, Including the Butler Calypsos ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie/Folklyric, 1991, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz)

Trinidad
genre: Calypso

Atilla the Hun; Lord Beginner; Growling Tiger; Roaring Lion; Lord Caresser; Lord Executor; the Growler; King Radio. (All artists are from Trinidad.)

Of the many historical anthologies of calypso assembled by Rounder, Matchbox, Folkways, et. al, this augmented reissue of Where Was Butler?: A Calypso Documentary from Trinidad (Folklyric, 1987) is simply one of the best. Amply annotated by discographer Dick Spottswood, it documents one of the most active and innovative periods in the modern history of calypso, when the ostentatious oratorical style of the 20th century's first two decades had been thoroughly played out, and when—bolstered by the success of their triumphant recording trips to New York—established names like Lion and Atilla and talented newcomers like Tiger were experimenting wildly with melody, meter, rhyme, and phrasing; absorbing influences from American jazz and popular song; and preparing the way for (among other things) the first, now-forgotten, U.S. calypso fad in the late 1930s. But modern-day Americans expecting to hear popular calypsos of that time—light-hearted ditties about the virtues of marrying ugly women or quaint dirges about the abdication of the lovelorn Edward VIII—will be in for a surprise. For in the context of widespread depression and unemployment, stunning economic inequity, and violent labor riots, one of the calypsonians' principal innovations was thoroughly backward-looking: a revival, albeit more radical and sophisticated, of the form's folk tradition of acute social commentary on topical issues. (If rap in the '80s, as Chuck D used to claim, was black America's CNN, then calypso in the '30s was Trinidad's Daily News.) Included among the 23 selections are Tiger's classic lament "Money Is King" (if you're rich, you can get away with murder; if you're poor, "a dog is better than you"); Lion's dryly ironic "Send Your Children to the Orphan Home"; and Atilla's withering assessment of a government investigation into the causes of social unrest, "Commission Report"—whose casual mention of "capitalistic oppression" was too much for the censors.

Michael Eldridge

Caribbean Island Music ♪♪♪ (Nonesuch, 1972/1998, prod. John Storm Roberts)

Haiti, the Dominican Republic, Jamaica genre: Merengue, bolero, mento

Los Congos del Espiritu Santo (Dominican Republic); Odalicia Ventura (Dominican Republic); Orchestre Jazz Corondo (Haiti); Benjamin Reid (Jamaica); Charles Welsh (Jamaica); Valerie Walker (Jamaica); Theophilus Chiverton (Dominican Republic).

Caribbean music is known internationally for calypso and reggae, yet these urban styles are relatively new phenomena. The learned musicologist John Storm Roberts recorded examples of traditional Caribbean music in casual street settings during 1971, replete with the sounds of passing cars and barking dogs. Evident in both the music and the dialects are strong links with culture from Africa, England, Spain, and France, with flavors of folk, flamenco, and Cajun music. This disc, however, is more interesting than entertaining. The largely amateur musicians offer endearing performances, yet the collection is best enjoyed by musicologists concerned with tracing the evolution of Caribbean music; Storm's informative liner notes are the CD's most intriguing aspect.

David Poole

Caribbean Revels: Haitian Rara and Dominican Gaga ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian/Folkways, 1978/1991)

Haiti, Dominican Republic genre: Rara, gaga

Artists uncredited. (All artists are from Haiti and the Dominican Republic.)

In Haiti, rara is the pre–Lenten Carnival time when the Christian saints and Vodou iwa sleep, leaving the more corporeal elements of the population to exhausting pleasures and excesses. Haitian migrants, pushed by destitution into the Dominican Republic's sugar-cane industry, celebrate the officially discouraged gaga holiday in an effort to maintain cultural identity under oppressive conditions. They march through the streets and fields playing a raucous party music that is part religious celebration and part social protest, mixed with a liberal dose of bawdiness and satire. During the festivals of 1976–78, music scholars Verna Gillis and Ramon Perez went to the streets, plazas, and graveyards of both countries to record the tracks on this splendid compilation. The music is a joyous, ribald blend of local percussion and wind instruments that has a subtly hypnotic effect, almost as if the listener had imbibed the kleren (a cheap and potent sugar-cane liquor) fueling the musicians. The audio quality is excellent throughout and the performances are enthusiastic, even riotous. The disc comes with excellent, scholarly liner notes that provide social and political context to the music.

Ron Garmon

The Churchical Chants of the Nyahbingi ♪♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1983, prod. Elliott Leib)

Jamaica
genre: Ritual Rastafarian music

Various uncredited members of the Church Triumphant of Jah Rastafari and Haile Selassie I Theocracy Government (Jamaica).

For those interested in the roots of reggae and other popular Afro-Caribbean musical forms, these rare field recordings of the chants of the Nyahbingi order of the Rastafarian religion provide an invaluable cultural history lesson. The album was recorded during Ronald Reagan's 1982 visit to Jamaica. As Reagan carried out affairs of state and enjoyed the attention of "establishment" Jamaica, the hills of Trelawney rang out with the pulsating sounds of Nyahbingi drums while the Rastafari Judgement fire blazed all through the night. Simple songs like "Got to Move" and "Keep Cool Babylon" feature repetitive polyphonic chants accompanied only by trance-like drumming and rattles, providing the missing link between ancient African musical forms and modern reggae. But the righteous anger of lyrics criticizing Reagan, Pope John Paul II, and other oppressive forces of Babylon stand in stark contrast to conscious reggae's more positive and uplifting sociopolitical messages. This is raw, primal stuff, but undeniably powerful.

Bret Love

Cuba Classics 1: Silvio Rodríguez ♪♪♪♪ (Luaka Bop/Warner Bros., 1991, prod. David Byrne)
Cuba Classics 2: Incredible Dance Hits of the '60s & '70s ♪♪♪♪½ (Luaka Bop/Warner Bros., 1991, prod. Ned Sublette, executive prod. David Byrne) Cuba Classics 3: New Directions in Cuban Music—Diablo Al Inferno ♪♪♪♪ (Luaka Bop/Warner Bros., 1992, prod. Ned Sublette, executive prod. David Byrne)

Cuba
genre: Nueva trova, son, rumba, blues, speed metal

Silvio Rodríguez; Celeste Mendoza; María Tereza Vera; Orquesta Original de Manzanillo; Orquesta Riverside; Chappotín y Sus Estrella; Los Van Van; Conjunto Rumbavanna; Orquesta Revé Changiií '68; Caridad Hierrezuelo y Conjunto Caney; Los Zafiros; Orquesta Pancho el Bravo; El Jiguero de Cienfuegos; Los Papines; Irakere; Sintesis; Pio Leyva; Lazaro Ros with Mezcla; Los Blues; Grupo Vocal Sampling; Dan Den; NG La Banda; Pablo Milanés; Carlos Varela; Zeus. (All artists are from Cuba.)

Producer David Byrne's three Cuba Classics compilations were for many Americans the first opportunity to hear any of the new sounds in Cuban music since the beginning of the U.S. economic blockade in 1961. In the late '60s, protest songs in the mold of Bob Dylan and John Lennon were popularized by Silvio Rodríguez, and the movement was termed nueva trova (new ballad), a close cousin of the nueva canción (new song) trend elsewhere in Latin America. The first volume here gathers Rodríguez's material from 1975 to '86, in which he voices social statements in a seamless fusion of avant-garde lyrics and popular melodies. His songs are steeped in cryptic metaphors and poetry influenced by Pablo Neruda. While troubadours like Rodríguez struggled with pressing political issues, Havana's nightclubs throbbed to the son and rumba of Los Van Van, Celeste Mendoza, and the other excellent Afro-Cuban dance bands collected on Volume 2 of this series. Volume 3 explores the fusion of styles popular in the '80s, including Los Van Van again; the Santería-techno of Sintesis; and Pablo Milanés, singing an updated version of nueva trova. These are well-chosen compilations with enthusiastic and intelligently written liner notes—Americans, find out what you've been missing!

David Poole

Cuba Fully Charged ♪♪♪♪ (Earthworks, 1993, compilation prod. Trevor Herman)

Cuba
genre: Son, rumba, guaguanco, son montuno, guaracha son

Son 14; Adalberto Alvarez; NG La Banda; Carlos Embale; Conjunto Chappotin Y Sus Estrellas; Sierra Maestra; Conjunto Rumbavana; Conjunto Los Bocucos; Conjunto Los Magnificos; Pello El African. (All artists are from Cuba.)

Released just prior to the boom of interest in all things Cuban, this 14-track compilation offers a well-rounded overview of the island's music, featuring many famous names from the past alongside some of the newer movers and shakers. Immediately apparent is the energy and vitality of some of the elders, including Felix Chappotin and Carlos Embale, well into his 70s and singing like a teenager. Current big names like NG La Banda prove that the roots of Cuban music are alive and well, regardless of how the instrumentation may change, while Sierra Maestra, for all their dedication to tradition, remain both relevant and contemporary. Cuba is still producing great composers and bandleaders, and one of today's best, Adalberto Alvarez, gets three cuts, alone and with his first group, Son 14. As the somewhat verbose liner notes point out, Afro-Cuban music has a long and complex pedigree, and it is this heritage, along with the high musical expertise fostered by the music, that have inspired players and audiences alike to stick with this sensual and sophisticated celebration of life over many generations and evolutions. The clarity of the recordings indicates that they are all relatively modern, though the sleeve notes offer no information on dates. But in any circumstances, this music speaks eloquently for itself.

Derek Rath

Cuba: I Am Time ♪♪♪½ (Blue Jackel Entertainment, 1997, compilation prod. Jack O'Neil)

Cuba
genre: Afro-Antillean, Cuban, Cuban jazz

Over 50 artists on four discs. (All artists are from Cuba.)

Ancient mysteries, forgotten rhythms, obscure religious ideas—they don't seem at first glance to have a great deal to do with contemporary Latin jazz and pop music. From the first disc of this four-album compilation, though, you'll be taken to a darker, more tropical world than you had imagined, where chants from the Yoruban peoples transported to Cuba from Africa intertwine with indigenous rhythms and borrowings from Spanish religious music. The first disc is called Cuban Invocations, and as the music moves into the second disc, Cantar en Cuba, the voice of the singer and the idea of Cuba as a world crossroads emerge. Then the Cuban people show the world how to dance with them in the third album, Bailar con Cuba. The music makes its full transition to the world stage with artists such as Gonzalo Rubalcaba, Chico O'Farrill, and Grupo AfroCubano playing Cubano Jazz. But there's still the underlying sound of the ancient invocations where cultures first began to meet . . . that's what you learn from listening to this collection. You can also learn from reading the 112-page book that comes with the set. It's well-researched and well-designed, filled with information about the artists, the history of Cuban music, and the story of Cuba.

Kerry Dexter

Cuban Counterpoint: History of the Son Montuno ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992, compilation prod. Morton Marks)

Cuba
genre: Son

Los Tutankamen; Sexteto Habanero; Sexteto Boloña; Sexteto Nacional; Septeto Nacional; Conjunto Tipíco Habanero; Arsenio Rodriguez y su Conjunto; Cachao All Stars; Celia Cruz with the Sonora Matancera; Miguel Cuní with the Conjunto Modelo; Abelardo Baroso with the Orquesta Sensación; Félix Chapotín; Beny Moré. (All artists are from Cuba.)

The "Cuban counterpoint" of the title is the mix of African and Hispanic cultures that forms the rhythms of Cuban music as we know it. The son montuno style combined these sounds more successfully than any other and went on to influence the immensely popular salsa genre. This collection surveys the evolution of son montuno dance music in recordings from the 1920s to the '70s, including the upbeat, jazz-influenced sound of the '50s.

David Poole

Cuban Dance Party: Roots of Rhythm Volume 2 ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1990, prod. Howard Dratch, Eugene Rosow, Rene Lopez)

Cuba
genre: Son

Grupo Irakere; Los Van Van; Estrellas Cubanas; Septeto Nacional De Ignacio Piñero; Orquesta Orestes Lopez; Isaac Oveido and His Family; Son De La Loma. (All artists are from Cuba.)

Intended as a companion to the three-hour television series Roots of Rhythm with Harry Belafonte, Cuban Dance Party is 11 foot-stomping examples of prime son (Cuba's seminal rhythmic song form), recorded live in Cuba for the state-owned label EGREM. The stars of this collection are the veteran Septeto Nacional De Ignacio Piñero, founded in 1927 and still performing. Their three traditional songs are led by vocalist Carlos Embale in a style that has changed little since their heyday in the '30s. The distinctive growl of Juan Formell and his funky rhythm section in Los Van Van are captured while playing to an audience of 50,000. Formell's herky-jerky vocal style as heard on "Que Palo" was a strong influence on Talking Heads. All of these tracks were laid down live at Carnival and community dances, catching an excitement and vivacity guaranteed to fuel your own dance parties.

David Poole

Cuban Gold, Volumes 1–5 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Qbadisc, 1995–97, compilation prod. Harry Sepulveda)

Cuba
genre: Son, bolero, charanga, son montuno, rumba-son, soncha, guaracha, cha cha cha, guaguanco, guajira, mambo, danzon, bachata son, pachanga, montuno

Vol. 1: Los Van Van; Orquesta Original de Manzanillo; Estrella de Areito; Son 14; Groupo Manguare; Francisco Fellove; Orquesta Ritmo Oriental; Orquesta Aliamen; Conjunto Rumbavana; Irakere. Vol. 2: Orquesta Aragon con Los Papines; Estrellas de Chocolate; Estrellas Cubanas; Estrellas de Areito; Ritmo Oriental; Adalberto Alvarez y su Son; Reve y su Charangon; Los Van Van; Orquesta Original de Manzanillo. Vol. 3: Orquesta Melodias del 40; Orquesta Riverside con Tito Gomez; Orquesta Sensacion con Abelardo Barroso; Estrellas de Chocolate; Orquesta Neno Gonzalez; Orquesta Aragon; Pio Leyva; Chappotin y sus Estrellas con Miguelito Cuni; Orquesta Ideal; Orquesta Estrellas Cubanas; Orquesta Novedades con Miguelito Cuni. Vol. 4: Las Maravillas de Florida; Conjunto Bolero; Orquesta Aragon; Chappotin y sus Estrellas con Miguelito Cuni; Orquesta Riviera; Ritmo Oriental; Nino Rivera con Miguelito Cuni; Los Mravillas de Mali con Boncana Maiga; Orquesta Aragon con Elena Burke; Chappotin y sus Estrellas con Laito; Orquesta America; Reyes '73; Los Van Van. Vol. 5: Adalberto Alvarez y su Son; La Maravilla de Florida; Irakere; Conjunto Rumbavana; Estrellas Cubanas; Orquesta Enrique Jorrin con Bobby Carcasses; Los Van Van. (All artists are from Cuba.)

Taken from the vaults of Cuba's EGREM records, this series is indispensable in understanding the evolution of Cuban popular music since the revolution isolated the island from neighboring America. As thorough a study as it is, there is nothing academic about these swinging and very musical cuts, many of which were chart-toppers in their times. The vibrancy of the bands can be seen by how many names pop up time and time again throughout this often chronologically sequenced set, albeit sometimes with fresh lineups as musicians fled Cuba for a better life. The 1960s (Volume 3), for instance, were interesting for the overlap of musicians from the '40s and a new breed formulating future developments (including salsa) from these roots; Volume 4 reveals yet further modernization in the '70s, but even here classic Cuban music is omnipresent both rhythmically and harmonically. Volume 5 has the hardest extended jams (especially from Irakere and Adalberto Alvarez), but this series is first-class dance music throughout, with the much-liked charanga sound of violins and flutes often softening or replacing the brass that became customary in salsa from New York. Major names both familiar and unfamiliar abound with too many highlights to mention; this is essential, deep, and fun listening for anyone interested in Latin music. The liner notes are brief or sometimes nonexistent, but the artist bibliography is a valuable who's-who in itself.

Derek Rath

Duke Reid's Treasure Chest ♪♪♪♪♪ (Heartbeat, 1992, prod. Duke Reid)
Ska after Ska after Ska ♪♪♪♪½ (Heartbeat, 1998, prod. Duke Reid)

Jamaica
genre: Rocksteady, ska

The Paragons; the Melodians; Alton Ellis; Phyllis Dillon; U-Roy; Justin Hinds & the Dominoes. (All artists are from Jamaica.)

Albert "Duke" Reid, the studio auteur and gun-lover who didn't hesitate to intimidate the groups that recorded for him but extracted some of the best performances of their careers, had an ear for the definitive singers of the proto-reggae "rocksteady" era. He stands alongside Clement "Coxsone" Dodd as one of Jamaica's great producers of hit songs. Reid's secret weapon was his engineer Byron Smith, who captured the intimate sound at the Treasure Isle studios on countless well-preserved masters. Over two classic-packed discs, Duke Reid's Treasure Chest collects gems like the Paragons' original recording of "The Tide Is High" (later famously covered by Blondie) and versions of '60s American soul landmarks like "My Girl," performed here by the Techniques. Ska after Ska after Ska offers more virtuosity from the Silvertones, Justin Hinds, and other Duke Reid staples, though from slightly earlier than on Treasure Chest. You'll hear the signature ska beat, doo-wop, other vocal harmony, and hints of the flowering of reggae music to come.

David Poole

Konbit: Burning Rhythms of Haiti ♪♪♪♪ (A&M, 1989, compilation prod. Jonathan Demme, Fred Paul, Edward Saxon)

Haiti
genre: Compas (a.k.a. konpa), mini-jazz, rara

Ensemble Nemours Jean-Baptiste; Magnum Band; Skah Shah; Sakad; Neville Brothers (USA) with Les Freres Parents; Manno Charlemagne; Sanba Yo; Tabou Combo; Mini All-Stars; D.P. Express. (All artists are from Haiti, except where noted otherwise.)

At the time this album came out, somewhat before Boukman Eksperyans became a world-music household word, Haitian sounds were largely unknown in the U.S.—even though the harrowing political situation on the island had driven many of its top bands to seek stateside exile, mainly in Brooklyn and Miami, where groups like Magnum Band, Skah Shah, and Tabou Combo maintain a busy schedule playing for the large expatriate community. Most of this compilation covers compas, the slick, modern dance music most loved by the Haitian community, as performed by the best artists on the genre's scene. The two tracks by Sakad and Sanba Yo in the Vodou/rara style (an Afro-Haitian ritual/street-festival form later made famous by the aforesaid Boukman) are marked by breakneck percussion and frenzied singing, while people's troubadour Manno Charlemagne gives a brief example of Haitian acoustic balladry. The two tracks pairing the Neville Brothers with Les Freres Parents are funky anomalies, perhaps meant to boost the album's commercial appeal.

j. poet

Mambo Mania: The Kings and Queens of Mambo ♪♪♪♪ (Rhino, 1995, compilation prod. Laura Canellias, Alan Geik)

Cuba
genre: Mambo

Celia Cruz Con La Sonora Matancera; Pérez Prado & His Orchestra; Tito Rodriguez; Mongo Santamaria Orchestra; Hector Rivera & His Orchestra; Beny Moré Y Su Orquesta; Desi Arnaz & His Latinos (Cuba/USA); Ray Barretto (USA); La India De Oriente; Tito Puente & His Orchestra (Cuba/USA); Machito & His Orchestra (Cuba/USA); Cachao Y Su Ritmo Caliente; Cal Tjader Mambo Quintet (Cuba/USA); Xavier Cugat & His Orchestra (Spain/USA); Septeto Nacional De Ignacio Pinero. (All artists are from Cuba except where noted otherwise.)

Mambo is more than a musical genre or a dance style. It might be more useful to think of it as a force—something that starts in the feet, shoots up to make the head spin, and then results in a pronounced hip disturbance. For certain purists the form was at its peak in the 1950s and '60s, when mambo's exotic rhythms crossed over to worldwide popularity. That's exactly the period covered on this single-disc compilation from the reissue gurus at Rhino Records. The "golden age" of the Cuban craze saw a host of artists realize their crossover dreams in the U.S. pop charts (and, in the case of Desi Arnaz, beyond). The amusing liner notes offer a bit of history, artist background, and even basic dance instruction. But the music will get you moving before you have a chance to practice. From the trademark blast of Pérez Prado's Orchestra on "Pachito E-Ché" to the liquid groove of Tito Puente & His Orchestra on "Guaguanco Margarito," this is all quality product with great sound and excellent programming. While licensing restrictions kept the label from including artists like Noro Morales and Johnny Pacheco, it would still be hard to find a better introductory compilation.

Tim Sheridan

Merengue: Dominican Music and Dominican Identity ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1997, compilation prod. Paul Austerlitz)

Dominican Republic
genre: Merengue

Antonio Morel y su Orquesta; Belkis Concepcion. (All artists are from the Dominican Republic.)

The merengue is the national music of the Dominican Republic, a vibrant dance rhythm combining African and Spanish styles. Merengue's roots are in the Caribbean ballrooms of the mid-19th century. Eventually rejected by the Eurocentric middle class as being too African and lascivious, merengue managed to find a devoted following among rural Dominicans, who emphasized the African elements and added regional flavors. Everyone can merengue—just shuffle to the beat. The ease and fun of this dance style have made it a hit across the world. For the unadulterated source, no collection could be better than this one. You'll hear everything from peppy 1930s recordings to contemporary grooves like accordionist Domingo Azolo's 1991 "Merengue Redondo." As a companion to Paul Austerlitz's book of the same name (Temple University Press, 1996), this is a serious study, but the vitality and friendly rhythms of merengue make it anything but stuffy.

David Poole

Reggae Jamdown: The RAS Tapes ♪♪♪♪½ (Rykodisc, 1990, compilation prod. Steven Jurgensmeyer)

Jamaica
genre: Reggae

Pinchers; Frankie Paul; Half Pint; Charlie Chaplin; Ini Kamoze; Edi Fitzroy; Sugar Minott; Brigadier Jerry; Admiral Tibet; Hugh Mundell; Dennis Brown; Peter Broggs; Don Carlos; Freddie McGregor; Gregory Isaacs; Jacob Miller; Ijahman; Israel Vibration. (All artists are from Jamaica.)

Once upon a time, hang out on the beach at Negril and with a couple of decent-quality tapes you could trade for one mixtape of the trader's favorite songs. This compilation has that air, right down to the typewritten back cover. Fortunately it has far better fidelity. Reggae Jamdown crystallizes the moment when reggae had yet to thoroughly give in to the subsequent "dancehall" style. At least RAS Records, the source of all these sides, hadn't. The mix does feature some early dancehall landmarks like Brigadier Jerry's "Three Blind Mice," Charlie Chaplin's classic "Cool the Violence" (complete with its sample of Scott Joplin's "The Entertainer"), and Frankie Paul's half-toasted, dubwise "Tato." It also presents some of reggae's better contemporary vocalists, like the hero of "lovers' rock," Gregory Isaacs, doing something other than "Night Nurse" (here, "Red Rose for Gregory"). This record is highly recommended, especially if your taste in reggae stopped in the '70s with Rastaman Vibration and The Harder They Come.

Hank Bordowitz

Septetos Cubanos: sones de Cuba ♪♪♪♪♪ (Corason/Música Tradicional, 1990, compilation prod. Eduardo Llerenas)

Cuba
genre: Son

Septeto Tipico Oriental; Tipicos del Son; Septeto Soneros San Luis; Cuarteto Patria; Septeto Tipico Spirituano; Estudiantina Invasora; Septeto Nacional; Agrupación Cucalambé; Guitarras y trovadores. (All artists are from Cuba.)

The tradition started by such marvelous groups as the Trio Matamoros, the Cuarteto Oriental, and the Sexteto Habanero is still alive and documented in this double-disc package. While the rhythmic son style lies at the heart of the Afro-Cuban musical revolution, the format for groups playing it is more flexible than the septet lineup of this album's title would lead you to believe—quartets, octets, and nonets are included, a slight caveat that fades when listening to such a superb set. There is even a recording by the pivotal Septeto Nacional here (though the historic lineup with Ignacio Piñero is long defunct). Comprehensive, reader-friendly liner notes by the producer are printed in Spanish and English and detail the history of son and its various elements. If they want, though, listeners can skip over the text and dig right into some of the liveliest acoustic music on the planet.

Garaud MacTaggart

Sextetos Cubanos Vols. I & II ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1991, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz, Michael Ivan Avalos)

Cuba
genre: Son

Sexteto Munamar; Sexteto Machin; Sexteto Nacional; Sexteto Matancero; Sexteto Occidente; Sexteto Bolona. (All artists are from Cuba.)

Each of Havana's sextets in the Golden Age of the 1920s and '30s vied competitively for the prestige of foreign tours, radio spots, and record deals, and had its own distinct style. The Sexteto Munamar emphasized its Afro-Cuban heritage; the romance, the most popular theme of Cuba's seminal son form, was perfected by the Sexteto Nacional; the suggestive stories in Sexteto Machin's son were notorious, as with "Mama Yo Quiero Un Yoyo"'s mother-daughter admonition, "I've already told you child leave your yoyo alone!" Sextetos Cubanos will appeal to fans of the best-selling Buena Vista Social Club albums, whose retro style recalls this period.

David Poole

Soca Gold 1998 ♪♪♪ (VP Records, 1998)

Trinidad, Jamaica, USA
genre: Soca

Ronnie McIntosh; krosfyah; Super Blue; Nigel Lewis; Poser; Osha; Onyan; Square One; Iwer George; Chinese Laundry; Bud; Allison Hinds; Beenie Man; Technic Band; Johnny King. (Artists are from Trinidad, Jamaica, and USA.)

Old-time calypso purists may blanch at the techno/dancehall direction of '90s soca (the form's more modern variant), but under the electronic surface many of the old traditions flourish. Social commentary and current affairs each get their turn, along with sexual innuendo and the rampant slackness (sexual explicitness) found in dancehall reggae. In fact the presence of Jamaican giant Beenie Man shows how the genres are merging, with steel drums and Rastafarian beliefs alternately showcased on his two contributions. Elsewhere the legacy of erstwhile soca legend Arrow shows up in the stylings on several tracks, while Poser's "Deyar" harks back to the more traditional songs of the '70s. The Asian contingent is represented by Iwer George's "Bottom in de Road," delivered in the Indian-influenced "chutney soca" style that is now a major force in Trinidad. These 16 tracks of high-power party music, if naturally inclined toward assimilation with other contemporary trends, contain some fine performances from some top contenders in the current soca arena. Hopefully the paucity of information in the sleeve notes will be addressed for future volumes.

Derek Rath

Soca Music from Trinidad: Heat in De Place ♪♪♪
(Rounder, 1990, prod. Gene Scaramuzzo)

Trinidad
genre: Soca

Johnny King; Shadow; Bally; All Rounder; Singing Francine; Chalkdust. (All artists are from Trinidad.)

"Lyrics don't stand a chance/man want to dance," sang Chalkdust, bemoaning the seeming demise of calypso, which served as a form of social commentary expressing popular discontent with the government and local affairs in Trinidad. Under the influence of disco and a booming economy in the mid-1970s, calypso evolved into soul-calypso or "soca," with drum machines, party lyrics, and smoother production. Every year around December, in good time for Trinidad's famous Carnival, a new set of colorful, libidinous soca tunes is released. This album's seven long jams were in heavy rotation in Trinidadian music's various venues—on the sound-system trucks on the "road march," in the calypso tents, and at the outdoor fetes. Culled from the highlights of the '88 season, this collection provides an equal quota of calypso, in which satirical lyrics are as crucial as a good beat. Either way, this vibrant disc makes for great party music.

David Poole

Solid Gold, Coxsone Style ♪♪♪♪♪ (Studio One, 1972/ Heartbeat, 1992, prod. Clement "Coxsone" Dodd)

Jamaica
genre: Reggae

John Holt; Alton Ellis; Sound Dimension; the Abyssinians; the Helpers; the Beltones; the Freedom Singers; Jackie Mittoo; Delroy Wilson; Wayne McGie; Ernest Ranglin; Dennis Brown; Ruddy Thomas. (All artists are from Jamaica.)

Featuring many of Jamaica's greatest reggae singers and instrumentalists at their best, Solid Gold, Coxsone Style also displays the kind of lush magic producer Clement Dodd conjured with striking consistency during reggae's golden age. The Abyssinians' "Declaration of Rights" is one of the most important songs in the history of Jamaican music—or even world music for that matter. Its graceful yet rousing call to "get up and fight for your rights" is rendered with the kind of uncommon passion that uplifts the spirit and the hairs on the back of the neck. Ex-Paragon John Holt, who would eventually become one of the most popular singers in the land, oozes the groove with a subtle, cool, and deadly vocal approach on "Strange Things" and two gospel-styled Neil Diamond covers, "Holly Holy" and "Soolaimon." On "I'll Be Waiting," the legendary Alton Ellis's bewitchingly soulful vocals carry a tune with subpar lyrics to the promised land. The crack Studio One house band Sound Dimension also gloriously delivers on the instrumental version, "Park View," with guitarist Ernest Ranglin's amazing solo beautifying the vista considerably. One of Ranglin's true original masterpieces is included here as well, the pristinely melodic and surprisingly psychedelic "Surfing." But what makes this collection superior to others out there is Dodd's inclusion of superb rarities from relative shadow-dwellers, the Helpers and the Beltones. The Beltones have at least a claim to the first true reggae song: "No More Heartaches" for Harry J. in 1968. Whether you buy that claim

compilation albums: caribbean

or not, the searing piece included here—"Let Him Live"—proves that this was a harmony group capable of entrancing alchemy. The Helpers' "Help Me" was the band's only hit—but what an unforgettable sure-shot it is! Jackie Mittoo just wrecks shop on the keyboard-driven riddim, and the singing is majestic and beautiful. The late Mittoo—one of the greatest, funkiest keyboardists this side of Jimmy Smith and Groove Holmes—is a secret to far too many. One listen to "Ironside" and you'll be scouring record shops for Mittoo's dynamite catalog. As if all this weren't enough, the disc also contains an extended mix of the great Delroy Wilson's version of "Love You Madly." Wilson's voice is reminiscent of the Chi-Lites' Eugene Record and he just lays everything out on this heavy soul cut. Solid Gold, Coxsone Style is as fine a single-disc compilation of reggae as is available.

Todd Shanker

The Story of Jamaican Music: Tougher Than Tough ♪♪♪♪♪ (Mango, 1993, compilation prod. Steve Barrow)

Jamaica
genre: Reggae

Laurel Aitken; the Folkes Brothers; Jimmy Cliff; the Skatalites; Prince Buster; Desmond Dekker; the Maytals; the Wailers; Burning Spear; Buju Banton. (All artists are from Jamaica.)

Steve Barrow is one of the world's great reggae experts, and there are few better starting points than his compilation The Story of Jamaican Music and his book Reggae Music—The Rough Guide. Jamaican musicians have released an unfathomable quantity of records, yet the scene is based in one town, Kingston; the same group of session musicians crops up on most of the records for years on end; there is a relative handful of studios and producers; and the same rhythm will be used in many different recordings, in varying versions and under different names. Given these facts, the variety and imagination of Jamaican music is as much a wonder as its sheer volume. This album spans from the mento of the 1950s; to the ska and rocksteady of the '60s; to the roots, reggae, dub, and deejay toasting of the '70s. The '80s are represented by the hip-hop–influenced dancehall style, but much has happened since the collection was completed in 1993, so top off these four discs with a sampler of recent ragga (digital reggae). Barrow's picks well survey the landmarks and the lesser-known gems, inspiring further exploration. The accompanying booklet makes this a stylish precursor to the Blood & Fire label's reinvention of the reggae reissue, brimming with atmospheric photos and historic album covers. Nothing else comes close to covering all the bases or belongs more in your collection.

David Poole

West Indies: An Island Carnival ♪♪♪♪♪ (Caprice Records, 1977/Elektra/Nonesuch, 1983/1991, prod. Krister Malm)

Lesser Antilles
genre: Afro-Caribbean, vintage calypso

Unidentified musicians from Dominica, Young Island, Grenada, St. Lucia, Trinidad, Tobago, St. Vincent, Guadeloupe.

Recorded originally for a Swedish label by Krister Malm between 1969 and '71 in the Lesser Antilles, these 12 songs in 39 minutes reflect the various influences on the region of colonialism by the Spanish, French, British, Dutch, Portuguese, Danish, Swedish, and other European nations. West African slaves were brought to the area to work on sugar plantations until 1806, when the British banned the slave trade. The resultant lack of agricultural workers led to a wave of immigration from then-British colonies such as India, China, and Lebanon-Syria. In addition, large numbers of Scots, Irish, Venezuelans, Colombians, Portuguese (from Madeira), and Indonesians came to the islands. On this disc you'll hear all of these cultural influences, but with the greater emphasis on African traditions in instrumentation, musical arrangement, and social purpose. Most of the songs have a charming, rustic quality. The more percussive tunes, made for dancing or spiritual ceremonies (Hindu, Muslim, and Afro-Trinidadian Shango), are performed with vocals and accompanied by instruments including the guiro, a scraped instrument that could be a hard fruit with grooves in it, an ordinary tin grater, or another rough object; the boom boom, a bamboo cane without finger-holes, blown like a tuba; the maracas or shak shak; the cocoa lute, a stringed instrument plucked with the mouth using the same technique as a jew's-harp; and African hand piano (mbira, zana). The informative 20-page booklet describes in considerable detail the origins of each song. Don't expect the album to reflect the Afro-Caribbean rhythms Americans are used to hearing today; this is roots stuff, somewhat raw and unpolished.

Nancy Ann Lee

Wind Your Waist ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1991, compilation prod. Randall Grass)

Trinidad
genre: Soca

Arrow (Montserrat); Shadow (Trinidad); Burning Flames (Antigua); Drupatee (Trinidad); Spice (Barbados); Tambu (Trinidad); Organiser (Trinidad); Kitchener (Trinidad).

Soul and calypso are the basic elements of soca, a tastefully modernized version of the joyous and erotic dance music made famous at Trinidad's Carnival. Wind Your Waist is a particularly interesting and enjoyable soca compilation because it demonstrates the African, Indian, Latin, Jamaican, and American influences in this culture-rich music. For instance, Drupatee, a Trinidadian of East Indian descent, displays a fascinating mixture of Indian textures and soca beats on "Mr. Bissessee," in a style known as "curry-tabanca." Arrow is from the tiny but music-drenched island of Montserrat and is perhaps best known for his crossover soca anthem "Hot, Hot, Hot!" The Bacchanalian-spirited "Long Time" appropriately segues for one hot minute into that international hit, but throughout uses subtle touches of West African syncopation and American-soul vocal embellishment. David Rudder is one of the more internationally revered soca stars. His band Charlie's Roots teams with the equally popular Tambu on the Road March winner (Carnival favorite) "This Party Is It." The title says everything about the sound of this classic soca scorcher, which integrates pummeling Jamaican-ragga-like digital beats and bright, distinctly salsafied horn charts. Old-school calypso legend Lord Kitchener proves he distinctly comprehends both the modern soca sound and its global impact on the huge 1990 hit "Parkway," a jubilant reminiscence of the annual Labor Day Carnival on Brooklyn's Eastern Parkway. And Shadow, a Carnival favorite with a uniquely deep-toned singing voice and a riveting vibrato, unleashes one of his many hits, the decidedly frisky "Tension," which alone is worth the price of the disc. This insightful compilation is a superb document of modern soca and one that fully lives up to its subtitle—"The Ultimate Soca Dance Party."

Todd Shanker

Word Soun' 'Ave Power: Reggae Poetry ♪♪♪♪½ (Heartbeat, 1983, prod. Mutabaruka)

Jamaica
genre: Dub poetry

Breeze; Mutabaruka; Malachi Smith; Tomlin Ellis; Glenville Bryan; Navvie Nabbie; Oliver Smith. (All artists are from Jamaica.)

While the first Jamaican deejays in the 1960s toasted over records with a patter to spur on the dance crowd, they would not have considered their words to be poetry, and rarely did they have an agenda beyond keeping their sound-system audience at capacity. But by the late '70s the "dub poets" crafted this patter into poetry, soon to be extended over whole albums of deep dub rhythms. As reggae music for a time lost some of the revolutionary zeal and drive that had made performers like the late Bob Marley so popular, the dub poets urgently sought a forum to voice strongly held opinions and relevant social commentary. They reveled in the power of language and rhythm to hammer home their points, with clever wordplay as their stock in trade. In 1983 dub poet Mutabaruka helped document this movement in nine tracks of heavy reggae bass lines and positive, empowering messages. A second, all-women volume—Woman Talk: Caribbean Dub Poetry ♪♪♪♪½ (Heartbeat cassette, 1986, prod. Mutabaruka)—followed. The most notable omission from the first disc was Linton Kwesi Johnson, foremost among dub poets, who can be best heard on Independant Intavenshan: The Island Anthology ♪♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1998, prod. Jerry Rappaport, Bill Levenson). This collects material from four of Johnson's powerful albums, from the same era as Word Soun'.

David Poole

CENTRAL AMERICA

Calypsos: Afro-Limonese Music of Costa Rica ♪♪♪ (Lyrichord, 1988, prod. David Petrosino)

Costa Rica
genre: Calypso

Artists not identified. (All artists are from Costa Rica.)

Unlike Trinidadian calypso, Costa Rican calypso is sung in Spanish and serves less as social commentary than Carnival dance music. Maracas, harmonica, and guitar add a Latin flavor. Instead of large steel drums, the small steel timbaletas, bass drum, snare drum, and congas offer a riveting percussion section. Costa Rican Carnival takes place in Puerto Limon on the Caribbean coast. Historically calypso was performed by shatwels (singers) to accompany kalendas (wrestling matches) where fighters battered each other with wooden clubs, often killing an opponent. The shatwels chanted phrases to which the crowd responded to incite the combatants. These kalendas gradually evolved into non-violent dances performed throughout Carnival, as heard on this upbeat 1988 recording.

David Poole

EUROPE

Arte Flamenco, Vols. 1–15 ♪♪♪♪♪½ (Mandala/Harmonia Mundi, 1999, prod. Juan Barral)

Spain
genre: Flamenco

El Niño de Marchena; Pepe Martínez; La Niña de los Peines; Román El Granáino; Juan Breva; Aurelio de Cádiz; El Niño de Almadén; Canalejas de Jerez; Pepe Soler; M. Torre; Escancena; Gordito de Triana; Cojo Luque; Niño de Priego; Rebollo; Luis Caballero; Luis Maravilla; La Niña de Linares; El Niño de Cabras; El Americano; Angelillo; Cojo de Malaga; Guerrita; El Niño de la Huerta; Josélito de Cádiz; Ramon Montoya; Manuel Vallejo; El

Chocolate; Juan Varea; Canalejaz de Puerto-Real; Estebán de Sanlúcar. (All artists are from Spain.)

In this excellent 15-volume survey of flamenco history, Mandala revives long-deleted LPs and previously unheard performances by the early greats. Indeed, this exhaustive but fascinating series unearths gems from the 1890s through the 1970s. Of particular note are the recordings dating from the 1930s to the late '50s, during which time flamenco was already undergoing dramatic changes. Reviled by purists then, the innovations have since become mainstream, from vocal flourishes to the establishment of flamenco guitar as a solo instrument rather than always accompaniment for a singer. About half of the tracks from the '30s and '40s, especially Volumes 12 and 13 (but also volumes 4, 5, 7, 9, 10, 14, and 15), are slightly marred by a hissing surface noise—yet all the performances in the series are of an unusually high standard, and even these volumes offer great insight into some of Spain's greatest flamenco guitarists and singers. Standouts with clearer recording are the super-fast yet intricate guitar picking of Román El Granáino on Volume 6; Niño de Almadén's beautifully doleful voice on Volume 3; and, with a slight hiss, the ubiquitous guitar of early innovator Ramon Montoya accompanying the forthright tenor of Aurelio Selles on Volume 4.

David Poole

A Celebration of Scottish Music ♪♪♪♪½ (Temple, 1988, compilation prod. Robin Morton)

Scotland
genre: Scottish Traditional

Battlefield Band; Cilla Fisher; Hamish Moore; Alan Reid; Alison Kinnaird; Brian McNeill; Shotts & Dykehead Caledonia Pipe Band; Christine Primrose; Jim Johnstone Band. (All artists are from Scotland.)

Since its establishment in 1978 by Robin Morton—Irishman and founding member of the well-known Pan-Celtic group Boys of the Lough—Temple Records has dedicated itself to the promotion of the traditional music of Scotland. This recording is an exceptional example of the vibrant variety that exists in Scottish music today, thanks in no small part to Temple's preservationist efforts. The Gaelic songs of Christine Primrose and Hamish Moore's brilliant Scottish smallpiping can be found alongside Allison Kinnaird's splendid harp and Scottish fusion stalwarts the Battlefield Band. Scotland's traditional sounds have long taken a back seat to other traditional Celtic-based music, due in part to much of Scotland's willingness to promote the kilt-and-haggis mentality so popular with tourists. One listen to this collection will help set the record straight and do much to bring back the nobility and charm of Scottish folk culture, separating the pure article from the pastiche.

Cliff McGann

Duende: From Traditional Masters to Gypsy Rock ♪♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1994, compilation prod. Angel Romero)

Spain
genre: Flamenco

Over 40 artists and ensembles, including: Paco de Lucia; La Nina de los Peines; Sabicas; Tomatito; Eduardo Rodriguez; Ramon Montoya; Camarón de la Isla; Pata Negra; Duquende. (All artists are from Spain.)

The rapid style of the flamenco guitarist and the heel-tapping and finger-clicking of the dancer in her blood-red dress are icons of Spanish culture. The 41 tracks of this three-disc set exhibit a great variety within the genre. The common thread is the guitar, and an underlying melancholic passion or duende. The focus of a performance is the tension between the dancer and the guitarist; their chemistry can reflect either a courtship or a battle. As flamenco has evolved, the male vocal has maintained its moaning, almost bluesy sadness. Beginning with current flamenco's roots in the traditionalist revival of the 1950s, Duende also follows the subsequent fusions with jazz and rock. Its "Explorations" disc maintains only tenuous links to flamenco—the rumba of Willi Giménez; the Andalusian blues of Radio Tarifa's "La Canal"; the sitar-like guitar quality of Pata Negra. But the set's accompanying 48-page book provides informative notes on the music's history and the stories behind its stars.

David Poole

Early Cante Flamenco ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1990, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz)

Spain
genre: Flamenco

Antonio Mairena; Tomás Pavón; Pepe Pinto; Manolita de Jerez; Niña de los Peines; Manuel Vallejo; Monolo Caracol. (All artists are from Spain.)

It's hard to imagine a musical style more closely associated with Spain than flamenco. But according to the liner notes for this collection of rare 78 rpm recordings from the 1930s, the style was developed by Gypsies who were driven into hiding by the Spanish Inquisition in the 1500s. So in addition to the tourist attraction it is known as by many in the West, this is truly a music of struggle, hardship, and passion. Perhaps that is why it has such a painful beauty, as evidenced on these sides. There are fine examples of what some would consider the purer form of flamenco, before pop sensibilities were infused into the style for broader appeal. Forget the Gipsy Kings, try listening to Tomás Pavón's high-flown tenor, beautifully offset by Melchor de Marchena's fragile guitar lines, on "Bulerias." Then experience the spirit of flamenco dance, nicely realized here by Manolita de Jerez on "Soleares." While the recordings are over 60 years old, the sound quality is quite good and all the performances are arresting.

Tim Sheridan

El Sonido de Flamenco ♪♪♪♪½ (Music Club, 1998)

Spain
genre: Flamenco

Pepe Pinto; Pepe Marchena; Niña de la Puebla; Perlita de Huelva; Juanito Valderrama; Canaléjas de Puerto Real; Fosforito; Porrina de Badajoz; Antoñita Peñuela; Naranijito de Triana; Juanito Maravilla; LaPaquera de Jerez. (All artists are from Spain.)

This disc offers 16 vintage tracks from a time when recorded and club-performed flamenco was the most popular music in Spain, around the middle of the 20th century. The emphasis here is on the flamenco vocalist, and superstars of the day from several styles, ranging from the operatic to the more lighthearted fandango, are heard. It's a solid introduction to and record of this part of the music's history, and a useful background for exploring later evolutions of it.

Kerry Dexter

Flamenco: Fire & Grace ♪♪♪♪ (Narada, 1996, prod. Michael Sullivan, Jesse Cook)

Spain
genre: Flamenco

Miguel de la Bastide (Trinidad); Tomatito; Enrique Morente; Moraito; Rafael Riqueni; El Viejín; Diego Carrasco; Jesse Cook (Canada). (All artists are from Spain except where otherwise noted.)

This album is almost a counterpoint to another Narada compilation, Gypsy Passion (reviewed on page 912). On that disc, the focus is on guitar and modern expansions of flamenco; on this one, while the approach is contemporary, the flamenco triumvirate of guitar, singer, and dancer is the center of attention, resulting in music that is closer to flamenco puro than to "new flamenco."

Kerry Dexter

Folk 'n' Hell ♪♪♪♪♪ (EMI Hemisphere/Metro Blue, 1996, compilation prod. Gerald Seligman)

Scotland
genre: Scottish folk-rock and fusion

Jim Sutherland; Burach; Bongshang; Shooglenifty; Paul Mounsey (Scotland/Brazil); the Colour of Memory; Coelbeg; Seelyhoo; Dougie MacLean; Fergus MacKenzie/Simon Thoumire; the Humpff Family; Rock, Salt & Nails; the Poozies (Scotland, England); the Iron Horse; Tannas; Khartoum Heroes; Old Blind Dogs. (All artists are from Scotland except where otherwise noted.)

Rather than encompassing a panoramic view of the Scottish folk scene, this collection focuses on its cutting edge, circa 1995 to 1996. And although there have been even further permutations since it was released—such as Peatbog Faeries' fusion of ambient/techno production with folk dance music—this is still pretty adventurous stuff. Seelyhoo brings a jazzy swing to its arrangements of two original instrumentals, for instance, and the Iron Horse offers a rendition of "The Burning of Auchindoun" in which it sounds like an acoustic (if pumped-up and slightly syncopated) incarnation of British folk-rock trailblazers Steeleye Span. Farther edges are reached by producer/auteur Paul Mounsey, whose "Passing Away" blends all sorts of studio wizardry with a melodic Scottish base, and Shooglenifty, which puts modern pop rhythm grooves behind ancient Gaelic dance tunes.

Ken Roseman

Greek-Oriental Rebetica: Songs & Dances in the Asia Minor Style, 1911–1937 ♪♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1991, prod. Chris Strachwitz) Mourmourika: Songs of the Greek Underworld, 1930–1955 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1999, prod. Charles Howard)
My Only Consolation: Classic Pireotic Rembetica, 1932–1946 ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1999, prod. Charles Howard)

Greece
genre: Rebetica, mourmourika

Greek-Oriental Rebetica*: Marika Papgika; Yorghos Papasidheris; Dhimitrios Semsis; Stratos Payumdzis; Rita Abadsi; Andoni Dalgas; Marika Kanaropulu; Roza Eskenazi; Haralambos Panayis; Yanis Oghdhondakis; Yangos Psamatyalis. Mourmourika: Ioannis (Jack) Halikias; A. Kostis; Spachanis; Yeorgios Kamvisis; Stell. Perpiniadhis; V. Mesolongitis; Yeorgios Katsaros; Tassos Eleftheriadhis; K. Kostis; Konst. Dhoussas; Z. Kasimatis; Stellakis Perpiniadhis; Marika Kanaropoulou; Tourkalista; Kostas Roukounas; F. Zouridhakis; Harilaos Kritikos; N. Poupourakis. My Only Consolation: Markos Vamvakaris; Y. Batis; An. Dhelias; Stellakis Perpiniashis; Stratos Payioumdzis; M.Stellios Keromitis; M. Yennitsaris; Hadzichristos-Stamoulis; K. Roukounas; I. Papaioannou; Y. Kavouras; A. Hadzichristos; S. Payioumidzis; K. Kaplanis. (All artists are from Greece.)

Rebet means "gutter" in Turkish, and it was the life of slum-dwelling Greeks and Turkish refugees (themselves ethnic Greeks) living in Greek port towns like Piraeus that inspired the rebetica, or urban folk music, of the early 20th century (a.k.a. rembetica and rembetiko). It bears comparison with American blues—invented by an underclass using improvised couplets; picked up by record labels in the 1930s as it became popular in urban markets; falling into obscurity until a revival in the '60s and '70s; then revitalized once again in the '90s. The links with hash smoking and rebellion were key to its series of rediscoveries. Stars like Roza Eskenazi sang "Why I Smoke Cocaine," and others sang about their experiences in an underworld of drugs, brothels, gambling, theft, and even prison. They brought instruments from Turkey like the oud (lute), zither, and hammered dulcimer, incorporating them with the more local arrangements of clarinet, accordion, and violin. These are three outstanding collections of the genre's first wave. The crackly 78s on the Arhoolie disc have not transferred as clearly as those compiled from Charles Howard's collection for the Rounder albums; Howard's liner notes are also more comprehensive. However, Arhoolie covers earlier material, and the sonic quality is naturally a little rough. First-class musicianship and entertaining lyrics are evident on all three volumes, with no tracks repeated and only two instances of the same artist appearing on more than one disc, a testament to the wealth of material available. Also featured is the rural mourmourika style, a precursor to rebetica just as country blues preceded urban blues. The dignified singing here is often at odds with the seedy, saucy subject matter, from Greek-Oriental Rebetica's explicit "Bordello Blues" to the same album's invitation in "Hashish Harem" to "light your joint/and have a smoke/and have a ball with us."

880 compilation albums: europe

David Poole

New Electric Muse: The Story of Folk into Rock ♪♪♪♪½ (Essential/Castle Communications, 1996)
New Electric Music II: The Continuing Story of Folk into Rock ♪♪♪♪½ (Essential/Castle Communications, 1997, compilation prod. Laurence Aston)

England, Scotland, Ireland genre: Anglo-Celtic folk and folk-rock

New Electric Muse: Steeleye Span (England); Ian Campbell Folk Group (Scotland); Dave Swarbrick (England); the Copper Family (England); Ray & Archie Fisher (Scotland); Ewan MacColl (Scotland); Shirley Collins & Davey Graham (England); the Dubliners (Ireland); the Johnstons (Ireland); Sweeney's Men (Ireland); Finbar & Eddie Furey (Ireland); Gryphon (England); Fairport Convention (England); Morris On Band (England); John Martyn (Scotland); Davey Graham (England); Bert Jansch (Scotland); John Renbourn (England); Pentangle (England); Martin Carthy (England); John & Beverley Martyn (Scotland); the Young Tradition (England); Martin Carthy & Dave Swarbrick (England); Shirley Collins (England); Sandy Denny/Fotheringay (England); Traffic (England); Bob & Carole Pegg (England); Mr. Fox (England); Sandy Denny (England); Lindisfarne (England); Jack the Lad (England); Richard Thompson (England); Steve Ashley (England); Mike & Lal Waterson (England); Albion Country Band (England); Robin & Barry Dransfield (England); the Battlefield Band (Scotland); Richard & Linda Thompson (England); Dick Gaughan (Scotland); June Tabor (England); Martin Simpson (England); Capercaillie (Scotland); Andrew Cronshaw (England); June Tabor & the Oyster Band (England); the Oyster Band (England); Four Men & a Dog (Ireland); Energy Orchard (Ireland); Sharon Shannon (Ireland); Eliza Carthy (England); Lal Waterson & Oliver Knight (England). New Electric Music II: The Watersons (England); the Young Tradition (England); the Young Tradition with Shirley & Dolly Collins (England); John Renbourn (England); Steeleye Span (England); Shirley Collins & the Albion Country Band (England); Morris On (England); Gryphon (England); John Kirkpatrick & Ashley Hutchings (England); the City Waites (England); Bob Pegg (England); Dave Swarbrick (England); the Albion Band (England); Brass Monkey (England); John Kirkpatrick Band (England); Jacqui McShee (England); Kate Rusby (England); the Johnstons (Ireland); Anne Briggs (England); June Tabor (England); Nic Jones (England); the Cock and Bull Band (England); Home Service (England); Oyster Band (England); the Barely Works (England); Mouth Music & Mairi MacInnes (Scotland); Shooglenifty (Scotland); Oige (Ireland); Burach (Scotland); Fairport Convention (England); the Ian Campbell Folk Group (Scotland); Sweeney's Men (Ireland); the Humblebums (England); Fotheringay (England); Anne Briggs (England); Cyril Tawney (England); Richard & Linda Thompson (England); Dransfield (England); Linda Thompson (England); Richard Thompson (England); June Tabor & Oyster Band (England); Billy Bragg (England); Oyster Band (England); Jez Lowe & the Bad Pennies (England); Ralph McTell (England); Norma Waterson (England).

New Electric Muse is a revised and expanded reissue of the very similarly titled The Electric Muse: The Story of Folk into Rock, originally a four-LP box set released in 1975 to document the evolution of Anglo-Celtic music from its acoustic/traditional roots to what came to be called electric folk or folk-rock. Performers from England, Scotland, and Ireland are represented on both of the album's incarnations, the most recent of which is a three-CD set. Its first two CDs contain most of the material from the original, and are organized by the same themes: "From the Acoustic Roots," surveying modern yet acoustic-based arrangements of traditional tunes; "Blues, Baroque and Beyond," documenting the "folk baroque" fusion of jazz, classical, and folk elements pioneered by guitarist Davey Graham (which received its fullest expression in the work of Pentangle); "Roll over Cecil (and Tell Vaughan Williams the News)," containing more contemporary (yet still acoustic) treatments of traditional material; "The Electric Adventure," featuring some of the first electric adaptations of traditional ballads; and "A New Tradition," showcasing the different strains of folk-rock being practiced by 1975, from electric adaptations of folk dance tunes to original songs—written and performed by the likes of Richard Thompson, Steve Ashley, and Mr. Fox—that were clearly inspired by traditional ballad styles. The third CD is called "The Muse Revisited, the Continuing Story: Folk into Rock into Folk," and covers the two decades since the original box was released. There's acoustic and electric material, showing that both approaches continue to evolve—and the first burst from Anglo-Celtic folk's next generation is well represented by tracks from vocalist/fiddler Eliza Carthy and Irish accordionist Sharon Shannon.

A year after this set's release producer Laurence Aston expanded its concept for New Electric Muse II: The Continuing Story of Folk into Rock. Each of this second box's CDs focuses on the evolution of a particular sub-genre of Anglo-Celtic folk and folk-rock. Disc one, "King Arthur's Children," focuses on artists who were heavily influenced by medieval and "early" music, such as the Young Tradition, Gryphon, and Steeleye Span. Disc two, "The Wild Beasts in the Forest," presents a fascinating array of treatments of traditional source material, ranging from the more acoustic performances of the Watersons, Pentangle, and June Tabor to the '90s multi-culti, punk-folk, and dance-pop fusions explored by Mouth Music & Mairi McInnes, the Barely Works, and Shooglenifty. Disc three, "Songs of Experience," offers up original songs with traditional flavors by Richard Thompson ("Devonside"), Oyster Band ("Granite Years"), Jez Lowe ("Bede Weeps"), Billy Bragg ("Moving the Goalposts"), and others.

Suffice it to say that if you were stuck on the proverbial desert isle and wanted to have a definitive souvenir of the recent musical history of the British, these two boxes would do it, offering as comprehensive an overview of Anglo-Celtic folk and folk-rock as is presently available.

Ken Roseman

Nordic Roots: A NorthSide Collection ♪♪♪♪ (NorthSide, 1998)

Sweden, Norway, Finland genre: Contemporary tradition-based Scandinavian music

Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag (Norway); Den Fule (Sweden); Garmarna (Sweden); Groupa (Sweden); Hoven Droven (Sweden); Hedningarna (Sweden, Finland); Olov Johansson (Sweden); Loituma (Finland); Hege Rimestad (Norway); SWÅP (Sweden, U.K.); Triakel (Sweden); Troka (Finland); Väsen (Sweden); Tapani Varis (Finland); Wimme (Finland).

NorthSide is a U.S.-based label specializing in roots music from the Scandinavian countries. This compilation is not only an easy introduction to the label and its artists, but also serves as a great jumping-off point for those wanting to learn more about the dynamic Scandinavian scene. The avant-garde/hybrid side is well-represented by Hedningarna's heavy, high-tech Swedish/Finnish balladry; Den Fule's noisy roots-funk; and the lush sounds of Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag—an 18-piece folk-rock orchestra with choral-style vocals accompanied by horns, fiddles, woodwinds, electric bass, and drums. Meanwhile, Loituma, which features full multi-part vocal harmonies over strummed kanteles (a unique zither which is the Finnish national instrument), and the instrumental groups Troka and Väsen, show off the potential of acoustic formats. As a special bonus, three of the tracks here are available on no other releases.

Ken Roseman

Rembetica: Historic Urban Folk Songs from Greece ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1992, compilation prod. Charles Howard, Dick Spottswood)

Greece
genre: Rembetica

Adonis Dalgas (Turkey/Greece); Agapios Tomboulis (Turkey/Greece); Yiannis Tsanakas (Turkey/Greece); Roza Eskenazi (Turkey/Greece); Markos Vamvakaris (Greece); Apostolos Hatzichristos (Greece); Vassilis Tsitsanis (Turkey/Greece); Efstratios Pagioumitzis (a.k.a. Stratos) & Stelios Keromitis (Greece); Ioannis Papaioannou (Turkey/Greece); Rita Abatzi (Turkey/Greece); Ioannis Halikas (a.k.a. Jack Gregory) (Greece/USA); Ioannis Dhragatsis (a.k.a. Ogdhondakis) (Turkey/Greece); Marika Papagika (Greece/USA); George Macreyannis (Greece); Marika Kanaropoulou (Greece/USA); George Theologitis (a.k.a. George Katsaros) (Greece/USA); Adonis Kalivopoulos (Turkey/Greece) & Yiovan Tsaous (Turkey/Greece); Stratos Pagioumitzis (Greece); Lambros Leondaridhis (Turkey/Greece); Yiangos Psamatianos (Turkey/Greece).

After the breakup of the Ottoman Empire in 1922, Kemal Atatürk kicked many of the ethnic Greeks out of Turkey, and some of them migrated to Greece's coastal cities. When they came to their ancestral homeland, these immigrants found little favor with the entrenched upper classes. Mixing with the indigenous proletariat, the new arrivals took elements of the Ottoman musical tradition and blended them with more mainstream Greek components to create rembetica (a.k.a. rebetica or rembetiko). The results have been likened to American blues and Portuguese fado, music associated with criminals and other undesirables. Lyrics celebrated love, sex, and drugs in an open and unabashed manner, but also told tales of loss and alienation. Within decades rembetica became somewhat tamer, as government censorship banned the racier lyrics and the first generation of performers died off. The period covered on this album is 1906 to 1946, with most of it recorded during the '30s. The collection gives a good picture of rembetica's evolution and includes some of the biggest names in the genre, including the matchless singer Roza Eskenazi and the bouzouki virtuoso Ioannis Halikias, who later moved to New York City and adopted the name Jack Gregory.

Garaud MacTaggart

The Rough Guide to Scottish Music ♪♪♪♪½ (World Music Network, 1996, compilation prod. Phil Stanton)

Scotland
genre: Scottish folk

Wolfstone; Catherine-Anne MacPhee; Capercaillie; the Iron Horse; Talitha MacKenzie; Ring 'O' Steall; the Cast; Dick Gaughan; the Tannahill Weavers; the Boys of the Lough; Heather Heywood; Tannas; Ceolbeg; the Battlefield Band; Bert Jansch; Old Blind Dogs. (All artists are from Scotland.)

compilation albums: europe

This collection is an excellent introduction to the contemporary Scottish folk/roots music scene, from veteran performers like the Tannahill Weavers, the Battlefield Band, and Bert Jansch, to younger acts like the Iron Horse, Tannas, and Old Blind Dogs; from straightforward and acoustic interpretations of traditional folk, to all sorts of eclectic and electric fusions. In the former category, Catherine-Anne McPhee sings a lovely Gaelic ballad accompanied by harp, the Boys of the Lough offer an original waltz, and vocalist Heather Heywood gives a clear, powerful rendition of the well-known ballad "Down by the Sally Gardens." Those who prefer more rough-edged stuff will enjoy Wolfstone's kick-ass bagpipe-and-fiddle-led rock 'n' reel. Yet another take on Scottish heritage is provided by Talitha MacKenzie, who marries a bit of traditional "mouth music" (usually unaccompanied dance singing) with high-tech electronic percussion; the steady Gaelic rhythms adapt well to a bit of funky syncopation. "Claire in Heaven," written by Capercaillie's Manus Lunny, splendidly mixes pop song construction with a folkish melody, modern rhythm grooves, and what sound like bits of ancient jigs and reels—now that, like the album as a whole, just about ties it all up in one snazzy package.

Ken Roseman

The Rough Guide to the Music of Eastern Europe ♪♪♪♪♪ (World Music Network, 1998, compilation prod. Phil Stanton)

International
genre: Folk music

Márta Sebestyén (Hungary); Taraf de Haïdouks (Romania); Apparatschik (Machorka Tabakistan); Kocani Orkestar featuring Naat Veliov (Macedonia); Trio Bulgarka (Bulgaria); Ferus Mustafov (Macedonia); Kálmán Balogh & the Gipsy Cimbalom Band (Hungary); Trebunia Family Band (Poland); Vízönto (Hungary); Mystery of Bulgarian Voices Choir (Bulgaria); "Horo" Orchestra (Bulgaria); Ivo Papasov & His Bulgarian Wedding Band (Bulgaria); Zsarátnok (Hungary); Mark Pashku (Albania); Nikola Parov (Hungary).

This CD offers a 73-and-a-half-minute survey of current trends in Eastern European music, with better liner notes than is the norm for this series and a pleasing amount of stylistic and textural variety. Traditional styles are well-represented: the Gypsy music of Taraf de Haïdouks (whose name translates as "Orchestra of Honorable Brigands"); a rebel song of Thrace sung by the Trio Bulgarka; the exotic sound of the cimbalom (a large dulcimer) as played by Kálmán Balogh in a dance context; the Trebunia Family Band's string-band-and-vocals evocation of Poland's Górales culture; and more. There are striking hybrids such as the Macedonian Gypsy oriental brass band Kocani Orkestar, which (with plenty of military drums) performs the Tito-era Yugoslavian pop hit "The Orient Is Red," based on a Communist Chinese song. And then there are relatively schooled, even slick productions, which blend the ancient and the up-to-date, from Vízönto's mix of Hungarian music with a pop-folk chord progression and jazzy touches; to the practically postmodern exuberance of Ivo Papasov; to the "Horo" Orchestra's use of contemporary instruments; to Nikola Parov's new-age leanings. Last but not least, world-music superstars like the Mystery of Bulgarian Voices Choir and Márta Sebestyén transcend all such categories. The recordings are for the most part relatively recent, even if the musical styles sometimes aren't, so sound quality is never an issue.

Steve Holtje

The Rough Guide to the Music of Portugal ♪♪♪♪ (World Music Network, 1998)

Portugal
genre: Portuguese folk/roots

Jose Afonso; Dulce Pontes; Realejo; Teresa Silva Carvalho; Carlos Paredes; Amália Rodrigues; Vai De Roda; Terra A Terra; V Império; Lendas & Mitos; Anabela; Maria Da Fe; Margarida Bessa; Vitorino; Maria Teresa de Noronha; Lenita Gentil; Carlos Zel; Manuel De Almeida; Ronda Dos Quatro Camhinos; Grupo Cantadores Do Redondo. (All artists are from Portugal.)

Not much Portuguese music has been exported to U.S. audiences, but this collection offers a brief sampling of what's available. Fado, the distinctive bluesy-jazzy ballad style, is well-represented, and from this disc you'd definitely get the impression that Portugal has great female vocalists on every street corner. But what is most impressive here are the instrumental tracks from Realejo and V Império. Realejo has a singular chamber-folk sound based around the hurdy-gurdy's buzzing tone over softer strings and woodwinds. V Império takes such a style in a different direction; their approach fuses "classical" textures (violins, cellos, violas, woodwinds) and melodies with a pulsing dance-pop energy. Elsewhere on the disc, Ronda Dos Quatros Caminhos unite vocal harmony with driving percussion, and those who enjoy Welsh choirs or Ladysmith Black Mambazo will get a kick out of the massed voices of Grupo Cantadores Do Redondo.

Ken Roseman

Sacred Treasures: Choral Masterworks from Russia ♪♪♪♪♪ (Hearts of Space, 1998, prod. Leyla R. Hill)

Russia, Bulgaria, Belgium genre: Sacred choral music

Russian State Symphony Capella (Russia); Leningrad Glinka State Academic Choir (Russia); Bulgarian National Choir (Bulgaria); USSR Ministry of Culture Chamber Choir (Russia); Men's Chamber Choir of Sofia (Bulgaria); Chevetogne Monastery Choir (Belgium); Bulgarian Radio & Television Choir (Bulgaria).

If you're one of the millions of people who fell in love with the sacred sounds of Gregorian chant when it exploded into the mainstream a few years back, you're bound to enjoy this powerfully moving compilation. The Russian Orthodox Church is nearly unparalleled for the beauty of its choral traditions, due primarily to the fact that a cappella singing has been its central form of worship for more than 1,000 years. The church's divine liturgy has become more complex and refined over that time, evolving from simple Gregorian-style, Byzantine-inspired chants sung by all-male choirs, to mixed choirs singing compositions rich with Western harmonies, varied dynamics, and layered textures. Sacred Treasures compiles 17 aptly described masterworks from this tradition, many of them written by luminous composers like Sergei Rachmaninov and Peter Tchaikovsky. Individually, each track is a spiritual revelation of surprising emotional impact. But when taken as a whole, the songs flow together into a glorious tapestry of haunting beauty and sublime, transcendent peace.

Bret Love

Silvana Licursi: Far from the Land of Eagles ♪♪♪♪ (Sud-Nord, 1989/Lyrichord, 1991, prod. Erasmo Treglia)

Italy
genre: Albanian

Silvana Licursi (Italy).

Albanians fleeing Turkish invaders in the 15th century settled in Italy, and to this day their descendants have maintained the Albanian language and traditions despite living across the Adriatic Sea from their homeland. Silvana Licursi has been gathering Albanian-Italian folk music and performs it with great feeling and melancholy, singing her pastoral love songs in Albanian while gently picking the strings of her lute, accompanied by Celtic harp, sax, guitar, flute, and tambourine. The result is a mellow and soothing collection, one of the only recordings from Italy's Albanian community.

David Poole

Song of the Crooked Dance: Early Bulgarian Traditional Music, 1927–42 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Yazoo/Shanachie, 1998, prod. Lauren Brody)

Bulgaria
genre: Ballad, dance song, funeral music, wedding music

Boris Mashalov; Mita Stoicheva; Masha Byalmustakova; Georgi Stanev; Parush Parushev; Gudi Gudev; Vulkana Stoyanova; Stanil Payakov; Ivan Hristov Kavaldzhiev; Boris Karlov; the Bistrishkata Chetvorka; Tsvyatko Blagoev; Ramadan Lolov. (All artists are from Bulgaria.)

Many world-music listeners have come to know the music of Bulgaria through the melancholy choral arrangements of "Le Mystère des Voix Bulgares," the catch-all name for what is in Bulgaria a number of official choirs. Selected from discs issued between the First and Second World Wars, Song of the Crooked Dance reveals a far more spontaneous, guileless, and energetic aspect of Bulgarian music. It includes a variety of ballads and dance tunes, with an emphasis on instrumentals and male vocals that were less commonly recorded at the time. One notable feature of the folk tunes heard here is the frequent use of odd time signatures, such as 7/8, 5/16, or 11/16, that lend the tracks that wonderful jumpy quality familiar to listeners of Balkan music. Though we're never told in the CD text, this might be the origin of the term "crooked dance." Another common thread is a highly developed sense of the tragic. "Kapitan," for instance, tells of a military commander who falls ill and asks his comrades to "write a letter for me/to my wife/and tell her that I've perished here," while the ballad "Three Brothers, Master Builders" recounts a morbid folk tale of three bridge builders who seal the wife of the youngest brother into the bricks as a macabre sacrifice.

Positioned at a cultural and historical crossroads between Europe, Asia, and the Middle East, Bulgaria embodies a fantastic collision of civilizations, which is of course reflected in its multifaceted music. The disc provides many illustrations: "Tsonka's tune," an intricate solo on the gaida (bagpipe), uses a scale reminiscent of a Middle Eastern mode; "Kopano horo" features a tambura (long-necked lute) melody played in clearly Greek style; and "Georgi Sugarev," a ballad on oud (Arabic lute), has a distinct Turkish flavor. In the words of producer Lauren Brody, Crooked Dance serves as an "antidote to those floral, complex arrangements of 'Mystère' fame" which have mistakenly come to stand for Bulgarian folk music. Half a bone has to be deducted only because the same song is accidentally included twice, as tracks 9 and 21. But the CD is clearly a labor of love, with clean disc transfers, interesting selection, illuminating text, and transcribed lyrics.

Jeffrey Muhr

The Story of Flamenco ♪♪♪ (Hemisphere, 1997, compilation prod. Rafael Pastor)

Spain
genre: Flamenco

Pepe De La Matrona; Perla De Cadiz; Pericon de Cadiz; Sernita de Jerez; Paco Isidro; Manolo Caracol; Fernanda de Utrera; Gabriel Moreno; Flores de Gaditano; La Nina de la Puebla; Terremoto de Jerez; Romerito; El Borrico; Diamante Negro; Sordera; Sernita; Carmen Linaresa; El Pali; Hermanos Toronjo; Enrique Morente; Pepe Marchena. (All artists are from Spain.)

compilation albums: europe

Flamenco is the calmest, most tranquil music on God's green Earth. Just kidding. Actually, how much you get into it depends on how far you're willing to follow its practitioners' frenzy—flamenco vocals are passion personified; the unvarnished feeling takes getting used to for Western ears, and can grate when you're not in the right mood. The cuts on this compilation are well-wrought, and serve as a nice introduction to the style. Which is okay, but I can't help but feel cheated: when flamenco is on it really KICKS, and none of the flamenco that's knocked me on my ass with its unbridled vigor is equaled here. Not all that exciting, but a fairly nice package makes it worth owning for the curious.

Michaelangelo Matos

Sult: Spirit of the Music ♪♪♪♪ (The Bottom Line Record Co., 1997, prod. Dónal Lunny)

Ireland
genre: Irish Traditional

John McSherry; Van Morrison; Máire Brennan; Nollaig Casey; Mark Knopfler (England); Sharon Shannon; Laoise Kelly; Paul Brady; Máirtin O'Connor; Maighréad Ní Dhomhnaill; Iarla Ó Lionáird; Nomos; Matt Molloy; Máire Breatnach; Brian Kennedy; Anúna; Steven Cooney (Australia/Ireland); Seamus Begley; John Spillane; Liam O'Flynn; Mary Black; Dónal Lunny; Richard Bennett; Noel Bridgeman; Richie Buckley; Pat Crowley; Keith Donald; Glenn Worf; Brendan Power (Australia); Frank Torpey; Sean Keane; Niall Vallely; Mairead Nesbitt. (All artists are from Ireland except where otherwise noted.)

Recorded especially for a 13-part series on Dublin-based Irish-language television station TnaG, Sult was produced by Dónal Lunny, one of the foremost interpreters of Irish music. Lunny has brought together an odd group of musicians to create a diverse recording that has its roots firmly planted in Irish tradition but goes well beyond that into the realms of pop and rock. Van Morrison and Mary Black duet on the funky "St. Dominic's Preview," while Irish Gaelic singers Maighréad Ní Dhomhnaill and Iarla Ó Lionáird give a spirited rendition of the traditional "Siul a Ruin." Lunny is ever-present, playing on nearly every track and imbuing most with a modern Irish sensibility. "Sult" literally translates from Irish to English as "fun" or "amusement," and the fun that the musicians are obviously having translates into a spirited recording.

Cliff McGann

Sweet Sunny North ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1994, prod. Birger Gesthuisen, Henry Kaiser) Sweet Sunny North, Vol. II ♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1996, prod. Birger Gesthuisen, Henry Kaiser)

Norway
genre: Folk and pop music

Sweet Sunny North*: Kirsten Bråten Berg; Ailu Gaup (Norwegian Sami); Tiriltunga; Susanne Lundeng; Paolo Vinaccia; Annbjørg Lien; the Brazz Brothers; Deepika (Pakistan/Norway); Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag; Halvard T. Bjørgum; Knut Reiersrud; Steinar Ofsdal; Berit Nordland (Norwegian Sami); Gabriel Fliflet; Ole Hamre; Bjørgulv Straume; Tone Hulbækmo; Hans Fredrik Jacobsen; Hans Brimi; Rolv Brimi; Farmers Market; Elisabeth Kværne; Henry Kaiser (USA); David Lindley (USA). Sweet Sunny North, Vol. II: All the above artists, plus Jon Faukstad. (All artists are from Norway, except where otherwise noted.)

Musical omnivore/impresarios Henry Kaiser and David Lindley take their instruments and recording rigs up to Norway to introduce U.S. audiences to a rich musical tradition that's almost unknown in this country—although it's fairly certain that immigrant fiddlers must have added something to the American song bag (as Kaiser points out in his liner notes, "Jack of Diamonds" has the same tune as a Norwegian folk song called "Drunken Hiccups"). For these sessions Kaiser & Lindley gathered together some of Norway's finest traditional players, both old-timers and upstarts who are continuing to work within the folk tradition to create their own music. The sound has a Celtic ring to it, at least to non-Norwegian ears, but it's bluesier and more melancholic. The 28 tracks on the first album include unique Pakistani/Norwegian fusion by Deepika; hootenannies by the big folk band Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag; folk-jazz from the Brazz Brothers and Farmers Market; virtuosic hardanger (Norwegian fiddle) playing from then-newcomer/now-star Annbjørg Lien and master spelemann (folk musician) Hans Brimi; dissonant dances from Gabriel Fliflet and Ole Hamre; joiks (the distinctive song form of Scandinavia's indigenous Sami people) by Berit Nordland and Ailu Gaup; and more. The second volume, recorded at the same time, is a sequel but no afterthought. Once again the performers range over a wide array of styles, though this collection sounds slightly more traditional than the first. There are stunning vocal pieces by Tiriltunga; some quasi-swing jazz from the Brazz Brothers; a sheep-calling song from Tone Hulbækmo; joiking that sounds similar to the African American field hollers of the rural South; and a dozen fiddlers who play blue, eerie, and/or sprightly music that weaves its own unique magic.

j. poet

Taraf: Romanian Gypsy Music ♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1996, prod. Martha Lorantos, Bob Haddad)

Romania
genre: Gypsy folk

Various musicians from the villages of Mârşa, Clejani, Albeşti, and Dobroteşti. (All artists are from Romania.)

The diverse music of the Romanian Gypsies is compelling, if not exactly easy listening. In Romania, the performance of festive folk music is not a recreational affair but largely relegated to professional musicians—usually Gypsies from the local village. Because of this "outsider" profession and their ethnic origin, Gypsy musicians are considered "foreign" by the Romanian peasant class and are often treated with contempt, though when performing they're invested with a special authority, treated like beloved friends, and lavishly rewarded for their talents (an acceptance as entertainers but not as individuals, not uncommon to disfavored nationalities in the United States and elsewhere). There has (not coincidentally) been much debate in Romania as to whether the country's musical traditions are accurately represented by Gypsy interpretations, and the nine songs presented here do show elements of influence from all around the Mediterranean, especially Italy and Greece. The music's primary features are violin, accordion, dulcimer, double bass, and, of course, the fiery, passionate vocals Gypsy music is best known for, which often drive the songs to rapturous crescendos. Its narrow geographical focus limits this compilation's musical scope in comparison with an all-encompassing album like Latcho Drom (reviewed on page 916), but if you want an in-depth listen to the traditional music of a specific Gypsy community, this is not a bad choice.

Bret Love

Tulikkulkku ♪♪♪♪♪ (Kansanmusiikki Instituutti, 1993, compilation prod. Kurt Lindblad, Hannu Saha)

Finland
genre: World music

Me Naiset; Väinönputki; Etnopojat; Hedningarna; Pohjantahti; Arja Kastinen; Tuulenkantajat Septet; Virpi Forsberg; Niekku; Primo; Martti Pokela; Suomussalmi-ryhmä. (All artists are from Finland.)

This collection documents the cutting edge of Finnish folk music as performed by some of the foremost students, instructors, and fellow travelers of the Folk Music Institute in Kaustinen and the Sibelius Academy's Folk Music Department in Helsinki. It is a richly cross-pollinated musical community, as evidenced by some of the "big names" covered in this book's main section who appear in different settings here: accordion wizard Maria Kalaniemi is a member of Niekku, for instance, while JPP's Arto Järvelä can be heard playing fiddle with Primo. The disc was prepared in honor of Heikki Laitinen, perhaps the leading force behind Finland's acceptance of folk music as a strong, viable form still worthy of study and performance. Some of the tunes on this collection are very traditional in orientation, while others use what has gone before as a springboard for experimentation.

Garaud MacTaggart

Two Girls Started to Sing: Bulgarian Village Singing ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1990, prod. Martha Forsyth, Dick Forsyth)

Bulgaria
genre: Bulgarian traditional singing

Names of the artists are not provided; all artists are from Bulgaria.

These Bulgarian women sing in pairs, with one voicing the melody while the other creates a drone. This two-part style is typical of southwest Bulgaria, where these amateur singers were recorded. Most were in their 50s or older, having lived long enough to have used these songs for every aspect of village life—while harvesting, dancing in the village square, gathered with the family, or at ceremonies. Traditionally in Bulgaria women sang while men played instruments, but more often women sang unaccompanied, as on this collection. Their performances are not professional, simply an instinctive part of their everyday life, a far cry from the honed polyphony of Le Mystère Des Voix Bulgares. Yet the raw, intimate, and natural quality of this music is greatly compelling.

David Poole

Village Music of Bulgaria/Bulgarian Folk Music ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra/Nonesuch, 1970/1971/1988, prod. Ethel Raim, Martin Koenig)

Bulgaria
genre: Folk music

Vasilka Andonova; Kremena Stancheva; Shtiliyan Tihov; Nadezhda Georgieva Klicherova; Gena Ivanova Bodenova; Nadezhda Georgieva Palestova; Bitov Orchestra; Lina Gekova Gergova; Menka Ilieva Aronova; Bozhurka Tupankova; Borislav Vassilev; Smolyan Folk Ensemble; Stephan Zahmanov; Valya Balkanska; Lazar Konevski; Sandanski Folk Ensemble; Magda Beorgieva Mavrikova; Magda Borisova Belluhova; Penka Nikolova Chukarinova; Vesa Atanasova Zinkova; Yana Hristova Stankova; Elena Petrova Kefalova; Magda Georgieva Visheva; Fatme Mehmedova Kelesheva; Nezife Salieva Musarlieva; Ismail Kurtov Limanov; Asen Kurtov Limanov; Abidin Kurtov Dzhaferov; Linka Stoyanova Dimcheva; Stanka Krumova Dimcheva; Sandanski Folk Ensemble; Boyana Kirilova Georgieva; Hadezhda Kostadinova Doneva. (All artists are from Bulgaria.)

Located between Asia Minor and western Europe, the small country of Bulgaria has felt the influences of many cultures on its music, and the aural proof is on this album. The tempos, harmonies, patterns, and vibrato-style singing of the country date back to the Ottoman Turks and others who occupied Bulgarian lands until the latter part of the 19th century. Albeit in a conquered nation, the Bulgarian folk culture flourished, and

compilation albums: europe

evidence of its tradition is heard here in strong, self-assured vocal performances and skillful instrumentals. An earmark of Bulgarian music is its odd meters (to Western ears, at least), displayed here in lively traditional dance tunes usually performed for social ceremonies and harvest rituals. Originally recorded in 1968, the 37 tracks on this compilation combine the two 1970s LPs of its dual title. Featured are songs mostly in two vocal styles, the single-voice melodies of the Rhodope region in the south, and the two-voice (diaphonic) melodies of the Pirin-Macedonia and Shope regions in the southwest. The first 13 tracks are from these regions and also Thrace in the southeast; the remaining cuts, all of short duration, feature songs and dances only from Pirin-Macedonia. Robust songs, executed by piercing, "open-throated" female singers and various folk instrumentalists, are often dissonant and formed on tonal clusters. They contrast singer against small chorus, regional instruments against solo singer, and singer against singer in an a cappella call-and-response format. Some pieces feature solo instruments native to the area such as the kaval (seven-hole, woody-toned reed pipe), kaba gaida (a droning bagpipe), and gadulka (a stringed, bowed, viola-toned instrument). Liner notes provide English translation, describe the music, and include a history of each piece.

Nancy Ann Lee

A Woman's Heart ♪♪♪♪ (Dara, 1992)
A Woman's Heart 2 ♪♪♪♪ (Dara, 1995, prod. Mary Black, Frances Black, Declan Sinnot)

Ireland
genre: Singer/songwriter, Celtic, pop

A Woman's Heart*: Mary Black; Eleanor McEvoy; Dolores Keane; Sharon Shannon; Frances Black; Maura O'Connell. A Woman's Heart 2: Sinéad Lohan; Frances Black; Mary Coughlan; Mary Black; Dolores Keane; Sharon Shannon; Maura O'Connell; Sinéad O'Connor; Maighread Ní Dhomhnaill. (All artists are from Ireland.)

The women whose music appears on these albums work in styles ranging from rock (O'Connor) to country (O'Connell) to pop (the Black sisters) to more traditional Irish forms (Keane, Shannon). What they've put together is a collection that emphasizes their Celtic sensibilities in these diverse styles. Some chose to include their own songs, while others picked standards from varying traditions (including songs by Nanci Griffith and Billie Holiday), and these work well together. A particular strength of these discs is that some of the singers have chosen to record music by contemporary Celtic songwriters. For example, several artists pay tribute to Eleanor McEvoy's songwriting talent, and indeed the title of the series was taken from a tune she wrote, and which she sings on the first album as a duet with Mary Black. Other Celtic songwriters represented include Dougie McLean and Noel Brazil. These two collections offer an attractive and accessible introduction to many of the best contemporary Irish voices; they hold enough power and quality to make them important listening for experts in the genre as well.

Kerry Dexter

The World's Musical Traditions 9: Musical Traditions of Portugal ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian, 1994, prod. Max Peter Baumann, Tiago de Oliveira Pinto)

Portugal
genre: Dances, chants, ballads, guitarradas, folk songs

Paulino Pereira João; Paulino José Raposo; Domingos Alfredo Flacão; Grupo Instrumental de Constantim; Marta dos Anjos Martins Fidalgo; Rancho de Monsanto; Grupo Coral 'Os Ceifeiros de Cuba; Quarteto de Guitarras de Coimbra; Rancho folclórico 'Os Camponeses de Riachos; Grupo folclórico de Viana do Castelo. (All artists are from Portugal.)

Musical Traditions of Portugal, the sixth CD in an excellent series released by the Smithsonian Institution (see the review of Bunggridj-bunggridj on page 867 for the series' convoluted history), samples a few of the diverse musical genres to be found in the title country. Traditionally one of the great seafaring nations, Portugal's contacts over the centuries with Africa, the Americas, and Asia are reflected in the breadth of its music. The CD includes five traditional genres: dances from the northeast; ritual songs and chants from the central east; choral songs from the south; guitarrada instrumentals from Coimbra; and songs and dances performed by folklore societies called ranchos folclóricos. While the simple, plaintive quality of the chants and vocal songs makes them difficult to grab onto, the energetic guitarradas and folkloric ensemble performances are more satisfying as a listening experience. Guitarradas are instrumentals performed by one or two guitarras accompanied by one or two violas. The guitarras are pear-shaped citterns, or proto-guitars, with six double strings, while the violas are simply six-string Spanish guitars with metal strings. The overall sound created by these ensembles is bright and jaunty with more than a little vibrato; it sounds a lot like what the uninitiated listener might expect Portuguese music to sound like. The waltzes, fandangos, and merry vocal songs made by the ranchos folclóricos carry as much energy to the listener as the guitarradas, even if their sound also isn't unexpected. But a few surprises do spring up, such as the "stick dances" that open the CD. These feature a Portuguese goatskin bagpipe called the gaita de foles accompanied by drum. Included with the CD is an impressive 76-page booklet with extensive notes and lyrics.

Jeffrey Muhr

NORTH AMERICA

American Warriors: Songs for Veterans ♪♪♪½ (Rykodisc, 1996, prod. Thomas Vennum Jr.)

USA, Canada
genre: Native American

Identified artists are: Richard la Ferneier (Ojibway); Black Lodge Singers (Blackfeet); Kiowa War Mothers Chapter (Kiowa); Sioux Valley Singers (Sioux); Fort Kipp Singers (Sioux); Winnebago Sons (Winnebago); the Smokey Town Singers (Menominee). (All artists are from USA.)

Somewhere in historical imagination, there's an image of the Native American warrior—maybe noble in defeat, maybe vicious in victory—but it's an idea having very little to do with the actual place of the warrior among Native American cultures. This disc offers music to illuminate that place, presenting recordings of chants and war songs from the days of Custer up through Desert Storm. Music held (and still holds) an important role in preparing the warrior for battle; in sending him from and reuniting him with the community; in celebrating victory and in surviving defeat. This is an uncommon thematic collection of chants and spoken-word selections on this subject as expressed by Native American tribes of the upper Midwest. It's not a disc for casual listening, but if you are interested in the evolution of cultural ideas, you'll want to check it out.

Kerry Dexter

Americanos: Latino Life in the United States: A Celebration ♪♪♪♪ (Atlantic, 1999, prod. Steve DeBro)

USA
genre: Hispanic, Latin jazz, rock, Tejano

Ruben Blades; Lhasa; Los Lobos; Willie Bobo; Ozomatli; War; Pedro Luis Ferrer; Santana; Frankie Negron; Celia Cruz; Mark Ribot y los Cubanos Postizos; Eddie Palmieri; Tito Puente; Flaco Jimenez (with Ry Cooder); Ayuda a los Pueblos; Paquito D'Rivera with the Orchestra of Saint Luke's. (All artists are from Latin countries or from the USA of Latino descent. Most are currently based in USA.)

This collection of 13 tracks is part of an interlocking film, traveling photo exhibit, and book of same name (Little, Brown & Co., 1999) intended to take a portrait of Latino life in the USA at the turn of the millennium. The project was spearheaded by well-known actor and activist Edward James Olmos. The disc does give a glimpse of certain aspects of Latino music, skewed more toward the urban Latino who listens to rock and Latin jazz than to his cousin who might prefer country, folk, and Tejano. There must have been contractual as well as stylistic considerations that directed the choice of musicians on this disc, and all of those chosen are excellent. Their fellow artists—ranging from classical guitarist Manuel Barrueco, to pop superstar Gloria Estefan, to Tejano crossover hitmaker Selena, to country & western favorite Emilio, to visionary songwriter Tish Hinojosa—would seem to deserve a place at this table as well, though. Americanos is a lively slice of Latino music in the U.S. today; just don't let it be your only sample.

Kerry Dexter

Ballinasloe Fair: Early Recordings of Irish Music in America ♪♪♪ (Traditional Crossroads, 1998)

USA
genre: Irish Traditional

Packie Dolan and the Melody Boys; Dan Sullivan's Shamrock Band; Dinny "Jimmy" Doyle; Larry Griffin; Frank Murphy; John Sheridan; Neil Nolan; Dan Sullivan; Murty Rabbett; Mike Hannifin; Connie Hannifin; John McGettigan and His Irish Minstrels; Michael Cashin. (All artists are from USA.)

This collection provides the listener with a view of Irish music in America during the 1920s, one of that genre's most vibrant periods. While most reissues of Irish music have dealt with the instrumental tradition, this one aims at providing the listener with a holistic view of Irish music in a certain place and time. It does so by including not only the tradition-based fiddle, flute, and accordion music popular with the Irish community, but also music representative of the strong Irish presence in the dance halls and vaudeville stages of New York, Boston, and Chicago—a form that won favor with a wide array of ethnic groups at the time, despite its often-stereotypical view of the Irish people. Great pains have been taken in remastering these old recordings, and the liner notes written by Irish folklorist Mick Moloney are highly informative.

Cliff McGann

Between Father Earth and Mother Sky ♪♪♪♪½ (Narada, 1995, executive prod. Michael Sullivan, Mabel Bensen)

USA, Canada, Mexico
genre: Native American

Douglas Spotted Eagle (Navajo/Lakota); Primeaux, Mike, & Attson (Dine/Yankton/Oglala); Perry Silverbird (Navajo/Apache); Tsa'ne Dose'e (Saponi/Tuscarora); Cornel Pewewardy (Comanche/Kiowa); the Native Flute Ensemble (U.S. Southwestern tribes); R. Carlos Nakai (Navajo/Ute); Bill Miller (Mohican); Chester Mahooty (Zuni Pueblo); Charles Jefferson (Cherokee/African American). (Artists are from USA, Canada, and Mexico.)

Whether a reworking of a traditional tribal melody or a new composition drawn from spiritual inspiration, the tracks on Between Father Earth and Mother Sky fulfill one of music's most ancient purposes: offering the listener a connection between history and the now, between present time and the space of the spirit. Though it conveys a strong sense of the beliefs in which it is based, it is music to be appreciated regardless of tradition.

Kerry Dexter

compilation albums: north america

Borderlands: from Conjunto to Chicken Scratch ♪♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian Folkways, 1993, prod. Texas Folklife Resources, Austin, Texas)

USA, Mexico
genre: Conjunto, Mexican American, Native American

Narciso Martinez; Jesus Maya; Timoteo Cantu; Lydia Mendoza; Beto Villa y su Orquesta with Carmen y Laura; Los Donneños; El Conjunto Bernal; Rubén Vela y su Conjunto; Ramón Ayala y los Bravos del Norte; Los Invasores de Nueva Leon; Los Cachorros de Juan Villareal; Los Dos Gilbertos with Beatriz Llama; Oscar Hernández; Roberto Pulido y los Clásicos; Franciso Molina and Marcelina Valencia; Gu-Achi Fiddlers; the Molinas; Southern Scratch; El Conjunto Murietta. (Artists are from USA and Mexico.)

Borderlands is about negotiation, in a sense—the changes and adjustments that take place when cultures, beliefs, ways of living, politics, and music come up against each other in daily life. The music on this disc explores those circumstances in an area that has been intimately familiar with cultural exchange for centuries, the Rio Grande Valley along the Texas/Arizona/ northern Mexico border. Here, in an illuminating chronological sequence, appear the corrido ballads and conjunto dance tunes popular on both sides of the river, merging and changing and holding their own identity with Native American fiddle tunes, country-rock, chicken scratch (a Native polka-based style), and Tejano (modern Tex-Mex). The way the songs are organized makes this a good introduction for the beginner, and will likely provoke lively discussion among those already informed about the region.

Kerry Dexter

Cajun & Creole Masters ♪♪♪♪ (World Music Institute, 1987/1996)

USA
genre: Cajun

Dennis McGee; Alfonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin; Canray Fontenot; Sady Courville; Michael Doucet; Billy Ware. (All artists are from USA.)

Four grandfathers of Cajun music, two white and two African American, show off the reels, waltzes, and nasal French singing that still define the Louisiana country tradition. Featuring music from before the great 1950s color break that sent African American musicians toward the R&B of zydeco and left white musicians (including host Michael Doucet) to stand as neo-conservative guardians of what was once a vital Saturday-night tradition, this disc brims with foot-stomping, triangle-ringing life. It is also an important historical document: accordionist "Bois Sec" Ardoin, a nephew of the great Amédée Ardoin, and his late partner, fiddler Canray Fontenot, were both recipients of National Heritage Fellowships and, until Fontenot's death in 1995, entertained thousands at the New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival with their endless, ornate variations on the "chanky-chank" style rhythmic waltzes and blues sampled here. The late fiddling team of Dennis McGee and his brother-in-law Sady Courville also learned their music from family and community, reflecting the intricate two-violin harmonies that predate the accordion's introduction into South Louisiana. In addition to the live tracks (several with Doucet on guitar and Billy Ware on triangle), this disc features short interviews (in English), which are transcribed in the CD booklet. McGee also sings a short vocal solo that could be from a century ago, complete with cowboy yelps and elongated vowels that would still ring across the prairie.

Clea Simon

Conjunto! Texas-Mexican Border Music, Vols. 1–5 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1988–90, compilation prod. Carl Finch)

USA, Mexico
genre: Conjunto

More than three dozen conjunto musicians, individuals and groups, the best-known including: Flaco Jimenez; Tony de la Rosa; David Lee Garza; El Conjunto Bernal. (Artists are primarily from the frontera, the Texas-Mexico border region.)

Conjunto is, fundamentally, a dance music, a rhythm that sends partners whirling across the sawdust floor. It's grounded in the sound of the accordion and the bajo sexto (12-string bass guitar), added to by singers and perhaps drums or other bass and guitar. It's a very atmospheric music, calling up images of South Texas, a place where German, Mexican, Native American, and the southern and western U.S. cultures met, converged, clashed—and eventually joined on the dance floor. Its listeners are most often bilingual and multicultural, so the music keeps changing as they do to meet their interests. In these five discs Rounder has collected and annotated 68 recordings, most of which had only been available on regional labels. It's a cohesive and interesting program for those who want to learn about conjunto (though the liner notes are sometimes repetitive). It's also fun for those who just want to dance.

Kerry Dexter

Conjuntos Norteños ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1989, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz)

USA
genre: Tex-Mex

Los Pinguinos Del Norte; Conjunto Trio San Antonio. (All artists are from USA.)

Tex-Mex music, due in large part to the Hollywood image factory and the films of John Ford, evokes rugged country, dusty barrooms, and the heat of the western sun. One can almost picture the camera panning across a cowboy tableau: a gunfighter rides into town, tumbleweeds roll past. But in reality, the conjuntos norteños were popular groups that utilized vocal duets, accordion, bajo sexto (12-string bass guitar), bass, and drums, performing in plazas and at parties in northern Mexico and southern Texas. The two groups featured on this disc run through a host of traditional corridos (story ballads) with great skill. The trademark of Los Piguinos Del Norte is the contrast of Ruben Castillo Juarez's high nasal voice with Hilario Gaytan Moreno's smoother baritone. Conjunto Trio San Antonio is set apart by the nimble accordion of leader Fred Zimmerle. Unfortunately the ambience is rather staid, as if the disc were an academic exercise rather than a living document. Many tracks seem too restrained, with occasional obligatory vocal exclamations that sound like an afterthought. Conjunto Trio San Antonio does begin to loosen up late in the disc with a lusty "Borracho Perdido," complete with a winning slap-back bass rhythm and dancing accordion solo. If more of the material matched this buoyancy, it could be more recommendable for your next party than for your next ethnographic symposium.

Tim Sheridan

Corridos y Tragedias de la Frontera: First Recordings of Historic Mexican American Ballads, 1928–1937 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1994, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz)

USA, Mexico
genre: Corrido

Pedro Rocha & Lupe Martinez; Los Madrugadores; Hermanos Bañuelos; Hernández & Sifuentes; Ramos & Treviño; Silvano Ramos & Daniel Ramírez; Trio Matamoros; Dúo Latino; Los Cancioneros Alegres; Nacho & Justino; Dúo El Arte Mexicano; Francisco Montalvo & Andrés Berlanga; Silavano Ramos & Ortega; Trinidad & María López; Sifuentes y Guzman; Hermanos Chavarría; Salas y Mendoza; Cancioneres Picarescos; Antonio Flores & Manuel Valdéz. (All artists are from the Texas-Mexico border region.)

The corrido was—and in some cases still is—both the newspaper and the storybook of the border, a song-form relating the conflicts and exploits of daily life as well as extraordinary events. Many corridos are based in fact, but fictional tales also abound. Though it remains a vital form along the frontera (Texas-Mexico border) today, the heyday of the corrido was during the decade early in the century when these recordings were made. The musicians featured here were among the best and most widely known throughout the region. This two-disc set—and its extensive booklet—are invaluable both for appreciating the historical recordings themselves and for understanding the roots of contemporary Latin-based musics like Tejano, conjunto, and nueva canción.

Kerry Dexter

Cuarteto Coculense: Mexico's Pioneer Mariachis, Vol. 4 ♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1998, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz)

Mexico
genre: Mariachi

Cuarteto Coculense (Mexico).

One of the first Mariachi bands, the Cuarteto Coculense left their native town of Cocula for Mexico City in 1908 to make the records collected on this representative look at the genre's origins. In those pre-tech days the sound traveled through a horn and was etched directly onto a cylinder. The results are a struggle to listen through, with no bass and much hiss and distortion. Hearing beyond the recordings' limitations requires the dogged patience of a musical historian, yet proves rewarding. The wealth of Cocula at the turn of the century gave rise to much leisure time and a demand for groups like the Cuarteto. With the bass rendered inaudible the singers sound like altos, though they no doubt had rich tenor voices. They sing charming stories about their daughters, lost cattle herds, a motherless goat, and their courting of an Indian woman. The guitar playing is straightforward, alternating between only two or three chords with additional harmonies on the two violins. Now that the mariachi band has become synonymous with Mexican culture, it is interesting to listen back in time to the very first of their kind.

David Poole

Fifteen Tex-Mex Conjunto Classics ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1996, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz, Tom Diamant)

USA, Mexico
genre: Conjunto

Flaco Jimenez; Conjunto Bernal; Lydia Mendoza; Santiago Jimenez Jr.; Don Santiago Jimenez; Los Pavos Reales; Tony de la Rosa; Valerio Longoria; Los Pinguinos del Norte; Juan Lopez; Fred Zinnerle and Trio San Antonio; Narciso Martinez; Los Cenzontles; Steve Jordan. (Artists are from USA and Mexico.)

Conjunto is a music that grew out of the mixture of cultures that came to South Texas. The duet ballad style of Mexican norteño; the polka and accordion of German and Czech settlers; the country-music subjects of dancing, drinking, and dying: these and more mixed together in a way that all these cultures could relate to—and dance to. Conjunto is above all a dance music, and on this disc of 15 historic recordings are tunes by the pioneers of the style like the Jimenezes, and those who took it in new directions, like Tony de la Rosa (who electrified the band and added drums) and Lydia Mendoza (who brought a woman's perspective to the lyrics). It's an excellent collection for introduction or review of the roots of conjunto. Unlike Arhoolie's regular-priced discs, though, the budget series of which this is part

(and which is drawn from those CDs) does not come with the label's characteristically extensive liner notes.

Kerry Dexter

Fire in the Kitchen ♪♪♪♪½ (BMG Classics, 1998, prod. Paddy Moloney)

Canada
genre: Anglo-Celtic/Quebecois folk

Leahy; the Rankins; Great Big Sea; Laura Smith; Ashley MacIsaac; Rita MacNeil; Natalie MacMaster; Mary Jane Lamond; the Barra MacNeills; the Ennis Sisters; La Bottine Souriante; the Chieftains (Ireland). (All artists are from Canada except where noted otherwise.)

In the grand tradition of the Chieftains' all-star invitationals (like the best-selling Celtic/rock project The Long Black Veil) and musical ambassadorships (like the exploration of Celtic Spain on Santiago), Fire in the Kitchen (named after a famed form of domestic jam session, the "kitchen party") is a guide to the folk/roots music of eastern Canada with the Chieftains as your friendly hosts—a generous cross between a collaboration and a compilation, with the Canadian stars often taking the spotlight and the Chieftains not even named on the CD cover. But they do join sensational Ontario family band Leahy to become a grand folk orchestra swingin' their way through a set of traditional dance tunes on the album's opening track—which sets the tone of top-rank backing for the other household-names-to-be on this disc, including Cape Breton's Gaelic singing queen Mary Jane Lamond on "A Mhairi Bhoidheach." On "Fingal's Cave" the Chieftains and Cape Breton fiddle phenom Natalie MacMaster jell so nicely you'd think they'd been playing together for years. And although most of the performers selected for this collection come from Canada's Anglo-Celtic traditions, Fire finishes off with a blast from fantastic Quebecois band La Bottine Souriante (fiddle, accordion, foot percussion, acoustic guitar, mandolin, piano, bass, jew's-harp, and a full horn section of bass trombone, saxophone, trumpet, and trombone!). The Chieftains once again sit in and rock out like they never have before—now there's a team-up to be wished for on the Chieftains' long concert trail!

Ken Roseman

Folksongs of the Louisiana Acadians ♪♪♪♪♪ (Folklyric, 1959/Arhoolie, 1994, reissue prod. Chris Strachwitz)

USA
genre: Cajun

Chuck Guillory; Wallace "Cheese" Read; Mrs. Odeus Guillory; Mrs. Rodney Fruge; Savy Augustine; Isom J. Fontenot; Bee Deshotels; Shelby Vidrine; Austin Pitre; Milton Molitor. (All artists are from USA.)

Most of the players on this collection of traditional Cajun dance tunes and ballads have deep roots in the flatlands and bayous of southwestern Louisiana; the ancestors of Chuck Guillory, Isom Fontenot, and Bee Deshotels were among the first settlers of Mamou and Eunice, where these field recordings were made by ethnomusicologist Dr. Harry Oster between 1956 and 1959. The songs here reflect the dual nature of Acadian (colloquially known as "Cajun") culture as both a proud French enclave and an American-style melting-pot; traditionals from Northern France bear shades of Anglo-Saxon folk that other area settlers brought with them; Guillory's fiddling is deeply influenced by country and western; and Mrs. Rodney Fruge plays the hillbilly-style guitar that began to seep into Cajun music via radio in the '30s and '40s. Other tracks reveal hints of Louisiana's regional music: Wallace "Cheese" Read's "Colinda" was inspired by a rural Vodou ("voodoo") dance brought to the area by slaves, while Mrs. Odeus Guillory's version of "Tu Peux Cogner Mais Tu Peux Pas Rentrer (Keep a Knockin' but You Can't Come In)" has roots in New Orleans' red-light district. But while some of the selections reflect outside influences, this compilation is distinctly Cajun in tone, with no-nonsense songs about hard work, hard love, and hard drinking sung in a provincial French dialect. The traditional Acadian instruments—fiddle and Cajun accordion (which plays in only one key)—are embellished here with guitar, harmonica, spoons, and a triangle to create an upbeat backdrop for the high-lonesome vocals, illustrating yet another paradox of Cajun culture—the contrast between the Acadians' sad, nomadic history and their unabashed love of partying (whoops and hollers are audible throughout the disc). This is earthy, beautiful music that comes straight from the heart.

Meredith Ochs

Heartbeat: Voices of First Nations Women ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian Folkways, 1995/1998, prod. Howard Bass, Reyna Green)

Heartbeat 2: Voices of First Nations Women ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian Folkways, 1995/1998, prod. Howard Bass, Reyna Green)

USA, Canada
genre: Native American

Thirty Native American women musicians (individuals and groups), from tribes across the USA and Canada, are recorded on these discs. Some are professional musicians while others sing only for tribal and family occasions. Among the best known are: Buffy Sainte-Marie; Joy Harjo; Ulali; Sharon Burch; Joanne Shenandoah; Mary Youngblood.

For most Native American tribes, music—at least the public performance of music—has traditionally been the job of men. Women have had their own songs for family rituals and for teaching, and in some cultures have shared dancing and courting songs in public with men. It is only in recent years, though, that Native American women have come forward in public to sing and play instruments, to share their native languages and family songs, and in some cases to add to those traditions, pass them on, and follow the common tribal practice of using music to comment on contemporary life and events as "song-catchers." All of these aspects of the music of Native American women are shown here, accompanied by liner notes that put faces and lives with the voices of the singers, and offer useful suggestions for further listening and reading.

Kerry Dexter

Hearts, Hands, & Hides ♪♪♪♪ (Talking Taco, 1997, prod. Jennifer Jones)

USA
genre: Native American

Peter Wyoming Bender; Mesa Music Consort; Marilyn Rife with Alice Gomez; Native Flute Ensemble; Eric Casillas. (All artists are from USA.)

Talking Taco is a small San Antonio record label that specializes in the musics of the southwest. Here they've collected percussion-driven tracks from several of their discs; music framing Native American drums with sounds of nature, for example, or pairing hand drums with Latin guitar. It's a tasteful introduction to the variety of uses of the drum in contemporary Native music.

Kerry Dexter

Honor the Earth Powwow: Songs of the Great Lakes Indians ♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1991, prod. Mickey Hart)

USA
genre: Native American

Little Otter Singers; LCO Soldiers' Drum; Smokeytown Singers; Bad River Singers; Winnebago Sons; Bear Claw Singers; Three Fires Society Singers. (All artists are from USA.)

Recorded in a natural amphitheater within a Wisconsin forest, three tribes—the Ojibway, Menominee, and Winnebago—gather for the Honor the Earth Powwow to pay tribute to nature, recorded here by Grateful Dead drummer Mickey Hart. As the groups sing accompanied by drums, their dancing can be heard in the bells attached to their ankles and dresses. Technically the music is simple, perhaps even dull to some Western ears, yet it aptly evokes distinctive and ancient Native American ceremonies and occasionally transcends its limited structure, as with the polyphony of the Smokeytown Singers' "We're the People." The generation of Native Americans who took part in these ceremonies in July 1990 were reviving traditions that had been neglected for many years, and in these songs there is an audible pleasure at rediscovering a spiritual connection uniquely their own.

David Poole

J'ai Été Au Bal (I Went to the Dance) ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1990, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz, Les Blank)

USA (Southwest Louisiana) genre: Cajun, zydeco

Volume I: Walter Mouton & the Scott Playboys; Queen Ida & the Bon Ton Zydeco Band; Lionel LeLeux; Michael Doucet; Canray Fontenot; Dennis McGee; Amédée Ardoin; Bois Sec Ardoin & Sons; Nathan Abshire; Marc and Ann Savoy; Joe Falcon & Cleoma Breaux; Odile Falcon; Solange Falcon; Luderin Darbone & the Hackberry Ramblers; Leo Soileau & His Four Aces; Chuck Guillory with Preston Manuel & the Rhythm Boys; Harry Choates; Iry LeJeune. Volume II: Joseph Jones; Jimmy Peters & the Ring Dane Singers; Sidney Babineaux; Clifton Chenier; D.L. Menard with the Louisiana Aces and the California Cajuns; Belton Richard; Johnny Allan; Dewey Balfa; Balfa Brothers Band; Rodney Balfa; Michael Doucet & Beausoleil; Paul Daigle & Cajun Gold; John Delafose & the Eunice Playboys; Boozoo Chavis; Rockin' Sidney; Wayne Toups & Zydecajun. (All artists are from USA.)

Whether you've only recently discovered the modern Cajun rock sound of Beausoleil or are a serious drinker at the wellspring of Louisiana music, this extraordinary two-volume compilation (and its companion film/video) is indispensable for anyone interested in American roots music. This is no dusty historical museum piece; the heartfelt music jumps right out and drags the listener into a passionate world of dancing, feasting, family, and over 200 years of rich musical history. Virtually every major Cajun and zydeco artist appears here, along with many equally skillful if more obscure musicians. These recordings were made in every decade from the late 1920s onward, in every imaginable setting from Cajun dance halls, to recording studios, to a zydeco picnic, to a folk festival, to a country kitchen in Eunice, Louisiana, to (full disclosure!) my own California living room. Each cut is a gem, highlighting the different facets of this rich musical tradition to brilliant advantage.

Volume I revolves mostly around Cajun music (but includes a track from zydeco's ever-popular Queen Ida) while Volume II features some more incredible zydeco as well. There is plenty of unaccompanied fiddle music, masterfully played by heroes of the form like Dewey Balfa, Michael Doucet, Canray Fontenot, Dennis McGee, and Lionel LeLeux. Dennis McGee and Sady Courville playing the "Happy One-Step" in 1929 is as psychedelic a session as you'll ever find, and it's fascinating to hear Mr. McGee's older track back-to-back with one made nearly 60 years later! Both he (who died in 1989, at the age of 96) and Lionel LeLeux were mentors to Michael Doucet, now probably the most well known living Cajun fiddler. Doucet can be heard backing up LeLeux on guitar (in addition to the aforesaid solo fiddle cuts, and several with Beausoleil); the inclusion of some of the old and new masters' banter and laughter brings the listener right into the living room where the recording was made. Fiddler Harry Choates had the first "crossover" Cajun hit with "Jolie Blonde" in 1946; this highly influential record had been commercially unavailable for decades, but it's here on Volume I, along with Iry LeJeune's passionate 1949 rendering of "Valse Des Grands Chemins," not to mention the very first Cajun 78: the 1928 recording of "Allons à Lafayette" by accordionist Joe Falcon and his vocalist-guitarist wife Cleoma Breaux. These seminal works influenced, either directly or indirectly, virtually every Cajun musician who came after. Accordion giants showcased include Clifton Chenier, Boozoo Chavis, Iry LeJeune, Marc Savoy, Nathan Abshire, and the original trailblazer, Amédée Ardoin. The Western swing/Cajun string-band style is well-represented by Luderin Darbone of the Hackberry Ramblers (as well as by the Harry Choates cut). Swamp pop songs by Belton Richard and Johnny Allan (Joe Falcon's great-nephew!) provide a taste of '50s and '60s Cajun rock 'n' roll. Southwest Louisiana pop music is brought right up to the '90s with Rockin' Sidney's huge zydeco hit "My Toot Toot," but it's not the Grammy-winning version you've probably heard. This down-home reading was recorded live by Sidney at the Soul Brothers picnic near Laureville, Louisiana, complete with background noise from what sounds like a wild party!

Besides the familiar fiddle-accordion Cajun and zydeco sounds, J'ai Été Au Bal showcases some astonishing older musical styles that are now nearly extinct, such as the unaccompanied ballad tradition, which was practiced only in the home, mainly by women; the charming octogenarian Odile Falcon, in her kitchen, sings a saucy rendition of "La Reine De La Salle." Juré singing, an archaic unaccompanied black vocal and dance style that is the direct antecedent of zydeco, is beautifully represented with a phenomenal 1934 Library of Congress recording of Jimmy Peters & the Ring Dance Singers sounding very African as they deliver the song from which zydeco takes its name: "Zydeco Sont Pas Salés." Next is Creole accordion pioneer Sidney Babineaux's solo accordion version of the same song, followed by Clifton Chenier's full-blown treatment, which launched zydeco as a popular music style.

J'ai Été Au Bal includes several rarities that alone would be worth the price of the compilation. Among these are two songs by the legendary accordionist and singer Walter Mouton (with the Scott Playboys), in all likelihood his only commercially available recordings. Mouton, who has refused to make another record since the one 45 from which these songs derive was released in the '60s, earns his living as a truck driver—while continuing to hold forth every Saturday night with his band, which at the time of the historic single included several of Cajun music's most renowned dance hall figures. Randall Foreman's sinuous steel playing harmonizes with Dick Richard's classic Cajun fiddling to create a unique texture that instantly transports one to the smoky atmosphere of La Poussiere, the Breaux Bridge dance hall where the cuts were recorded. In addition to these finds, Joseph Jones's gut-wrenching 1934 recording of "Blues De Prison" is a superb unaccompanied version of what was later to become one of fiddler Canray Fontenot's signature tunes—the song was originally recorded even earlier by the legendary Creole fiddler Douglas Bellard, but that 78 is so rare no copies have ever been found!

The delights of this collection are too numerous to describe further; you should waste no more time reading about this essential chronicle of Cajun and zydeco's history and future, and obtain one to enjoy yourself!

Suzy Rothfield Thompson

Klezmer 1993—New York City ♪♪♪♪ (Knitting Factory Works, 1993, compilation prod. Michael Dorf)

USA

genre: Klezmer

Billy Tipton Saxophone Quartet; New Klezmer Trio; John Zorn's Masada; Klezmatics; Hassidic New Wave; Paradox Trio; Shvitz All-Stars; Alollo Trehorn with Klezmatics. (All artists are from USA.)

By the early 1990s, the klezmer revival had been underway for two decades; Jewish musicians had gone back to their roots to revive traditional East European Yiddish music. Going back, for some, meant playing more "traditionally" and more "authentically." But other Jewish musicians argued that "tradition" is not a fixed reference point, but a continuum; Jewish music must live in the present and move toward the future, they said. Some of these musicians began experimenting with forms that blended jazz, rock, Balkan, and radical lyrical material with klezmer. The Knitting Factory, a progressive club on New York City's Lower East Side, began booking cutting-edge klezmer bands. Most of the important artists in the "Radical Jewish Culture" movement that ensued are here. This anthology, taken from a series of performances at "the Knit," documents the emergence of a Jewish musical phenomenon that feels comfortable reinterpreting Yiddish culture through a postmodern sensibility. Six years after the release of this album, Radical Jewish Culture continues to bring in new and exciting elements.

Aaron Howard

Lullaby Journey ♪♪♪♪ (Dorian, 1996, prod. Douglas Brown, Chris Norman, Custer LaRue)

Canada, USA
genre: Lullaby, meditation

Custer LaRue (USA), Chris Norman (Canada), Kim Robertson (USA).

The harp, the flute, and the human voice are three of the most ancient instruments, and the impulse of the lullaby, a bridge between the conscious and the dreaming mind, is one of music's oldest purposes. Soprano Custer LaRue, flutist Chris Norman, and harper Kim Robertson explore these ideas in a collection that begins with the connection between music, dreaming, and magic (the traditional Welsh lullaby "Hwi-Hwi"), and comes to a conclusion with the elegant reflection of the sleeper observed in Stephen Foster's "Beautiful Dreamer." Along the way they visit traditional and more recently composed lullabies from the English, Celtic, and other canons. The music is structured somewhat in three song-cycles that, the artists say, act as a metaphor for the time we spend traveling through sleep, dreaming into waking. While the music is suitable for children, it's far more complex and challenging than most children's albums. It will appeal to adult listeners in search of meditative sounds and could be a bridge not only between slumber and wakefulness but between the simpler music of childhood and more sophisticated material to share with a growing youth.

Kerry Dexter

The Mexican Revolution Corridos ♪♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1996, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz)

Mexico, USA
genre: Corrido

More than 40 individuals and groups in 59 tracks on four CDs, including: Augustín Lara; Lydia Mendoza; Conjunto Tamaulipas. (Artists are from Mexico and USA.)

The corrido is a ballad, a four-minute movie whose characters are drawn, usually, from current events. As with all good drama, the favorite stories are of heroes surviving against the odds, and along the Mexico/USA border, those odds most often meant the wealthy landowner, the "rinches" or rangers, and the government. Then, in 1910, the odds really changed—the Mexican Revolution began. The battles, tragedies, and social and political shifts of this continuing struggle immediately became the subject of corridos—corridos intended for Mexicans living across the border in the United States. Not only were they at a distance and thus craving news of their homeland in this time of change, but they were the ones with access to the phonographs on which to play the music. Most people living in Mexico (at least those who would listen to revolutionary corridos) couldn't afford or obtain the machines. This compilation contains corridos from the era of 1910 to 1940, although many would argue that the best corridos of the revolution in Mexico have yet to be written—or have been ones that were not chosen for recording and commercial marketing. In any case, this is a fascinating musical and historical document, which includes a 175-page booklet with more historical information and English versions of the lyrics. There are four discs in the set: Outlaws and Revolutionaries; The Francisco Villa Cycle (Villa was a revolutionary leader who rose through the ranks and was later assassinated); Local Revolutionary Figures; and Post-Revolutionary Corridos and Narratives, which contains a numbers of songs commenting on the fate of the common person in the wake of revolutionary change. The set is compiled from a historical perspective, and it also works as a tracing of musical evolution and as an example of how the less-powerful groups in society have often used music as a way to express the otherwise-unwritten history of their perspective.

Kerry Dexter

Mexico: Fiestas of Chiapas & Oaxaca ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra/Nonesuch, 1976/1991, compilation prod. David Lewiston)

Mexico
genre: Mexican festival music

More than 26 musicians in various configurations, including: Lol Gomez Gomez; Xun Perez Perez; Mariano Santis Hernandez; Juan Hernandez Lopez; Marian Gonzales Vasquez; Victor Gomez Senestino; Rominko Lopez de la Cruz; Rominko Patixtan Patixtan; Pegro Ruiz Ruiz; Pegro Lunes Tak'il Bek'et; the Jimenez family. (All artists are from Mexico.)

Though torn by violent citizen unrest and alleged government reprisal in recent years, there are other sides to the south of Mexico, and some are heard here. Those expecting the ubiquitous brass band in this collection of Mexican fiesta music will find a rambunctious Christmas Eve procession where horns vie with carol-singing students and the whoosh of fireworks (an appeal for rain). Yet these field recordings—made in the states of Oaxaca and Chiapas and originally released on LP in 1976—have surprising diversity: fife and drum music that shares stylistic traits with that found in the West Indies and the Mississippi hill country; polyphonic singing that recalls the complexity of Balinese kechak; carefree marimba; frantic horn-and-guitar conjunto; and the percussive coup de grace—a tortoise shell played with deer antlers. The region's mix of Spanish, Mayan, and Afro-Caribbean cultures gives plenty of referential pleasure; all that's missing is a video companion to these highly colorful performances.

Bill Ellis

The Music of Arab Americans ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1997, compilation prod. Anne K. Rasmussen)

USA
genre: Arabic

Alexander Maloof (Syria/America); Constantine Souse (Syria/America); Amer Khadaj (Lebanon/America); Sana Khadaj (Lebanon/America); Na'im Karakand (Syria/America); Hanan Harouni (Lebanon/America); Tony Abdel Ahad (America); Danny Thomas (America); Russell Bunai (Syria/America); Kahraman (Lebanon/America); Jalil Azzouz (Palestine/America).

Early in the 20th century there was a plethora of small record companies targeting immigrants who clamored for the music of their homelands. During that time the Arab community in America was one of the less-populous segments seeking reminders of the culture they'd left behind. Most of them came from Greater Syria (consisting of territories we now know as Syria, Lebanon, and Palestine) and, to some extent, were under the cultural sway of Egypt. All of these facts are well documented in the liner notes of this remarkable collection by producer Anne K. Rasmussen. Her text is a marvel of clear, concise commentary that gives the reader all the facts necessary to approach the music with an open mind. Some of this material is surprisingly forward-looking for its time. Alexander Maloof and the Maloof Oriental Orchestra's "Fatima" dates from the early 1930s and mixes Western instruments like the piano and the saxophone into the music, prefacing an approach that Mohamed Abdel Wahab would later pioneer in Egypt. Also of interest is a medley of Arabic folk songs performed by Danny Thomas as a benefit for the St. Jude Hospital Foundation. People who only know Thomas as a comedian or the father of Marlo will be pleasantly surprised by his warm, fluid singing.

Garaud MacTaggart

Music of New Mexico: Native American Traditions ♪♪♪♪½ (Smithsonian Folkways, 1992, prod. Howard Bass) Music of New Mexico: Hispanic Traditions ♪♪♪♪½ (Smithsonian Folkways, 1992, prod. Howard Bass)

USA
genre: Native American, Hispanic

More than 40 musicians working in the Hispanic and Native American traditions in contemporary New Mexico.

New Mexico has long been a place for confluence of cultures. Three Native American tribes have lived in the region: the Pueblo, the Apache, and the Navajo. On Native American Traditions, music from each of these groups is recorded, but it's not intended as a historical document. The project (like its companion, Hispanic Traditions) was prepared in celebration of the 500th anniversary of the Western Hemispheric cultural meeting exemplified by the area (however uncelebratory its beginnings often were), so the producers have chosen both tribal songs that are still current in daily life, and music by contemporary Native musicians.

Though disparate societies have encountered each other in New Mexico, the rough and dramatic landscape of the place has allowed them to develop at a distance from mainstream influence as well. The Hispanos, as descendants of the first Hispanic immigrants to the area call themselves, had a lifestyle that evolved (and still does) in connection with but at a remove from the influence of Spain and Mexico. Hispanic Traditions offers examples of this in both religious and secular music, presenting versions of tunes in the folk tradition that are still in common use today.

Kerry Dexter

Navajo Songs ♪♪♪ (Smithsonian Folkways, 1992, prod. Laura Boulton, Charlotte Frisbie, David McAllester)

USA
genre: Native American, chant

Navajo musicians from the 1930s and '40s (not all identified), including Ben Hudson Begay and Pablo Huerito. (All artists are from USA.)

This is a collection of historic recordings compiled by Laura Boulton in the 1930s and '40s. The Navajo are the largest Native tribe in the United States, and Boulton was one of the foremost researchers involved in preserving their traditional music. She collected songs of daily life such as "moccasin game" and "corn-grinding" songs, as well as recording the intricate multivoiced chants of the spiritual Yeibichei or "nightway ceremonial." This is an important document of the music before outside influences brought by radio and record-player had been added to it; the album also provides interesting material for comparing Navajo chant to that of other tribes and cultures.

Kerry Dexter

Norteño and Tejano Accordion Pioneers 1929–1939 ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1995, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz)

USA, Mexico
genre: Norteño, Tejano

Narciso Martinez; Roberto Rodriguez; Clemente Mendoza; R. deLeon; L. Villalobos; Estanislado Salazar; Hnos. Mier; Pas Flores; Francisco Montalvo; Bruno Villareal; Jésus Casiano; Santiago Jimenez; José Rodriguez; Lolo Cavazos. (All artists are from the frontera, the Texas/Mexico border region; historical specifics uncertain.)

The historical recordings on this album comprise a portrait of music at a time of change. In the decade covered by these tracks, the duet singing style of northern Mexico was mixing with the polka and waltz dance music of South Texas—and both the norteño (Mexican) and Tejano (Texan) styles were themselves blends of other musical influences. Into this mix came the button accordion, whose unique sweetness and vibrato and choppy squeezebox style of bending notes both complemented and encouraged the development and joining of these musical genres. On this disc are featured the better-known pioneers of the new hybrids—Narciso Martinez, Bruno Villareal, and Santiago Jimenez—as well as several vital musicians whose work is less widely heard. They play polkas, valses, and two-steps as well as canciones, huapangos, and mazurkas. This is a great document of historic music that remains vibrant in its own right while illuminating the source upon which much of today's Tex-Mex music draws.

Kerry Dexter

Plains Chippewa/Metis Music from Turtle Mountain ♪♪♪½ (Smithsonian Folkways, 1984/1992, prod. Nicholas Curchin Peterson Vrooman)

USA, Canada
genre: Native American

Members of the Plains Chippewa/Metis communities around Turtle Mountain, ND, USA.

This is, as the producer describes it, a cultural fingerprint put on disc, and like the impression of a finger tip, there are many whorls and ridges to examine. The Turtle Mountain reservation stands in North Dakota at almost the geographical center of the North American continent. It is an isolated location, and that has caused the residents to maintain a strong tradition of both Native American drum songs from the Pembina Chippewa Tribe, and chansons (ballads) and story-songs handed down from the French traders who intermarried with the Chippewa to form the Metis community. An instrumental tradition was passed on as well, and the results of that can be heard in seven tracks of fiddle dance songs. To conclude the disc, the continuing evolution of this culture is shown in recordings of contemporary songs from Turtle Mountain in fiddle, country, and rock 'n' roll styles.

Kerry Dexter

The Rough Guide to Native American Music ♪♪♪♪ (Rough Guide/World Music Network, 1998, prod. Phil Stanton)

Canada, USA
genre: Native American

Chester Mahooty (Zuni); Walela (Cherokee); Sharon Burch (Navajo); Primeaux & Mike (Oglalla-Yankton Sioux-Ponca & Navajo, respectively); Southern Scratch (Tohono O'odham); Judy Trejo (Paiute); Garcia Brothers (San Juan); R. Carlos Nakai (Navajo-Ute); Robert Tree Cody & Rob Wallace with Will Clipham (Maricopa-Dakota); Without Rezervation (Pitt River-Paiute, Navajo, Pima-Papago-Cree); Cornel Pewewardy & Alliance West Singers (Comanche-Kiowa); Joanne Shenandoah (Oneida); Blackstone Singers (Cree); Black Lodge Singers (Blackfeet); Burning Sky (Navajo-Ute, Navajo); Ed Lee Natay (Navajo); Bill Miller (Mohican). (Artists are from Canada and USA.)

To truly understand a culture, one must become immersed in its music. Native American music is reaching ever greater heights of creativity and popularity, with some artists transcending tradition while others hold fast to their roots. The soothing, healing peyote ceremonial songs of Primeaux & Mike, polka-like rhythms of Southern Scratch, urban street rap of Without Rezervation, and pretty warbling of female trio Walela are presented here along with dances, ballads, hymns, victory songs, and over a dozen other styles that hint at the broad diversity of indigenous Northern American music today. One of the best tracks is "Mickey Mouse" by the famed powwow performers Black Lodge Singers; it demonstrates how modern influences can positively impact a very traditional art form. While some powwow songs use vocables (words without meaning, or "speech from the soul"), this tune is sung in English, replete with references to Disneyland. Representing 18 artists at their peak, this newest edition in the popular Rough Guide series (a number of whose other volumes are reviewed elsewhere in this Compilations section) is a joyful collision of culturally affirming styles in a thriving genre. If you thought Native American music begins with solo flute and ends with percussion, this is your ticket to ride.

PJ Birosik

Songs of Earth, Water, Fire & Sky ♪♪♪♪♪ (New World Records, 1976, prod. Charlotte Heth)

USA
genre: Native American music

More than 50 singers, dancers, and musicians, including: the Garcia Brothers; the Los Angeles Northern Singers; Archie Sam; Luman Wildcat; Aileen Figueroa; Frankie Jishie Jr.; Raymond K. Yazzie; Sam Yazzie Jr.; Sam Yazzie Sr.; Jack Anquoe. (All artists are from USA.)

What's remarkable about this first album in a six-CD series produced by Charlotte Heth for New World Records is the sincerity of the ancient and diverse music preserved here from the oral tradition. Heth, a member of the Cherokee nation of Oklahoma and an Associate Professor of Music and director of the American Indian Studies Center at UCLA, has authored and edited numerous articles, books, records, and videotapes on Native culture. Captured on-location, this album's nine tracks document ceremonial and social dance music from various regions. Excellent sound quality makes it seem as though you're right there, and a wide selection of styles and traditions throughout the entire series and this edition of it makes for always enjoyable and intriguing listening.

Nancy Ann Lee

Songs of the Spirit ♪♪♪♪ (Triloka/Mercury, 1996, prod. Jim Wilson, Al Evers, Mitchell Markus)

USA
genre: Native American

Coyote Oldman; Little Wolf; Joanne Shenandoah; R. Carlos Nakai; Kashtin; Way West; Native Flute Ensemble; Michael Stearns & Ron Sunsinger; Primeaux & Mike; 500 Nations; Rita Coolidge. (All artists are from USA.)

This is a collection of songs celebrating the ancient Native American spiritual reverence for, and connection with, nature and the cycles of the seasons. The styles vary with the artists, from R. Carlos Nakai's wooden flutes, to the chant of 500 Nations, to the call-and-response form of Rita Coolidge's music. It's a thoughtful group of songs, which, although most have appeared elsewhere, benefit from being heard in this context.

Kerry Dexter

Talking Spirits ♪♪♪½ (Music of the World, 1992, prod. James Lascelles, Bob Haddad)

USA
genre: Native American

Many Native American singers and musicians from the southwestern USA, including the Garcia Brothers (San Juan Pueblo); the Laguna Singers & Dancers (Laguna); the Zuni Olla Maidens (Zuni); Chester, Dorothy, and Brenner Mahooty (Zuni); the Hopi Singers from Second Mesa (Hopi); Roger Mase (Hopi).

This is a collection of social dance music from four pueblos of the American southwest: music used to celebrate community occasions, to ask for blessings, and as a public part of otherwise private religious observations. Rather than a historic recreation, the works are sung and played here by people who still use them as an integral part of their lives.

Kerry Dexter

Tejano Roots/Raices Tejanos: The Roots of Tejano and Conjunto Music ♪♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1991, reissue prod. Chris Strachwitz)

USA, Mexico
genre: Tejano

Conjunto Bernal; Narciso Martinez; Lydia Mendoza; Tony de la Rosa; Carmen y Laura; Beto Villa y si Orquesta; Jesus Maya y Timoteo Cantu; Trio San Antonio; Hermanas Mendoza; Juan Lopez; Chelo Silva; Freddie Fender/Eddie con los Shades; Isidro Lopez y Conjunto Ideal; Isidro Lopez y su Orquesta; Agapito Zuniga; Wally Almendarez. (All artists are from the Texas/Mexico border region.)

This is a collection of two-dozen jukebox hits from the Texas/Mexico border popular from the early 1940s to the late 1960s. The biggest stars of the region—the Mendozas, Narciso Martinez, Freddie Fender, Tony de la Rosa—are here, and it's a lively set that shows off the fine voices and styles of these performers. It's also a document of how more traditional forms of border music evolved by incorporating elements of rock and country from the Anglo side of the jukebox. This album is enjoyable in its own right and insightful as a snapshot of contemporary border music's historical beginnings. There are several other volumes in the Tejano Roots series, including Compeones de Conjunto: Conjunto Champs and Tejano Roots: the Women.

Kerry Dexter

Tribal Fires ♪♪♪♪ (Earthbeat!, 1997, prod. Agnes Patak, Leib Ostrow)

USA, Canada
genre: Native American, singer/songwriter

Walela; Jerry Alfred; Jani Lauzon; Robert Mirabal; Joy Harjo and Poetic Justice; Keith Secola; Ulali; Lunar Drive; Quiltman; Joanne Shenandoah; Andrew Vasquez; Songcatchers; Brulé. (Artists are from USA and Canada.)

Native American musicians live in the same world the rest of us do, but far too often they are expected only to sing ancient chants or perform ethereal melodies on the flute. The music on this album shows another side of that equation: Native American singers and composers using—and fusing—contemporary and ancient musical styles and viewing contemporary issues through tribal perspectives. If you're from the non-Native community, prepare to be surprised.

Kerry Dexter

Tribal Voices ♪♪♪♪ (Earthbeat!, 1996, prod. Leib Ostrow, David Swenson, Agnes Patak)

USA
genre: Native American, chant

Quiltman; Walela; Kevin Locke; Sharon Burch; Joseph FireCrow; Ulali; Jerry Alfred; Andrew Vasquez; Six Nations Women Singers; Primeaux & Mike; Sissy Goodhouse; Joanne Shenandoah; Robert Tree Cody & Rob Wallace; Spirit of Song Singers. (All artists are from USA.)

The producers of this collection have emphasized the chant style of Native American singing, which across cultures and tribes appears in both religious and secular music as prayer, preparation, as celebration. Chant as duet, as the song of an individual, as harmony and chorus, and as call-and-response are all present in this multi-tribal exploration, which makes it a fine introduction to this aspect of Native American music.

Kerry Dexter

Tribal Winds ♪♪♪♪½ (Earthbeat!, 1995, prod. David Swenson)

USA, Canada
genre: Native American

Bryan Akipa (Dakota); Keith Bear (Mandan/Hidatsa); Fernando Cellicion (Zuni); Joseph FireCrow (Northern Cheyenne); William Guitierrez (Southern Ute/Dineh); Hawk Henries (Nipmuc); Toya Inajin/Kevin Locke (Lakota); Tom Mauchaty-Ware (Kiowa/Comanche); R. Carlos Nakai (Navajo/Ute); Andrew Vasquez (Kiowa/Apache). (Artists are from USA and Canada.)

Native American peoples have honored the spirit of the winds, and their traditions of communicating with that force, through the music of the flute for many generations. As the tribes became involved in dealing with conquest and expansion by other cultures in the Americas, flute players became less common, until recent years when many Native American artists have explored, studied, revived, and created new music for this ancient instrument. Tribal Winds is unusual not for its high quality—there are many fine Native American flute recordings available now—but for the scope of the disc, the collaboration of musicians of many tribes that made it come together. Cedric Goodhouse, who was involved in developing the concept for the album, captures the image that became the title: " . . . I watched the prairie grasses move . . . not just to one song, but to many. I realized I was hearing the song of all time—I was listening to tribal winds."

Kerry Dexter

Under the Green Corn Moon ♪♪♪♪ (Silver Wave, 1998, prod. Tom Wasinger)

USA, Mexico, Canada genre: Native American, children's songs

Lorain Fox (Aztec); Dorothy White (Kiowa); Robert Mirabal (Taos Pueblo); Julia Begaye (Navajo); Micki Pratt (Cheyenne); Joanne Shenandoah (Onieda Iroquois); Alph Secakuku (Hopi); Mary Philbrook (MicMac); Tzó Kam (Salish/Lillooet); Dorothy Hunting Horse Gray (Kiowa); Tom Wasinger (Pawnee); Myra Aitson (Comanche); Jerry Garret (Oglala Sioux); Laughing Woam (Masantucket Pequot); Ann Shadlow (Cheyenne); Kelly White (Salish/Coast). (Artists are from USA, Mexico, and Canada.)

The emotions in lullabies sung to children remain the same across cultures and nations: warmth, joy, playfulness, comfort, and love. This disc brings together both traditional nighttime songs and newly composed pieces by members of tribes from the Mexican frontera to the northern plains, from the Pacific Coast to the eastern woodlands. Though the songs are sung in many languages, the love and respect for children comes through clearly in them all.

Kerry Dexter

Zydeco: The Early Years ♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1989/1996, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz)

USA
genre: Zydeco

McZiel & Gernger; Sidney Babineaux; Albert Chevalier; George Alberts; Peter King & Hebert; Willie Green; Herbert Sam; Clifton Chenier; Clarence Garlow. (All artists are from USA.)

Forget all the horn arrangements, electric guitar solos, and drum sets that have marked zydeco over the past two decades. As explained by C.J. Chenier, the son of zydeco originator Clifton Chenier, during an early-1980s interview with this writer, true zydeco music was only produced by an accordion and a washboard. That claim is substantiated on this 19-track CD, which chronicles the beginnings of this lively southwest Louisiana dance music. Mostly recorded in that state and Texas in 1961 and '62, the album demonstrates how Louisiana's Cajun music combined with Texas blues to create the Creole hybrid known as zydeco. Especially revealing are zydeco-ized treatments of classic Cajun tunes including "Allons à Lafayette" (here by McZiel & Gernger) and "Jole Blon" (here by Willie Green). The high points of the album are the oldest tracks—"Clifton's Blues" and "Louisiana Stomp," both performed by Clifton Chenier. Although zydeco has increasingly achieved international acclaim, the rawness of this album's tracks may prevent it from being much more than a musicological artifact to most listeners. Collectors will appreciate the field-like quality of these recordings, but the novice may be better served by newer artists like Buckwheat Zydeco, Terrance Simien, and Nathan & the Zydeco Cha Chas.

Craig Harris

PACIFIC

Australia: Songs of the Aborigines and Music of Papua New Guinea ♪♪♪½ (Lyrichord, prod. Wolfgang Laade)

Australia, Papua New Guinea genre: Aboriginal

Aboriginals of Cape York peninsula, North Queensland, and Elcho Island, Arnhem Land; musicians of Waidoro, Papua New Guinea. (Artists are from Australia and Papua New Guinea.)

Unique to Australian Aboriginal culture (in this album's title referred to by the previously preferred "Aborigine") is the didgeridoo, a long tube of eucalyptus wood that is blown to emit a deep, vibrating hum. Popularized by Aboriginal rock groups like Yothu Yindi, electronic artists like Dr. Didg, and movies like Crocodile Dundee and The Rescuers Down Under, this distinctive in-compilation albums: pacific strument can be heard in its original setting on this album. Complimenting the solo and ensemble "didg" pieces is non-didg music from Papua New Guinea (once administered by Australia as suggested in the album title, but now independent). The Aboriginals of Elcho Island sing and clap sticks together for a beat while the didg resonates. The group recorded in Waidoro, Papua New Guinea, uses more complex instrumentation, including the darumbere (a bamboo jew's-harp), gora (a rattle made of nut shells), walep (wooden hourglass-shaped drums), pat (bamboo slit drum), and tatarore (bamboo flute), with a chorus. The album's most rudimentary (and unfortunately longest) section, recorded in Cape York, Australia, is little more than a beat hammered on a tobacco tin or log to monotonous chanting and didg cycling. Listeners accustomed to the sophisticated use of the didgeridoo might be disappointed by this elementary collection, the highlight of which is not the Australian section but the more multi-faceted ensemble from Papua New Guinea.

David Poole

Hawaiian Drum Dance Chants: Sounds of Power in Time ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian Folkways, 1989, compilation prod. Elizabeth Tatar, Bishop Museum, Honolulu, HI)

Hawaii (USA)
genre: Hawaiian drum dance chants

Kau'i Zuttermeister; Hau'oli Lewis; Noenoe Lewis; Brenda Lehua Hulihe'e; Anthony La'akapu Lenchanko; Charles Albert Manu'aikohanaiki'ilili Boyd; James Kapihe Palea Kuluwaimaka; Samuel Pua Ha'aheo; Keahi Luahine; Kawena Pukui; Hoakalei Kamau'u; Keakaokalo Kanahele; Ka'upena Wong; Tom Hiona. (All artists are from Hawaii, USA.)

This recording was produced during the Smithsonian Institution's "Festival of American Folklife" focus on Hawaii in 1989. Packaged with a booklet that provides the historical details, this disc is an excellent introduction to Hawaiian chants, dances, drumming, and the individuals who have performed and taught the mele hula pahu form, which involves all three. The pahu is a wooden sharkskin drum considered a sacred ritual instrument of great power, linking today's Hawaiians with the rich culture of their Polynesian ancestors. The traditions of mele hula pahu have been kept alive by a handful of masters, many of whom appear here. Restored recordings from the 1930s through 1950s are included, as well as chants by contemporary masters recorded in 1989 at the historic Hawaiian Hall of the Bishop Museum in Honolulu. The texts and translations were prepared by the influential scholar and teacher Mary Kawena Pukui, author of the definitive Hawaiian Dictionary and many other important Hawaiian volumes. Only the most enthusiastic researcher could listen to this entire recording in one sitting, but individual performances are very moving. Some chants are so powerful they give one the feeling that Pele herself is speaking from the steaming volcanic vents at Kilauea.

Sandy Miranda

Vintage Hawaiian Music: The Great Singers, 1928–1934 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989, compilation prod. Bob Brozman, Chris Strachwitz)

Vintage Hawaiian Music: Steel Guitar Masters, 1928–1934 ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1989, compilation prod. Bob Brozman, Chris Strachwitz)

Hawaii (USA)
genre: Hawaiian

Mme. Riviere's Hawaiians; Coral Islanders; Waikiki Stonewall Boys; Sol K. Bright Hollywaiians; Kalama's Quartet; Sol Hoopii Trio; George Ku Trio; Tamari Tahiti; Sam Alama; Hilo Hawaiian Orchestra; King Benny Nawahi; Tau Moe; Sam Ku West Harmony Boys; S. Cortez y sus Hawaiianos; Charlie Wilon; Kanui & Lula; Walter Kolomoku; Jim & Bob the Genial Hawaiians. (All artists are from Hawaii, USA.)

Set aside any vestige of the easy-listening stereotype that has handicapped Hawaiian music—these records have all the credibility of Jelly Roll Morton's proto-jazz piano, Robert Johnson's blues guitar, or Scott Joplin's ragtime piano rolls. From the 1830s on, a large influx of cowboys from California and Mexico introduced the guitar and falsetto singing style which became trademarks of Hawaiian music. The cultural exchange persisted, as the songs on these two albums bear strong similarities to the yodeling and guitar popular in American country music at the time they were recorded. Despite the old technology, the vibrant music collected here projects clearly, full of the warmth and optimism and performed at the mellow pace that characterizes Hawaiian culture. On The Great Singers, 1928–1934, Mme. Riviere's Hawaiians yodel in harmony while superstar Rose Moe sings in an emotionally affecting falsetto. The Sol K. Bright Hollywaiians sing "Tomi Tomi" in a tempo that reflects the swinging jazz of that era, the tongue-twister Hawaiian vocals sounding like a verbal pastiche of the hula dancing style. Steel Guitar Masters, 1928–1934 features virtuoso guitar-picking accompanied by vocal groups. The sharp twang of the steel guitar and the slide effect evoke ragtime, blues, early jazz guitar, and even ballroom dance.

David Poole

SOUTH AMERICA

Andean Legacy ♪♪♪♪½ (Narada Media, 1996, executive prod. Michael Sullivan)

Bolivia, Ecuador, Peru, Chile
genre: Andean

Savia Andina (Bolivia); Alturas (Bolivia); Viento de los Andes (Ecuador); Echoes of Incas (Mexico, Cuba, Peru); Rumillaita (Bolivia); Inkuyo (Bolivia); Imbaya (Ecuador); Inti-Illimani (Chile); Andes Manta (Ecuador); Ancient Winds (Ecuador); Sukay (Bolivia, Peru); Caliche (Chile).

When the ritual flute and drum of the native musicians of the central Andes met the guitar, harp, and mandolin of the Spanish conquistadors, the Andean legacy was begun. As this connection spread through the mountains, the stringed instruments grew smaller and higher-pitched, and were sometimes made of armadillo shells in a region where wood was scarce. As the developing style began to incorporate rhythms from neighboring areas, such as joropos from Venezuela and Bolivian huyanosas, it evolved into the Pan-Andean music on this disc. It's a lively collection of the vocal and instrumental styles of the region, which are still distinguished by the sound of mountain breezes represented through the pan pipes or vertical flutes.

Kerry Dexter

Argentina: The Guitar of the Pampas ♪♪♪ (Lyrichord, prod. Rev. Jorge Alfano)

Argentina
genre: Milonga, Argentinean folkloric, classical guitar

Roberto Laro (Argentina).

Just as Argentina's Astor Piazzolla incorporated the tango into his classical music, Abel Fleury uses the milonga, another indigenous dance style, for his classical guitar pieces. Both compose art music by appropriating folk traditions. Fleury discards the lyrics and danceable rhythms in favor of intricate and cerebral guitar solos. The title and cover of the album are thus misleading. This is not authentic gaucho (cowboy) music of the Pampas, Argentina's central grasslands. This is highbrow music from Buenos Aires, Argentina's cultural capital, though certain gaucho song forms provided inspiration for Fleury's complex, classical, European-reminiscent compositions. The guitarist is Roberto Laro, whose soothing style is milder than the "real" thing, which has a rhythm section for dancing and lyrics that tell melancholy love stories. However, Laro's skillful and tender picking will suit new-age gauchos seeking dinner music in their Buenos Aires loft.

David Poole

The Best of Latin America: Change the Rules ♪♪♪♪½ (World Music Network, 1997, compilation prod. Phil Stanton)

Colombia, Cuba, Brazil, Peru, Bolivia, Argentina genre: Salsa, tango, Latin jazz, Andean folk, bossa nova, samba, mariachi

Joe Arroyo (Colombia); the Latin Brothers (Colombia); Jesus Alemany (Cuba); Fruko Y Sus Tesos (Colombia); Nico Saquito (Cuba); Sierra Maestra (Cuba); Moleque de Rua (Brazil); A. Reiner, F. Menendez, M. Candeias, L. Gazineu (Brazil); Os Ingenuos (Brazil); Susana Baca (Peru); Julie Freundt (Peru); Kjarkas (Bolivia); Emma Junaro (Bolivia); Los Nemus Del Pacifico (Colombia); Estudiantina Invasora (Cuba); La Sonora Dinamita (Colombia); Maximo Jiminez (Colombia); Juan Jose Mosalini & His Tango Orchestra (Argentina); Adriana Varela (Argentina).

The Best of Latin America, eh? Yeah, suuurrre it is. But while any album with that title will correctly arouse suspicion, the good people at World Music Network have gone and fashioned a flawless introduction to one of global pop's most enticing regions. So it's not as heavy on Brazilian styles as I'd like. So it smooths over or ignores completely some of the more specifically raucous sounds of the region. It doesn't matter, because the 19 cuts on Change the Rules effortlessly outline the pleasures to be had within the album's genre-based or geographic mini-categories, the better to indicate an endlessly varied musical vein you'll be inspired to explore and more equipped to encounter thanks to this album. An icebreaker as wonderful as the late, lamented Original Music's amazing Africa Dances, and nearly as good.

Michaelangelo Matos

Brazil Classics 1: Beleza Tropical ♪♪♪♪ (Luaka Bop/Warner Bros., 1989, compilation prod. Todo Mundo, executive prod. David Byrne)
Beleza Tropical 2: Novo! Mais! Melhor! ♪♪♪♪ (Luaka Bop/Warner Bros., 1998, compilation prod. Todo Mundo, executive prod. David Byrne)
Brazil Classics 2: O Samba ♪♪♪♪ (Luaka Bop/Warner Bros., 1989, compilation prod. Todo Mundo, executive prod. David Byrne) Brazil Classics 3: Forró etc. ♪♪♪♪ (Luaka Bop/Warner Bros., 1991, compilation prod. Todo Mundo, executive prod. David Byrne)

Brazil
genre: Tropicalismo, samba, forró

Jorge Ben; Maria Bethânia; Gilberto Gil; Caetano Veloso; Chico Buarque; Lô Borges; Milton Nascimento; Nazare Pereira; Clara Nunes; Zeca Pagodinho; Alcione; Ciro Monteiro; Beth Carvahlo; Neguinho da Beija Flor; Chico da Silva; Almir Guineto; Agepê; Martinho da Vila; Paulinho da Viola; Luiz Gonzaga; Gal Costa; Jackson do Pandeiro; Dominguinhos; Anastácia; Nando Cordel & Amelinha; Gonzaguinha; Clemilda; Jorge de Altinho; Marinalva; Genival Lacerda; Trio Nordestino; João do Vale; Elba Ramalho. (All artists are from Brazil.)

Producer David Byrne's Brazil Classics series is a well-packaged overview of that nation's musical output from the 1970s to '80s, the slick design and intelligent liner notes only enhancing the music's hip cache. Brazil Classics 1: Beleza Tropical contains the cream from the Tropicalismo movement of the '70s, a psychedelic spin on indigenous Brazilian forms influenced by English-language rock of a rebellious era. The military coup of 1964 led to a restrictive Brazil in which protest music had to be hidden beneath double entendres to avoid censorship. These subtle and gentle-sounding songs actually landed Tropicalismo's heroes Caetano Veloso and Gilberto Gil in jail—but those key figures, along with Maria Bethânia, Jorge Ben, and the internationally acclaimed Milton Nascimento, continue to dominate Brazilian popular music. Skipping ahead a bit to commemorate and expand upon this groundbreaking anthology, Beleza Tropical 2: Novo! Mais! Melhor! celebrates Luaka Bop's 10th year, showcasing both new talent and new recordings by the old guard. Veloso's "O Estrangeiro," Gil's "Madalena," and Tom Ze's "Curiosiade" vie with newer kids on the block Margareth Menezes, Lenine, and the Carnival music of Nacao Zumbi. Brazil Classics 2: O Samba captures the essence of the samba's Afro-Brazilian dance music. Some say the word is indeed derived from the Angolan semba, "to touch belly buttons while dancing," and the music works best in close-contact festive dancing. O Samba covers the genre's key figures, including Beth Carvalho, Martinho Da Vila, and Clara Nunes, all whom have been playing since the '60s. Brazil Classics 3: Forró etc. includes Gal Costa from the Tropicalismo volume, and lesser-known practitioners of the distinctive northeastern style known as forró, like Luiz Gonzaga and Dominguinhos. Forró is Brazilian cowboy party music, an upbeat sound somewhere between polka, zydeco, and samba.

David Poole

Brazilliance: The Music of Rhythm ♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1990, compilation prod. Gerald Seligman)

Brazil
genre: Samba

Beth Carvalho; Martinho da Vila; Maria Bethânia; Paulinho da Viola; Joanna; Gal Costa; João Bosco; Chico Buarque; Alcione; Bezerra de Silva. (All artists are from Brazil.)

The sheer variety of styles in Brazilian music is well represented on this collection, all united by danceable rhythms and the undeniable influence of the samba. Many listeners will already be familiar with the seductive whisper of Astrud Gilberto's "Girl from Ipanema"; this is a great opportunity to hear other great Brazilian vocalists, from the deep blues of Maria Bethânia's "Noite de Cristal," to the sophisticated jazzy soprano of Gal Costa, to the uplifting spirit and tempo of Beth Carvalho's assured and cheerful singing on "Enquanto a Gente Batuca," perfectly reflective of the shimmying percussion. Selected from a period between 1977 and 1989, this album covers similar territory to Brazil Classics 1 and Brazil Classics 2 (reviewed on page 899), but there is happily no overlap. Whether or not you understand Portuguese, the language sounds beautiful when sung well—and you can be assured of that here, with songs that evoke humor, tragedy, yearning, and celebration in a bubbly mix of hip-shaking rhythms and delightful voices.

David Poole

Brazil Samba Roots ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989, prod. Katsunori Tanaka)

Brazil
genre: Samba

Wilson Moreira; Nelson Sargento; Velha Guarda De Portela. (All artists are from Brazil.)

With Brazil Samba Roots listeners are treated to traditional samba music of the highest order. For some the samba has come to refer to anything even faintly Brazilian, but it is strictly Carnival music in 2/4 time, developed in the favelas, or slums, where it was the only brief escape from a dead-end system. The samba is the sound of Brazil; when the squeaking laugh of the cuica opens a track, it transports the listener to Carnival in Rio and gets them dancing. Culled from Kuarup Discos' Grandes Sambistas series of classic samba recordings, these 19 tracks are the real thing.

David Poole

Festival of the Andes ♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1996, prod. Bob Haddad)

Peru
genre: Andean

Unidentified groups and individuals involved in the celebration of the Fiesta Mamacha Carmen in Paucartambo, Peru.

The earliest record of a festival in Peru in honor of the Virgin of Mount Carmel is from the 17th century. Even then, at the beginning of the interaction and blending of Hispanic and indigenous ways of life, it appears to have been a multicultural event. In the centuries following, with ever-closer connections between the two communities resulting in the development of the mixed-race mestizo population, the evolution has continued. What comes through most clearly in this recording is the sense of joy and celebration, whether framed in the flute-based music of the Native tribes, the string styles brought by the Hispanics, or a fusion of the two.

Kerry Dexter

Fiesta Vallenata ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1989, compilation prod. Ben Mandelson)

Colombia
genre: Vallenatan dance music

Rusbell Chimenti & Orlando Jimenez; Julio De La Ossa; Morgan Blanco; Jimmy Pedrozo; Franklin Ariza; Joaquin Sanchez y Su Conjunto; Luis Tobio & Vincente Iguita; Miguel Duran y Su Conjunto; Barranquilla Vallenata (All artists are from Colombia).

In the Vallenata region of northern Colombia, drug kingpins live in Fantasy Island–like splendor alongside culturally proud common folk entangled in abject poverty. It is a land of joyous all-night music festivals, cockfights, and one of the world's strongest concentrations of organized crime. Given the contrasts, it is no wonder that Peruvian, Incan, Cordoban, and Bolivian Indians, along with musicians of Spanish and African descent, have all contributed to the hot, jumpy, button-accordion-pumped dance music of this Caribbean coastal region. While the heaving button accordion provides an irresistible percussive drive and a sweet, honest melody, other traditional indigenous instruments—such as the gaita (a flute made from cane and turkey quills) and the cana de millo (a cane pipe blown like a saxophone)—add tensile rhythmic textures and subtle yet surprising melodic flourishes. Simultaneously, the caja (a tiny, hand-played drum) and guiro (scraper) zig-zag cross-rhythmically against alarmingly free bass lines, which roll, stutter, and echo in defiance of the other beats. The exuberant Spanish vocals tell universally understood stories of village heroes and historic events alongside biting, humorous social commentary and, perhaps most importantly, convincing expressions of love and celebration. The music on this distinctive, comprehensively annotated compilation is uniformly fiery and insinuates itself into your soul almost immediately. This is not music that is difficult to appreciate and savor on the first spin. In fact, it is virtually impossible not to move while listening to this breathtaking, wild-grooved musical documentary of Vallenata.

Todd Shanker

Flutes & Strings of the Andes ♪♪♪♪♡ (Music of the World, 1990, prod. Bob Haddad)

Peru
genre: Andean

Members of the Quechua and Aymara tribes of the Peruvian Andes.

It's common to hear Andean music transformed by new-age styling or enhanced by instruments and influences from other cultures. This, however, is the real thing—members of Andean tribes singing in their native languages and playing traditional instruments, including harp, charango (mandolin), and quena (bamboo flute). It's not an exhaustive ethnomusicological document, but rather a vivid snapshot of a vibrant culture.

Kerry Dexter

Forró: Music for Maids and Taxi Drivers ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1989, prod. Ze da Flauta, Ben Mandelson, Gerald Seligman)

Brazil
genre: Forró

Toinho Dé Alagoas; Duda Da Passira; José Orlando; Heleno Dos Oito Baixos. (Are all artists from Brazil.)

Forró is the music of the rugged Nordestino people of Brazil's arid northeast. Gritty, hyperactive, and dance-oriented, forró is played by small ensembles and fueled mercilessly by manic button accordion, giving it a sound that's a little bit like zydeco, South African jive, or Mexican polka. On the surface, forró embodies the same working-class spirit of, say, rockabilly or honky-tonk country music, with songs typically involving love, sex, or simple moralizing, with an emphasis on the concerns and tribulations of farmers and common people. When the disc's producer told a Brazilian friend that he was compiling a forró record, the shocked friend replied, "Forró! You're kidding, that's what maids listen to, what taxi drivers listen to!" Indeed, forró is the kind of simple music that provides release, a music made for those who need to unwind and dance after a weeks' hard work. Yet to pass it off as "party music" would be to sell it short, for forró songs also serve as connections to Nordestino history and culture. One such tie is provided by the booklets of folk poetry sold around the northeast, containing political commentary, stories of folk heroes, and local fairy tales, from which forró musicians often cull ideas or lyrics. The compilation covers four of forró's more vigorous practitioners. Notable tracks include two cuts by Duda—the peculiarly African "De Pernambuco Ao Maranhão" and the white-hot "Casa De Tauba"—as well as a raw instrumental by Heleno, rudely entitled "Entra E Sai (In and Out)." Once again, Rounder has put great care into the overall package, with invigorating music, superb liner notes composed by Gerald Seligman, and a charming woodcut on the cover by Nordestino artist Marcelo Soares.

Jeffrey Muhr

Kingdom of the Sun: Peru's Inca Heritage ♪♪♪♪ (Elektra/Nonesuch, 1969/1988, prod. David Lewiston)

Peru
genre: Huayno

Artists not identified. (All artists are from Peru.)

The spectrum of musical emotion is nowhere more apparent than in the huayno songs of the Andes. These waltz-like dances have lively tempos and energetic tunes that are somehow melancholy and joyful at the same time. Kingdom of the Sun, one of the earlier releases of rural Inca music to appear on a non-academic label, contains several of these delightfully wistful huaynos, as well as a variety of other music made in the mountain villages of Peru. Recorded in the highland towns of Ayacucho, Chuschi, and Paucartambo by journeyman musicologist David Lewiston in 1968, albums like this one opened the ears of many a budding world-music listener. It documents a body of traditional music that developed in the ancient Inca empire and has come to incorporate some instruments and musical forms of Spanish colonial culture, yet still retains a uniquely Incan purity of expression. Featured are solo and ensemble recordings, with instruments including Andean harps, bamboo flutes called quena, charango mandolins, and the well-known panpipes called siku. All of the tracks, made at village festivals or by street musicians, exert a tremendous pull on the listener with their lack of pretense and deeply felt authenticity. For example, the poignant "Flute Solo from Apurimac," played by a blind beggar, and the mysterious flute duet "Mauca Zapotoyke (Old Shoes)" convey directly the spirit of an era when no distinction between musical performance and immediate emotional expression seemed to exist. While this album sticks to the "purer" styles of Peruvian mountain music, the growth of the music as a commercial form can be heard on CDs such as Peru: Huayno Music, Vol. I (1949–1989), Peru: Huayno Music, Vol. II: The Discos Smith Recordings, and Music of Peru: From the Mountains to the Sea (all reviewed below). Kingdom of the Sun's CD reissue also includes four tracks from Fiestas of Peru, collected by Lewiston during the same field-recording session.

Jeffrey Muhr

Peru: Huayno Music, Vol. I (1949–1989) ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1989, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz)
Peru: Huayno Music, Vol. II: The Discos Smith Recordings ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1991, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz)
Music of Peru: From the Mountains to the Sea ♪♪♪½ (Arhoolie, 1996, compilation prod. Chris Strachwitz)

Peru
genre: Huayno

La Pallasquinita; Conjunto Los Chankas Apurimac; Julia Illanes; Juan Rosales; Conjunto Los Luceros Del Cuzco. (All artists are from Peru.)

Huayno singers are the Peruvian equivalent of Appalachian "hillbillies." They sing in Spanish or Native Quechua about the beauty of their country, their latest romance, or local politics. The instrumentation is a mix of the Spanish Colonial with the Incan, in which violins, trumpets, and flutes can be heard alongside Andean harp, pan-pipes, and charango (Andean mandolin). The melody is distinctly Peruvian, with a rhythm stressing the first beat followed by two short beats. On a visit to Peru, Arhoolie's label head rescued master tapes of 500 such tunes from the 1960s and '70s just before their previous owner taped over them. The tapes' engineer had recorded the latest trends in Lima, using excellent equipment and an ear for original sounds; the cream of this work is collected on these three volumes.

David Poole

The Rough Guide to the Music of Brazil ♪♪♪♪½ (Rough Guide/World Music Network, 1998, compilation prod. Phil Stanton, Sandra Alayon-Stanton)

Brazil
genre: MPB (Brazilian Popular Music), samba, bossa nova, axe, regional

Ivan Lins; Dominguinhos; Ze Paulo; Adil Tiscatti; Rita Ribeiro; Marlui Miranda; Uakti; Paulo Freire; Dinho Nascimento; Muzenza; Gilberto Monteiro; Renato Braz; Tobias do Vai-Vai; Leny Andrade; Guinga; Rosa Passos; Papete; Cristaldo Souza; Pena Branca & Xavantinho; Joel Nascimento; Radames Gnattali. (All artists are from Brazil.)

The Rough Guides have always prided themselves on being the travel guides of roads less traveled. And their accompanying CDs fill the tall orders of demanding musical tourists. This disc makes a leisurely expedition from the north of Brazil to the south, with an uncanny knack for delving straight to the roots of each regional genre. Many selections are acoustic; all thankfully exclude the brash keyboards that choke much of the music produced for Brazil's internal consumption. The artist selection is intelligent, refusing to sell out to fads or to rest on the laurels of the country's brightest stars. Samba is well represented, with tight, uptempo numbers from Ivan Lins, Rosa Passos, and Guinga, culminating in a dazzling samba-enredo (carnival theme song) from Manguiera, Rio's most popular samba school. Of the Bahian tracks, by far the most outstanding is Muzenza's slamming rap 'n' percussion rendition of Jorge Ben Jor's "Charles Anjo 45." The insert provides comprehensive liner notes and mini-biographies of all of the contributors, as well as photographs of many of the albums from which the tracks were gleaned—overall a discerning choice for those seeking an astute overview of Brazilian music.

Mara Weiss and Nego Beto

The Soul of Black Peru ♪♪♪♪♪ (Luaka Bop, 1995, compilation prod. David Byrne, Yale Evelev)

Peru
genre: Afro-Peruvian pop

Susana Baca; Manuel Donayre; Cecilia Barraza; Lucia Compos; Roberto Rivas & el Conjunto Gente Morena; Eva Ayllon;

Abelardo Vasquez & Cumanana; Chabuca Granda; Peru Negro; Nicomedes Santa Cruz; David Byrne (USA). (All artists are from Peru except where otherwise noted.)

This is the compilation that introduced Afro-Peruvian music to the rest of the world—and, to an extent, to Peru, where the music of black Peruvians is still looked upon with suspicion, not unlike the way white Americans viewed "race" records in the 1920s and rock 'n' roll in the '50s. The main attractions here are Susana Baca, who has gone on to become an internationally acclaimed world-music diva as a result of this album; and Peru Negro, whose two percussion-driven tracks brim over with uncontainable energy. The Afro-Peruvians have an arsenal of unique rhythm instruments, including the cajón, a large wooden box that the player sits upon and pounds with both hands, and the cajita, a small wooden box that is played by opening and shutting the lid (different tones can be obtained by placing the hands around or under the box). The Afro-Peruvian population is not very large, but they produce a vital music that is making large waves in the world community.

j. poet

The Story of Tango ♪♪♪♪ (Hemisphere, 1997, compilation prod. Roli Hernandez, Gerald Seligman)

Argentina
genre: Tango

Jose Basso; Sexteto Mayor; Hector Varela; Anibal Troilo; Raul Garrelo; Osvaldo Pugliese; Carlos Gardel; Mariano Mores; Francisco Canaro; Florindo Sassone. (All artists are from Argentina.)

Tango may be the least "world music"–like of world musics, especially if you're a Westerner who grew up watching Bugs Bunny cartoons, which frequently utilize the genre's popular hits to great parodic effect. With its roots in the classical tradition, tango's blatant sensuousness is still shocking to modern ears, and, as advertised, this album is as good a place as any to start exploring the genre. You'll recognize melodies aplenty here, from pianist Jose Basso's version of "La Cumparsita" (probably the most famous work in the tango canon), to Francisco Varela's sweeping, beautiful arrangement of "De Vuella Y Media," to the Sexteto Mayor orchestra's brooding rendition of Astor Piazzolla's classic "Adios Nonino." Though the pivotal Piazzolla himself doesn't make an appearance here, the artists included more than make up for his absence, with a couple of scratchy, vocal-led 1930s cuts by the legendary Carlos Gardel spicing the otherwise cleanly recorded, up-to-date proceedings. As fun as a Bugs Bunny cartoon, and way more seductive.

Michaelangelo Matos

The World's Musical Traditions 5: Bandoneón Pure: Dances of Uruguay ♪♪♪♪ (Smithsonian, 1993, prod. Tiago de Oliveira Pinto)

Uruguay
genre: Tango, milonga, ranchera, polca, vals

René Marino Rivero (Uruguay).

Bandoneón Pure, the second CD in a special series from the Smithsonian Institution (see the review of Bunggridj-bunggridj on page 867 for the series' convoluted history), compiles 24 performances for bandoneón, a type of button accordion, by virtuoso René Marino Rivero. With its classy slip-case format, exhaustive 80-page booklet, and wonderfully performed music, this is a great example of what a world-music release can be. Rivero chooses to present his performances in a simple way without recording embellishments, hence the CD's title. His repertoire consists of several dance styles as they are traditionally played in Uruguay, including the tango, ranchera, milonga, foxtrot, and waltz. But his masterful, intricate technique elevates the music far beyond ordinary dance accompaniment. The consistent beauty of the music makes picking standouts difficult, but one might take a stab at it by selecting a tune like "Corazón de Oro," a miniature vals oriental (a popular pre-tango dance style) by F. R. Canaro in which Rivero varies the tempo, rhythms, and dynamics with subtlety, and closes with an elegant melodic verse graced with touches of arpeggio. Listening to "Milonga que peina canas," on the other hand, is like watching leaves blow in a dust devil; here Rivero throws melodic twists over a Gordian knot of rhythmic variation in the bass. The booklet, written by Maria Dunkel, is remarkably meticulous; an accordion fanatic might well purchase this disc for the text alone, which details, in a Uruguayan context, bandoneón history, construction, playing technique, and song interpretation—complete with illustrations, footnotes, a bibliography, and an appendix! Though quite daunting to the casual listener, it's still fun to browse, if only to glance at the archival photos or to notice an interesting connection: the transcription of a passage from the tune "El Choclo" was made by Argentinean bandoneón and tango giant Astor Piazzolla.

Jeffrey Muhr

INTERNATIONAL

Afro-Latino ♪♪♪♪♪ (Putumayo World Music, 1998, compilation prod. Dan Storper)

Senegal, Cape Verde, Congo, Angola, Cuba, Peru genre: Son, mambo, salsa

904 compilation albums: international

Tam-Tam 2000 (Senegal/Cape Verde); Ricardo Lemvo (Congo); Africando (Senegal); Orchestre Baobab de Dakar (Senegal); Sam Mangwana (Congo/Angola); Papi Oviedo (Cuba); Julian Avalos and Afro-Andes (Peru); Cuarteto Oriente (Cuba); 4 Etoiles (Congo); Ruy Mingas (Angola); Vieja Trova Santiaguera (Cuba); Conjunto Cespedes (Cuba).

Although nothing will ever induce me to love Putumayo's cover illustrations—which depict an icky PC multiculti la-la land that could make a faith-healer retch—their albums are getting better and better, and Afro-Latino, an incredibly rich collection of 12 Cuban-based tracks performed by a cast of top-flight African, South American, and Cuban musicians, is their best to date. The album's concept—an exploration of the give-and-take between the Congo and its slave-descendants in Cuba—is smart and beautifully executed, with an intelligently sequenced selection of grooves that get under your skin and stay there. Ricardo Lemvo & Makina Loca's "Mambo Yo Yo," Orchestre Baobab's "El Son de Llama," and Cuarteto Oriente's "Mueve la Cintura Mulata" establish deep, relaxed, powerful rhythms and then float gorgeous, incremental, sometimes-jarring embellishments atop them for four, six, eight minutes at a time. Every song is unhurried, and most are instantly classic: if these aren't the definitive renditions of traditional songs like "Aideu" and "El Son de Llama," they're close enough that you won't care. Last word goes to the liner notes' Charlie Palmieri quote: "If you can't dance to this, you died last week." Amen.

Michaelangelo Matos

Anthology of Chant ♪♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1995, prod. various)

International
genre: Worldwide chant

Saad Ullah Khan (India); the Madrigal Choir of the Munich Academy of Music (Germany); H.Hafiz Hüseyin Erek; H.Hafiz Kâni Karaca; the Haissmavourk Choir (Armenia); the Students' Choir and Students' Chamber Choir Utrecht (Holland); the Augsburg Ensemble for Early Music (Germany); Perry Silverbird (USA); Monks of the Dip Tse Chok Ling Monastery of Dharmasala (Tibet/India); David Hudson (Australia); David Hykes; Timothy Hill; Karineh Avetissian (Armenia); Oxford Camerata and Jeremy Summerly (England); Perry Silverbird & Steve Roach (USA); Omar Faruk Tekbilek & Brian Keane (Turkey/USA).

Thousands of years before the push-button atmospherics of the synthesizer, the ethereal arrangements of chant were evoking the infinite. Its phenomenal recent popularity stems from the way it simultaneously gives us a sense of something beyond ourselves, and of a capability within ourselves. This compilation also gives us a sense of each other, branching beyond the European world from which chant has charted most to recognize the reverent voices of Aboriginal Australia, Native America, Tibet, India, and Islam as well as Germany, Armenia, and France. Divorced from the utilitarian yet inspired purpose of the traditional versions, Western neo-chanter David Hykes's entry sounds artificial and slight despite its 12-minute length. But otherwise, bravura performances make this a collection not of background noise but of compelling foreground music, and insightful selection of a cohesive spectrum of song makes this not a skim, but a complete work in its own right.

Adam McGovern

Anthology of World Music, Vols. 1–18 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1998–99, reissue prod. Scott Billington)

India, China, Iran, Laos, Morocco, Liberia, Rwanda, Ivory Coast, Vietnam, Cameroon, Tibet, Albania genre: Raga, tala, alaap, dhamar, khyal, thamri, ibitaramo, amahamba, imbyino, ngoma drums, ta, mokombi, pi phat, pinpeat, khene, loi tuang, nha nhac, dai nhac, nieu noi, tolba, adhan, tehlil, tejwid, derdeba, jedba, al-milhun, Buddhist chant, kaba, çam dance

Diverse artists and ensembles from many countries, over many volumes.

The reissue of the Anthology of Traditional Music of the World is a watershed event in the field of world music. Consisting of 50 albums, the Anthology was Alain Daniélou's visionary attempt to document musical ways of life across a broad sweep of cultures, and make available for study a wealth of non-Western music. The Anthology was originally released between 1968 and 1987 in three series—A Musical Anthology of the Orient, An Anthology of North Indian Music, and An Anthology of African Music—with the help of UNESCO and the International Institute for Comparative Music Studies and Documentation in Berlin, Germany (an organization founded by Daniélou himself). Until Rounder began reissuing the series in 1998 under the current title listed above, the albums were available in the U.S. only as imports.

Born in 1907 in Paris, France, Daniélou became known for his writings on Indian religion and culture, as well as pathbreaking efforts in world music and controversial works on music theory. A talented musician, he had learned piano, vocal technique, and composition in his teens, and would later study the stringed veena for six years while a resident of India. Obtaining an early portable tape recorder around the late 1950s, Daniélou traveled through many Asian countries searching out traditional music. After his return to Europe, he created his Institute in Berlin with the aim of promoting the understanding of traditional musics in the West. The first volume of the Anthology series was released in 1968 on the Bärenreiter Musicaphon label; when Daniélou left the organization the series was carried on by Ivan Vandor and Paul Collaer through 1987.

Daniélou's study of musical forms led him to develop a complex, metaphysical theory of the interaction of musical intervals on which he elaborated in works such as Introduction to the Study of Musical Scales (1943) and Musical Semantics (1967). In the first of these books, reissued as Music and the Power of Sound (Inner Traditions, 1995), he carried out a detailed analysis of the scales and systems of the Chinese, Indians, and Greeks and compared them to the European "equal temperament" scale, ultimately making an argument for dividing the octave into 53 "microtonal" intervals. In the service of this conception he enlisted the help of instrument makers such as the famed Maurice Martenot, who had created a "tunable electronic keyboard" for him in 1936, and Stephan Kudelski, who created an instrument in 1979 that can sound 52 precise intervals per octave.

A converted Hindu who lived in India for nearly 30 years, Daniélou took a broad, ecological view of human civilization that stressed continuity, harmony, and mutual respect between cultures, a view that informed both his recordings and writings. By the time he died in 1994, he had written and translated over 30 books on various topics; published several series of traditional music recordings; and served with a host of academic, cultural, and musical organizations in Europe and Asia.

Rounder has so far rereleased 18 volumes of the Anthology, with attractive new graphics and careful digital remastering of the original music, much of which was recorded in the field for the series. In a few cases, tracks that could not be fit onto the LPs have been added back. The original liner notes, which often reflected Daniélou's abiding interest in musical scales, have also been reproduced. With its rerelease, the Anthology of World Music, which has always been a primary resource for traditional music, can reach a new generation of listeners while playing a small part in slowing the decline of cultural diversity in the face of rampant Westernization. The available volumes at this time are: North Indian Classical Music, Vols. 1–4; Africa: Music from Rwanda; Africa: The Dan; Africa: The Ba-Benzele Pygmies; The Music of Laos; Iran, Vols. 1–2; The Music of Vietnam, Vols. 1–2; The Music of Islam and Sufism in Morocco; China; The Music of Tibetan Buddhism, Vols. 1–3; and Albania.

Jeffrey Muhr

The Big Bang: In the Beginning Was the Drum ♪♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1994, compilation prod. Angel Romero)

International
genre: World music

Tumuenua Dance Group (Cook Islands); Giovanni Hidalgo (Puerto Rico); Mino Cinelu & George Jinda (Martinique & Hungary); Suwa-Daiko Hozonkai (Japan); Mustapha Tettey Addy (Ghana); Glen Velez (USA); Terry Bozzio (USA); Mickey Hart (USA); Zakir Hussain & U.K. Sivaraman (India); Nurudafina Pili Abena (USA); Tommy Hayes (Ireland); Gasper Lawal (Nigeria); Reinhard Flatischler & Samul Nori (Germany & Korea); Funhouse (USA); Bernie Krause (USA); Baka Forest People (Congo); Fatala (Guinea); Dudu Tucci (Brazil); Michael Shrieve (USA); the Voodoo Gang (Cameroon); Sekehe Gong Windu Karya Putpa (Bali); Carl Palmer (Great Britain); Airto Moreira (Brazil); Carlos "Patato" Valdés (Cuba); Juan Mari Beltran & Joxan Goikoetxea (Spain); Stella Rambisai Chiweshe (Zimbabwe); Avo Chakhlasyan (Armenia); Ming-Chun Puppet Troupe (Taiwan); Misri Khan (Pakistan); Babatunde Olatunji (Nigeria); Tamborito Del Norte (Panama); Karnataka College of Percussion & Dr. Raghavendra (India); Farafina (Burkina Faso); Jorge Reyes (Mexico); Amampondo (South Africa); Orchestra Of Chinese Central Music College (China); Ladji Camara (Guinea); LCO Soldier's Drum (Lac Court Oreilles Reservation, USA); Jack DeJohnette (USA); Hossain Tehrani (Iraq); Malang & Mohammad Akram Rohnawaz (Afghanistan).

Three discs-full of varying styles of percussive rhythms, combined with an informative booklet of short summaries of the music heard, sounds like an awful lot of information to digest. There are so many different kinds of meters, rhythms, and settings within which to experiment and play with time that the mind boggles. But that's why this collection is so valuable; the folks at ellipsis specialize in taking a vast field and sampling it for a primer that's fun to listen to. They still don't cover every rhythmic possibility, but with all this work that's beside the point and it is the point—the styles presented here range from jazz to rock to gamelan and beyond.

Garaud MacTaggart

Big Noise (A Mambo Inn Compilation) ♪♪♪♪½ (Hannibal, 1995, compilation prod. Gerry Lyseight)
Big Noise 2 (A Mambo Inn Compilation) ♪♪♪♪½ (Hannibal, 1997, compilation prod. Gerry Lyseight)

International
genre: World dance music

Big Noise*: Numerous artists including: Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan (Pakistan); Khaled (Algeria); Sweet Talks (Ghana); Tchando (Guinea-Bissau); Mambomania (France); Andy Montañez (Puerto Rico); Airto Moreira (Brazil); Kanda Bongo Man (Zaire); Ramsey Lewis (USA); Luther Barnes & the Red Budd Gospel Choir (USA). Big Noise 2: Numerous artists including: Timbalada (Brazil); Gal Costa & Caetano Veloso (Brazil); Baaba Maal (Senegal); Dorothy Masuka (Zimbabwe/South Africa); Hamid Baroudi (Algeria/Germany); Jephte Guillaume (Haiti/USA); Africando (Senegal/Cuba/Puerto Rico/USA); Jazz Jamaica (UK); iCubanismo! (Cuba); krosfyah (Barbados); Israel "Cachao" Lopez (Cuba).

Big Noise is one hot worldbeat dance album, packed, like the English club in Brixton that inspired it, with irresistible, joyous tracks—here ranging from a magnificently mambo-fied 1991 remix of Pakistani qawwali legend Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan by UK dancefloor bhangra master Bally Sagoo, to the infectious groove of Airto and friends on "Samba de Flora." Khaled, Kanda Bongo Man, and Andy Montañez have never sounded more seductive. A personal favorite is the unstoppable "Mango Mango Mangue" by France's leading mambo practitioners, Mamboma-nia. This alternately soaring and sizzling number from the pen of Francisco Fellove—cheekily interpolated here with "Take the 'A' Train"—originally found fame in 1962 as a hit for salsa queen Celia Cruz. Big Noise 2 manages to match its predecessor for sheer excitement and energy, thanks to impeccable selections and superior sequencing. From the samba-reggae and straight-ahead bossa nova of Brazilian openers Timbalada and Gal Costa & Caetano Veloso respectively, through Senegalese superstar Baaba Maal's funky reggae-like yele and the distinctive marabi of Zimbabwe's Dorothy Masuka and beyond, the pace and the fun never let up. The cross-pollination that characterized the Mambo Inn philosophy is exemplified by "African Soul" from Algeria's Hamid Baroudi, former member of Germany's world-fusion band Die Dissidenten. Here Baroudi melds Arabic trance music with an African dance beat to great effect. New York–based Jephte Guillaume's slinky "Lakou-A" blends music of his native Haiti with Nuyorican house rhythms, while UK-based Jazz Jamaica's terrific "skazz" rendition of Duke Ellington's "Caravan" is listed, appropriately enough, as "Skaravan." Like the best compilations, this one leaves the listener gasping for more, and poring over the sleeve notes trying to figure out where else this stuff can be found.

John C. Falstaff

B'ismillah ♪♪♪♪♪ (Sounds True, 1997, prod. Joel Davis, Tami Simon) Hamdulillah ♪♪♪♪½ (Sounds True, 1998, prod. Joel Davis, Tami Simon)

Bosnia-Herzegovina, Syria, Morocco, Egypt, Pakistan, Spain, India, Azerbaijan, France, Uzbekistan, Iraq, Java, Iran, Konya (Turkey)
genre: Sacred world music

B'ismillah: Radio and Television Symphony Orchestra (Bosnia-Herzegovina); Hamza Shakour and the Al Kindi Ensemble (Syria); Al-Iman Al-Busiri Association (Morocco); Tagmout of Zagora (Morocco); Sheikh Ahmed Barrayn (Egypt); Mehr Ali and Sher Ali (Pakistan); Said Chraibi (Morocco); Diego de Los Santos (Spain); Ahaidous (Morocco); Ustad Gulam Hassan Shagan (Pakistan). Hamdulillah: Ahmed Piro Ensemble with Amina Alaoui (Morocco); Taqtouqa Al Iabaliyya (Morocco); Ustad Zia Fariduddin Dagar (India); Begonia Olavide and Mudeiar Ensemble (Spain); Children of Abraham (Israel, France, & Morocco); Alim Qassimov (Azerbaijan); Francoise Atlan (France); Albert Bouhadanna (Morocco); Sidi Thami Mdaghri (Morocco); Monaiat Yulcheva (Uzbekistan); Hussayn Al Azanu with Ensemble Al Kindi (Syria); El Suspiro del Moro (Morocco & France); Wacana Budaya Gamelan (Java); Sharam Nazeri and Dastan Ensemble (Iran); The Whirling Dervishes of Konya (Konya, Turkey).

I can still remember when local Boulder, Colorado, radio personality Joel Davis told me he was going to make some field recordings at the Fes Festival of World Sacred Music in Morocco; man, was I green with envy. Until, at least, he gave me a copy of B'ismillah hot off the press a few months later; that original CD of ethnic spirituals blew me away with an unparalleled in-your-face grittiness that no Western chant album ever engendered. My mind melted as my soul soared on whirling dervish dance rhythms until my aesthetic appetite cried out for more. It was the first compilation of its kind. Luckily, many listeners shared my passion for this music; so, a year and many thousands of miles later, we can all now savor Joel's latest triumph, the joyful Hamdulillah (roughly translated from the Arabic as "Oh, you make noise!"), a more elegant but still stirring double-disc compilation of Arabian, Sufi, Hindu, Sephardic Jewish, and other exotic cultural devotionals; mystical texts accompanied by music; and enticing instrumentals. From Sharam Nazeri's Iranian spiritual songs, to dizzyingly delightful Javanese gamelan music, to Moorish Muslim melodies dating back to medieval Andalusia, there is a breathtaking array of non-stop spiritual celebration that imbues the listener with an overwhelming feeling of ecstatic universality. The terrific Whirling Dervishes of Konya—a group of 26 musicians, singers, and dancers of Turkey's Mevlevi sect—close this exceptional anthology with a reading from the Qur'an, reminding us of the literally divine power of music.

PJ Birosik

Bliss ♪♪♪♪½ (RealWorld, 1998, prod. various)

International
genre: World music, ambient, ethno-techno

Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan (Pakistan); Peter Gabriel (England); Sarmila Roy (India); the Grid (England); Ayub Ogada (Kenya); Jam Nation (England); the Tsinandali Choir (Georgia); Sheila Chandra (India/England); Afro Celt Sound System (International); U. Srinivas (India) & Michael Brook (Canada); the Guo Brothers & Shung Tian (China); Iarla Ó Lionáird (Ireland).

It was RealWorld Records founder Peter Gabriel who first exposed much of the Western world to phenomenal talents like Pakistani qawwali legend Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan and Senegalese superstar Youssou N'Dour back in 1988 with his outstanding fusion recording, Passion. So it seems only natural that 10 years later, RealWorld would release a compilation that ties together songs by artists from a variety of cultures, pointing out the inherent similarity in humanity's seemingly disparate musical traditions. Fused seamlessly by Russell Kearney, 13 mesmerizing tracks are connected with the same sort of ambient soundscapes that made Passion such a groundbreaking conceptual piece. Opening, appropriately enough, with songs by Khan and Gabriel himself, the album is a transcendent journey into the hypnotic power of music, with spellbinding ambient/techno tracks like the Grid's "Angel Tech" blended beautifully with traditional tunes like Ayub Ogada's "Kothbiro" to create entrancing global-village chill-out music. The fusion of musical traditions has long seemed the future of pop music; leave it to Peter Gabriel and RealWorld to lead the way.

Bret Love

Brave Hearts ♪♪♪♪♪ (Narada, 1998, compilation prod. Michael Sullivan)

International
genre: Celtic

Blair Douglas (Scotland); Ashley MacIsaac (Canada); Mary Jane Lamond (Canada); Karen Matheson (Scotland); Leahy (Canada); Anna Murray (Scotland); Tannas (Scotland); Capercaillie (Scotland); Old Blind Dogs (Scotland); Alisdair Fraser (Scotland); Dougie MacLean (Scotland).

Ireland is usually the first country that comes to mind when one speaks of Celtic music. As the artists on this disc make clear, Scotland has a vibrant contemporary/traditionalist music community of its own, infused by contributions from the Scots who took the music to the Atlantic coast of Canada. From Blair Douglas's spin on the Scots parade march "Nelson Mandela's Welcome to the City of Glasgow" through Dougie MacLean's thoughtful presentation of "Auld Lang Syne" (itself an example of new traditionalist music when Robert Burns first wrote it), this is an intriguing and lively collection. It's a fine survey of current Scots music by artists of high quality, a good blend of musicians well known worldwide and regionally famous.

Kerry Dexter

Bringing It All Back Home ♪♪♪♪♪ (BBC, 1991, compilation prod. Bruce Talbot, Dónal Lunny)

England, Ireland, USA genre: Irish folk roots

Dónal Lunny (Ireland); Dolores Keane (Ireland); Rita and Sara Keane (Ireland); the Lee Valley String Band (Ireland); Mick Moloney (Ireland/USA); Jimmy Keane (Ireland/USA); Robbie O'Connell (Ireland/USA); Philip Chevron (Ireland); the Hughes Band (Ireland); the Everly Brothers (USA); Hothouse Flowers (Ireland); De Dannan (Ireland); Emmylou Harris (USA); Mary Black (Ireland); Paul Brady (Ireland/England); Sharon Shannon (Ireland); Mary Custy (Ireland); Eoin O'Neill (Ireland); Luka Bloom (Ireland/USA); Peadar Ó Riada and Cór Cúil Aodh (Ireland); Máire Ní Chathasaigh (Ireland); Noirin Ní Riain and the Monks of Glenstall Abbey (Ireland); Micheál Ó Súilleabháin and the Irish Chamber Orchestra (Ireland); Elvis Costello (England); Mary Coughlan (Ireland); Davy Spillane (Ireland); An Emotional Fish (Ireland); Ricky Skaggs (USA); Paddy Glackin (Ireland); Mark O'Connor (USA); Richard Thompson (England); Sonny Condell (Ireland); Seamas Glackin (Ireland); Kevin Glackin (Ireland); Catherine Ennis (Ireland); Liam O'Flynn (Ireland); Pierce Turner (Ireland/USA); Roger Sherlock (Ireland/England); Maura O'Connell (Ireland/USA); the Waterboys (Ireland); the Voice Squad (Ireland).

This two-CD set contains 37 performances heard in the BBC TV series of same name. Documenting the travels of Irish music in diaspora, that program sought to bring together classical, rock, country, and traditional folk artists, illustrating the power of the Celtic muse to bridge oceans and influence cultures. The list of musicians recruited for the project is an impressive one and the performances are equally so. A number of artists in this set were born in Ireland but left for the U.S. or England to pursue careers; this gives an added authenticity to songs detailing the breaking apart of families and a longing for the home country such as "My Love Is in America" (by Dolores Keane), "Western Highway" (featuring Maura O'Connell), and "Kilkelly" (from Mick Moloney, Jimmy Keane, and Robbie O'Connell). Cross-cultural blends include trios featuring American country stars Emmylou Harris, Ricky Skaggs, and Mark O'Connor along with various Irish compatriots. By taking traditional Irish folk melodies and arranging them for larger ensembles, Peadar Ó Riada and Micheál Ó Súilleabháin bring a classical approach to ancient material, while rockers Hothouse Flowers and An Emotional Fish meld contemporary sounds with ancestral modes.

Garaud MacTaggart

Celtic Christmas ♪♪♪♪ (Windham Hill, 1995, prod. Mícheál Ó Domhnaill)

International
genre: Contemporary Celtic, Christmas, spiritual

Phil Cunningham and Manny Lunny; Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill; Mícheál Ó Domhnaill and Kevin Burke; Liam O'Flynn; Luka Bloom; Cromac Breatnach; Maighread Ní Dhomnaill and Dónal Lunny; Nightnoise; Carlos Nuñez; Altan; Johnny Cunningham; Loreena McKennitt; Jeff Johnson and Brian Dunning. (Artists are from Ireland or other countries of the Celtic diaspora.)

Central to Celtic music is its exploration of spirituality, and that's the not-too-heavy focus of this Christmas album—you won't find rowdy holiday drinking songs, but neither will you find much in the way of hymns or ancient chants. The music here is varied, though, from Scotsman Johnny Cunningham's "King Holly, King Oak" to Galician (Spanish Celtic) piper Carlos Nuñez's "Carol." Canadian harper and vocalist Loreena McKennitt's meditation on "Snow" may best represent the theme of this disc: a quiet celebration of the Celtic spirit of winter. (As of this writing, three subsequent volumes in the same vein are available.)

Kerry Dexter

Celtic Legacy ♪♪♪♪♪ (Narada, 1995, prod. various)

Ireland, Scotland, Spain, Canada, USA, Wales, Belgium, France genre: Celtic and Celtic diaspora

William Coulter (USA); Orion (Belgium); the Barra MacNeils (Canada); 4Yn Ybar (Wales); Natalie MacMaster (Canada); Milladoiro (Spain); the Poozies (Scotland); Máire Breatnach (Ireland); Maighread Ní Dhomnaill (Ireland); William Jackson (Scotland); John Whelan/Eileen Ivers (Ireland/USA); Altan (Ireland); Déanta (Ireland); Deiseal (Ireland); Dominig Bouchaud (France); Talitha MacKenzie (USA/Scotland).

The idea of journeys—life's journey through time; the leaving of and returning to a loved one; the longing for a homeland—is an emotional theme basic to Celtic music. Though this isn't strictly a thematic album, that emotion forms the connection among the musicians, who themselves come from or live in the Celtic homelands of Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Galicia, and Brittany as well as the areas of Celtic dispersion in Europe and North America. It's a tasteful collection well suited as an introduction to what contemporary Celtic artists are doing with the reflective aspect of their musical heritage.

Kerry Dexter

Celtic Lullaby ♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1996, compilation prod. Michel Shapiro)

Canada, Ireland, Isle of Man, New Zealand, Scotland, USA, Wales
genre: Celtic

Tommy Sands (Ireland); Plethyn (Wales); Jean Redpath (Scotland); Margie Butler (USA); Dafydd Iwan (Wales); Garry ÓBriain (Ireland); Pádraigin Ní Uallacháin (Ireland); Ann Mayo Muir (USA); Chris Norman (Nova Scotia); Parson's Hat (Ireland); Moira Craig (Scotland); Jill Rogoff (New Zealand); Alison Kinnaird (Scotland); Emma Christian (Isle of Man); Tudor Morgan (Wales); Margo Carruthers (Nova Scotia); Mac-talla (Scotland).

The lullaby is a song form common to almost every musical tradition on the planet. Lullabies represent a distinct and prolific body within the oral tradition of the Celtic world in particular. This is a beautifully evocative collection of mellow music performed by some of the world's finest exponents of the Celtic song and instrumental. Unlike similar compilations called "Celtic," this selection comes closest to representing the full range of its topic by surveying so many of the Celtic countries and so much of their diaspora. With over 60 minutes of wonderful music, this disc will lull any child to sleep, and, truth be told, worked pretty well on this adult as well.

Cliff McGann

Celtic Odyssey ♪♪♪♪♪ (Narada, 1993, compilation prod. Eric Lindert)

Ireland, Scotland
genre: Celtic

Northern Lights (USA); Orison (USA); Altan (Ireland); Alisdair Fraser/Paul Machlis (Scotland); Scartaglen (USA); John Whalen/Eileen Ivers (Ireland/USA); Moving Hearts (Ireland); Relativity (Ireland); Capercaillie (Scotland); Sileas (Scotland); Gerald Trimble (USA); Laurie Riley & Bob McNally (USA); Simon Wynberg (Scotland/Canada).

One of the constants of Celtic music is a sense of place—the green, misty windswept European lands where the music was born, and the similar places that Celts around the world have called home, from the mountains of North Carolina to the shores of Cape Breton Island. It's also a basic idea communicated by the songs on this compilation, most of them either traditional or composed in a style that draws on tradition.

Kerry Dexter

Celtic Spirit ♪♪♪♪ (Narada Media, 1996, executive prod. Michael Sullivan)

Ireland, France, Scotland, USA genre: Celtic, religious/spiritual

Connie Dover (USA); Aoife Ní Fhearraigh (Ireland); Aine Minogue (Ireland); the Anjali Quartet (USA); William Jackson (Scotland); Groupe Vocal Jef le Penven (France); William Coulter (USA); the Baltimore Consort (USA); Sheena Wellington (Scotland); Therese Schroeder-Sheker (USA).

The strength of this collection is that the artists take traditional spiritual songs in languages from within the Celtic tradition (Gaelic, Breton) and outside it (English, Latin), and perform them with instrumentation and styles embedded in that tradition. It's a side of Celtic culture and history not often explored by contemporary artists, and it's refreshingly handled here. The meditative tone is set with Connie Dover's opening arrangement of the Gregorian chant "Ubi Caritas," and continues throughout the selections, which evoke the mist-covered hills and the longing for home, as well as the search for understanding, at the heart of so much music in this genre. If your experience with Celtic music has been fighting, drinking, or political songs, or new-age interpretations of ancient melodies, you'll find this album fits none of those categories and will expand your knowledge of the interaction between old and new in Celtic tradition.

Kerry Dexter

Celtic Treasure: The Legacy of Turlough O'Carolan ♪♪♪♪ (Narada, 1996, executive prod. Michael Sullivan)

International
genre: Celtic, O'Carolan

Shelley Phillips; Orion; Déanta; Deiseal; Ann Heymann; Dordán; William Coulter; Séamus McGuire; Maíre Ní Chathasaigh and Chris Newman; Donna Long; Dominig Bouchaud and Cyrille Colas; El McMeen; John Whelan; Jerry O'Sullivan. (All artists are from Ireland or the Celtic Diaspora in Europe and the New World).

None of Turlough O'Carolan's compositions were written down during his lifetime. It is a testament to the power of his music that more than 200 of his tunes have survived three centuries, both in their original form as songs for the harp and as transcriptions for instruments from the hammered dulcimer to the guitar. Carolan took up the career of itinerant musician when he was blinded by smallpox at age 18. He began composing shortly thereafter when one of his hosts challenged him to start writing music to add to his less-than-spectacular playing skills. It was a wise challenge, and a wise acceptance. Carolan was able to blend the folk tunes of his youth with the classical ideas of the growing Baroque style in Europe (represented, for example, by Bach, Telemann, Corelli, and Vivaldi). Carolan's music seemed immediately accessible to all those who heard it, bridging the gap between simple songs of the street and complex melodies of the mansion. That is still true today and is one aspect of his work that attracts artists of the caliber heard on Celtic Treasure. This is a lively presentation of the music of Ireland's most important composer by a group of accomplished Celtic musicians who bring varied influences to the task.

Kerry Dexter

Dancing with the Dead ♪♪♪♪½ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1999, prod. various)

International
genre: World memorial music

Pastor Ediemae Layne (USA); the Eureka Brass Band (USA); the Tianjin Buddhist Music Ensemble (China); Asif Ali Khan (Pakistan); Los Nani (Cuba); Nasioi People of Papua New Guinea (Papua New Guinea); Janet Leuchter (USA); Los Camperos de Valles (Mexico); Antanosy & Mahafaly Peoples of Madagascar (Madagascar); Fong Naam (Thailand); the Lileh Choir of Dmanisi (Georgia); Sanjukta Sen (India); Koo Nimo & the Kumasi Ensemble Adadam Agofomma (Ghana); Gabriel Souza Carvalho (Brazil); Keith Mahone (Native America); Seka Gamelan Angklung (Bali); Central African Republic Bokoto Music (Central African Republic).

Death ain't what it used to be. The ravages of AIDS and the controversial ability of modern medicine to prolong life seemingly beyond reason have moved the West to confront death with less squeamishness and stigma than ever before. In this, the "developed" world is finally developing up to the cultural standards of the rest of the world, where the reality of death is incorporated into people's understanding of the processes of life, and departure from the living is celebrated as a graduation to the infinite. Consequently, the music collected on this fascinating and tasteful disc, while never seeming festive, always feels affirmative, replacing the dirges expected by Western (and Western-bred) ears. While at no time abandoning an air of gravity, these pieces don't convey a sense of tragedy but one of wonder. A Mardi Gras–style brass band sends the deceased off in style (significantly, the only geographically Western selections are from traditions influenced by Africa and Native America), and the delicate bell-like percussion of a Balinese gamelan ensemble is like a gentle rain upwards toward heaven. Death unifies us all, and this collection shows how connected we are in life, too: the choral updraft of melodious mourners in the Republic of Georgia could almost be mistaken for a spiritual from the other Georgia; a spoken/sung eulogy from a Southern Baptist church locates the exact half-way mark in the journey from West African griot storytelling to the urban legends of rap. The set's beautifully designed, digest-size hardcover companion book introduces the subject in an engaging and low-pressure way, while protecting your CD and providing the best antidote yet to the environmentally unfriendly jewel box and the alleged demise of album art. Mirroring the book's fascinating overview, the CD's music is insightfully sequenced and judiciously excerpted to avoid the archival overkill that can defeat the purpose of a survey and obscure the bigger picture. In the buoyant tones of this album you'll literally hear spirits being lofted to another plane—and won't feel nearly so earthbound yourself.

Adam McGovern

Dargason Music Sampler ♪♪♪½ (Dargason Music, 1996, compilation prod. Joemy Wilson)

International
genre: Celtic, world music

Kim Robertson; Joemy Wilson; John Bullard; Anisa Angarola; Miamon Miller; Valeriu Apan; Gremoli. (All artists are based in USA.)

Dargason Music is a small label founded several years ago by hammered dulcimer player Joemy Wilson and her husband Jon Harvey. At first they intended it just to be a vehicle for helping them answer requests for Wilson's music fostered by her active performing career. That became no insignificant task—Wilson's recordings of the complex music of 17th-century Irish harper Turlough O'Carolan, which she had transcribed for the hammered dulcimer, quickly became so well respected that they were sought after for the collection of the Irish National Archives and became staples on the playlists of many classical music stations. These developments allowed Wilson and Harvey to consider producing and distributing music by other artists, and in the beginning they focused mainly on Celtic-oriented musicians, like classical guitarist Anisa Angarola and world-renowned Celtic harpist and vocalist Kim Robertson. Later, they expanded to offer a group of holiday-music albums from different cultures, some with Wilson playing and some with the work of panflutist Valeriu Apan and violinist Miamon Miller. As the label has developed it has begun to venture in wider directions, with the music of John Bullard, who plays Bach on the five-string banjo, and Gremoli, a New Orleans–style jazz group. The individual tunes on this disc are all of high quality and stand well on their own. Taken as a whole they give an intriguing portrait of the musical tastes of the founders of this small but influential labor-of-love label.

Kerry Dexter

Ethno Punk: Around the World with Attitude ♪♪♪♪♪ (EMI Hemisphere/Metro Blue, 1996, compilation prod. Gerald Seligman)

Israel, Spain, Greece, Scotland, Sweden, France, Japan, Poland, USA/Ireland, Brazil, China genre: Unorthodox contemporary world music

Yehuda Poliker (Israel); Ciudad Jardin (Spain); Pyx Lax (Greece); Rock, Salt, & Nails (Scotland); Den Fule (Sweden); Mano Negra (France); Parsha Club (Japan); Raz, Dwa, Trzy (Poland); Mau Mau (Italy); Black 47 (Ireland/USA); Paralamas do Sucesso (Brazil); Ciu Jian (China); Shooglenifty (Scotland); Hedningarna (Sweden); Wilmer X (Sweden).

This collection gives the adventurous listener a good summary of the more avant-garde exponents of world/roots music. Some of the tracks, such as Black 47's Irish-rap tale of the band's history, "Rockin' the Bronx," and Mano Negra's rendition of the traditional Arab song "Sidi H'Bibi," which brings together Middle Eastern, French, and Latin American sounds, are forward-rushing multicultural fusions. Other selections, such as Den Fule's "Det Är Jag," Shooglenifty's "Waiting for Conrad," and Hedningarna's "Aivoton," are contemporary expressions of more specific ethnic/folk traditions. English translations of all song lyrics are included, but if you're up for the challenges and rewards of the unexpected, these artists are speaking your language already.

Ken Roseman

Faces of the Harp: Celtic & Contemporary ♪♪♪♪ (Narada, 1997, executive prod. Dan Harjung)

International genre: Harp, Celtic, contemporary

Dennis Doyle (USA/Ireland); Thomas Loefke (Germany); Kim Robertson (USA); Laurie Riley and Michael McBean (USA); Sileas (Scotland); Sylvia Woods (USA); Sedren (Greece/Brittany, France); Katie LaRaye Waldren and Candace Kreitlow (USA); Derek Bell (Ireland); Ani Williams (USA); Julia Haines; Northern Lights (USA/Holland/Ireland); Ann Heymann and Alison Kinnaird (USA/Scotland); Judith Pintar (USA); Riley Lee and Andy Riley (Australia/USA).

The harp is one of humankind's oldest instruments. It's also one of those that contemporary composers and players have the most fun taking in new directions. The majority of musicians represented here play the Celtic or folk harp, but draw on traditions and studies as diverse as African kora and Latin marimba, as well as the diversity of Celtic styles, to inform their compositional choices. This disc is both a good introduction to the current state of the Celtic harp and a compendium of unexpected melodic choices for those who enjoy contemporary instrumental music in general.

Kerry Dexter

Festival of Light ♪♪♪♪♪ (Island, 1996, compilation prod. Robert Dusjis, Bob Appel)

International
genre: Religious/spiritual

Marc Cohn; the Mels featuring Jon Leventhal; Flairck; Don Byron; the Covenant; Rebbe Soul; John McCutcheon; the Klezmatics; Masada String Trio; Alistut; Jane Siberry; Peter Himmelman & David Broza. (Artists are from USA, Canada, and Israel.)

This collection honors the Jewish holiday of Hanukkah by affording contemporary artists the freedom either to compose their own music on the ideas of the holiday or to reinterpret traditional songs. This results in a disc that is both contemporary and timeless, and allows the handing on of tradition to stand side-by-side with the exploration and creation of it. An outstanding example of the latter is Peter Himmelman and David Broza's "Lighting Up the World," and of the former, the Covenant's "Kiddush Le-Shabbat." This is a set that will appeal equally to those versed in and new to the music and culture from which it springs.

Kerry Dexter

Folk Roots Magazine Presents Roots: 20 Years of Essential Folk, Roots & World Music (Britain, Ireland and North America) ♪♪♪♪♪ (Nascente, 1999, prod. various)

Folk Roots Magazine Presents Routes: 20 Years of Essential Folk, Roots & World Music (Africa, Europe, Asia and the World) ♪♪♪♪♪ (Nascente, 1999, prod. various)

International
genre: International

Roots*: Ry Cooder (USA); Afro Celt Sound System (England); Nic Jones (England); the McGarrigles (Quebec, Canada); Billy Bragg (England); Peter Rowan (USA); Fernhill (Wales); Corey Harris (USA); the Mekons (England); Loudon Wainwright III (USA); the

Pogues (England); Spider John Koerner (USA); Eliza Carthy (England); Rory Block (USA); Kathryn Tickell & Rory McLeod (England); Robin & Linda Williams (USA); Alias Ron Kavana (England); Brave Combo (USA); Shooglenifty (Scotland); Richard Thompson (England); Ani DiFranco (USA); Elvis Costello (England); Taj Mahal (USA); Jumpleads (England); Kate Rusby (England); Guy Clark (USA); Tiger Moth (England); Cordelia's Dad (USA); Oysterband (England); Emmylou Harris (USA); Dick Gaughan (Scotland); Chris Smither (USA); June Tabor & Martin Simpson (England); Bruce Cockburn (Canada); Altan (Ireland); John Hammond (England); Brass Monkey (England); La Bottine Souriante (Quebec, Canada). Routes: Youssou N'Dour (Senegal); Cuarteto Patria (Cuba); Tarika (Madagascar); Re Niliu (Italy); Maryam Mursal (Somalia); Márta Sebestyén & Muzsikás (Hungary); Nenes featuring Ry Cooder (Okinawa/USA); Ali Farka Touré (Mali); Kepa, Zabaleta & Motriku (Basque Country); Abdel Aziz El Mubarak (Sudan); Filarfolket (Sweden); Dembo Konte & Kausu Kuyateh (Gambia/Senegal); Ali Akbar Khan & Asha Bhosle (India); Trans-Global Underground (England); Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens (South Africa); Buena Vista Social Club (Cuba); Baaba Maal & Mansour Seck (Senegal); Eleftheria Arvanitaki with Stavros Logarides (Greece); Garmarna (Sweden); Kanda Bongo Man (Congo); Bob Brozman & Ledward Kaapana (USA/Hawaii); Jali Musa Jawara (Guinée); Najma (England); 3 Mustaphas 3 (Szegerely); Hijas Del Sol (Equatorial Guinea); Euis Komariah & Yus Wiradiredja (Indonesia); Thomas Mapfumo (Zimbabwe); Los Camperos De Valles (Mexico); Les Negresses Vertes (France); Virunga (Kenya).

England's Folk Roots, America's Rhythm magazine, and the Web's RootsWorld are the Time, Newsweek, and U.S. News & World Report of world music, and this phenomenal, two-volume/four-disc set commemorates the first-named's 20th anniversary. The real phenomenon is that "fROOTS" has the inclination or, especially, the time, to stand still for a portrait—but this revelatory collection maintains the forward momentum of preserving traditions from the past and propelling them into the future that the magazine has pledged its existence to, and the portrait is of course not of the entity itself but of the myriad artists it has always bowed out of the picture to spotlight. Split between the extended family of Anglo musics in whose epicenter of England the magazine is headquartered, and the staggering remainder of the world over which fROOTS has spread its observation branches, this anthology, insightfully selected by fROOTS editor Ian Anderson (no, not that one), the kind of look-no-further crash course novice world-music adventurers dream of. You may, of course, have to look a bit far, since at this writing the collection is available only as an import—but an important one indeed, with a range that could be overwhelming but is merely breathtaking, and a sequence that could dizzy but merely awes. The menu is so full that Native America and Aboriginal Australia aren't as conspicuous by their absence as they might be; scout elsewhere in this book to fill those crucial gaps, but otherwise, fall in step behind the album-covers' mascot—an anonymous, determined man crossing the world seemingly on foot in search of its sonic wealth—pack an extra empty suitcase, and get rooting!

Adam McGovern

Folkstyles of Mexico and Colombia ♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1994, prod. Bob Haddad, Robert Browning)

Mexico, Colombia, USA
genre: Jarocho, bambuco, pastillo, corrido, ranchera

Los Pregoneros del Puerto (Mexico); Maria Olga Piñeros & Aires Colombianos (Colombia); Lydia Mendoza (USA).

This disc offers an interesting juxtaposition of artists and styles. Los Pregoneros del Puerto are from the Mexican state of Veracruz and play the jarocho style, which developed in that coastal area, influenced by strong regional ties to Spain and by the music brought to its shores by African slaves. Maria Olga Piñeros & Aires Colombianos are from the altiplano, the high plains of Colombia in South America, and formed in 1983 to perform the traditional love songs and dances of that region. Lydia Mendoza is an artist of almost legendary reputation along the Texas/Mexico border, not only for the quality of her singing and playing of the 12-string guitar, but also because when she began her solo career in the 1930s she was one of the earliest female singers to rise to prominence in the music of the frontera, as the border region is known. This somewhat unusual combination of musics on one disc works well and illuminates crosscurrents among the styles and musicians.

Kerry Dexter

Global Meditation ♪♪♪♪♪ (The Relaxation Company, compilation prod. Brooke Wentz)

International
genre: World music, meditative music, healing music

Numerous artists including: Anonymous 4 (USA); Master Musicians of Jajouka (Morocco); Kecak Ganda Sari (Bali); Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan (Pakistan); Bibayak Pygmies of Minvoul (Gabon); U. Srinivas (India); Shartse College of Ganden Monastery (Tibet); Soliman Gamil (Egypt); Farafina (Burkina Faso); Zakir Hussain (India); Gnawa Musicians of Marrakesh (Morocco); Glen Velez (USA); Milton Cardona (Cuba); Guo Brothers (China); Philip Boulding (Ireland); Kudsi Erguner & Suleyman Erguner (Turkey); Djivan Gasparyan (Armenia).

Meditational music has gotten a bad rap in the wake of the new-age phenomenon, but this fabulously diverse collection shows that contemplative reflection is a universal practice that goes much deeper than merely sitting in a lotus position and chanting a few "om"s. Although well worth purchasing in its boxed form, the set is broken down stylistically into four CDs, each of which is also available separately. Voices of the Spirit explores the many ways in which the human voice is used around the world, from Balinese monkey chants and the polyphonic singing of Gabonese Pygmies to Anonymous 4's glorious English Ladymass (another song form usually involving a cappella vocal polyphony, sung exclusively by females). Harmony and Interplay features a variety of impressive ensemble efforts, including the trance-like repetition of the Gnawa Musicians of Marrakesh's "Chabako," the serene gentility of mandolin virtuoso U. Srinivas's "Ghananayakam," and the rapturous crescendos of Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan's "Haq Ali Ali Haq." The Pulse of Life showcases master percussionists like Zakir Hussain, Glen Velez, and Milton Cardona, pointing out the transcendental healing powers of rhythm, while Music from the Heart is the most peaceful of the bunch, focusing primarily on meditative melodies designed to elevate the listener to a higher plane of consciousness. Whether you choose just one or two CDs or the entire inspired set, this is one compilation you'll want to share with your friends—though you may have trouble letting it out of your sight!

Bret Love

Global Voices ♪♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1998, compilation prod. Bob Haddad)

International
genre: World vocal music

Numerous artists including: Purna Das Baul (India); Seleshe Damessae (Ethiopia); the Garcia Brothers (Native America); Anatoli Kuular (Tuva); Dumisani Maraire (Zimbabwe); Ganden Monastery Monks (Tibet); Hassan Hakmoun (Morocco); the Sterling Jubilee Singers (USA); Folk Scat (Bulgaria); Tico da Costa (Brazil); Boukan Ginen (Haiti); the Dagar Brothers (India); Bayram Bilge Toker (Turkey); Ora Sittner (Yemen); Orlando "Puntilla" Rios and Nueva Generación (Cuba); Maria Olga Piñeras (Colombia); Karnataka College of Percussion (India); Zvonimir Croatian Choir (Croatia); SoVoSó (USA).

This fabulous three-CD box set collects songs from a variety of world-music traditions, all of which celebrate the awesome emotive power of the human voice. Divided into three categories—traditional songs, sacred songs, and contemporary vocal music—each disc is a remarkable journey of discovery. The traditional tracks are a delight, with Maria Olga Piñeras's simple Colombian folk-song standing in stark contrast to the Karnataka College of Percussion's dazzlingly complex konakkol (or spoken rhythms). The contemporary music is also exceptional, with a cappella groups like Folk Scat and SoVoSó showing the directions vocal music may be heading in the future. But perhaps best of all is the disc of sacred songs, which only reinforces the ancient, widely held belief that singing is the closest one can get to God. Whether it's the Zvonimir Croatian Choir's captivating harmonies or Hassan Hakmoun's riveting Moroccan meditations, this incredibly spiritual CD will take you higher than anything this side of Sly Stone. With 43 songs, nearly half of which were either previously unreleased or available only on hard-to-find labels, this outstanding "Vox Set" is a must-have for those enraptured by the sound of the human voice.

Bret Love

Gypsy Passion ♪♪♪♪½ (Narada, 1997, executive prod. Michael Sullivan)

International
genre: Flamenco, new flamenco, guitar

Oscar Lopez (Chile); Jesse Cook (Canada); Armik (USA); Lara & Reyes (Mexico/USA); Ottmar Liebert (Germany); Strunz & Farah (Costa Rica/Iran); Eric Tingstad (USA); Romero & Torea (USA); Govi (Germany/India); Bruce Becvar (USA); Miguel de la Bastide (Trinidad); Willie & Lobo (USA/Germany).

In flamenco puro, the ancient Gypsy music of Andalusia in southern Spain, the guitarist, the singer, and the dancer form the structure of the song, each playing a part as the drama unfolds. In "new flamenco," which has come out of the caverns to the stages, clubs, and streetcorners of the world, the guitarist must find other partners. For the artists on this disc, that has meant exploring different world musics and bending them to support the voice of flamenco; it has meant finding kinship in instruments far removed from the landscape of southern Spain; it has meant finding new ways to relate to dancers and other guitarists as the music evolves. These artists come from diverse backgrounds, which the listing of countries above only begins to suggest. Most have traveled the world to study and perform this art that fascinates them, and they have backgrounds ranging from traditional flamenco dance to American rock 'n' roll. It's not really necessary to know any of that, or anything about flamenco, to appreciate this album as a vigorous and fresh Latin-based instrumental collection, but for those who wish to delve, this disc is an excellent starting place for learning about the best of the ways this tradition is evolving.

Kerry Dexter

Harpestry ♪♪♪♪ (Imaginary Road, 1997, prod. Diana Stork, Dawn Atkinson)

International
genre: Harp, Latin, Celtic, contemporary, new-age

Rudiger Oppenheim (Germany); Maureen Brennan (USA); Ann Heyman (USA); Deborah Henson-Conant (USA); Michele Sell (USA); Janet Harbison (Scotland); Cynthia Mowrey (USA); Luis Felipe Gonzales (Venezuela); Geist (USA); Derek Bell (Ireland); Patrick Ball (USA); Andrea Piazza (Italy); Andreas Vollenweider (Switzerland).

In ancient times, the idea of the harp began when someone plucked the string of a hunting bow and liked the sound. From that grew different sizes, styles, strings, and playing arrangements over the centuries. Each of the artists on this disc was drawn to the magical and musical diversity of the instrument, and that's a theme the producers have chosen to emphasize by selecting work in many styles played on variations of the harp from the grand (the kind you usually see in the orchestra) to the Celtic (usually small and sometimes portable), as well as the Tyrolean harp, the Venezuelan version of the instrument, and the electro-harp.

Kerry Dexter

Harvest Song: Music from around the World Inspired by Working the Land ♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1995, compilation prod. Larry Blumenfeld, Jeffrey Charno)

International
genre: Harvest songs

Expresión (Peru); Lazaro Ros (Cuba); Ali Farka Touré (Mali); Shanghai National Music Orchestra (China); Fiddlers 5 (Scotland); Gnawa Musicians of Morocco (Morocco); Nico Saquito (Cuba); Mississippi John Hurt (USA); Efe Pygmies (Congo); Alison Kinnaird & Christine Primrose (Scotland); Pueblo Indians (USA); Pena Branca & Xavantinho (Brazil); Ona Hanako & Kamata Kansui (Japan); Dagarti Musicians (Ghana); Tsinandali Choir (Georgia).

This eclectic compilation of harvest songs was a smart idea. The exoticism of "world music" makes it easy to overlook the common ground—in both senses of the term—and functionality that folk traditions share, the oldest being prayer for a good harvest and gratitude if it is delivered. Most of the human race still works the land, so songs related to farming are utterly relevant to their everyday lives. Bluesman Mississippi John Hurt labored most of his life as a farm hand. As with many in this trade, Hurt's tenuous sustenance depended on the changeable forces of nature and the whims of a master, so when he sings "What will the harvest bring?" on "Blue Harvest Blues," although he sang for his amusement, the message is full of uncertainty. Harvest songs are falling into disuse as farming becomes increasingly mechanized and its practitioners work in solitude rather than as a group. Japanese farmers' thousand-year-old tradition of singing while scything grass was no doubt an uplifting pastime, but is now no more than a dimly remembered tradition. Thankfully this mesmerizing chant can be heard on "Akita Kusakira Uta" ("A Mowing Song of Akita"). Similarly, when the Efe Pygmies sing "Meli-e Estele-u Odu-Ene" ("The Forest That Was Producing Gold"), it is with nostalgia for the abundance of what used to be their Ituri rainforest. Harvest Song reminds us of the central role farming once played in all our lives. Recipes for hulled corn soup seem tangential, but overall the accompanying book of photos and information is superb.

David Poole

Her Song: Exotic Voices of Women from around the World ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1996, compilation prod. Bette Timm)

India, Ireland, Hungary, Norway, Israel, Czechoslovakia, USA
genre: World music

Ofra Haza (Israel); Najma (England); Talitha MacKenzie (USA); Flesh and Bone (USA); Pura Fé (Native America); Jai Uttal featuring Lakshmi Shankar (India); Kirsten Bråten Berg (Norway); Irén Lovász (Hungary); Joanne Shenandoah (Native America); Etti Ankri (Israel); Solas featuring Karan Casey (Ireland, USA); Nada Shakti (Czechoslovakia).

This compilation of female artists isn't too diverse, just too inconsistent. While Israeli star Ofra Haza and Indian chanteuse Najma deliver fine performances (culled from Shanachie albums that fans will already have), others simply don't cut it: the new-age approach of Native troubadour Joanne Shenandoah; the overly synthesized track with Indian singer Lakshmi Shankar, composer Jai Uttal, and late trumpeter Don Cherry; Pura Fé's Native American/scat hybrid. Still, Karan Casey shines, confirming her stature as a new Irish diva. And the idea of a truly "world" music comes into view with Talitha MacKenzie's Gaelic and Middle Eastern blend, as well as the Tibet-inspired chant of Czech singer Nada Shakti.

Bill Ellis

Holding Up Half the Sky: Voices of Celtic Women ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997, compilation prod. Edward Haber)

Ireland, Scotland, USA
genre: Celtic

Máire Ní Bhraonáin (County Donegal, Ireland); Cilla Fisher (Scotland); Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill (County Donegal, Ireland); Niamh Parsons (Ireland); Gay Woods (Ireland); Talitha MacKenzie (USA); Mary Black (Ireland); Dolores Keane (Ireland); Karan Casey (County Waterford, Ireland); Maura O'Connell (Ireland); Cathie Ryan (USA); Maighread Ní Dhomhnaill (Ireland); Cathy Jordan (Ireland); Sylvia Barnes (Scotland); Karen Matheson (Scotland).

Most of the recognized (and recorded) Celtic singers of the LP age were men, but as Irish and Scottish music went worldwide and the technology changed, the women got to rightly strut their stuff. Some of the most gorgeous voices of any style stem from the Celtic female tradition. Part of a series whose African, Asian, and reggae volumes are reviewed on pages 842, 856, and 914, respectively, Voices of Celtic Women is a who's who of many of this century's finest female vocalists in their field. Máire Ní Bhraonáin (a.k.a. Maire Brennan, Enya's sister) has been singing for almost three decades and is one of the most visible Irish voices today, both with Clannad and as a solo artist. Starting with the Fisher Family in 1965, Cilla Fisher continues to add her Scottish brogue successfully to Irish traditional lyrics. Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill, meanwhile, adds harmonium and clavinet to her voice (for over ten years now featured in Nightnoise, after a stint with seminal Irish group the Bothy Band and other illustrious résumé-builders). A student of Scottish Gaelic puirt-a-beal (instrumental music), Talitha MacKenzie uses her voice as the instrument; she was part of the experimental duo Mouth Music before going solo. In common with most of the women mentioned above, Mary Black and Dolores Keane are two artists carrying on the traditions of renowned Irish singing families. Likewise, Maighread Ní Dhomhnaill sings here alongside her sister Tríona; their father was famous song collector Aodh Ó Domhnaill, and aunt Neillí Ní Dhomhnaill had much to do with getting women singers to the forefront. The voice of Capercaillie, Karen Matheson sings Gaelic songs of the Scottish Highlands, and it runs in the family with her too, as her grandmother was a well-known singer from the Gaelic-speaking island of Barra in the Outer Hebrides. Bubbling over with folk songs, laments, epic tales, and new interpretations of tradition—not to mention many more fine vocalists than are even cited here—Voices of Celtic Women enables every one of these artists to be heard at her best. Always and forever, Celtic vocal music is an earthly treasure, rendered delightfully unearthly by the female voice.

Stacy Meyn

Holding Up Half the Sky: Women in Reggae: Roots Daughters ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1996, compilation prod. Randall Grass)

Jamaica, USA
genre: Roots reggae

Marcia Griffiths (Jamaica); Judy Mowatt (Jamaica); Althea and Donna (Jamaica); Rita Marley (Jamaica); Hortense Ellis (Jamaica); The I-Threes (Jamaica); Sister Carol (Jamaica); Barbara Paige (USA); Dhaima (USA); Marcia Aitken (Jamaica); Joy White (Jamaica); Nadine Sutherland (Jamaica); Senya (Jamaica); Shan-I Benjamen (Jamaica); the Mad Professor (England).

The 1970s are considered to be the "golden" period for female reggae performers, as they finally were able to start establishing their own careers outside of rumored (and often actual) romantic links to studio owners and male reggae successes. Roots Daughters (part of a series whose African, Celtic, and Asian volumes are reviewed on pages 842, 913, and 856, respectively) arrays the jewels of roots reggae and Rastafarian vocals. The famed I-Threes triumvirate and even non-Jamaican singers are included in this required reading of reggae. Marcia Griffiths (of said I-Threes) demonstrates why she has collected just about every Jamaican music award there is, with her mighty "Steppin' out of Babylon." Judy Mowatt (also an I-Three), the "Rasta Queen" with a 30-year music career, delivers the reggae "dawtas" anthem "Black Woman." Rita Marley, while known primarily for her marriage to and work with Robert Nesta "Bob" Marley, started out as one of Coxsone Dodd's Soulettes in the early 1960s, before helping to complete, you guessed it, the I-Threes. She delights us with the pro-spliff stance of "One Draw," a deserved solo hit in the aftermath of Bob's untimely death in 1981. Rocksteady immortal Alton Ellis's sister Hortense checks in with "Jah Mysterious Works," mixed by Scientist at King Tubby's and backed by an early version of the Roots Radics—reggae royalty all. Called the "Black Cinderella," social activist and actress Sister Carol bases herself in New York and raises consciousness with such songs as "International Style." Nashville native Dhaima was the first Rasta woman to have her own TV show in Jamaica in the 1970s, and she expresses the importance of new generations in "Ina Jah Jah Children." With "Narrow Minded Man" Marcia Aitken takes a feminist turn on the nearly misogynistic "Woman Is Like a Shadow" by the Meditations. Even with all the headiness (political, spiritual, and herbal) of the tracks, "Sister" Shan-I Benjamen reminds you to "Look After Your Structure" (i.e. eat right and exercise). The Mad Professor's "Structure Dub" is a male-created bonus track, and there are even more gems in the collection proper. Forget that "behind every great man" adage—the ladies of Roots Daughters are right out front.

Stacy Meyn

Invocations: Sacred Music from World Traditions ♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1998, prod. Martha Lorantos, Richard Klecka, Bob Haddad)

International
genre: Sacred world music

Hassan Hakmoun (Morocco); Dumi Maraire & Ephat Mujuru (Zimbabwe); Etuh Ensemble (Nigeria); Karnataka College of Percussion (India); Cornel Pewewardy (Native America); Qhapaq Negros (Peru); K. Subramaniam & Trichy Sankaran (India); Nueva Generación (Cuba); Bayram Bilge Toker (Turkey); Tadashi Tajima (Japan); Alliance West Singers (Native America); Jalal Zolfonun (Iran).

Interested in world music but just don't know where to start? You could do a lot worse than this fine compilation of sacred and spiritual music, which includes songs from the Afro-Cuban, Muslim, Hindu, Sufi, Buddhist, African, Syncretic Christian, and Native American traditions. Opening with "Sala Alla 'Alik Dima Dima," a rhythmically rapturous song from Morocco's Gnawa tradition by Hassan Hakmoun, the album includes healing music, sacred hymns, meditational pieces, devotional songs, and trance-inducing melodies that all hold an important place in their respective cultures. Whether it's K. Subramaniam's dazzling veena melodies on "Sarasasamadana," the throbbing pulse of the Alliance West Singers' haunting "Memorial Song," or the peaceful serenity of Tadashi Tajima's shakuhachi flute on "Sagari Ha (Falling Leaf)," all of the music here has one thing in common—a remarkable propensity for lifting your spirits to ecstatic new heights.

Bret Love

Islands ♪♪♪ (Putumayo World Music, 1997, compilation prod. Dan Storper)

International
genre: Coladeira, zouk, bomba, morna, bolero, hapa haole, reggae

Tito Paris (Cape Verde); Kali (Martinique); José González y Banda Criolla (Puerto Rico); Maria Alice (Cape Verde); Los Tradicionnales de Carlos Puebla (Cuba); D'Gary and Jihé (Madagascar); Tarika (Madagascar); Bobby and Angelo (Tahiti); Hapa (Hawaii); Quito Rymer (Tortola).

With no other linkage than the title, this 10-song compilation contains a diverse range of musical styles from Pacific, Atlantic, and Indian Ocean islands. All of the selections have a gentle island sway to them, and if the album lacks adventurousness it does present a very pleasurable listen to a variety of cultures that have evolved in very insular and thus somewhat unique ways. Not that they are immune from influences—Jamaica (perhaps the major island omission, though amply covered elsewhere) is latently represented by the Bob Marley–tinged songs of Quito Rymer from tiny Tortola, and José González exhibits the multicultural ingredients that form Puerto Rico's bomba style. On the other hand, Madagascar's two entries reflect a culture only recently joining the international scene. Distinctive packaging and informative artist notes make this a useful CD for the budding world-music enthusiast, but, with the constraints inherent in a roster of only 10 tracks, veteran music globetrotters may find the range a little shallow and too easy-listening in nature. In either case, though, this makes a pleasantly tropical background for the cocktail hour or daydreaming in the hammock.

Derek Rath

Klezmania: Klezmer for the New Millennium ♪♪♪ (Shanachie, 1997, prod. Henry Sapoznik)

USA, Germany
genre: Klezmer

Aufwind (Germany); Ahava Raba (Germany); Boiled in Lead; the Klezmatics; Don Byron; the Paradox Trio; Nathanson and Coleman; Frank London; Kapelye; New Orleans Klezmer All-Stars; New Klezmer Trio; Godchildren of Soul; Twistin' the Freylakhs. (All artists are from USA except where noted otherwise.)

Klezmer is a music of both identity and incorporation—in the five centuries of its existence it has served as a rallying point for the preservation of Jewish heritage as well as adding ideas and styles from the nations and cultures with which it has come into contact. As a dance music, it's also been a way to share the culture with others and encourage them to join in. This is a collection of what producer Henry Sapoznik calls "edge klezmer," a snapshot of the state of explorations in the style near the end of the 20th century. These range from the jazz-influenced music of Don Byron to the beach-klezmer of Twistin' the Freylakhs and the fusion of funk, rap, and old-time freylich rhythms by Godchildren of Soul.

Kerry Dexter

Klezmer Music: A Marriage of Heaven and Earth ♪♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1996, compilation prod. Michal Shapiro)

USA, Hungary, Germany, Canada
genre: Klezmer

Alicia Svigals (USA); the Chicago Klezmer Ensemble (USA); Di Naye Kapelyen (Hungary); La'om (Germany); Andy Statman (USA); Budowitz (USA); Deborah Strauss and Jeff Warschauer (USA); the Klezmatics with Ray Musiker (USA); the Flying Bulgar Klezmer Band (Canada); Naftule's Dream (USA); Brave Old World (USA).

As with other fine releases on the ellipsis arts . . . label, this disc is clearly a labor of love and does a great job of capturing the richness of its subject's living spirit, from folk-based roots to swing and rock influences. As the lengthy (64 pages!) and entertaining liner notes explain, the klezmer band is traditionally heard at Jewish weddings. For Jews this celebration is filled with both joy and remembrance: joy at lives being joined, and remembrance of the hardships that have come before (the smashing of the glass at the end of the ceremony commemorates the destruction of the original temple). The music on Heaven and Earth embodies this complex character. The better-known, clarinet-centric brand of klezmer is represented here by such crack outfits as the Chicago Klezmer Ensemble ("Mazeltov") and Budowitz ("Behusher khusid"), while the more daring Naftule's Dream stretches the boundaries with the jazzy musical narrative "The Black Wedding." The inclusion of marvelous pieces by violinists Alicia Svigals and Deborah Strauss illustrates that the clarinet does not have to be the predominant instrument in the klezmer band, and the sound can be reflective as well as boisterous. Without a doubt, an excellent introduction to wonderful music.

Tim Sheridan

Klezmer Pioneers: European and American Recordings, 1905–1952 ♪♪♪♪½ (Rounder, 1993, compilation prod. Henry Sapoznik, Dick Spottswood)

USA, Poland, Hungary
genre: Klezmer

Art Shryer's Orchestra (USA); Abe Elenkrig's Yidishe Orchestra (USA); Sam Musiker and His Orchestra (USA); Belf's Rumanian Orchestra (Romania); Mishka Tsiganoff (USA); Abe Schwartz's Orchestra (USA); Joseph Cherniavksy and His Yiddish-American Jazz Band (USA); Kandel's Orchestra (USA); Mihal Viteazul (Romania); Alexander Olshanetsky Und Zein Orkester (USA); Josef Solinski (Poland); Israel J. Hochman's Jewish Orchestra (USA); Joseph Moskowitz (USA); Dave Tarras (USA); Abe Katzman's Bessarabian Orchestra (USA).

After World War II, only a handful of European klezmer musicians remained alive to play the old Jewish instrumental music. Almost none of the Jewish generation born in the United States had taken up the old styles, preferring jazz and other forms of American popular music. By the 1960s, it appeared that klezmer had disappeared. Then, in the '70s, a small group of Jewish musicians in the folk music scenes of New York, Boston, and San Francisco became interested in their own roots. Because little of the music had been written down and there was scarce source material, the discovery of caches of 78-rpm records in Jewish archives was like striking gold. It allowed a new generation of musicians to learn the klezmer modes, performance styles, ornamentation, and rhythms. Henry Sapoznik was probably the most important figure in the klezmer revival because of his access to the YIVO Institute for Jewish Research's musical collections, his knowledge of Yiddish, and his career in researching, recording, and performing traditional music. Although this compilation came out in 1993, too late to play a role in that first klezmer revival, it's guided by one of the movement's mainstays, Sapoznik himself, and is an important document of the richness and diversity of this music in the early part of the 20th century.

Aaron Howard

Latcho Drom (Soundtrack) ♪♪♪♪♪ (La Bande Son/Virgin France, 1993, prod. Alain Weber, Armand Amar)

India, Egypt, Turkey, Romania, Hungary, Yugoslavia, France, Spain genre: Gypsy music

Talob Khan Barna (Rajasthan/India); Daoud Langa (Rajasthan/India); Gazi Khan Manghaniyar (Rajasthan/India); Musicians of the Nile (Egypt); Nicolas Naegelen (Turkey); Hasam Yarim Dunya & His Ensemble (Turkey); Taraf de Haïdouks (Romania); Nicolas Naegelen (Turkey); Rostas Szabina (Hungary); Kek Lang Ensemble (Hungary); Marichka (Yugoslavia); Dorado et Tchavolo (France); the Gypsies of Badojoz (Spain); La Caita (Spain).

The Rom people, know as Gypsies in the West because of the mistaken idea that they originated in Egypt, left Rajasthan, India, over 2,000 years ago. No one knows why this mass migration took place. Some theorize that the Rom were employed as mercenaries by the ancient Indian empire, and as they fought their way West, they forgot their original mission. Be that as it may, the Rom language never developed a written form, and their traditions and myths were passed down as lyrics, making music an important part of their cultural identity. Everywhere the Rom go they are welcomed as musicians, while at the same time they are stereotyped and persecuted as thieves, fortune tellers, prostitutes, and ne'er-do-wells. When French Rom director Tony Gatlif set out to film a history of his people's migrations, he decided to use music rather than words to tell the story, and in the process created as great a film (and album) for listeners as for historians. The musicianship on the disc is all world-class, and despite the divergent traditions represented, a strong thread of Rom rhythm and melancholy runs throughout this excellent collection.

j. poet

The Library of Congress Endangered Music Project, Vols. 1–6 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1993–98, prod. Mickey Hart, Alan Jabbour)

Brazil, Belize, French Guiana, Suriname, Peru, Jamaica, Colombia, Panama, Bali (Indonesia), Madura (Indonesia), Kangean Islands (Indonesia), Senegal, Mali, Liberia, Ghana, Nigeria, Ivory Coast, Guinea, Zaire (Congo), Burkina Faso, Haiti, Trinidad, Cuba genre: Abaimahani, arumahani, berusu, punta, aleke, songe, lonsei, mato, awasa, kumanti, susa, papa, tambu, gamelan semar pegulingan, gender wayang, gamelan gong, gamelan gong kebyar, kecak, côco, rojão, congos, maracatú, waltz, catopê, viçungos, xangô, Tambor de Mina, babacuê, pajelança, praiá, samba, carimbú, bumba-meu-boi, Santería, Candomblé, Shango, Vodou

Dozens of individuals and ensembles, only intermittently credited.

Begun in 1993 and still in progress today, The Endangered Music Project series aims to dig out archival recordings of global traditional music and bring them to light for study and enjoyment. An ideal locus for such work can be found at the American Folklife Center of the Library of Congress, where the Archive of Folk Culture holds 50,000 recordings of traditional music, spanning both the globe and the entire history of recording. The producers of the series, Alan Jabbour and Grateful Dead percussionist/world-music patron Mickey Hart, have clearly pulled off a coup by combing this archive, blowing the dust from some forgotten gems of ethnomusicology, and bringing them back to life with classy graphics and engrossing liner commentary by experts in the field.

The discs released at this writing are as follows: The Spirit Cries: Music from the Rainforests of South America and the Caribbean, which samples the chants and songs of several peoples bound by their common ways of rainforest life; Music for the Gods: The Fahnestock South Sea Expedition, Indonesia, the recordings of two adventuring brothers who traveled the Indonesian archipelago on a schooner outfitted with two Presto 16-inch disc-cutting machines and several miles of microphone cable for remote recording; The Discoteca Collection: Missão de Pesquisas Folclóricas, a selection from a field expedition carried out by a Brazilian folkloric archive; L.H. Corrêa de Azevedo: Music of Ceará and Minas Gerais, from the field recordings of a Brazilian composer who collected music in remote parts of his country with the help of the Library of Congress; The Yoruba/Dahomean Collection: Orishas across the Ocean, which compiles the work of several seminal researchers into the trans-Atlantic religious diaspora rooted in the West African Yoruba people's belief in orisha deities (a faith known by such names as Vodou and Santería in the West); and The Arthur S. Alberts Collection: More Tribal, Folk, and Café Music of West Africa, music from recordist Alberts's legendary 1949 whirlwind tour through West Africa in a customized Jeep. (The last-named album is reviewed on its own on page 840.)

The series is appealing in its diversity. Perhaps its high-water mark so far is the Yoruba/Dahomean Collection, with its chants, songs, and trance beats from the Caribbean and South America, which trace the importation and evolution of West African orisha worship since the era of the slave trade. This diaspora is documented in thrilling fashion. From the strikingly percussive attack and bitonal drum interlock of the Brazilian rites to the melodic pause that heralds the arrival of possession in Trinidad, the album's intensity is breathtaking. While the brevity of the cuts may in some cases be an artifact of the crude recording technology available to the original researchers, this suits the modern attention span nicely, and those not satiated can check out the "Suggested Reading and Listening" notes included in the liner text.

Jeffrey Muhr

Mali to Memphis: An African American Odyssey ♪♪♪♪♪
(Putumayo World Music, 1999, compilation prod. Dan Storper)

Mali, USA
genre: American blues, Malian Bambara, Malian Fulani and Songhai traditions

Amadou et Mariam (Mali); Habib Koíte (Mali); Rokia Traoré (Mali); Boubacar Traoré (Mali); Lobi Traoré (Mali); Baba Djan (Guinea); Jesse Mae Hemphill (USA); Muddy Waters (USA); Eric Bibb (USA); Guy Davis (USA); John Lee Hooker (USA); Taj Mahal (USA).

This carefully constructed set, half by musicians from Mali and Guinea and the other by American bluespeople of several generations, celebrates the African griot (musical storyteller) tradition that all 12 tracks seem to share. There's certainly the same fiery presence of spirit in Amadou Bagayoko's guitar solo during "Mon Amour, Ma Cherie" as you find in the trance riffs of John Lee Hooker, who follows with "I'm in the Mood," or Jessie Mae Hemphill, represented by the eerie tones of "Standing in My Doorway Crying." The real payoff comes as you begin to discern traces of American blues in the music of the contemporary African groups. Who's influencing whom? Does it matter? Perhaps it's as Malian guitarist Lobí Traoré explains, that when he first heard American blues on the radio he made an instant connection with the music of his ancestors. With musical genres being chopped into ever tighter, more restrictive compartments, it's nice to run across a concept compilation that suggests otherwise.

Leland Rucker

Men with Guns (Hombres Armadas) ♪♪♪ (Rykodisc, 1998, prod. Mason Daring)

International
genre: Pan-Latin, Afro-Antillean

El General; Jeanie Stahl; Lito Barrientos; El Chane; Ramon Ropain; Toto la Momposina; Banda Once de Enero; Les Miserables Brass Band; Susana Baca; and an ensemble band whose members are: Duke Levine, Nancy Zeltzman, Jamey Haddad, Billy Novick, Gus Sterling, Frank London, Arturo Offarill, Lewis Kahn, Bobby Sanabria, Andrew Gonzalez, and Evan Harlan.

Create music for a Latin American country that doesn't exist—that was the challenge posed by director John Sayles when he envisioned the soundtrack for his film Men with Guns (Hombres Armadas). He wanted to suggest Latin America in general rather than anchor the story in any one culture. The result is a Latin mix that, while giving brief nods to the music of Mexico and the frontera (Texas-Mexico border), returns again and again to Afro-Antillean musical figures, rhythms, and vocal styles. Does it succeed? As a Pan-Latin fusion, no—it's too rooted in one aspect of the music. As an atmospheric collection that supports the film and is strong enough to stand on its own as well, though, it works.

Kerry Dexter

The Music of Islam, Vols. 1–15 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1997, prod. David Parsons, Prof. Margaret Kartomi)

International
genre: Arabic

Saleh Abdul Baqi (Yemen); H. Hafiz Kani Karaca (Turkey); Al-Sheikh Nail Kesova (Turkey); Fawzy Fawzy and the Aswan Troupe for Folkloric Arts (Egypt); Ahmed Baqbou (Morocco); Lotfi Jormana (Tunisia); Agha-Ye Sadjadifard (Iran); Ustad Bary Ali Khan (Pakistan).

The Music of Islam is the crowning achievement of engineers David and Kay Parsons' career, and the most outstanding release on the Celestial Harmonies label. It is a joy to own, with beautiful calligraphy on velum, extensive liner notes, and a wood box to hold the 15 volumes. The scope of the project is vast: a survey of the sacred, folk, and classical music of the Islamic world, which comprises one-fifth of the earth's population, and a stretch of countries that begins in North Africa and sweeps across the Middle East through South Asia and into the Pacific. What unites these countries is their common faith in one god, Allah, and their use of the Arabic holy book the Qur'an (Koran).

Volume 10: Qur'an Recitation is the best starting point if you want to buy a single volume. It opens with the "Ezan" or call to prayer, a chant that will be familiar to anyone who has visited an Islamic country or been to a mosque. The volume continues with recitations of surahs, or chapters, from the Qur'an. Each surah is sung in richly embroidered chants firmly grounded by strict rules. In fact, as with other spiritual practices associated with music by modern Westerners (i.e. Tibetan prayer or Gregorian chant), the reciters themselves do not consider this music, but devotion. However, one of the reciters, Nail Kosova, is an excellent composer as well as singer. He can be heard with his ensemble of whirling dervish musicians on Volume Nine: Mawlawiyah Music of the Whirling Dervishes and Volume 14: Mystic Music through the Ages. Through repeatedly chanting the many names of God the dancers whirl themselves into an ecstatic trance. Similarities to the Dervish tradition can be heard in the ceremony of the Aissaoua brotherhood on Volume Five: Aissaoua Sufi Ceremony, recorded live in a Moroccon courtyard. As the men go into a trance, they call out, while the women make high-pitched ululations called zgharit, which punctuate the steady music by invoking the prophet. Another recording of trance music, made in Marrakesh, Volume Six: Al-Maghrib/Gnawa Music features members of the Gnawa brotherhood, Morocco's black African population. They believe that the trance state helps the audience exorcise the jinn (spirits) that afflict them.

Morocco's musical connections with neighboring Spain are explored in Volume Seven: Al-Andalus/Andalusian Music; Andalusia is a region of the latter nation once occupied by the former. The resultant fusion of Arab and European styles has since been adopted as the court music of Morocco. Its elaborate melodies are played here on oud (lute), violin, flute, tabla (a goblet drum not to be confused with the double-headed Indian percussion instrument of same name), and tambourine. Moving East past Algeria, to Tunisia, on Volume Eight: Folkloric Music of Tunisia we hear the mizwid (bagpipe), which provides a constant drone above the percussion (including a variety of drums and a tambourine), while flowing melodies interact with leader Lotfi Jormana's voice. Volume 13: Music of Pakistan spotlights Ustad Bary Fateh Ali Khan singing classical ragas accompanied on string instruments and drums. The raga predates Islam; in Pakistan the lyrics have been adapted from Sanskrit to Urdu and the subject has been modified to praise of Allah. As is a genre custom, the three ragas here are intended to complement the mood of different times of day—"Early Morning," "Early Evening," and "Evening." Volume 15: Muslim Music of Indonesia, a two-disc set, surveys a variety of ensembles from the Indonesian island of Sumatra which play music dramatically different from the more familiar Indonesian gamelan (tuned percussion) orchestra. Disc One explores prayer and drumming in the West of the island, including a "Tiger capturing song." Disc Two visits the North to record a female chorus of body percussionists and a clan of male frame-drum players.

Ofra Haza popularized Yemenite folk song, and those familiar with her fast-paced pop music might imagine traditional folk outfits to be more sedate. Far from it—on Volume 11: Music of Yemen, Nizar Ghanem's ensemble of singers armed with ouds pick up the beat fueled by qat (a leaf that when chewed serves as a stimulant). The classical traditions of Sana'a, the town where these songs were recorded, are close to Andalusian music—the oud sounds similar to a Spanish guitar, and the virtuosity of the finger-picking recalls flamenco. Most arresting are the variety of rhythms displayed: a limping beat offset from the central rhythm; the brittle skittering of the reqq (tambourine); and the drive of the tabla—Yemenite music is nearly always accompanied by dancing, and it is easy to hear why. Fans of Haza will also not be disappointed by Iman Ibrahim's powerful soprano.

Volume One: Al-Qahirah explores Egyptian classical music, while Volume Two: Music of the South Sinai Bedouins features desert nomads, a Bedouin chorus recorded in a dry river-bed in the South Sinai desert under a full moon, accompanied by oil drums and rababah (one-stringed fiddle). The Bedouin love songs reflect the local landscape and culture—unrequited love is characterized as extreme thirst, while a lover is compared to a gazelle, and women are addressed in song as "he" to preserve their reputation. Volume Three: Music of the Nubians records another dislocated Egyptian ethnic group, with its own distinct language, whose homeland of Nubia was flooded by the Aswan dam. A soloist or chorus is accompanied by handclaps, tambura (lyre), and tar (frame-drum). These folk songs are the roots for Ali Hassan Kuban's popular Nubian blues.

Volume 12: Music of Iran was recorded with some trepidation—a fear fueled by the Western media's negative portrayal of Iran—but turned out to be the engineers' most positive experience of this musical odyssey. A trio perform classical Persian dastgah-ha (suites) on santur (zither), kemenche (lute), and frame-drum. The dastgah-ha are in two styles, the love poetry of the shur and the bittersweet homayoun. The smallest Arab country, Qatar, is represented on Volume Four: Music of the Arabian Peninsula by a duo of expatriate Iraqis who perform on oud and tabla.

The Parsons' Music of Islam joins Jean Jenkins and Poul Rovsing Olsen's earlier, hard-to-find, and similarly vast Music in the World of Islam as a tremendous cultural resource. It should dispel some of the misunderstanding and animosity that has lingered between the Western and Islamic worlds for many centuries, and introduce many Western ears to the joys of both music in praise of God and the folk song that co-exists with it in these cultures.

David Poole

Musica de la Tierra ♪♪♪♪ (Music of the World, 1992, prod. Bob Haddad)

Ecuador, Haiti, Brazil, Colombia, Mexico, Argentina genre: Latin

Tahuantinsuyo (Ecuador/Peru); Marc Ribot (Haiti); Tico da Costa (Brazil); Atahualpa Poalasin (Colombia); Los Pregoneros del Puerto (Mexico); Maria Olga Piñeros (Colombia); Aires Colombianos (Colombia); Los Troveros Cuyanos (Argentina).

This is a tasteful sampler from Mexico, Haiti, and South America that provides an introduction to vocal and instrumental music beyond the mainstream. Both contemporary and traditional songs are included.

Kerry Dexter

Musical Instruments of the World ♪♪♪♪♪ (Le Chant Du Monde/Harmonia Mundi, 1990)
Voices of the World: An Anthology of Vocal Expression ♪♪♪♪♪ (Le Chant Du Monde/Harmonia Mundi, 1996, prod. Hugo Zemp)

International
genre: Vocal, traditional

Musical Instruments of the World*: 36 artists or ensembles, most uncredited, but including: Nicolas Masemokombo (Central African Republic); Chatur Lal (India); Monks of Dharmsala (Tibet); Kammu Khan (India); Aurelio Porcu (Italy); Sadiq (India). Voices of the World: 103 artists or groups, including: Imas Permas (Indonesia); Kondé Kouyaté (Guinea); Bac Nam Ngu (Vietnam); Aïcha Redouane (Saudi Arabia); Salah el-Din Mohammed (Saudi Arabia); Pepe de la Matrona (Spain); Roman el Granaino (Spain); Erik Marchand (France); Marcel Guillou (France); Zhang Junqiu (China); Aldubin Garcia (Honduras); Takni Dance Group (USA); Moinuddin Dagar (India); Aminuddin Dagar (India); Namsir (Mongolia); Afsâne Ziâ'i (Iran); Hoseyn Omumi (Iran); Yûsuf al-Tâj (Lebanon); Wiriyi (Australia); Buwaijigu (Australia); Non'ikeni (Solomon Islands); Sherha Mahamad (India); Nang Suy (Laos); Cerenamid (Mongolia); Mary Travers (Canada); Mbenzele Pygmies (Central African Republic); Mabu (Papua New Guinea); Mahamat Chaïmi (Chad).

Musical Instruments of the World began as an LP, kicking off the most exemplary and essential series in world music. Expanded for this CD reissue and featuring extensive liner notes, the collection covers the four major categories of instruments: chordophones (plucked or bowed strings), membranophones (drums), aerophones (blown instruments), and idiophones (solid percussion), offering virtuoso solo performances to spotlight the tone and potential of each. There is no more useful introduction for understanding the nuts and bolts of world music. Listeners will be able to distinguish between a box zither and board zither, how the lute is played in Chad, and the nuances of lute playing in Azerbaijan. Often in ensemble music it is hard to distinguish particular instruments and familiarize oneself with their sound, but here are isolated examples of the harp-lute, goblet drum, wooden trumpet, and more, which allow the listener space to make sense of each instrument. Likewise, for anyone interested in the sheer variety of vocal expression, the 103 cultures represented on the three-CD companion volume Voices of the World provide the best starting point bar none. Its first two discs examine vocal techniques like calls, cries, and clamors, while the third covers polyphony under themes like "echoes and overlapping" or "drones and ostinati." The accompanying book offers a crash course in the science of song and details about the performers. Voices of the World stands above almost any other world-music album as a must-have, celebrating the glorious qualities of the human voice. Together with Musical Instruments of the World it draws from humankind's greatest archives of ethnic music to provide the widest range of traditional styles ever presented on one compilation. Look out for Dances of the World, forthcoming at presstime.

David Poole

Narada World: A Global Vision ♪♪♪♪♪ (Narada, 1997, prod. various)

International
genre: World music, contemporary instrumental

Connie Dover (USA); Alasdair Fraser (Scotland); Mary McLaughlin (Ireland); Orion (Belgium); Shelley Phillips; Scartaglen

(USA); John Whelan (Ireland/USA); Jesse Cook (Canada); Miguel de la Bastide (Canada); Carlos Guedes (Venezuela); Nando Lauria (Brazil); Oscar Lopez (Canada); Bernardo Rubaja (Argentina); Rumillayta (Bolivia); Tomas San Miguel; Bill Miller (Mohawk/USA); R.Carlos Nakai (Navajo/Ute/USA); Ayub Ogada (Kenya); Michael Pluznick (USA); Samite (Uganda); Michael Whalen (USA); Hans Zimmer (USA); Ancient Future (USA); Riley Lee (Australia); Vas (Iran/USA); Richard Warner (USA).

Listening to this collection is like wandering the streets of a crossroads market town—here a vibrant splash of color, a strange pattern, there a familiar word, just ahead an enticing smell and a lively conversation. The music was selected to mark the 15-year anniversary of recording company Narada Media, and it does indeed show how the taste and vision of the people of this organization have led them to seek out and combine unusual and perhaps unclassifiable music talents and give them a place to be heard. It's a good starting point to learn about what thoughtful, mostly melodically oriented artists of many traditions are doing to connect their music with contemporary life. It's also an interesting survey of the choices one recording company has made.

Kerry Dexter

A Native American Odyssey ♪♪♪♪ (Putumayo World Music, 1998, compilation prod. Dan Storper)

Canada, USA, Mexico, Brazil, Peru, Bolivia
genre: Native American

Kashtin (Montagnais/Canada); Tudjaat (Inuit/Canada); Andrew Vasquez (Apache/USA); Bill Miller (Mohican/USA); Burning Sky (Navajo-Ute/USA); Jerry Alfred & the Medicine Beat (Techone/Canada); Jaramar (Huave/Mexico); Binni Gula'za (Zapotec/Mexico); Marlui Miranda (Amazon/Brazil); Regional Vermellho e Branco (Amazon/Brazil); Los Incas (Andean/Peru); Bolivia Manta (Andean/Bolivia); Expresión (Andean/Peru).

"Brazilian Indian music is a cultural secret, nobody knows it," states featured South American singer Marlui Miranda, but her comment could accurately describe much of the music presented on A Native American Odyssey, an exceptionally well-researched collection of indigenous American styles. From Northern Canada's Inuit throat singers to the poignant harmonies of Peruvian panpipe-charango (Andean mandolin) duets, this anthology documents the fresh-sounding complexities of both traditional and contemporary Native repertoire. Helping to preserve Zapotec-language ballads, the vocal-guitar trio Binni Gula'za demonstrates that lover's quarrels are timeless on "Ni'bixi Dxi Zina (The Tantrum)," while the tornado-like force of Montagnais duo Kashtin is completely current, as the Robbie Robertson–arranged "Akua Tuta" melds crooning violin with thunderdrums to potent effect. Sensational soulsters Burning Sky ignite on "Native Funk," while the flute-laced guitar musings of Bill Miller on "Ghost Dance" are positively haunting. In the end, this compilation succeeds because it embraces artists who are essentially influenced by the positive contributions of other cultures, rather than relying on strictly traditional tunes; this makes for much more compelling listening.

PJ Birosik

The New Feeling ♪♪♪♪♪ (Celestial Harmonies, 1996, executive prod. Eckart Rahn)

International
genre: International

Marcio Montarroyos (Brazil); Michael Askill (Australia); Omar Faruk Tekbilek (Turkey); Takadja (Senegal, Guinea, Canada); R. Carlos Nakai (Native America); David Hudson (Aboriginal Australia); Fong Naam (Thailand); Inkuyo (Bolivia); Paul Horn (Australia); Pham Van Ty (Viet Nam); Mariachi Cobre (Mexico); Coolangubra (Australia); Rafael Jimenez (Spain); Synergy (Australia); Perry Silverbird (Native America).

This stunning compilation offers not only an ideal world-music starter kit, but a welcome way of spotlighting a world-music patron whose contributions make her as significant as any artist in this volume. As a major broadcaster in Australia, Jaslyn Hall is a pioneer popularizer of world music; her personal track selection and encyclopedic but lively liner notes make The New Feeling more than a mere label sampler—even though Celestial Harmonies' thoughtfully adventurous catalog makes it hard to go wrong. With the seasoned instincts of the top alternative radio programmer she is, Hall maintains interest and balances diversity across the collection's multi-continent roster and its 79 minutes. You can find almost every track here on other Celestial Harmonies albums, but the compilation stands alone as an exceptionally eye-opening (while not overwhelming) intro to many timeless traditions and daring recombinations.

Adam McGovern

Planet Soup ♪♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1995, compilation prod. Angel Romero)

International
genre: International

Numerous artists including: Oleg Fesov (Tajikistan); Kongar-ool Ondar (Tuva) & Paul Pena (USA); La Cucina (England); Bustan Abraham (Israel); Akira Satake (Japan); Astor Piazzolla (Argentina); Värttinä (Finland); Ali Hassan Kuban (Nubia); Aisha Kandisha's Jarring Effects (Morocco); Enzo Rao (Italy); Mynta (Sweden); Gualberto (Spain); Aquarela Carioca (Brazil); Bolot Bairyshev (Mongolia); Wolfstone (Scotland); Tananas (South Africa); Jim Bowie & Badal Roy (USA/India).

If you're at all interested in a fusing of the world's traditions to create some forward-thinking theme-music for the global village, this eye-opening three-CD box set is custom-made for you. Living up to its highly appropriate title, this scrumptious sonic stew uses a dash of folksy, traditional melodies and a pinch of the most modern, dance-floor-pounding grooves to create a simmering 40-song collection without a single lame ingredient to spoil the broth. Inspired collaborative recipes abound, from the matching of Paul Pena's Delta-blues riffing with Kongar-ool Ondar's masterful Tuvan throat-singing on "The Ballad of Cher Shimjer (What You Talkin' About?)," to the marriage of Jim Bowie's Bengali-style banjo with Badal Roy's nimble tabla drum rhythms on the remarkably inventive "Rinpoche's Rag." But this groovy stylistic gumbo also features a number of self-contained musical hybrids, including Wolfstone, which blends traditional Scottish music with elements of jazz fusion and rock; and Aisha Kandisha's Jarring Effects, a band that creates a riotous mix of Moroccan pop, dub reggae, and hip-hop. One of the best world-music collections ever whipped up, this delicious dish proves that it really is a small world after all.

Bret Love

Polish Village Music ♪♪♪♪ (Arhoolie, 1995, compilation prod. Dick Spottswood)

Poland, USA

genre: Folk music

Orkiestra Majkuta; Stefan Skrabut; Bruno Rudzinski; Karol Stoch Muzyka Góralska; Tarnowska Orkiestra Stasiaka; Stefan I Wladyslaw Macón; Frank P. Kawa; Wladyslaw Dombkowski; Aleksander Brokowski; Józef Brangel; Ignaci Podgórski; Józef Kallini; Piotr Kopacz; Orkiestra Jana Dranki; Wiejska Ork. Kmiecia; Makowska Ork. Dzialowego; Waclaw Turchanowicz; Stanislaw Mermel; Baczkowski Wiejska Orkiestra; Wladyslaw Polak; Jan Wanat; Polska Orkiestra Pod Bialem Orlem; Frank Dukla. (All artists are from Poland.)

Back in the 1920s and '30s, when these recordings were made in New York and Chicago, sound technology was still in its infancy. But because of its novelty it was in time to capture remarkably honest performances of music before American pop aesthetics overtook the world. That's why whatever these tracks lack in fidelity (despite the producers' commendable job of removing excess surface noise) is a small price to pay considering the priceless music they preserve. The wonder and genuineness of these performers, many of them new arrivals to the United States, still comes through. Take for example Karol Stoch's throaty bellow on the ballad "Ostatki No Podhalu (Last Evening in Podhale)." It's a unique listening experience as it skitters across a pulsing melody. Also impressive is the range of styles and forms featured on the disc: waltzes, mazurkas, polkas, and various other dances keep the music consistently interesting. Listen for the klezmer flavors in Frank P. Kawa's polka "Pijal Ojciec, Pije Ja (Father Drinks, So Do I)," with its lighthearted clarinet line. But of particular note are unusual curios like Aleksander Brokowski's comic song "Cialy do Boxy (Charlie in Jail)." While the compilation is not for all tastes, with screechy orchestras and unusual tonal ranges, the songs are surely a treasure trove of oral history and storytelling for those who speak Polish—or are intrigued to experience a rich cultural tradition as close to its source as modern technology will allow.

Tim Sheridan

Ramble to Cashel: Celtic Fingerstyle Guitar, Volume 1 ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1998, prod. Stefan Grossman, Pat Kirtley)

The Blarney Pilgrim: Celtic Fingerstyle Guitar, Volume 2 ♪♪♪♪ (Rounder, 1998, prod. Stefan Grossman, Pat Kirtley)

International

genre: Celtic fingerstyle guitar

Martin Simpson (UK); Steve Baugman (Malaysia/USA); Pierre Bensusan (Algeria/France); Duck Baker (USA); Tom Long (USA); Pat Kirtley (USA); El McMeen (USA).

Fiddle, pipes, flutes, button accordion, harp, and whistle are all instruments found in Celtic music. Until less than a century ago, the guitar—especially the solo acoustic guitar—was rarely heard in the genre. Inspired variously by the folk-music revival in the United States and Britain, the style of blues player Big Bill Broonzy, the bluegrass and string-band music of the Appalachian South, and their own quest for exploring how music works, the seven men who play on these discs have become pioneers in creating a voice for Celtic ideas on the solo guitar. The tracks collected here represent the several major groups of Celtic song: the march or martial music; the ballad; the dance tune; and, in a category by itself, the complex folk and classical mix found in the compositions of Turlough O'Carolan. Within the context of melody and rhythm basic to Celtic music, each man creates his own strong instrumental signature.

Kerry Dexter

The Secret Museum of Mankind, Vols. 1–8 ♪♪♪♪♪ (Shanachie/Yazoo, 1995–99, prod. Pat Conte)

International

genre: World music

Hundreds of artists and ensembles from over 100 countries, including every continent except Australia and Antarctica.

Delightfully turning the conventional wisdom of sober folkloric study on its head, The Secret Museum of Mankind series, with its antique photography, sketchy and cryptic notes, and unorthodox track sequencing, is a chaotic and exhilarating throwback to the days of pure exoticism in "ethnic" music listening. Compiled by inveterate record collector, musician, and philosopher Pat Conte from his own library of rare 78s, the series gathers global traditional and popular music that was recorded at a time when world music was not taken seriously by many scholars as a topic worthy of study. Ironically, such music was preserved chiefly by mavericks and record companies in search of marketable "ethnic" sounds for niche audiences such as expatriate communities and armchair adventurers.

Conte was led to his role as compiler of the series by his own unabashed attraction to exotica. As a child, he collected stamps, listened avidly to shortwave radio, and was fascinated by distant countries. Soon he was collecting records as well, and eventually he got together with Shanachie Records founder Richard Nevins to propose remastering rare 78s of global artists onto CD. Apparently everything truly coalesced for Conte when he ran across a strange tome called The Secret Museum of Mankind. A coffee-table book of foggy provenance, originally published in the early 1940s, it contains odd antique photos of "primitive" peoples culled from postcards, journals, and who-knows-where, captioned with quaint and slightly lurid descriptions. It was from this book that Conte drew the specific concept for the CD series.

The music on that series' five numbered volumes is organized not by country, region, or even theme, but is instead ordered, as Conte put it in an interview for Sing Out magazine in 1999, "purely for enjoyment, purely for listening." Conte arranged the tracks to provide continuities and surprises in the listening experience, a process he describes as "trying to sequence these elements into a little journey." Though the series violates some of the "rules" of academic folkloric study by valuing aesthetics over objective presentation and by giving wonderment priority over understanding with regard to traditional peoples, no one can say that listening to The Secret Museum isn't exciting and joyful, like discovering an old travel journal or a dusty pile of weird records in the attic.

To date, the series includes the following: five general volumes called The Secret Museum of Mankind: Ethnic Music Classics 1925–48, Vols. 1–5; and, in a concession to logical organization, three excellent regional volumes, The Secret Museum of Mankind: The Music of Central Asia: Ethnic Music Classics 1925–48, The Secret Museum of Mankind: The Music of North Africa: Ethnic Music Classics 1925–48, and The Secret Museum of Mankind: The Music of East Africa: Ethnic Music Classics 1925–48. In addition, a proto-Secret Museum album of Malagasy music, The Music of Madagascar (Shanachie/Yazoo, 1995, prod. Pat Conte), was released prior to the start of the series proper.

From his cluttered basement in suburban New York City, Conte continues to champion the preservation of recorded global music. He also hosts the weekly Secret Museum of the Air on the area's WFMU radio station, which is available in Real Audio on the web at www.wfmu.org. For those interested in the Secret Museum book, a new black-and-white edition is available from Gibbs Smith Publishing.

Jeffrey Muhr

Shaman, Jhankri and Néle: Music Healers of Indigenous Cultures ♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1997, prod. Pat Moffitt Cook)

International

genre: Shamanism, ritual healing

Babaji (India); Koshalya (India); Ram Tmapa (Nepal); Suni Ram (Nepal); Don Agustin Rivas-Vasquez (Peru); Micheline Forestal (Haiti); Kanucas Littlefish (Native North America); Maestro Demosdenes Ramirez Hurtas (Panama); Darkiking Don Alejandro (Peru); Alexander Tavakay (Tuva); Pointing Father (St. Vincent); Mara'akame (Native North America); Jorge K'in (Mexico); Nele Buna Inayenikidili (Panama); Anselmo Palma Cruz (Mexico); Kangsinmu (Korea); Steve Old Coyote (Native North America); Simon Eliet (Panama); Phawo Nyidhon (Tibet).

This box set, containing a 96-page book and CD, surveys the key role of music in rituals of healing around the world. Much healing music has its deepest roots in the practice of shamanism, an ancient form of religion in which a visionary adept, called a shaman, mediates with the spiritual world on behalf of a community, curing disease, healing social dislocation, insuring success in hunting and farming, or performing other civic services by invoking and harnessing cosmic forces. One of the shaman's most important tools is music; the drum beat, chant, or song is used as a vehicle to travel into ecstatic states of consciousness in which these forces may be contacted. In the case of the healing ritual conducted by Peruvian shaman Don Agustin Rivas-Vasquez, for instance, a complex sequence of music (with a bit of help from hallucinogenic ayahuasca) brings the participants to deep, healing changes in consciousness. In the opening of this ceremony, called "Anticuna" (also the title of the album's corresponding track), Don Agustin's soothing "whooshing" and tuneful chant powerfully convey a sense of gentle compassion. During a Nepalese healing ritual (and recording here) called "Giving Energy to a Dying Woman," jhankri shaman Ram Tmapa, transported by the sound of clattering bells and cymbals as well as his own "intense vocalizations," becomes possessed and issues instructions to a patient on how to carry out a cure. Eighteen other tracks touch upon musical healing practices in locations as diverse as India, Haiti, the Caribbean, South America, and Korea. The accompanying book, written by cross-cultural music scholar Pat Moffit Cook, expands on each track, and stands on its own as interesting reading.

Jeffrey Muhr

Trance 1 & Trance 2 ♪♪♪♪ (ellipsis arts . . . , 1995, prod. Jeffrey Charno, David Lewiston)

International
genre: Trance, religious, ganawi, odalan, dhrupad

Sadreddin Özçimi (Turkey); Necati Çelik (Turkey); Arif Erdebil (Turkey); Kemal Karaöz (Turkey); Monks of the Shartse Dratsang Garden Monastery (Tibet); Ustad N. Zahiruddin Dagar (India); F. Wasifuddin Dagar (India); Naqshbandi Sufis (Turkestan); Halima Chedli Ensemble (Morocco); Abdenbi Binizi Ensemble (Morocco); unidentified temple festival musicians (Bali).

While the recent profusion of "trance" CDs may scare off listeners who wisely wish to steer clear of superficial marketing fads, they need not shy away from Trance 1 and Trance 2, which offer genuinely exciting music. Produced by veteran world-music archivist David Lewiston, the CDs are packaged with a hardcover mini-book that supplements the music nicely with pleasant coffee-table design, color photographs, and entertaining and well-researched text. While the title "Trance" might not do justice to the profuse experiences encompassed by the music—which include religious ecstasy, meditation, and possession—the text does a good job of making the tracks intelligible by putting them into their cultural context.

The first disc contains music from a Mevlevi rite, a Tibetan chant, and an Indian dhrupad song. The best of these may be "Perde Kaldirma," a song of Turkey's Mevlevi order of Sufis, also known as the "whirling dervishes" for their ecstatic spinning dances. Based on an ancient Sufi ceremonial vocal form, the track layers a wailing ney flute over a lusciously repetitive backing sounded out by oud and tambour lutes and a frame drum. The soaring, passionate flute lines, which "play between the notes" in imitation of the human voice, really put the listener's hair on edge. The second volume includes music of the Naqshbandi Sufis of Central Asia; a pair of excerpts from Moroccan ritual songs called ganawi (a.k.a. Gnawa); and a final track made up of excerpts from a Balinese odalan temple festival. A standout is "Touhami Dikr," which consists of music for a ritual called the hadra ganawi. This ritual is notable for the fact that it is held by and for women only. Its purpose is to drive out jinn or evil spirits from a person or household; those attending the ritual are often propelled into a trance by the music. The track begins with a vocal chant over an insistent drum rhythm, but soon intensifies as an additional set of drums kicks into action, augured by a shrill exclamation from one of the vocalists. One can clearly sense how dancing to this driving music for an hour or more could send participants into another state of consciousness. Trance 1 and Trance 2, with their generous 70-minute CDs, clever design, and enjoyable text, offer the listener a similar divergence from the ordinary.

Jeffrey Muhr

Trance Planet Vols. I–IV ♪♪♪♪ (Triloka, 1995–98, compilation prod. Tom Schnabel)

International
genre: World music, meditative music, trance music

Numerous artists including: Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique (Mozambique); Zakir Hussain (India); Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan (Pakistan); Jai Uttal (USA); Cesaria Evora (Cape Verde); Sainkho (Tuva); Hassan Erraji (Morocco); Ayub Ogada (Kenya); Madredeus (Portugal); Loop Guru (England); Rachid Taha (Algeria); Tulku (Native America); Djivan Gasparyan (Armenia); Ali Akbar Khan (India); Vox (International); Radio & Television Symphony Orchestra of Bosnia-Herzegovina (Bosnia-Herzegovina); Muzsikas featuring Márta Sebestyén (Hungary).

This extensive four-CD series, released over the course of as many years, is perfectly suited for fans of the ellipsis arts . . . label's Global Meditation and Planet Soup box sets (reviewed on page 911 and 920, respectively). The premise is virtually the same: collect hypnotic tracks by a variety of celebrated and lesser-known world-music artists from countries spanning the globe, then compile them on CDs that flow rather seamlessly from start to finish. Unfortunately, although Trance Planet features a number of brilliant songs over the course of its 53 total tracks, it ultimately fails to match the thematic unity of the aforementioned classic collections. There seems to be little rhyme or reason to the way in which these CDs were sequenced, and the remarkably flimsy liner notes (which in most cases only offer one or two sentences about each track) fail to add any clarification. Fortunately for Triloka, the music is generally spectacular, and the fact that each CD is sold separately may be a blessing in disguise. The most consistent of the bunch is Volume I, which opens with the Orchestra Marrabenta's gorgeous, plaintive lament "Nwahulwana" and goes on to include powerfully moving tracks from Indian tabla drum master Zakir Hussain, Pakistani qawwali legend Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan, Cape Verdean vocalist Cesaria Evora, and Moroccan fusionist Hassan Erraji. An admirable effort, and though it's hardly the best in its class, it's still a great introduction for world-music novices.

Bret Love

Voices ♪♪ (Alula, 1996, prod. Ulrich Balss)

International genre: Vocal

The Bulgarian Voices Angelite (Bulgaria); Huun-Huur-Tu (Tuva); Hamlet Gonashvili (Georgia); Saraband (Europe, Middle East); Mikhail Alperin and Sergey Starostin (Ukraine); Trinovox (Italy); Tam Echo Tam (France, Guayana, Morocco, Congo); Yoon & Bunka Earborn (Korea, Germany).

The suggestion on Voices' packaging to "File under World & New Age" is unfortunately apt for one-half of the recording—

compilation albums: international

Trinovox manipulates its Gregorian chant with synthesizers and contributes to a mess of styles on the syrupy "Scolopendra"; Saraband claims to unite East and West, but offers little more than poorly executed medieval repertoire. What saves Voices from the new-age waste pile is the distinctive sustained high notes of the Bulgarian Voices Angelite meshing superbly with the deep rumble of the Tuvan throat-singers Huun-Huur-Tu on the collaborative "Fly, Fly My Sadness." More throat-singing (the phenomenal style in which a single vocalist can emit more than one note at a time) is provided by Ukrainian Sergey Starostin, whose voice creates overtones for a traditional Russian chorus. The late Hamlet Gonashvili, from the Georgian Rustavi Choir, also solos on a very slow-tempo hymn rising over the hum of a chorus. The Afro-Belgian a cappella quartet Tam Echo Tam succeeds where counterpart Zap Mama fails in providing a compelling fusion of European and African vocal styles.

David Poole

Women of Spirit ♪♪♪♪♪ (Putumayo World Music, 1998, prod. various)

International
genre: International

Capercaillie with Sibeba (Scotland/Guinea); Fortuna (Brazil); Groupe Oyiwan (France/Sudan); Coco Mbassi (Cameroon); Susana Baca (Peru); Cassandra Wilson (USA); Tarika (Madagascar); Sibongile Khumalo (South Africa); Rasha (Sudan); Ani DiFranco (USA); Ima Galguen (Spain); Savina Yannatou (Greece); Toshi Reagon/Bernice Johnson Reagon (USA).

It begins with "Inexile," a life-giving collaboration between Scotland's Capercaillie and Guinea's Sibeba that could single-handedly get America's budding imported-music market more enthused about sounds from outside the majority Celtic culture. Indeed, opening eyes to natural if unexpected musical connections is the overriding theme here. Brazil's Fortuna fortuitously exposes more of us to Latin Jewish music (it exists!). Sudan's Groupe Oyiwan will pleasantly remind the casual world-music listener of the popular Oumou Sangare from across the same continent. The contribution from Cameroon's Coco Mbassi stacks up to the best of New World balladry, while the urgency of Tarika's startling Malagasy rap speaks louder than language. Statesiders will know the deep drama of Cassandra Wilson, and welcome the lofting loveliness of Sibongile Khumalo from South Africa. Ani DiFranco and the extended family of Sweet Honey in the Rock need no introduction, but this collection performs that much-deserved service for Peru's Susana Baca, Sudan's Rasha, and the Mediterranean's Ima Galguen and Savina Yannatou. Every compilation from the prolific Putumayo contains at least a few gems, but this one's a goldmine from start to finish. And with proceeds benefiting grass-roots women's empowerment groups worldwide, it continues a company tradition of making you feel good in more ways than one.

Adam McGovern

Women of the World: International ♪♪♪♪½ (Putumayo World Music, 1995, compilation prod. Dan Storper)
Women of the World: Celtic ♪♪♪♪½ (Putumayo World Music, 1995, compilation prod. Dan Storper) Women of the World: Celtic II ♪♪♪♪½ (Putumayo World Music, 1997, compilation prod. Dan Storper)

International
genre: International

International*: Amoya (Mozambique); Margareth Menezes (Brazil); Angélique Kidjo (Benin); Des'ree (England); Karen Matheson (Scotland); Jacqueline Farreyrol (Reunion Islands); Sophia Arvaniti (Greece); Toni Childs (USA); Yehudit Ravitz (Israel); Amina (Tunisia); Riské (Haiti); the Dalom Kids (South Africa). Celtic: Máire Brennan (Ireland); Máighread Ní Dhomhnaill (Ireland); Mary Black (Ireland); Karen Matheson (Scotland); Connie Dover (USA); Máire Breatnach (Ireland); Maura O'Connell (Ireland); Fiona Joyce (Island of Jersey); Nancy McCallion (USA); Máiread Ní Mhaonaigh (Ireland). Celtic II: Natalie MacMaster (Canada); Christina Crawlay & Kerstein Blodig (Ireland/Germany); Eileen Ivers (USA); Mary Jane Lamond (Canada); Susan McKeown & the Chanting House (Ireland); Marcy D'Arcy & the Prodigal Sons (Scotland, Ireland, England); Eithne Ní Uallachain (Ireland); Pamela Morgan (Canada); Annie Grace & Lynn Morrison (Scotland); Karen Matheson (Scotland); Julie Murphy (England); Sharon Murphy with Whisp (Ireland).

The temptation is always there for international compilations to try and take in everything in one gulp, rather than just select out everything that works in an introductory taste. Women of the World: International, however, is secure enough in its conversance with its subject matter to be able to pick and choose, sounding much more like a cohesively conceived album than a disjointed sampler. Great sensitivity and savvy is shown in weaving a consistent whole from some widely divergent sources. Standouts are a matter of thoughtful pacing rather than hasty mismatch, and they include Margareth Menezes's reeling fanfares of festivity, Angélique Kidjo's slow-burning tribal techno-soul, and Des'ree's deeply grooved trans-oceanic reggae, as well as the relaxed grandeur of Toni Childs's processional chant/anthems, the gathering power of Amina's slinking Arabic rhythms and after-echoed future-synth textures, and the crystalline lilt of Riské's and the Dalom Kids' polychromatic chorales. Meeting the challenge of leaving you wanting more without leaving something to be desired is what distinguishes this compilation from many of its counterparts. Its own partner, Women of the World: Celtic, came at a time of Celtic rule on the U.S. world-music charts—a situation that would undermine the point of that umbrella genre if it only extended listeners' horizons to what sounds most familiar to the Euro majority. But this collection enjoyably and intriguingly accentuates the distinctive. There's a handful of artists who try too hard to preempt typecasting through MOR melodrama and world-mush of the piped-in Pier One Imports variety (one of Máire Brennan's tracks and all of Mary Black's and Fiona Joyce's, to name names). Otherwise, the music soars, most often when it retains the courage of its characteristics, as in the sonic modernism and timeless melancholy of Máighread Ní Dhomhnaill's mid-19th-century melody or Karen Matheson's anthemic semi-plugged roots-rock; the never-outdated energy of Connie Dover's, Nancy McCallion's, and Máiread Ní Mhaonaigh's spirited jigs, reels, and nursery tunes; and the proto-ambient, indomitable homeland spirituality of the spectral choirs on Brennan's other track, the majestic "Mighty One." Perhaps not coincidentally, many of these highlights are sung in native tongues. But traditionalism needn't become another formula; the endearing Country & Caribbean Celtic of Maura O'Connell's "Stories" has an unaffected internationalism that branches out while escaping the small-world-after-all syndrome in its own way. Just as the International volume of the series shows how compatible a world of music can be, this one shows how diverse a single corner of it can be, and matches the companion volume's high quality. The Celtic sequel busted other category confines, at the height of Lilithmania giving disc-space to some of the "Women in Music" who don't fit male major-label execs' pre-existing pigeonholes and stereotypes. The results are refreshing, matching up jazz, hip-hop, Latin, and ambient flavors of Celtic to straighter strains of one of Europe's truly thriving tribal musics. Influenced but never diluted, the Putumayo catalog consistently leads the way while remembering the origin.

Adam McGovern

Books

Now that you've seen the world with this guide, you can visit some of its places and learn more about some of its people with the following books on specific cultures', countries', and artists' music. Below you'll also find many of the best general-interest guides, which include good world-music reading.

Africa (The Garland Encyclopedia of World Music, Vol. 1)
Ruth M. Stone and James Porter, ed. (Garland Publishing, 1997)

Africa O-Ye!: A Celebration of African Music
Graeme Ewens (Da Capo Press, 1992)

African American Music; A Chronology: 1619–1995
Hansonia Caldwell (Ikoro Communications, Inc., 1996)

African Rhythm: A Northern Ewe Perspective
V. Kofi Agawu (Cambridge University Press, 1995)

African Rhythm and African Sensibility
John Chernoff (University of Chicago Press, 1981)

African Stars: Studies in Black South African Performance
Veit Erlmann (University of Chicago Press, 1991)

Afropop! An Illustrated Guide to Contemporary African Music
Sean Barlow, Banning Eyre, and Jack Vartoogian (Chartwell Books, 1995)

All-Music Guide: The Experts' Guide to the Best CDs, Albums & Tapes
Michael Erlewine, Vladimir Bogdanov, Chris Woodstra, and Stephen Thomas Erlewine, ed. (Miller Freeman, 1997)

All-Music Guide to Rock
Michael Erlewine, Vladimir Bogdanov, and Chris Woodstra, ed. (Miller Freeman, 1995)

Ancient Echoes: The Anasazi Book of Chants
Mary Summer Rain (Hampton Roads Publishing Co., 1993)

And the Beat Goes On: An Introduction to Popular Music in America, 1840 to Today
Michael Campbell (Schirmer Books, 1996)

Angels in the Mirror: Voodoo Music of Haiti
Elizabeth A. McAlister (Relaxation Co., 1997)

The Arabesk Debate: Music and Musicians in Modern Turkey
Martin Stokes (Clarendon Press, 1992)

Australia and the Pacific Islands (The Garland Encyclopedia of World Music, Vol. 9)
Adrienne L. Kaeppler and Jacob W. Love, ed. (Garland Publishing, 1998)

Bachata: A Social History of Dominican Popular Music Deborah Pacini Hernandez (Temple University Press, 1995)

Balinese Music
Michael Tenzer (Periplus Editions, 1998)

Barrio Rhythm: Mexican American Music in Los Angeles
Steven Loza (University of Illinois, 1993)

The Big Drum Ritual of Carriacou: Praise-songs for Rememory of Flight
Lorna McDaniel (University Press of Florida, 1998)

The Billboard Guide to Progressive Music
Bradley Smith (Watson-Guptill Publications, 1998)

Black Music of Two Worlds, Revised Second Edition
John Storm Roberts (MacMillan Library Reference, 1998)

Bob Marley: A Rebel Life: A Photobiography, 1973–1980
Dennis Morris (Plexus Publications, 1999)

Bob Marley: An Intimate Portrait by His Mother
Cedella Booker with Anthony Winkler (Penguin, 1997)

Bob Marley: Conquering Lion of Reggae Stephen Davis (Schenkman, 1990)

Bob Marley in His Own Words
Ian McCann (Omnibus Press, 1997)

Bob Marley: Songs of Freedom
Adrian Boot and Chris Salewicz (Penguin Studio, 1995)

Bob Marley: Spirit Dancer
Bruce W. Talamon (W.W. Norton & Co., 1994)

books and magazines

The Brazilian Sound: Samba, Bossa Nova, and the Popular Music of Brazil Chris McGowan and Ricardo Pessanha (Temple University Press, 1998)

Brian Eno: His Music and the Vertical Color of Sound
Eric Tamm (Da Capo Press, 1995)

Brown Girl in the Ring: An Anthology of Song Games from the Eastern Caribbean
Alan Lomax, ed. (Pantheon Books, 1997)

Caribbean Currents: Caribbean Music from Rumba to Reggae Peter Manuel, Kenneth Bilby, and Michael Largey (Temple University Press, 1995)

Carnival, Canboulay and Calypso: Traditions in the Making John Cowley (Cambridge University Press, 1996)

Catch a Fire: The Life of Bob Marley
Timothy White (Henry Holt & Co., 1989)

Chanting Down Babylon: The Rastafari Reader
Nathaniel Samuel Murrell, William David Spencer, and Adrian Anthony McFarlane, ed. (Temple University Press, 1998)

Choctaw Music and Dance
James H. Howard (University of Oklahoma Press, 1997)

Comparative Musicology and Anthropology of Music: Essays on the History of Ethnomusicology
Bruno Nettl, ed. (University of Chicago Press, 1991)

The Complete Guide to the Music of Bob Marley
Ian McCann (Omnibus Press, 1995)

Dancing in Your Head: Jazz, Blues, Rock, and Beyond
Gene Santoro (Oxford University Press, 1994)

Dancing Prophets: Musical Experience in Tumbuka Healing
Steven M. Friedson (University of Chicago Press, 1996)

The Dave Matthews Band: Step into the Light
Morgan Delancey (ECW Press, 1998)

A Day for the Hunter a Day for the Prey: Popular Music and Power in Haiti
Gage Averill (University of Chicago Press, 1997)

Didgeridoo: Ritual Origins and Playing Techniques
Dirk Schellberg (Samuel Weiser, 1996)

The Drummer's Path: Moving the Spirit with Ritual and Traditional Drumming
Sule Greg Wilson (Inner Traditions International Ltd., 1992)

Engendering Song: Singing and Subjectivity at Prespa Albanian Weddings
Jane C. Sugarman (University of Chicago Press, 1997)

Excursions in World Music
Bruno Nettl, ed. (Prentice Hall, 1996)

Fairportfolio—Personal Recollections of Fairport Convention from the 1967–1969 Era Kingsley Abbott (Abbott)

Fiddling for Norway: Revival and Identity
Chris Goertzen (University of Chicago Press, 1997)

Flamenco: Gypsy Dance and Music from Andalusia
Claus Schreiner, ed. (Amadeus Press, 1996)

Folk Music of China: Living Instrumental Traditions
Stephen Jones (Clarendon Press, 1999)

From Cakewalks to Concert Halls: An Illustrated History of African American Popular Music from 1895 to 1930
Thomas L. Morgan and William Barlow (Elliott & Clark Publishing, 1993)

From Swing to Soul: An Illustrated History of African American Popular Music from 1930 to 1960
William Barlow and Cheryl Finley (Black Belt Press, 1994)

Gamelan: Cultural Interaction and Musical Development in Central Java Sumarsam (University of Chicago Press, 1995)

Global Pop: World Music, World Markets
Timothy Dean Taylor (Routledge, 1997)

Griots and Griottes: Masters of Words and Music
Thomas Hale (University of Indiana Press, 1998)

The Hako: Song, Pipe, and Unity in a Pawnee Calumet Ceremony
Alice C. Fletcher (University of Nebraska Press, 1996)

The Heartbeat of Irish Music
Peter Woods (Roberts Rinehart Publishing, 1997)

A History of Arabian Music to the Xiiith Century
Henry George Farmer (Weatherhill, 1996)

A History of European Folk Music
Jan Ling (University of Rochester Press, 1997)

The Hundred Thousand Fools of God: Musical Travels in Central Asia (And Queens, New York)
Theodore Levin (Indiana University Press, 1997)

Imaging Sound: An Ethnomusicological Study of Music, Art, and Culture in Mughal India
Bonnie C. Wade (University of Chicago Press, 1998)

In Griot Time: An American Guitarist in Mali
Banning Eyre (Temple University Press, 2000)

In the Course of Performance: Studies in the World of Musical Improvisation
Bruno Nettl, ed. (University of Chicago Press, 1998)

Island Sounds in the Global City: Caribbean Popular Music & Identity in New York
Ray Allen, Lois Wilcken, and Peter Manuel, ed. (University of Illinois Press, 1998)

Jewish Musical Traditions
Amnon Shiloah (Wayne State University Press, 1992)

Juju: A Social History and Ethnography of an African Popular Music
Christopher Alan Waterman (University of Chicago Press, 1990)

Keeping Together in Time: Dance and Drill in Human History
William H. McNeill (Harvard University Press, 1997)

The Kingdom of Zydeco
Michael Tisserand (Arcade Publishing, 1998)

Knowing Music, Making Music: Javanese Gamelan and the Theory of Musical Competence and Interaction
Benjamin Brinner (University of Chicago Press, 1995)

Land Where Two Streams Flow: Music in the German-Jewish Community of Israel Philip V. Bohlman (University of Illinois Press, 1989)

books and magazines 929

Last Night's Fun: In and out of Time with Irish Music
Ciaran Carson (North Point Press, 1997)

The Latin Tinge: The Impact of Latin American Music on the United States
John Storm Roberts (Oxford University Press, 1998)

Leaving Everything Behind: The Songs and Memories of a Cheyenne Woman Bertha Little Coyote (University of Oklahoma Press, 1998)

Let Jasmine Rain Down: Song and Remembrance among Syrian Jews
Kay Kaufman Shelemay (University of Chicago Press, 1998)

Let the Good Times Roll! A Guide to Cajun & Zydeco Music
Pat Nyhan, Brian Rollins, and David Babb (Upbeat Books, 1998)

Let Your Voice Be Heard! Songs from Ghana and Zimbabwe Dumisani Maraire and Judith Cook Tucker (World Music Press, 1997)

The Life of Music in North India: The Organization of an Artistic Tradition
Daniel M. Neuman (University of Chicago Press, 1995)

Listening to Salsa: Gender, Latin Popular Music, and Puerto Rican Cultures
Frances R. Aparicio (Wesleyan University Press, 1997)

May It Fill Your Soul: Experiencing Bulgarian Music
Timothy Rice (University of Chicago Press, 1994)

Meet Me on the Ledge: Fairport Convention—The Classic Years
Patrick Humphries (Virgin Publishing, 1997)

The Mirror of the Sky: Songs of the Bauls of Bengal
Deben Bhattacharya, trans. (Hohm Press, 1999)

Music Cultures of the Pacific, the Near East, and Asia
William P. Malm (Prentice Hall College Div., 1995)

Music in Latin American Culture: Regional Traditions
John M. Schechter, ed. (Schirmer Books, 1999)

Music in the World of Islam: A Socio-Cultural Study
Amnon Shiloah (Wayne State University Press, 1995)

Music, Modernity, and the Global Imagination: South Africa and the West Veit Erlmann (Oxford University Press, 1999)

The Music of Africa
J.H. Kwabena Nketia (W.W. Norton & Company, 1974)

Music of Hindu Trinidad: Songs from the India Diaspora
Helen Myers (University of Chicago Press, 1998)

The Music of Israel: From the Biblical Era to Modern Times
Peter E. Gradenwitz (Amadeus Press, 1996)

The Music of the Arabs
Habib Hassan Toouma (Amadeus Press, 1996)

Music of the Common Tongue: Survival and Celebration in African American Music
Christopher Small (Wesleyan University Press, 1998)

Music of the Warao of Venezuela: Song People of the Rain Forest Dale A. Olsen (University Press of Florida, 1996)

Music of the Whole Earth
David Reck (Da Capo Press, 1997)

The Music, Songs, & Instruments of Ireland
Karen Farrington (Thunder Bay Press, 1998)

Musica Tejana: The Cultural Economy of Artistic Transformation
Manuel H. Pena (Texas A&M University Press, 1999)

MusicHound Blues: The Essential Album Guide
Leland Rucker, ed. (Visible Ink Press, 1998)

MusicHound Country: The Essential Album Guide
Brian Mansfield and Gary Graff, ed. (Visible Ink Press, 1997)

MusicHound Folk: The Essential Album Guide
Neal Walters and Brian Mansfield, ed. (Visible Ink Press, 1998)

MusicHound Jazz: The Essential Album Guide
Steve Holtje and Nancy Ann Lee, ed. (Visible Ink Press, 1998)

MusicHound Lounge: The Essential Album Guide to Martini Music and Easy Listening
Steve Knopper, ed. (Visible Ink Press, 1998)

MusicHound R&B: The Essential Album Guide
Gary Graff, Josh Freedom du Lac, and Jim McFarlin, ed. (Visible Ink Press, 1998)

MusicHound Rock: The Essential Album Guide
Gary Graff and Daniel Durchholz, ed. (Visible Ink Press, 1998)

MusicHound Swing: The Essential Album Guide
Steve Knopper, ed. (Visible Ink Press, 1999)

Musics of Many Cultures
Elizabeth May, ed. (University of California Press, 1983)

Musics of Multicultural America: A Study of Twelve Musical Communities
Kip Lornell and Anne K. Rasmussen, ed. (Schirmer Books, 1997)

My Music Is My Flag: Puerto Rican Musicians and Their New York Communities, 1917–1940
Ruth Glasser (University of California Press, 1997)

The Mystery of Samba: Popular Music and National Identity in Brazil
Hermano Vianna (University of North Carolina Press, 1999)

National Anthems from Around the World: The Official National Anthems, Flags, and Anthem Histories from 56 Countries
Hal Leonard, ed. (Hal Leonard Publishing Corp., 1996)

The New Age Music Guide
PJ Birosik, et al. (Macmillan/Collier, 1989)

New Perspectives on Vietnamese Music: Six Essays
Phong T. Nguyen (Yale Center, 1995)

Nightsong: Performance, Power, and Practice in South Africa
Veit Erlmann (University of Chicago Press, 1995)

930 books and magazines

On Racial Frontiers: The New Culture of Frederick Douglass, Ralph Ellison and Bob Marley
Gregory Stephens (Cambridge University Press, 1999)

A Passion for Polka: Old-Time Ethnic Music in America Victor Greene (University of California Press, 1992)

Passport to Jewish Music
Irene Heskes (Greenwood Publishing Group, 1994)

The Political Calypso: True Opposition in Trinidad and Tobago
Louis Regis (University Press of Florida, 1999)

Popular Musics of the Non-Western World: An Introductory Survey
Peter Manuel (Oxford University Press, 1990)

The Power of Black Music: Interpreting Its History from Africa to the United States
Samuel A. Floyd, Jr. (Oxford University Press, 1995)

The Power of Kiowa Song: A Collaborative Ethnography
Luke E. Lassiter (University of Arizona Press, 1998)

Raga Mala: The Autobiography of Ravi Shankar
Ravi Shankar (Intl. Book Marketing, 1999)

Reggae Bloodlines: In Search of the Music and Culture of Jamaica
Stephen Davis, Peter Simon, and Simon Peter (Da Capo Press, 1992)

Reggae Island: Jamaican Music in the Digital Age
Brian Jahn, ed. (Da Capo Press, 1998)

Reggae, Rasta, Revolution: Jamaican Music from Ska to Dub Chris Potash, ed. (Schirmer Books, 1997)

Reggae Routes: The Story of Jamaican Music
Kevin O'Brien Chang and Wayne Chen (Temple University Press, 1998)

Reggae: The Rough Guide
Steve Barrow and Peter Dalton (Rough Guides/The Penguin Group, 1997)

Rhythm Planet: The Great World Music Makers
Tom Schnabel (Universe Publishing, 1998)

Rolling Stone Album Guide
Anthony DeCurtis and James Henke, ed., with Holly George-Warren (Random House, 1992)

Roots and Branches: A Legacy of Multicultural Music for Children
Patricia Sheehan-Campbell, Ellen McCullough-Brabson, and Judith Cook-Tucker (World Music Press, 1994)

Roots of Black Music: The Vocal, Instrumental, and Dance Heritage of Africa and Black America
Ashenafi Kebede (Africa World Press, Inc., 1995)

Roots Rock Reggae: An Oral History of Reggae Music from Ska to Dancehall
Chuck Foster (Billboard Books, 1999)

Rumba: Dance and Social Change in Contemporary Cuba
Yvonne Daniels (University of Illinois Press, 1994)

Santeria: An African Religion in America
Joseph M. Murphy (Original Publications, 1951)

Sardinian Chronicles
Bernard Lortat-Jacob (University of Chicago Press, 1995)

Silent Temples, Songful Hearts: Traditional Music of Cambodia
Sam-Ang Sam and Patricia Sheehan-Campbell (World Music Press, 1991/1998)

Stir It Up: Musical Mixes from Roots to Jazz
Gene Santoro (Oxford University Press, 1997)

The Soul of Mbira: Music and Traditions of the Shona People of Zimbabwe
Paul F. Berliner (University of Chicago Press, 1993)

Sound Alliances: Indigenous Peoples, Cultural Politics and Popular Music in the Pacific Philip Hayward, ed. (Cassell Academic, 1998)

South America, Mexico, Central America, and the Caribbean (The Garland Encyclopedia of World Music, Vol. 2)
Dale A. Olson and Daniel E. Sheehy, ed. (Garland Publishing, 1998)

Southeast Asia (The Garland Encyclopedia of World Music, Vol. 4)
Terry E. Miller and Sean Williams, ed. (Garland Publishing, 1998)

Southern Cheyenne Women's Songs
Virginia Giglio and David P. McAllester (University of Oklahoma Press, 1994)

Spanish Music in the Twentieth Century
Tomas Marco (Harvard University Press, 1993)

Spirit of the First People: Native American Music Traditions of Washington State Willie Smyth and Esme Ryan, ed. (University of Washington Press, 1999)

Sufi Music of India and Pakistan: Sound, Context and Meaning in Qawwali Regula Burckhardt Qureshi (University of Chicago Press, 1995)

Swamp Pop: Cajun and Creole Rhythm and Blues
Shane K. Bernard (University Press of Mississippi, 1996)

Tejano and Regional Mexican Music
Ramiro Burr (Billboard Books, 1999)

Teton Sioux Music and Culture
Frances Densmore (University of Nebraska Press, 1992)

Tito Puente and the Making of Latin Music
Steven Loza (University of Illinois Press, 1999)

Traditional Songs of Singing Cultures: A World Sampler
Patricia Shehan Campbell, Sue Williamson, and Pierre Perron (Warner Brothers Publishing, 1997)

The Virgin Encyclopedia of Popular Music
Colin Larkin (Virgin Books, 1997)

The Voice of Egypt: Umm Kulthum, Arabic Song, and Egyptian Society in the Twentieth Century
Virginia Danielson (University of Chicago Press, 1997)

Voices in Bali: Energies and Perceptions in Vocal Music and Dance Theater Edward Herbst and Judith Becker (Wesleyan University Press, 1998)

West African Pop Roots
John Collins (Temple University Press, 1992)

The World Centre for Jewish Music in Palestine, 1936–1940: Jewish Musical Life on the Eve of World War II
Philip Vilas Bohlman (Oxford University Press, 1992)

The World Music CD Listener's Guide: The Best on CD
Howard Blumenthal (Billboard Books, 1998)

World Music: The Rough Guide
Simon Broughton, Mark Ellingham, David Muddyman, and Richard Trillo, ed. (Rough Guides/The Penguin Group, 1995)

World Musicians
Clifford Thompson, ed. (H.W. Wilson, 1999)

World of African Music
Ronnie Graham (Pluto Press, 1995)

Worlds of Music: An Introduction to the Music of the World's Peoples Jeff Todd Titon, Linda Fujie, David P. McAllester, Mark Slobin, and David Locke (Schirmer Books, 1996)

Zouk: World Music in the West Indies
Jocelyne Guilbault, Gage Averill, and Edouard Benoit (University of Chicago Press, 1993)

Zydeco
Ben Samdel (University Press of Mississippi, 1999)

Magazines

Check out the following publications for the best writing on recent and classic releases, news about concerts and resources, and profiles of the personalities and cultures behind the sounds. Some cover the world, some specialize in a corner of it, and some are general-interest publications with frequent world-music reporting.

WORLD AND FOLK

The Beat
Bongo Productions
P.O. Box 65856
Los Angeles, CA 90065 USA
E-mail: GETTHEBEAT@aol.com

Crossroads
3054 N. First Ave.
Tucson, AZ 85719 USA
E-mail: crossroads@xrm.com

Dirty Linen
P.O. Box 66600
Baltimore, MD 21239-6600 USA
Tel: (410) 583-7973
Fax: (410) 337-6735
E-mail: office@dirtylinen.com
Web site: http://www.dirtylinen.com

Folk Roots
Southern Rag Ltd.
P.O. Box 337
London N4 1TW
England
Tel: (020) 8340-9651
Fax: (020) 8348-5626
E-mail: froots@froots.demon.co.uk
Web site: http://www.froots.demon.co.uk

Irish Music Magazine
11 Clare St.
Dublin 2
Ireland
Tel: (01) 6624887
Fax: (01) 6624886
E-mail: irishmusic@mayo-ireland.ie
Web site: http://www.mayo-ireland.ie/IrishMusic.htm

Latin Beat Magazine
15900 Crenshaw Blvd., Ste. 1-223
Gardena, CA 90249 USA
Tel: (310) 516-6767
Fax: (310) 516-9916

Reggae & Global Music Report
P.O. Box 2722
Hallandale, FL 33008-2722 USA
Tel: (305) 933-1178
Fax: (305) 933-1077
E-mail: ReggaeRprt@aol.com

Rhythm Magazine
World Marketing Inc.
928 Broadway, Ste. 204
New York, NY 10010-6008 USA
Tel: (212) 253-7102

Sing Out!
P.O. Box 5253
Bethlehem, PA 18015-0253 USA
Tel: (610)-865-5366
E-mail: info@singout.org
Web site: http://www.singout.org

Songlines
c/o Gramophone Publications Ltd.
135 Greenford Rd.
Sudbury Hill
Harrow, Middlesex HA1 3YD
England
Tel: (0181) 422-4562
E-mail: songlines@gramophone.co.uk
Web site: http://www.gramophone.co.uk

World Music
AASA Publications
P.O. Box 14123
London W12 9WW
England

GENERAL

Billboard
1515 Broadway
New York, NY 10036 USA
Tel: (212) 764-7300
Web site: http://www.billboard.com

CMJ New Music Report
11 Middle Neck Rd., Ste. 400
Great Neck, NY 11021-2301 USA
Tel: (516) 466-6000
Fax: (516) 466-7159
E-mail: cmj@cmjmusic.com
Web site: http://www.cmj.com

ICE
P.O. Box 3043
Santa Monica, CA 90408
Tel: (800) 647-4ICE

NAPRA ReVIEW
P.O. Box 9
6 Eastsound Sq.
Eastsound, WA 98245 USA
Tel: (360) 376-2702
E-mail: napra@napra.com

Pulse!
2500 Del Monte St.
West Sacramento, CA 95691 USA
Tel: (916) 373-2450
Web site: http://www.towerrecords.com/pulse

Raygun
2110 Main St., Ste. 100
Santa Monica, CA 90405-2276 USA
Tel: (310) 452-6222

Request
10400 Yellow Circle Dr.
Minnetonka, MN 55343 USA
Tel: (612) 931-8740

The Rocket
2028 Fifth Ave.
Seattle, WA 98121 USA
Tel: (206) 728-7625

Rolling Stone
1290 Avenue of the Americas, 2nd Fl.
New York, NY 10104 USA
Tel: (212) 484-1616
Web site: http://rollingstone.com

Spin
6 W. 18th St., 8th Fl.
New York, NY 10011-4608 USA
Tel: (212) 633-8200

Vibe
205 Lexington Ave., 3rd Fl.
New York, NY 10016 USA
Tel: (212) 522-7092

The virtual world provides an extensive map to the real one, and the global chat-room is one of the best ways for cultures to cross and fans to keep up with the far-flung rewards of world music. The Web is ever-changing and ever-expanding, but here's a good list of sites—on specific artists and bands, styles and regions of music, or general-interest information with a strong world-music component—to get you started. You'll find recreational, research, and commercial content—as with any topic on the Web, there are as many kinds of sites as there are subjects to be enthused about. Don't forget to check for additional URLs (Web site addresses) of record labels and publications in our other Resources lists!

Artists

King Sunny Adé
http://www.mediaport.net/Music/Artistes/king_sunny_ade/index.en.html

Alabina
http://www.alabina.com/

Albita
http://www.yuca.com/albita.htm

Herb Alpert
http://www.almosounds.com/herbalpert/

Altan
http://www.altan.ie/

Robin Adnan Anders
http://quantumweb.com/robin/

Laurie Anderson
http://agape.trilidun.org/la/http://www.cc.gatech.edu/~jimmyd/laurie-anderson/

Anggun
http://www.anggun.com/anggun/c_une_e.html

Marc Anthony
http://www.marcanthonyonline.com/http://albertos.com/bands/MarcAnthony/MarcAnthony.html http://members.aol.com/merenbooty/Marc.html

Dan Ar Braz
http://www.execpc.com/~henkle/fbindex/a/arbras_dan.html

Arcady
http://publish.uwo.ca/~eegraing/arcady/

Ray Barretto
http://www.bluenote.com/barretto.html

Battlefield Band
http://www.rootsworld.com/temple/battlefield/index.htm

Mario Bauzá
http://www.waypages.com/music/jazz/legends/B/Mario_Bauza.HTM

Keola Beamer
http://www.kbeamer.com/

Beausoleil
http://www.rosebudus.com/beausoleil/

Francis Bebey
http://www.uflib.ufl.edu/hss/africana/bebey.html

Maria Bethânia
http://www.dnai.com/~emc/pryngo/brasil/bahia2.htm
http://www.so-brazil.com/bio/bethania.html http://www.gilbertogil.com.br/bio/eb2bet.htm

Frances Black
http://house-of-music.com/frances/index.shtml

Mary Black
http://www.celts.dk/mblack/

Black 47
http://www.black47.com/
http://www.geocities.com/SunsetStrip/Frontrow/2794/

Ruben Blades
http://www.amherst.edu/~dshender/ruben.html

Alpha Blondy
http://www.alphablondy.com/

Boom Shaka
http://www.boomshaka.com/

Boukan Ginen
http://miloz.com/artist/b/boukan_ginen.cfm

Boukman Eksperyans
http://www.boukman.com

9 3 4 web sites

Robin Huw Bowen
http://www.ceolas.org/artists/Huw_Bowen.html

David Bowie
http://www.davidbowie.com/http://www.algonet.se/~bassman/BOWIE.html
http://www.bowiefans.com/http://www.bowiewonderworld.com/http://www.users.cts.com/crash/p/phil/bowielps.html

Boys of the Lough
http://www.ceolas.org/artists/Boys_of_the_Lough.html

Brave Old World
http://braveoldworld.com/

Michael Brook
http://the-fringe.com/brook/

Buckwheat Zydeco
http://www.buckwheatzydeco.com/

David Byrne
http://www.talking-heads.net/davidbyrne/

Cachao
http://www.geocities.com/TheTropics/Cabana/9683

Café Tacuba
http://www.cafetacuba.com.mx/

Capercaille
http://www.capercaillie.co.uk/

Hari Prasad Chaurasia
http://www.aoe.vt.edu/~boppe/MUSIC/GM/HI/Hariprasad.html

C.J. Chenier
http://www.thefuturenow.com/ce/chenier

The Chieftains
http://www.escape.ca/~skinner/chieftains/chief.html
http://www.cybercomm.net/~executor/chieftains.html

The Clancy Bros and Tommy Makem/Liam Clancy http://www.clancymusic.com/

Clannad
http://www.jtwinc.com/clannad/

Willie Colon
http://www.williecolon.com/

Ry Cooder
http://www.geocities.com/BourbonStreet/Delta/7969/

Cornershop
http://www.wbr.com/cornershop/

Coyote Oldman
http://www.coyoteoldman.com/

Celia Cruz
http://members.aol.com/Salsoso/index.html

¡Cubanismo!
http://www.rosebudus.com/cubanismo/http://www.sastom.demon.nl/cubanismo/

De Dannan
http://www.ceolas.org/artists/De_Dannan.html

Dead Can Dance/Lisa Gerrard
http://www.nets.com/dcd/http://www.meniscusdesign.com/dcdold.html
http://members.aol.com/midevlman/dcd.htm http://www.lisa-gerrard.com/cmp/d-index-ns-alt.htm

Deep Forest
http://members.xoom.com/_XOOM/deepforest/index.html
http://home.sol.no/~perta/dforest/dforest.html http://www.spikes.com/worldmix/

Sandy Denny
http://www.informatik.uni-hamburg.de/~zierke/sandy.denny/

Dervish
http://www.geocities.com/Paris/Metro/3858/dervish.html

Diblo Dibala
http://www.mediaport.net/Music/Artistes/diblo_dibala/index.en.html

Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band
http://www.drloco.com/

Connie Dover
http://www.celticmusic.com/connie_dover/

The Dubliners
http://www.astro.durge.org/dubliners.html

The Dynatones
http://www.dynatones.com/

Brian Eno
http://www.hyperreal.org/music/artists/brian_eno/http://www.spies.com/Eno/Enohome.html

Enya
http://www.celts.dk/enya/http://homepages.enterprise.net/kbb/EnyaLinks.html

Gloria Estefan
http://www.estefan.net/http://www.epiccenter.com/EpicCenter/custom/56/http://www.gloriafan.com/http://www.almetco.com/estefan/gloria-1.html

Cesaria Evora
http://www.caboverde.com/evora/evora.htm
http://www.there1.com/cesaria.html

Jose Feliciano
http://www.fantasticfeliciano.com/

Fortuna
http://www.rahul.net/hrmusic/discos/fdisc.html

Peter Gabriel
http://www.geffen.com/gabriel/http://www.biggben.com/pg/home.html http://www.intercenter.net/~jnu/pg/

Gamelan Son of Lion
http://members.aol.com/gsol1/main.html

Carlos Gardel
http://www.lvd.com.ar/Gardel/principal.htm

Gilberto Gil
http://www.GilbertoGil.com.br/

Astrud Gilberto
http://www.gregmar.com/astrud.htm

The Gipsy Kings
http://www.gipsykings.com/http://www.treefort.org/~bish/gkings/

Great Big Sea
http://www.greatbigsea.com/

Juan Luis Guerra
http://www.sdhumo.com/

Joy Harjo & Poetic Justice
http://www.hanksville.org/PJ/

George Harrison
http://web.mit.edu/scholvin/www/harrison/harrison.html http://www.bekkoame.or.jp/~garp/hari/george.htm

Mickey Hart
http://grateful.dead.net/band_members/mickey/index.html

Ofra Haza
http://www.ofrahaza.com/

Hedningarna
http://membersttheglobe.com/hedningarna/

Tish Hinojosa
http://www.io.com/~dsmith/tish/frames.html

Sol Hoopii
http://www.well.com/user/wellvis/hoopii.html

The House Band
http://www.ceolas.org/artists/House_Band.html

Huun-Huur-Tu
http://www.huunhuurtu.com/

Indigenous
http://www.indigenousrocks.com/

Andy Irvine
http://www.ceolas.org/artists/Andy_Irvine.html

Israel Vibration
http://incolor.inetnebr.com/cvanpelt/IVibes.html http://www.outersound.com/band/israel/bio.htm

Antonio Carlos Jobim
http://nortemag.com/tom/http://photoshoptips.i-us.com/Estrada.htm

Beau Jocque
http://www.iei.net/~drifter/blues/beaujocque.html

Junoon
http://www.junoon.com/
http://www.angelfire.com/pa/junoonie/

Maria Kalaniemi
http://www.hoedown.com/html/mariak.html

Pépé Kallé
http://www.mediaport.net/Music/Artistes/pepe_kalle/index.en.html

Mory Kanté
http://www.mediaport.net/Music/Artistes/mory_kante/index.en.html

Doug Kershaw
http://www2.dougkershaw.com/dougkershaw/

Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan
http://www.nfak.com/

Khenany
http://www.khenany.com

Angélique Kidjo
http://wwwusers.imaginet.fr/~kidjo/

Kíla
http://www.kila.ie/www/home/

King Changó
http://www.wbr.com/kingchango/

King Tubby
http://www.furious.com/perfect/kingtubby.html

Klezmer Conservatory Band
http://www.aaronconcert.com/acm/kcb.htm

Kodo
http://www.sme.co.jp/Music/Info/KODO/

Kronos Quartet
http://www.kronosquartet.org/http://www.lochnet.com/client/gs/kq.html

Fela Kuti
http://www.ccnet.com/~caldeira/fela.html

La Mafia
http://www.lamafia.com/

Ladysmith Black Mambazo
http://www.mambazo.com/http://www.singers.com/ladysmith.html

Mary Jane Lamond
http://www.chatsubo.com/mjlamond/

Daniel Lanois
http://www.sfbayconcerts.com/lanois/home.html

Bill Laswell
http://www.hyperreal.org/music/labels/axiom/

Leahy
http://www.geocities.com/~leahynet/http://www.openface.ca/~congo/leahy1.html

Dan Levenson & Kim Murley
http://www.folknet.org/dan

Yungchen Lhamo
http://realworld.on.net/rwr/release/lhamo/yungchen1.html http://tibet.cyborganic.com/yungchen/

Kevin Locke
http://www.kevinlocke.com/

Jennifer Lopez
http://www.jenniferlopez.com/http://www.jenlopezfan.net/http://jenniferlopez.toocool.com/

Los Lobos
http://www.mindspring.com/~krazyfish/loslobos/index.htm
http://www.wbr.com/loslobos/

Baaba Maal
http://members.home.net/baaba/

Dougie MacLean
http://www.ceolas.org/artists/Dougie_MacLean.html
http://home.wish.net/~nisto/index.html http://www.samusic.com/pro-macl.shtml

Natalie MacMaster
http://nataliemacmaster.com/

Mad Lion
http://www.jetpack.com/loungeo2/beats/mad_prof/index.html

Madness
http://www.madness.co.uk/http://www.jabba.demon.co.uk/madness/

Taj Mahal
http://www.hawaiian.net/~sparrow/taj.htm
http://www.taj-mo-roots.com/

Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens
http://www.gallo.co.za/gmi/mahlat.htm http://www.mediaport.net/AeS/4/4_95_39.en.html

Bob Marley
http://www.bobmarley.com/http://www.aramagic.com/lounge/bob_marley.html http://www.livemarley.com/index.htm http://members.aol.com/travisnd/page/index.htm http://www.bobmarley-foundation.com/main.html http://www.geocities.com/SunsetStrip/9162/http://www.angelfire.com/al/tuffsframe/indexOLD.html

Ziggy Marley
http://www.melodymakers.com/

Ricky Martin
http://www.rickymartin.com/http://www.rickymartinymasintl.com/
http://members.tripod.com/~Maria_Lajos/rickring.html

Dave Matthews Band
http://www.dmband.com/http://www.geocities.com/~bestofwa/http://dancies.simplenet.com/

936 web sites

Maxwell Street Klezmer Band
http://members.aol.com/maxwellst/index.htm

Eileen McGann
http://www.canuck.com/~jscown/mcgann/index.html

Loreena McKennitt
http://www.quinlanroad.com/http://www.geocities.com/Vienna/2044/http://www.wbr.com/mckennitt/

Milladoiro
http://www.ceolas.org/artists/Milladoiro.html

Mick Moloney
http://www.ceolas.org/artists/Mick_Moloney.html http://www.irishfolkloretours.com http://www.geocities.com/BourbonStreet/3034/Mick.html

Marisa Monte
http://www.marisamonte.com/

Christy Moore
http://www.christymoore.net/http://www.ceolas.org/artists/Christy_Moore/

Sabah Habas Mustapha
http://members.aol.com/sabahhabas

Youssou N'Dour
http://www.khm.de/~oblaum/youssou/http://w3.to/youssou-ndour

Nightnoise
http://www.ceolas.org/artists/Nightnoise.html

Nordan Project
http://www.bahnhof.se/~kario/nordan.htm

Clara Nunes
http://www.slipcue.com/music/brazil/nunes.htm http://www.asahi-net.or.jp/~uh6k-ogr/clara/disc.html

Sinéad O'Connor
http://www.engr.ukans.edu/~jrussell/music/sinead/sinead.html http://www.geocities.com/SunsetStrip/Backstage/9922/http://www.sinead-oconnor.com/

Oku Onuora
http://www.escape.com/~dred/

Oyster Band
http://www.sussex.ac.uk/Users/kcci1/Oysterband/

Ozomatli
http://home.earthlink.net/~phatbass/Ozomatli/index.html
http://www2.crosswinds.net/los-angeles/~ozogirl/

Eddie Palmieri
http://www.berkeleyagency.com/palmieri.html http://home.dti.net/warr/palmieri.html http://www.lamusica.com/eddiep.htm

Margareta Paslaru
http://www.margareta.com

Peatbog Faeries
http://www.peatbog-faeries.com/

Perfect Thyroid
http://www.perfectthyroid.com http://www.rpi.edu/~uedad/PT/http://www.isc.rit.edu/~rrso682/skunk.html

Itzhak Perlman
http://www.geocities.com/Vienna/1066/perlman.html

Lee "Scratch" Perry
http://www.leeperry.com/
http://homepage.oanet.com/sleeper/scratch.htm

Astor Piazzolla
http://www.rootsworld.com/rw/feature/astor.html
http://www.piazzolla.org/

Planxty
http://www.ceolas.org/artists/Planxty.html

The Pogues/Shane MacGowan
http://www.pogues.com/http://users.terabit.net/todea/http://www.ferrie.demon.co.uk/pogues/index.htm http://www.csc.liv.ac.uk/~laurence/macgowan.html http://www.dzm.com/pogues/

The Police/Sting
http://www.sting.demon.nl/
http://www.stingchronicity.co.uk/http://stingetc.com/index.html
http://www.concentric.net/~donsden/http://www.newwave.net/~ghawk/sting/sting.html

Tito Puente
http://home.earthlink.net/~spaceagepop/puente.htm
http://www.onlinetalent.com/Puentes_Allstars_homepage.html

Shabba Ranks
http://www.epiccenter.com/EpicCenter/docs/artistupdate.qry?artistid=137

Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys
http://lafourche.k12.la.us/teymard/steveriley/

Steve Roach
http://www.steveroach.com/

Robbie Robertson
http://theband.hiof.no/band_members/robbie.html

Tabu Ley Rochereau
http://www.chl.ca/JamMusicArtistsR/rochereau.html

Silvio Rodríguez
http://spin.com.mx/~hvelarde/Cuba/Silvio/

Linda Ronstadt
http://users.powernet.co.uk/skeyes/dedicatedtolinda/index.html http://www.ais-gwd.com/~tpartridge/http://ourworld.compuserve.com/homepages/eric_herni/guest.htm
http://suzann.com/music/ronstadt.htm

Adam Rudolph
http://www.metarecords.com

Runrig
http://www.mockett.net/runrig.html http://www.netspace.org/~ehane/runrig.html

Buffy Sainte-Marie
http://www.aloha.net/~bsm/http://www.vanguardrecords.com/buffy/http://www.cradleboard.org

Samite
http://www.samite.com/

Poncho Sanchez
http://www.ponchosanchez.com/

Mongo Santamaria
http://www.onlinetalent.com/Mongo_Santamaria_homepage.html

Santana
http://www.santana.com/
http://www.csv.warwick.ac.uk/~amuet/santana.html http://www.geocities.com/SunsetStrip/Palms/6009/santana.html

Selena
http://www.selenaetc.com/http://sourcetribute.com/http://sophie.allan.org/roseanne/selena.html

http://www.caller.com/selena/selena.htm
http://www.geocities.com/SunsetStrip/Stage/2192/http://www.hotshotdigital.com/WellAlwaysRemember/Selena.html

Seven Nations
http://www.sevennations.com/

Shaggy
http://users.iafrica.com/p/pa/pantsula/shaggy.htm

L. Shankar
http://www.geocities.com/BourbonStreet/6789/shankar.html

Ravi Shankar
http://www.ravishankar.org/http://www.gl.umbc.edu/~achatt1/Bio/ravisankar.html http://www.datanet.hu/bau-dok/rimpa/http://users.aol.com/tiedyejr/life/ravi/ravi.html

Sharon Shannon
http://www.ceolas.org/artists/Sharon_Shannon.html

Shiv Kumar Sharma
http://www.santoor.com/

Joanne Shenandoah
http://www.joanneshenandoah.com/

Paul Simon
http://www.wbr.com/paulsimon/http://www.best.com/~rlai/Paul-Simon.html
http://paulsimon.org/

The Skatalites
http://www.skatalites.com/

Sly & Robbie
http://slyrob.3va.net/

Spearhead
http://hollywoodandvine.com/spearhead/

The Specials
http://www.thespecials.com/

Steeleye Span
http://ourworld.compuserve.com/homepages/RichardHollis/

Alan Stivell
http://www.ceolas.org/artists/Stivell.html

Strunz and Farah
http://www.strunzandfarah.com/

Yma Sumac
http://www.accesscom.com/~pc/sumac/

Dave Swarbrick
http://ourworld.compuserve.com/homepages/sjsheldon/swarb.htm
http://hum2mac1.murdoch.edu.au/watersons/swarb.html

Sweeney's Men
http://www.ceolas.org/artists/Sweeneys_Men.html

Sweet Honey in the Rock
http://www.sweethoney.com/

Philip Nchipe Tabane
http://www.music.org.za/artists/malombo.htm

Talking Heads
http://www.talking-heads.net/http://penguin.cc.ukans.edu/Heads/Talking_Heads.html http://www.xs4all.nl/~hornstra/hilmusic.htm

Tannahill Weavers
http://www.ceolas.org/artists/Tannies/http://ourworld.compuserve.com/homepages/tannahill_weavers/

Tarika
http://www.froots.demon.co.uk//tarika.html

Texas Tornados
http://www.borderfest.com/texas.htm
http://www.xanadu2.net/rrogers/tornados.html

Mikis Theodorakis
http://members.aol.com/gwagner373/mikihome/index.htm

Third World
http://www.thirdworldband.com/

Richard & Linda Thompson
http://www.thebeesknees.com/bk-rt-bi.html http://www.amug.org/~deeg1225/http://www.alphalink.com.au/~sfy/RT/http://people.netcom.co.uk/r.kendrick/rt/

3 Mustaphas 3
http://www.lochnet.com/client/gs/3m3.html

Trance Mission
http://www.cot.com/Trance.mission/index.html

John Trudell
http://www.planet-peace.org/trudell/

Värttinä
http://www.hoedown.com/html/varttina.html

Walela
http://www.Walela.com/

The Waterboys/Mike Scott
http://www.ceolas.org/artists/Waterboys.html http://bath.future.easyspace.com/

Paul Winter
http://www.livingmusic.com/

Stevie Wonder
http://student-www.uchicago.edu/users/jrgenzen/stevie.html
http://darkwing.uoregon.edu/~thierry/wonder/wonder.html http://www.xmission.com/~dan_nan/wonder/stevie.html

Gary Wright
http://www.thedreamweaver.com/

Stomu Yamash'ta
http://www.geocities.com/Tokyo/7011/sy.html

Yothu Yindi
http://www.yothuyindi.com/

Benjamin Zephaniah
http://www.oneworld.org/zephaniah/

Other World Music–Related Sites (Styles, Regions, Schools, Stores, and More!)

Accretions
http://www.accretions.com/

Africa
http://biochem.chem.nagoya-u.ac.jp/~endo/africa.html

African Music Archive http://www.uni-mainz.de/~bender/

African Music Encyclopedia http://africanmusic.org/

Afro-Caribbean Musics
http://www.mediaport.net/Music/index.en.html

Afropop Worldwide
http://www.afropop.org

Ali Akbar College of Music
http://www.nbn.com/~aacm/

All Music Guide
http://www.allmusic.com

Amazon.com
http://www.amazon.com/music

938 web sites

Ancient Music of Ireland
http://services.worldnet.net/~pybertra/ceol/

Appalachian Music and Arts
http://www.whistlepig.com

Appalachian Music Archives
http://www.pitt.edu/~gebanks/pers/oldtime.html

Arabic Music Info Source http://members.aol.com/amisource/

Asia CD
http://www.asiacd.com/

Australian Institute of Eastern Music http://www.ozemail.com.au/~dukewalk/

Balkan Tunes
http://deepthought.armory.com/~cope/balkantunes barnesandnoble.com

http://www.bn.com

Bembe Records
http://www.bembe.com/

Billboard Magazine
http://www.billboard.com

BMG Music Service
http://www.bmgmusicservice.com

Borders.com
http://www.borders.com/music

BrazilianMusic.com
http://brazilianmusic.com/

Broadcast.com
http://www.broadcast.com

Cajun French Music Association http://www.cajunfrenchmusic.org/

Cajun/Zydeco Music & Dance
http://www.bme.jhu.edu/~jrice/cz.html

Cathals Irish Music
http://indigo.ie/~chick/

CD Universe
http://www.cduniverse.com

CDnow
http://www.cdnow.com

Celtic Christian Music Index
http://www.open.org/~curtis/celtxian.htm

Celtic Connections
http://www.celticconnections.co.uk/

Celtic Peak
http://www.collins-peak.co.uk/celtic/

Celtic Resources
http://www.geocities.com/SunsetStrip/Palladium/7358/

Celtic Wonder
http://w3.to/celticwonder/

CelticMusic.com
http://www.celticmusic.com/artists.html

Celts.dk
http://www.celts.dk/celts/

Ceol
http://www.ceol.ie/

Ceolas
http://www.ceolas.org/ceolas.html

Columbia House Music Club
http://www.columbiahouse.com

Comhaltas Ceoltóirí Éireann
http://cce.irish-music.net/CCE.htm

Compact Disc Connection http://www.cdconnection.com

Culburnie Records
http://www.culburnie.com/

Dancehall Reggae Productions http://www.dancehallreggae.com/

Alain Danielou
http://www.alaindanielou.org/

Ari Davidow's Klezmer Shack
http://www.well.com/user/ari/klez/

Dirty Linen
http://www.dirtynelson.com/linen/

Driftweb
http://www.wnur.org/drift/

Dub and Reggae Music
http://usuarios.intercom.es/grgsvi/index.htm

East African Music
http://hometown.aol.com/dpaterson/eamusic.htm

East Asian Music
http://www.medieval.org/music/world/asia.html

Ejaness Reggae Comprehensive http://www.reggaecd.com

Flamenco World
http://www.flamenco-world.com/

400 Years
http://incolor.inetnebr.com/cvanpelt/Years.html

Global Beat
http://www.globalbeat.com/

Global Dragon
http://www.globaldragon.com/

Global Music Centre
http://www.globalmusic.fi/index.html

Guide to Classical Indian/Jazz Fusion http://www.nitehawk.com/alleycat/indyjazz.html

Hoobellatoo (Beautiful People)
http://www.hoobellatoo.org

Hot Salsa
http://www.chez.com/abri/a/index.htm

ICE Magazine
http://www.icemagazine.com

Interceltique
http://www.azimut-com.fr/interceltique/

International Music Archives
http://www.eyeneer.com/World/index.html

Ireland Music List
http://home.wirehub.nl/~taco/

Irish Music Box
http://www.dojo.ie/musicbox/

Irish Music Net
http://www.imn.ie/

Irish Music Page
http://www.geocities.com/SouthBeach/Marina/4870/music.html

Irish Traditional Music Archive http://www.itma.ie/home/itmae1.htm

Irish World Music Center
http://www.ul.ie/~iwmc/HomePage.html

Isle of Music Festival
http://www.manxradio.com/

Jammin Reggae Archives
http://niceup.com/

LaMusica.com! (Latin Music On-Line)
http://209.73.224.4/index.htm

LatinoLink
http://www.latinolink.com

Mizik
http://www.unik.no/~robert/mizik/mizik.html

Motion Records
http://www.motionrecords.com/

The MPB Zone: Musica Popular Brasileira
http://members.aol.com/thempbzone/index.html

Music Web Ireland
http://www.musweb.com/

NahenaheNet
http://www.interpac.net/~nahenahe/

Netropolis Records
http://www.motor-city.com/tomb/NetropolisRecords.html

New Native
http://www.wcpworld.com/native/sounds.htm

Northern Journey Online (Canadian Folk Music)
http://www.interlog.com/~njo

Oasis Salsero
http://www.chez.com/abri/a/index.htm

Peace through World Music http://rhythmweb.com/peace/

Pierre's Cajun Record Shop
http://www.winningways.com/pierre/

Planet Ireland
http://www.geocities.com/Broadway/Alley/8686/index.html

RAS Records
http://www.erols.com/hwilliam//ras1.html

RealAudio
http://www.real.com

A Recorded Anthology of Indonesian Music http://www.inform.umd.edu/EdRes/ReadingRoom/Newsletters/EthnoMusicology/Archive/cdindo-project

Reggae Ambassadors Worldwide
http://www.coolcrew.com/RAW/index.html

Reggae.com
http://www.reggae.com/

Reggae Links
http://www.ireggae.com/reggae.htm

Reggae Ring
http://www.reggaering.org/

Reggae Web
http://www.reggaeweb.com/

Riddim Music
http://www.riddim.com/

Riggadig Records
http://www.riggadig.com/

Robi Droli New Tone Records
http://web.inrete.it/robidroli/home.html

Rootsworld
http://www.rootsworld.com

Russian Reggae Rasta Roots Review
http://www.zhurnal.ru:8083/music/rasta/links.html

Salsa Mundo
http://www.salsamundo.com/

Salsa-Music
http://www.telebyte.nl/~ramirez/index.htm

Salsa Stories
http://www.si.umich.edu/CHICO/MHN/Salsa/index.html

Salsa Talks
http://www.digido.com/salsatalks.html

Salsaweb
http://www.salsaweb.com/

Scotdisc
http://www.scotdisc.co.uk/

Scotmusic
http://www.chased.demon.co.uk/

Scottish Music Index
http://www.netreal.co.uk/music/index.htm

Scottish Music Information Centre http://www.music.gla.ac.uk/HTMLFolder/Resources/SMIC/homepage.html

Secret Museum of the Air http://www.wfmu.org

Skuntry
http://www.skuntry.com/home.cfm

Sonic Safaris
http://www.jonkey.com/

SummerStage
http://www.SummerStage.org

Talking Drum Reggae http://www.erols.com/hwilliam/

Tejano Home Page
http://www.ondanet.com/tejano/tejano.html

Tim's World Music Info
http://www.duke.edu/~td/music.htm

To Didgeridoo or not Didgeridu http://mail.cruzio.com/~cosker/didgerido.htm

Total E
http://www.totalE.com

Tower Records
http://www.towerrecords.com

Triloka
http://www.triloka.com/

Trojan Records
http://www.trojan-records.com/

Tunes.com
http://www.tunes.com

Ultimate Band List
http://www.ubl.com

unfURLed
http://www.unfurled.com

Wall of Sound
http://www.wallofsound.com

World Flamenco
http://www.Flamenco.org/

World Music Forum
http://one-rbs-plaza.com/220wmusic/

World Music Fusion Music Links
http://www.ancient-future.com/links/index.html

World Music Institute
http://www.HearTheWorld.org

World-Wide Samba Home Page http://www.worldsamba.org/

Zyde.com
http://members.aol.com/zydecom/page1.htm

The Zydeco Road
http://frontpage.erie.net/tex/zydeco.htm

Zydeco Underground
http://www.zydecomusic.com/

ZydE-Magic Cajun/Zydeco Web Page
http://www.nmaa.org/member/ghayman

The following are just some of the record labels that let you hear the world: labels that specialize in international music outside the mainstream, or focus on one or a few particular cultures, or are industry giants with strong world-music divisions and offerings. You may want to contact some of these labels if you have questions regarding specific releases. It's good to keep up with resources like the publications and organizations in our other appendixes, to keep track of what albums are being released by which companies—some world artists have scores or even hundreds of albums, not all on the same label, not all released in this country, and not all in print at a given time. This list will get you off to a good start! (If one item below refers you to another, it means that the first label is affiliated with the second.)

A&M Records
1416 N. La Brea Ave.
Hollywood, CA 90028 USA
Tel: (213) 469-2411
Fax: (213) 856-2600
Web site: www.amrecords.com

Ace Records
E-mail: info@acerecords.co.uk
Web site: www.acerecords.co. uk

Acoustic Disc
PO Box 4143
San Rafael, CA 94913 USA
Tel: (800) 221-DISC (3472)
E-mail: cmmang@idt.net
Web site: www.dawgnet.com

Africassette Music
PO Box 24941
Detroit, MI 48224 USA
Tel: (313) 881-4108
Fax: (313) 881-0260
E-mail: rsteiger@africassette.com Web site: www.africassette.com

akku disk
Music Contact Musikverlag
Saarstr. 8
D-72070 Tübingen
Germany
Tel: 49 7073 2250
Fax: 49 7073 2134
E-mail: zellner@musiccontact.com
Web site: www.musiccontact.com

Alam Madina Music Productions
74 Broadmoor Ave.
San Anselmo, CA 94960 USA
Tel: (415) 456-5963
E-mail: info@ammp.com
Web site: www.ammp.com/records.html

Allegro
14134 NE Airport Way
Portland, OR 97230-3443 USA
Tel: (800) 288-2007
Fax: (503) 257-9061
Web site: www.allegro-music.com

Alligator Records
PO Box 60234
Chicago, IL 60660 USA
Tel: (773) 973-7736
Fax: (773) 973-2088
E-mail: info@allig.com
Web site: www.alligator.com

Almo Sounds
360 N. La Cienega Blvd.
Los Angeles, CA 90048-1925 USA
Tel: (310) 289-3080
Fax: (310) 289-8662
Web site: www.almosounds.com

Al Sur/Media 7
15, Rue des Goulvents
92000 Nanterre
France

Alula Records
PO Box 62043
Durham, NC 27715-2043 USA
Tel: (919) 416-9454
Fax: (919) 286-1788
E-mail: alulamedia@aol.com
Web site: www.alula.com

American Clave
See: Rounder Records

Amiata Media
PO Box 405
Chappaqua, NY 10514 USA
Tel: (914) 238-5943
Fax: (914) 238-5944
E-mail: audio@computer.net
Web site: www.amiatamedia.it

Angel Records
810 Seventh Ave., 4th Fl.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 603-8700
Fax: (212) 603-8648

Antilles Records
555 West 57th St., 10th Fl.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Web site: www.antillesnet.com

Appleseed Recordings
PO Box 2593
West Chester, PA 19380 USA
E-mail: folkradicl@aol.com
Web site: www.appleseedrec.com

ARC Music Productions International
PO Box 111
East Grinstead
West Sussex RH 19 4FZ
England
Tel: 44 1342 312161
Fax: 44 1342 325209
E-mail: robert@arcmusic.co.uk
Web site: www.arcmusic.co.uk

942 record labels

ARC Music US
PO Box 2453
Clearwater, FL 34617-2453 USA
Tel: (813) 447 3755
Fax: (813) 447 3820
E-mail: arcamerica@ij.net
Web site: www.arcmusic.co.uk

Arhoolie Productions, Inc.
10341 San Pablo Ave.
El Cerrito, CA 94530 USA
Tel: (510) 525-7471
Fax: (510) 525-1204
E-mail: mail@arhoolie.com
Web site: www.arhoolie.com

Arista Records
6 W. 57th St.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 489-7400
Fax: (212) 830-2238
E-mail: info@aristarec.com
Web site: www.aristarec.com

Ariwa
34 Whitehorse Ln.
London SE25 6RE
England
Tel: 44 208 6537744
Fax: 44 208 7711911
E-mail: info@ariwa.com
Web site: www.ariwa.com

Artists Only! Records
477 Madison Ave., 10th Fl.
New York, NY 10022 USA
E-mail: aor@artistsonly.com
Web site: www.artistsonly.com

Astor Place Recordings
740 Broadway
New York, NY 10003
E-mail: Astorinfo@aol.com
Web site: www.astorplace.com

Atlantic Recording Corporation
1290 Avenue of the Americas
New York, NY 10104 USA
Tel: (212) 707-2000
Fax: (212) 405-5507
E-mail: web@atlantic-records.com
Web site: www.atlantic-records.com

Avant
See: Koch International

Axiom Records
400 Lafayette St., 5th Fl.
New York, NY 10003 USA
Web site: www.hyperreal.org/music/labels/axiom

Bar/None Records
PO Box 1704
Hoboken, NJ 07030 USA
Tel: (201) 795-9424
Fax: (201) 795-5048
E-mail: info@bar-none.com
Web site: www.bar-none.com

Barking Pumpkin Records
PO Box 5265
North Hollywood, CA 91616-5265 USA
Tel: (818) 755-3700
Fax: (818) 761-7773

Beautiful Jo Records
86 Marlborough Rd.
Oxford OX1 4LS
England
Tel: 44 1865 249194
Fax: 44 1865 792765
E-mail: info@bejo.co.uk
Web site: www.bejo.co.uk

Black Top Records
PO Box 56691
New Orleans, LA 70156 USA
Tel: (504) 895-7239
Fax: (504) 891-1510

Blind Pig Records
PO Box 2344
San Francisco, CA 94126 USA
Tel: (415) 550-6484
Fax: (415) 550-6485
E-mail: blindpigs@aol.com
Web site: www.blindpigrecords.com/

Blix Street Records
11715 Blix St.
N. Hollywood, CA 91607-4004 USA
E-mail: blixstreet@aol.com
Web site: www.blixstreet.com/

Blood and Fire
Ducie House
37 Ducie St.
Manchester M1 2JW
England
E-mail: info@bandf.u-net.com
Web site: www.bloodandfire.co.uk

Blue Flame Records
parlerstrasse 6
70192 Stuttgart
Germany
Tel: 49 711 2567671
Fax: 49 711 2567674
E-mail: 100646.2257@compuserve.com
Web site: www.blueflame.com

Blue Jackel Entertainment
PO Box 87
Huntington, NY 11743-0087 USA
Tel: (516) 423-7879
Fax: (516) 423-7875
E-mail: bluejackel@earthlink.net
Web site: www.bluejackel.com

Blue Note Records
304 Park Ave. S., 3rd Fl.
New York, NY 10010 USA
Tel: (212) 253-3000
Web site: www.bluenote.com

Blue Thumb Records
555 W. 57th St., 10th Fl.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 424-1000
Fax: (212) 424-1007

BMG/BMG Classics
1540 Broadway, 41st Fl.
New York, NY 10036 USA
Tel: (212) 930-4941
Web site: www.bmgclassics.com

Borealis Recording Company
67 Mowatt Ave., Ste. 233
Toronto, ON M6K 3E3 Canada
Tel: (416) 530-4288
Fax: (416) 530-0461
E-mail: brc@interlog.com
Web site: www.interlog.com/~brc

Bottom Line Record Company
740 Broadway, 6th Fl.
New York, NY 10003 USA

Buda Musique
See: Allegro

Bushooman Rag
Box 292, Station B
Toronto, Ontario
Canada M5T 2W2

Canyon
4143 N. 16th St., Ste. 6
Phoenix, AZ 85016 USA
Tel: (800) 268-1141
Fax: (602) 279-9233
E-mail: canyon@canyonrecords.com
Web site: www.canyonrecords.com

Capitol Records
See: EMI-Capitol Records

Caroline Records
104 West 29th St., 4th Fl.
New York, NY 10001 USA
Tel: (212) 886-7500
Web site: www.caroline.com

Castle Communications
29 Barwell Business Park Leatherhead Rd.
Surrey KT9 2NY
England

Celestial Harmonies
Div. of Mayflower Corp.
4549 E. Fort Lowell Rd.
Tucson, AZ 85712-1182 USA
Tel: (520) 326-4400
Fax: (520) 326-3333
E-mail: celestial@harmonies.com
Web site: www.harmonies.com

Celtic Heartbeat
Universal Records
1755 Broadway, 7th Fl.
New York, NY 10019 USA
E-mail: celtic@numb.ie
Web site: www.celticheartbeat.com

Celtic Music
CM Distribution
2/4 High St.
Starbeck, Harrogate, North Yorkshire
HG1 7HY England

Chesky Records
PO Box 1268
Radio City Station, NY 10101 USA
Tel: (800) 331-1437
E-mail: feedback@chesky.com
Web site: www.chesky.com

Claddagh Records
Dame House
Dame St.
Dublin 2 Ireland
Tel: 353 1 6778943
Fax: 353 1 6793664
E-mail: claddagh@crl.ie
Web site: indigo.ie/~claddagh

Columbia Records
550 Madison Ave.
New York, NY 10022-3211 USA
Tel: (212) 833-8000
Fax: (212) 833-7731
Web site: www.columbiarecords.com

Comhaltas Ceoltóirí Éireann
Belgrave Square
Monkstown
Co. Dublin
Ireland
Tel: 353 1 2800295
Fax: 353 1 2803759
E-mail: enquiries@comhaltas.com Web site: www.mayo-ireland.ie/CCE.htm

record labels 943

Compass Records
117 30th Ave. S.
Nashville, TN 37212-2507 USA
Tel: (615) 320-7672
Fax: (615) 320-7378
E-mail: info@compassrecords.com
Web site: www.compassrecords.com

Cooking Vinyl America
PO Box 311
Port Washington, NY 11050 USA
Tel: (516) 484-2863
Fax: (516) 484-6179
E-mail: info@cookingvinyl.com
Web site: www.cookingvinyl.co.uk

Corasón/Música Tradicional
See: Rounder Records

Crammed Discs
43, rue General Patton 1050 Brussels
Belgium
E-mail: crammed@crammed.be Web site: www.crammed.be

Dancing Cat
PO Box 639
Santa Cruz, CA 95061 USA
Tel: (408) 429-5085
Fax: (408) 423-7057
E-mail: ml@dancingcat.com
Web site: www.dancingcat.com

Dara Records USA
207 E. 84th St., Ste. 32
New York, NY 10028 USA
Tel: (800) 714-3272
Fax: (212) 628-7224
Web site: www.dararecords.com

Dargason Music
PO Box 189
Burbank, CA 91503 USA
Tel: (818) 502-2021
Fax: (818) 502-1017
E-mail: dargason@earthlink.net
Web site: www.dargasonmusic.com

Deutsche Grammaphon Alte Rabenstrasse 2
20148 Hamburg
Germany
E-mail: dgclassics@dgclassics.com
Web site: www.dgclassics.com

Distribution North America (DNA)
1280 Santa Anita Ct.
Woodland, CA 95776 USA
Tel: (732) 530-5879

Domo Records, Inc.
2211 Corinth Ave., Ste. 100
Los Angeles, CA 90064 USA
Tel: (310) 966-4414
Fax: (310) 966-4420
E-mail domo@domo.com
Web site: www.domo.com

Dunkeld Records Cathedral St.
Dunkeld
Perthshire PH8 OAW
Scotland
Tel: 44 1350 727686
Fax: 44 1350 728606
E-mail: admin@dunkeld.co.uk
Web site: www.dunkled.co.uk

Earache Records
295 Lafayette St., Ste. 915
New York, NY 10012 USA
Tel: (212) 343-9090
Fax: (212) 974-9314
E-mail: EaracheRec@aol.com
Web site: www.earache.com

Earth Beat Music
1 Shilpa Ct.
Nanda Patkar Rd.
Vile Parle (E)
Mumbai, India 400 057
Tel: 91 22 6148060
Fax: 91 22 6109082
E-mail: mail@earthbeatmusic.com
Web site: earthbeatmusic.com

EarthBeat!
PO Box 1460
Redway, CA 95560-1460 USA
Tel: (707) 923-3991
Fax: (707) 923-3241
E-mail: musicforlittlepeople@mflp.com
Web site: st6.yahoo.com/melody/earthbeat.html

EarthSea Records
PO Box 1109
Warrenton, VA 20188 USA
Tel: (540) 351-6191
Fax: (540) 351-6193
E-mail: info@earthsearecords.com
Web site: www.earthsearecords.com

EarthWorks
See: Stern's Music

Earwig Music Co.
1818 W. Pratt Blvd.
Chicago, IL 60626 USA
Tel: (773) 262-0278
Fax: (773) 262-0285

ECM Records
1540 Broadway
New York, NY 10036-4098 USA
Web site: www.ecmrecords.com

Elektra Entertainment Group
75 Rockefeller Plaza
New York, NY 10019-6907 USA
Tel: (212) 275-4000
Fax: (212) 956-2270
Web site: www.elektra.com

ellipsis arts . . .
PO Box 305
Roslyn, NY 11576 USA
Tel: (800) 788-6670
Fax: (516) 621-2750
E-mail: contacts@ellipsisarts.com
Web site: www.ellipsisarts.com

EMI-Capitol Records
1750 N. Vine St.
Hollywood, CA 90028 USA
Tel: (213) 462-6252
Fax: (213) 467-6550
Web site: www.hollywoodandvine.com

Enja
PO Box 190333
D-80603 Munich
Germany
Fax: 49 89 1678810
E-mail: info@enjarecords.com
Web site: www.enjarecords.com

Epic Records
550 Madison Ave.
New York, NY 10022-3211 USA
Tel: (212) 833-8000
Fax: (212) 833-5134
E-mail: Epic_Records@sonymusic.com
Web site: www.epiccenter.com/EpicCenter/docs/index.qry

Ernie B's Reggae
PO Box 5019
El Dorado Hills, CA 95762 USA
Tel: (916) 939-0578
E-mail: ErnieB@calweb.com

Fellside Recordings
15 Banklands Workington
Cumbria CA 14 3EW
UK
E-mail: info@fellsiderecords.demon.co.uk

Finlandia Records
PO Box 169
FIN-02101
Espoo, Finland
Tel: (358) 9-435-011

Fledg'ling Records
PO Box 547
London SE26 4BD
England
Web site: www.thebeesknees.com

Flying Fish Records
See: Rounder Records

Folk-Legacy Records
PO Box 1148
Sharon CT 06069 USA
Tel: (800) 836-0901
Fax: (860) 364-1050
E-mail: folklegacy@snet.net
Web site: folklegacy.com/

Fonomusic
E-mail: fonomusic@fonomusic.es
Web site: www.fonomusic.com

Fonovisa 7710 Haskell Ave.
Van Nuys, CA 91406 USA
Tel: (818) 782-6100
Fax: (818)782-6162
E-mail: usradio@icnt.net
Web site: www.fonovisa.com

Fortuna Records
PO Box 32016
Tucson, AZ 85751 USA

4AD Records
PO Box 46187
Los Angeles, CA 90046 USA
Tel: (310) 289-8770
Fax: (310) 289-8680
E-mail: 4AD@almaroad.co.uk
Web site: www.4ad.com

Gadfly Records
PO Box 5231
Burlington, VT 05402 USA
Tel: (802) 865-2406
E-mail: gadfly1@aol.com
Web site: www.gadflyrecords.com

Gael-Linn Records
26 Merrion Sq.
Dublin 2
Ireland

Geffen Records/DGC Records
9130 Sunset Blvd.
Los Angeles, CA 90069-6197 USA
Tel: (310) 278-9010
Fax: (310) 273-9389
Web site: www.geffen.com

record labels

GlobeStyle Records
48-50 Steele Rd.
London NW10 7AS
England

Globetrotter
550 Madison Ave., Ste. 1956
New York, NY 10022 USA
E-mail: Globetrotter @sonymusic.com
Web site: www.sonymusic.com/globetrotter

Great Northern Arts 80 Gordon Rd.
Middletown, NY 10941 USA
Tel: (888) 641-5600
E-mail: gna@warwick.net

Green Linnet Records 43 Beaver Brook Rd.
Danbury, CT 06810 USA
Tel: (203) 730-0333
Fax: (203) 778-4443
E-mail: glr@mags.net
Web site: www.greenlinnet.com

Greensleeves
Unit 14 Metro Centre
St Johns Rd., Isleworth
Middlesex TW7 6NJ
England
Tel: 44 181 7580564
Fax: 44 181 7580811
E-mail: greensleeves @easynet.co.uk
Web site: www.easynet.co.uk/greensleeves

Greentrax Recordings Ltd.
Cockenzie Business Centre
Edinburgh Rd., Cockenzie
East Lothian EH32 0HL, Scotland
Tel/Fax: 44 1875 813545
E-mail: greentrax@aol.com
Web site: members.aol.com/greentrax/greentrx.htm

GRP Recording Company
555 W. 57th St., 10th Fl.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 424-1000
Fax: (212) 424-1007
Web site: www.vervemusicgroup.com/grp/index.html

Hannibal Records
See: Rykodisc

Harmonia Mundi USA
2037 Granville Ave.
Los Angeles, CA 90025 USA
Tel: (310) 478-1311
Fax: (310) 996-1389
E-mail: infousa @harmoniamundi.com
Web site: harmoniamundi.com

Harmony Ridge
PO Box 995
El Granada, California 94018 USA
Tel: (800) 611-4698
Fax: (415) 726-6660
E-mail: hrmusic@hrmusic.com
Web site: www.hrmusic.com

Heartbeat
See: Rounder Records

Hearts of Space
PO Box 31321
San Francisco, CA 94131 USA
Tel: (415) 331-3200
Fax: (415) 331-3280
Web site: www.hos.com

Hemisphere
See: Metro Blue

Higher Octave Music
23852 Pacific Coast Highway, Ste. 2C
Malibu, CA 90265 USA
Tel: (310) 589-1515
Fax: (310) 589-1525
E-mail: info@higheroctave.com
Web site: www.higheroctave.com

HighTone Records
220 Fourth St., Ste. 101
Oakland, CA 94607 USA
Tel: (510) 763-8500
Fax: (510) 763-8558
E-mail: htrecords@aol.com
Web site: www.hightone.com

Hollywood Records
500 S. Buena Vista St.
Burbank, CA 91521 USA
Tel: (818) 560-5670
Fax: (818) 841-5140
E-mail:
Web site: hollywoodrecords.go.com

Hurv, Sweden
Nordanåker 1789
S-782 91 Malung
Sweden
Tel: 46 280 60089
Fax: 46 280 60089
E-mail: hurv@hurv.com
Web site: www.hurv.com/index-eng. html

India Archive Music
2124 Broadway, Ste. 343
New York, NY 10023 USA
Tel/Fax: (212) 740-1508
E-mail: indarcmus@aol.com

Indian House
PO Box 472
Taos, New Mexico 87571 USA
Tel: (505) 776-2953
Fax: (505) 776-2804
E-mail: music@indianhouse.com
Web site: www.indianhouse.com/music

Indigena Records
PO Box 62043
Durham, NC 27715-2043 USA
Tel: (919) 416-9454
Fax: (919) 286-1788
E-mail: indigena99@aol.com

International Soul
PO Box 3444
Oakland, CA 94609-3444 USA

Interscope Records
10900 Wilshire Blvd.
Los Angeles, CA 90024 USA
Tel: (310) 208-6547
Fax: (310) 208-7343
Web site: www.interscoperecords.com

Interworld Music
30 S. Main St.
Concord, NH 03301 USA
Tel: (800) 698-6705
E-mail: interworld @interworldmusic.com
Web site: www.interworldmusic.com

Iona Records
27-29 Carnoustie Pl.
Scotland St.
Glasgow G5 8PH
Scotland
E-mail: lismor@lismor.co.uk
Web site: www.lismor.co.uk

Iris Musique
Qualiton Imports Ltd.
24-02 40th Ave.
Long Island City, NY 11101 USA
Web site: www.qualiton.com

Island Records
825 8th Ave., 24th Fl.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 333-8000
Fax: (212) 603-3965
Web site: www.island.co.uk/

Jive Records/Silvertone Records
137–139 W. 25th St., 11th Fl.
New York, NY 10001 USA
Tel: (212) 727-0016
Fax: (212) 645-3783

Juna
121 Thunder Lake Rd.
Wilton, CT 06897 USA
Tel: (888) 286-JUNA (5862)
E-mail: juna@junamusic.com
Web site: www.junamusic.com

JVC Music
3800 Barham Blvd., Ste. 305
Los Angeles, CA 90068 USA
Tel: (213) 878-0101
Fax: (213) 878-0202

Kells Music
64 New Hyde Park Rd.
Garden City, NY 11530-3909 USA
Tel: (800) 854-3746
Fax: (516) 354-7768
E-mail: kellsmus@pipeline.com

Keltia Musique
1 Place Au Beurre 29000 Quimper
France
E-mail: keltia@eurobretagne
Web site: web.bagadoo.tm.fr/uk/culture/keltia/index.html

King Record Co., Ltd.
1-2-3 Otowa
Bunkyo-ku
Tokyo 112-0013 Japan
Tel: 81 3 39452134
Fax: 81 3 39454806
E-mail: kokusai@kingrecords.co.jp

Knitting Factory Records
74 Leonard St.
New York, NY 10013 USA
Tel: (212) 219-3006
Fax: (212) 219-3401
Web site: www.knittingfactory.com

Koch International
2 Tri Harbor Ct.
Port Washington, NY 11050-4617 USA
Tel: (516) 484-1000
Fax: (516) 484-4746
E-mail: koch@kochint.com
Web site: www.kochint.com

Kuarup
Rua México, 3/2°
CEP 20031-144
Rio de Janeiro - RJ
Brazil
Tel: 55 021 2201623
Fax: 55 021 2200494
E-mail: kuarup@uninet.com.br
Web site: www.kuarup.com.br/ing.htm

La Louisianne Records
PO Box 52131
Lafayette, LA 70505 USA

Laserlight Digital
Delta Music Company
1663 Sawtelle Blvd.
Los Angeles, CA 90025 USA
Tel: (310) 268-1205
Fax: (310) 268-1279
E-mail: info@deltamusic.com
Web site: www.deltamusic.com

Le Chant du Monde
See: Harmonia Mundi USA

Legacy Recordings
550 Madison Ave.
New York, NY 10022-3211 USA
Tel: (212) 833-8000
Fax: (212) 833-7731
Web site: www.legacyrecordings.com

Loco
PO Box 410023
San Francisco, CA 94141-0023 USA
E-mail: locoline@drloco.com

London Records
825 Eight Ave., 23rd Fl.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 333-8000
Fax: (212) 333-8030

Luaka Bop
PO Box 652, Cooper Station
New York, NY 10276 USA
Tel: (212) 255-2714
Fax: (212) 255-3809
Web site: www.luakabop.com

Lyrichord Discs 141 Perry St.
New York, NY 10014 USA
Tel: (212) 929-8234
Fax: (212) 929-8245
E-mail: info@lyrichord.com
Web site: www.SkyWriting.com/Lyrichord

M. Soul Productions
PO Box 301
Summit, NJ 07902-0301 USA
Web site: www.margareta.com.

Macmeanmna
Quay Bray
Portree
Isle of Skye IV51 9DB
Scotland
Tel: 44 1478 612990

Maggie's Music
PO Box 4144
Annapolis, MD 21403 USA
Tel: (410) 268-3394
Fax: (410) 267-7061
E-mail: mail@maggiesmusic.com
Web site: www.maggiesmusic.com

Maison de Soul
238 E. Main St.
PO Drawer 10
Ville Platte, LA 70586 USA

Mardis Gras Records
3331 St. Charles Ave.
New Orleans, LA 70115 USA
Tel: (504) 895-0441
Fax: (504) 891-4214

MCA Records
70 Universal City Plz.
Universal City, CA 91608 USA
Tel: (818) 777-4000
Fax: (818) 733-1407
Web site: www.mcarecords.com/

MCD World Music
R. General Jardim, 618 cj 51
Sao Paulo, SP-Brazil
01223-010

MCG Records/Curb Records
3907 W. Alameda Ave., Ste. 101
Burbank, CA 91505 USA
Tel: (818) 843-1616
Fax: (818) 843-5429
Web site: www.curb.com

Mélodie
E-mail: info@melodie.fr
Web site: www.melodie.fr

M.E.L.T. 2000
6C Littlehampton Rd.
Worthing
West Sussex BN13 1QE
Tel: 44 1903 260033
Fax: 44 1903 261133
E-mail: info@melt2000.com
Web site: www.melt2000.com/

Mercury
World Wide Plaza
825 Eighth Ave.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 333-8000
Fax: (212) 333-1093
Web site: www.MercuryRecords.com

Mesa/Bluemoon Recordings
9229 Sunset Blvd.
Los Angeles, CA 90069 USA
Tel: (310) 205-7445
Fax: (310) 205-5911

Messidor
See: Rounder Records

Metro Blue Records
1290 Avenue of the Americas
New York, NY 10104 USA
Web site: www.metroblue.com

Miramar Recordings
200 2nd Ave. W.
Seattle, WA 98119 USA
Tel: (206) 284-4700
Fax: (206) 286-4433
E-mail: info@miramarupx.com
Web site: www.miramarupx.com

Mobile Fidelity Sound Lab 105 Morris St.
Sebastopol, CA 95472 USA
Tel: (707) 829-0134
Fax: (707) 829-3746
E-mail: mofi@mofi.com
Web site: www.mofi.com

Moon Ska NYC
84 E. 10th St.
New York, NY 10003 USA
Tel: (212) 673-5538
Fax: (212) 673-5571

Mopiato
PO Box 3503
South Pasadena, CA 91031 USA

Motown Records
825 Eighth Ave., 29th Fl.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 294-9516
Fax: (212) 946-2615
Web site: www.motown.com

Music Club
Music Collection International 76 Dean St.
London W1V 5HA
England
E-mail: info@mcimusic.co.uk
Web site: www.musicclub.com

Music for Little People
PO Box 1460
Redway, CA 95560 USA
Tel: (800) 346-4445
E-mail: musicforlittlepeople@mflp.com

Music of the World
PO Box 3620
Chapel Hill, NC 27515-3620 USA
Tel: (888) 264-6689
Fax: (919) 932-9700
E-mail: motw@mindspring.com
Web site: www.musicoftheworld.com

Narada Media
4650 N. Port Washington Rd.
Milwaukee, WI 53212-1063 USA
Tel: (414) 961-8350
Fax: (414) 961-8351

Nascente
Music Collection International Ltd.
76 Dean St.
London W1V 5HA
England
Tel: 44 171 3968899
Fax: 44 171 3968900
E-mail: info@mcimusic.co.uk
Web site: www.vci.co.uk

Naxos of America, Inc.
416 Mary Lindsay Polk Dr., Ste. 5
Franklin, TN 37067 USA
Web site: www.hnh.com/hnh.htm

New World Records 701 Seventh Ave.
New York, NY 10036 USA

Nimbus
609 E. Market St., Ste. 203
Charlottesville, VA 22902 USA
Tel: (804) 985-8555
Fax: (804) 985-3953
E-mail: nimbuscd@aol.com
Web site: www.nimbus.ltd.uk/nrl/index.html

Nonesuch Records
75 Rockefeller Plaza
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 275-4000
Fax: (212) 956-2270
Web site: www.nonesuch.com

North Star Music
22 London St.
Providence, RI 02818-3628 USA
E-mail: info@northstarmusic.com
Web site: www.northstarmusic.com

NorthSide
530 North Third St.
Minneapolis, MN 55401 USA
Tel: (612) 375-0233
Fax: (612) 359-9580
E-mail: chill@noside.com
Web site: www.noside.com

N2K Encoded Music
55 Broad St., 18th Fl.
New York, NY 10004 USA
Tel: (212) 378-6100
Fax: (212) 742-1775
Web site: www.n2kencodedmusic.com

NubeNegra
See: Alula Records

Palm Pictures
4 Columbus Circle, 5th Fl.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 506-5800
Fax: (212) 506-5809
Web site: www.palmpictures.com

Pandisc Records
6157 NW 167th St., Ste. F-9
Miami, FL 33015 USA
Tel: (305) 557-1914
Fax: (305) 557-9262

Park Records
678 Massachusetts Ave.
Cambridge, MA 02139 USA
Web site: www.parkrecords.com

Philips
See: PolyGram

Philo
See: Rounder Records

Pigeon Inlet Records
Box 1202
St. John's, Newfoundland
Canada
A1C 5M9
Tel: (709) 754-7324
Fax: (709) 722-8557
E-mail: krussell@pigeoninlet.nfnet.com
Web site: www.pigeoninlet.nfnet.com/

Point
825 Eighth Ave., 26th Fl.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 333-8000
Fax: (212) 333-8402
Web site: www.pointmusic.com

Polydor Records
1416 N. La Brea Ave.
Hollywood, CA 90028 USA
Tel: (213) 856-6600
Fax: (213) 856-6610
E-mail: polydor@us.polygram.com
Web site: www.polydor.com

PolyGram/PolyGram Latino
PolyGram Holding, Inc.
825 Eighth Ave.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 333-8357
Fax: (212) 333-8203
E-mail: comm-us@PolyGram.com
Web site: www.polygram.com/polyindex.html

Prestige/Folklore
10th and Parker
Berkeley, CA 94710 USA

1-800-PRIME CD
111 E. 14th St., Ste. 300
New York, NY 10003 USA
Tel: (212) 366-5982
Fax: (212) 366-0615
E-mail: mail@primecd.com
Web site: www.primecd.com

Priority Records
6430 Sunset Blvd., 9th Fl.
Hollywood, CA 90028 USA
Tel: (213) 467-0151
Fax: (213) 856-0150
Web site: www.priorityrec.com

Private Music
8750 Wilshire Blvd.
Beverly Hills, CA 90211 USA
Tel: (310) 358-4500
Fax: (310) 358-4520

Putumayo World Music/Putumayo Artists
324 Lafayette St., 7th Fl.
New York, NY 10012 USA
Tel: (212) 625-1400
Fax: (212) 460-0095
Web site: www.putumayo.com

Qbadisk
PO Box 1256
Old Chelsea Station
New York, NY 10011 USA

Qwest Records
3800 Barham Blvd., Ste. 503
Los Angeles, CA 90068 USA
Tel: (213) 874-7770
Fax: (213) 874-5049
E-mail: info@qwestrecords.com
Web site: www.qwestrecords.com

RAS Records
PO Box 42517
Washington, DC 20015 USA
Tel: (301) 588-9641
Fax: (301) 588-7108
Web site: www.rasrecords.com

RCA Records
1540 Broadway
New York, NY 10036 USA
Tel: (212) 930-4000
Fax: (212) 930-4468
Web site: www.bmg.com

RealWorld
4650 N. Port Washington Rd.
Milwaukee, WI 53212 USA
Tel: (414) 961-8350
Fax: (414) 961-8351
Web site:
www.realworld.on.net/

Red House Records
PO Box 4044
St. Paul, MN 55104 USA
Tel: (800) 695-4687
Web site: www.redhouserecords.com/

Reference Recordings
580 Crespi Dr., Unit 1
Pacifica, CA 04044 USA
Tel: (650) 355-1892
Fax: (650) 355-1949
E-mail: rrec@aol.com
Web site: www.referencerecordings.com

Rego Irish Records and Tapes
64 New Hyde Park Rd.
Garden City, NY 11530 USA
Tel: (516) 328-7800
Fax: (516) 354-7768
E-mail: kellsmus@pipeline.com

Repercussion 6913 W. Barrington Ct.
New Orleans, LA 70128 USA

Reprise Records
3300 Warner Blvd.
Burbank, CA 91505-4694 USA
Tel: (818) 846-9090
Fax: (818) 953-3211
E-mail: ToReprise@aol.com
Web site: www.RepriseRec.com/

Restless Records
1616 Vista Del Mar Ave.
Hollywood, CA 90028 USA
Tel: (800) 573-7853/
Tel: (213) 957-4357
Fax: (213) 957-4355
Web site: www.restless.com/

Rhino Records
10635 Santa Monica Blvd.
Los Angeles, CA 90025 USA
Tel: (310) 474-4778
Fax: (310) 441-6575
E-mail: drrhino@rhino.com
Web site: www.rhino.com

RMM Records
568 Broadway, Ste. 806
New York, NY 10012 USA
Tel: (212) 925-2828
Fax: (212) 925-6154
E-mail: rmmrecords@aol.com
Web site: www.rmmrecords.com

Rounder Records
1 Camp St.
Cambridge, MA 02140 USA
Tel: (617) 354-0700
Fax: (617) 491-1970
E-mail: info@rounder.com
Web site: www.rounder.com

Rykodisc
Shetland Park
27 Congress St.
Salem, MA 01970 USA
Tel: (978) 825-3200
Fax: (978) 825-3290
E-mail: info@rykodisc.com
Web site: www.rykodisc.com

Sain Records
Llandwrog, Caernarfon
Gwynedd
Wales LL54 5TG
UK
Web site: www.sain.wales.com

Scamp Records
See: Caroline Records

Shanachie Entertainment Corp.
37 E. Clinton St.
Newton, NJ 07860 USA
Tel: (201) 579-7763
Fax: (201) 579-7083
E-mail: contact@shanachie.com
Web site: www.shanachie.com

Silver Wave Records
2475 Broadway
Boulder, CO 80304 USA
Tel: (303) 443-5617
Fax: (303) 443-0877
E-mail: info@silverwave.com
Web site: www.silverwave.com

SingSong Inc.
PO Box 6371
St. John's, Newfoundland
Canada
A1C 6J9
Tel: (709) 726-3570
Fax: 726-3533
E-mail: singsong@nfld.com
Web site: www.singsong.nfld.com/

Sire Records
75 Rockefeller Plz., 17th Fl.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 275-2500
Fax: (212) 275-3562
Web site: www.sirerecords.com

Six Degrees Records
PO Box 411347
San Francisco, CA 94141-1347
USA

Web site: www.
sixdegreesrecords.com

Slash Records
7381 Beverly Blvd.
Los Angeles, CA 90036 USA
Tel: (213) 937-4660
Fax: (213) 933-7277

Slask Sweden
Box 27
S-430 84 Styrsö
Sweden

Smithsonian Folkways Recordings
Center for Folklife Programs and Cultural Studies 955 L'Enfant Plaza, Ste. 7300, MRC 953
Smithsonian Institution
Washington, DC 20560 USA
E-mail: folkways@aol.com
Web site: www.si.edu/folkways

SOAR (Sound of America Records)
PO Box 8606
Albuquerque, NM 87198 USA
Tel: (505) 268-6110
Fax: (505) 268-0237
E-mail: soar@rt66.com
Web site: www.
soundofamerica.com

Solar Records
1635 N. Cahuenga Blvd.
Los Angeles, CA 90028 USA
Tel: (323) 461-0390
Fax: (323) 461-9032

Sonodisc
85 rue Foundary 75015 Paris
France
E-mail: sonodisc @club-internet.fr

Sony Music
550 Madison Ave.
New York, NY 10022 USA
Tel: (212) 833-8000
Fax: (212) 833-7120
Web site: www.sonymusic.com

Sounds True
413 S. Arthur Ave.
Louisville, CO 80027 USA

Stern's Music
71 Warren St.
New York, NY 10007 USA
Tel: (212) 964-5455
Fax: (212) 964-5955
E-mail: infonyc@sternsmusic.
com

Straker's
242 Utica Ave.
Brooklyn, NY 11213 USA
Tel: (718) 756-0040

Sugar Hill Records
PO Box 55300
Durham, NC 27717 USA
Tel: (919) 489-4349
Fax: (919) 489-6080

Sukay World Music
3450 Sacramento St., Ste. 523
San Francisco, CA 94118 USA
Tel: (415) 751-6090
Fax: (415) 752-3559
E-mail: sukay@sirius.com

Tamizdat
PO Box 20618
New York, NY 10009 USA
Tel/fax: (212) 780-0287
E-mail: info@tamizdat.org

Temple Records
See: Rounder Records

Thirsty Ear Recordings
274 Madison Ave., Ste. 804
New York, NY 10016 USA
Tel: (212) 889-9595
Fax: (212) 889-3641
E-mail: thirstye@aol.com
Web site: www.thirstyear.com

Tinder Records
619 Martin Ave. Unit 1
Rohnert Park, CA 94928 USA
Tel: (800) 900-4527
Fax: (707) 588-9229
E-mail: tinder@worldmusic.com
Web site: www.worldmusic.
com/tinder

Topic Records
50 Stroud Green Rd.
London N4 3EF
England
Tel: 44 171 2631420

Tradition Records
See: See Rykodisk

Traditional Crossroads
PO Box 20320, Greeley Square Station
New York, NY 10001-9922 USA
Tel: (800) 422-6282
E-mail: tradcross@aol.com
Web site: www.rootsworld.
com/crossroads/

Triloka Records
6399 Wilshire Blvd., Ste. 404
Los Angeles, CA 90048 USA
Tel: (800) 578-4419
Web site: www.triloka.com

Triple Earth
24 Foley St.
London W1P 7LA
England
E-mail: iain@triple-earth.co.uk

TriStar/Sony Music
79 5th Ave.
New York, NY 10003 USA
Tel: (212) 337-5454
Fax: (212) 337-5453

Tuff Gong International 350 5th Ave., Ste. 5101
New York, NY 10118 USA
Tel: (212) 563-5173
Fax: (212) 594-1594

TVT Records
23 E. 4th St., 3rd Fl.
New York, NY 10003 USA
Tel: (212) 979-6410
Fax: (212) 979-6489
Web site: www.tvtrecords.com

Universal Records
1755 Broadway, 7th Fl.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 373-0600
Fax: (212) 247-3954

Uptown Records
1755 Broadway, 7th Fl.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 841-8114
Fax: (212) 841-8142

Vanguard Recording Society
A Welk Music Group Company 2700 Pennsylvania Ave.
Santa Monica, CA 90404-4000 USA
Tel: (310) 829-WELK (9355)
Fax: (310) 315-9996
E-mail: info
@vanguardrecords.com
Web site: www.
vanguardrecords.com

Varèse Sarabande Records
11846 Ventura Blvd., Ste. 130
Studio City, CA 91604 USA
Tel: (818) 753-4143
E-mail: info
@varesesarabande.com
Web site: www.
varesesarabande.com

Varrick Records
See: Rounder Records

Verve Music Group
555 W. 57th St., 10th Fl.
New York, NY 10019 USA
Tel: (212) 333-8000
Fax: (212) 333-8194

Web site: www.
vervemusicgroup.com

Virgin Records
338 N. Foothill Rd.
Beverly Hills, CA 90210 USA
Tel: (310) 278-1181
Fax: (310) 278-6231
Web site: www.virginrecords.
com

VP Record Distributors
89-05 138th St.
Jamaica, NY 11435 USA
Tel: (718) 291-7058
Fax: (718) 658-3573
Web site: www.vprecords.com

Warner Bros. Records
3300 Warner Blvd.
Burbank, CA 91505-4694 USA
Tel: (818) 846-9090
Fax: (818) 846-8474
E-mail: wbrepinc@wbr.com
Web site: www.wbr.com

Water Lily Acoustics
PO Box 91448
Santa Barbara, CA 93190 USA
E-mail: music
@waterlilyacoustics.com
Web site: www.
waterlilyacoustics.com

Watermelon Records
1201 W. 24th, Ste. 204
Austin, TX 78765-9056 USA
Tel: (512) 472-6192
Fax: (512) 472-6249

WEA Latina
5201 Blue Lagoon Dr., Ste. 200
Miami, FL 33126-2065 USA
Tel: (305) 266-6077
Fax: (305) 266-8771

Wicklow Entertainment
1540 Broadway
New York, NY 10036-4098 USA
Tel: (212) 930-4547
Fax: (212) 930-6663
Web site: www.
wicklowrecords.com

Windham Hill Records
c/o Sound Delivery
PO Box 1862
Woodland, CA 95776-1862 USA
Tel: (310) 358-4800
Fax: (310) 358-4805
E-mail: whinfo@bmge.com
Web site: www.windham.com

The WORK Group
2100 Colorado Ave.

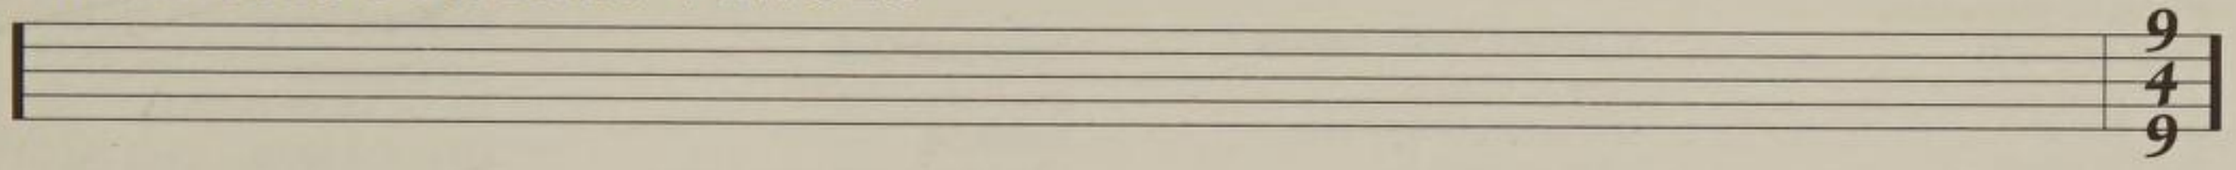
Santa Monica, CA 90404 USA
Tel: (310) 449-2666
Fax: (310) 449-2095
Web site: www.epiccenter.com/EpicCenter/work/index.qry

World Circuit
8-14 St. Pancras Way
London, NWI oQG
England
Tel: 44 171 3879943
Fax: 44 171 3834908

World Music Network
6 Abbeville Mews
88 Clapham Park Rd.
London SW4 7BX
England
Tel: 44 171 4985252
Fax: 44 171 4985353
E-mail: post@worldmusic.net
Web site: www.worldmusic.net

Xenophile Records
See: Green Linnet Records

Yazoo Records
See: Shanachie Records



More than most forms of music, you have to see the "world"—in-person is the way that so many world musics have been experienced for centuries in their own cultures, with the spectacular live presentation you'd expect. But knowing where to find the world is also not as easy as with other forms of music, so here's a list of some of the U.S. establishments that regularly feature world-music artists. Check local concert listings for the whole picture, and consult the publications in our Books and Magazines list for the most up-to-date information on the many world-music festivals held each year—but on the list below, find some of the best places to start!

Alabama

The 22nd Street Jazz Cafe
710 22nd St. S.
Birmingham, AL 35233-3114
(205) 252-0407

Arizona

Fiddler's Dream Coffee House
1702 E. Cactus Wren
Phoenix, AZ 85020-5516
(602) 997-9795

Rhythm Room
1014 E. Indian School Rd.
Phoenix, AZ 85014-4810
(602) 265-4842

California

Ashkenaz
1317 San Pablo Ave.
Berkeley, CA 94702-1021
(510) 525-5054

Bahia Cabana
1600 Market St.
San Francisco, CA 94102-5910
(415) 626-3306

Blarney Stone
5701 Geary St.
San Francisco, CA 94121-2111
(415) 386-9914

Cafe du Nord
2170 Market St.
San Francisco, CA 94114-1319
(415) 861-5016

El Rio
3158 Mission St.
San Francisco, CA 94110-4560
(415) 282-3325

The Elbow Room
647 Valencia
San Francisco, CA 94110-1150
(415) 552-7788

House of Blues
8430 Sunset Blvd.
Los Angeles, CA 90069-1910
(213) 650-0247

Jack's Sugar Shack
1707 N. Vine St.
Hollywood, CA 90028-5248
(213) 466-7005

Luna Park
665 N. Robertson Blvd.
West Hollywood, CA 90069-5016
(310) 652-0611

Maritime Hall
450 Harrison St.
San Francisco, CA 94105-2640
(415) 974-0674

Moguls
1650 N. Schrader St.
Hollywood, CA 90028-6214
(213) 465-7449

Pat O'Shea's
2848 Geary St.
San Francisco, CA 94118-3408
(415) 752-3148

Ventura Theatre
26 S. Chestnut St.
Ventura, CA 93001-2800
(805) 648-1888

Colorado

Bentley's at the Broker Inn
555 30th St.
Boulder, CO 80303-2397
(303) 444-3330

Los Cabos II
1512 Curtis St.
Denver, CO 80202-2342
(303) 571-0007

Maximilian's 2151 Lawrence St.
Denver, CO 80205-2032
(303) 297-0015

District of Columbia

Bravo! Bravo!
1001 Connecticut Ave. NW
Washington, DC 20036
(202) 223-5330

Coco Loco
810 7th St. NW
Washington, DC 20001-3718
(202) 289-2626

Cities
2424 18th St. NW
Washington, DC 20009
(202) 328-7194

Diversite
1526 14th St. NW
Washington, DC 20005-3746
(202) 234-5740

Kala Kala
2439 18th St. NW
Washington, DC 20009-2042
(202) 232-5433

Kilimanjaro
1724 California St. NW
Washington, DC 20009-2681
(202) 328-3838

Latin Jazz Alley
1721 Columbia Rd. NW
Washington, DC 20009-2803
(202) 328-6190

Takoma Station
6914 Fourth St. NW
Washington, DC 20012-1904
(202) 829-1999

Florida

Brazilian Delight
154 SW 1 Ave.
Miami, FL 33130-1620
(305) 374-0032

Cafe Azucar
740 SW 8th St.
Miami, FL 33130-3311
(305) 858-4224

Cafe Nostalgia
2212 SW 8th St.
Miami, FL 33135-4914
(305) 541-2631

Cafe 165
16509 NW 27 Ave.
Opa Locka, FL 33054-6406
(305) 621-5323

Centro Vasco
2235 SW 8th St.
Miami, FL 33135-4913
(305) 643-9626

Club Tamarind
3900 NW 21st St.
Miami, FL 33142-6704
(305) 220-7115

Hungry Sailor
3426 Main Hwy.
Coconut Grove, FL 33133-5916
(305) 444-9359

Respectable Street Cafe
218 Espanola Way
Miami Beach, FL 33139-4106
(305) 672-1707

Georgia

Chili Peppers
208 Pharr Rd.
Atlanta, GA 30305-2204
(404) 812-9266

Kaya
1068 Peachtree St.
Atlanta, GA 30309-3963
(404) 874-4460

Sanctuary International 128 E. Andrews Dr.
Atlanta, GA 30305-1315
(404) 262-1377

Tongue & Groove 3055 Peachtree Rd.
Atlanta, GA 30305-2221
(404) 261-2325

Illinois

Bossa Nova 1960 N. Clybourn
Chicago, IL 60614-4924
(312) 248-4800

El Jardin's Fiesta Cantina 3407 N. Clark St.
Chicago, IL 60657-1605
(773) 327-4646

Green Dolphin
2200 N. Ashland
Chicago, IL 60614-3026
(773) 395-0066

Hot House
31 E. Balbo
Chicago, IL 60605-2121
(312) 362-9707

La Piramide Azteca
3661 S. Archer Ave.
Chicago, IL 60609-1058
(312) 523-8020

720 Club
720 N. Wells St.
Chicago, IL 60610-3510
(312) 397-0600

Vinyl
1615 N. Clybourn
Chicago, IL 60614-5507
(312) 587-8469

Maryland

Phantasmagoria
11319 Elkin St.
Wheaton, MD 20902-4609
(301) 949-8886

Massachusetts

Club Passim
47 Palmer St.
Harvard Sq.
Cambridge, MA 02138-3718
(617) 492-7679

House of Blues
96 Winthrop St.
Harvard Sq.
Cambridge, MA 02138-4930
(617) 491-BLUE (2583)

Mama Kin
36 Lansdowne St.
Boston, MA 02215-3411
(617) 536-2100

Phoenix Landing
512 Massachusetts Ave.
Central Sq.
Cambridge, MA 02139-4029
(617) 576-6260

Rhythm and Spice 315 Mass Ave.
Cambridge, MA 02139-4151
(617) 497-0970

Ryles Jazz Club
212 Hampshire St.
Inman Sq.
Cambridge, MA 02139-1333
(617) 876-9300

Michigan

Parabox
1927 Michigan Ave.
Detroit, MI 48216-1347
(313) 965-3333

Sierra Afrique
19325 Plymouth Rd.
Detroit, MI 48228-1359
(313) 838-3833

New York

Cafe Remy 104 Greenwich St.
New York, NY 10006-1801
(212) 267-4646

The Knitting Factory
74 Leonard St.
New York, NY 10013-3437
(212) 219-3006

Nell's
246 W. 14th St.
New York, NY 10011-7201
(212) 675-1567

Night Owls at Club Morocco 1036 2nd Ave.
New York, NY 10022-4006
(212) 715-0668

SOB's
204 Varick St.
New York, NY 10014-4809
(212) 243-4940

Oregon

Atwater's Restaurant
111 SW 5th Ave.
Portland, OR 97204
(503) 275-3629

Dublin Pub
6821 SW Beaverton Hillsdale Hwy.
Portland, OR 97225-1407
(503) 297-2889

Texas

Club Babalu 2912 McKinney Ave.
Dallas, TX 75204-2431
(214) 953-0300

Elephant Room
315 Congress
Austin, TX 78701-4023
(214) 473-2279

Ruta Maya
218 W. Fourth St.
Austin, TX 78701-3917
(214) 472-9637

Shaggy's
1600 S. Congress Ave.
Austin, TX 78704-3522
(214) 447-5375

Utah

Cinegril
344 S. 300 E.
Salt Lake City, UT 84111-2504
(801) 328-4900

Gepetto's
230 S.1300 E.
Salt Lake City, UT 84102-2609
(801) 583-1013

Oasis Cafe
151 S. 500 E.
Salt Lake City, UT 84102-1906
(801) 322-0404

Virginia

Outbacks
917 Preston Ave.
Charlottesville, VA 22903-4421
(804) 979-7211

The Prism Coffee House
214 Rugby Rd.
Charlottesville, VA 22903-1878
(804) 977-7476

Trax
120-X 11th St. SW
Charlottesville, VA 22903-3408
(804) 295-8729

Washington

Beso Del Sol
4468 Stone Way N.
Seattle, WA 98103-7439
(206) 547-8087

Black Bean Coffee House
3801 E. Mercer Way
Mercer Island, WA 98040-3805
(206) 232-7115 x254

Dimitrion's Jazz Alley
2033 6th Ave.
Seattle, WA 98121
(206) 441-9729

This list was excerpted from Rhythm magazine. All rights reserved. For more information about a subscription to Rhythm call: 1-800-464-2767. Rhythm is a monthly world music magazine featuring music, film, food, and travel. Every issue includes a 10-track complimentary world-music CD with a subscription.

The following are some of the U.S. stations that feature world-music programming. Radio formats are always subject to change, and the world-music offerings are likely to be just one part of a diverse selection; your best bet is to check the local radio listings in your area or those you visit. There is always a good chance of catching strong world-music programming on the nearest outlet of National Public Radio (http://www.npr.org), the Pacifica network (http://www.pacifica.org), and other listener-sponsored or college stations.

Alaska

Anchorage
KNBA (90.3 FM)

Fairbanks
KSUA (91.5 FM)

Arizona

Tucson
KXCI (93.1 FM)

Window Rock
KTNN (660 AM)/KWRK (96.1 FM)

California

Berkeley
KPFA (94.1 FM)

Cupertino
KKUP (91.5 FM)
WAZU (90.3 FM)

Davis
KDVS (90.3 FM)

Fresno
KFRF (102.3 FM)

Los Angeles
KXLU (88.9 FM)

Nevada City
KVMR (89.5 FM)

Pacific Grove
KAZU (90.3 FM)

Sacramento
KSSU (1580 AM)
KXJC/KXPR (90.9 FM)
KXJZ (88.9 FM)

San Jose
KVCH (104.1 FM)

San Luis Obispo
KGUR (105.3 FM)

Santa Clara
KSCU (103.3 FM)

Santa Cruz
KUSP (89.9 FM)

Santa Monica
KCRW (89.9 FM)

Santa Rosa
KBBF (89.1 FM)

Tahoe City
KKTO (80.5 FM)

Colorado

Grand Junction
KAFM (88.1 FM)

Connecticut

New London
WCNI (91.1 FM)

Storrs
WHUS (91.7 FM)

West Hartford
WWUH (91.3 FM)

Georgia

Atlanta
WREK (91.1 FM)
WRFG (89.3 FM)

Iowa

Davenport
KALA (88.5 FM/105.5 FM)

Louisiana

Eunice
KEUN (1330 AM)

Lafayette
KRVS (88.7 FM)

New Orleans
WWOZ (88.7 FM)

Washington
KNEK (1190 AM)

Maryland

Towson
WTMD (89.7 FM)

Massachusetts

Amherst
WMUA (91.1 FM)

Boston
WERS (88.9 FM)
WZBC (90.3 FM)

Cape Cod
WOMR (92.1 FM)

Michigan

Ann Arbor
WCBN (88.3 FM)

Detroit
CJAM (91.5 FM)
WDET (101.9 FM)
WDTR (90.9 FM)

Minnesota

Minneapolis
KUOM (770 AM)

Missouri

Florissant
KCFV (89.5 FM)

Kansas City
KKFI (90.1 FM)

Montana

Missoula
KBGA (89.9 FM)

New Hampshire

Keene
WKNH (91.3 FM)

New Jersey

East Orange
WFMU (91.1 FM)

Newark
WBGO (88.3 FM)

Pemberton
WBZC (88.9 FM)

Trenton
WTSR (91.3 FM)

New Mexico

Albuquerque
KUNM (89.9 FM)

Santa Fe/Albuquerque
KBAC (98.1/95.9 FM)

New York

Brooklyn
WBCR (590 AM)

Ithaca
WICB (91.7 FM)

New York
WBAI (99.5 FM)
WLIB (1190 AM)
WPAT (AMOR) (93.1 FM)
WRTN (93.5 FM)
WSKQ (MEGA) (97.9 FM)

Poughkeepsie
WVKR (91.3 FM)

North Carolina

Durham
WXDU (88.7 FM)

Ohio

Cleveland
WRUW (91.1 FM)

Dayton
WDPS (89.5 FM)

Oberlin
WOBC (91.5 FM)

Yellow Springs
WYSO (91.3 FM)

Oklahoma

Stillwater
KSPI (93.7 FM)

Oregon

Portland
KBOO (90.7 FM)

Pennsylvania

Carlisle
WDCV (88.3 FM)

State College
WKPS (90.7 FM)

Texas

Austin
KOOP/KVRX (91.7 FM)

Houston
KTRU (91.7 FM)

Utah

Salt Lake City
KRCL (90.9 FM)

Vermont

Plainfield
WGDR (91.1 FM)

Wisconsin

Beloit
WBCR (90.3 FM)

musicHound

WORLD

Indexes

Five-Bone Album Index

Band Member Index

Country Index

Contributor Index

Series Index

The following albums achieved the highest rating possible—♪♪♪♪♪—from our discriminating MusicHound World writers. You can't miss with any of these recordings. (Note: Albums are listed under the name of the entry (or entries) in which they appear and are not necessarily albums by that individual artist or group. The album could be a compilation album, a film soundtrack, an album on which the artist or group appears as a guest, etc. Consult the artist or group's entry for specific information. Albums that appear in sidebars are listed under the title of the sidebar. Albums that appear in the Compilations section are listed at the end of this index under "Compilations.")

Abana Ba Nasery
Abana Ba Nasery (Globestyle, 1989)

Nathan Abshire
French Blues (Arhoolie, 1993)
Le Grand Mamou: A Cajun Music Anthology: The Historic Victor/Bluebird Sessions 1928–1941 (Country Music Foundation, 1990)
Les Haricots Sont Pas Salés: Legendary Masters of Cajun and Creole Music (Cinq Planetes, 1998)

The Abyssinians
Forward (Alligator, 1982/Musidisc, 1996)
Forward on to Zion (Blue Moon, 1976)
Satta Massa Ganna (Heartbeat, 1993)

King Sunny Adé
Juju Music (Mango, 1982)

Africando
Vol. 2—Tierra Tradicional (Stern's, 1994)

Afro Celt Sound System
Kora Revolution (Palm Pictures/Yoff, 1999)

Pierre Akendengue
Lambarena (Celluloid/Melodie France, 1993)

Haris Alexiou
Laika Tragoudia (Mercury, 1975)
Mikra Asia (Asia Minor) (1973)
To Pehnidi tis Kardias (Games of the Heart) (Mercury, 1988)

Altan
Horse with a Heart (Green Linnet, 1989)

Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin
Allons Danser (Rounder, 1998)
The Ardoin Family Band with Dewey Balfa: A Couple of Cajuns (Sonet, 1987)
La Musique Creole (Arhoolie, 1997)
Les Blues du Bayou (Melodeon, 1967)
Les Haricots Sont Pas Salés: Legendary Masters of Cajun and Creole Music (Cinq Planetes, 1998)

Amédée Ardoin
Cajun Music: Fais Do-Do (Columbia, 1994)
I'm Never Comin' Back: The Roots of Zydeco (Arhoolie, 1995)

Frankie Armstrong
Till the Grass O'ergrew the Corn (Fellside, 1996)

Arrow
Knock Dem Dead (Mango, 1988)
Soca Savage (Arrow Records, 1984)
Zombie Soca (Arrow, 1991)

Abed Azrié
Aromates (Nonesuch, 1990)
Suerte (Harmonia Mundi France, 1994)

Susana Baca
Del Fuego y Del Agua (Tonga, 1997)
The Soul of Black Peru (Luaka Bop, 1995)
Susana Baca (Luaka Bop, 1997)

Bad Brains
Bad Brains (ROIR, 1982/1996)

Badawi
The Heretic of Ether (Asphodel, 1999)

The Balfa Brothers
The Balfa Brothers Play Traditional Cajun Music, Vols. 1 & 2 (Swallow, 1987)
Les Haricots Sont Pas Salés: Legendary Masters of Cajun and Creole Music (Cinq Planetes, 1998)

Balfa Toujours
Allons Danser (Rounder, 1998)

Carlos Barbosa-Lima
Music of the Brazilian Masters (Concord Picante, 1989)

Mario Bauzá
Messidor's Finest, Volume One (Messidor, 1997)
My Time Is Now (Messidor, 1993)
Tanga (Messidor, 1992)

Francis Bebey
Akwaaba (Original Music, 1986)
Dibiye (Pee Wee, 1998)

Nandolo: Works 1963–1994 (Original Music, 1995)

M'Bilia Bel
Phenomene (IMA, 1996)

Harry Belafonte
All-Time Greatest Hits, Vols. 1–3 (RCA, 1987)
Belafonte at Carnegie Hall (RCA, 1959)
Calypso (RCA, 1956)

Jorge Ben
A Tabua Da Esmeralda (Philips, 1974)
Ben (Philips, 1972)
Gil e Jorge (Verve, 1994)
Live in Rio, Vols. I and II (Warner-Latin, 1992)

Mary Bergin
Feadoga Stain (Gael-Linn, 1976/Shanachie, 1992)

V.M. Bhatt
Guitar a la Hindustan (Magnasound/OMI, 1992)
Saltanah (Water Lily Acoustics, 1996)

Asha Bhosle
Legacy (AMMP, 1996)

Bhundu Boys
Shabini (DiscAfrique France, 1986)
Tsvimbodzemoto (DiscAfrique, 1987)

Tony Bird
Sorry Africa (Rounder, 1991)

Black Stalin
In Ah Earlier Time (Makossa, 1981)
Roots, Rock, Soca (Rounder, 1991)
To De Master (WB, 1989)
You Ask for It (CCP, 1984)

Luiz Bonfá
The Bossa Nova Years (Verve, 1964/1989)
Jazz Samba (Verve, 1963)

The Bothy Band
The Bothy Band 1975 (Mulligan, 1975/Green Linnet, 1983)
Old Hag You Have Killed Me (Mulligan, 1976/Green Linnet, 1982)

Boukan Ginen
Jou a Rive (Xenophile, 1995)

Boukman Eksperyans
Kalfou Danjere/Dangerous Crossroads (Mango, 1992)
Libète (Pran Pou Pran'l!)/Freedom (Let's Take It!) (Mango, 1995)

Robin Huw Bowen
Kiss of Fire (Fflach, 1992/Firebird, 1994)

David Bowie
"Heroes" (RCA, 1977/Rykodisc, 1991)
Low (RCA, 1977/Rykodisc, 1991)

The Boys of the Lough
The Boys of the Lough (Shanachie, 1973)

Anouar Brahem
Barzakh (ECM, 1991)

Brave Old World
Blood Oranges (Pinorrek Records, 1997)

Máire Breatnach
Riverdance (Celtic Heartbeat, 1995)

Kevin Burke
Andy Irvine, Paul Brady (Mulligan, 1976/Green Linnet, 1981)

Cachao
Master Sessions, Vol. 1 (Crescent Moon/Epic, 1994)

Calypso Rose
Trouble (Straker's, 1984)

Eliza Carthy
Norma Waterson (Rykodisc, 1996)

Martin Carthy
Life and Limb (Topic/Green Linnet, 1991)
The Martin Carthy Collection (Green Linnet, 1993)

John Carty
At the Racket (Racket, 1997)
Last Night's Fun (Shanachie, 1996)

Hari Prasad Chaurasia
Call of the Valley (Hemisphere/EMI, 1967)

Clifton Chenier
60 Minutes with the King of Zydeco (Arhoolie, 1988)
Zydeco Dynamite: The Clifton Chenier Anthology (Rhino, 1993)

The Chieftains
Chieftains 3 (Claddagh, 1971/Shanachie, 1980s)
Chieftains 4 (Claddagh, 1973/Shanachie, 1980s)
Ó Riada sa Gaiety (Gael-Linn, 1969)

Chinese Classical Music (sidebar)
Various Artists: The Hugo Masters: An Anthology of Chinese Classical Music (Celestial Harmonies, 1992)

Stella Chiweshe
Ambuya? (Globestyle, 1988)
Chisi (Piranha, 1988)
The Healing Tree (Shanachie, 1998)
Kumusha (Piranha, 1989)
Shungu (Piranha, 1990)

Clannad
Dulaman (Blackbird, 1976/Shanachie, 1988)

Johnny Clarke
Authorized Rockers (Virgin Frontline, 1991)

Jimmy Cliff
The Harder They Come (Island, 1972)

Shirley Collins
Etchingham Steam Band (Fledg'ling, 1995)
For As Many As Will (Topic, 1978/Hokey Pokey, 1993)
Love, Death, and the Lady (EMI, 1974)
Morris On (Island, 1972/Hannibal)
No Roses (BBC, 1971/Mooncrest, 1991)

The Congos
Arkology (Island, 1997)
Heart of the Congos (Black Art, 1977/Blood & Fire, 1996)

Gal Costa
Acustico (BMG Brazil, 1997)
Domingo (PolyGram Brazil, 1967)
India (PolyGram Brazil, 1973)
Rio Revisited (PolyGram Brazil, 1992)

Celia Cruz
100 Percent Azucar: The Best of Celia Cruz con la Sonora Matancera (Rhino, 1997)

¡Cubanismo!
Jesús Alamañy's ¡Cubanismo! (Hannibal, 1996)
Reencarnacion (Hannibal, 1998)

Culture
Baldhead Bridge (Shanachie, 1993)
Two Sevens Clash (Shanachie, 1988)

George Dalaras
Mikra Asia (1973)
Ta Rembetika (EMI/Minos, 1975)
Y Ta Tragoudia K' Ego Fteo (EMI/Minos, 1993)

Jackie Daly
Music from Sliabh Luachra (Topic, 1977/Green Linnet, 1992)

Olu Dara
In the World: From Natchez to New York (Atlantic, 1998)

Paco de Lucia Guitar Trio (PolyGram, 1996)

Dead Can Dance
Spiritchaser (4AD, 1996)

Geno Delafose
La Chanson Perdue (Rounder, 1998)
That's What I'm Talking About! (Rounder, 1996)

John Delafose & the Eunice Playboys
Blues Stay Away from Me (Rounder, 1993)
Joe Pete Got Two Women (Arhoolie, 1988)

Sandy Denny
The BBC Sessions 1971–73 (Strange Fruit, 1997)
Sandy (Island, 1972)
Who Knows Where the Time Goes? (Island, 1985)

D'Gary
Mbo Loza (Indigo, 1992)

Toumani Diabaté
Kaira (Hannibal/Rykodisc, 1988)
Kulanjan (Hannibal, 1999)

Diblo Dibala
Amour Fou (Hannibal, 1988)
Matchatcha (AfricMusic France)

Manu Dibango
Logozo (Mango, 1991/1992)

Diga Rhythm Band
Diga Rhythm Band (Rykodisc, 1988)

John Doherty
The Floating Bow—Traditional Fiddle Music from Donegal (Claddagh, 1996)

Felix Dolan
Warming Up (Green Linnet, 1993)

Mikey Dread
African Anthem Dubwise (Dread at the Controls, 1978/Big Cat, 1997)

Paquito D'Rivera
Come on Home (Columbia, 1995)
Havana Café (Chesky, 1992)
Reunion (Messidor, 1991)

The Dubliners
Original Dubliners, 1966–1969 (EMI, 1993)

The Dynatones
Live Wire (World Renowned Sounds, 1982)
Vintage Dynatones (World Renowned Sounds, 1995)

Hamza El Din
Escalay—The Water Wheel (Nonesuch, 1968)
Muwashshah (JVC, 1996)

Eliane Elias
Eliane Elias Sings Jobim (Blue Note, 1998)
The Three Americas (Blue Note, 1997)

Alton Ellis
Cry Tough (Heartbeat, 1993)

The English Beat
I Just Can't Stop It (Sire, 1980)

Enya
Watermark (Reprise, 1989)

Epstein Brothers Band
Kings of Frelekh Land (Wergo/Weltmusik, 1995)

Kudsi Erguner
Fasl: Musique de l'Empire Ottoman (Auvidis Ethnic, 1990)
Sufi Music of Turkey (CMP, 1990)

Cesaria Evora
Miss Perfumado (Lusafrica, 1992/Nonesuch, 1998)

Chaba Fadela
Hana Hana (Mango, 1989)
You Are Mine (Mango, 1988)

Fairport Convention
House Full (Hannibal, 1986)
Liege and Lief (A&M, 1969)
Unhalfbricking (Hannibal, 1969)
What We Did on Our Holidays (Hannibal, 1968)

Joseph Falcon & Cleoma Breaux Falcon
Abbeville Breakdown (Columbia, 1990)
Cajun Dance Party: Fais Do Do (Columbia, 1994)
Cleoma B. Falcon: A Cajun Music Classic (Jadfel, 1983)

Jose Feliciano
Court and Spark (Asylum, 1974)

Fernhill
Llatai (Beautiful Jo, 1998)

Alec Finn
Feadóga Stáin (Shanachie, 1992)

Frank Emilio Flynn
A Tiempo de Danzón (Milan Latino, 1998)

Folk Scat
Folk Scat (Nomad, 1996)

Canray Fontenot
La Musique Creole (Arhoolie, 1997)
Les Blues du Bayou (Melodeon, 1965)
Les Haricots Sont Pas Salés: Legendary Masters of Cajun and Creole Music (Cinq Planetes, 1998)
Louisiana Hot Sauce, Creole Style (Arhoolie, 1992)

Juan Carlos Formell
Songs from a Little Blue House (Wicklow/BMG, 1999)

Fortuna
Cantigas (Fortuna Produções Artísticas, 1994)
La Prima Vez (Fortuna Produções Artísticas, 1993)

Franco
A L'Ancienne Belgique (Grace, 1984)
Attention na SIDA (Sonodisc, 1987)
Cooperation: 1980–1982 (Sonodisc, 1982)
Disques d'Or et Maracas d'Or (Sonodisc)
En Colere: 1979/1980 (Sonodisc)
For Ever (Melodie)
Franco Joue avec Sam Mangwana (Grace)
Le Grande Maitre Franco (Celluloid, 1991)
Lettre à Monsieur le Directeur Général (Melodie)
Live in Europe (Sonodisc)
Merveilles du Passé 1957-1958-1959 (Sonodisc)
Originalité (RetroAfric, 1990)
Tres Impoli (Sonodisc, 1984)
20e Anniversaire (Sonodisc)

Carlos Gardel
The Best of Carlos Gardel (Hemisphere, 1998)

Dick Gaughan
Handful of Earth (Green Linnet, 1981)

Frankie Gavin
Frankie Goes to Town (The Bee's Knees, 1989/Green Linnet, 1991)
A Tribute to Joe Cooley (Gael-Linn, 1986)

Ghazal
As Night Falls on the Silk Road (Shanachie, 1998)
Lost Songs of the Silk Road (Shanachie, 1997)

Astrud Gilberto
Getz/Gilberto (Verve, 1963/1987)

João Gilberto
Getz/Gilberto (Verve, 1963/1987)
The Legendary João Gilberto (World Pacific, 1990)

The Gipsy Kings
The Best of the Gipsy Kings (Columbia, 1995)

Gjallarhorn
Ranarop—Call of the Sea Witch (Finlandia, 1997)

Paddy Glackin
The Whirlwind (Shanachie, 1995)

Ben Goldberg
Here by Now (Music and Arts, 1997)
Junk Genius (Knitting Factory Works, 1996)
Masks & Faces (Nine Winds, 1991/Tzadik, 1996)
Twelve Minor (Avant, 1997)

Jerry Gonzalez & the Fort Apache Band
Crossroads (Milestone, 1994)

Steve Gorn
Luminous Ragas (Interworld, 1994)

Marcia Griffiths
Best of 1969–1974: Put a Little Love in Your Heart (Trojan, 1993)

960 juan luis guerra

Juan Luis Guerra
Ojalá que Llueva Café (Karen, 1987)

The Gyuto Monks
Buddhist Chant II: Tibet (JVC World Sounds, 1990)
Freedom Chants from the Roof of the World (Rykodisc, 1989)
The Music of Tibet: The Tantric Rituals (Minuteman, 1968)

Idjah Hadijah
Jaipongan Java (GlobeStyle, 1990)
Tonggeret (Icon/Nonesuch Explorer, 1987)

Robbie Hannan
The Whirlwind (Shanachie, 1995)

Joy Harjo & Poetic Justice
Letter from the End of the Twentieth Century (Red Horses/Silverwave, 1996)

Larry Harlow
Hommy: A Latin Opera (Fania, 1972)
La Raza Latina: A Salsa Suite (Fania, 1977)

George Harrison
Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band (Parlophone, 1967)

Tish Hinojosa
Destiny's Gate (Warner Bros., 1993)
Dreaming from the Labyrinth/Soñar del Laberinto (Warner Bros., 1996)
Soñar del Laberinto (Warner Bros., 1997)

Home Service
Alright Jack (Making Waves/Hobson's Choice, 1986/Fledg'ling, 1997)
The Mysteries (CODA, 1985/Fledg'ling, 1997)

David Hudson
The Art of the Didjeridu: Selected Pieces 1987–1997 (Black Sun, 1997)

Ashley Hutchings
Battle of the Field (Island, 1976)
The Guv'nor (HTD)
The Prospect Before Us (EMI/Harvest, 1976/Hannibal, 1996)
Rise up Like the Sun (EMI/Harvest 1978)

Huun-Huur-Tu
The Orphan's Lament (Shanachie, 1994)
60 Horses in My Herd (Shanachie, 1993)

Impact All Stars
Forward the Bass: Dub from Randy's 1972–1975 (Blood & Fire, 1998)
Rebel Rock Reggae—This Is Augustus Pablo (Heartbeat, 1986)

Indian/Jazz Fusion (sidebar)
Shakti: The Best of Shakti (Moment, 1994)

The Irish Tradition
The Corner House (Green Linnet, 1978)
Makin' the Rounds (Green Linnet, 1981)

Andy Irvine
Andy Irvine and Paul Brady (Mulligan/Green Linnet, 1976)

The Itals
Brutal Out Deh (Nighthawk, 1982)

Jamaican Music 2: Nyahbingi (sidebar)
Count Ossie & the Mystic Revelation of Rastafari: Grounation (Ashanti, 1988)
Ras Michael & the Sons of Negus: Rastafari (Greensleeves, 1975)

Jamaican Music 11: Sonia Pottinger (sidebar)
Various Artists: Musical Feast: Mrs. Pottinger's High Note and Gayfeet Labels (Heartbeat, 1991) Various Artists: The Reggae Train: More Great Hits from the High Note Label (Heartbeat)

Jon Jang
Tiananmen! (Soul Note, 1993)

Don Santiago Jimenez
Don Santiago Jimenez, His First and Last Recordings: 1937 & 1979 (Arhoolie, 1994)

Antonio Carlos Jobim
The Man from Ipanema (Verve, 1995)

Esteban "Steve" Jordan
The Many Sounds of Steve Jordan (Arhoolie, 1990)

Jungular Grooves
J. Grooves (International Soul, 1996)
Jungular Grooves (International Soul, 1992)

Kalama's Quartet
Kalama's Quartet: Early Hawaiian Classics, 1927–1932 (Arhoolie Folklyric, 1993)

Maria Kalaniemi
Maria Kalaniemi (Olarin Musiikki Oy, 1992/Green Linnet, 1994)

Pépé Kallé
Gigant-Afrique (Globestyle, 1990)
Pon Moun Paka Bouge (Celluloid, 1991)

Kassav'
Live au Zenith (Columbia, 1986)
Siwo (Sonodisc, 1986)
Vini Pou (Columbia, 1987)
Zouk Is the Only Medicine We Have (Greensleeves U.K., 1988)

Ali Akbar Khan
Indian Archetexture (Water Lily Acoustics, 1992)
Legacy (AMMP, 1996)
Live in Amsterdam (Mozes and Aaronchurch, 1985) Passing on the Tradition (AMMP, 1996)
Then and Now (AMMP, 1995)
Ustad Ali Akbar Khan Plays Alap (AMMP, 1993)

Badar Ali Khan
Good Karma 1 (Baba, 1997)

Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan
Devotional & Love Songs (RealWorld, 1988)
En Concert a Paris (Ocora Radio France, 1995)
The Greatest Hits (Shanachie, 1997)
The Greatest Hits, Vol. 2 (Shanachie, 1998)
The Last Prophet (RealWorld, 1994)
Magic Touch (Oriental Star, 1989)
Must Must II (Oriental Star, 1995)
Mustt Mustt (RealWorld, 1990)
Night Song (RealWorld, 1996)
Qawwali: The Vocal Art of the Sufis I (JVC Japan, 1987)
Qawwali: The Vocal Art of the Sufis II (JVC Japan, 1987)
Shabaaz (RealWorld, 1995)
Shahen-Shah (RealWorld, 1989)
The Supreme Collection, Vol. I (Caroline, 1997)

Angélique Kidjo
Ayé (Mango, 1994)
Logozo (Mango, 1991)
Oremi (Island, 1998)

Shoukichi Kina
The Music Power from Okinawa (Globestyle, 1991)

King Tubby
King Tubby Meets Rockers Uptown (Clocktower, 1977)

Kodo
Ibuki (TriStar Music, 1997)

Alhaji Bai Konteh
Kora Melodies from the Republic of Gambia, West Africa (Rounder, 1979)

Ali Hassan Kuban
From Nubia to Cairo (Shanachie, 1991)
Nubian Magic (Mercator, 1994)

Umm Kulthum
Al Atlaal (Sono Cairo)
Ana Fi Intizarak (Sono Cairo)
Nasheed Al-Amal (Sono Cairo)
Sahran Lewahdi (Sono Cairo)
Shams Al-Aseel (Sono Cairo)
Zalamouni Ennas/Ya Ein Ya Ein (Sono Cairo)

La India
Dicen Que Soy (Soho Latino, 1994)

Mary Jane Lamond
Suas e! (A&M, 1997/Wicklow, 1998)

La Muscagña
En Concierto (Resistencia, 1997)

La Sonora Dinamita
Cumbia, Cumbia: Cumbias de Oro de Colombia (World Circuit, 1989)
Cumbia, Cumbia, Vol. 2 (World Circuit, 1993)

La Sonora Meliyara
La India Meliyara (Riverboat, 1992)

Bill Laswell
Ekstasis (Axiom, 1993)

Le Mystère des Voix Bulgares
Le Mystère des Voix Bulgares (Nonesuch, 1987)

Eddie LeJeune
It's in the Blood (Rounder, 1991)

Iry LeJeune
Cajun's Greatest: The Definitive Collection (Ace, 1994)

Les Têtes Brulées
Hot Heads (Shanachie, 1990)

Lhasa
La Llorona (Atlantic, 1998)

Arto Lindsay
Big Gundown (Nonesuch, 1984)

Little Joe
15 Exitos de Oro, Vol. II (SRP, 1984)
16 de Septiembre (Sony, 1991)

Cheikh Lô
Ne La Tiasse (World Circuit/Nonesuch, 1997)

Lord Kitchener
Kitch—King of Calypso (Melodisc Reissue)
Kitchener Goes Soca (Charlie's, 1980)
Klassic Kitchener, Volume One (Ice, 1992)
Klassic Kitchener, Volume Two (Ice, 1993)
Klassic Kitchener, Volume Three (Ice, 1993)
Lord Kitchener (Melodisc Reissue)
Master at Work (Kalico, 1987)
Roots of Soca (Charlie's, 1983)

Lord Melody
Lola (B's, 1982)
Precious Melodies (Ice, 1994)

Los Camperos de Valles
El Triunfo (Corasón/Música Tradicional, 1992)

Los Lobos
Kiko (Slash/Warner Bros., 1992)

Los Pleneros de la 21
Somos Boricuas—We Are Puerto Rican (Henry Street, 1996)

Los Super Seven
Just Another Band from East L.A.: A Collection (Warner Bros., 1993)

Los Van Van
Los Van Van: La Colección Cubana (Music Club, 1998)

Trevor Lucas
Fotheringay (Island, 1970)

Baaba Maal
Baayo (The Orphan) (Mango, 1991)
Djam Leelii: The Adventurers (Palm Pictures, 1998)
Firin' in Fouta (Mango, 1994)
Kora Revolution (Palm Pictures/Yoff, 1999)
Lam Toro (King of Toro) (Mango, 1993)
Live at the Royal Festival Hall (Palm Pictures, 1999)
Nomad Soul (Palm Pictures, 1998)
Wango (Syllart, 1985/Stern's, 1988)

Sipho Mabuse
Burn Up (Columbia, 1985)

Ashley MacIsaac
Suas e! (A&M, 1997/Wicklow, 1998)

Talitha MacKenzie
Sólas (Shanachie, 1994)
Spiorad (Shanachie, 1996)

Dougie MacLean
Putamayo Presents the Dougie MacLean Collection (Putamayo, 1995)
Singing Land (Dunkeld Records, 1986)

Mad Professor
No Protection (Circa/Gyroscope, 1994)
Who Knows the Secret of the Master Tape? Dub Me Crazy Part Five (Ariwa, 1990)

Taj Mahal
Kulanjan (Hannibal, 1999)

Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens
The Lion of Soweto (Earthworks, 1987)
The Lion Roars (Shanachie, 1989)
Thokozile (Earthworks, 1988)

Kante Manfila
N'na Niwalé (Merci les Mères) (popular african music, 1990)
Tradition (Celluloid/Melodie, 1989)

Sam Mangwana
Maria Tebbo (Stern's Classics, 1995)
Rumba Music (Stern's, 1994)

Samba Mapangala & Orchestra Virunga
Feet on Fire (Stern's Africa, 1991)

Bob Marley
African Herbsman (Trojan, 1973)
Exodus (Island, 1977)
Natty Dread (Island, 1974)
Songs of Freedom (Island/Tuff Gong, 1992)

Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers
Chocolate Supa Highway (Capitol, 1997)

John Martyn
Solid Air (Island Records, 1973)

Masada
Bar Kokhba (Tzadik, 1996)
Eight/Het (DIW, 1997)
Five/Hei (DIW, 1995)
Nine/Tet (DIW, 1997)
One/Alef (DIW, 1994)
Seven/Zayin (DIW, 1995)
Six/Vav (DIW, 1995)
Three/Gimel (DIW, 1994)
Two/Beit (DIW, 1994)

Prince Nico Mbarga
Aki Special (Rounder, 1987)

Andy McGann
It's a Hard Road to Travel (Shanachie, 1995)

Eileen McGann
Turn It Around (Dragonwing, 1991)

Chris McGregor
Blues for Mongezi (Ogun, 1975)
Country Cooking (Venture/Virgin, 1988)

Susan McKeown
Bones (Sheila-na-Gig, 1995/PRIME CD, 1996)
Bushes and Briars (Alula, 1998)

Daniela Mercury
Feijao Com Arroz (Beans with Rice) (Sony, 1997)

The Mighty Diamonds
Go Seek Your Rights (Frontline, 1990)

The Mighty Sparrow
Mighty Sparrow, Volume One (Ice, 1992)
25th Anniversary (Charlie's, 1980)

Robert Mirabal
Mirabal (Warner Western, 1997)

Marlui Miranda
Ihu: Todos os Sons (Blue Jackal, 1997)
Ihu 2—Kewere: Rezar: Prayer (Blue Jackal, 1998)

Jackie Mittoo
Downbeat the Ruler: Killer Instrumentals, The Best of Studio One, Volume 3 (Heartbeat, 1988)
100% Dynamite (Soul Jazz, 1998)

Matt Molloy
Contentment Is Wealth (Green Linnet, 1985)
Matt Molloy (Green Linnet, 1976)
Stony Steps (Green Linnet, 1987)

The Mollys
Hat Trick (Apolkalips Now, 1997)

Marisa Monte
Rose and Charcoal (Metroblue, 1994)

Airto Moreira
Encounters of the Fourth World (B&W Music, 1995)
Free (CTI, 1972/CBS, 1988)
Outernational Meltdown: Free at Last (B&W Music, 1995)

Abdel Aziz El Mubarak
Adbel Aziz El Mubarak (Globestyle, 1988)

Maryam Mursal
The Journey (RealWorld, 1998)

Junior Murvin
Arkology (Island, 1997)

Music As Healing (sidebar)
Various Artists: Shaman, Jhankri & Néle (ellipsis arts . . . , 1997)
Various Artists: Trance 1 (ellipsis arts . . . , 1995)
Various Artists: Trance 2 (ellipsis arts . . . , 1995)

Pandit Pran Nath
Ragas of Morning and Night (Gramavision/Great Northern Arts, 1991)

Maire Ní Chathasaigh
The New Strung Harp (Temple, 1985/1997)

Maura O'Connell
Helpless Heart (Warner Bros., 1989)

Sinéad O'Connor
I Do Not Want What I Haven't Got (Ensign/Chrysalis, 1990)
The Lion and the Cobra (Ensign/Chrysalis, 1987)

Sonny Okosun
Fire in Soweto (Oti, 1978)
Liberation (Shanachie, 1991)
3rd World (Oti, 1980)

Babatunde Olatunji
Drums of Passion (Columbia, 1957)

Olodum
Egito/Madagasgar (Continental, 1987)
Nubia/Axum Etiopia (Continental, 1988)

Orchestre National de Barbès
En Concert (Tinder, 1998)

Seán Ó Riada
Mise Eire (Gael-Linn, 1969)
Ó Riada sa Gaiety (Gael-Linn, 1969)

Geffery Oryema
Beat at the Border (RealWorld, 1993)
Exile (RealWorld, 1990)
Night to Night (RealWorld, 1977)

Osibisa
Woyaya (MCA, 1971/AIM, 1993)

Ossian
The Best of Ossian (Iona, 1994)
Borders (Iona, 1984)
When First I Went to Caledonia (Iona 1988)

The Oyster Band
Ride (PolyGram, 1989)

Gabby Pahinui
The Gabby Pahinui Hawaiian Band, Volume 1 (Edsel, 1975/1987)

The Pahinui Brothers
The Gabby Pahinui Hawaiian Band, Volume 1 (Edsel, 1975/1987)

Eddie Palmieri
Palmas (Elektra/Nonesuch, 1994)

Niamh Parsons
Blackbirds and Thrushes (Green Linnet, 1999)

Patato
Masterpiece (Messidor, 1993)
Ritmo y Candela (Round World, 1998)

Paco Peña
Azahara (Nimbus, 1988)

Tommy Peoples
Matt Molloy, Paul Brady, Tommy Peoples (Mulligan, 1978/Green Linnet, 1985)

Pixinguinha
Gente da Antiga (EMI-Odeon)
Paulo Moura e Os Batutas/Pixinguinha (Blue Jackel, 1998)
Pixinguinha 100 Anos (RCA/BMG, 1997)
São Pixinguinha (EMI-Odeon Brazil, 1977)

Planxty
After the Break (Tara, 1979)
Planxty (Polydor, 1973/Shanachie, 1979)

The Pogues
Rum, Sodomy & the Lash (MCA, 1985)

The Police
The Soul Cages (A&M, 1991)
Synchronicity (A&M, 1983)

Tito Puente
The Best of Dance Mania (BMG/International, 1957–60/1994)
50 Years of Swing (RMM, 1997)

The Pygmies (sidebar)
Louis Sarno: Bayaka (ellipsis arts . . .)
Various Artists: Echoes of the Forest (ellipsis arts . . .)

Hossam Ramzy
Ahlamy (ARC U.K., 1996)
Best of Baladi & Saaidi (ARC U.K., 1997)
Egyptian Rai (ARC U.K., 1994)

Rasha
Sudaniyat (NubeNegra/Alula, 1997)

Jean Redpath
Jean Redpath (Philo, 1975/1989)
Lowlands (Philo, 1994)
The Songs of Robert Burns, Volumes I and II (Philo, 1976/1980/1996)

Bonnie Rideout
Celtic Circles (Maggie's Music, 1994)
Gi'me Elbow Room (Maggie's Music, 1998)
Kindred Spirits (Maggie's Music, 1996)
A Scottish Christmas (Maggie's Music, 1996)

Roaring Lion
Sacred 78's (Ice, 1994)

Robbie Robertson
The Band (Capitol, 1969)
Contact from the Underworld of Redboy (Capitol, 1998)
Music for the Native Americans (Capitol, 1994)
Music from Big Pink (Capitol, 1968)
Rock of Ages (Capitol, 1972)

Rock en Español
Fito Paez: Circo Beat (WEA Latina, 1994)
Maldita Vecindad: El Circo (BMG Latin, 1991)

Virginia Rodrigues
Sol Negro (Black Sun) (Hannibal/Rykodisc, 1998)

Silvio Rodríguez
Cuba Classics 1: Canciónes urgentes (Sire/Luaka Bop, 1991)
Silvio (Fonomusic, 1992)

Aldus Roger
A Cajun Legend (La Louisiana, 1995)
Marie/Be Careful, You're Breaking My Heart (Swallow, c. 1966)
Plays the French Music of South Louisiana (La Louisiana, 1995)

Linda Ronstadt
Heart Like a Wheel (Capitol, 1974)
Trio (Warner Bros., 1987)

Lazaro Ros
Cantos (Intuition, 1992)
Olorún (Ashe/Xenophile, 1994)

Rossy
One Eye on the Future, One Eye on the Past (Shanachie, 1992)

David Rudder
Haiti (Sire, 1987)
This Is Soca (Sire, 1987)

Adam Rudolph
The World at Peace: Music for 12 Musicians (YAL/Meta, 1996)

Buffy Sainte-Marie
The Best of Buffy Sainte-Marie, Vol. 2 (Vanguard, 1971)
Illuminations (Vanguard, 1969)
It's My Way! (Vanguard, 1964)

Ryuichi Sakamoto
Neo Geo (Epic, 1987)

Salamat
Salam Delta (Piranha, 1995)

Poncho Sanchez
Chile Con Soul (Concord Picante, 1990)
Conga Blue (Concord Picante, 1996)

Arturo Sandoval
Arturo Sandoval & the Latin Train (GRP, 1996)
The Classical Album (RCA Victor/Red Seal, 1994)
Hot House (N2K, 1998)
I Remember Clifford (GRP, 1992)
Reunion (Messidor, 1991)

Oumou Sangare
Moussolou (World Circuit, 1991)

Maggie Sansone
A Scottish Christmas (Maggie's Music, 1996)

Mongo Santamaria
AfroRoots (Prestige, 1958/1989)
Mongo's Greatest Hits (Fantasy, 1995)
Skin on Skin: The Mongo Santamaria Anthology (1958–1995) (Rhino, 1999) Skins (Milestone, 1962/1976/1990)

Santana
Milagro (Polydor, 1992)
Santana III (Columbia, 1971)

Mansour Seck
Djam Leelii (Mango, 1989)

Shadow
The Best of Shadow, Vol. 1 (Straker's, 1995)

Simon Shaheen
The Music of Mohamed Abdel Wahab (Axiom, 1990)

Shiv Kumar Sharma
Call of the Valley (Hemisphere/EMI, 1967)
Santoor (Moment, 1993)

Shooglenifty
A Whiskey Kiss (Greentrax, 1996)

Leo Soileau
Cajun String Bands: Cajun Breakdown (Arhoolie, 1997)
Early American Cajun Music: The Early Recordings of Leo Soileau (Yazoo, 1999)
Pioneer Cajun Fiddler (1929–37) (Arhoolie, 1993)

Mercedes Sosa
Mercedes Sosa En Argentina (Philips, 1983/PolyGram Latino, 1992)
Mercedes Sosa Interpreta a Atahualpa Yupanqui (PolyGram Ibérica, 1977) 30 Años (PolyGram Latino, 1994)

Spearhead
Chocolate Supa Highway (Capitol, 1997)
Home (Capitol, 1994)

The Specials
Singles Collection (Capitol, 1991)

Andy Statman
Between Heaven and Earth: Music of the Jewish Mystics (Shanachie, 1997)

Steeleye Span
Please to See the King (B&C, 1971/Shanachie, 1990)
Silly Sisters (Chrysalis, 1976/Shanachie, 1988)

Andy M. Stewart
Dublin Lady (Green Linnet, 1987)

Alan Stivell
Chemins de Terre (Mercury, 1973/Dreyfus, 1994)
70/95 ZOOM (Dreyfus, 1997)

Dr. L. Subramaniam
Raga Hemavati (Nimbus, 1990)

Sukay
The Sukay Workbook (MelBay Publications, 1998)

Ron Sunsinger
Singing Stones (Fathom/Hearts of Space, 1994)

Dave Swarbrick
Folk on 2 (Cooking Vinyl, 1996)
Smiddyburn/Flittin' (Raven, 1981/1996)
Swarbrick/Swarbrick II (Transatlantic, 1976–77/Castle, 1996)

Philip Nchipe Tabane
Ke A Bereka (Tusk, 1996)
Pele Pele (Tusk, 1976)
Unh! (WEA/Elektra/Nonesuch, 1989)

Tabou Combo
8th Sacrament (Mini, 1974)
Haiti (Ibo, 1969)

Takadja
Diyé (Black Sun, 1996)
Takadja (Celestial Harmonies, 1995)

Taraf de Haïdouks
Honourable Brigands, Magic Horses, and Evil Eye (Crammed Discs, 1994) Musique des Tziganes de Roumanie (Crammed Discs, 1991)

Tarika
Son Egal (Xenophile, 1997)

Tau Moe Family
The Tau Moe Family with Bob Brozman: Ho'omana'o I Na Mele O Ka Wa U'i (Rounder, 1989)
Vintage Hawaiian Music: The Great Singers 1928–34 (Rounder, 1989)

Third World
96 Degrees in the Shade (Mango, 1977/1996)

Richard Thompson
Shoot out the Lights (Hannibal, 1982)

Timbalada
Cada Cabeca e um Mundo (PolyGram, 1994)
Timbalada (PolyGram, 1993)

Willie Toors
Från Logar, Skogar, Zigenarläger, och Cirkustält (Hurv, 1997)

Toots & the Maytals
Time Tough: Anthology (Island, 1996)

Ali Farka Touré
Talking Timbuktu (World Circuit, 1994)

Touré Kunda
Natalia (Celluloid, 1985)
Touré Kunda Live—Paris—Ziguinchor (Celluloid, 1983)

Horace Trahan
Ossun Blues (Swallow, 1996)

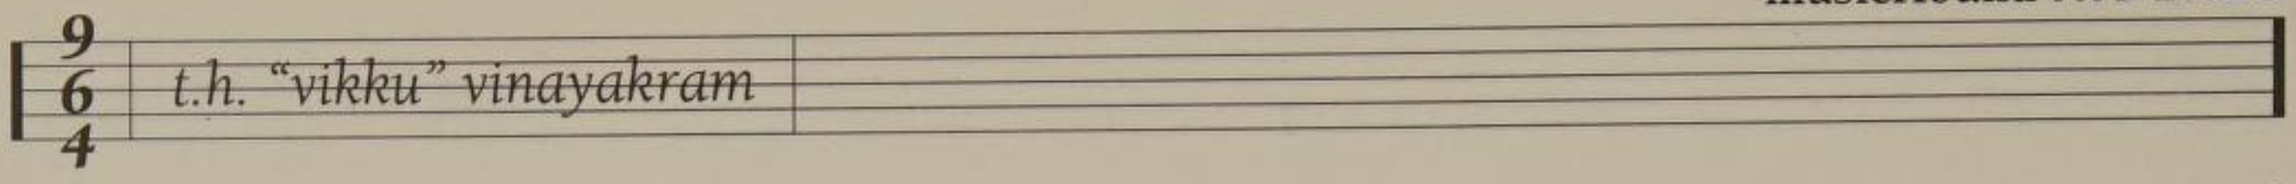
Trian
Trian (Flying Fish, 1991)

Chucho Valdes
Bele Bele en la Habana (Blue Note, 1998)

Nana Vasconcelos
Saudades (ECM, 1979)

Glen Velez
Hand Dance (Latitudes, 1996)

Caetano Veloso
Caetano (PolyGram Brasil, 1994)



T.H. "Vikku" Vinayakram
The Best of Shakti (Moment/Sony, 1994)

Carlos Vives
Clasicos de la Provincia (Sonolux/PolyGram Latino, 1993)

Vodou (sidebar)
Various Artists: Rhythms of Rapture: Sacred Music of Haitian Voudou (Smithsonian Folkways, 1995)

Wailing Souls
Wild Suspense (Mango, 1979)

The Waterboys
Fisherman's Blues (Chrysalis, 1988)
This Is the Sea (Chrysalis, 1985)

Randy Weston
The Spirits of Our Ancestors (Antilles, 1992)

Bill Whelan
Riverdance (Celtic Heartbeat, 1995)

Wimme
Gierran (Northside, 1999)
Wimme (Northside, 1997)

Paul Winter
Celtic Solstice (BMG/Windham Hill, 1999)
Icarus (Epic, 1970)

Wolfstone
The Chase (Iona 1992/Green Linnet, 1994)

Stavros Xarhakos & Nicos Gatsos
Ta Rembetika (CBS, 1983)

Atahualpa Yupanqui
Thirty Years of Singing (Chant du Monde, 1992)

Zaiko Langa Langa
L'Authenticite (Disques Esperance/Sonodisc, 1992)

Zap Mama
Adventures in Afropea 1: Zap Mama (Luaka Bop, 1993) Chocolate Supa Highway (Capitol, 1997)

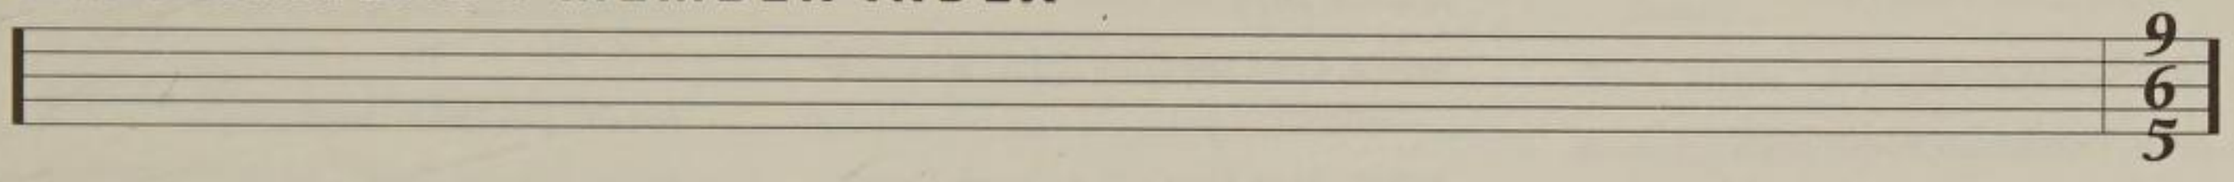
Tom Zé
Brazil Classics, Vol. 4: Best of Tom Zé (Luaka Bop, 1990)

Benjamin Zephaniah
Reggae Head (57 Productions, 1997)

Jalal Zolfonun
Mystic Journey (Music of the World, 1999)

Tappa Zukie
From the Archives (RAS, 1995)

Compilations
Anthology of Chant (Celestial Harmonies, 1995)
Anthology of World Music, Vols. 1–18 (Rounder, 1998–99)
The Arthur S. Alberts Collection: More Tribal, Folk, and Café Music of West Africa (Rykodisc, 1998)
Bayaka: The Extraordinary Music of the BaBenzélé Pygmies (ellipsis arts . . . , 1995)
Between Father Earth and Mother Sky (Narada, 1995)
The Big Bang: In the Beginning Was the Drum (ellipsis arts . . . , 1994)
B'ismillah (Sounds True, 1997)
Bringing It All Back Home (BBC, 1991)
Burmese Music Series (Shanachie, 1997)
By the Rivers of Babylon: Timeless Hymns of Rastafari (Shanachie, 1997)
Calypsos from Trinidad: Politics, Intrigue & Violence in the 1930s, Including the Butler Calypsos (Arhoolie/Folklyric, 1991)
Cuban Gold, Volumes 1–5 (Qbadisc, 1995–97)
Desert Blues (Network, 1995)
Duende: From Traditional Masters to Gypsy Rock (ellipsis arts . . . , 1994)
Duke Reid's Treasure Chest (Heartbeat, 1992)
Festival of Light (Island, 1996)
Folk Roots Magazine Presents Routes: 20 Years of Essential Folk, Roots & World Music (Africa, Europe, Asia, and the World) (Nascente, 1999)
Folk Roots Magazine Presents Roots: 20 Years of Essential Folk, Roots & World Music (Britain, Ireland, and North America) (Nascente, 1999)
Folksongs of the Louisiana Acadians (Folklyric, 1959/Arhoolie, 1994)
Forró: Music for Maids and Taxi Drivers (Rounder, 1989)
Global Meditation (The Relaxation Company)
Global Voices (Music of the World, 1998)
Holding up Half the Sky: Voices of Celtic Women (Shanachie, 1997)
Holding up Half the Sky: Voices of Asian Women (Shanachie, 1999)
The Hugo Masters: An Anthology of Chinese Classical Music (Celestial Harmonies, 1992)
The Indestructible Beat of Soweto (Shanachie, 1986)
J'ai été Au Bal (I Went to the Dance) (Arhoolie, 1990)
Jali Kunda: Griots of West Africa & Beyond (ellipsis arts . . . , 1996)
Javanese Court Gamelan Vol. 2 (Nonesuch, 1977)
The Kings & Queens of Township Jive: Modern Roots of the Indestructible Beat of Soweto (Earthworks, 1990)
Latcho Drom (Soundtrack) (La Bande Son/Virgin France, 1993)
The Moon and the Banana Tree: New Guitar Music from Madagascar (Shanachie, 1996)
Mourmourika: Songs of the Greek Underworld, 1930–1955 (Rounder, 1999)
The Music of Armenia, Vols. 1–6 (Celestial Harmonies, 1995)
The Music of Indonesia, Vols. 1–17 (Smithsonian, 1991–99)
The Music of Islam, Vols. 1–15 (Celestial Harmonies, 1997)
Musical Instruments of the World (Le Chant Du Monde/Harmonia Mundi, 1990)
Narada World: A Global Vision (Narada, 1997)
The New Feeling (Celestial Harmonies, 1996)
Planet Soup (ellipsis arts . . . , 1995)
Rembetica: Historic Urban Folk Songs from Greece (Rounder, 1992)
Resting Place of the Mists: New Valiha and Marovany Music from Madagascar (Shanachie, 1996)
The Rough Guide to the Music of Kenya & Tanzania (World Music Network, 1996)
Sacred Treasures: Choral Masterworks from Russia (Hearts of Space, 1998)
The Secret Museum of Mankind, Vols. 1–8 (Shanachie/Yazoo, 1995–99)
Septetos Cubanos: sones de Cuba (Corason/Música Tradicional, 1990)
Solid Gold, Coxsone Style (Studio One, 1972/Heartbeat, 1992)
The Soul of Black Peru (Luaka Bop, 1995)
The Spirit of Cape Verde (Tinder, 1998)
The Story of Jamaican Music: Tougher Than Tough (Mango, 1993)
Tibet: The Heart of Dharma (ellipsis arts . . . , 1996)
Tulikkulkku (Kansanmusiikki Instituutti, 1993)
Tuva: Among the Spirits (Smithsonian, 1999)
Vintage Hawaiian Music: The Great Singers, 1928–1934 (Rounder, 1989)
Voices of the World: An Anthology of Vocal Expression (Le Chant Du Monde/Harmonia Mundi, 1996)
Women of Spirit (Putumayo World Music, 1998)
A World out of Time: Henry Kaiser and David Lindley in Madagascar, Vols. 1–3 (Shanachie, 1992/1993/1996)



Can't remember what band a certain musician or vocalist is in? Wondering if a person has been in more than one band? The Band Member Index will guide you to the appropriate entry (or entries).

Abel, Yves Albert See Tabou Combo

Abers, Wil-Dog See Ozomatli

Abhissira, Michel See Kaoma

Abiam, Nano Danso See The Pan-African Orchestra

Aboltynsh, Alexeui See Kukuruza

Abreu, Luis A. See Bamboleo

Abruzzo, Tommy See Klezmer Plus!

Abshire, Nathan See The Balfa Brothers/Freres Balfa

Abukari, Ibrahima See The Pan-African Orchestra

Acheampong, Boateng Kodua See The Pan-African Orchestra

Adama, Paco Yé See Farafina

Adams, Mark See Dominic Kanza & the African Rhythm Machine

Adams, Mark See The Specials

Adamu, Danjuma See Kotoja/Ken Okulolo

Adelin, Mbazumutima See The Drummers of Burundi

Adepoju, Sikiru See Kotoja/Ken Okulolo

Adioa, Maxidilick See Adioa

Adjei, Yaw See The Pan-African Orchestra

Adolphi, Klaus See Horch

Afata, André See Les Têtes Brulées

Afonso, Marie See Zap Mama

Agard, Michael See krosfyah

Agudelo, Nestor See La Sonora Meliyara

Aguilar, Juan See Julian Avalos & Afro-Andes

Aguilar, Michael See La Mafia

Ahanda, Jean-Marie See Les Têtes Brulées

Ahmad, Salman See Junoon

Ahman, Max See Mynta

al'-aziz, Mustafâ 'Abd See Musicians of the Nile

al-Hilâli, Yunis See Musicians of the Nile

Al Kobary, Raid See El-Funoun

Al-Tawil, Thafer See El-Funoun

Alakotila, Timo See JPP/Järvelän Pikkupelimannit

Alalos, Pedro See Julian Avalos & Afro-Andes

Alamañy, Jesús See iCubanismo! Sierra Maestra

Alamañy, Luís, Jr. See iCubanismo!

Albareda, Fernando See Los Fabulosos Cadillacs

Albert, Laurent See Gazoline

Alchedes, Congera See The Drummers of Burundi

Aldar, Tamdyn See Chirgilchin

Alesi, Tommy See Beausoleil

Alfonso, Carlos See Sintesis

Alfonso, Equis See Sintesis

Alfonso, Jesus See Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

Alfonso, Jorge "El Nino" See Irakere

Alfred, Jerry See Jerry Alfred & the Medicine Beat

Alhassan, Abukari See The Pan-African Orchestra

Ali, Azam See Vas

'ali, Hanafi Mohamed See Musicians of the Nile

Allamuradovm, Khakberdy See Ashkabad

Allcock, Martin See Fairport Convention

Allen, Michael See Coyote Oldman

Allmond, Peck See Kotoja/Ken Okulolo

Almendros, Enrique See La Muscagña

Almo, Michael See Kid Creole & the Coconuts/Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band

Alonso, Madonna See Sintesis

Alpert, Michael See Brave Old World

Alphonso, Roland See The Skatalites

carlos alvarez

Alvarez, Carlos See iCubanismo!

Alzaga, Luis See Vocal Sampling

Amador, Brian See Sol y Canto

Amador, Rosi See Sol y Canto

Amanor, Compton See The Selecter

Amao, Loughty Lasisi See Osibisa

Amarantha, Jordan See Diga Rhythm Band

Amarchi, Clement See The Mandators/Victor Essiet

Amarfio, Sol See Osibisa

Amat, Pancho See iCubanismo!

Amin, Mohammed See El-Funoun

Aminov, Abokhai See The Ilyas Malayev Ensemble

Amissah, Paajoe See Zulu Spear

Amon, Kotey See The Pan-African Orchestra

Anderson, Al See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Anderson, Charley See The Selecter

Anderson, Neil See Seven Nations

Andes, Mark See Robert Mirabal/Mirabal

Andes, Matt See Robert Mirabal/Mirabal

Andre, Alfonso See Caifanes/Jaguares

Andre, Yvon See Tabou Combo

Andreev, Georgi See Bŭlgari

Andrianjanaka, Christian See Salala/Ricky & Mbasalala

Angel, José Leonardo See Sintesis

Ann, Souleymane See Habib Koité & Bamada

Anónimo See Café Tacuba

Anquoe, Jack See Grayhorse Singers

Anquoe, Jim See Grayhorse Singers

Anquoe, Jimmy See Grayhorse Singers

Anquoe, Redcloud See Grayhorse Singers

Anquoe, Rick See Grayhorse Singers

Anquoe, Warren See Grayhorse Singers

Ansong, Emmanuel Nana Kwesi See The Pan-African Orchestra

Antillon, Cynthia See Burning Bridges

Antime, Baranshakaje See The Drummers of Burundi

Anwar, Haji Mohammed See The Sabri Brothers

Appell, Glenn See Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band

Aquilin, Ndayarinze See The Drummers of Burundi

Arai, Takeshi See Kodo

Arcas, Mauricio See Los Amigos Invisibles

Arconte, Jacky See Kaoma

Ardoin, Chris See Chris Ardoin & Double Clutchin'

Ardoin, Sean See Chris Ardoin & Double Clutchin'

Areas, Jose "Chepito" See Santana/Carlos Santana

Arguedas, Carlos See Los Incas/Urubamba

Arguedas, Julio See Los Incas/Urubamba

Armas, Miguel Angel de See NG La Banda/Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Armitage, Dave See Blowzabella

Armstrong, Dee See Kíla

Armstrong, Ray See krosfyah

Arnoo, Kenny See Robert Mirabal/Mirabal

Arrellano, Yocupitzio See Los de Abajo

Arvind See Alaap

Asanioah, Annor See Baka Beyond

Ashbrook, Karen See Ceoltoiri

Asheim, Håkon See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Ashley, Tod See Firewater

Ashraf, Abu See El-Funoun

Äslund, Monica See Anitas Livs

Astro See UB40

Åström, Rickard See Groupa

Asumadu, Yaw See The Pan-African Orchestra

Ata, Muhammed See El-Funoun

Atalay, Guray See Hoelderlin Express/Hölderlin Express

Athumani, Rama See Samba Mapangala & Orchestra Virunga

Atiyeh, Najah See El-Funoun

Atkins, Andre See Tabou Combo

Atlas, Natacha See Transglobal Underground/Natacha Atlas

Attiso, Bartélémy See Orchestra Baobob

Aubou, Philip See Gazoline

Auburn See Te Vaka

August, Kent Perre See Zydeco Force

Austin, Norman See Peatbog Faeries

Avalos, Julian See Julian Avalos & Afro-Andes

Avedila See Zaiko Langa Langa

Averhoff, Carlos See Irakere

Avila Costa, Eduardo See Echoes of Incas

Awad, Ali See El-Funoun

Awingura, Anthony See The Pan-African Orchestra

Ayisi, John Lartey See The Pan-African Orchestra

Ayombila, Baba See The Pan-African Orchestra

Ayres, Ben See Cornershop

Azmat, Ali See Junoon

Bá, Pape See Orchestra Baobob

Babajian, Ara See SKAndalous All-Stars

Baca, Charlie See Joy Harjo & Poetic Justice

Badoux, Edmond See Sukay

Bagayogo, Lassana See Rail Band/Super Rail Band of Bamako

Baicu, Dumitru See Taraf de Haïdouks

Baidoo, Stanley See The Pan-African Orchestra

Bailey, Anthony See krosfyah

Bailey, Noel "Sowell Radics" See The Roots Radics

Bailey, Robert See Osibisa

Bain, Aly See The Boys of the Lough

Baka Forest people See Baka Beyond

Bakâsh, Yussef 'ali See Musicians of the Nile

Bakunde See Zaiko Langa Langa

Balfa, Burkeman See The Balfa Brothers/Freres Balfa

Balfa, Christine See Balfa Toujours

Balfa, Dewey See The Balfa Brothers/Freres Balfa

Balfa, Harry See The Balfa Brothers/Freres Balfa

Balfa, Nelda See The Balfa Brothers/Freres Balfa; Balfa Toujours

Balfa, Rodney See The Balfa Brothers/Freres Balfa

Balfa, Tony See Balfa Toujours

Balfa, Will See The Balfa Brothers/Freres Balfa

Baliardo, Diego See The Gipsy Kings

Baliardo, Jacques "Paco" See The Gipsy Kings

Baliardo, Tonino See The Gipsy Kings

Balogh, Béla See 3 Leg Torso

Baloy, Félix, Jr. See iCubanismo!

Bands, Isidro Dominguez See Tam Tam 2000

Baños, René See Vocal Sampling

Bapa, Alexander See Huun-Huur-Tu

Bapa, Sayan See Huun-Huur-Tu

Bapius, Muaka "Oncle" See Zaiko Langa Langa

Baptiste, Bonga Jean See Rara Machine

Baracutey, Jorge See Arawak Mountain Singers

Barard, David See Percussion Incorporated

Barata, José See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Barayev, Osher See The Ilyas Malayev Ensemble

Barcasnegras, Miguel See Los Pleneros de la 21

Barker, Dave See The Techniques

Barnard, Eric See The Twinkle Brothers

Barnes, Jeffrey See Brave Combo

Barnwell, Ysaye Maria See Sweet Honey in the Rock

Baró, Ronnie See Africando

Baron, Joey See Masada

Barrera, Mario See Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band

Barrero, Alejandro See Bamboleo

Barrett, Aston "Family Man" See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Barrett, Carlton See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Barroso, Abelardo See Sexteto Boloña

Barrow, Lemul See Kotoja/Ken Okulolo

Barson, Mike See Madness

Barzaga, Luis See Sierra Maestra

Bassie, Ra See Boom Shaka

Bayne, Iain See Runrig

Bazuka, Falman See Adioa

Beabrun, Ted Gabriel See Boukman Eksperyans

Beamer, Nona See Keola Beamer/Keola and Kapono Beamer/Nona Beamer

Beaubrun, Daniel "Dady" See Boukman Eksperyans

Beaubrun, Marjorie See Boukman Eksperyans

Beaubrun, Mimerose "Manze" See Boukman Eksperyans

Beaubrun, Théodore "Lôlô", Jr. See Boukman Eksperyans

Beauford, Carter See Dave Matthews Band

Beceiro, Carlos See La Muscagña

Beckerman, Sid See Klezmer Plus!

Beckford, O'Neill See Black Uhuru

Bedford, Mark See Madness

Bee, Robby See Robby Bee & the Boyz from the Rez

Bee, Tom See Xit

Bekongo, Roger See Les Têtes Brulées

Belhocine, Hamid See Kassav'

Belklow, Konba See Diblo Dibala/Loketo/Matchatcha

Bell, Derek See The Chieftains

Bella, Ulises See Ozomatli

Bellow, Komba Mafwala See Diblo Dibala/Loketo/Matchatcha

Belobi See Zaiko Langa Langa

Bembridge, Charley "H" See The Selecter

Ben Jor, Jorge See Jorge Ben/Jorge Ben Jor

Benary, Barbara See Gamelan Son of Lion

Benavides, Ivan See Bloque

Bendile, Gideon See Zulu Spear

Bendixen, Søren See Sorten Muld

Bendixen, Ulla See Sorten Muld

Beniko, Zangilu See Zaiko Langa Langa

Benitez, Neil See La Sonora Meliyara

Benitez, Rafel See La Sonora Meliyara

Benlala, Fateh See Orchestre National de Barbès

Benn, Reggie See Jungular Grooves

Bennet, Joseph See Jolly Boys

Bennett, Wayne See Percussion Incorporated

Benoît, Ntakarutimana See The Drummers of Burundi

Bensidhoune, Ahmed See Orchestre National de Barbès

Bergin, Mary See Mary Bergin/Dordan

Bergmann, Ken See The Klezmorim

Bergset, Arve Moen See Annbjørg Lien/Bukken Bruse

Berlin, Steve See Los Lobos

Berman, Eric See Kapelye

Bermudez, Edilio See Sol y Canto

Bern, Alan See Brave Old World

Bernal, Eloy See Conjunto Bernal

Bernal, Pablo See Bloque

Bernal, Paulino See Conjunto Bernal

Beroard, Jocelyn See Kassav'

Berrios, Steve See Jerry Gonzalez & the Fort Apache Band

Berru, Max See Inti-Illimani

Berthé, Abdoul Wahab See Habib Koité & Bamada

Berzas, Kevin See Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys

Beyai, Ousman See Soto Koto Band/Super Eagles/Ifang Bondi

Bhengu, Sipho See Soul Brothers

Biggs, Charlie See Ricardo Lemvo & Makina Loca

Billingham, Micky See The English Beat/General Public

Birch, Adam See The Specials

Bird, David See Eden's Bridge

Bitchuka, Hasani See Mlimani Park Orchestra

Bjorling, Kurt See Brave Old World

Black, Frances See Arcady; The Black Family/Shay, Michael, and Martin Black

Black, Jeremy See Mouth Music

Black, Martin See The Black Family/Shay, Michael, and Martin Black

Black, Mary See The Black Family/Shay, Michael, and Martin Black; De Dannan/De Danann

Black, Michael See The Black Family/Shay, Michael, and Martin Black

Black, Pauline See The Selecter

Black, Shay See The Black Family/Shay, Michael, and Martin Black

Blake, Tchad See Latin Playboys

Blakey, Colin See The Waterboys

Blanco, Luís Eduardo See King Changó

Blanquito Man See King Changó

Blom, Pedro See Hoven Droven

Blythe, Geoffrey See Black 47

Bobadilla, Gregorio See Echoes of Incas

Bohan, Gary See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Bolander, Pelle See Abel & Kaninerna

Bold Eagle, Al See Arawak Mountain Singers

Bomberry, Charlene See Six Nations Women Singers

Bonaventure, Jean-Claude See Kaoma

Bonilla, Don Armando See Kid Creole & the Coconuts/Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band

Bonnar, John See Dead Can Dance

Bonne, Angel See Los Van Van

Boond, Peter See Ceolbeg

Boone, Michael See Kid Creole & the Coconuts/Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band

Borges, Vannia See Bamboleo

Borreo, Eliseo See Strunz & Farah

Bortey, Ebenezer See The Pan-African Orchestra

Bortnick, Avi See Kotoja/Ken Okulolo

Botri, Yaw Della See The Pan-African Orchestra

Bouchiki, Jahloul "Chico" See The Gipsy Kings

Boukella, Youcef See Orchestre National de Barbès

Boura, Jerico See Gazoline

Bourke, Ciaran See The Dubliners

Bovell, Margaret See krosfyah

Bowen, Robin Huw See Crasdant

Bowens, Nadege See Rara Machine

Boyoyo See Boyoyo Boys

Boysen, Dean See Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band

Bradbury, John See The Specials

Brady, Paul See Planxty

Braithwaite, Junior See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Brand, Dollar See Abdullah Ibrahim/Dollar Brand

Bråten Berg, Kirsten See Frå Senegal Til Setesdal

Braun, Ivo See Maxwell Street Klezmer Band

Braz, Loalwa See Kaoma

Breaux, Jimmy See Beausoleil

Breedlove, Nathan See SKAndalous All-Stars

Brendog See SKAndalous All-Stars

Brennan, Ciaran See Clannad

Brennan, Enya See Clannad

Brennan, Máire See Clannad

Brennan, Paul See Clannad

Brennan, Pól See The Guo Brothers & Shung Tian

Bressler, Judy See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Brevette, Lloyd See The Skatalites

Briceno, Julio See Los Amigos Invisibles

Bridgeman, Noel See The Waterboys

Brigandi, Joe See Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band; Kotoja/Ken Okulolo

Briggs, Paul Dino See The Ukrainians

Brignol, Jean Mary See RAM

Brisland-Ferner, Stefan See Garmarna; Vadå

Brisset, Donovan See The Itals

Brito, Manuel See Tam Tam 2000

Brock, Paul See Moving Cloud

Broderick, Patsy See Arcady

Brody, David See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Brody, Lauren See Kapelye

Brooks, Brian See The House Band

Brooks, Ken See Kotoja/Ken Okulolo

Brooks, Mark Steven See Gamelan Son of Lion

Brooks, Morvin See The Techniques

Brotman, Stuart See Brave Old World

Brousard, Kevin See Roy Carrier/Roy Carrier & the Night Rockers

Broussard, Bobby See Chris Ardoin & Double Clutchin'

Broussard, Herbert See Zydeco Force

Broussard, Jeffery See Zydeco Force

Broussard, Shelton See Zydeco Force

Browder, Dr. Buzzard, Jr. 's Original Savannah Band: Stoney See Kid Creole & the Coconuts/Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band

Brown, Carlinhos See Timbalada

Brown, David See Santana/Carlos Santana

Brown, Derrick See The Twinkle Brothers

Brown, Desmond See The Selecter

Brown, Harold See Percussion Incorporated

Brown, James See UB40

Brown, Selwyn See Steel Pulse

Bruce, Jo See Afro Celt Sound System

Bryan, Carlton See Steel Pulse

Buck, Betsy See Six Nations Women Singers

Buck, Sadie See Six Nations Women Singers

Bulgrin, Lascelles "Wiss" See Israel Vibration

Bunkert, Somcharn See Fong Naam

Burke, Kevin See The Bothy Band; Open House; Patrick Street

Burnett, Watty See The Congos

Burning, Jaynane See Six Nations Women Singers

Burrell, Elouise See Kotoja/Ken Okulolo

Buse, J.P. See Zaiko Langa Langa

Bustillo, José See Sintesis

Byers, Roddy "Radiation" See The Specials

Byrne, Chris See Black 47

Byrne, David See Talking Heads

Byrne, Dermot See Altan

Byrne, Jim See Craobh Rua

Byron, Don See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Cabrera, Yosvany Terry See iCubanismo!

Caddick, Bill See Home Service

Calá, Francisco Antonio (Tony) See NG La Banda/Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Callahan, Mat See The Looters

Calnan, Brian See Moving Hearts

Calvo, Pedro See Los Van Van

Camara, Naby See Takadja

Campbell, Ali See UB40

Campbell, Eamonn See The Dubliners

Campbell, Ian See Ian Campbell Folk Group/Ian Campbell

Campbell, Ian See Dr. Didg

Campbell, Lorna See Ian Campbell Folk Group/Ian Campbell

Campbell, Robin See UB40

Camplis, Carlos See Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band

Canadá, Michel See Milladoiro

Canelas, Javier See Sukay

Cannon, Sean See The Dubliners

Canto, Orlando See Los Van Van

Carabello, Michael See Santana/Carlos Santana

Carageorge, Greg See The Klezmorim

Carbajal, Richard See Joy Harjo & Poetic Justice

Cardosa, Wilfredo See Bamboleo

Carmichael, Peter See Diga Rhythm Band

Carr, Eamon See Horslips

Carrier, Chubby See Chubby Carrier/Chubby Carrier & the Bayou Swamp Band

Carrier, Kevin See Roy Carrier/Roy Carrier & the Night Rockers

Carrier, R., Jr. See Chubby Carrier/Chubby Carrier & the Bayou Swamp Band

Carrier, Roy See Roy Carrier/Roy Carrier & the Night Rockers

Carrier, Troy Dickie See Roy Carrier/Roy Carrier & the Night Rockers

Carrillo, Enrique See La Sonora Meliyara

Carrillo, Randy See Mariachi Cobre

Carrillo, Steve See Mariachi Cobre

Carroll, Celina See Ashkaru

Carroll, Liz See Trian

Carthy, Eliza See Eliza Carthy/Waterson:Carthy

Carthy, Martin See Eliza Carthy/Waterson:Carthy; Steeleye Span

Casal, Fernando See Milladoiro

Casel, Nitanju Bolade See Sweet Honey in the Rock

Casey, Karan See Solas/Seamus Egan

Casey, Nollaig See Planxty

Cassidy, Michael See Craobh Rua

Castellini, Leonardo See iCubanismo!

Cavanaile, Marie See Zap Mama

Cebarec, Alain See Gazoline

Cepeda, Alberto See Los Pleneros de la 21

Céspedes, Gladys "Bobi" See Conjunto Céspedes

Céspedes, Guillermo See Conjunto Céspedes

Cesta, Carlo See Ashkaru

Chacon, Osvaldo See Bamboleo

Chaisson, Mike See Chubby Carrier/Chubby Carrier & the Bayou Swamp Band

Chali 2na See Ozomatli

Chalmers, Norman See Ossian

Chancy, Adolph See Tabou Combo

Chancy, Albert, Jr. See Tabou Combo

Chang Gui Duo See The Guo Brothers & Shung Tian

Chantareau, Marc See The Gipsy Kings

Chapman, Mike See Balfa Toujours

Chapotín Delgado, Elpido See NG La Banda/Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Charles, Jennifer See Firewater

Chase, Dan See The English Beat/General Public

Chastain, Laurie See The Klezmorim

Chaudhuri, Aushim See Diga Rhythm Band

Chaudhuri, Swapan See Ghazal/Kayhan Kalhor

Chen Da-Wei See Film Orchestra of Shanghai/Film Symphony Orchestra

Cherns, Richard See Runrig

Chevron, Philip See The Pogues/Shane MacGowan

Chin, Clive See Impact All Stars

Chisholm, Duncan See Wolfstone

Chitsvatsva, Kenny See Bhundu Boys

Chodak, Tupten See The Gyuto Monks

Chopper See Abana Ba Nasery

Chowaneic, Andrez See Trebunia Family Band

Christensen, Lene Norgaard See Zap Mama

Chum, Ngek See Sam-Ang Sam Ensemble

Cianciarulo, Flavio See Los Fabulosos Cadillacs

Cirillo, Fred See The Looters

Cissokho, Issa See Orchestra Baobob

Cissoko, Kaouwding See Afro Celt Sound System

Cissokho, Solo See Frå Senegal Til Setesdal

Clancy, Aoife See Cherish the Ladies

Clancy, Bobby See The Clancy Brothers & Tommy Makem/Tommy Makem & Liam Clancy/Robbie O'Connell

Clancy, Liam See The Clancy Brothers & Tommy Makem/Tommy Makem & Liam Clancy/Robbie O'Connell

Clancy, Pat See The Clancy Brothers & Tommy Makem/Tommy Makem & Liam Clancy/Robbie O'Connell

Clancy, Tom See The Clancy Brothers & Tommy Makem/Tommy Makem & Liam Clancy/Robbie O'Connell

Clark, Brian See Ian Campbell Folk Group/Ian Campbell

Clark, Jenny See Battlefield Band

Clark, William "Bunny Rugs" See Third World

Clarke, Chris Gonzalez See Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band

Clarke, Danny See Meditations

Clarke, Eric "Fish" See The Roots Radics

Clarke, Jamie See The Pogues/Shane MacGowan

Claudio See Alaap

Clegg, Johnny See Johnny Clegg & Savuka/Juluka

Clement, José Mari See La Muscagña

Cleworth, Ian See Synergy

Coakley, John See The Boys of the Lough

Cockatoo, Jodie See Yothu Yindi

Coco See Alabina

Coffey, Aidan See De Dannan/De Danann

Coffy, Jean Paul See Boukman Eksperyans

Cohen, Greg See Masada

Coleman, Anthony See Masada

Coleridge See Transglobal Underground/Natacha Atlas

Collado, Alvaro See Los Van Van

Collins, Bernard See The Abyssinians

Collins, Shirley See Shirley Collins/Shirley & Dolly Collins/Etchingham Steam Band

Côme, Ntirandekura See The Drummers of Burundi

Comeaux, Tommy See Beausoleil

Comén, Jens See Hoven Droven

Connally, Jennifer See Black Uhuru

Conneff, Kevin See The Chieftains

Connolly, Brian See Craobh Rua

Connolly, John See Anam

Conrad, David See Black 47

Conte, Luis See Cuba L.A.; Strunz & Farah

Conyngham, Phillip See Alan Dargin/Reconciliation

Coogan, Mary See Cherish the Ladies

Coolidge, Priscilla See Walela

Coolidge, Rita See Walela

Cooper, Adrienne See Kapelye

Cooper, Chris See Conjunto Céspedes

Cooper, Michael "Ibo" See Third World

Cooper, Selwyn See Zydeco Hurricanes

Coore, Stephen "Cat" See Third World

Copado, Heliodoro See Los Camperos de Valles

Copeland, Iain See Peatbog Faeries

Copeland, Stewart See The Police/Sting

Corbett, Michael See Jungular Grooves

Córdoba, Emilio Córdoba See Conjunto Alma Jarocha

Coria, Enrique See Inkuyo; Sukay

Corona, Manuel See Sexteto Boloña

Cortés, José Luis See NG La Banda/Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Cortez, Carlos See Los de Abajo

Cortez, Jose Luis See Irakere

Cortéz, Pablo See NG La Banda/Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Coughlan, Eoin See Nomos

Coulibaly, Soungalo See Farafina

Coulon, Jorge See Inti-Illimani

Coulon, Marcelo See Inti-Illimani

Cousins, Gabriel See Percussion Incorporated

Covarrubias, Jesus See Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band

Covarrubio Soto, Rafael See Khenany

Cradick, Martin See Baka Beyond

Craig, Albert "Apple" See Israel Vibration

Craig, Shaun See Capercaillie

Crawford, Kevin See Moving Cloud

Crego, José Miguel See NG La Banda/Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Crepsac, Ernst See Tabou Combo

Crespo, Carlos See Sukay

Cridland, Ansel See Meditations

Cros, Jean-Louis See Ad Vielle Que Pourra

Crosbie, Malcolm See Shooglenifty

Cruz, Alex See Southern Scratch

Csoóri, Sandor See Márta Sebestyén/Muzsikás/Vujicsics

Cuao, Enrique See La Sonora Meliyara

Cuchelo, Joe See Perfect Thyroid

Cuervo, Armando See Irakere

Cuevas, Carlos See Los de Abajo

Cuffe, Tony See Ossian

Cullen, Maria See Alan Dargin/Reconciliation

Cumbá, Oney See Sintesis

Cumbo, Jorge See Los Incas/Urubamba

Cunningham, John See Nightnoise; Silly Wizard

Cunningham, Martín Adrian See King Changó

Cunningham, Phil See Silly Wizard

Curran, Ciarán See Altan

Custer, Beth See Trance Mission

Cut Chemist See Ozomatli

Cutting, Andy See Blowzabella; Fernhill

Czernik, Janina See Trebunia Family Band

D., Michael See Robby Bee & the Boyz from the Rez

Daily, Lloyd See Percussion Incorporated

Dalera, Juan See Los Incas/Urubamba

Daley, Richard See Third World

Daly, Jackie See Arcady; De Dannan/De Danann; Patrick Street

Daly, Mick See Four Men & a Dog

Damant, Jean-Louis See Gazoline

Dambele, Dedougou See Farafina

Dammers, Jerry See The Specials

Danielsson, Palle See Nordan Project

Dargin, Alan See Alan Dargin/Reconciliation

Darington, Pamela See Inkuyo

Darnell Browder, Thomas August "Kid Creole" See Kid Creole & the Coconuts/Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band

Darriau, Matt See The Klezmatics

Das Baul, Paban See Paban Das Baul & Sam Mills

Daugherty, Jay Dee See The Waterboys

Davey, Neil See Anam

Davie, Jonathan See Home Service

Davies, Noel See The Selecter

Davis, Carlton "Santa" See The Roots Radics

Davis, Norman See Wailing Souls

Davis, Ronnie See The Itals

Daye, Corey See Kid Creole & the Coconuts/Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band

Days, Kenneth See Culture

De Beer, Derek See Johnny Clegg & Savuka/Juluka

de la Cruz, Fernando Juan See iCubanismo!

de la Garza, David See La Mafia

De la Rosa, Oscar See La Mafia

Deans, Moses See Jolly Boys

Debiossat, Alain See Orchestre National de Barbès

Decimus, Georges See Kassav'

Decimus, Pierre-Edouard See Kassav'

Degraff, Sheila See Rara Machine

Dei, Kofi See The Pan-African Orchestra

Del Monte, Emilio See iCubanismo!

del Puerto, Carlos See Irakere

del Real, Emmanuel See Café Tacuba

Delafose, Geno See John Delafose & the Eunice Playboys

Delafose, John See John Delafose & the Eunice Playboys

Delafose, John, Jr. See John Delafose & the Eunice Playboys

Delafose, Tony See John Delafose & the Eunice Playboys

Delaney, Jim See Craobh Rua

Delgado, Issac See NG La Banda/Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Delgado, Luis See La Muscagña

Delgado, Vince See Diga Rhythm Band

Delgado Castillo, José See Echoes of Incas

Delgado Castillo, Rigoberto See Echoes of Incas

Dembelé, Ali See Rail Band/Super Rail Band of Bamako

Dembelé, Bamba See Rail Band/Super Rail Band of Bamako

Demers, Clément See Ad Vielle Que Pourra

Demnitz, David See Gamelan Son of Lion

Denison, Duane See Firewater

Dennis, Rudolph "Garth" See Black Uhuru; Wailing Souls

Denny, Sandy See Fairport Convention

Déogratias, Cimpaye See The Drummers of Burundi

Desvarieux, Jacob See Kassav'

Devlin, Barry See Horslips

Dhundup, Lobsang See The Gyuto Monks

Diabate, Mamadou See Farafina

Diabaté, Sekou "Bembeya" See Bembeya Jazz

Diabaté, Sekouba "Bambino" See Bembeya Jazz

Diallo, Médoune See Africando; Orchestra Baobob

Diarra, Baba See Farafina

Diaz, Agustin See Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

Díaz, Carlos See Vocal Sampling

Diaz, Gregorio See Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

Díaz, Jesús See Conjunto Céspedes

Diaz, Miguel Aurelio See iCubanismo!; Irakere

Diaz, Pavel See Bamboleo

Dibala, Diblo See Diblo Dibala/Loketo/Matchatcha

Dickson, Glenn See Naftule's Dream

Dida, Larbi See Orchestre National de Barbès

Dieng, Ndiouga See Orchestra Baobob

Dietrich, Rainer Christoph See Horch

Dietrichson, Tor See Diga Rhythm Band

Dillon, Eoin See Kíla

Dillon, Leonard See The Ethiopians

Dillon, Mary See Déanta

Diminique, Mboninyeretse See The Drummers of Burundi

Dinatien, Sindaharaye See The Drummers of Burundi

Dinesh, Pandit See Alaap

Diogomaye See étoile de Dakar

Dionne, Allan See Mad Pudding

Diop, Maguette See Rail Band/Super Rail Band of Bamako

Diop, Massamba See Afro Celt Sound System

Dladla, Mbongelele See Soul Brothers

Dlamini, Andrew See O'Yaba

Dr. Know See Bad Brains/Soul Brains

Doctor Loco See Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band

Doherty, Kevin See Four Men & a Dog

Doherty, Liz See Nomos

Doichev, Georgi See Bŭlgari

Dolan, Joe See Sweeney's Men

Domengeaux, Jimmy See Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys

Dominique, Hans "Bwa Gris" See Boukman Eksperyans

Donahue, Jerry See Fairport Convention

Donald, Keith See Moving Hearts

Donnelly, Maeve See Moving Cloud

Donnelly, Mark See Craobh Rua

Donneux, Bilo See Zap Mama

Donyo, Tupten See The Gyuto Monks

Dorvil, Jean E. See Boukan Ginen

Doucet, David See Beausoleil

Doucet, Michael See Beausoleil; Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band

Douglas, Blair See Runrig

Douglas, Dave See Masada

Downer, Oswald See Wailing Souls

Downie, Tyrone See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Dowsett, Nick See Carreg Lafar

Doyle, Alan See Great Big Sea

Doyle, John See Solas/Seamus Egan

Drakulich, Sonja See Stellamara

Dresser, Mark See Masada

Drever, Ivan See Wolfstone

Drew, Ronnie See The Dubliners

Drich, Joel See Sintesis

Dries-Daffne, Sammy See Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band

D'Rivera, Paquito See Irakere

Dru, Chico Roger See Kaoma

Drummond, Don See The Skatalites

Duarte, Cassio See Strunz & Farah

Dube, Thomeki See Black Umfolosi

Dubrosky, Doug See SKAndalous All-Stars

Dubulah, Count See Transglobal Underground/Natacha Atlas

Duenas, Roberto E. See Echoes of Incas

Duff, Marc See Capercaillie

Dugas, Kevin See Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys

Duggan, Noel See Clannad

Duggan, Padraig See Clannad

Dukeson, Andrew See Te Vaka

Dulce See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Dulin, Dan See SKAndalous All-Stars

Dunbar, Lowell Fillmore "Sly" See Sly & Robbie

Dunkerly, Johnny See Ian Campbell Folk Group/Ian Campbell

Dunne, Christy See Moving Cloud

Dunning, Brian See Nightnoise

Duplechain, Corey See Chubby Carrier/Chubby Carrier & the Bayou Swamp Band

Dural, Rodney See Chubby Carrier/Chubby Carrier & the Bayou Swamp Band

Duran, Horacio See Inti-Illimani

Duran, José Rolando See Vocal Sampling

Durcin, César See Kassav'

Dussault, Nathalie See Takadja

Dutt, Hank See The Kronos Quartet

Dvorin, Miriam See The Klezmorim

Dyble, Judy See Fairport Convention

Dziudze, Mikhail See Terem Quartet

Eaglesham, Struan See Wolfstone

Eaglesham, Stuart See Wolfstone

Easwaran, Mannargudi A. See Vadya Lahari

Eaton, Nigel See Blowzabella

Ebe, Curtis See Tabou Combo

Eccles, Noel See Moving Hearts

Edén, Mats See Groupa; Nordan Project

Edwards, Clarence See Burning Flames

Edwards, David See Burning Flames

Edwards, Toriano See Burning Flames

Egan, David See Filé

Egan, Seamus See Solas/Seamus Egan

Egan, Siobhan See Cherish the Ladies

Elder, Holly See Jungular Grooves

Elias, Gabriel See Los de Abajo

Eliassant, Milot See Boukan Ginen

Ellis, Greg See Vas

Ellis, Lance See Chubby Carrier/Chubby Carrier & the Bayou Swamp Band

Ellman, Ben See The New Orleans Klezmer All Stars

Elmore, Rick See The Klezmorim

Ely, Joe See Los Super Seven

Emilio See Emilio Navaira/Emilio

Enoch, Michael See Mlimani Park Orchestra

Enormous See Zaiko Langa Langa

Epeme, Theodore See Les Têtes Brulées

Epstein, Isidore "Chi" See Epstein Brothers Band

Epstein, Julius See Epstein Brothers Band

Epstein, Max See Epstein Brothers Band

Epstein, William See Epstein Brothers Band

Eri, Peter See Márta Sebestyén/Muzsikás/Vujicsics

Eriksson, Björn See Vadå

Eriksson, Kjell-Eriok See Hoven Droven

Ernst, Richard See Mad Pudding

Escoriza, Benjamin See Radio Tarifa

Eskinasi, Alain See Soto Koto Band/Super Eagles/Ifang Bondi

Espinosa, José See Bamboleo

Espinosa, Victoriano See Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

Espinoza, Jose See Ozomatli

Espinoza Morales, David See Khenany

Essex, Jeff See Kotoja/Ken Okulolo

Essiet, Victor See The Mandators/Victor Essiet

Essono, Georges See Les Têtes Brulées

Eugene, Bedy Andre See Boukan Ginen

Eugene, Roger See Tabou Combo

Evans, Howard See Home Service

Evans, Tyrone "Don" See The Techniques

Ewan, Alvin See Steel Pulse

Ewang, Kwust See The Mandators/Victor Essiet

Exavier, Myrtho See Boukan Ginen

Fabian, Andreas See Horch

Fadl, Mahmoud See Salamat

Fako, Tshidiso "Alexis" See O'Yaba

Falcaru, Gheorghe See Taraf de Haïdouks

Falcon, Cleoma Breaux See Joseph Falcon & Cleoma Breaux Falcon

Falcon, Joseph See Joseph Falcon & Cleoma Breaux Falcon

Falconer, Earl See UB40

Fall, Abdou See étoile de Dakar

Fall, Alassane See Takadja

Fallon, Dave See The Chieftains

Farah, Ardeshir See Strunz & Farah

Farid, Sarwat See The Sabri Brothers

Farrari, Andre See Väsen

Farrell, Myles See Anam

Faulkner, Michael See The Mollys

Favre, Boris See Mad Pudding

Fay, Martin See The Chieftains

Faye, El Hadji See étoile de Dakar

Fé, Pura See Pura Fé/Ulali; Robert Mirabal/Mirabal

Fean, Johnny See Horslips

Fearnley, James See The Pogues/Shane MacGowan

Fearon, Clinton See Gladiators/Albert Griffiths

Federicks, Rahsaan See Conjunto Céspedes

Felico See Diblo Dibala/Loketo/Matchatcha

Felix, Trevor "Trevy" See Boom Shaka

Fender, Freddy See Los Super Seven; Texas Tornados

Ferguson, Jimmy See Irish Rovers

Ferguson, Lloyd See The Mighty Diamonds

Fernandes, Carlos See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Fernandes, Marcos See Burning Bridges

Fernandes, Mario See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Fernández, Abel See Bamboleo

Fernandez, Hugo See La Sonora Meliyara

Fernandez, Manuel See Tam Tam 2000

Fernandez, Mario See Irakere

Fernandez Capello, Gabriel "Vicentico" See Los Fabulosos Cadillacs

Fernández Méndez, Xosé A. See Milladoiro

Ferr, Jean-Baptiste See Orchestre National de Barbès

Ferreirós, Xosé V. See Milladoiro

Ferrer, Fernando See ¡Cubanismo!

Ferreyra, Cesar See Julian Avalos & Afro-Andes

Ferry, Joe See SKAndalous All-Stars

Figueredo, Armando See Los Amigos Invisibles

Figueroa, Carlos See Mariachi Cobre

Fillinger, Akal See The Looters

Finch, Carl See Brave Combo

Findon, Andy See Home Service

Finger, Jeremy "Jem" See The Pogues/Shane MacGowan

Fink, Wolfgang "Lobo" See Willie & Lobo

Finlayson, Garry See Shooglenifty

Finn, Alec See De Dannan/De Danann

Fishman, Lisa See Maxwell Street Klezmer Band

Fitzpatrick, Pete See Naftule's Dream

Fitzsimmons, Earl See The Roots Radics

Flemming, Tommy See De Dannan/De Danann

Foa'i, Luavasa See Te Vaka

Foa'i, Opetaia See Te Vaka

Foley, Ged See Battlefield Band; The House Band; Patrick Street

Fomba, Adama See Rail Band/Super Rail Band of Bamako

Fontenot, Hadley See The Balfa Brothers/Freres Balfa

Fontenot, Nathan See Chris Ardoin & Double Clutchin'

Ford, Joe See Jerry Gonzalez & the Fort Apache Band

Forde, Brinsley "Dan" See Aswad

Forde, Felix See krosfyah

Foreman, Chris See Madness

Formell, Juan See Los Van Van

Formell, Samuel See Los Van Van

Forrest, Neil See Te Vaka

Forslund, Lars See Vadå

Forsythe, Jason See Tabou Combo

Forthun, Ingrid See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Foster, Jason See Perfect Thyroid

Fox, Mara See Conjunto Céspedes

François, Eddy "Samba Agau" See Boukan Ginen; Boukman Eksperyans

Frankenhauser, Jakob See Gjallarhorn

Franti, Michael See Spearhead

Frantz, Chris See Talking Heads

Fraser, Neil See Mad Professor/Neil Fraser

Fraser, Norma See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Freeman, Peter See The Mandators/Victor Essiet

Freilich, Johnathan See The New Orleans Klezmer All Stars

Freya, Jo See Blowzabella

Frezell, Amura See Percussion Incorporated

Friedlander, Erik See Masada

Froom, Mitchell See Latin Playboys

Fuemana, Pauly See OMC

Fujimoto, Yoko See Kodo

Fujimoto, Yoshikazu See Kodo

Gaar, John See Chubby Carrier/Chubby Carrier & the Bayou Swamp Band

Gabay, Yuval See Firewater

Gabbidon, Basil See Steel Pulse

Gahagan, John See Battlefield Band

Galada, Nondzondeleo Fancy See Amampondo

Gálvez Molina, Israel See Mariachi Cobre

Gama, Hector See Mariachi Cobre

Gammon, Vic See Shirley Collins/Shirley & Dolly Collins/Etchingham Steam Band

Ganesh Pillai, Yarpanam K. See Vadya Lahari

Garaya, Babatunde See Zulu Spear

García, Adolfo Roman See Mariachi Cobre

Garcia, Bárbaro Teuntor See Sierra Maestra

Garcia, Cipriano See Garcia Brothers

García, Fidel See Sintesis

Garcia, Jerry See Garcia Brothers

Garcia, Peter See Garcia Brothers

Garcia, Richard See Southern Scratch

Garcia, Santiago See Garcia Brothers

Garcia L., Concepcion See Khenany

Garcia Orozco, Arturo See Echoes of Incas

García Rei, Ramon "Moncho" See Milladoiro

Gariss, R.C., Jr. See Xit

Garnås, Agnes Buen See Det Syng

Garnica, Vladimir See Los de Abajo

Garnier, D'Jalma See Filé

Gaston, Bruce See Fong Naam

Gaughan, Dick See The Boys of the Lough

Gavilan, Ilmar See Cuba L.A.

Gavin, Frankie See De Dannan/De Danann

Gaye, Angus "Drummie Zed" See Aswad

Geard, Marcus See SKAndalous All-Stars

Geloum, Ben See Orchestra Baobob

Genocky, Liam See Steeleye Span

Gentleman, Sir Horace See The Specials

Geoghagan, Ashton See Seven Nations

Georgieva, Diana See Folk Scat

Gerdjikov, Todor See Folk Scat

Gerrard, Lisa See Dead Can Dance

Gheorghe, Anghel See Taraf de Haïdouks

Ghoggal, Fathella See Orchestre National de Barbès

Gilkyson, Eliza See Robert Mirabal/Mirabal

Gillespie, Natalie See Yothu Yindi

Giovannini, Davide See iCubanismo!

Giuclea, Paul See Taraf de Haïdouks

Glackin, Paddy See The Bothy Band

Godines, Carlos See iCubanismo!

Goggin, Martina See Mary Bergin/Dordan

Gogo, Marie See Jerry Alfred & the Medicine Beat

Goldberg, Ben See The Klezmorim

Goldberg, Merryl See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Golding, Lynval See The Specials

Gomes, Gabriel See Madredeus

Gomez, Ismael See La Sonora Meliyara

Gomis, Rudolphe See Orchestra Baobob

Gonzales, Leonard See La Mafia

Gonzalez, Andy See Jerry Gonzalez & the Fort Apache Band

González, Carlos See Sierra Maestra

Gonzalez, Israel Berriel See Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

Gonzalez, Jerry See Jerry Gonzalez & the Fort Apache Band

González, Juan de Marcos See Sierra Maestra

Gonzales, Luis Felipe See Echoes of Incas

González, Reinaldo See Bio Ritmo

Gonzalo Gavilán, Andrés See Bamboleo

Good Blanket, Jason See Grayhorse Singers

Goode, Daniel See Gamelan Son of Lion

Goodsight, Andrew See Black 47

Gottschald, Ralf See Hoelderlin Express/Hölderlin Express

Govindaswamy, M.S. See Karnataka College of Percussion

Graham, Mark See Open House

Grandison, Errol See Gladiators/Albert Griffiths

Grant, Angus R. See Shooglenifty

Grant, Kelvin See Musical Youth

Grant, Michael See Musical Youth

Grant, Norman See The Twinkle Brothers

Grant, Patrick See Gamelan Son of Lion

Grant, Ralston See The Twinkle Brothers

Gray, David Julian See The Klezmorim

Gray, Issa See Percussion Incorporated

Gray, James See Spearhead

Gray, Luther See Percussion Incorporated

Greeley, David See Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys

Green, Albert "Bongo Asher" See The Twinkle Brothers

Green, Tom See Baka Beyond

Greene, Tony See The Roots Radics

Greenwood, Derek Dee See Chris Ardoin & Double Clutchin'

Greer, Sam See Eastern Eagle Singers

Gregory, Darryl See Gamelan Son of Lion

Greisha, Fathi Abou See Salamat

Grgie, Gordana See Veritas

Griffith, Leonard See krosfyah

Griffiths, Albert See Gladiators/Albert Griffiths

Griffiths, Marcia See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Grijalva, Francisco See Mariachi Cobre

Gross, Ken See Klezmer Plus!

Gudmundson, Per See Nordan Project

Guerret, Nicolas See Gazoline

Guest, Gus See Horslips

Gueye, Matar See étoile de Dakar

Guillaume, Donald See Rara Machine

Guillaume, Jephte See Rara Machine

Guillory, Ida See Queen Ida/Ida Guillory

Guillot, Roberto See iCubanismo!

Guimarâes See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Guines, Tata See iCubanismo!

Gullane, Roy See Tannahill Weavers

Gunn, Tommy See The Boys of the Lough

Guo Liang See The Guo Brothers & Shung Tian

Guo Xiaun See The Guo Brothers & Shung Tian

Guo Yi See The Guo Brothers & Shung Tian

Guo Yue See The Guo Brothers & Shung Tian

Guthro, Bruce See Runrig

Gutiérrez, Tata See Sexteto Boloña

Gutiérrez-Rodríguez, Juan José See Los Pleneros de la 21

Guttmann, James See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Guzman, Guillermo See Strunz & Farah

Gyaltsen, Dakpa See The Gyuto Monks

H.R. See Bad Brains/Soul Brains

Haaman, Fritz See 23 Skidoo

Hadden, Martin See Silly Wizard

Hagberg, Anders See Mynta

Haines, Jah Jerry See The Skatalites

Hajali, Nidaa See El-Funoun

Hakala, Petri See Ottopasuna

Håkanes, Halvor See Det Syng

Hall, Pete See Cornershop

Hall, Terry See The Specials

Hallett, Bob See Great Big Sea

Hamar, Daniel See Márta Sebestyén/Muzsikás/Vujicsics

Hamilton, Bob See Jerry Alfred & the Medicine Beat

Hamilton, Mark See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Hamilton, Milton "Prilly" See Third World

Hamilton, Roy See The Roots Radics

Hamlin, Thomas See Black 47

Hanapi, Mike See Kalama's Quartet

Hanly, Mick See Moving Hearts

Hanson, Chris "Skunk" See Perfect Thyroid; SKAndalous All-Stars

Hardelin, Emma See Garmarna

Harjo, Joy See Joy Harjo & Poetic Justice

Harkin, Treasa See Anam

Harlan, Evan See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Harries, Tim See Steeleye Span

Harrigan, Katie See Ceolbeg

Harrington, David See The Kronos Quartet

Harris, David See Naftule's Dream

Harris, Evelyn Maria See Sweet Honey in the Rock

Harris, Mary See Spearhead

Harrison, Jerry See Talking Heads

Hart, Mickey See Diga Rhythm Band

Hart, Su See Baka Beyond

Hart, Tim See Steeleye Span

Hartman, Glenn See The New Orleans Klezmer All Stars

Harvey, Bernard "Touter" See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Hassan, Norman See UB40

Hato, Alain See Gazoline

Haven, Robert James See Jungular Grooves

Havlin, Deirdre See Déanta

Havsepian, Freddy See Kassav'

Hawk, Steve See Maxwell Street Klezmer Band

Hayden, Cathal See Four Men & a Dog

Haye, George "Buddy" See Wailing Souls

Heien, Gine See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Hejl, Johannes See Sorten Muld

Hendrickson, Arthur See The Selecter

Henry, Joan See Arawak Mountain Singers

Henson, Paul See Kotoja/Ken Okulolo

Hernandez, Adalberto See iCubanismo!

Hernandez, "Sugar Coated" Andy "Coati Mundi" See Kid Creole & the Coconuts/Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band

Hernandez, Bubba See Brave Combo

Hernandez, Cesar See Echoes of Incas

Hernandez, Guspavo See Khenany

Hernandez, Hernán See Los Tigres del Norte

Hernandez, Jorge See Los Tigres del Norte

Hernández, Marcos See Los Camperos de Valles

Hernández, Nengue See Ricardo Lemvo & Makina Loca

Hernandez, Raul See Los Tigres del Norte

Hernandez, Saul See Caifanes/Jaguares

Hernandez Mosqueda, Antonio See Khenany

Hernandez Ruíz, Antóñio See Mariachi Cobre

Herrera, Ignacio See iCubanismo!

Herrera, Inez Rivas See Conjunto Alma Jarocha

Herrera, Lee See Xit

Herrera, René See Bio Ritmo

Hess, Pat See Six Nations Women Singers

Hession, Carl See Moving Cloud

Hewson, Jean See Christina Smith & Jean Hewson

Hibbert, Frederick "Toots" See Toots & the Maytals

Hickey, Derek See De Dannan/De Danann

Hicks, Antwn Owen See Carreg Lafar

Hidalgo, David See Latin Playboys; Los Lobos; Los Super Seven

Higgs, Joe See Wailing Souls

Hildebrand, John See Mad Pudding

Hill, Joseph See Culture

Hillhouse, Andy See Mad Pudding

Himely, Eduardo See Sierra Maestra

Hinds, David See Steel Pulse

Hines, Delroy See Burning Spear

Ho Khac Chi See Khac Chi Ensemble

Hoang Ngoc Bich See Khac Chi Ensemble

Hoffman, Daniel See Davka

Hoffman, Kurt See Firewater

Hogan, Brian See Kíla

Hogan, Lance See Dead Can Dance; Kíla

Hoglin, Jense See Garmarna

Höglund, Björn See Hoven Droven

Holder, Ian See Shirley Collins/Shirley & Dolly Collins/Etchingham Steam Band

Holland, Rob See Conjunto Céspedes

Holm, Thomas See Sorten Muld

Holmes, Michael See Dervish

Holt, Errol "Flabba" See The Roots Radics

Hood, Wallace See Irish Rovers

Horan, Winifred See Solas/Seamus Egan

Howard, Noel See Jolly Boys

Howard, Quentin See Sukay

Huanca, Eugenio See Sol y Canto

Hudson, Earl See Bad Brains/Soul Brains

Huergo, Fernando See Sol y Canto

Huergo, Lucia See Sintesis

Hunt, Darryl See The Pogues/Shane MacGowan

Husbands, Mark See krosfyah

Hussain, Zakir See Diga Rhythm Band; Shakti

Hutchings, Ashley See Shirley Collins/Shirley & Dolly Collins/Etchingham Steam Band; Fairport Convention; Steeleye Span

Hutchinson, Keith See Johnny Clegg & Savuka/Juluka

Hutchinson, Trevor See The Waterboys

Hutton, Innes See Peatbog Faeries

Hyatt, Aitch See The Specials

Hyatt, Karl See The Twinkle Brothers

Hylen, Gustav See Hoven Droven

Hymowitz, David See California Cajun Orchestra

Ilomonen, Kristiina See Ottopasuna

Imagai, Kazuki See Kodo

Imbert, Pierre See Ad Vielle Que Pourra

Incharte, José Manuel "El Chino" See Sexteto Boloña

Inder, Paul See Alaap

Ingvarsson, Bo See Abel & Kaninerna

Inoue, Sachiko See Kodo

Interián, José See Sexteto Boloña

Iorga, Ilie See Taraf de Haïdouks

Irvine, Andy See Patrick Street; Planxty; Sweeney's Men

Ishtar See Alabina

Islam, Fazal See The Sabri Brothers

Itiene, Mannars See The Mandators/Victor Essiet

Ivitsky, Ben See Peatbog Faeries

Ivitsky, Conrad See Shooglenifty

Jack, Germaine See John Delafose & the Eunice Playboys

Jackson, George See Ossian

Jackson, Lemmy See The Mandators/Victor Essiet

Jackson, William See Ossian

Jacobs, Don See Maxwell Street Klezmer Band

Jacobsen, Anne Marit See Det Syng

James, David See Spearhead

James, Paul See Blowzabella

Jamison, Le Le See Spearhead

Jarrett, Irvin "Carrot" See Third World

Järvelä, Anni See JPP/Järvelän Pikkupelimannit

Järvelä, Arto See JPP/Järvelän Pikkupelimannit

Järvelä, Jouni See JPP/Järvelän Pikkupelimannit

Järvelä, Mauno See JPP/Järvelän Pikkupelimannit

Jayson, Mackie See Bad Brains/Soul Brains

Jean, Jean Claude See Tabou Combo

Jean, Jonas See RAM

Jean, Sylvain See RAM

Jean, Ti See Diblo Dibala/Loketo/Matchatcha

Jean-Baptiste, Mackel "Ti Bazol" See Boukman Eksperyans

Jean-Félix, Vladimir See Boukan Ginen

Jean-Louis, Maguy See Boukman Eksperyans

Jeanrenaud, Joan See The Kronos Quartet

Jenifer, Darryl Aaron See Bad Brains/Soul Brains

Jenkins, Kevin See Black 47

Jiausserand, Eric See Gazoline

Jigme, Tupten See The Gyuto Monks

Jimenez, Alfredo Boloña See Sexteto Boloña

Jimenez, Flaco See Los Super Seven; Texas Tornados

Jiménez, Israel Berriel See Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

Jiménez, Rafael Jenks See NG La Banda/Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Joachin, Mpfayokurera See The Drummers of Burundi

Joaquin, Angie See Southern Scratch

Joaquin, Brandis See Southern Scratch

Joaquin, Ron See Southern Scratch

Joaquin, Sara See Southern Scratch

Jobarteh, Sankung See Soto Koto Band/Super Eagles/Ifang Bondi

Johansson, Olov See Väsen

Johansson, Tina See Groupa; Nordan Project

Johansson, Tommy See Abel & Kaninerna

Johnson, Alonzo, Jr. See Zydeco Hurricanes

Johnson, Bob See Steeleye Span

Johnson, Elliot See Gu-Achi Fiddlers

Johnson, Jim See The Looters

Johnson, Joe See The Looters

Johnson, Roydel "Congo Ashanti Roy" See The Congos

Johnson, Shirley Childress See Sweet Honey in the Rock

Johnson, William Bluehouse See Joy Harjo & Poetic Justice

Johnson, Wycliffe "Steely" See The Roots Radics

Johny See Alaap

Jolivette, Nathaniel See Zydeco Hurricanes

Jones, Aaron See Craobh Rua

Jones, Dean "Lazy Bones" See Perfect Thyroid

Jones, Gary See Bio Ritmo

Jones, Gordon See Silly Wizard

Jones, Ialo See Ar Log

Jones, John See The Oyster Band

Jones, Linda Owen See Carreg Lafar

Jones, Malcolm See Runrig

Jones, Norman See The English Beat/General Public

Jones, Rhian Evan See Carreg Lafar

Jones, Sandra "Puma" See Black Uhuru

Jonnson, Carita See Abel & Kaninerna

Jordan, Cathy See Dervish

Josch, Freido See Dissidenten

Joseph, Alain See Gazoline

Joseph, Bacanamwo See The Drummers of Burundi

Joseph, Henri B.D. Pierre See Boukman Eksperyans

Joseph-I, Israel See Bad Brains/Soul Brains

Joseph, Masabarakiza See The Drummers of Burundi

Joseph, Yves See Tabou Combo

Josephsberg, Mark See Kid Creole & the Coconuts/Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band

Joyce, Jackie See Mouth Music

Júdice, Fernando See Madredeus

Jules, Pierre See RAM

Juncaj, Djeto See Immigrant Suns

Jungney, Lobsang See The Gyuto Monks

Justin, Yonel See RAM

Justiz, Roldolfo Argudin See NG La Banda/Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Juvénal, Mpitabavuma See The Drummers of Burundi

Kaapana, Ledward See Hui Ohana/Ledward Kaapana

Kaapana, Nedward See Hui Ohana/Ledward Kaapana

Kaasinen, Sari See Värttinä

Kabirr, Adbel See Soto Koto Band/Super Eagles/Ifang Bondi

Kabongo, Sabine See Zap Mama

Kachenchy, Juma See Samba Mapangala & Orchestra Virunga

Kada See The Itals

Kaewkramon, Suwit See Fong Naam

Kagona, Rise See Bhundu Boys

Kahlil, Aisha See Sweet Honey in the Rock

Kalama, William See Kalama's Quartet

Kalhor, Kayhan See Ghazal/Kayhan Kalhor

Källman, Sten See The Swedish Sax Septet

Kalolo, Lutila See Te Vaka

Kalsi, Johnny See Transglobal Underground/Natacha Atlas

Kandan, Aidysmaa See Chirgilchin

Kaneko, Ryutaro See Kodo

Kaneva, Radostina See Bŭlgari

Kangwena, Shakespear See Bhundu Boys

Kangwena, Shakie See Bhundu Boys

Kankonda, Cécilia See Zap Mama

Kano, Yasukazu See Kodo

Kanta, Alpha Senyni See Étoile de Dakar

Kanté, Mory See Rail Band/Super Rail Band of Bamako

Kante, Naima See Les Go de Koteba

Kanyakumari, A. See Vadya Lahari

Kanza, Dominic See Dominic Kanza & the African Rhythm Machine

Karim, Haji Abdul See The Sabri Brothers

Kasiek, Alex See Transglobal Underground/Natacha Atlas

Kastler, Arthur See The New Orleans Klezmer All Stars

Kaston, Etienne See The Mandators/Victor Essiet

Katayev, Iskhak See The Ilyas Malayev Ensemble

Katz, Mike See Battlefield Band; Ceolbeg

Kavana, Ron See Abana Ba Nasery

Kavhai, Washington See Bhundu Boys

Kazidonna, Mimi See Diblo Dibala/Loketo/Matchatcha

Keane, Conor See Arcady

Keane, Dolores See De Dannan/De Danann

Keane, Sean See The Chieftains

Kearey, Ian "Chopper" See The Oyster Band

Keenan, Paddy See The Bothy Band

Keijser, Roland See The Swedish Sax Septet

Keita, Fotigui See Rail Band/Super Rail Band of Bamako

Keita, Kabiné See Rail Band/Super Rail Band of Bamako

Keita, Maate See Les Go de Koteba

Keita, Tiawara See Farafina

Kellaway, Stuart See Yothu Yindi

Kelleghan, Matt See Moving Hearts

Kellner, Jean-Francois See Gazoline

Kelly, James See Planxty

Kelly, Liam See Dervish

Kelly, Luke See The Dubliners

Kelly, Mark See Altan

Kelly, Pat See The Techniques

Kelso, Beverley See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Kemp, Rick See Steeleye Span

Kennedy, Frankie See Altan

Kent, Stephen See Trance Mission

Kenton, Johnny See Los Pleneros de la 21

Kenya See Rara Machine

Keppeler, Ken See Bayou Seco/Bayou Eclectico

Kershaw, Doug See Doug Kershaw/Rusty & Doug

Kershaw, Rusty See Doug Kershaw/Rusty & Doug

Ketkhong, Boonyong See Fong Naam

Khan, Shujaat Hussain See Ghazal/Kayhan Kalhor

Khavasov, Ilyau See The Ilyas Malayev Ensemble

Khlay, Ra See Sam-Ang Sam Ensemble

Khovalyg, Kaigal-ool See Huun-Huur-Tu

Kicking Woman, Keith See Black Lodge Singers

Kiele, Niels See Sorten Muld

Kikusui, Kofu See The Japanese Koto Consort

Kilbride, Pat See Battlefield Band

Kilpatrick, Charles See Bio Ritmo

Kim, Harry See Cuba L.A.

Kimball, Jim See Firewater

King, Sherwin See krosfyah

King, Steve See Home Service

King, Tyrone See Xit

Kinsey, Donald See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Kinzaki, J.P. See Diblo Dibala/Loketo/Matchatcha

Kirkpatrick, John See Steeleye Span

Kirsch, Shane See Perfect Thyroid

Kirwan, Larry See Black 47

Kitch See Lord Kitchener/Kitch

Klein, Marlon See Dissidenten

Knight, Peter See Steeleye Span

Knockwood, Brian See Eastern Eagle Singers

Knockwood, Gary See Eastern Eagle Singers

Knockwood, Ivan See Eastern Eagle Singers

Knosi, Vusi See Boyoyo Boys

Knutsson, Jonas See Nordan Project

Kobo, Aime See Diblo Dibala/Loketo/Matchatcha

Koetle, Tsietsi See O'Yaba

Koffman, Alex See Maxwell Street Klezmer Band

Koita, Harunna See Farafina

Koité, Habib See Habib Koité & Bamada

Konaté, Mahama See Farafina

Kone, Salif See Farafina

Konstantinov, Andrei See Terem Quartet

Korsjøen, Linn See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Kotapish, Paul See Open House

Kouyaté, Damory See Rail Band/Super Rail Band of Bamako

Kouyate, Montaga See Orchestra Baobob

Kouyate, N'Faly See Afro Celt Sound System

Koy, Tony Harey See Adioa

Krakauer, David See The Klezmatics; Masada

Krauss, Olav See Hoelderlin Express/Hölderlin Express

Kreisberg, Jennifer See Pura Fé/Ulali; Robert Mirabal/Mirabal

Krichevsky, Dmitri See Kukuruza

Kronlid, David See Vadå

Krumova, Antoaneta See Folk Scat

Kruskal, Jody See Gamelan Son of Lion

Kulinsky, Konstanze See Adaro

Kuo, Jojo See Dominic Kanza & the African Rhythm Machine

Kurbanov, Kurban See Ashkabad

Kuular, Anatoly See Huun-Huur-Tu

Kuular, Oleg See Shu-De

Kuvezin, Albert See Huun-Huur-Tu; Yat-Kha

Kwakye, Kwabena See The Pan-African Orchestra

Kwakye, Kweku Sakyeama See The Pan-African Orchestra

Kwakye, Yaw Asiedu See The Pan-African Orchestra

Kynner, Dave See Adioa

Kynner, Natti See Adioa

Labarrera, Manuel See Los Van Van

Lacques, Mathew See Zulu Spear

Lacy, Richard See Eden's Bridge

Lacy, Sarah See Eden's Bridge

Lagos, Rebecca See Synergy

Laguerre, Richard See Boukan Ginen

Lamble, Martin See Fairport Convention

Lande, Mandla See Amampondo

Landry, Tray See Chubby Carrier/Chubby Carrier & the Bayou Swamp Band

Lang, Joergen W. See Hoelderlin Express/Hölderlin Express

Langeland, Sinikka See Det Syng

Länsman, Tunni See Girls of Angeli/Angelin Tytöt/Annel Nieddat

Länsman, Ursula See Girls of Angeli/Angelin Tytöt/Annel Nieddat

Lantigua, José See Los Pleneros de la 21

Lappalainen, Janne See Ottopasuna

Lara, Adalberto See iCubanismo!; Irakere

Lara, Eduardo See Los Tigres del Norte

Lara, Oscar See Los Tigres del Norte

Large, John See Eden's Bridge

Larkin, Steve See Anam

Larrinaga, Juan R. See Bamboleo

Larrisey, Brendan See Arcady

Laurent, Ncurira See The Drummers of Burundi

Lautaru, Constantin See Taraf de Haïdouks

Lavchev, Dimiter See Bŭlgari

Lavelle, Caroline See De Dannan/De Danann

Lawrence, Chris See Annabouboula

Lax, Russell See The Oyster Band

Le Mercier, Paddy See Baka Beyond

Le To Quyen See Khac Chi Ensemble

Leaf, Christopher See The Klezmorim

Leahy, Agnes See Leahy

Leahy, Angus See Leahy

Leahy, Donnell See Leahy

Leahy, Doug See Leahy

Leahy, Erin See Leahy

Leahy, Frank See Leahy

Leahy, Maria See Leahy

Leahy, Siobheann See Leahy

Leão, Rodrigo See Madredeus

Leavitt, Gabe See 3 Leg Torso

Leberra, Rafael See Bamboleo

Ledet, Tammy See Chris Ardoin & Double Clutchin'

Lee, Dave See The Ukrainians

Lee, Glenda See King Changó

Leess, Howie See Klezmer Plus!

Lefel, Edith See Gazoline

Legall, Frederic See Gazoline

Lejeune, David See Chubby Carrier/Chubby Carrier & the Bayou Swamp Band

Leloup, Denis See Gazoline

Lemaître, Christian See Kornog

Leman See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Lemble, Jean-Luc See Tam Tam 2000

Lemvo, Ricardo See Ricardo Lemvo & Makina Loca

Lengi-Lenga See Zaiko Langa Langa

Leonard, Aimée See Anam

Leonard, Jerome See Zulu Spear

Leos, Gerald, Sr. See Gu-Achi Fiddlers

Lépine, Robert See Takadja

Leroux, Alain See Ad Vielle Que Pourra

Leslie, Chris See Fairport Convention

Lessard, Stefan See Dave Matthews Band

LeSurf, Cathy See The Oyster Band

Letsi, Botiki See O'Yaba

Lett, Leslie See krosfyah

Letwaba, Solly See Johnny Clegg & Savuka/Juluka

Levenson, Adam See Davka

Levenson, Dan See Dan Levenson & Kim Murley/Blue Rose

Lewis, Jeff See Conjunto Céspedes

Lewis, Lindbergh See The Congos

Lewis, Nada See The Klezmorim

Leyva, Fernando See Los Van Van

Li Jinwen See Tianjin Buddhist Music Ensemble

Liben, Laura See Gamelan Son of Lion

Liberman, Lev See The Klezmorim

Liberus, Dieseul See Boukan Ginen

Licht, David See The Klezmatics

Lichtenberger, Mando, Jr. See La Mafia

Lien, Annbjørg See Annbjørg Lien/Bukken Bruse

Liggins, Len See The Ukrainians

Lijuan, Reynaldo See Robert Mirabal/Mirabal

Lillkvist, David See Gjallarhorn

Linares, Jesus See Los Van Van

Lindberg, Bo See Hoven Droven

Lindblad, Kurt See Ottopasuna

Lindo, Earl "Wire" See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Lindor, Patau See RAM

Linscott, Kevin See The Klezmorim

Lippitz, Lori See Maxwell Street Klezmer Band

Little Calf, La Verne See Grayhorse Singers

Littlehawk, Ken See Hawk Project

Livstrand, Anita See Anitas Livs

Lizoma See The Mandators/Victor Essiet

Llorca, Ricardo See Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

L'Mira, Marc See Gazoline

Lockhart, Jim See Horslips

London, Frank See The Klezmatics; Klezmer Conservatory Band

Long, Donna See Cherish the Ladies

Long, Scott See Seven Nations

Longchamp, Sergio Luna See iCubanismo!

Longo, N'Yoka See Zaiko Langa Langa

Loose, John See Trance Mission

López, César See iCubanismo!; Irakere

Lopez, Isaac See Sukay

Lopez, Tommy See Gu-Achi Fiddlers

López, Victoriano See Sexteto Boloña

Lorimer, Roddy See The Waterboys

Lormand, Ward See Filé

Lothian, Wayne See The English Beat/General Public

Louden, Hadley See Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band

Loughnane, Kathleen See Mary Bergin/Dordan

Louvel, Olivier See Orchestre National de Barbès

Loveless, Jim See Diga Rhythm Band

Lovelett, Ken See Hawk Project

Lozano, Conrad See Los Lobos

Lozano, Daniel See Los Fabulosos Cadillacs

Lozano, Danilo See Cuba L.A.

Lubadika, Pablo See Diblo Dibala/Loketo/Matchatcha

Lucas, Trevor See Fairport Convention

Ludonga, Michael "Nkululeku" See Amampondo

Luff, Ian See Blowzabella

Luna, Alberto See Khenany

Lunny, Dónal See The Bothy Band; Moving Hearts; Planxty

Lunny, Mánus See Capercaillie

Lupari, Gino See Four Men & a Dog

Lupie, Donna See SKAndalous All-Stars

Luscombe, Stephen See Alaap

Lynch, Bobby See The Dubliners

Lynch, Michel Melthon "Olicha" See Boukman Eksperyans

Lynch, Thomás See Abana Ba Nasery

Maah, Martin See Les Têtes Brulées

Mabele, Aurlus See Diblo Dibala/Loketo/Matchatcha

Mabuza, Vusi See Soul Brothers

Macaire, Mack See Diblo Dibala/Loketo/Matchatcha

MacArthur, Quee See Mouth Music

MacDonald, Calum See Runrig

MacDonald, Iain See Battlefield Band; Ossian

MacDonald, Robert See Runrig

MacDonald, Rory See Runrig

MacGowan, Shane See The Pogues/Shane MacGowan

MacInnes, Iain See Ossian

Macken, Maureen Doherty See Cherish the Ladies

Mackender, Gary See The Mollys

MacKenzie, Fiona See Anam

MacKenzie, Wayne See Wolfstone

MacKintosh, James See Mouth Music; Shooglenifty

MacLachlan, Joan See Capercaillie

MacLeod, Iain See The House Band; Shooglenifty

Macleod, Martin See Capercaillie

MacNeil, Kyle See The Barra MacNeils

MacNeil, Lucy See The Barra MacNeils

MacNeil, Sheumas See The Barra MacNeils

MacNeil, Stewart See The Barra MacNeils

Madden, Joannie See Cherish the Ladies

Madondo, Scorpion See Johnny Clegg & Savuka/Juluka

Magalhães, Pedro Ayres See Madredeus

Magubane, Javas See Soul Brothers

Mahlathini See Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens/Makgona Tsohle Band

Mahmûd, Jadd al-Rabb See Musicians of the Nile

Maibasse, João See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Mäkelä, Matti See JPP/Järvelän Pikkupelimannit

Makem, Tommy See The Clancy Brothers & Tommy Makem/Tommy Makem & Liam Clancy/Robbie O'Connell

Makoni, Sidney See O'Yaba

Makwela, Joseph See Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens/Makgona Tsohle Band

Malakov, Izra See The Ilyas Malayev Ensemble

Malayev, Ilyas See The Ilyas Malayev Ensemble

Malinow, Nicolai See Wolga Balalaika Ensemble

Mamedov, Gassan See Ashkabad

Mancini, Gus See Hawk Project

Mangurten, Gail See Maxwell Street Klezmer Band

Mangxola, Mildred Faith See Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens/Makgona Tsohle Band

Mani, T.A.S. See Karnataka College of Percussion

Mankaba, David See Bhundu Boys

Mankwane, Marks See Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens/Makgona Tsohle Band

Manning, Donald See The Abyssinians

Manning, John See Naftule's Dream

Manning, Lynford See The Abyssinians

Manole, Ion See Taraf de Haïdouks

Manole, Ionel See Taraf de Haïdouks

Manole, Marin See Taraf de Haïdouks

Manole, Marin P. See Taraf de Haïdouks

Mansikka-aho, Tommi See Gjallarhorn

Mantu, Hamid See Transglobal Underground/Natacha Atlas

Mapangala, Samba See Samba Mapangala & Orchestra Virunga

Mapika, Gordin See Bhundu Boys

Marc, Habonimana See The Drummers of Burundi

Marc, Mpitabakana See The Drummers of Burundi

Marcelin, Emmanuel See RAM

Marcovich, Alejandro See Caifanes/Jaguares

Margolis, Sam See Maxwell Street Klezmer Band

Marika, Banula See Yothu Yindi

Marika, Bunimbirr See Yothu Yindi

Marika, Witiyana See Yothu Yindi

Marin, Mikael See Väsen

Marley, Bob See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Marley, Cedella See Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers

Marley, David "Ziggy" See Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers

Marley, Rita See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Marley, Stephen See Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers

Marley Prendergast, Sharon See Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers

Marquinei, Mandosini See Amampondo

Marrufo, William See Ozomatli

Marshall, Cornel See Third World

Marshall, Jonathan See Eastern Eagle Singers

Martel, Francine See Takadja

Marthely, Jean Philippe See Kassav'

Martin, A. Michael See Xit

Martin, Alphonso See Steel Pulse

Martin, Janice G. See Six Nations Women Singers

Martin, John See Ossian; Tannahill Weavers

Martín, Rafa See La Muscagña

Martinez, Alex See Bloque

Martinez, Aris See Los Pleneros de la 21

Martinez, Christian See Gazoline

Martinez, Daniel See Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band

Martinez, Gilbert See Bloque

Martinez, Ray See Los Pleneros de la 21

Martínez, Roberto Juan See Mariachi Cobre

Martinez, Rolo See iCubanismo!

Martins, Frank See The Mandators/Victor Essiet

Marvin, Julian "Junior" See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Mashinini, Vusi See Boyoyo Boys

Masondo, David See Soul Brothers

Masterson, Declan See Moving Hearts

Masudi, Bavon See Samba Mapangala & Orchestra Virunga

Matas, Héctor See Los Pleneros de la 21

Matchoti See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Matheson, Colin See Ceolbeg

Matheson, Karen See Capercaillie

Matima See Zaiko Langa Langa

Matimba, Kuda See Bhundu Boys

Matole, Simpiwe See Amampondo

Matotiyane, Mantombi See Amampondo

Matsu, Bob See Kalama's Quartet

Mattacks, Dave See Fairport Convention

Matthews, Ceri Rhys See Fernhill

Matthews, Dave See Dave Matthews Band

Matthews, Iain See Fairport Convention

Matthews, Winston "Pipe" See Wailing Souls

Mattson, Hallbus Totte See Hedningarna

Mavuso, Steve See Johnny Clegg & Savuka/Juluka

Mayr, Johannes See Hoelderlin Express/Hölderlin Express

Mazibuko, Abedrigo See Ladysmith Black Mambazo

Mazibuko, Albert See Ladysmith Black Mambazo

Mbasalala See Salala/Ricky & Mbasalala

Mbida, Jacques Douglas See Kassav'

Mbizela, Blackie Zandisile See Amampondo

Mboob, Musa See Soto Koto Band/Super Eagles/Ifang Bondi

M'Boup, Abdoulaye Laye See Orchestra Baobob

McAleer, Shane See Dervish

McArthur, Keith See Spearhead

McCabe, Desy See Craobh Rua

McCallion, Nancy See The Mollys

McCann, Jim See The Dubliners

McCann, Séan See Great Big Sea

McCarlos, Don See Black Uhuru

McChesny, Bill See Groupa

McColeman, Andrea See Jerry Alfred & the Medicine Beat

McComiskey, Billy See The Irish Tradition/Brendan Mulvihill & Billy McComiskey; Trian

McConnell, Cathal See The Boys of the Lough

McCullough, Henry See Sweeney's Men

McCusker, John See Battlefield Band

McDonagh, Brian See Dervish

McDonagh, Johnny "Ringo" See De Dannan/De Danann

McDonald, Colin See Eastern Eagle Singers

McDonald, Jason See Eastern Eagle Singers

McDonald, Lloyd "Bread" See Wailing Souls

McDonald, Mark See Eastern Eagle Singers

McDowell, Wilcil See Irish Rovers

McGillivray, Duncan See Battlefield Band

McGinley, Martin See Dervish

McGlynn, Arty See Patrick Street

McGrath, Brian See Four Men & a Dog

McGuire, Manus See Moving Cloud

McHugh, Joe See Sean Nua

Mchunu, Sipho See Johnny Clegg & Savuka/Juluka

Mchunu, Zenzele See Soul Brothers

McKee, Gerry See Nomos

McKenna, Antoinette See Sean Nua

McKenna, Barney See The Dubliners

McKenna, Connie See Ceoltoiri

McKenna, Joe See Sean Nua

McKenzie, Claude See Kashtin

McKeown, Kevin See Irish Rovers

McKerron, Charlie See Capercaillie

McLauchlin, Andy See Crasdant

McLaughlin, John See Shakti

McLaughlin, Michael See Naftule's Dream

McLeod, Kirk See Seven Nations

McLerie, Jeanie See Bayou Seco/Bayou Eclectico

McMenemy, Jamie See Battlefield Band; Kornog

McNally, James See Afro Celt Sound System; The Pogues/Shane MacGowan

McNeill, Brian See Battlefield Band

McPherson, Graham "Suggs" See Madness

McQueen, Ronald See Steel Pulse

Mdletshe, Geophrey See Ladysmith Black Mambazo

Medeski, John See Masada

Medina, Carlos Ivan See Bloque

Medley, Sue See Robert Mirabal/Mirabal

Mejâlî, Mohammed Murâd See Musicians of the Nile

Mejia, Alcides See Sukay

Meky, Hassan See Salamat

Melendez, Jose Miguel See Irakere

Meléndez, Julius See Conjunto Céspedes

Melius, Perry See The Selecter

Meliyara, La India See La Sonora Meliyara

Mendes, João See Mendes Brothers

Mendes, Ramiro See Mendes Brothers

Mendoza, Wilfred See Gu-Achi Fiddlers

Menheim, Nicolas See Africando

Menocal, Manuel See Sexteto Boloña

Mensah, Eric Yemoh See The Pan-African Orchestra

Menz, Junior See The Techniques

Mercier, éric See Ad Vielle Que Pourra

Mercier, Peadar See The Chieftains

Meri-Jo See Zaiko Langa Langa

Merola, Pat See Epstein Brothers Band

Methembu, Russell See Ladysmith Black Mambazo

Metqâl, Metqâl Qenâwi See Musicians of the Nile

Metqâl, Shamandi Tewfiq See Musicians of the Nile

Meuse, Billy Joe See Eastern Eagle Singers

Meuse, David See Eastern Eagle Singers

Meyers, Augie See Texas Tornados

Mgwandi, Mbuyiselo See Dominic Kanza & the African Rhythm Machine

Mike, Johnny See Primeaux & Mike

Milagre See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Milchberg, Jorge See Los Incas/Urubamba

Millar, George See Irish Rovers

Millar, Glenda See Johnny Clegg & Savuka/Juluka

Millar, Joe See Irish Rovers

Millar, Will See Irish Rovers

Miller, Bill See Robert Mirabal/Mirabal

Miller, Bob See Bio Ritmo

Miller, Robert See Rara Machine

Miller, Robin See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Mills, Sam See Paban Das Baul & Sam Mills

Milne, Vince See Nomos

Mimouni, Toufik See Orchestre National de Barbès

Minardi, Gianni See The English Beat/General Public

Minardi, Mario See The English Beat/General Public

Mingas See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Mirabal, Manuel See ¡Cubanismo!

Mirabal, Robert See Robert Mirabal/Mirabal

Miranda, Andres See Irakere

Miranda, Edgardo See Los Pleneros de la 21

Miranda, Manuel See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Miro, Gerardo See Los Van Van

Mitchell, Shane See Dervish

Mitchell, Tom See Tabou Combo

Mitome, Tomohiro See Kodo

Mittoo, Jackie See The Skatalites

Mlilo, Bornface See Black Umfolosi

Mnculwana, Cyril See Johnny Clegg & Savuka/Juluka

Mngadi, Maxwell See Soul Brothers

Mo, Ragnhild See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Modelus, Jose See RAM

Moe, Dorian See Tau Moe Family

Moe, Lani See Tau Moe Family

Moe, Rose Kaohu See Tau Moe Family

Moe, Tau See Tau Moe Family

Mohlala, Archie See Boyoyo Boys

Mokoena, Sechaba See Zulu Spear

Moland, Randi Rosendahl See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Molinares, Hugo See La Sonora Meliyara

Molino, Vincent See Radio Tarifa

Möller, Ale See Nordan Project

Molloy, Matt See The Bothy Band; The Chieftains; Planxty

Moloney, Paddy See The Chieftains

Monama, Lucky See Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens/Makgona Tsohle Band

Mongun-ool, Ondar See Chirgilchin

Mongush, Mergen See Shu-De

Moniz, Belmiro See Tam Tam 2000

Moniz, Edouard See Tam Tam 2000

Monpié, Haila See Bamboleo

Monson, Ingrid See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Montero, Mayte See Bloque

Montoya, Carlos See Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band

Montoya, José Luis See Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

Montoya, Robert See Burning Bridges

Moore, Christy See Moving Hearts; Planxty

Moore, Johnny "Dizzy" See The Skatalites

Moore, LeRoi See Dave Matthews Band

Moore, Stanton See The New Orleans Klezmer All Stars

Mora, Alejandro See Echoes of Incas

Mora, Emmanuel See Echoes of Incas

Morales, Carlos Emilio See Irakere

Morales, Rodrigo See La Sonora Meliyara

Moreaux, Gilberto See Bamboleo

Morejon, Hugo See Los Van Van

Moreno, Soni See Pura Fé/Ulali; Robert Mirabal/Mirabal

Morgan, Memmalatel "Mr. Mojo" See Morgan Heritage

Morgan, Nakhamya "Lukes" See Morgan Heritage

Morgan, Peter See Morgan Heritage

Morgan, Roy "Gramps" See Morgan Heritage

Morgan, Una See Morgan Heritage

Morison, Stuart See Ossian

Morris, Aston "Charlie" See The Ethiopians

Morrison, Fred See Capercaillie

Morrison, Peter See Peatbog Faeries

Morrissett, Paul See The Klezmatics

Morse, Lunise See RAM

Morse, Richard See RAM

Morton, Everett See The English Beat/General Public

Morton, Robin See The Boys of the Lough

Moslov, Sergei See Kukuruza

Motion, Dave See Dr. Didg

Mouquet, Eric See Deep Forest

Mouton, Kufaru See Percussion Incorporated

Mowatt, Judy See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Moynihan, Diarmaid See Craobh Rua

Moynihan, Johnny See Arcady; De Dannan/De Danann; Planxty; Sweeney's Men

Moyo, Lucky See Black Umfolosi

Moyo, Morgen See Black Umfolosi

Moyo, Sotsha See Black Umfolosi

Mphatsang, Edward See O'Yaba

Mthethwa, Tuza See Soul Brothers

Muhamah, Gruma See The Pan-African Orchestra

Muhammed, Ramadan Atta See Musicians of the Nile

Mulens, Calixto Oviedo See NG La Banda/Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Muley, Nandkishor See Mynta

Mulholland, Rosie See Déanta

Mullan, Paul See Déanta

Mullrich, Uve See Dissidenten

Mulvihill, Brendan See The Irish Tradition/Brendan Mulvihill & Billy McComiskey

Munch, Henrik See Sorten Muld

Munguia, Juan See Irakere

Muñiz, Yaura See ¡Cubanismo!

Muñiz, Youre See ¡Cubanismo!

Muñoz, Jamie See La Muscagña

Munro, Donnie See Runrig

Munson, Dave Kaleipua See Kalama's Quartet

Munuggurr, Milkayngu See Yothu Yindi

Murley, Kim See Dan Levenson & Kim Murley/Blue Rose

Murphy, Colm See De Dannan/De Danann

Murphy, Donal See Four Men & a Dog

Murphy, Julie See Fernhill

Mussa, Issufo See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Mustapha, Daoudi See 3 Mustaphas 3

Mustapha, Expen$ive See Abana Ba Nasery; 3 Mustaphas 3

Mustapha, Hijaz See Abana Ba Nasery; 3 Mustaphas 3

Mustapha, Houzam See 3 Mustaphas 3

Mustapha, Kemo See 3 Mustaphas 3

Mustapha, Niaveti 3 See 3 Mustaphas 3

Mustapha, Sabah See 3 Mustaphas 3

Mustapha, Uncle Patrel See 3 Mustaphas 3

Mwelase, Jabulane See Ladysmith Black Mambazo

Myllykangas, Timo See JPP/Järvelän Pikkupelimannit

Myo, Darren See Eastern Eagle Singers

Myrdhin See Afro Celt Sound System

Myton, Cedric See The Congos

Mziza, Philippe "Mle" See Boyoyo Boys

Nadia See Rara Machine

Naimro, Jean-Claude See Kassav'

Naito, Tetsuro See Kodo

Namgyal, Tashi See The Gyuto Monks

Nanji, Mato See Indigenous

Nanjo, Akira See Kodo

Narkolayev, Roman See The Ilyas Malayev Ensemble

Narkong, Anant See Fong Naam

Nash, Rick See Burning Bridges

Nau, Herman See Tabou Combo

Navarrete, Raul See Conjunto Céspedes

Navarrete, Victor See Sintesis

Navia, Eddy See Sukay

Navia, Gabriel See Sukay

Nawahine, Bob See Kalama's Quartet

Nawasadio, Sylvie See Zap Mama

Nazaire, Nkunzimana See The Drummers of Burundi

Ncube, Noah "Mike" See Black Umfolosi

N'Diaye, Badou See étoile de Dakar

Ndiaye, Charles See Orchestra Baobob

N'Diaye, Oumar See Takadja

Ndlela, Sicelo See Soul Brothers

Ndlovu, Akiro See Zimbabwe Legit

Ndlovu, Dumisani See Zimbabwe Legit

N'Dour, Youssou See étoile de Dakar

N'Doye, Eric M'Backe See étoile de Dakar

Neacsu, Nicolae See Taraf de Haïdouks

Negrón, Jorge See Bio Ritmo

Nelson, Errol See Black Uhuru

Nelson, Zorkie See The Pan-African Orchestra

Nesterow, Ivan See Wolga Balalaika Ensemble

Netsky, Hankus See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Netsky, Steve See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Nevis, Simon See Eastern Eagle Singers

Newby, Kenneth See Trance Mission

Newman, Chris See The Boys of the Lough

Newman, Paul See Roy Carrier/Roy Carrier & the Night Rockers

N'Gom, Alassana See Baka Beyond

N'Gom, Sagar See Baka Beyond

N'Gomo, Mario See Sean Nua

Ngubane, Vivian See Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens/Makgona Tsohle Band

N'Guessan, Manou See Zap Mama

Nguyen Hoai Chau See Khac Chi Ensemble

Ngwenya, Moses See Soul Brothers

Ní Dhomhnaill, Tríona See The Bothy Band; Nightnoise

Ní Mhaonaigh, Mairéad See Altan

Ní Uallacháin, Eithne See Lá Lugh

Niang, Fania See Kaoma

Nibbs, Lloyd See The Skatalites

Nicholson, Duncan See Tannahill Weavers

Nick, Rick See Percussion Incorporated

Nicol, Simon See Fairport Convention

Nilsen, Line See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Nilsson, Mikael See Mynta

Nisbett, Steve "Grizzly" See Steel Pulse

Nishimura, Yayoi See The Japanese Koto Consort

Nissen, Tommy See Sorten Muld

Nkosi, West See Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens/Makgona Tsohle Band

Noa, Feliciano Arango See NG La Banda/Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Noda, Noriko See The Japanese Koto Consort

Nogueira, Monica See Kaoma

Nogueras Jordan, Juan See NG La Banda/Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Norbu, Tenzin See The Gyuto Monks

Norbu, Tsering See The Gyuto Monks

Norelius, Lise-Lottte See Anitas Livs

Norgyal, Tenzin See The Gyuto Monks

Norona, Julio See Los Van Van

Nuñez, Ludwig See Bamboleo

Nunoo, David Okoe See The Pan-African Orchestra

Nunoo, Robert Tawiah See The Pan-African Orchestra

Nxele, Bongani See Soul Brothers

Nyberg, Mikael See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Nyolo, Sally See Zap Mama

O'Brien, Andy See The Irish Tradition/Brendan Mulvihill & Billy McComiskey

O'Brien, Eoghan See Déanta

O'Brien, Kate See Déanta

Ocampo, Ernesto "Teto" See Bloque

O'Connell, Brian See Junoon

O'Connell, Maura See De Dannan/De Danann

O'Connell, Robbie See The Clancy Brothers & Tommy Makem/Tommy Makem & Liam Clancy/Robbie O'Connell

O'Connor, Charles See Horslips

O'Connor, Gerry See Four Men & a Dog; Lá Lugh

O'Connor, Martin See De Dannan/De Danann

Odametey, Charles Ofei See The Pan-African Orchestra

O'Day, Kevin See The New Orleans Klezmer All Stars

Ó Domhnaill, Mícheál See The Bothy Band; Nightnoise

O'Donnell, Gerry See Sean Nua

O'Dwyer, Adele See De Dannan/De Danann

O'Dwyer, Simon See Alan Dargin/Reconciliation

O'Flynn, Liam See Planxty

Ofori, Samuel See The Pan-African Orchestra

Ofsdal, Steinar See Annbjørg Lien/Bukken Bruse

Ó hEadra, Brian See Anam

Öhman, Christopher See Gjallarhorn

Okola, Enos See Abana Ba Nasery

Okulolo, Ken See Kotoja/Ken Okulolo

Old Mouse, Shaen See Black Lodge Singers

Oldenburg, Miguel See King Changó

O'Leary, Christy See The Boys of the Lough

Oliva, Juanito "Long John" See Strunz & Farah

Oliva, Long John See Echoes of Incas

Olivera, Raymundo See Cuba L.A.

Ombale, Bimi See Zaiko Langa Langa

Omufila, Justo Osala See Abana Ba Nasery

O'Neill, Eoghan See Moving Hearts; Planxty

Onizawa, Ayako See Kodo

Oorzhak, Leonid See Shu-De

Opara, Dan Satch See Oriental Brothers/Orientals/Dr. Sir Warrior and the (Original) Oriental Brothers International/Goodwin Kabaka Opara's Oriental Brothers International

Opara, Goodwin Kabaka See Oriental Brothers/Orientals/Dr. Sir Warrior and the (Original) Oriental Brothers International/Goodwin Kabaka Opara's Oriental Brothers International

Opara, Warrior See Oriental Brothers/Orientals/Dr. Sir Warrior and the (Original) Oriental Brothers International/Goodwin Kabaka Opara's Oriental Brothers International

Opare, Vida Koranteng See The Pan-African Orchestra

Opsahl, Carl Petter See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

O'Riordan, Cait See The Pogues/Shane MacGowan

Ortiz, Tómas Ramoz See iCubanismo!

Ortuño, Yuri See Sukay

Osei, Teddy See Osibisa

O'Shaughnessy, Paul See Altan

O'Shea, Simon See Carreg Lafar

Oskay, Billy See Nightnoise

O Snodaigh, Colm See Kíla

O Snodaigh, Rónán See Dead Can Dance; Kíla

O Snodaigh, Rossa See Kíla

O'Toole, Bill See Blowzabella

Ottosen, Martin See Sorten Muld

Ouattara, Seydou See Farafina

Ouattara, Yaya See Farafina

Ouedraogo, Mamadou See Rail Band/Super Rail Band of Bamako

Ouimet, Dave See Firewater

Oviedo, Julian See iCubanismo!

Oyate Ump Moni See Cornel Pewewardy/Oyate Ump Moni

Pacheco, Raúl See Ozomatli

Paddock, Mathew See Bio Ritmo

Padilla, Frank See Sintesis

Page, Jimmy See Page & Plant

Pahinui, Cyril See The Pahinui Brothers/Cyril Pahinui/James "Bla" Pahinui

Pahinui, James "Bla" See The Pahinui Brothers/Cyril Pahinui/James "Bla" Pahinui

Pahinui, Martin See The Pahinui Brothers/Cyril Pahinui/James "Bla" Pahinui

Paidoussi, Anna See Annabouboula

Pakandam, Kambiz See Echoes of Incas

Palm, Beh See Farafina

Palmer, Sam See Blowzabella

Palmov, George See Kukuruza

Pan Shizong See Tianjin Buddhist Music Ensemble

Pandovani, Henri See The Police/Sting

Panter, Horace See The English Beat/General Public

Paréz, Ana See Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

Paradis, Marc See Jerry Alfred & the Medicine Beat

Parcells, Fred See Black 47

Pardo, Jose Luis See Los Amigos Invisibles

Parfait, Onito See RAM

Parkinson, Chris See The House Band

Parks, Lloyd See The Techniques

Parris, Jackie See The Techniques

Parsons, Niamh See Arcady

Partridge, Jo See Sean Nua

Pasicznyk, Stepan See The Ukrainians

Pasquet, Andre "Dadou" See Magnum Band

Pasquet, Claude "Tico" See Magnum Band

Pasteur, Nyambikiye See The Drummers of Burundi

Pastor, Luis Angel See Bloque

Paterson, Rod See Ceolbeg

Pattman, Dave See iCubanismo!

Paulin, Christian See Mynta

Pauloby, Adolphe See Tam Tam 2000

Pava, Alvaro "Macondo" See La Sonora Meliyara

Pavao, Dennis See Hui Ohana/Ledward Kaapana

Pedro, Gnonnas See Africando

Pedroso, Cesar See Los Van Van

Pegg, Dave See Ian Campbell Folk Group/Ian Campbell; Fairport Convention

Pegrum, Nigel See Steeleye Span

Peixoto, José See Madredeus

Pelayo, Manuel See Bamboleo

Pelgen, Christoph See Adaro

Pelo, Lucas See Boyoyo Boys

Penderson, Jeff See Robert Mirabal/Mirabal

Pentland, Ali See Peatbog Faeries

Peoples, Tommy See The Bothy Band

Peralta, Omar A. See Bamboleo

Perez, Louie See Latin Playboys; Los Lobos

Pérez, Mariano Mena See NG La Banda/Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Pérez, Niño Jésus Alejandro See Ricardo Lemvo & Makina Loca

Pérez, Rolando Pérez See NG La Banda/Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Perez, Ruben See Conjunto Bernal

Perez, Salmon See Inkuyo

Perez Saco, Javier See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Perez Ixoneztli, Luis See Strunz & Farah

Perinic, Marica See Veritas

Perles, Rick See The New Orleans Klezmer All Stars

Perrier, Dominique See The Gipsy Kings

Perry, Brendan See Dead Can Dance

Perry, Robert See Dead Can Dance

Peterson, Joel See Immigrant Suns

Petry, Michel See Orchestre National de Barbès

Phale, Thomas See Soul Brothers

Phuakthongkham, Lamoon See Fong Naam

Phungula, Inos See Ladysmith Black Mambazo

Phunstok, Karma See The Gyuto Monks

Phuti, Benia See Black Umfolosi

Piai, Davide See Adaro

Pierre, Daniel See Tabou Combo

Pierre, Welmir J. See Rara Machine

Piggot, Charlie See De Dannan/De Danann

Pina, Edmundo See Los Van Van

Pincheiro, Julio See Bamboleo

Pincock, Dougie See Battlefield Band

Pineda, Raul See Sintesis

Pinkney, Dwight "Brother Dee" See The Roots Radics

Pinto, Mark See Baka Beyond

Piper, Colin See Synergy

Pirttijärvi, Ulla See Girls of Angeli/Angelin Tytöt/Annel Nieddat

Pla, Enrique See Irakere

Plaatjies, Dizu Zungulu See Amampondo

Plaatjies, Lulu Lungiswa See Amampondo

Placide, Nahimana See The Drummers of Burundi

Plant, Robert See Page & Plant

Plante, Gilles See Ad Vielle Que Pourra

Pohjonen, Kimmo See Ottopasuna

Poirier, Cheryl See Kid Creole & the Coconuts/Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band

Poisson, Petit See Zaiko Langa Langa

Poli, Beninko See Zaiko Langa Langa

Ponomarenko, Igor See Terem Quartet

Poocha, Frank See Joy Harjo & Poetic Justice

Popolipo See Zaiko Langa Langa

Porée, Justin "Niño" See Ozomatli

Porter, Keith See The Itals

Portugal, Damián See Los de Abajo

Potter, Terry See Shirley Collins/Shirley & Dolly Collins/Etchingham Steam Band

Potts, Sean See The Chieftains

Poullard, Danny See California Cajun Orchestra

Powell, Dirk See Balfa Toujours

Power, Darrell See Great Big Sea

Prater, Nick See Te Vaka

Prevost, Gerard See The Gipsy Kings

Primeaux, Verdell See Primeaux & Mike

Prince, Roland See Kid Creole & the Coconuts/Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band

Prior, Maddy See Steeleye Span

Prosser, Alan See Abana Ba Nasery; The Oyster Band

Prudhomme, Charles See John Delafose & the Eunice Playboys

Prudhomme, Jean-Cristophe See Gazoline

Prudhomme, Joseph See John Delafose & the Eunice Playboys

Puebla, Esteban See Sintesis

Puentes, Jesse See Southern Scratch

Puerto, Carlos See Cuba L.A.

Puerto, Carlos, Jr. See ¡Cubanismo!

Puisseaux, Carlos See Sierra Maestra

Pujada, Rafael Navarro See Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

Pyronneau, Elysee See Tabou Combo

Pyykönen, Tommi See JPP/Järvelän Pikkupelimannit

Qenâwi, Qenâwi Bakhit See Musicians of the Nile

Qotoyi, Mzwandile See Amampondo

Quemenar, Nicolas See Arcady

Quimby, Henderson See krosfyah

Quintana, Emilio Arteaga See Los Incas/Urubamba

Quintana, Jose "Changuito" See Los Van Van

Quintillén, Laura See Milladoiro

Quintyne, Cameron See krosfyah

Qureshi, Fazal See Mynta

Rabson, Miriam See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Radice, Mark See Kid Creole & the Coconuts/Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band

Rady, Salma Abd See Salamat

Rafferty, Mary See Cherish the Ladies

Raghavendra, K. See Karnataka College of Percussion

Raharimalala, Tina Norosoa See Tarika/Tarika Sammy

Railton, Michael See The English Beat/General Public

Raine-Reusch, Randy See Khac Chi Ensemble

Rajagopal, R.A. See Karnataka College of Percussion

Ramamani, Mrs. R.A. See Karnataka College of Percussion

Raman, V.K. See Karnataka College of Percussion

Ramasimanana, Claudia Marie Noëll See Tarika/Tarika Sammy

Ramirez G., Hector See Khenany

Ramirez, Jean-Pierre See Kassav'

Ramon See Alabina

Ramon, Isidoro Gutiérrez See Conjunto Alma Jarocha

Ramos, Barbaro See Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

Ramos, Diosdado See Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

Ramos, Luis See Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

Ramos, Ruben See Los Super Seven

Ramos, Vivian See Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

Rand, Wendell See Jungular Grooves

Randimbiarison, Ricky See Salala/Ricky & Mbasalala

Randriamanantena, Dieudonné See Tarika/Tarika Sammy

Randrianasolomalala, Victor See Tarika/Tarika Sammy

Rangel, Enrique See Café Tacuba

Rangel, Eric See Conjunto Céspedes

Rangel, Joselo See Café Tacuba

Ranglin, Ernest See The Skatalites

Ranken, Andrew See The Pogues/Shane MacGowan

Ranking Roger See The English Beat/General Public

Rasch, Bjørn Ole See Annbjørg Lien/Bukken Bruse

Raskin, John See The Klezmorim

Rasoanaivo, Hanitra See Tarika/Tarika Sammy

Ratianarinaivo, Tiana See Tarika/Tarika Sammy

Raymond, Alexis See Boukman Eksperyans

Razaonialimiarina, Hanitra See Tarika/Tarika Sammy

Reed, Errol See Alaap

Reeder, Jimmy See Grayhorse Singers

Rees, Stephen See Crasdant

Regino, Cesar See Echoes of Incas

Reid, Alan See Battlefield Band

Reid, Delroy "Junior" See Black Uhuru

Reid, Janet "Olafunke" See Black Uhuru

Reid, Melvin "Mellow" See The Ethiopians

Reilly, Paddy See The Dubliners

Reiman, Kari See Ottopasuna

Reistad, Åsmund See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Rema, Wahtanga See Zap Mama

Remeynes, Roman See The Ukrainians

Rendón, Mark See Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band

Resil, Gary See Tabou Combo

Revell, Mark See Dr. Didg

Reyes, Andre See The Gipsy Kings

Reyes, Gilberto See Echoes of Incas

Reyes, Jessita See Native Flute Ensemble

Reyes, Nicolas See The Gipsy Kings

Reynolds, John See Irish Rovers

Rhee, Konrad See Echoes of Incas

Ribeiro, Francisco See Madredeus

Ribot, Marc See Masada

Ricciardi, Fernando See Los Fabulosos Cadillacs

Riccio, Justin See Bio Ritmo

Richards, Sue See Ceoltoiri

Richardson, Dave See The Boys of the Lough

Richardson, Tich See The Boys of the Lough

Richardson, Wendell See Osibisa

Richter, Addoteh See Baka Beyond

Ricketts, Lloyd See The Itals

Riley, Michael See Steel Pulse

Riley, Steve See Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys

Riley, Winston See The Techniques

Rincon, Julio Ernesto Estrada "Fruko" See La Sonora Dinamita

Ringdahl, Thomas See The Swedish Sax Septet

Ringqvist, Gotte See Garmarna

Rinpoche, Ken See The Gyuto Monks

Rinqvist, Gotte See Vadå

Rios, Efraim See iCubanismo!

Risa-Rissa See Samba Mapangala & Orchestra Virunga

Rivas, Tree Ceibo See Arawak Mountain Singers

Rivera, Jose See Los Pleneros de la 21

Rivera, Mario See Los Van Van

Rizaev, Sabir See Ashkabad

Robertis, Alfredo de See Los Incas/Urubamba

Roberts, Dayfydd See Ar Log

Roberts, Gwyndof See Ar Log

Robertson, David See Capercaillie

Robinson, Adam "Razor Blade" See Zydeco Hurricanes

Robinson, Greg See SKAndalous All-Stars

Robinson, Robby "Mann" See Zydeco Force

Robinson, Tony "Gad" See Aswad

Robles, Tonee See Arawak Mountain Singers

Rodney, Winston See Burning Spear

Rodríguez, Alfredo See iCubanismo!

Rodriguez, José Antonio 'Maceo' See Sierra Maestra

Rodriguez, Lázaro Miguel See iCubanismo!

Rogge, Elke See Hoelderlin Express/Hölderlin Express

Rojas, Jorge Luis See iCubanismo!

Rojas, Manuel See iCubanismo!

Rolie, Gregg See Santana/Carlos Santana

Romain, Robert Wood See RAM

Romani, Rodrigo See Milladoiro

Romero, Alberto See Los Muñequitos de Matanzas

Romero, Junior See Bamboleo

Romero, Ruben See Ruben Romero & Lydia Torea

Ros, Lazaro See Sintesis

Rosales, Mario See Sexteto Boloña

Rosas, Cesar See Los Lobos; Los Super Seven

Rose, Michael See Black Uhuru

Rose, Saul See Eliza Carthy/Waterson:Carthy

Rosén, Anders See The Swedish Sax Septet

Rosenthal, Eric See Naftule's Dream

Rosier, Pier See Gazoline

Ross, Billy See Ossian

Rotblat, "Toto" See Los Fabulosos Cadillacs

Rothfield Thompson, Suzy (Susie) See California Cajun Orchestra; The Klezmorim

Rothstein, David See Maxwell Street Klezmer Band

Rotman, Sergio See Los Fabulosos Cadillacs

Roura, Juan Manuel See Los Amigos Invisibles

Rourke, James See Carreg Lafar

Rowan, Michaela See Mouth Music

Rowe, Hahn See Firewater

Rowland, Bruce See Fairport Convention

Royal, Willie See Willie & Lobo

Ruangnon, Phin See Fong Naam

Rubin, Joel See Brave Old World

Rubinov, Rushel See The Ilyas Malayev Ensemble

Rubinstein, Danny See Epstein Brothers Band

Rude, Siri See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Ruffin, Bruce See The Techniques

Ruggiero, Vic See SKAndalous All-Stars

Ruíz, Luís Jésus See King Changó

Ruíz, Mack See Mariachi Cobre

Ruiz, Tim See La Mafia

Russell, Alistair See Battlefield Band

Russell, Devon See The Congos

Russell, Martin See Afro Celt Sound System

Rust, Steve See Hawk Project

Ryan, Cathie See Cherish the Ladies

S., Doug See Robby Bee & the Boyz from the Rez

Saaia, Alexei See Yat-Kha

Sabri, Azmat Farid See The Sabri Brothers

Sabri, Ghulam Farid See The Sabri Brothers

Sabri, Haji Kamal See The Sabri Brothers

Sabri, Javed Kamal See The Sabri Brothers

Sabri, Maqbool Ahmed See The Sabri Brothers

Sabri, Mehmood Ghazanavi See The Sabri Brothers

Sack, Mike See Eastern Eagle Singers

Sack, Nathan See Eastern Eagle Singers

Sackey, Edward See The Pan-African Orchestra

Sady, Nathan See The Mollys

Saffery, Anthony See Cornershop

Sahm, Doug See Texas Tornados

Saich, John See Capercaillie

Saidy, Ahmed El See Salamat

Saint, Stevie See Wolfstone

Saint-Eloi, Patrick See Kassav'

St. Julien, Gerard, Jr. See Roy Carrier/Roy Carrier & the Night Rockers

St. Val-Demorcy, Patrick See Boukman Eksperyans

Saito, Eiichi See Kodo

Saito, Hideyuki See Kodo

Salas, Alberto See Cuba L.A.

Salchak, Boris See Shu-De

Salgueiro, Teresa See Madredeus

Salinas, Horacio See Inti-Illimani

Salsero, Domingo See Diblo Dibala/Loketo/Matchatcha

Salzburg, Si See Klezmer Plus!

Sam, Chan Moly See Sam-Ang Sam Ensemble

Sam, Sam-Ang See Sam-Ang Sam Ensemble

Sambat, Marc See étoile de Dakar

Sammaria, Lonnie See Black Lodge Singers

Sampathkumar, M.V. See Karnataka College of Percussion

San Martin, Mauricio See Sukay

Sanabria, Abel See Vocal Sampling

Sanchez, Michel See Deep Forest

Sanchez, Mitch See Cuba L.A.

Sanchez, Urban See Dominic Kanza & the African Rhythm Machine

Sanchez Dueñas, Faín See Radio Tarifa

Sanders, Ric See Fairport Convention

Sandoval, Arturo See Irakere

Sandu, Marinel See Taraf de Haïdouks

Sango, Awa See Les Go de Koteba

Sanler, Reinaldo See Vocal Sampling

Sanon, Jude See Boukan Ginen

Sanou, Souleyname See Farafina

Santana, Carlos See Santana/Carlos Santana

Santi See Alabina

Sanzo, Ariel See Los Fabulosos Cadillacs

Sapoznik, Henry See Kapelye; Klezmer Plus!

Sarkwa, Kofi See The Pan-African Orchestra

Sarobey, Lizzy See Arawak Mountain Singers

Saryglar, Alexei See Huun-Huur-Tu

Satterfield, Laura See Walela

Savage, Britt See SKAndalous All-Stars

Savoy, Ann See Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band

Savoy, Marc See The Balfa Brothers/Freres Balfa; Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band

Saw, Tanya See Zap Mama

Sawasky, Mark See Immigrant Suns

Saxa See The English Beat/General Public

Saxon, Steve See The Klezmorim

Scabby Robe, Darwin See Black Lodge Singers

Scabby Robe, Elgin See Black Lodge Singers

Scabby Robe, Erwin See Black Lodge Singers

Scabby Robe, Kenneth, Sr. See Black Lodge Singers

Scabby Robe, Kenny, Jr. See Black Lodge Singers

Scabby Robe, Louise See Black Lodge Singers

Scabby Robe, Myron See Black Lodge Singers

Scabby Robe, Thomas See Black Lodge Singers

Scanlon, T. J. See SKAndalous All-Stars

Schneider, Ralph See Horch

Schott, Peter See Kid Creole & the Coconuts/Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band

Schramm, Kevin See The Mollys

Schulman, Joy See Diga Rhythm Band

Schwarz, Peter See Balfa Toujours; Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys

Scott, Lincoln Valentine "Style" See The Roots Radics

Scott, Mike See The Waterboys

Seaton, Dennis See Musical Youth

Sebestyén, Márta See Márta Sebestyén/Muzsikás/Vujicsics

Seck, Alla See étoile de Dakar

Seck, Pape See Africando

Seck, Thione See Orchestra Baobob

Seck, Youssou See Takadja

Sedler, Moses See Davka

Seeberg, Martin See Sorten Muld

Segkura, Thomas See The Pan-African Orchestra

Sehmaoui, Aziz See Orchestre National de Barbès

Seijo, Antonio See Milladoiro

Sempepos, George See Annabouboula

Senauke, Alan See California Cajun Orchestra

Senegemana See Salala/Ricky & Mbasalala

Seney, Evens See Boukan Ginen; Boukman Eksperyans

Seney, Frantz "Ti Crab" See Boukman Eksperyans

Seney, Gary See Boukman Eksperyans

Seoane, Antón See Milladoiro

Sepulveda, Omar See Sukay

Sereba, Kouame See Frå Senegal Til Setesdal

Sesti, Mikili See Samba Mapangala & Orchestra Virunga

Sevek, Aldyn-ool See Yat-Kha

Sévère, Hubert See Boukman Eksperyans

Seves, Jose See Inti-Illimani

Sevilla, Mickey See Kid Creole & the Coconuts/Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band

Seweryniak, Dave "Scrubby" See The Dynatones/The Dyna-Tones

Shabalala, Ben See Ladysmith Black Mambazo

Shabalala, Headman See Ladysmith Black Mambazo

Shabalala, Jockey See Ladysmith Black Mambazo

Shakespeare, Robbie See Sly & Robbie

Shamayeva, Muhabbat See The Ilyas Malayev Ensemble

Shankar, L. See Shakti; L. Shankar/Shankar

Shanley, Eleanor See De Dannan/De Danann

Shannon, Sharon See The Waterboys

Shashikumar, T.N. See Karnataka College of Percussion

Shaw, Donald See Capercaillie; The Mighty Diamonds

Shawe, Nobesuthu See Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens/Makgona Tsohle Band

Sheahan, John See The Dubliners

Shearin, Kevin See Filé

Sherab, Ngawang See The Gyuto Monks

Sherap, Tupten See The Gyuto Monks

Sherba, John See The Kronos Quartet

Sheridan, Louis See Grayhorse Singers

Sheriff, Amon See Percussion Incorporated

Shimmin, Doug See Immigrant Suns

Shkeme See Joy Harjo & Poetic Justice

Shoigu, Nadezhda See Shu-De

Shorland, Jonathan See Fernhill

Shrieve, Michael See Santana/Carlos Santana

Sibéril, Söig See Kornog

Sidibé, Balla See Orchestra Baobob

Sidibé, Boubacar See Habib Koité & Bamada

Sidoyi, Japan See Soul Brothers

Sierra, Asdru See Ozomatli

Siggins, Sam See California Cajun Orchestra

Silva, Ray Elk See Arawak Mountain Singers

Silva, Sandy See Open House

Silveiras, Guillermo Amores See NG La Banda/Nueva Generación (New Generation)

Simbarashe, Lesterfari See Boom Shaka

Simmons, Trinna See Spearhead

Simms, Nick See Cornershop

Simon, Jawara Atiba See Percussion Incorporated

Simon, Kenyatta See Percussion Incorporated

Simon, Larry See Gamelan Son of Lion

Simonsson, Jonas See Groupa; The Swedish Sax Septet

Simpson, Bunny See The Mighty Diamonds

Simpson, Derrick "Duckie" See Black Uhuru

Sims, Mark See Gazoline

Singh, Avtar See Cornershop

Singh, Channi See Alaap

Singh, Tjinder See Cornershop

Sinnott, Declan See Horslips; Moving Hearts

Siperman, Mario See Los Fabulosos Cadillacs

Sipos, Mihaly See Márta Sebestyén/Muzsikás/Vujicsics

Sissokho, Moussa See Afro Celt Sound System

Sissoko, Baba See Habib Koité & Bamada

Sissoko, Samba See Rail Band/Super Rail Band of Bamako

Siva, Mambalam K.S. See Vadya Lahari

Siverton See The Specials

Skelton, John See The House Band

Sklamberg, Lorin See The Klezmatics

Skuse, David See The Klezmorim

Slominsky, Philipe See Gazoline

Smash, Chas See Madness

Smillie, Phil See Tannahill Weavers

Smirnov, Andrei See Terem Quartet

Smith, Cherry See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Smith, Christina See Christina Smith & Jean Hewson

Smith, Ernest See Soul Brothers

Smith, Grant See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Smith, Keith "Slim" See The Techniques

Smitty See Rara Machine

Snerte, Tori See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Snykus, Chris "Cornball" See Perfect Thyroid

Sognnæs, Eivind See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Sokolow, Pete See Epstein Brothers Band; Kapelye; Klezmer Plus!

Solano, Gregorio See Los Camperos de Valles

Solowka, Peter See The Ukrainians

Soltero, Oscar See Conjunto Céspedes

Somo, Motome See Zulu Spear

Songkroh, Wirad See Fong Naam

Sorenson, Dan See The Mollys

Sox See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Spartacus R. See Osibisa

Speed, Chris See Masada

Spejar, Drago See Veritas

Spejar, Kristina See Veritas

Spejar, Mile See Veritas

Spejar, Robert See Veritas

Spence, Cecil "Skeleton" See Israel Vibration

Spiegal, Ray See Diga Rhythm Band

Spillane, Davy See Moving Hearts

Spillane, John See Nomos

Sproule, Dáithí See Altan; Trian

Stacey, Dan See Seven Nations

Stacy, Peter "Spider" See The Pogues/Shane MacGowan

Stahl, Ilene See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Stake, Anders See Hedningarna

Stamper, Tom See The Klezmorim

Standing Bear, Calvin See Red Tail Chasing Hawks

Standing Bear, Cliff See Arawak Mountain Singers

Standing Rock, Athan See Rocky Boy Singers

Standing Rock, Clinton See Rocky Boy Singers

Standing Rock, Kenny See Rocky Boy Singers

Standing Rock, William See Rocky Boy Singers

Standun, Dearbhaill See Mary Bergin/Dordan

Stanlén, Benke See Abel & Kaninerna

Staples, Neville See The Specials

Star, Rigo See Diblo Dibala/Loketo/Matchatcha

Steele, David See The English Beat/General Public

Steele, Davy See Battlefield Band; Ceolbeg

Steif, Abu See El-Funoun

Stephen, Amy See Mad Pudding

Stephens, David See Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band

Sterling, Lester See The Skatalites

Stevens, Peter See Filé

Stevenson, Anna Wendy See Anam

Stewart See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Stewart, Andy M. See Silly Wizard

Stewart, Martin See The Selecter

Stewart, Wendy See Ceolbeg

Stewart, William "Willie" See Third World

Sting See The Police/Sting

Stinnerbom, Leif See Groupa

Stoker See The English Beat/General Public

Storbekken, Eli See Det Syng

Story, Don See Burning Bridges

Stott, Jeffery See Stellamara

Stotz, Ulli See Adaro

Strömstedt, Janne See Hoven Droven

Stramp, Barry See Coyote Oldman

Straume, Bjørgulv See Frå Senegal Til Setesdal

Struby See Seven Nations

Strummer, Joe See The Pogues/Shane MacGowan

Strunz, Jorge See Strunz & Farah

Stubblefield, John See Jerry Gonzalez & the Fort Apache Band

Suárez, Alejandro See Sierra Maestra

Suazo, Mac See Xit

Sub Commander Ras I Zulu See Spearhead

Subhi, Muhsen See El-Funoun

Sullivan, Obie See Xit

Sumeet See Alaap

Summers, Andy See The Police/Sting

Sun, Ahaguna G. See The Looters

Suneson, Christer See Vadå

Sunil See Alaap

Surina, Irina See Kukuruza

Susaki, Takuro See Kodo

Susso, Lamine See The Pan-African Orchestra

Susso, Mahmadu See The Pan-African Orchestra

Sutherland, Gallimore See Gladiators/Albert Griffiths

Svigals, Alicia See The Klezmatics

Swan, Martin See Mouth Music

Swarbrick, Dave See Ian Campbell Folk Group/Ian Campbell; Fairport Convention

Swayne, Jon See Blowzabella

Sweeney, Flo See Moving Hearts

Swymmer, Allan See Jolly Boys

Syed, Arshad See Diga Rhythm Band

Sylvain, Clifford See Rara Machine

Sylvain, Gerald See Rara Machine

Sylvester, Nonhtle See Amampondo

'T Hooft, Céline See Zap Mama

Tabito See Sexteto Boloña

Tallroth, Roger See Väsen

Tamish, Safa See El-Funoun

Tams, John See Home Service

Tanase, Ion See Taraf de Haïdouks

Tanco, Nellie See Los Pleneros de la 21

Tanco, Sam Charles See Los Pleneros de la 21

Tancredi, Eduardo See Sol y Canto

Taschenkow, Mischa See Wolga Balalaika Ensemble

Tashi, Tsultim See The Gyuto Monks

Tayari, Chisa See Kotoja/Ken Okulolo

Taylor, Chris See The Oyster Band

Taylor, Graeme See Home Service

Taylor, Scott See Eastern Eagle Singers

Taylor, Stephen See The Ethiopians

Taylor, Wilf See Capercaillie

Tcheco, Zeca See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Tchikounzi, Fernand See Dominic Kanza & the African Rhythm Machine

Tchikounzi, Maggie See Dominic Kanza & the African Rhythm Machine

Tchounga, Paul See Strunz & Farah

Telfer, Ian See The Oyster Band

Tembo, Biggie See Bhundu Boys

Temkow, Ben See Immigrant Suns

Tendoy, Merle See Rocky Boy Singers

Tenfiche, Kemel See Orchestre National de Barbès

Terán, Liber See Los de Abajo

Tesfaye, Yared See Ashkaru

Tetteh, Nii Tettey See Baka Beyond

Texidor, Ulises See Bamboleo

Thaim, Assane See étoile de Dakar

Tharchen, Samten See The Gyuto Monks

Thargyal, Sonam See The Gyuto Monks

Tharp, Al See Beausoleil

Thedens, Hans Hinrich See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Theluce, Wilson See RAM

Themba, Bernard See O'Yaba

Thistlethwaite, Anthony See The Waterboys

Thiurifays, Claude See Kassav'

Thomas, Raymond See Zydeco Force

Thomas, Renato See Sol y Canto

Thomas, Winston "Ziggy" See Wailing Souls

Thompson, Alfredo See Irakere

Thompson, Arch See Julian Avalos & Afro-Andes

Thompson, Eric See California Cajun Orchestra

Thompson, Errol "ET" See Impact All Stars

Thompson, Jim See Bio Ritmo

Thompson, Lee See Madness

Thompson, Linda See Richard Thompson/Linda Thompson/Richard & Linda Thompson

Thompson, Richard See Fairport Convention; Richard Thompson/Linda Thompson/Richard & Linda Thompson

Thomson, Alfredo See iCubanismo!

Thonon, Daniel See Ad Vielle Que Pourra

Thonon, Luc See Ad Vielle Que Pourra

Thorburn, Andy See Ceolbeg

Thornton, Donald See The Klezmorim

Tichareva, Taurai See Black Umfolosi

Tilokavichai, Kaiwan See Fong Naam

Tinsley, Boyd See Dave Matthews Band

Tkach'v, Zhenya See Yat-Kha

Tloubatla, Hilda See Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens/Makgona Tsohle Band

Tobias, Cosmas See Mlimani Park Orchestra

Todorov, Kiril See Folk Scat

Tollin, Björn See Hedningarna; Nordan Project

Tomasini, Gabriel See Bio Ritmo

Tonio See Alabina

Tontoh, Mac See Osibisa

Top Sky, Lloyd See Rocky Boy Singers

Torea, Lydia See Ruben Romero & Lydia Torea

Torpey, Frank See Nomos

Torres, James See Red Tail Chasing Hawks

Torres, Jose Rafael See Los Amigos Invisibles

Tosh, Peter See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Totte Mattson, Hållbus See Groupa

Totten, Frankie See Craobh Rua

Tounkara, Djelimady See Rail Band/Super Rail Band of Bamako

Touray, Paps See Soto Koto Band/Super Eagles/Ifang Bondi

Touré, Amadou Tilo See Touré Kunda

Touré, Ismaila See Touré Kunda

Touré, Ousmane See Touré Kunda

Touré, Sixu Tidiane See Touré Kunda

Tourish, Cíarán See Altan

Traoré, Bakari See Farafina

Travers, Brian See UB40

Trebunia, Hania See Trebunia Family Band

Trebunia, Helena, Jr. See Trebunia Family Band

Trebunia, Helena, Sr. See Trebunia Family Band

Trebunia, Jas See Trebunia Family Band

Trebunia, Katarzyna See Trebunia Family Band

Trebunia, Kryzsztof See Trebunia Family Band

Trebunia, Stanislaw, Jr. See Trebunia Family Band

Trebunia, Stanislaw, Sr. See Trebunia Family Band

Trebunia, Whadislaw See Trebunia Family Band

Trevino, Rick See Los Super Seven

Treyz, Jürgen See Adaro

Trindade, Carlos Maria See Madredeus

Trojak, Larry See The Dynatones/The Dyna-Tones

Trujillo, Javier See Mariachi Cobre

Trujillo, Mario See Mariachi Cobre

Trzepacz, Mark See The Dynatones/The Dyna-Tones

Tsambov, Anton See Bŭlgari

Tsering, Kalden See The Gyuto Monks

Tsering, Lobsang See The Gyuto Monks

Tsharykuliev, Atabai See Ashkabad

Tube, Shem See Abana Ba Nasery

Tubridy, Michael See The Chieftains

Tureyguard, Louie See Arawak Mountain Singers

T.U.U.P. See Transglobal Underground/Natacha Atlas

Udo, Peter See Orchestra Baobob

Ulrich, Peter See Dead Can Dance

Valdés, Alberto 'Virgilio' See Sierra Maestra

Valdés, Ele See Sintesis

Valdes, Jesus "Chucho" See Irakere

Valdés, Lázaro Moisés See Bamboleo

Valdes, Mayra Caridad See Irakere

Valdes, Oscar See Irakere

Valdor, Gerald See Soto Koto Band/Super Eagles/Ifang Bondi

Valenica, Daniel See Conjunto Alma Jarocha

Valerón, Hortensia See Sexteto Boloña

Valle, Orlando See iCubanismo!; Irakere

Vallely, Niall See Nomos

Valme, Raynald See Tabou Combo

Vamur, Claude See Kassav'

Van, Pok See Sam-Ang Sam Ensemble

Van, Yan See Sam-Ang Sam Ensemble

Van Leewaarde, Ron See Zulu Spear

Van Zyl, Gary See Johnny Clegg & Savuka/Juluka

Vargas, Gonzalo See Inkuyo; Sukay

Varges, Rafael See Bamboleo

Varila, Jarmo See JPP/Järvelän Pikkupelimannit

Varila, Juha See JPP/Järvelän Pikkupelimannit

Varona, Jorge See Irakere

Varzaga, Luis See iCubanismo!

Vatni, Elisabeth See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Vavages, Lester See Gu-Achi Fiddlers

Vega Chacón, José See Sexteto Boloña

Veillon, Jean-Michel See Kornog

Velásquez Córdoba, Rufino See Conjunto Alma Jarocha

Velásquez Córdoba, Tirso See Conjunto Alma Jarocha

Velázquez, Joaquín See Sexteto Boloña

Vélez, Fernando See King Changó

Venikov, Michael See Kukuruza

Vereen, Andrew See Burning Bridges

Verret, Errol See Beausoleil

Viera, Efren Manuel See Inti-Illimani

Vignaud, Robert See Beausoleil

Vijayalakshmi, Kumari N. See Vadya Lahari

Vilato, Orestes See Cuba L.A.

Villagra, Pedro See Inti-Illimani

Vinayakram, T. H. "Vikku" See Shakti

Vincaino, Roberto See Sintesis

Virkkala, Janne See JPP/Järvelän Pikkupelimannit

Virtue, Mickey See UB40

Vistven, Eline Monrad See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Vital, Mpitabakana See The Drummers of Burundi

Vlad, Viorel See Taraf de Haïdouks

Vlaeva, Mariana See Folk Scat

Vollant, Florent See Kashtin

Von Drehle, Courtney See 3 Leg Torso

Vonvon, Kabama See Zaiko Langa Langa

Wagner, Mike See King Changó

Wagner, Robert See The New Orleans Klezmer All Stars

Wailer, Bunny See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Waite, Frederick See Musical Youth; The Techniques

Waite, Junior See Musical Youth

Waite, Patrick See Musical Youth

Wakeling, Dave See The English Beat/General Public

Waku, Manuaku See Zaiko Langa Langa

Walker, Albert See Culture

Walker, Constantine "Dream Vision" See Bob Marley/Bob Marley & the Wailers

Walker, Jasmine See Kotoja/Ken Okulolo

Wallace, Wayne See Conjunto Céspedes

Wallinger, Karl See The Waterboys

Wanbdi See Indigenous

Wanchic, Michael See Robert Mirabal/Mirabal

Wang Fenrui See Tianjin Buddhist Music Ensemble

Wang Shun Xin See The Guo Brothers & Shung Tian

Ware, Billy See Beausoleil

Warnock, Clódagh See Déanta

Warschauer, Jeff See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Wartel, Jonny See The Swedish Sax Septet

Washart, Peter See Runrig

Wasson, Louis See Ricardo Lemvo & Makina Loca

Waterson, Norma See Eliza Carthy/Waterson:Carthy

Watkins, Rone See Burning Flames

Watson, Nick See Seven Nations

Watson, Winston See Meditations

Watters, Ken See Tabou Combo

Watts, George See Ian Campbell Folk Group/Ian Campbell

Webber, David See Gladiators/Albert Griffiths

Weeks, David See Tabou Combo

Weeks, Jon See Sol y Canto

Wehner, Marty See Kotoja/Ken Okulolo

Weinberger, Marvin See Klezmer Conservatory Band

Welsh, Nick See The Selecter

Wemba, Papa See Zaiko Langa Langa

West, Gary See Ceolbeg

Westling, Kjell See The Swedish Sax Septet

Westman, Rickard See Garmarna

Weymouth, Tina See Talking Heads

Whelan, Bill See Planxty

Whellans, Mike See The Boys of the Lough

White, Franklin See The Techniques

White, Kevin See The English Beat/General Public

White Grass, William See Black Lodge Singers

Wickham, Steve See The Waterboys

Wieczorek, Stefan See Horch

Wiggins, Graham See Dr. Didg

Wilhelms, Jenny See Gjallarhorn

Wilkie, Angelique See Zap Mama

Willemark, Lena See Groupa; Nordan Project

Williams, Babatunde See Kotoja/Ken Okulolo

Williams, Cal See Yothu Yindi

Williams, Huw See Crasdant

Williams, John See Solas/Seamus Egan

Williams, John L. See Joy Harjo & Poetic Justice

Williams, Roger See Home Service

Williams, Susan M. See Joy Harjo & Poetic Justice

Willington, Rupert See Burning Spear

Willis, Larry See Jerry Gonzalez & the Fort Apache Band

Wilson, Cam See Mad Pudding

Wilson, John See Zydeco Hurricanes

Wilson, Leslie See Tannahill Weavers

Wilson, Roger See The House Band

Wilson, Shade See Bio Ritmo

Wimmer, Kevin See Balfa Toujours; California Cajun Orchestra

Winkleman, Linda See The Mollys

Winter, Charly See Adioa

Wishnefsky, Brian See The Klezmorim

Wollesen, Kenny See Masada

Wongwirojruk, Prasarn See Fong Naam

Woodgate, Dan See Madness

Woods, Gay See Steeleye Span

Woods, Terry See Steeleye Span; Sweeney's Men

Xhosa, Vusi See Boyoyo Boys

Xico See Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique/The Marrabenta Star Orchestra/Marrabenta Star

Ya Salaam, Kalamu See Percussion Incorporated

Yaba, Jimmy See Zaiko Langa Langa

Yacoub, Mohammed See El-Funoun

Yamaguchi, Jiro See Ozomatli

Yamaguchi, Motofumi See Kodo

Yamba, Miguel See Diblo Dibala/Loketo/Matchatcha

Yanagi, Michiko See Kodo

Yarwood, Chip See Ashkaru

Yazzie, Chili See Xit

Yearwood, Edwin See krosfyah

Yerry, Dennis See Hawk Project

Yoelin, Shelly See Maxwell Street Klezmer Band

York, Andy See Robert Mirabal/Mirabal

Young, Carl See Spearhead

Young, Jimmy See The House Band

Youngson, Mop See Wolfstone

Yttrehus, Ronny See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Yunupingu, Galarrwuy See Yothu Yindi

Yunupingu, Gurrumul See Yothu Yindi

Yunupingu, Makuma See Yothu Yindi

Yunupingu, Mandawuy See Yothu Yindi

Yunupingu, Mangatjay See Yothu Yindi

Zach, Ingar See Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag

Zafimahery, Johnny Andriamamahirana See Tarika/Tarika Sammy

Zalba, Javier See ¡Cubanismo!

Zamorra, Danile See Inkuyo

Zamuangana, Enoch See Zaiko Langa Langa

Zavala, Catherine See The Mollys

Zavrski, Zoran See Veritas

Zeliazov, Georgi See Bŭlgari

Zequeira, Loreto See Sexteto Boloña

Zhang Shenglu See Tianjin Buddhist Music Ensemble

Zhang Shicai See Tianjin Buddhist Music Ensemble

Zhang Yuije See Tianjin Buddhist Music Ensemble

Zhao Zheng Ren See The Guo Brothers & Shung Tian

Ziad, Karim See Orchestre National de Barbès

Zon, Seydou See Farafina

Zorn, John See Masada

Zulu, Dudu See Johnny Clegg & Savuka/Juluka

Looking to explore the music of a certain country? The Country Index arranges the artists and groups covered in MusicHound World according to the country they were born (for artists) or formed in (for bands). Please note that the country designation may not reflect the ethnicity of an artist or the nationality of a group's members.

Algeria
Abdelli
Djur Djura
Chaba Fadela
Khaled
Cheb Mami
Cheikha Remitti
Abdel Ali Slimani
Rachid Taha

Angola Bonga

Antigua
Burning Flames

Argentina
Los Fabulosos Cadillacs
Dino Saluzzi
Mercedes Sosa

Armenia
Djivan Gasparyan

Australia
Alan Dargin
David Hudson
Trevor Lucas
Archie Roach
Synergy
Yothu Yindi

Austria
Theodore Bikel

Bangladesh
Ali Akbar Khan
Ustad Vilayat Khan
Badal Roy

Barbados
krosfyah
Red Plastic Bag

Belgium
Dr. Nico
Zap Mama

Benin
Angélique Kidjo
Gnonnas Pedro

Brazil
Leny Andrade
Badi Assad
Carlos Barbosa-Lima
Jorge Ben
Maria Bethânia
Luiz Bonfá
Dori Caymmi
Gal Costa
Daude
Djavan
Eliane Elias Fortuna
Gilberto Gil
Astrud Gilberto
João Gilberto
Egberto Gismonti
Gonzaguinha
Joyce
Sergio Mendes
Margareth Menezes
Daniela Mercury
Marlui Miranda
Tony Mola
Marisa Monte
Airto Moreira
Milton Nascimento
Clara Nunes
Olodum
Pixinguinha
Flora Purim
Elis Regina
Virginia Rodrigues
Timbalada
Nana Vasconcelos
Caetano Veloso
Tom Zé

Bulgaria
Bŭlgari
Folk Scat
Le Mystère des Voix Bulgares
Ivo Papasov

Burkina Faso
Farafina
Cheikh Lô

Burundi
The Drummers of Burundi

Cameroon
Baka Beyond
Francis Bebey
Manu Dibango
Henri Dikongué
Les Têtes Brulées
Sally Nyolo

Canada
Ad Vielle Que Pourra
Jerry Alfred & the Medicine Beat
Ashkaru
The Barra MacNeils
Michael Brook

994 cape verde

Jane Bunnett
J.P. Cormier
Eastern Eagle Singers
Great Big Sea
Irish Rovers
Kashtin
Mary Jane Lamond
Daniel Lanois
Leahy
Laurel MacDonald
Ashley MacIsaac
Natalie MacMaster
Mad Pudding
Eileen McGann
Loreena McKennitt
Jackie Mittoo
Jim Payne
Robbie Robertson
Kelly Russell
Buffy Sainte-Marie
Christina Smith & Jean Hewson
Takadja

Cape Verde
Bana
Cesaria Evora
Fantcha
Mendes Brothers
Tam Tam 2000

Chile
Inti-Illimani
Victor Jara

China
Jie-Bing Chen
Sisi Chen
Dadawa
Film Orchestra of Shanghai
The Guo Brothers & Shung Tian
Liu Sola
Tianjin Buddhist Music Ensemble
Wu Man

Colombia
Joe Arroyo
Bloque
Carlos Gardel
La Sonora Dinamita
La Sonora Meliyara
Shakira
Carlos Vives

Congo
Waldemar Bastos
M'Bilia Bel
Diblo Dibala
Franco
Pépé Kallé
Kanda Bongo Man
Ray Lema
Sam Mangwana
Tshala Muana
Samba Ngo
Remmy Ongala
Tabu Ley Rochereau
Rigo Star
Papa Wemba
Zaiko Langa Langa

Cote d'Ivoire
Alpha Blondy
Les Go de Koteba

Cuba
Albita
Bamboleo
Cachao
Celia Cruz
¡Cubanismo!
Issac Delgado
Paquito D'Rivera
Gloria Estefan
Frank Emilio Flynn
Juan Carlos Formell
Celina Gonzaléz
Rubén González
Irakere
Los Muñequitos de Matanzas
Los Van Van
Manolín, El Médico de la Salsa
Rita Marley
Pablo Milanés
Beny Moré
NG La Banda
Orquesta Aragon
Patato
Silvio Rodríguez
Lazaro Ros
Arturo Sandoval
Mongo Santamaria
Sexteto Boloña
Sexteto Habanero
Sierra Maestra
Sintesis
Roberto Torres
Bebo Valdes
Chucho Valdes
Carlos Varela
Vocal Sampling

Denmark
Sorten Muld

Dominican Republic
Juan Luis Guerra
Johnny Pacheco
Ravel

Egypt
Hamza El Din
Ali Hassan Kuban
Umm Kulthum
Musicians of the Nile
Hossam Ramzy
Salamat
Mohamed Abdel Wahab

England
Afro Celt Sound System
Alaap
Apache Indian
Frankie Armstrong
Aswad
Blowzabella
Robin Huw Bowen
David Bowie
Kevin Burke
Ian Campbell Folk Group
Eliza Carthy
Martin Carthy
John Carty
Sheila Chandra
Emma Christian
Johnny Clegg & Savuka
Shirley Collins
Cornershop
Steven Cragg
Andrew Cronshaw
Paban Das Baul & Sam Mills
Dead Can Dance
Sandy Denny
Dr. Didg
Eden's Bridge
The English Beat
Brian Eno
Fairport Convention
John Faulkner
Alec Finn
Peter Gabriel
George Harrison
Home Service
The House Band
Ashley Hutchings
Andy Irvine
Femi Anikulapo Kuti
A.L. Lloyd
Machito
Mad Lion
Madness
John Martyn
Musical Youth
Najma
Helen O'Hara
Seán Ó Riada
Osibisa
The Oyster Band
Page & Plant
Charlie Palmieri
The Pogues
The Police
Maxi Priest
Maddy Prior
S.E. Rogie
The Selecter
Shakti
Anoushka Shankar
Shinehead
Talvin Singh
The Specials
Steel Pulse
Steeleye Span
Dave Swarbrick
Richard Thompson
Kathryn Tickell
Transglobal Underground
23 Skidoo
UB40
The Ukrainians
The Waterboys

Benjamin Zephaniah

Ethiopia
Mahmoud Ahmed
Aster Aweke

Finland
Girls of Angeli Gjallarhorn
JPP
Maria Kalaniemi
Ottopasuna
Martti Pokela
Värttinä
Wimme

France
Adioa Alabina
Dan Ar Braz
Jesse Cook
Deep Forest
Gazoline
The Gipsy Kings
Kaoma Kassav'
Kornog
Los Incas
Chris McGregor
Orchestre National de Barbès
Astor Piazzolla
Alan Stivell
Touré Kunda
Atahualpa Yupanqui

Gabon
Pierre Akendengue

Gambia
Alhaji Bai Konteh
Yan Kuba Saho
Soto Koto Band
Foday Musa Suso

Georgia

Rustavi Choir

Germany
Adaro Dissidenten
Hoelderlin Express
Horch
Veritas
Wolga Balalaika Ensemble

Ghana
Obo Addy
E.T. Mensah
The Pan-African Orchestra

Greece
Haris Alexiou
George Dalaras
Mikis Theodorakis
Stavros Xarhakos & Nicos Gatsos

Grenada
The Mighty Sparrow

Guinea
Camara Aboubacar
Bembeya Jazz
Sékouba "Bambino" Diabaté
Alpha Yaya Diallo
Mory Kanté
Kante Manfila

Guyana
Eddy Grant
Mad Professor

Haiti
Boukan Ginen
Boukman Eksperyans
Coupé Cloué
Wyclef Jean
Nemours Jean-Baptiste
RAM
Rara Machine

Hungary
Márta Sebestyén

India
Ashwan Batish
V.M. Bhatt
Tarun Bhattacharya
Asha Bhosle
Dr. Krishna Chakravarty
Hari Prasad Chaurasia
Ustad Zia Mohiuddin Dagar
Bikram Ghosh
Trilok Gurtu
Zakir Hussain
Karnataka College of Percussion
Salamat Ali Khan
Ustad Imrat Khan
Pandit Kamalesh Maitra
G.S. Sachdev
Balwinder Safri
Bally Sagoo
Trichy Sankaran
L. Shankar
Lakshmi Shankar
Ravi Shankar
Shiv Kumar Sharma
U. Srinivas
Dr. L. Subramaniam
Vadya Lahari
T.H. "Vikku" Vinayakram

Indonesia
Anggun
Idjah Hadijah

Iran Ghazal
Jalal Zolfonun

Ireland
Altan Anam Anúna Arcady
Mary Bergin
Frances Black
Mary Black
The Black Family
The Bothy Band
Máire Breatnach
Patrick Cassidy
The Chieftains
Clannad
Jackie Daly
Shaun Davey
De Dannan
Dervish
John Doherty
The Dubliners
Séamus Ennis
Enya
Four Men & a Dog
James Galway
Frankie Gavin
Paddy Glackin
Robbie Hannan
Horslips
Dolores Keane
James Keane
Kíla
Lá Lugh
Dónal Lunny
Tommy Makem
Susan McKeown
Áine Minogue
Matt Molloy
Mick Moloney
Christy Moore
Moving Cloud
Moving Hearts
Maire Ní Chathasaigh
Maighread Ní Dhomhnaill
Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill
Nomos
Maura O'Connell
Sinéad O'Connor
Liam O'Flynn
Peadar Ó Riada
Niamh Parsons
Patrick Street
Tommy Peoples
Planxty
Tommy Sands
Sean Nua
Sharon Shannon
Sweeney's Men
Bill Whelan

Israel
Badawi
El-Funoun
Ofra Haza
Noa
Itzhak Perlman
Simon Shaheen
Yosefa

Italy
Enzo Rao

Jamaica
The Abyssinians
Lillian Allen
Buju Banton

9 9 6 japan

Beenie Man
Black Uhuru
Yami Bolo
Cedella Marley Booker
Jean Binta Breeze
Dennis Brown
Burning Spear
Johnny Clarke
Jimmy Cliff
Cocoa Tea
The Congos
Culture
Desmond Dekker
Mikey Dread
Eek-a-Mouse
Alton Ellis
The Ethiopians
Gladiators
Marcia Griffiths
Joe Higgs
Impact All Stars
Gregory Isaacs
Israel Vibration
The Itals
Linton Kwesi Johnson
Jolly Boys
Ini Kamoze
Diana King
King Tubby
Barrington Levy
Luciano
Ahdri Zhina Mandiela
Bob Marley
Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers
Freddie McGregor
Meditations
The Mighty Diamonds
Sugar Minott
Pablo Moses
Judy Mowatt
Hugh Mundell
Junior Murvin
Mutabaruka
Oku Onuora
Augustus Pablo
Lee "Scratch" Perry
Ernest Ranglin
Shabba Ranks
The Roots Radics
Shaggy
Garnett Silk
Sister Carol
The Skatalites
Sly & Robbie
Super Cat
The Techniques
Third World
Toots & the Maytals
Peter Tosh
The Twinkle Brothers
Bunny Wailer
Wailing Souls
Yabby You
Yellowman
Tappa Zukie

Japan
The Japanese Koto Consort
Shoukichi Kina
Kodo
Ryuichi Sakamoto
Stomu Yamash'ta
Masakazu Yoshizawa

Kenya
Abana Ba Nasery
Malika
Samba Mapangala & Orchestra Virunga
Ayub Ogada

Korea
Jin Hi Kim

Lebanon
Rabib Abou-Khalil
Farid al-Atrash
Nocy

Madagascar
D'Gary
Regis Gisavo
Mama Sana
Rossy Salala
Tarika
Justin Vali

Malawi
Tony Bird

Mali
Abdoulaye Diabaté
Toumani Diabaté
Salif Keita
Habib Koité & Bamada
Boncana Maiga
Rail Band
Oumou Sangare
Ali Farka Touré

Mauritania
Dimi Mint Abba

Mexico
Café Tacuba
Caifanes
Claudia
Conjunto Alma Jarocha
Khenany
Los Camperos de Valles
Los de Abajo
Perez Prado
Willie & Lobo

Montserrat Arrow

Morocco
Najat Aatabou
Amina
Hassan Hakmoun
Master Musicians of Jajouka

Mozambique
Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique

New Zealand
OMC
Te Vaka

Nicaragua
Luis Enrique

Niger
Ismaël Lô

Nigeria
King Sunny Adé
Dr. Sikuru Ayinde Barrister
I.K. Dairo
Majek Fashek
Fela Kuti
The Mandators
Prince Nico Mbarga
Ebenezer Obey
Sonny Okosun
Victor Olaiya
Babatunde Olatunji
Oriental Brothers
Chief Steven Osita Osadebe
Orlando "Doctor Ganga" Owah
Sir Shina Peters

Northern Ireland
Derek Bell
The Boys of the Lough
Phil Coulter
Craobh Rua
Déanta
Áine Uí Cheallaigh

Norway
Mari Boine
Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag
Det Syng
Frå Senegal Til Setesdal
Annbjørg Lien
Sven Nyhus

Pakistan
Junoon
Badar Ali Khan
Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan
Abida Parveen
The Sabri Brothers

Panama
Ruben Blades

Peru
Susana Baca
Yma Sumac

Poland
Chava Alberstein
Trebunia Family Band

Portugal
Madredeus
Carmen Miranda
Amália Rodrigues

Puerto Rico
Chayanne
Jose Feliciano
Ricky Martin
Lourdes Perez
Yomo Toro

Romania
Margareta Paslaru
Taraf de Haïdouks
Zamfir

Rurutu
Rurutu Choir

Russia
Terem Quartet

Scotland
Battlefield Band
John Burgess
David Byrne
Capercaillie
Ceolbeg
Johnny Cunningham
Phil Cunningham
Archie Fisher
Alasdair Fraser
Dick Gaughan
Alison Kinnaird
Ewan MacColl
Dougie MacLean
Hamish Moore
Paul Mounsey
Mouth Music
Ossian
Peatbog Faeries
Jean Redpath
Runrig
Shooglenifty
Silly Wizard
Andy M. Stewart
Tannahill Weavers
Simon Thoumire
Wolfstone

Senegal Africando
Vieux Diop
Wasis Diop
étoile de Dakar
Baaba Maal
Jimi Mbaye
Youssou N'Dour
Orchestra Baobob
Doudou N'Diaye Rose
Mansour Seck

Somalia
Maryam Mursal

South Africa
Amampondo
Boyoyo Boys
Dark City Sisters
Lucky Dube
Abdullah Ibrahim
Ladysmith Black Mambazo
Sipho Mabuse
Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens
Miriam Makeba
Hugh Masekela
Mzwakhe Mbuli
Mbongeni Ngema
O'Yaba
Soul Brothers
Philip Nchipe Tabane
Daniel Tshanda

Spain
Camarón de la Isla
Paco de Lucia
La Muscagña
Milladoiro
Paco Peña
Radio Tarifa

Sudan
Abdel Aziz El Mubarak
Rasha

Sweden
Abel & Kaninerna
Anitas Livs
Garmarna
Groupa
Hedningarna
Hoven Droven
Mynta
Nordan Project
Anders Rosén
The Swedish Sax Septet
Willie Toors
Vadå
Väsen

Syria
Abed Azrié

Tahiti
Tahitian Choir

Tanzania
Mlimani Park Orchestra
Hukwe Zawose

Thailand
Fong Naam

Tibet
The Gyuto Monks
Yungchen Lhamo
Monks of the Dip Tse Chok Ling Monastery

Trinidad and Tobago
Black Stalin
Calypso Rose
Lord Kitchener
Lord Melody
Machel Montano
Nelson
Roaring Lion
David Rudder
Shadow
Tambu

Tunisia
Anouar Brahem

Turkey
Kudsi Erguner
Talip Ozkan
Omar Faruk Tekbilek
Udi Hrant

Turkmenistan Ashkabad

Tuva Chirgilchin
Huun-Huur-Tu
Kongar-ool Ondar
Sainkho
Shu-De
Yat-Kha

Uganda
Geffery Oryema
Samite

USA
Nathan Abshire
Yacub Addy
Herb Alpert
Robin Adnan Anders
Laurie Anderson
Maya Angelou
Annabouboula
Marc Anthony
Arawak Mountain Singers
Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin
Amédée Ardoin
Chris Ardoin & Double Clutchin'
Desi Arnaz
Karen Ashbrook
Julian Avalos & Afro-Andes
Bad Brains
The Balfa Brothers
Balfa Toujours
Patrick Ball
Ray Barretto
Mario Bauzá
Bayou Seco
Keola Beamer
Beausoleil
Robby Bee & the Boyz from the Rez
Jay Begaye
Harry Belafonte
Bio Ritmo
Black 47
Black Lodge Singers
Edward "Eddie" Blazonczyk
Boom Shaka
Jimmy Bosch
Brave Combo
Buckwheat Zydeco
Sandy Bull
Sharon Burch
Irving Burgie
Burning Bridges
California Cajun Orchestra
Chubby Carrier
Roy Carrier

9 9 8 usa

Liz Carroll Casper
Ceoltoiri
Boozoo Chavis
C.J. Chenier
Clifton Chenier
Cherish the Ladies
Toni Childs
Sonny Chillingworth
Harry Choates
The Clancy Brothers & Tommy Makem
Robert Tree Cody
Willie Colon
Conjunto Bernal Conjunto Céspedes
Ry Cooder
Andy Cooney
Sheryl Cormier
Coyote Oldman
Elvis Crespo
Joe Cuba
Cuba L.A.
Olu Dara
Krishna Das
Davka
Tony de la Rosa
Dan Del Santo
Geno Delafose
John Delafose & the Eunice Playboys
Diga Rhythm Band
Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band
Felix Dolan
Connie Dover
The Dynatones
Echoes of Incas
Epstein Brothers Band
Joseph Falcon & Cleoma Breaux Falcon
Pura Fé
Filé
Firewater
Canray Fontenot
Gamelan Son of Lion
Garcia Brothers
Ben Goldberg
Jerry Gonzalez & the Fort Apache Band
Steve Gorn
Grayhorse Singers
Sylvan Grey
Gu-Achi Fiddlers
Richard Hagopian
Joy Harjo & Poetic Justice
Larry Harlow
Mickey Hart
Hawk Project
Tish Hinojosa
Fred Ho
Sol Hoopii
Hui Ohana
Immigrant Suns Indigenous Inkuyo
The Irish Tradition
Eileen Ivers
Jon Jang
Don Santiago Jimenez
Flaco Jimenez
Santiago Jimenez Jr.
Antonio Carlos Jobim
Beau Jocque
Esteban "Steve" Jordan
Jungular Grooves
George Kahumoku Jr.
Moses Kahumoku
Rev. Dennis Kamakahi
Ray Kane
Dominic Kanza & the African Rhythm Machine
Kapelye
Doug Kershaw
Kid Creole & the Coconuts
King Changó
The Klezmatics
Klezmer Conservatory Band
Klezmer Plus!
The Klezmorim
Kotoja
The Kronos Quartet
George Kuo
Leonard Kwan
La India
La Mafia
Bill Laswell
Latin Playboys
Eddie LeJeune
Iry LeJeune
Ricardo Lemvo & Makina Loca
Dan Levenson & Kim Murley
Lhasa
Arto Lindsay
Little Joe
Little Steven Kevin Locke
The Looters
Jennifer Lopez
Los Lobos
Los Pleneros de la 21
Los Super Seven
Los Tigres del Norte
Talitha MacKenzie
Joanie Madden
Magnum Band
Taj Mahal
The Ilyas Malayev Ensemble
Herbie Mann
Mariachi Cobre
Narciso Martinez
Masada
Dave Matthews Band
Maxwell Street Klezmer Band
Mazz
Andy McGann
Russell Means
Doris "D.L." Menard
Bill Miller
Robert Mirabal
The Mollys
Morgan Heritage
Naftule's Dream
R. Carlos Nakai
Johnny Nash
Pandit Pran Nath
Native Flute Ensemble
Emilio Navaira
The New Orleans Klezmer All Stars
A. Paul Ortega
Ozomatli
Gabby Pahinui
The Pahinui Brothers
Eddie Palmieri
Percussion Incorporated
Chris Perez
Perfect Thyroid
Cornel Pewewardy
Peter Phippen
Primeaux & Mike
Willis Prudhomme
Tito Puente
Roberto Pulido
Queen Ida
Red Tail Chasing Hawks
Zachary Richard
Mike Richmond
Bonnie Rideout
Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys
Steve Roach
Kim Robertson
Rockin' Dopsie
Rockin' Sidney
Rocky Boy Singers
Arsenio Rodríguez
Tito Rodríguez
Aldus Roger
Ruben Romero & Lydia Torea
Linda Ronstadt
Adam Rudolph
Cathie Ryan
Sam-Ang Sam Ensemble
Poncho Sanchez
Maggie Sansone
Santana
Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band
Tracy Schwarz
Selena
Seven Nations
Jamshied Sharifi
Joanne Shenandoah
J. Reuben Silverbird
Perry Silverbird
Terrance Simien
Paul Simon
Six Nations Women Singers
SKAndalous All-Stars
Leo Soileau
Sol y Canto
Solas
Jo-El Sonnier
Southern Scratch
Spearhead
Douglas Spotted Eagle
Sunita Staneslow
Andy Statman
Stellamara
Strunz & Farah
Sukay
Ron Sunsinger
Sweet Honey in the Rock
Tabou Combo
Talking Heads

zimbabwe 999

Dave Tarras
Tau Moe Family
Texas Tornados
3 Leg Torso
Horace Trahan
Trance Mission
Trian
John Trudell
Jai Uttal
Ritchie Valens
Vas
Glen Velez
Vinx Walela
Floyd Red Crow Westerman
Randy Weston
Fredrick Whiteface
David Wilkie
Nathan Williams
Joemy Wilson
Paul Winter
Stevie Wonder
Gary Wright
Xit
Eva Ybarra
Mary Youngblood
Zulu Spear
Zydeco Force
Zydeco Hurricanes

Venezuela
Oscar D'Leon
Los Amigos Invisibles

Vietnam
Khac Chi Ensemble

Wales
Ar Log
Carreg Lafar
Crasdant
Fernhill

Zimbabwe
Bhundu Boys
Black Umfolosi
Stella Chiweshe
Forward Kwenda
Machanic Manyeruke
Thomas Mapfumo
Ephat Mujuru
Zimbabwe Legit

musicHound CONTRIBUTOR INDEX

The Contributor Index makes it easy for you to locate MusicHound World entries by your favorite writers. Under each contributor's name, the entries they have written for this volume are listed alphabetically. Artist (or group) entries and sidebars can be found in the main section of the book; entries with the "compilation" designation can be found in the Compilations section.

Karen Ashbrook
The House Band
Bonnie Rideout

Robert Baird
Beausoleil

Andrew BeDell
Leny Andrade
Luiz Bonfá
Phil Coulter
Olu Dara
John Delafose & the Eunice Playboys
Don Santiago Jimenez
Esteban "Steve" Jordan
Meditations
Sugar Minott
Johnny Pacheco
Page & Plant

Ari Bendersky
OMC

Nego Beto
Jorge Ben
Brazil: Bahia (sidebar)
Brazil: Samba (sidebar)
Brazil: The Northeast (sidebar)
Gal Costa
Olodum
Pixinguinha
The Rough Guide to the Music of Brazil (compilation)

PJ Birosik
Robin Adnan Anders
Robert Tree Cody
Steven Cragg
The Didgeridoo (sidebar)
Echoes of Incas
Film Orchestra of Shanghai
Hamdulillah (compilation)
A Native American Odyssey (compilation)
Helen O'Hara
Cornel Pewewardy
The Rough Guide to Native American Music (compilation)

Philip Booth
Africa Never Stand Still (compilation)

Hank Bordowitz
Yami Bolo
Coupé Cloué
Nemours Jean-Baptiste
Habib Koité & Bamada
Magnum Band
Morgan Heritage
Chief Steven Osita Osadebe
O'Yaba
Sir Shina Peters
Reggae Jamdown: The RAS Tapes (compilation)
Doudou N'Diaye Rose
Sister Carol

Iris Brooks
Steve Gorn
Ephat Mujuru
Trichy Sankaran

Ken Burke
Maya Angelou
Clifton Chenier
Irish Rovers
Malika
Perfect Thyroid
Zydeco Hurricanes

Salvatore Caputo
David Byrne
Gamelan Son of Lion
Paul Simon
WOMAD (sidebar)

Heidi Cerrigione
Hammered Dulcimers Worldwide (sidebar)
Joemy Wilson

Thor Christensen
The Pogues

Martin Connors
Black 47
The Oyster Band
The Waterboys

Cary Darling
Ozomatli
Rock en Español
Caetano Veloso

Jim DeRogatis
Yma Sumac

Kerry Dexter
American Warriors: Songs for Veterans (compilation) Americanos: Latino Life in the United States: A Celebration (compilation) Andean Legacy (compilation)
Joe Arroyo
Badi Assad
Mary Bergin

Between Father Earth and Mother Sky (compilation)
Frances Black
The Blarney Pilgrim: Celtic Fingerstyle Guitar, Volume 2 (compilation) Borderlands: from Conjunto to Chicken Scratch (compilation) Brave Hearts (compilation)
Irving Burgie
Celtic Christmas (compilation)
Celtic Legacy (compilation) Celtic Odyssey (compilation) Celtic Spirit (compilation)
Celtic Treasure: The Legacy of Turlough O'Carolan (compilation)
Chayanne
Conjunto! Texas-Mexican Border Music, Vols. 1–5 (compilation) Jesse Cook
J.P. Cormier
Corridos y Tragedias de la Frontera: First Recordings of Historic Mexican American Ballads, 1928–1937 (compilation)
Coyote Oldman
Elvis Crespo
Joe Cuba
Cuba: I Am Time (compilation) Dargason Music Sampler (compilation)
Tony de la Rosa
Oscar D'Leon
Eden's Bridge
El Sonido de Flamenco (compilation) Faces of the Harp: Celtic & Contemporary (compilation)
Pura Fé
Festival of Light (compilation)
Festival of the Andes (compilation) Fifteen Tex-Mex Conjunto Classics (compilation) Flamenco: Fire & Grace (compilation)
Flutes & Strings of the Andes (compilation) Folkstyles of Mexico and Colombia (compilation)
Juan Carlos Formell
Celina Gonzaléz
Gypsy Passion (compilation)
Harpestry (compilation)
Heartbeat 2: Voices of First Nations Women (compilation) Hearts, Hands, & Hides (compilation) Tish Hinojosa
Inkuyo
Victor Jara
Klezmania: Klezmer for the New Millennium (compilation)
The Kronos Quartet
Kukuruza
Dan Levenson & Kim Murley
Jennifer Lopez
Los de Abajo
Los Tigres del Norte
Lullaby Journey (compilation)
Mariachi Cobre
Ricky Martin
Narciso Martinez
Mazz
Men with Guns (Hombres Armadas) (compilation)
The Mexican Revolution Corridos (compilation)
Pablo Milanés
Áine Minogue
Music of New Mexico: Hispanic Traditions (compilation) Musica de la Tierra (compilation) Narada World: A Global Vision (compilation) Navajo Songs (compilation)
Maighread Ní Dhomhnaill
Norteño and Tejano Accordion Pioneers 1929–1939 (compilation)
Clara Nunes
Orquesta Aragon
Paco Peña
Chris Perez
Lourdes Perez
Itzhak Perlman
Peter Phippen
Plains Chippewa/Metis Music from Turtle Mountain (compilation) Queens of African Music (compilation)
Jean Redpath
Tito Rodríguez
Ruben Romero & Lydia Torea
Linda Ronstadt
Selena
Shakira
J. Reuben Silverbird
Perry Silverbird
Christina Smith & Jean Hewson
Sol y Canto
Songs of the Spirit (compilation) Talking Spirits (compilation)
Tejano Roots/Raices Tejanos: The Roots of Tejano and Conjunto Music (compilation) Tibetan Invocations (compilation) Tribal Fires (compilation) Tribal Voices (compilation) Tribal Winds (compilation)
Under the Green Corn Moon (compilation)
Carlos Varela
A Woman's Heart 2 (compilation)
Eva Ybarra
Mary Youngblood

Josh Freedom du Lac
Shinehead

Daniel Durchholz
Michael Brook
Wyclef Jean
Latin Playboys
Madness
Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers
Bill Miller
Noa
The Police
Archie Roach
Texas Tornados
John Trudell
Willie & Lobo

Michael Eldridge
Jean Binta Breeze
Calypso (sidebar)
Calypsos from Trinidad: Politics, Intrigue & Violence in the 1930s, Including the Butler Calypsos (compilation)
krosfyah
Ahdri Zhina Mandiela
Oku Onuora
Post-Soca (sidebar)
Red Plastic Bag
Soca (sidebar)
Benjamin Zephaniah

Bill Ellis
By the Rivers of Babylon: Timeless Hymns of Rastafari (compilation)
Her Song: Exotic Voices of Women from around the World (compilation) Mexico: Fiestas of Chiapas & Oaxaca (compilation) Sintesis
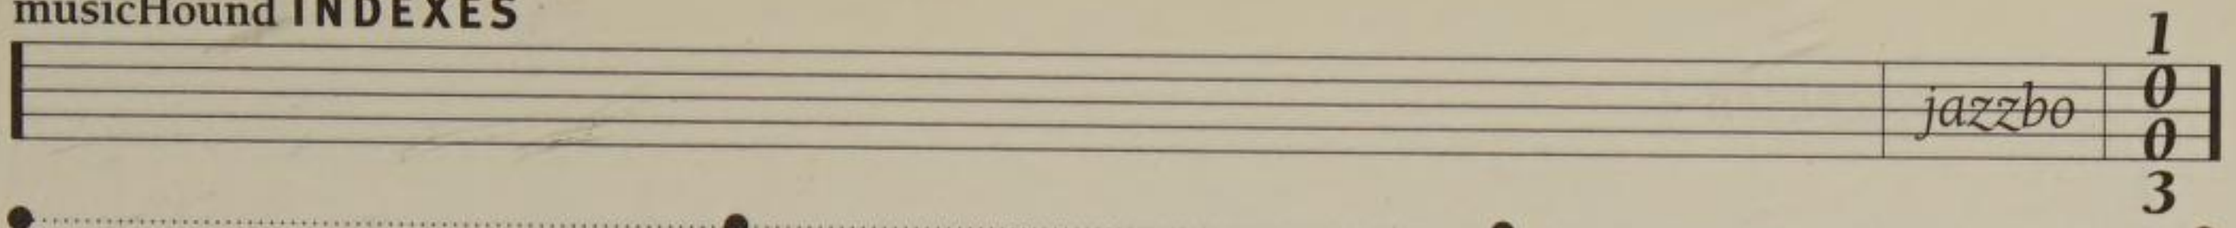
SKAndalous All-Stars

Banning Eyre
Dimi Mint Abba
Camara Aboubacar
Dr. Sikuru Ayinde Barrister
Bembeya Jazz
Black Umfolosi
Dark City Sisters
Abdoulaye Diabaté
Sékouba "Bambino" Diabaté
Toumani Diabaté
Cheikh Lô
Boncana Maiga
Kante Manfila
Samba Mapangala & Orchestra Virunga
Mlimani Park Orchestra
Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique
Rail Band
Cheikha Remitti
Yan Kuba Saho
Foday Musa Suso
Papa Wemba
Zaiko Langa Langa

John C. Falstaff
Anúna
Waldemar Bastos
Big Noise 2 (A Mambo Inn Compilation) (compilation)
Máire Breatnach
Ian Campbell Folk Group
Carreg Lafar
Patrick Cassidy
The Chieftains
Emma Christian
Craobh Rua
Crasdant
Shaun Davey
Horslips
Kíla
Moving Cloud
Moving Hearts



Peadar Ó Riada
Seán Ó Riada
Seven Nations
Áine Uí Cheallaigh
Bill Whelan
David Wilkie

Christina Fuoco
Jose Feliciano
Dave Matthews Band

Lawrence Gabriel
Ruben Blades
Kid Creole & the Coconuts
The Specials

David Galens
Daniel Lanois

Ron Garmon
Bonga
Caribbean Revels: Haitian Rara and Dominican Gaga (compilation)
Andy Cooney
Orchestre National de Barbès
Ron Sunsinger
The Swedish Sax Septet

Helen Giano
Haris Alexiou
George Dalaras
Stavros Xarhakos & Nicos Gatsos

Andrew Gilbert
Poncho Sanchez

Simon Glickman
Richard Thompson

Gary Pig Gold
Herb Alpert

Alex Gordon
Desi Arnaz
Harry Belafonte

Gary Graff
Bloque
Manu Dibango
Gloria Estefan
Anoushka Shankar
Third World
Richard Thompson

David Greenberger
3 Leg Torso

Ben Greenman
Jose Feliciano
Carmen Miranda
Zamfir

Jason Gross
The Pygmies (sidebar)
The World's Musical Traditions 8: Yoruba Drums from Benin, West Africa (compilation)

William Hanson
The English Beat

Craig Harris
Chava Alberstein
Marc Anthony
Dan Ar Braz
Ar Log
Aswad
Ashwan Batish
Theodore Bikel
Tony Bird
Mary Black
Black Uhuru
Alpha Blondy
Jimmy Bosch
Dennis Brown
Burning Spear
Camarón de la Isla
Willie Colon
I.K. Dairo
Paco de Lucia Desmond Dekker
Lucky Dube
Eek-a-Mouse
Brian Eno
Filé
Gilberto Gil
The Gipsy Kings
George Harrison
Mickey Hart
Ofra Haza
Joe Higgs
Zakir Hussain
Abdullah Ibrahim
Inti-Illimani
Gregory Isaacs
The Itals
Kanda Bongo Man
Kapelye
Salif Keita
Ladysmith Black Mambazo
Miriam Makeba
Herbie Mann
Thomas Mapfumo
Rita Marley
Hugh Masekela
Christy Moore
Pablo Moses
Judy Mowatt
Johnny Nash
Youssou N'Dour
Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill
Ebenezer Obey
Babatunde Olatunji
Augustus Pablo
Charlie Palmieri
Lee "Scratch" Perry
Astor Piazzolla
Maddy Prior
Flora Purim
Balwinder Safri
Santana
Shakti
L. Shankar
Lakshmi Shankar
Ravi Shankar
Terrance Simien
The Skatalites
Sly & Robbie
Steel Pulse
Sweet Honey in the Rock
Dave Tarras
Toots & the Maytals
Yomo Toro
Ali Farka Touré
Ritchie Valens
Bunny Wailer
Floyd Red Crow Westerman
Paul Winter
Stomu Yamash'ta
Yellowman
Zydeco: The Early Years (compilation)

Alex Henderson
Dori Caymmi
Gonzaguinha
Mutabaruka

Geoffrey Himes
Eileen Ivers
The Mollys
Patrick Street
Solas

Steve Holtje
Jie-Bing Chen
Jin Hi Kim
Masada
The Rough Guide to the Music of Eastern Europe (compilation)
The Rough Guide to the Music of Zimbabwe (compilation)
Adam Rudolph
Rurutu Choir
Rustavi Choir
Sainkho
Randy Weston

Chris Hovan
Nana Vasconcelos

Aaron Howard
Hari Prasad Chaurasia
Richard Hagopian
Klezmer 1993—New York City (compilation)
Klezmer Pioneers: European and American Recordings, 1905–1952 (compilation) Klezmer Plus!
La Mafia
The Ilyas Malayev Ensemble
Maxwell Street Klezmer Band
Naftule's Dream
Shiv Kumar Sharma

Stephen Ide
Cathie Ryan

Jazzbo
Mad Lion
Zimbabwe Legit

Isaac Josephson Cornershop
Irakere

Chris King
The Arthur S. Alberts Collection: More Tribal, Folk, and Café Music of West Africa (compilation) Music from Rwanda (compilation) Ngoma: Music from Uganda (compilation) Resting Place of the Mists: New Valiha and Marovany Music from Madagascar (compilation) Women of Istanbul (compilation)

Steve Kiviat
Tshala Muana

Steve Knopper
Laurie Anderson
Ry Cooder
Los Amigos Invisibles
Loreena McKennitt
Perez Prado
Shaggy

Nancy Ann Lee
Conjunto Alma Jarocha
Conjunto Bernal
Paquito D'Rivera
Eliane Elias
Jerry Gonzalez & the Fort Apache Band
Antonio Carlos jobim
Joyce
Lhasa
Airto Moreira
NG La Banda
Elis Regina
Arturo Sandoval
Mongo Santamaria
Songs of Earth, Water, Fire & Sky (compilation) Village Music of Bulgaria/Bulgarian Folk Music (compilation) West Indies: An Island Carnival (compilation)

Marty Lipp
Gal Costa
Daude
João Gilberto
Antonio Carlos Jobim
Margareth Menezes
Daniela Mercury
Marisa Monte
Timbalada

Bret Love
Badawi
V.M. Bhatt
Tarun Bhattacharya
Bliss (compilation)
Bŭlgari
The Churchical Chants of the Nyahbingi (compilation) Dead Can Dance
Dr. Didg
The Drummers of Burundi
El-Funoun
Ethno-Techno (sidebar)
Folk Scat
Frame Drums Worldwide (sidebar)
Bikram Ghosh
Global Meditation (compilation) Global Voices (compilation)
Trilok Gurtu
David Hudson
India, North and South (sidebar)
Indian/Jazz Fusion (sidebar)
Indian Percussion (sidebar)
Invocations: Sacred Music from World Traditions (compilation) Jali Kunda: Griots of West Africa & Beyond (compilation) Japan: The Taiko Tradition (sidebar)
Kodo
The Kora and West African Griot (sidebar)
Bill Laswell
Lutes Worldwide (sidebar)
Laurel MacDonald
Pandit Kamalesh Maitra
Morocco: Crossroads of Time (compilation) Music As Healing (sidebar)
Ayub Ogada
Kongar-ool Ondar
Talip Ozkan
Planet Soup (compilation)
Enzo Rao
Steve Roach
Badal Roy
Sacred Treasures: Choral Masterworks from Russia (compilation)
Simon Shaheen
Talvin Singh
Liu Sola
Dr. L. Subramaniam
The Tabla (sidebar)
The Talking Drum (sidebar)
Taraf: Romanian Gypsy Music (compilation) Trance Planet Vols. I–IV (compilation)
Transglobal Underground
Tuvan Throat-Singing (sidebar)
Vadya Lahari
T.H. "Vikku" Vinayakram
West African Drumming and the Soul of Rock 'n' Roll (sidebar) Wu Man
Yat-Kha
Jalal Zolfonun

John Lupton
Ceolbeg
Eileen McGann

Elizabeth Lynch
Maura O'Connell

Garaud MacTaggart
Ad Vielle Que Pourra
Africando
Farid al-Atrash
Carlos Barbosa-Lima
Ray Barretto
Mario Bauzá
Bayaka: The Extraordinary Music of the BaBenzélé Pygmies (compilation)
The Big Bang: In the Beginning Was the Drum (compilation)
Edward "Eddie" Blazonczyk
Anouar Brahem
Bringing It All Back Home (compilation)
Jane Bunnett
Cachao
Milton Cardona
Celia Cruz
The Dynatones
Cesaria Evora
João Gilberto
Egberto Gismonti
Immigrant Suns
Istanbul 1925 (compilation)
Santiago Jimenez Jr.
JPP
Maria Kalaniemi
Kornog
Fela Kuti
Femi Anikulapo Kuti
La Muscagña
Los Camperos de Valles
Machito
E.T. Mensah Milladoiro
Beny Moré
The Music of Arab Americans (compilation)
Milton Nascimento
Nomos
Open House
Orchestra Baobob
Eddie Palmieri
Niamh Parsons
Martti Pokela
Tito Puente
Roberto Pulido
Rembetica: Historic Urban Folk Songs from Greece (compilation)
Amália Rodrigues
Arsenio Rodríguez
Dino Saluzzi
Septetos Cubanos: sones de Cuba (compilation)
Sexteto Boloña
Sexteto Habanero
Mercedes Sosa
Simon Thoumire
Tulikkulkku (compilation)
Udi Hrant
Bebo Valdes
Chucho Valdes
Carlos Vives
Mohamed Abdel Wahab
Atahualpa Yupanqui

Brian Mansfield
Keola Beamer
Sonny Chillingworth
Hui Ohana

George Kahumoku Jr.
Moses Kahumoku
Rev. Dennis Kamakahi
Ray Kane
Doug Kershaw
George Kuo
Leonard Kwan
Gabby Pahinui
The Pahinui Brothers
Slack-Key Guitar (sidebar)

Lynne Margolis
Sergio Mendes
Vinx

Sandy Masuo
James Galway

Michaelangelo Matos
African Tranquility (compilation) Afro-Latino (compilation)
The Best of Latin America: Change the Rules (compilation)
Impact All Stars
The Rough Guide to the Music of Kenya & Tanzania (compilation)
The Story of Flamenco (compilation)
The Story of Tango (compilation)
A Taste of the Indestructible Beat of Soweto (compilation)

Cliff McGann
Ballinasloe Fair: Early Recordings of Irish Music in America (compilation) John Burgess
John Carty
A Celebration of Scottish Music (compilation) Celtic Lullaby (compilation)
John Doherty
Felix Dolan
John Faulkner
Alec Finn
Four Men & a Dog
Paddy Glackin
Great Big Sea
Robbie Hannan
Andy McGann
Newfoundland Music (sidebar)
Jim Payne
Kelly Russell
Sean Nua
Sult: Spirit of the Music (compilation)

Andre McGarrity
Shabba Ranks

Adam McGovern
Abdelli
Afro Celt Sound System
Laurie Anderson
Anthology of Chant (compilation)
Marc Anthony
Ashkaru
Bad Brains
Chris Blackwell (sidebar)
Cedella Marley Booker
Boukman Eksperyans
David Bowie
Chayanne
Dancing with the Dead (compilation)
Vieux Diop
Brian Eno
Folk Roots Magazine Presents Routes: 20 Years of Essential Folk, Roots & World Music (Africa, Europe, Asia and the World) (compilation) Fortuna
Joy Harjo & Poetic Justice
George Harrison
Dominic Kanza & the African Rhythm Machine
Angélique Kidjo
Diana King
King Changó
Les Go de Koteba
Little Steven
Baaba Maal
Taj Mahal
Ricky Martin
Dave Matthews Band
The New Feeling (compilation)
Sinéad O'Connor
Margareta Paslaru
The Police
Rasha
Robbie Robertson
Virginia Rodrigues
Buffy Sainte-Marie
Spearhead
Takadja
Vas
Jim Wilson (sidebar)
Women of Spirit (compilation)
Women of the World: Celtic II (compilation) Stevie Wonder
Zap Mama

TJ McGrath
Dougie MacLean

Chris Meloche
Antonio Carlos Jobim

Kevin Meyer
Los Super Seven

Stacy Meyn
Claudia
The Guo Brothers & Shung Tian
Holding Up Half the Sky: Voices of African Women (compilation) Holding Up Half the Sky: Voices of Asian Women (compilation) Holding Up Half the Sky: Voices of Celtic Women (compilation) Holding Up Half the Sky: Women in Reggae: Roots Daughters (compilation)
The Japanese Koto Consort
Monks of the Dip Tse Chok Ling Monastery
Synergy
Omar Faruk Tekbilek
23 Skidoo

Sandy Miranda
Hawaiian Drum Dance Chants: Sounds of Power in Time (compilation) Kalama's Quartet
Tau Moe Family

Jo Hughey Morrison
Karen Ashbrook
The Bagpipe (sidebar)
Patrick Ball
The Barra MacNeils
Blowzabella
Robin Huw Bowen
Cape Breton Music (sidebar)
Capercaillie
Celtic Music in Brief (sidebar)
Ceoltoiri
Clannad
Alasdair Fraser
Joanie Madden
Hamish Moore
Mouth Music
Native Flute Ensemble
Nightnoise
Kim Robertson
Silly Wizard
Sunita Staneslow
Tannahill Weavers
Kathryn Tickell
Gary Wright

Jeffrey Muhr
Adventures in Afropea 3: Telling Stories to the Sea (compilation) Anthology of World Music, Vols. 1–18 (compilation) Bali: Gamelan and Kecak (compilation)
Francis Bebey
Bukhara: Musical Crossroads of Asia (compilation) Burmese Music Series (compilation)
Chirgilchin
Deep in the Heart of Tuva: Cowboy Music from the Wild East (compilation) Farafina
Fong Naam
Forró: Music for Maids and Taxi Drivers (compilation) Homrong: Musicians of the National Dance Company of Cambodia (compilation) Juju Roots: 1930s–1950s (compilation)
The King Records World Music Library: Indonesian Music Titles, Vols. 1–31 (compilation) Kingdom of the Sun: Peru's Inca Heritage (compilation)
The Library of Congress Endangered Music Project, Vols. 1–6 (compilation) Madagasikara Two: Current Popular Music of Madagascar (compilation) Master Drummers of Dagbon: Drumming from Northern Ghana, Vols. 1–2 (compilation)
Master Musicians of Jajouka

Mbube Roots: Zulu Choral Music from South Africa, 1930s–1960s (compilation)
The Moon and the Banana Tree: New Guitar Music from Madagascar (compilation) Music from the Morning of the World (compilation)
The Music of Bali, Vols. 1–3 (compilation)
The Music of Cambodia, Vols. 1–3 (compilation)
The Music of Indonesia, Vols. 1–17 (compilation)
The Music of Vietnam, Vols. 1–3 (compilation)
Musicians of the Nile
Sabah Habas Mustapha
New Music Indonesia, Vols. 1–3 (compilation)
The Secret Museum of Mankind, Vols. 1–8 (compilation) Shaman, Jhankri and Néle: Music Healers of Indigenous Cultures (compilation)
Shu-De
Song of the Crooked Dance: Early Bulgarian Traditional Music, 1927–42 (compilation) Sukay
The Sultan's Pleasure: From the Palace of Yogyakarta (compilation) Trance 1 & Trance 2 (compilation) Tuva: Among the Spirits (compilation) Viva Zimbabwe (compilation)
A World Out of Time: Henry Kaiser and David Lindley in Madagascar, Vols. 1–3 (compilation)
The World's Musical Traditions 4: Bunggridj-bunggridj: Wangga Songs by Alan Maralung (compilation)
The World's Musical Traditions 5: Bandoneón Pure: Dances of Uruguay (compilation)
The World's Musical Traditions 6: Song Creators in Eastern Turkey (compilation)
The World's Musical Traditions 9: Musical Traditions of Portugal (compilation)
The World's Musical Traditions 10: Tabla Tarang: Melody on Drums (compilation) Zulu Jive: Umbaqanga (Urban and Rural Zulu Beats from South Africa) (compilation)

Chris Nickson
Sandy Bull
Sheila Chandra
Peter Gabriel
Garmarna
Hedningarna
John Martyn
The Ukrainians
Värttinä
Väsen
Wimme

Meredith Ochs
Folksongs of the Louisiana Acadians (compilation)

David Okamoto
Brave Combo
Los Lobos

Allan Orski
Jimmy Cliff
Taj Mahal
The Selecter
Peter Tosh

Dan Ouellette
Ivo Papasov

Michael Parrish
Alabina
Amampondo
Appalachia (sidebar)
Border Music: Tex-Mex (sidebar) Gamelan (sidebar)
Regis Gisavo
Harps Worldwide (sidebar)
Irish Step Dancing (sidebar)
Junoon
Salamat Ali Khan
Khenany
Tony Mola
Mynta
Nocy
Polkas Worldwide (sidebar)
Mike Richmond
G.S. Sachdev
Cecil Sharp (sidebar)
Andy Statman
Tianjin Buddhist Music Ensemble
Trebunia Family Band
Tturlough O'Carolan (sidebar)
Vodou (sidebar)
Masakazu Yoshizawa

David Paul
Dr. Krishna Chakravarty
Ustad Zia Mohiuddin Dagar
Huun-Huur-Tu
Ustad Imrat Khan
Ustad Vilayat Khan
Pandit Pran Nath

Bob Paxman
Tommy Makem

Rick Petreycik
Doug Kershaw
Jo-El Sonnier

Randy Pitts
The Balfa Brothers
Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band

Gary Plochinski
UB40

j. poet
Najat Aatabou

Abana Ba Nasery
Abel & Kaninerna
Rabib Abou-Khalil
Obo Addy
King Sunny Adé
Adioa
Mahmoud Ahmed
Pierre Akendengue
Alaap
Albita
Jerry Alfred & the Medicine Beat
Amina
Anitas Livs
Annabouboula
Apache Indian
Arawak Mountain Singers
Arrow
Ashkabad
Julian Avalos & Afro-Andes
Aster Aweke
Abed Azrié
Susana Baca
Baka Beyond
Bana
Robby Bee & the Boyz from the Rez
Jay Begaye
Asha Bhosle
Bhundu Boys
Bio Ritmo
Black Lodge Singers
Black Stalin
Mari Boine
Boom Shaka
Boukan Ginen
Boyoyo Boys
Sharon Burch
Burning Bridges
Burning Flames
Café Tacuba
Calypso Rose
Casper
Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag
Stella Chiweshe
Johnny Clarke
Conjunto Céspedes
Cuba L.A.
¡Cubanismo!
Culture
Dadawa
Alan Dargin
Krishna Das
Paban Das Baul & Sam Mills
Davka
Dan Del Santo
Det Syng
D'Gary
Alpha Yaya Diallo
Diblo Dibala
Diga Rhythm Band
Henri Dikongué
Wasis Diop
Dissidenten
Djavan
Djur Djura
Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band
Eastern Eagle Singers

david poole 1007

Hamza El Din
Electric and Acoustic Mali (compilation)
Luis Enrique
Epstein Brothers Band
étoile de Dakar
Chaba Fadela
Fantcha
Majek Fashek
Frå Senegal Til Setesdal
Franco
Garcia Brothers
Djivan Gasparyan
Gazoline
Ghazal
Girls of Angeli
Gladiators
Eddy Grant
Grayhorse Singers
Sylvan Grey
Groupa
Gu-Achi Fiddlers
Juan Luis Guerra
Hassan Hakmoun
Hawk Project
Sol Hoopii
Hoven Droven
Linton Kwesi Johnson
Jolly Boys
Jungular Grooves
Mory Kanté
Kaoma
Karnataka College of Percussion
Kashtin
Kassav'
Khac Chi Ensemble
Khaled
Badar Ali Khan
Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan
Shoukichi Kina
Konbit: Burning Rhythms of Haiti (compilation) Kotoja
Ali Hassan Kuban
Forward Kwenda
Latcho Drom (Soundtrack) (compilation)
Le Mystère des Voix Bulgares
Ray Lema
Ricardo Lemvo & Makina Loca
Les Têtes Brulées
Annbjørg Lien
Little Joe
Ismaël Lô
The Looters
Lord Kitchener
Lord Melody
Los Fabulosos Cadillacs
Los Incas
Los Muñequitos de Matanzas
Los Pleneros de la 21
Luciano
Sipho Mabuse
Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens
Mama Sana
Cheb Mami
The Mandators
Sam Mangwana
Machanic Manyeruke
Prince Nico Mbarga
Jimi Mbaye
Mzwakhe Mbuli
Russell Means
La Sonora Meliyara
Mendes Brothers
The Mighty Diamonds
The Mighty Sparrow
Robert Mirabal
Marlui Miranda
Machel Montano
Abdel Aziz El Mubarak
Maryam Mursal
Najma
R. Carlos Nakai
Native American Pop (sidebar)
Nelson
Mbongeni Ngema
Samba Ngo
Nordan Project
Sally Nyolo
Sonny Okosun
Victor Olaiya
Remmy Ongala
Oriental Brothers
A. Paul Ortega
Geffery Oryema
Ottopasuna
Orlando "Doctor Ganga" Owah
Patato
Gnonnas Pedro
Pépé Kallé
Percussion Incorporated
Primeaux & Mike
RAM
Hossam Ramzy
Ernest Ranglin
Rara Machine
Ravel
Red Tail Chasing Hawks
Roaring Lion
Rocky Boy Singers
S.E. Rogie
Lazaro Ros
Anders Rosén
Rossy
David Rudder
The Sabri Brothers
Bally Sagoo
Salala
Salamat
Sam-Ang Sam Ensemble
Samite
Oumou Sangare
Scandinavian Folk and Beyond (sidebar)
Márta Sebestyén
Mansour Seck
Shadow
Joanne Shenandoah
Sierra Maestra
Six Nations Women Singers
Soto Koto Band
Soul Brothers
The Soul of Black Peru (compilation)
The Soul of Cape Verde (compilation)
Southern Scratch
Douglas Spotted Eagle
Rigo Star
Stellamara
Super Guitar Soukous (compilation) Sweet Sunny North, Vol. II (compilation)
Tabou Combo
Rachid Taha
Tahitian Choir
Tam Tam 2000
Tambu
Taraf de Haïdouks
Tarika
Te Vaka
Terem Quartet
3 Mustaphas 3
Willie Toors
Touré Kunda
Trance Mission
Daniel Tshanda
Vadå
Justin Vali
Glen Velez
Veritas
Vocal Sampling
Walela
Fredrick Whiteface
Wolga Balalaika Ensemble
Xit
Yothu Yindi
Tom Zé
Zulu Spear

David Poole

Afro-Cuba: A Musical Anthology (compilation) Angels in the Mirror: Vodou Music of Haiti (compilation) Argentina: The Guitar of the Pampas (compilation) Arte Flamenco, Vols. 1–15 (compilation) Australia: Songs of the Aborigines and Music of Papua New Guinea (compilation) Bollywood (sidebar)
Brazil Classics 2: O Samba (compilation) Brazil Samba Roots (compilation) Brazil: Tropicalismo (sidebar)
Brazilliance: The Music of Rhythm (compilation) Calypsos: Afro-Limonese Music of Costa Rica (compilation) Caribbean Island Music (compilation) China: Time to Listen (compilation)
Chinese Classical Music (sidebar)
Cuarteto Coculense: Mexico's Pioneer Mariachis, Vol. 4 (compilation) Cuba Classics 3: New Directions in Cuban Music—Diablo Al Inferno (compilation) Cuban Counterpoint: History of the Son Montuno (compilation) Cuban Dance Party: Roots of Rhythm Volume 2 (compilation) Alpha Yaya Diallo
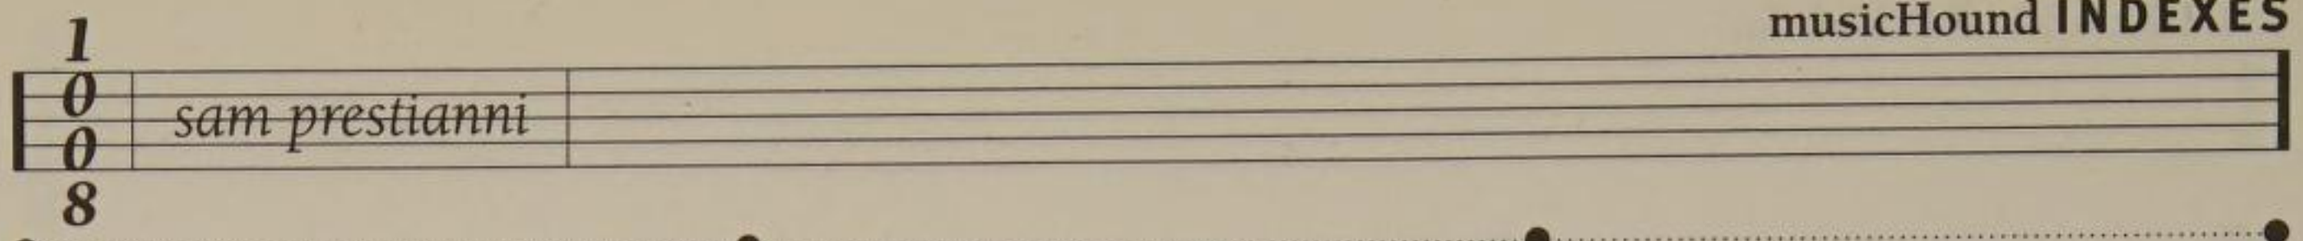
Mikey Dread



Duende: From Traditional Masters to Gypsy Rock (compilation)
Firewater
Flutes Worldwide (sidebar)
Rubén González
Marcia Griffiths
Harvest Song: Music from around the World Inspired by Working the Land (compilation) Honor the Earth Powwow: Songs of the Great Lakes Indians (compilation)
The Hugo Masters: An Anthology of Chinese Classical Music (compilation)
The Igede of Nigeria: Drumming, Chanting and Exotic Percussion (compilation) Israel Vibration
Japanese Noh Music: The Kyoto Nohgaku Kai (compilation)
King Tubby
Yungchen Lhamo
Arto Lindsay
Mad Professor
Merengue: Dominican Music and Dominican Identity (compilation)
Hugh Mundell
The Music of Armenia, Vols. 1–6 (compilation)
The Music of Islam, Vols. 1–15 (compilation) Music of Peru: From the Mountains to the Sea (compilation)
My Only Consolation: Classic Pireotic Rembetica, 1932–1946 (compilation)
The Nairobi Beat (Kenyan Pop Music Today) (compilation)
The Pan-African Orchestra
David Parsons (sidebar)
Abida Parveen
Tabu Ley Rochereau
Sextetos Cubanos Vols. I & II (compilation) Silvana Licursi: Far from the Land of Eagles (compilation) Singing in an Open Space: Zulu Rhythm and Harmony 1962–1982 (compilation) Ska after Ska after Ska (compilation)
Abdel Ali Slimani
Soca Music from Trinidad: Heat in De Place (compilation)
U. Srinivas
The Story of Jamaican Music: Tougher Than Tough (compilation)
Talking Heads
Tibet: The Heart of Dharma (compilation) Township Jazz 'n' Jive: 18 South African Urban Swing Classics from the Jivin' '50s (compilation) Two Girls Started to Sing: Bulgarian Village Singing (compilation) Vintage Hawaiian Music: Steel Guitar Masters, 1928–1934 (compilation) Voices (compilation)
Voices of the World: An Anthology of Vocal Expression (compilation) Word Soun' 'Ave Power: Reggae Poetry (compilation) Yabby You

Hukwe Zawose
Tappa Zukie

Sam Prestianni
Ben Goldberg

Richard Price
The Gyuto Monks
Ali Akbar Khan

Barry M. Prickett
Transglobal Underground

David Prince
Jon Jang

Doug Pullen
Flaco Jimenez

Derek Rath
Best of Straker's: Ah Feel to Party (compilation) Black Star Liner (compilation) Calypso Breakaway (compilation) Cuba Fully Charged (compilation) Cuban Gold, Volumes 1–5 (compilation) Desert Blues (compilation)
Ethiopian Groove: The Golden Seventies (compilation) Islands (compilation)
Makossa Connection: The Best Of, Volumes 1–4 (compilation) Soca Gold 1998 (compilation)
The Spirit of Cape Verde (compilation)
The Wassoulou Sound: Women of Mali (compilation)

Dennis Rea
Fred Ho

Bryan Reesman
Strunz & Farah
Jai Uttal

Bob Remstein
Johnny Clegg & Savuka
Deep Forest
Ryuichi Sakamoto

Chris Rietz
Derek Bell
Alison Kinnaird

Cynthia Rogers
Kudsi Erguner

Ken Roseman
Adaro
Afro Celt Sound System
Anam
Brave Old World
Eliza Carthy
Andrew Cronshaw
Connie Dover
Ethno Punk: Around the World with Attitude (compilation)
Fernhill

Fire in the Kitchen (compilation) Folk 'n' Hell (compilation) Gjallarhorn
Hoelderlin Express
Home Service
Horch
Ashley Hutchings
Klezmer (sidebar)
Leahy
Talitha MacKenzie
Mad Pudding
Madredeus
Paul Mounsey
New Electric Music II: The Continuing Story of Folk into Rock (compilation)
The New Orleans Klezmer All Stars
Nordic Roots: A NorthSide Collection (compilation)
Peatbog Faeries
Radio Tarifa
The Rough Guide to Scottish Music (compilation)
The Rough Guide to the Music of Portugal (compilation) Runrig
Shooglenifty
Sorten Muld
Steeleye Span
Yosefa

Leland Rucker Indigenous
Mali to Memphis: An African American Odyssey (compilation)

Christopher Scanlon
Ashley MacIsaac

Bruce Schoenfeld
Astrud Gilberto

Joel Selvin
Santana

Todd Shanker
The Abyssinians
Buju Banton
Beenie Man
Black Uhuru
Cocoa Tea
The Congos
Alton Ellis
The Ethiopians
Fiesta Vallenata (compilation)
Jamaican Music 1: Rastafarianism (sidebar)
Jamaican Music 2: Nyahbingi (sidebar)
Jamaican Music 3: Mento (sidebar)
Jamaican Music 4: Deejay Style (sidebar)
Jamaican Music 5: Ska (sidebar)
Jamaican Music 6: Rocksteady (sidebar)
Jamaican Music 7: Reggae (sidebar)
Jamaican Music 8: Dub (sidebar)
Jamaican Music 9: Dancehall (sidebar)
Jamaican Music 10: Ragga (sidebar)
Jamaican Music 11: Sonia Pottinger (sidebar)

Ini Kamoze
Barrington Levy
Bob Marley
Freddie McGregor
Jackie Mittoo
Junior Murvin
Musical Youth
Maxi Priest
The Roots Radics
Garnett Silk
The Skatalites
Solid Gold, Coxsone Style (compilation)
Super Cat
The Techniques
The Twinkle Brothers
Wailing Souls
Wind Your Waist (compilation)

Tim Sheridan
Conjuntos Norteños (compilation) Early Cante Flamenco (compilation) Klezmer Music: A Marriage of Heaven and Earth (compilation) Mambo Mania: The Kings and Queens of Mambo (compilation) Polish Village Music (compilation)

Clea Simon
Cajun & Creole Masters (compilation)

Jared Snyder
Nathan Abshire
Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin
Amédée Ardoin
Chris Ardoin & Double Clutchin'
The Balfa Brothers
Balfa Toujours
M'Bilia Bel
Buckwheat Zydeco
Cajun Music (sidebar)
California Cajun Orchestra
Chubby Carrier
Roy Carrier
Boozoo Chavis
C.J. Chenier
Harry Choates
Sheryl Cormier
Geno Delafose
John Delafose & the Eunice Playboys
Joseph Falcon & Cleoma Breaux Falcon
Canray Fontenot
Dick Gaughan
Andy Irvine
Beau Jocque
Alhaji Bai Konteh
Umm Kulthum
La Sonora Dinamita
Eddie LeJeune
Iry LeJeune
Willis Prudhomme
Queen Ida
Zachary Richard
Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys
Rockin' Dopsie
Rockin' Sidney
Aldus Roger Tracy Schwarz
Leo Soileau
Roberto Torres
Horace Trahan
Nathan Williams
Zydeco (sidebar)
Zydeco Force

Denise Sofranko
Wolfstone

David Sokol
Klezmer Conservatory Band

Steven Stancell
Larry Harlow
Diana King

Wif Stenger
Music of the !Kung Bushmen (compilation)
Sven Nyhus
Silvio Rodríguez
Mikis Theodorakis

Mario Tarradell
Emilio Navaira

Tom Terrell
Anggun
Bamboleo
Maria Bethânia
Issac Delgado
Manu Dibango
Dr. Nico
Frank Emilio Flynn
Carlos Gardel
La India
Los Van Van
Manolín, El Médico de la Salsa
Chris McGregor
Osibisa
Third World

Suzy Rothfield Thompson
J'ai été Au Bal (I Went to the Dance) (compilation)
The Klezmatics
The Klezmorim
Doris "D.L." Menard

Philippe Varlet
Altan
The Bothy Band
The Bouzouki (sidebar)
Kevin Burke
Liz Carroll
De Dannan
Déanta
Dervish
Séamus Ennis
Frankie Gavin
James Keane
Liam O'Flynn
Tommy Peoples
Planxty
Sean-Nós Singing (sidebar)

Jack Vartoogian
Yacub Addy
Idjah Hadijah

Linda Vartoogian
Philip Nchipe Tabane

Stephen Vilnius
Jose Feliciano

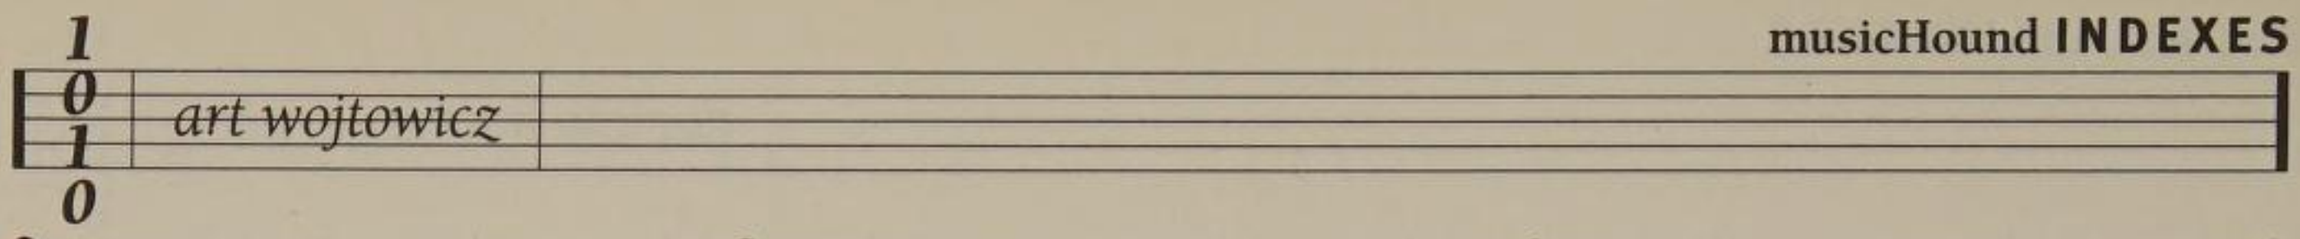
Neal Walters
The Barra MacNeils
Bayou Seco
Dolores Keane
Lá Lugh
Kevin Locke
Maggie Sansone

Mara Weiss
Jorge Ben
Brazil: Bahia (sidebar)
Brazil: Samba (sidebar)
Brazil: The Northeast (sidebar)
Gal Costa
Olodum
Pixinguinha
The Rough Guide to the Music of Brazil (compilation)

Sam Wick
Chris Blackwell (sidebar)
Caifanes
Shibuya: The Japanese Underground (sidebar)
The Sitar (sidebar)
World Music in Film (sidebar)

Steve Winick
Frankie Armstrong
The Black Family
The Boys of the Lough
Cherish the Ladies
The Dubliners
Archie Fisher
A.L. Lloyd
Dónal Lunny
Ewan MacColl
Mick Moloney
Ossian
Tommy Sands
Andy M. Stewart
Alan Stivell
Sweeney's Men
Trian

Pamela Murray Winters
Lillian Allen
Eliza Carthy
Martin Carthy
Sisi Chen
Shirley Collins
Sandy Denny
Fairport Convention
Ashley Hutchings
Mary Jane Lamond
Trevor Lucas
Susan McKeown



Jean Redpath
Jamshied Sharifi
Dave Swarbrick
Richard Thompson

Art Wojtowicz
Enya

Joshua Zarov
Toni Childs

Tony Ziselberger
Arcady
Battlefield Band
Mary Bergin
The Clancy Brothers & Tommy Makem

Johnny Cunningham
Phil Cunningham
Jackie Daly
The Irish Tradition
Natalie MacMaster
Matt Molloy
Maire Ní Chathasaigh
Sharon Shannon

musicHound SERIES INDEX

*This index is a guide to all of the artists and groups included in the MusicHound series of books (*MusicHound Rock, MusicHound Country, MusicHound Blues, MusicHound R&B, MusicHound Lounge, MusicHound Folk, MusicHound Jazz, MusicHound Swing, and MusicHound World*). Following the artist or group's name you'll find the book (or books) they appear in.*

a-ha
See MH Rock

A House
See MH Rock

A. Robic and the Exertions
See MH Folk

A+
See MH R&B

A3
See MH Rock

Aaliyah
See MH R&B

Najat Aatabou
See MH World

Abana Ba Nasery
See MH World

Greg Abate
See MH Jazz

ABBA
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Dimi Mint Abba
See MH World

Gregory Abbott
See MH R&B

ABC
See MH Rock

Abdelli
See MH World

Paula Abdul
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Ahmed Abdul-Malik
See MH Jazz

Ahmed Abdullah
See MH Jazz

Abel & Kaninerna
See MH World

John Abercrombie
See MH Jazz

Rabib Abou-Khalil
See MH World

Camara Aboubacar
See MH World

Above the Law
See MH R&B

Colonel Abrams
See MH R&B

Muhal Richard Abrams
See MH Jazz

Rick Abrams
See MH Folk

Nathan Abshire
See MH Folk, MH World

Absolute Zeros
See MH Rock

The Abyssinians
See MH World

AC/DC
See MH Rock

The Accelerators
See MH Rock

Ace
See MH Rock

Johnny Ace
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Ace of Base
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Aces
See MH Blues

Acetone
See MH Rock

Barbara Acklin
See MH R&B

Acoustic Alchemy
See MH Jazz

Acousticats
See MH Folk

Roy Acuff
See MH Country, MH Folk

Ad Vielle Que Pourra
See MH World

Adam & the Ants
See MH Rock

Bryan Adams
See MH Rock

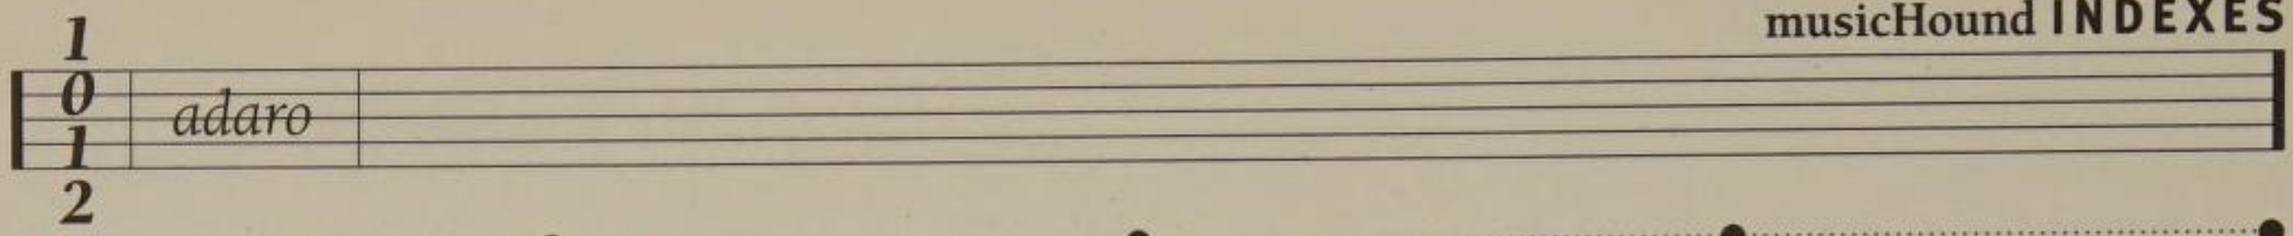
George Adams
See MH Jazz

Johnny Adams
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH R&B

Oleta Adams
See MH R&B

Pepper (Park) Adams
See MH Jazz

Barry Adamson
See MH Lounge, MH Rock



Adaro
See MH World

C.C. Adcock
See MH Rock

Eddie Adcock
See MH Country, MH Folk

Julian "Cannonball" Adderley
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Obo Addy
See MH World

Yacub Addy
See MH World

King Sunny Adé
See MH Rock, MH World

Adioa
See MH World

Hasil Adkins
See MH Rock

Trace Adkins
See MH Country

Helen Folasade Adu
See MH Lounge

The Adverts
See MH Rock

Aengus
See MH Folk

Aerosmith
See MH Rock

Ron Affif
See MH Jazz

The Afghan Whigs
See MH Rock

A.F.I.
See MH Rock

Africando
See MH World

The Afro Blue Band
See MH Jazz

Afro Celt Sound System
See MH World

Afro Rican
See MH R&B

Agent Orange
See MH Rock

Agents of Good Roots
See MH Rock

Agnes Gooch
See MH Rock

Eden Ahbez
See MH Lounge

Ahmad
See MH R&B

Mahmoud Ahmed
See MH World

Caroline Aiken
See MH Folk

Air
See MH Jazz, MH Rock

Air Miami
See MH Rock

Air Supply
See MH Rock

Kei Akagi
See MH Jazz

David "Stringbean" Akeman
See MH Country, MH Folk

Pierre Akendengue
See MH World

Garfield Akers
See MH Blues

Rhett Akins
See MH Country

Akinyele
See MH R&B

Toshiko Akiyoshi
See MH Jazz

Farid al-Atrash
See MH World

Alaap
See MH World

Alabama
See MH Country

Alabina
See MH World

Scott Alarik
See MH Folk

The Alarm
See MH Rock

Joe Albany
See MH Jazz

Chava Alberstein
See MH World

Albion Band
See MH Folk

Albion Country Band
See MH Rock

Albita
See MH World

Gerald Albright
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Alcatrazz
See MH Rock

Howard Alden
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Ronnie Aldrich
See MH Lounge

Brian Ales
See MH Jazz

Alessi
See MH Lounge

Alger Alexander
See MH Blues

Arthur Alexander
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Eric Alexander
See MH Jazz

John Marshall Alexander Jr.
See MH Blues

Monty Alexander
See MH Jazz

Texas Alexander
See MH Blues

Haris Alexiou
See MH World

Jerry Alfred & the Medicine Beat
See MH World

Pat Alger
See MH Country, MH Folk

Alice in Chains
See MH Rock

Alien Fashion Show
See MH Swing

Tha Alkaholiks
See MH R&B

All
See MH Rock

All-4-One
See MH R&B

The All Girl Boys
See MH Folk

All Saints
See MH Rock

Gary Allan
See MH Country

Carl Allen
See MH Jazz

Fulton Allen
See MH Blues

Geri Allen
See MH Jazz

Harley Allen
See MH Country

Harry Allen
See MH Jazz

Henry "Red" Allen
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Lillian Allen
See MH World

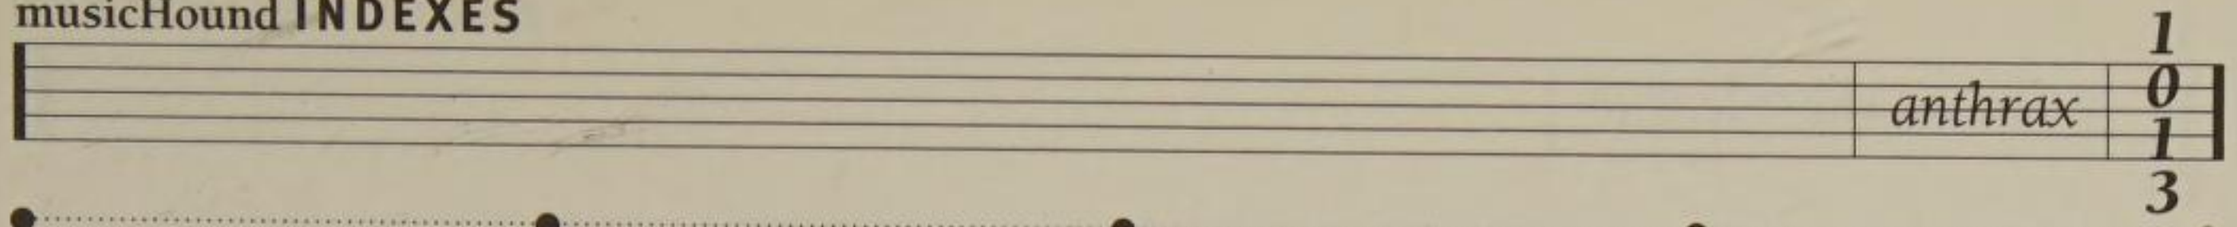
Peter Allen
See MH Lounge

Red Allen
See MH Country, MH Folk

Rex Allen
See MH Country

Rex Allen Jr.
See MH Country

Steve Allen
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge



Terry Allen
See MH Country, MH Folk

Red Allen & Frank Wakefield
See MH Country

Jenny Allinder
See MH Folk

Amy Allison
See MH Country, MH Rock

Ben Allison
See MH Jazz

Luther Allison
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Mose Allison
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH Jazz, MH Lounge

The Allman Brothers Band
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Alloy Orchestra
See MH Jazz

Karrin Allyson
See MH Jazz

Laurindo Almeida
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Almighty RSO
See MH R&B

Herb Alpert
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH World

Alphaville
See MH Rock

Peter Alsop
See MH Folk

Gerald Alston
See MH R&B

Alt
See MH Rock

Altan
See MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

John Altenburgh
See MH Jazz

Altered Images
See MH Rock

Joey Altruda with the Cocktail Crew
See MH Lounge

Barry Altschul
See MH Jazz

Dave Alvin
See MH Blues, MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Phil Alvin
See MH Blues, MH Country, MH Rock

Amampondo
See MH World

Amazing Blondel
See MH Folk

The Amazing Rhythm Aces
See MH Country, MH Folk

Eric Ambel
See MH Rock

Ambitious Lovers
See MH Rock

Franco Ambrosetti
See MH Jazz

Ambrosia
See MH Rock

America
See MH Folk, MH Rock

The American Breed
See MH Rock

The American Cafe Orchestra
See MH Folk

American Flyer
See MH Rock

American Music Club
See MH Rock

The Ames Brothers
See MH Lounge

The Amidons
See MH Folk

Amina
See MH World

aMiniature
See MH Rock

Albert Ammons
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Gene "Jug" Ammons
See MH Jazz

Tori Amos
See MH Rock

The Amps
See MH Rock

Anam
See MH World

Robin Adnan Anders
See MH World

Eric Andersen
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Andersen, Danko, Fjeld
See MH Rock

Al Anderson
See MH Country

Bill Anderson
See MH Country

Chris Anderson
See MH Jazz

Clifton Anderson
See MH Jazz

Ernestine Anderson
See MH Jazz

Fred Anderson
See MH Jazz

Ian Anderson
See MH Rock

John Anderson
See MH Country

Laurie Anderson
See MH Rock, MH World

Leroy Anderson
See MH Lounge

Little Willie Anderson
See MH Blues

Lynn Anderson
See MH Country

Pete Anderson
See MH Country

Pink Anderson
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Ray Anderson
See MH Jazz

Wessell Anderson
See MH Jazz

Leny Andrade
See MH World

Leah Andreone
See MH Rock

Ernie Andrews
See MH Jazz

Julie Andrews
See MH Lounge

Molly Andrews
See MH Folk

The Andrews Sisters
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Horace Andy
See MH Rock

Angel
See MH Rock

Maya Angelou
See MH Lounge, MH World

The Angels
See MH Rock

Anggun
See MH World

The Animals
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Anitas Livs
See MH World

Paul Anka
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Ann-Margret
See MH Lounge

Annabouboula
See MH World

Anotha Level
See MH R&B

Another Girl
See MH Rock

Adam Ant
See MH Rock

Antenna
See MH Rock

Marc Anthony
See MH World

Ray Anthony
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Anthrax
See MH Rock

Anti-Nowhere League
See MH Rock

Anúna
See MH World

Any Old Time String Band
See MH Folk

Any Trouble
See MH Rock

Apache
See MH R&B

Apache Indian
See MH World

Peter Apfelbaum
See MH Jazz

Aphex Twin
See MH Rock

Scott Appel
See MH Folk

Fiona Apple
See MH Rock

Apples in Stereo
See MH Rock

Peter Appleyard
See MH Jazz

Aqua
See MH Rock

The Aqua Velvets
See MH Rock

The Aquabats
See MH Rock

Dan Ar Braz
See MH Folk, MH World

Ar Log
See MH World

Arawak Mountain Singers
See MH World

Arc Angels
See MH Rock

Arcadia
See MH Rock

Arcady
See MH Folk, MH World

Tasmin Archer
See MH Rock

Archer/Park
See MH Country

Archers of Loaf
See MH Rock

The Archies
See MH Rock

Jann Arden
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Alphonse "Bois Sec" Ardoin
See MH Folk, MH World

Amédée Ardoin
See MH Folk, MH World

Chris Ardoin & Double Clutchin'
See MH Folk, MH World

Argent
See MH Rock

Arkarna
See MH Rock

Harold Arlen
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Joan Armatrading
See MH Folk, MH R&B, MH Rock

Frankie Armstrong
See MH Folk, MH World

Louis Armstrong
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Swing

Rodney Armstrong
See MH Blues

Vanessa Bell Armstrong
See MH R&B

Army of Lovers
See MH Rock

Desi Arnaz
See MH Lounge, MH World

Billy Boy Arnold
See MH Blues

Eddy Arnold
See MH Country

James "Kokomo" Arnold
See MH Blues

Arrested Development
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Lynn Arriale
See MH Jazz

Arrow
See MH World

Joe Arroyo
See MH World

Art Ensemble of Chicago
See MH Jazz

The Art of Noise
See MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Rock

Artful Dodger
See MH Rock

Artifacts
See MH R&B

Artificial Joy Club
See MH Rock

Artisan
See MH Folk

Daniel Ash
See MH Rock

Karen Ashbrook
See MH Folk, MH World

Dorothy Ashby
See MH Jazz

Ashford & Simpson
See MH R&B

Ashkabad
See MH World

Ashkaru
See MH World

Clarence "Tom" Ashley
See MH Folk

Ernest Ashworth
See MH Country

Asia
See MH Rock

Asleep at the Wheel
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Swing

Ass Ponys
See MH Rock

Badi Assad
See MH World

The Associates
See MH Rock

The Association
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Fred Astaire
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Rick Astley
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Astronauts
See MH Rock

Aswad
See MH Rock, MH World

Asylum Street Spankers
See MH Country

Atari Teenage Riot
See MH Rock

Chet Atkins
See MH Country, MH Folk

Juan Atkins
See MH Rock

The Atlanta Rhythm Section
See MH Rock

Atlantic Starr
See MH R&B

Natacha Atlas
See MH World

The Atomic Fireballs
See MH Swing

Murray Attaway
See MH Rock

Atwater-Donnelly
See MH Folk

Eden Atwood
See MH Jazz

The Au Pairs
See MH Rock

Audio Adrenaline
See MH Rock

Audio Two
See MH R&B

Brian Auger
See MH Jazz, MH Rock

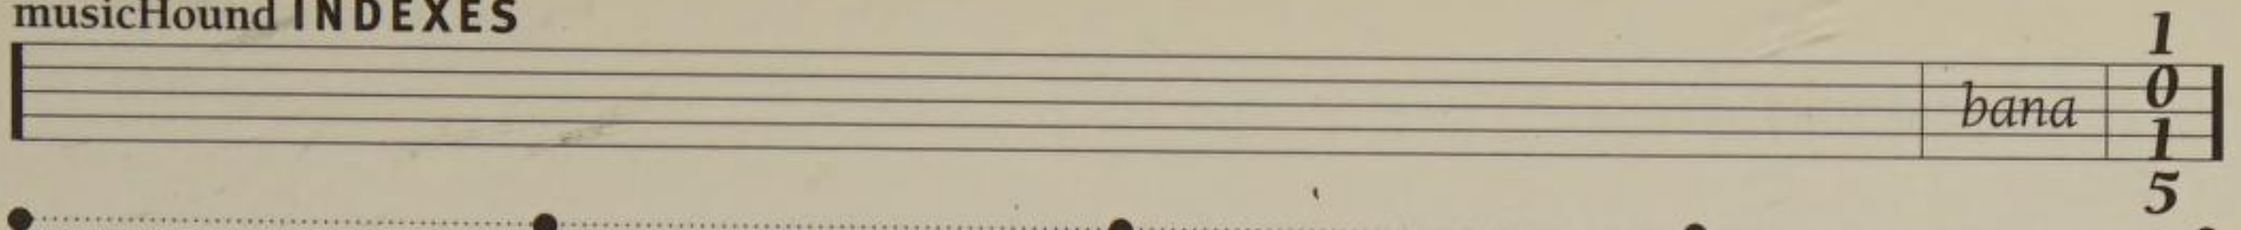
Lynn August
See MH Folk

Mike Auldridge
See MH Country, MH Folk

Reid & Coleman Auldridge
See MH Country

Gene Austin
See MH Lounge

Judy Austin
See MH Folk



Patti Austin
See MH Lounge, MH R&B

Austin Lounge Lizards
See MH Country, MH Folk

Autechre
See MH Rock

The Auteurs
See MH Rock

Automator
See MH R&B

Gene Autry
See MH Country, MH Folk

Frankie Avalon
See MH Rock

Julian Avalos & Afro-Andes
See MH World

The Avengers
See MH Rock

Avenue Blue
See MH Jazz

Average White Band
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Teodross Avery
See MH Jazz

Aster Aweke
See MH World

Hoyt Axton
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Kevin Ayers
See MH Rock

Roy Ayers
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Albert Ayler
See MH Jazz

AZ
See MH R&B

Steve Azar
See MH Country

Charles Aznavour
See MH Lounge

Abed Azrié
See MH World

Aztec Camera
See MH Rock

Howie B
See MH Rock

Mr. B
See MH Jazz

The B-52's
See MH Rock

B Sharp Jazz Quartet
See MH Jazz

Babble
See MH Rock

Babe the Blue Ox
See MH Rock

Babes in Toyland
See MH Rock

Babkas
See MH Jazz

Baby Bird
See MH Rock

Babyface
See MH R&B

The Babys
See MH Rock

Susana Baca
See MH World

Burt Bacharach
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Bachman-Turner Overdrive
See MH Rock

Eric Bachmann
See MH Rock

The Backsliders
See MH Country

Backstreet Boys
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Bad Brains
See MH Rock, MH World

Bad Company
See MH Rock

Bad English
See MH Rock

Bad Livers
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Bad Manners
See MH Rock

Bad Religion
See MH Rock

Angelo Badalamenti
See MH Lounge

Badawi
See MH World

Badfinger
See MH Rock

Badlands
See MH Rock

Erykah Badu
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B

Joan Baez
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Bahamadia
See MH R&B

Chris Bailey
See MH Rock

Derek Bailey
See MH Jazz

Ernest Harold "Benny" Bailey
See MH Jazz

Mildred Bailey
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Pearl Bailey
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Philip Bailey
See MH R&B

Baillie & the Boys
See MH Country

Bailter Space
See MH Rock

Aly Bain
See MH Folk, MH World

Merrill Bainbridge
See MH Rock

Dan Baird
See MH Rock

The Baja Marimba Band
See MH Lounge

Baka Beyond
See MH World

Anita Baker
See MH R&B

Chet Baker
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Duck Baker
See MH Folk

Etta Baker
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Ginger Baker
See MH Jazz

Josephine Baker
See MH Lounge

Kenny Baker
See MH Country, MH Folk

LaVern Baker
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Lee Baker Jr.
See MH Blues

Baker & Myers
See MH Country

Ginger Baker's Air Force
See MH Rock

The Balancing Act
See MH Rock

Butch Baldassari
See MH Country, MH Folk

Long John Baldry
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Dewey Balfa
See MH Country

The Balfa Brothers
See MH Folk, MH World

Balfa Toujours
See MH Folk, MH World

David Ball
See MH Country

Marcia Ball
See MH Blues

Patrick Ball
See MH Folk, MH World

E.C. Ball and Orna Ball
See MH Folk

Hank Ballard
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Baltimore Consort
See MH Folk

Afrika Bambaataa
See MH R&B

Bamboleo
See MH World

Bana
See MH World

Bananarama
See MH Rock

Banco de Gaia
See MH Rock

The Band
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Band of Susans
See MH Rock

Moe Bandy
See MH Country

Billy Bang
See MH Jazz

The Bangles
See MH Rock

Ant Banks
See MH R&B

L.V. Banks
See MH Blues

Nancie Banks Orchestra
See MH Jazz

Buju Banton
See MH World

Banyan
See MH Rock

The Bar-Kays
See MH R&B

The Barbarians
See MH Rock

Barbecue Bob
See MH Blues

John Henry Barbee
See MH Blues

Chris Barber
See MH Jazz

Junior Barber
See MH Folk

Gato Barbieri
See MH Jazz

Carlos Barbosa-Lima
See MH Jazz, MH World

Bobby Bare
See MH Country

Bare Necessities
See MH Folk

A. Spencer Barefield
See MH Jazz

Barenaked Ladies
See MH Rock

Russ Barenberg
See MH Country, MH Folk

Danny Barker
See MH Jazz

Les Barker
See MH Folk

Joshua Barnes
See MH Blues

Roosevelt "Booba" Barnes
See MH Blues

Barnes & Barnes
See MH Rock

Charlie Barnet
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Mandy Barnett
See MH Country

Barolk Folk
See MH Folk

Joey Baron
See MH Jazz

Tina Louise Barr
See MH Folk

The Barra MacNeils
See MH Folk, MH World

The Barracudas
See MH Rock

Dan Barrett
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Sweet Emma Barrett
See MH Jazz

Syd Barrett
See MH Rock

Ray Barretto
See MH Jazz, MH World

Dr. Sikuru Ayinde Barrister
See MH World

Kenny Barron
See MH Jazz

John Barry
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Barry & the Remains
See MH Rock

Bruce Barth
See MH Jazz

Dave Bartholomew
See MH R&B, MH Rock, MH Swing

Lou Ann Barton
See MH Blues

Cathy Barton and Dave Para
See MH Folk

Gary Bartz
See MH Jazz

Rob Base & D.J. E-Z Rock
See MH R&B

Basehead
See MH R&B

Bash & Pop
See MH Rock

Bashful Brother Oswald
See MH Country

Basia
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Count Basie
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Basin Brothers
See MH Folk

Fontella Bass
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Sid Bass
See MH Lounge

The Bass Mountain Boys
See MH Country

Shirley Bassey
See MH Lounge, MH R&B

Bassomatic
See MH Rock

Waldemar Bastos
See MH World

Django Bates
See MH Jazz

Ashwan Batish
See MH World

Alvin Batiste
See MH Jazz

The Bats
See MH Rock

Robin Batteau
See MH Folk

Battlefield Band
See MH Folk, MH World

Will Batts
See MH Blues

Bauhaus
See MH Rock

Mario Bauzá
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH World

Les Baxter
See MH Lounge

The Bay City Rollers
See MH Rock

Bayou Seco
See MH Folk, MH World

Be Bop Deluxe
See MH Rock

The Beach Boys
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Beacon Hillbillies
See MH Folk

Keola Beamer
See MH Folk, MH World

Beastie Boys
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Beasts of Bourbon
See MH Rock

The Beat
See MH Rock

The Beat Farmers
See MH Country, MH Rock

Beat Happening
See MH Rock

Beat Positive
See MH Swing

The Beatles
See MH Rock

Beatnuts
See MH R&B

The Beau Brummels
See MH Rock

The Beau Hunks
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Beausoleil
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH World

The Beautiful South
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Francis Bebey
See MH World

Sidney Bechet
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Beck
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Jeff Beck
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Joe Beck
See MH Jazz

Walter Becker
See MH Rock

Jaymz Bee
See MH Lounge

Tom Bee
See MH World

Robby Bee & the Boyz from the Rez
See MH World

The Bee Gees
See MH R&B, MH Rock

BeebleBrox
See MH Jazz

Beenie Man
See MH World

Jay Begaye
See MH World

Bix Beiderbecke
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Richie Beirach
See MH Jazz

Bekka & Billy
See MH Country

M'Bilia Bel
See MH World

Bel Canto
See MH Rock

Harry Belafonte
See MH Folk, MH Lounge, MH World

Bob Belden
See MH Jazz

Adrian Belew
See MH Rock

Marcus Belgrave
See MH Jazz

Carey Bell
See MH Blues

Chris Bell
See MH Rock

Derek Bell
See MH Folk, MH World

Lurrie Bell
See MH Blues

Rico Bell
See MH Country

Vince Bell
See MH Country, MH Folk

William Bell
See MH R&B

Delia Bell and Bill Grant
See MH Folk

Archie Bell & the Drells
See MH R&B

Bell Biv DeVoe
See MH R&B

Joey Belladonna
See MH Rock

Peter Bellamy
See MH Folk

The Bellamy Brothers
See MH Country

Regina Belle
See MH R&B

Belle & Sebastian
See MH Rock

Bellevue Cadillac
See MH Swing

Louie Bellson
See MH Jazz

Belly
See MH Rock

Fred Below
See MH Blues

Jesse Belvin
See MH R&B

Bembeya Jazz
See MH World

Jorge Ben
See MH World

Pat Benatar
See MH Rock

Gregg Bendian
See MH Jazz

Tex Beneke
See MH Swing

Eric Benet
See MH R&B

Mac Benford
See MH Folk

Mac Benford & the Woodshed All-Stars
See MH Country

Don Bennett
See MH Jazz

Tony Bennett
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Han Bennink
See MH Jazz

David Benoit
See MH Jazz

Tab Benoit
See MH Blues

George Benson
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Pierre Bensusan
See MH Folk

Stephanie Bentley
See MH Country

Arley Benton
See MH Blues

Brook Benton
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Buster Benton
See MH Blues

Steve Beresford
See MH Jazz

Bob Berg
See MH Jazz

Matraca Berg
See MH Country

Karl Berger
See MH Jazz

Mary Bergin
See MH Folk, MH World

Borah Bergman
See MH Jazz

Tina Bergmann
See MH Folk

Bergmann Brothers
See MH Folk

Jerry Bergonzi
See MH Jazz

Bunny Berigan
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Dick Berk
See MH Jazz

Berlin
See MH Rock

Irving Berlin
See MH Lounge

Byron Berline
See MH Country, MH Folk

Berline-Crary-Hickman
See MH Country, MH Folk

Dan Bern
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Crystal Bernard
See MH Country

Tim Berne
See MH Jazz

Elmer Bernstein
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Peter Bernstein
See MH Jazz

Steve Berrios
See MH Jazz

Chu Berry
See MH Jazz

Chuck Berry
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Dave Berry
See MH Rock

Heidi Berry
See MH Rock

John Berry
See MH Country

Richard Berry
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Cindy Lee Berryhill
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Lou and Peter Berryman
See MH Folk

Gene Bertoncini
See MH Jazz

Best Kissers in the World
See MH Rock

Maria Bethânia
See MH World

Better Than Ezra
See MH Rock

Bettie Serveert
See MH Rock

Betty Boo
See MH Rock

Bewitched
See MH Rock

Andy Bey
See MH Jazz

V.M. Bhatt
See MH World

Tarun Bhattacharya
See MH World

Asha Bhosle
See MH World

Bhundu Boys
See MH World

Jello Biafra
See MH Rock

Ed Bickert
See MH Jazz

Big Ass Truck
See MH Rock

Big Audio Dynamite
See MH Rock

Big Bad Voodoo Daddy
See MH Lounge, MH Rock, MH Swing

Big Black
See MH Rock

Big Blow and the Bushwackers
See MH Folk

The Big Bopper
See MH Rock

Big Brother & the Holding Company
See MH Blues

Big Chief
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Big Country
See MH Rock

Big Daddy Kane
See MH R&B

Big Dave & the Ultrasonics
See MH Swing

Big Head Todd & the Monsters
See MH Rock

Big House
See MH Country

Big Joe & the Dynaflows
See MH Swing

Big L
See MH R&B

Big Maceo
See MH Blues

Big Maybelle
See MH Blues

Big Rude Jake
See MH Rock

Big Sandy & His Fly-Rite Boys
See MH Country, MH Swing

Big Star
See MH Rock

Big Three Trio
See MH Blues

Big Time Sarah
See MH Blues

Big Twist & the Mellow Fellows
See MH Blues

Big Wreck
See MH Rock

Barney Bigard
See MH Jazz

Bigfood
See MH R&B

Theodore Bikel
See MH Folk, MH World

Bikini Kill
See MH Rock

Dave Bing
See MH Folk

The Bing Brothers
See MH Folk

Bio Ritmo
See MH World

Biota
See MH Jazz

Tony Bird
See MH Folk, MH World

Birddog
See MH Rock

The Birthday Party
See MH Rock

Elvin Bishop
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Joni Bishop
See MH Folk

Walter Bishop Jr.
See MH Jazz

Bitch Magnet
See MH Rock

Biz Markie
See MH R&B

Billy Bizor
See MH Blues

Björk
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Björn Again
See MH Lounge

Cilla Black
See MH Rock

Clint Black
See MH Country

Frances Black
See MH Folk, MH World

Frank Black
See MH Rock

Mary Black
See MH Folk, MH World

Black Ace
See MH Blues

The Black Crowes
See MH Rock

The Black Family
See MH Folk, MH World

Black Flag
See MH Rock

Black 47
See MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

Black Grape
See MH Rock

Black Lab
See MH Rock

Black Lodge Singers
See MH World

Black Moon
See MH R&B

Black/Note
See MH Jazz

Black Oak Arkansas
See MH Rock

Black Sabbath
See MH Rock

Black Sheep
See MH R&B

Black Stalin
See MH World

Black Swan Network
See MH Rock

Black Tie
See MH Rock

Black Uhuru
See MH Rock, MH World

Black Umfolosi
See MH World

Black Velvet Flag
See MH Lounge

The Blackbyrds
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

The Blackeyed Susans
See MH Rock

J. Blackfoot
See MH R&B

blackgirls
See MH Rock

BlackHawk
See MH Country, MH Rock

Blackie and the Rodeo Kings
See MH Folk

Becky Blackley
See MH Folk

Cindy Blackman
See MH Jazz

Amos Blackmore
See MH Blues

BLACKstreet
See MH R&B

Alfonzo Blackwell
See MH Jazz

Ed Blackwell
See MH Jazz

Francis Hillman Blackwell
See MH Blues

Otis Blackwell
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Scrapper Blackwell
See MH Blues

Ruben Blades
See MH Rock, MH World

Blahzay Blahzay
See MH R&B

Terry Blaine
See MH Jazz

Eubie Blake
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Kenny Blake
See MH Jazz

Norman Blake
See MH Country, MH Folk

Ran Blake
See MH Jazz

Seamus Blake
See MH Jazz

Blake Babies
See MH Rock

Art Blakey
See MH Jazz

Terence Blanchard
See MH Jazz

Bobby "Blue" Bland
See MH Blues, MH R&B

The Blasters
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock, MH Swing

The Blazers
See MH Rock

Edward "Eddie" Blazonczyk
See MH World

Blessid Union of Souls
See MH Rock

Carla Bley
See MH Jazz

Paul Bley
See MH Jazz

Mary J. Blige
See MH R&B

Blind Blake
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Blind Faith
See MH Rock

Blind Melon
See MH Rock

Blink 182
See MH Rock

Ralph Blizard
See MH Folk

Ralph Blizard & the New Southern Ramblers
See MH Country

Rory Block
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Blondie
See MH Rock

Alpha Blondy
See MH World

Blood of Abraham
See MH R&B

Blood Oranges
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Blood, Sweat & Tears
See MH Jazz, MH Rock

The Bloodhound Gang
See MH Rock

Bloodstone
See MH R&B

Jane Ira Bloom
See MH Jazz

Luka Bloom
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Michael Bloomfield
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH Rock

Bloque
See MH World

Blotto
See MH Rock

Kurtis Blow
See MH R&B

Blowzabella
See MH Folk, MH World

Bobby Blue
See MH Rock

The Blue Aeroplanes
See MH Rock

Blue Cheer
See MH Rock

Blue Highway
See MH Country, MH Folk

Blue Meanies
See MH Rock

Blue Mountain
See MH Country, MH Rock

The Blue Nile
See MH Rock

Blue Öyster Cult
See MH Rock

Blue Plate Special
See MH Swing

Blue Rodeo
See MH Country, MH Rock

Blue Shadows
See MH Country

The Blue Shadows
See MH Rock

Blue Sky Boys
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Bluebells
See MH Rock

Bluebirds
See MH Blues

The Bluegrass Cardinals
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Blues Brothers
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Blues Jumpers
See MH Swing

The Blues Magoos
See MH Rock

Blues Project
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Blues Traveler
See MH Rock

Bluestime
See MH Blues

The Bluetones
See MH Rock

Hamiet Bluiett
See MH Jazz

Hugh Blumenfeld
See MH Folk

Colin Blunstone
See MH Rock

Blur
See MH Rock

Arthur Blythe
See MH Jazz

The BMX Bandits
See MH Rock

The Bobbettes
See MH R&B

BoDeans
See MH Rock

Brigid Boden
See MH Rock

Body Count
See MH Rock

The Body Lovers
See MH Rock

Angela Bofill
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Deanna Bogart
See MH Blues

Dock Boggs
See MH Folk

Suzy Bogguss
See MH Country

Eric Bogle
See MH Folk

The Bogmen
See MH Rock

Boiled Buzzards
See MH Folk

Boiled in Lead
See MH Folk

Mari Boine
See MH World

Gordon Bok
See MH Folk

Bok, Muir & Trickett
See MH Folk

Tommy Bolin
See MH Rock

Zuzu Bollin
See MH Blues

Claude Bolling
See MH Jazz

Yami Bolo
See MH World

The Bolshoi
See MH Rock

Michael Bolton
See MH Rock

Polly Bolton
See MH Folk

Bomb Bassetts
See MH Rock

Bomb the Bass
See MH Rock

Bon Jovi
See MH Rock

James Bonamy
See MH Country

Eddie Bond
See MH Country

Johnny Bond
See MH Country

Gary U.S. Bonds
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Bone Thugs-N-Harmony
See MH R&B

Luiz Bonfá
See MH World

Bonga
See MH World

Bongwater
See MH Rock

Bonham
See MH Rock

Tracy Bonham
See MH Rock

Joe Bonner
See MH Jazz

Juke Boy Bonner
See MH Blues

Simon Bonney
See MH Country

Karla Bonoff
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

The Bonzo Dog Band
See MH Rock

The Boo Radleys
See MH Rock

Boo-Yaa T.R.I.B.E.
See MH R&B

Boogie Down Productions
See MH R&B

Boogiemonsters
See MH R&B

Roy Book Binder
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Cedella Marley Booker
See MH World

Chuckii Booker
See MH R&B

James Booker
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH R&B, MH Rock

Booker T. & the MG's
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Boom Crash Opera
See MH Rock

Boom Shaka
See MH World

The Boomtown Rats
See MH Rock

Pat Boone
See MH Country, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Boone Creek
See MH Country, MH Folk

Laura Boosinger
See MH Folk

Victor Borge
See MH Lounge

Jimmy Bosch
See MH World

Bo$$
See MH R&B

Boss Hog
See MH Rock

Earl Bostic
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Boston
See MH Rock

Boston Pops Orchestra
See MH Lounge

The Boswell Sisters
See MH Lounge

Libbi Bosworth
See MH Country

The Bothy Band
See MH Folk, MH World

The Bottle Rockets
See MH Country, MH Rock

Boukan Ginen
See MH World

Boukman Eksperyans
See MH World

Phil Boulding
See MH Folk

The Bouncing Souls
See MH Rock

Jean-Paul Bourelly
See MH Jazz, MH R&B, MH Rock

Bob Bovee and Gail Heil
See MH Folk

Bow Wow Wow
See MH Rock

Jimmy Bowen
See MH Country

Robin Huw Bowen
See MH Folk, MH World

Bryan Bowers
See MH Folk

David Bowie
See MH R&B, MH Rock, MH World

Lester Bowie
See MH Jazz

Ronnie Bowman
See MH Country

The Box Tops
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Boxcar Willie
See MH Country

Boy George
See MH Rock

Boy Howdy
See MH Country

Pat Boyack
See MH Blues

Eddie Boyd
See MH Blues

Ronnie Boykins
See MH Jazz

Boymerang
See MH Rock

Boyoyo Boys
See MH World

The Boys from Indiana
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Boys of the Lough
See MH Folk, MH World

Boyz II Men
See MH R&B

Ishmon Bracey
See MH Blues

Charles Brackeen
See MH Jazz

JoAnne Brackeen
See MH Jazz

Brad
See MH Rock

Don Braden
See MH Jazz

Bobby Bradford
See MH Jazz

Carrie Bradley
See MH Folk

Robert Bradley's Blackwater Surprise
See MH Rock

Tiny Bradshaw
See MH Swing

Paul Brady
See MH Folk, MH World

The Brady Bunch
See MH Country

Ruby Braff
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Billy Bragg
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Anouar Brahem
See MH World

Brainiac
See MH Rock

Bram Tchaikovsky
See MH Rock

Doyle Bramhall
See MH Blues

Doyle Bramhall II
See MH Rock

Bran Van 3000
See MH Rock

Billy Branch
See MH Blues

Oscar Brand
See MH Folk

The Brand New Heavies
See MH R&B

Brand Nubian
See MH R&B

Brand X
See MH Jazz

Paul Brandt
See MH Country

Brandy
See MH R&B

Laura Branigan
See MH Rock

Brass Construction
See MH R&B

Rick Braun
See MH Jazz

Brave Combo
See MH Folk, MH Lounge, MH Rock, MH World

Brave Old World
See MH World

Anthony Braxton
See MH Jazz

Toni Braxton
See MH R&B

The Braxtons
See MH R&B

Bread
See MH Country, MH Rock

Joshua Breakstone
See MH Jazz

Máire Breatnach
See MH World

Lenny Breau
See MH Jazz

Zachary Breaux
See MH Jazz

Michael Brecker
See MH Jazz

Randy Brecker
See MH Jazz

The Breeders
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Jean Binta Breeze
See MH World

Maire Brennan
See MH Folk

Jackie Brenston
See MH Blues, MH Swing

Willem Breuker
See MH Jazz

Gary Brewer
See MH Country

Pap Brewer
See MH Folk

Teresa Brewer
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

BR5-49
See MH Country

Brice Glace
See MH Rock

Brick
See MH R&B

Edie Brickell & New Bohemians
See MH Rock

Dee Dee Bridgewater
See MH Jazz

The Brigadiers
See MH Swing

Anne Briggs
See MH Folk, MH World

Fletcher Bright Fiddle Band
See MH Folk

Bright Morning Star
See MH Folk

Nick Brignola
See MH Jazz

John Brim
See MH Blues

Brinsley Schwarz
See MH Rock

Alan Broadbent
See MH Jazz

Chuck Brodsky
See MH Folk

Lisa Brokop
See MH Country

David Bromberg
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Bronski Beat
See MH Rock

Michael Brook
See MH World

Jonatha Brooke
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Gary Brooker
See MH Rock

Bob Brookmeyer
See MH Jazz

Garth Brooks
See MH Country

Hadda Brooks
See MH Blues, MH Lounge

Kix Brooks
See MH Country

Lonnie Brooks
See MH Blues

Meredith Brooks
See MH Rock

Roy Brooks
See MH Jazz

Tina Brooks
See MH Jazz

Brooks & Dunn
See MH Country

Big Bill Broonzy
See MH Blues, MH Folk

The Brother Boys
See MH Country, MH Folk

Brother Oswald
See MH Country

Brother Phelps
See MH Country

Brotherhood of Lizards
See MH Rock

The Brothers Four
See MH Folk

The Brothers Johnson
See MH R&B

Peter Brotzmann
See MH Jazz

Alison Brown
See MH Country, MH Folk

Andrew Brown
See MH Blues

Ari Brown
See MH Jazz

Arthur Brown
See MH Rock

Bobby Brown
See MH R&B

Buster Brown
See MH Blues

Carlinhos Brown
See MH World

Charles Brown
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B

Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH Swing

Clifford Brown
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Dennis Brown
See MH World

Donald Brown
See MH Jazz

Foxy Brown
See MH R&B

Greg Brown
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Herschel Brown
See MH Folk

Hylo Brown
See MH Country

James Brown
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Jeri Brown
See MH Jazz

Jim Ed Brown
See MH Country

J.T. Brown
See MH Blues

Junior Brown
See MH Country, MH Swing

Les Brown
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Marion Brown
See MH Jazz

Marty Brown
See MH Country

Maxine Brown
See MH R&B

Nappy Brown
See MH Blues

Paul Brown
See MH Folk

Ray Brown
See MH Jazz

Rob Brown
See MH Jazz

Robert Brown
See MH Blues

Roy Brown
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Swing

Ruth Brown
See MH Jazz, MH R&B, MH Rock, MH Swing

Shirley Brown
See MH R&B

T. Graham Brown
See MH Country

Willie Brown
See MH Blues

Roger Brown & Swing City
See MH Country

Milton Brown and the Musical Brownies
See MH Folk

Chuck Brown & the Soul Searchers
See MH R&B

Jackson Browne
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Jann Browne
See MH Country

Tom Browne
See MH Jazz

The Browns
See MH Country

Brownsville Station
See MH Rock

Bob Brozman
See MH Folk

Dave Brubeck
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Ed Bruce
See MH Country

Jack Bruce
See MH Rock

Bill Bruford
See MH Jazz

Jimmy Bruno
See MH Jazz

Brush Arbor
See MH Country

Brute
See MH Folk

Stephen Bruton
See MH Country

David Bryan
See MH Rock

James Bryan
See MH Folk

Ray (Raphael) Bryant
See MH Jazz

Bryndle
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Jeanie Bryson
See MH Jazz

Peabo Bryson
See MH R&B

bt
See MH Rock

B.T. Express
See MH R&B

Roy Buchanan
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Rachel Buchman
See MH Folk

The Buckets
See MH Folk

The Buckhannon Brothers
See MH Folk

Lindsey Buckingham
See MH Rock

The Buckinghams
See MH Rock

Jeff Buckley
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Lord Buckley
See MH Swing

Tim Buckley
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Milt Buckner
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Richard Buckner
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Buckshot Lefonque
See MH R&B

Buckwheat Zydeco
See MH Folk, MH World

Harold Budd
See MH Lounge

Buena Vista Social Club
See MH World

Norton Buffalo
See MH Blues

Buffalo Springfield
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Buffalo Tom
See MH Rock

Jimmy Buffett
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

George "Mojo" Buford
See MH Blues

The Buggles
See MH Rock

Alex Bugnon
See MH Jazz

Buick MacKane
See MH Rock

Built to Spill
See MH Rock

LTJ Bukem
See MH Rock

Bukken Bruse
See MH World

Bŭlgari
See MH World

Sandy Bull
See MH World

Luke & Jenny Anne Bulla
See MH Country, MH Folk

Bulletboys
See MH Rock

Robin Bullock
See MH Folk

The Bum Steers
See MH Country

Bumble Bee Slim
See MH Blues

The B.U.M.S.
See MH R&B

John Bunch
See MH Jazz

William Bunch
See MH Blues

Alden Bunn
See MH Blues

Jane Bunnett
See MH Jazz, MH World

Sharon Burch
See MH World

John Burgess
See MH World

Sonny Burgess
See MH Country, MH Rock, MH Swing

Irving Burgie
See MH World

Kevin Burke
See MH Folk, MH World

Solomon Burke
See MH Blues, MH R&B

Dave Burland
See MH Folk

Paul Burlison
See MH Rock

Chester Arthur Burnett
See MH Blues

T-Bone Burnett
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Dorsey Burnette
See MH Country, MH Rock

Johnny Burnette
See MH Country, MH Rock, MH Swing

Burning Bridges
See MH World

Burning Flames
See MH World

Burning Spear
See MH World

Eddie Burns
See MH Blues

George Burns
See MH Country

Jimmy Burns
See MH Blues

Laura Burns
See MH Folk

The Burns Sisters
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

R.L. Burnside
See MH Blues

Harold Burrage
See MH Blues

Dave Burrell
See MH Jazz

Kenny Burrell
See MH Jazz

William S. Burroughs
See MH Rock

Tony Burrows
See MH Rock

Aron Burton
See MH Blues

Gary Burton
See MH Jazz

James Burton & Ralph Mooney
See MH Country

Bush
See MH Rock

Johnny Bush
See MH Country

Kate Bush
See MH Rock

Sam Bush
See MH Country, MH Folk

Bush Tetras
See MH Rock

David Buskin
See MH Folk

Jon Butcher Axis
See MH Rock

Sam Butera
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Bernard Butler
See MH Rock

Carl & Pearl Butler
See MH Country

George "Wild Child" Butler
See MH Blues

Jerry Butler
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Jonathan Butler
See MH Jazz

Paul Butterfield Blues Band
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH Rock

Paul Butterfield's Better Days
See MH Blues

Butthole Surfers
See MH Rock

Buttons and Bows
See MH Folk

Buzz Hungry
See MH Rock

Buzzcocks
See MH Rock

Jaki Byard
See MH Jazz

Don Byas
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Charlie Byrd
See MH Jazz

Donald Byrd
See MH Jazz

Henry Roy Byrd
See MH Blues

Tracy Byrd
See MH Country

The Byrds
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

David Byrne
See MH Rock, MH World

Don Byron
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

C+C Music Factory
See MH R&B

Cabaret Voltaire
See MH Rock

George Cables
See MH Jazz

Chris Cacavas & Junkyard Love
See MH Rock

Cachao
See MH Jazz, MH World

Cactus
See MH Rock

The Cactus Brothers
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Cadets
See MH R&B

The Cadillacs
See MH R&B

Shirley Caesar
See MH R&B

Café Tacuba
See MH World

John Cafferty
See MH Rock

Greg Cahill
See MH Folk

Sammy Cahn
See MH Lounge

Caifanes
See MH World

Chris Cain
See MH Blues

Uri Caine
See MH Jazz

Al Caiola
See MH Lounge

Cake
See MH Rock

Cake Like
See MH Rock

Joey Calderazzo
See MH Jazz

J.J. Cale
See MH Folk, MH Rock

John Cale
See MH Rock

Andrew Calhoun
See MH Folk

California
See MH Country, MH Folk

Randy California
See MH Rock

California Cajun Orchestra
See MH Folk, MH World

California Ramblers
See MH Swing

The Call
See MH Rock

Ann Hampton Callaway
See MH Lounge

Red Callender
See MH Jazz

Joe Callicott
See MH Blues

Calloway
See MH R&B

Cab Calloway
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Swing

Calypso Rose
See MH World

Camarón de la Isla
See MH World

Camel
See MH Rock

Cameo
See MH R&B

Hamilton Camp
See MH Folk

Shawn Camp
See MH Country

The Camp Creek Boys
See MH Folk

Camp Lo
See MH R&B

Ali Campbell
See MH Rock

Eddie C. Campbell
See MH Blues

Glen Campbell
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Lounge, MH Rock

John Campbell
See MH Blues, MH Jazz

Kate Campbell
See MH Country, MH Folk

Milton Campbell
See MH Blues

Rosamund Campbell
See MH Folk

Roy Campbell
See MH Jazz

Stacy Dean Campbell
See MH Country

Tevin Campbell
See MH R&B

Ian Campbell Folk Group
See MH World

Camper Van Beethoven
See MH Rock

Ray Campi
See MH Country, MH Swing

Candlebox
See MH Rock

Candyman
See MH R&B

Canned Heat
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Freddy Cannon
See MH Rock

Eddie Cantor
See MH Lounge

Emily & Al Cantrell
See MH Folk

Capercaillie
See MH Folk, MH World

Valerie Capers
See MH Jazz

Capone-N-Noreaga
See MH R&B

Frank Capp
See MH Jazz

Cappadonna
See MH Rock

The Captain & Tennille
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Captain Beefheart & His Magic Band
See MH Rock

Irene Cara
See MH R&B

Ana Caram
See MH Jazz

Caravan
See MH Rock

Evan Carawan
See MH Folk

Guy Carawan
See MH Folk

Hayward "Chuck" Carbo
See MH Blues

Carbon
See MH Rock

The Cardigans
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Cardinal
See MH Rock

Milton Cardona
See MH World

Mariah Carey
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Bob Carlin
See MH Country, MH Folk

Belinda Carlisle
See MH Rock

Bill Carlisle
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Carlisles
See MH Country

Larry Carlton
See MH Jazz

Hoagy Carmichael
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Judy Carmichael
See MH Jazz

Jean Carne
See MH R&B

Kim Carnes
See MH Rock

Carolina
See MH Country

Mary Chapin Carpenter
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

The Carpenters
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Carpetbaggers
See MH Country, MH Rock

James Carr
See MH Blues

Leroy Carr
See MH Blues

Sam Carr
See MH Blues

Vikki Carr
See MH Lounge

Wynona Carr
See MH Swing

Paul Carrack
See MH Rock

Joe "King" Carrasco
See MH Rock

Carreg Lafar
See MH World

Chubby Carrier
See MH Folk, MH World

Roy Carrier
See MH Folk, MH World

Bakida Carroll
See MH Jazz

Bruce Carroll
See MH Country

Jim Carroll
See MH Rock

Johnny Carroll
See MH Rock

Karen Carroll
See MH Blues

Liz Carroll
See MH Folk, MH World

The Cars
See MH Rock

Jeff Carson
See MH Country

Josephine Carson
See MH Lounge

Lori Carson
See MH Rock

Benny Carter
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Betty Carter
See MH Jazz

Bo Carter
See MH Blues

Carlene Carter
See MH Country

Clarence Carter
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Deana Carter
See MH Country

Goree Carter
See MH Blues

James Carter
See MH Jazz

Jason Carter
See MH Folk

John Carter
See MH Jazz

Maybelle Carter
See MH Folk

Regina Carter
See MH Jazz

Ron Carter
See MH Jazz

Sara Carter
See MH Folk

Wilf Carter
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Carter Family
See MH Country, MH Folk

Carter the Unstoppable Sex Machine
See MH Rock

SERIES INDEX

Eliza Carthy
See MH Folk, MH World

Martin Carthy
See MH Folk, MH World

Lionel Cartwright
See MH Country

John Carty
See MH World

Michael Carvin
See MH Jazz

Casa Loma Orchestra
See MH Swing

Ann and Phil Case
See MH Folk

Peter Case
See MH Rock

Karan Casey
See MH Folk, MH World

Mike Casey
See MH Folk

Johnny Cash
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Rosanne Cash
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Casper
See MH World

Mama Cass
See MH Lounge

David Cassidy
See MH Rock

Patrick Cassidy
See MH World

Shaun Cassidy
See MH Rock

Cast
See MH Rock

Leonard "Baby Doo" Caston
See MH Blues

Jimmy Castor
See MH R&B

Tommy Castro
See MH Blues

Cat Power
See MH Rock

The Catalinas
See MH R&B

Catatonia
See MH Rock

Cate Brothers
See MH Blues

Catherine Wheel
See MH Rock

The Caulfields
See MH Rock

Nick Cave & the Bad Seeds
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Laura Caviani
See MH Jazz

Dori Caymmi
See MH World

Paul Cebar
See MH Rock

Cella Dwellas
See MH R&B

Celly Cel
See MH R&B

Celtic Fiddle Festival
See MH World

Ceolbeg
See MH Folk, MH World

Ceoltoiri
See MH Folk, MH World

Cephas & Wiggins
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Al Cernik
See MH Lounge

Exene Cervenka
See MH Rock

Chad & Jeremy
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Eugene Chadbourne
See MH Rock

Chairmen of the Board
See MH R&B

Dr. Krishna Chakravarty
See MH World

Chalk FarM
See MH Rock

Serge Chaloff
See MH Jazz

Joe Chambers
See MH Jazz

Paul Chambers
See MH Jazz

The Chambers Brothers
See MH Folk, MH R&B, MH Rock

The Chameleons
See MH Rock

The Champs
See MH Rock

James Chance
See MH Rock

Gene Chandler
See MH R&B

Sheila Chandra
See MH World

Change
See MH R&B

Channel Live
See MH R&B

The Channels
See MH R&B

Carol Channing
See MH Lounge

The Chantays
See MH Rock

The Chantels
See MH R&B

Harry Chapin
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Thomas Chapin
See MH Jazz

Tom Chapin
See MH Folk

Beth Nielsen Chapman
See MH Rock

Gary Chapman
See MH Country

Marshall Chapman
See MH Country

Owen "Snake" Chapman
See MH Folk

Tracy Chapman
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Craig Chaquico
See MH Rock

Bill Charlap
See MH Jazz

The Charlatans
See MH Rock

The Charlatans UK
See MH Rock

Ray Charles
See MH Blues, MH Country, MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Rock

Rockie Charles
See MH Blues

Teddy Charles
See MH Jazz

The Charles River Valley Boys
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Ray Charles Singers
See MH Lounge

Charm Farm
See MH Rock

The Charms
See MH R&B

The Charts
See MH R&B

Allan Chase
See MH Jazz

Chateau Neuf Spelemannslag
See MH World

John Len "Peter" Chatman
See MH Blues

Armenter Chatmon
See MH Blues

Lonnie Chatmon
See MH Blues

Sam Chatmon
See MH Blues

Hari Prasad Chaurasia
See MH World

Chavez
See MH Rock

Boozoo Chavis
See MH Folk, MH World

Chayanne
See MH World

The Cheap Suit Serenaders
See MH Folk

Cheap Trick
See MH Rock

Doc Cheatham
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Jeannie & Jimmy Cheatham
See MH Blues, MH Jazz

Chubby Checker
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Cheepskates
See MH Rock

Chelsea Bridge
See MH Jazz

The Chemical Brothers
See MH Rock

Jie-Bing Chen
See MH World

Sisi Chen
See MH World

C.J. Chenier
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH World

Clifton Chenier
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH World

The Chenille Sisters
See MH Folk

Cher
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Cherish the Ladies
See MH Folk, MH World

Cherrelle
See MH R&B

Don Cherry
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Neneh Cherry
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Cherry Poppin' Daddies
See MH Lounge, MH Rock, MH Swing

Chesapeake
See MH Country, MH Folk

Kenny Chesney
See MH Country

Mark Chesnutt
See MH Country

Vic Chesnutt
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Charlie Chesterman
See MH Country

Cyrus Chestnut
See MH Jazz

The Chestnut Grove Quartet
See MH Folk

Chi-Ali
See MH R&B

The Chi-Lites
See MH R&B

Kathy Chiavola
See MH Country, MH Folk

Chic
See MH R&B

Chicago
See MH Rock

The Chicken Chokers
See MH Folk

Chicken Shack
See MH Blues

The Chieftains
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH World

The Chiffons
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Billy Childs
See MH Jazz

Toni Childs
See MH Rock, MH World

Chill Rob G
See MH R&B

Sonny Chillingworth
See MH Folk, MH World

The Chills
See MH Rock

Alex Chilton
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

China Crisis
See MH Rock

Chino XL
See MH R&B

The Chipmunks
See MH Country, MH Rock

Chirgilchin
See MH World

Stella Chiweshe
See MH World

Chixdiggit!
See MH Rock

Harry Choates
See MH Folk, MH World

The Chocolate Watch Band
See MH Rock

The Choir
See MH Rock

Chopper
See MH Rock

The Chordettes
See MH Rock

The Chords
See MH R&B

Ellen Christi
See MH Jazz

Charlie Christian
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Emma Christian
See MH World

Frank Christian
See MH Folk

Jodie Christian
See MH Jazz

Lou Christie
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Pete Christlieb
See MH Jazz

June Christy
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Lauren Christy
See MH Rock

Chubb Rock
See MH R&B

The Chuck Wagon Gang
See MH Country, MH Folk

Chumbawamba
See MH Rock

Chunky A
See MH R&B

The Church
See MH Rock

Cindy Church
See MH Country, MH Folk

Cibo Matto
See MH Rock

Ciccone Youth
See MH Rock

The Jim Cifelli New York Nonet
See MH Jazz

Cigar Store Indians
See MH Swing

Cinderella
See MH Rock

Alfred Cini
See MH Lounge

Cinnamon
See MH Rock

Rudy Cipolla
See MH Folk

Circle
See MH Jazz

The Circle Jerks
See MH Rock

Carolyn Cirimele
See MH Folk

Kaouwding Cissoko
See MH World

CIV
See MH Rock

The Clancy Brothers & Tommy Makem
See MH Folk, MH World

Clannad
See MH Folk, MH World

Eric Clapton
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH Rock

Buddy Clark
See MH Lounge

Dee Clark
See MH R&B

Dr. Mattie Moss Clark
See MH R&B

Gene Clark
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Guy Clark
See MH Country, MH Folk

Petula Clark
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Roy Clark
See MH Country

Sonny Clark
See MH Jazz

Terri Clark
See MH Country

W.C. Clark
See MH Blues

Doug Clark & the Hot Nuts
See MH Lounge

The Dave Clark Five
See MH Rock

The Clark Sisters
See MH R&B

Gilby Clarke
See MH Rock

Johnny Clarke
See MH World

Kenny Clarke
See MH Jazz

Stanley Clarke
See MH Jazz

William Clarke
See MH Blues

The Clarks
See MH Rock

The Clash
See MH Rock

Classics IV
See MH Rock

Claudia
See MH World

Clawgrass
See MH Folk

James Clay
See MH Jazz

Otis Clay
See MH Blues, MH R&B

Richard Clayderman
See MH Lounge

Philip Claypool
See MH Country

Buck Clayton
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Clayton-Hamilton Orchestra
See MH Jazz

The Clean
See MH Rock

Cleaners from Venus
See MH Rock

Eddy Clearwater
See MH Blues

The Cleftones
See MH R&B

Johnny Clegg & Savuka
See MH Rock, MH World

Albert Clemens
See MH Blues

Vassar Clements
See MH Country, MH Folk

Clarence Clemons
See MH Rock

Clever Jeff
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Jimmy Cliff
See MH R&B, MH Rock, MH World

Bill Clifton
See MH Country, MH Folk

Alex Cline
See MH Jazz

Charlie Cline
See MH Country

Nels Cline
See MH Jazz

Patsy Cline
See MH Country

George Clinton
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Rosemary Clooney
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Clouds of Joy
See MH Swing

The Clovers
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Club Nouveau
See MH R&B

Clusone 3
See MH Jazz

Clutch
See MH Rock

The Coasters
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Arnett Cobb
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Willie Cobbs
See MH Blues

Billy Cobham
See MH Jazz

Anita Cochran
See MH Country

Eddie Cochran
See MH Rock, MH Swing

Jackie Lee Cochran
See MH Rock

Bruce Cockburn
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Joe Cocker
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Cockeyed Ghost
See MH Rock

Cocoa Tea
See MH World

Cocteau Twins
See MH Rock

Phil Cody
See MH Rock

Robert Tree Cody
See MH World

David Allan Coe
See MH Country

Leonard Cohen
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Al Cohn
See MH Jazz

Marc Cohn
See MH Rock

Pat Coil
See MH Jazz

Coldcut
See MH Rock

Freddy Cole
See MH Jazz

Holly Cole
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Jude Cole
See MH Rock

Khani Cole
See MH Jazz

Lloyd Cole
See MH Rock

Nat "King" Cole
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Swing

Natalie Cole
See MH Lounge, MH R&B

Paula Cole
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Richie Cole
See MH Jazz

Cecilia Coleman
See MH Jazz

Cy Coleman
See MH Lounge

Deborah Coleman
See MH Blues

George Coleman
See MH Jazz

Jaz Coleman
See MH Rock

Michael Coleman
See MH Folk

Ornette Coleman
See MH Jazz

Steve Coleman
See MH Jazz

William "Bill" Coleman
See MH Jazz

Johnny Coles
See MH Jazz

Collective Soul
See MH Rock

Buddy Collette
See MH Jazz

Mark Collie
See MH Country

Gerald Collier
See MH Rock

Albert Collins
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Bootsy Collins
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Edwyn Collins
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Jay Collins
See MH Jazz

Judy Collins
See MH Folk, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Lui Collins
See MH Folk

Mitzie Collins
See MH Folk

Paul Collins
See MH Rock

Phil Collins
See MH Rock

Sam Collins
See MH Blues

Shirley Collins
See MH Folk, MH World

Tommy Collins
See MH Country

The Collins Kids
See MH Country, MH Swing

Christine Collister
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Willie Colon
See MH World

Colony
See MH Rock

Color Me Badd
See MH R&B

The Colourfield
See MH Rock

Jessi Colter
See MH Country

Anita Belle Colton
See MH Lounge

John Coltrane
See MH Jazz

Turiya Alice Coltrane
See MH Jazz

Russ Columbo
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Shawn Colvin
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Combustible Edison
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Come
See MH Rock

Amie Comeaux
See MH Country

Commander Cody & His Lost Planet Airmen
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock, MH Swing

Commissioned
See MH R&B

The Commodores
See MH R&B

Common
See MH R&B

Communards
See MH Rock

Perry Como
See MH Lounge

Con Funk Shun
See MH R&B

Concrete Blonde
See MH Rock

Ray Condo & His Ricochets
See MH Country, MH Swing

Eddie Condon
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Confederate Railroad
See MH Country

Congo Norvell
See MH Rock

The Congos
See MH World

Conjunto Alma Jarocha
See MH World

Conjunto Bernal
See MH World

Conjunto Céspedes
See MH World

John Conlee
See MH Country

Arthur Conley
See MH R&B

Earl Thomas Conley
See MH Country

Graham Connah
See MH Jazz

The Connells
See MH Rock

Chris Connelly
See MH Rock

Connemara
See MH Folk

Harry Connick Jr.
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Ray Conniff
See MH Lounge

Rita Connolly
See MH Folk

Chris Connor
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Joanna Connor
See MH Blues

Bill Connors
See MH Jazz

Norman Connors
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Stompin' Tom Connors
See MH Country, MH Folk

Patricia Conroy
See MH Country

Conscious Daughters
See MH R&B

Consolidated
See MH Rock

Continental Divide
See MH Country

The Continental Drifters
See MH Rock

The Contours
See MH R&B

Ry Cooder
See MH Blues, MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

Barbara Cook
See MH Lounge

Jesse Cook
See MH World

Junior Cook
See MH Jazz

Sam Cooke
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Cookies
See MH R&B

Spade Cooley
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Swing

Rita Coolidge
See MH Country

Coolio
See MH R&B

Andy Cooney
See MH World

Alice Cooper
See MH Rock

Bob Cooper
See MH Jazz

Dana Cooper
See MH Folk

Roger Cooper
See MH Country, MH Folk

Wilma Lee & Stoney Cooper
See MH Country, MH Folk

Cop Shoot Cop
See MH Rock

Cowboy Copas
See MH Country

Julian Cope
See MH Rock

Johnny Copeland
See MH Blues

Stewart Copeland
See MH Rock

Marc Copland
See MH Jazz

Jeff Copley
See MH Country

The Copper Family
See MH Folk

Cordelia's Dad
See MH Folk

Larry Cordle
See MH Country, MH Folk

Florencia Bisenta De Castilla Martinez Cordona
See MH Lounge

Chick Corea
See MH Jazz

J.P. Cormier
See MH World

Sheryl Cormier
See MH Folk, MH World

Don Cornell
See MH Lounge

Cornershop
See MH Rock, MH World

Rich Corpolongo
See MH Jazz

Corrosion of Conformity
See MH Rock

The Corrs
See MH Rock

Aaron Corthen
See MH Blues

Larry Coryell
See MH Jazz

Scott Cossu
See MH Folk

Gal Costa
See MH World

Jack Costanzo
See MH Lounge

Elvis Costello
See MH Country, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Elizabeth Cotten
See MH Folk

James Cotton
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Cotton Mather
See MH Rock

Neal Coty
See MH Rock

Mary Coughlan
See MH Rock

Phil Coulter
See MH World

Count Five
See MH Rock

Counting Crows
See MH Rock

The Country Gentlemen
See MH Country, MH Folk

Country Ham
See MH Folk

Country Joe & the Fish
See MH Folk, MH Rock

The Counts
See MH R&B

County Down
See MH Folk

The Coup
See MH R&B

Coupé Cloué
See MH World

Dave Cousins
See MH Rock

Don Covay
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Robert Covington
See MH Blues

Cowboy Junkies
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Cowboy Mouth
See MH Rock

Stanley Cowell
See MH Jazz

Cows
See MH Rock

The Cowsills
See MH Rock

Ida Cox
See MH Blues, MH Jazz

Peter Cox
See MH Rock

The Cox Family
See MH Country, MH Folk

Coyote Oldman
See MH World

Cracker
See MH Rock

Billy "Crash" Craddock
See MH Country

Steven Cragg
See MH World

Craig G
See MH R&B

Floyd Cramer
See MH Country, MH Lounge

The Cramps
See MH Rock

The Cranberries
See MH Rock

Cranes
See MH Rock

Craobh Rua
See MH World

Dan Crary
See MH Folk

Crasdant
See MH World

Crash Test Dummies
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Davell Crawford
See MH Blues

Hank Crawford
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Kevin Crawford
See MH Folk

Randy Crawford
See MH R&B

Robert Cray
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Connie Curtis "Pee Wee" Crayton
See MH Blues

Crazy Horse
See MH Rock

The Crazy World of Arthur Brown
See MH Rock

Cream
See MH Rock

The Creatures
See MH Rock

Creed
See MH Rock

Creedence Clearwater Revival
See MH Rock

Marshall Crenshaw
See MH Rock

Creole Jazz Band
See MH Swing

Crescent City Maulers
See MH Swing

Elvis Crespo
See MH World

The Crew Cuts
See MH Rock

The Crickets
See MH Rock

Marilyn Crispell
See MH Jazz

Sonny Criss
See MH Jazz

Critton Hollow String Band
See MH Folk

A.J. Croce
See MH Rock

Jim Croce
See MH Folk, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Carrie Crompton
See MH Folk

Andrew Cronshaw
See MH World

Bing Crosby
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Bob Crosby
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

David Crosby
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Rob Crosby
See MH Country

Crosby, Stills & Nash
See MH Folk, MH Rock

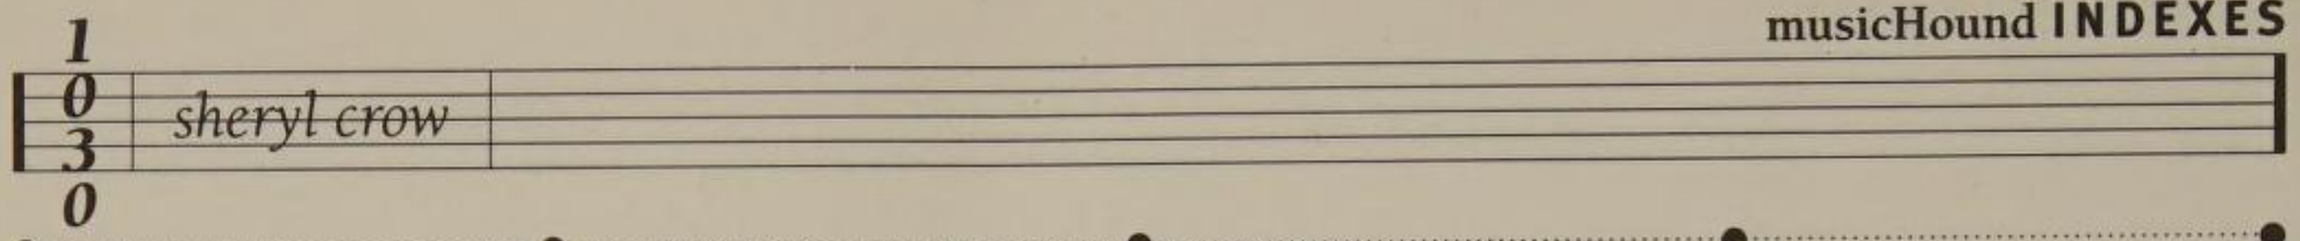
Christopher Cross
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

David Cross
See MH Rock

Mike Cross
See MH Folk

Connie Crothers
See MH Jazz

Andrae Crouch
See MH R&B



Sheryl Crow
See MH Rock

Crowded House
See MH Rock

J.D. Crowe
See MH Country, MH Folk

Josh Crowe and David McLaughlin
See MH Country, MH Folk

Rodney Crowell
See MH Country

Kacy Crowley
See MH Rock

The Crows
See MH R&B

Crucial Conflict
See MH R&B

Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup
See MH Blues

The Cruel Sea
See MH Rock

Julee Cruise
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

R. Crumb
See MH Folk

The Crusaders
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Celia Cruz
See MH Jazz, MH World

Cry of Love
See MH Rock

Cryan' Shames
See MH Rock

Bobbie Cryner
See MH Country

The Crystal Method
See MH Rock

The Crystals
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Rick Cua
See MH Rock

Joe Cuba
See MH World

Cuba L.A.
See MH World

¡Cubanismo!
See MH World

Ronnie Cuber
See MH Jazz

Warren Cuccurullo
See MH Rock

Xavier Cugat
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Brian Culbertson
See MH Jazz

Jim Cullum
See MH Jazz

The Cult
See MH Rock

Culture
See MH World

Culture Club
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Burton Cummings
See MH Rock

Bill Cunliffe
See MH Jazz

Johnny Cunningham
See MH Folk, MH World

Phil Cunningham
See MH Folk, MH World

The Cure
See MH Rock

Dick Curless
See MH Country

Clifford Curry
See MH R&B

Tim Curry
See MH Lounge

Ted Curson
See MH Jazz

Catie Curtis
See MH Folk

Mac Curtis
See MH Rock

Curve
See MH Rock

Cusan Tan
See MH Folk, MH World

Frankie Cutlass
See MH R&B

Cybotron
See MH Rock

Cypress Hill
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Andrew Cyrille
See MH Jazz

The Cyrkle
See MH Rock

Billy Ray Cyrus
See MH Country

Chuck D.
See MH Rock

D Generation
See MH Rock

Da Brat
See MH R&B

Da Bush Babees
See MH R&B

Da Lench Mob
See MH R&B

Da Youngsta's
See MH R&B

dada
See MH Rock

Dadawa
See MH World

Daft Punk
See MH Rock

Ustad Zia Mohiuddin Dagar
See MH World

Lisa Daggs
See MH Country

Paul Daigle
See MH Folk

Bruce Daigrepont
See MH Folk

I.K. Dairo
See MH World

George Dalaras
See MH World

Dick Dale
See MH Rock

Malcolm Dalglish
See MH Folk

Dalom Kids
See MH World

Lacy J. Dalton
See MH Country

Roger Daltrey
See MH Rock

Jackie Daly
See MH Folk, MH World

Maria D'Amato
See MH Blues

The Dambuilders
See MH Rock

Tadd Dameron
See MH Jazz

Damn Yankees
See MH Rock

The Damned
See MH Rock

Vic Damone
See MH Lounge

Dance Hall Crashers
See MH Rock

Dandy Warhols
See MH Rock

Dana Dane
See MH R&B

D'Angelo
See MH R&B

Davis Daniel
See MH Country

Eddie Daniels
See MH Jazz

Chris Daniels & the Kings
See MH Swing

Charlie Daniels Band
See MH Country, MH Rock

Harold Danko
See MH Jazz

Rick Danko
See MH Rock

Johnny Dankworth
See MH Lounge

Danny & the Juniors
See MH Rock

Danzig
See MH Rock

Vanessa Daou
See MH Rock

James Dapogny
See MH Jazz

Olu Dara
See MH World

Terence Trent D'Arby
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Darby and Tarlton
See MH Folk

Alan Dargin
See MH World

Bobby Darin
See MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Rock, MH Swing

Mason Daring
See MH Folk

Dark City Sisters
See MH World

Dark Sun Riders Featuring Brother J
See MH R&B

Erik Darling
See MH Folk

Helen Darling
See MH Country

The Darling Buds
See MH Rock

Krishna Das
See MH World

Paban Das Baul & Sam Mills
See MH World

Das EFX
See MH R&B

Dash Rip Rock
See MH Rock

Daude
See MH World

Dave & Deke Combo
See MH Country

Billy Davenport
See MH Blues

Charles "Cow Cow" Davenport
See MH Blues

Jeremy Davenport
See MH Jazz

Lester Davenport
See MH Blues

Kenny Davern
See MH Jazz

Shaun Davey
See MH Folk, MH World

Hal David
See MH Lounge

David + David
See MH Rock

Lowell Davidson
See MH Jazz

Debbie Davies
See MH Blues

Gail Davies
See MH Country

Richard Davies
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Alana Davis
See MH Rock

Anthony Davis
See MH Jazz

Billy Davis Jr.
See MH Lounge

CeDell Davis
See MH Blues

Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Guy Davis
See MH Blues, MH Folk

James "Thunderbird" Davis
See MH Blues

Jesse Davis
See MH Jazz

Jimmie Davis
See MH Country, MH Folk

Julie Davis
See MH Folk

Larry Davis
See MH Blues

Linda Davis
See MH Country

Mac Davis
See MH Country, MH Lounge

Maxwell Davis
See MH Blues

Maxwell Street Jimmy Davis
See MH Blues

Miles Davis
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

The Rev. Gary Davis
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Richard Davis
See MH Jazz

Sammy Davis Jr.
See MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Swing

Skeeter Davis
See MH Country

Spencer Davis
See MH Rock

Steve Davis
See MH Jazz

Thornetta Davis
See MH Rock

Tyrone Davis
See MH R&B

Walter Davis
See MH Blues

Walter Davis Jr.
See MH Jazz

Wild Bill Davison
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Davka
See MH World

Jimmy Dawkins
See MH Blues

Julian Dawson
See MH Folk

Ronnie Dawson
See MH Country, MH Rock, MH Swing

Curtis Day
See MH Country

Doris Day
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Morris Day
See MH R&B

Taylor Dayne
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Days of the New
See MH Rock

Jesse Dayton
See MH Country

The Dayton Family
See MH R&B

The Dazz Band
See MH R&B

The dB's
See MH Rock

DC Talk
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Chris de Burgh
See MH Rock

De Dannan
See MH Folk, MH World

Tony de la Rosa
See MH World

De La Soul
See MH R&B

Paco de Lucia
See MH World

Deacon Blue
See MH Rock

Dead Boys
See MH Rock

Dead Can Dance
See MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

Dead Kennedys
See MH Rock

The Dead Milkmen
See MH Rock

Kelley Deal 6000
See MH Rock

Billy Dean
See MH Country

Jimmy Dean
See MH Country

Paul Dean
See MH Rock

Déanta
See MH Folk, MH World

Blossom Dearie
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Death Metal
See MH Rock

DeBarge
See MH R&B

Deconstruction
See MH Rock

Dedication Orchestra
See MH Jazz

Joey Dee
See MH Rock

Lenny Dee
See MH Lounge

Dave Dee, Dozy, Beaky, Mick & Tich
See MH Rock

Deee-Lite
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Deele
See MH R&B

Barrett Deems
See MH Jazz

Deep Forest
See MH Rock, MH World

Deep Purple
See MH Rock

Def Jam
See MH R&B

Def Jef
See MH R&B

Def Leppard
See MH Rock

Joey DeFrancesco
See MH Jazz

Buddy DeFranco
See MH Jazz

deftones
See MH Rock

Defunkt
See MH R&B

Jack DeJohnette
See MH Jazz

Desmond Dekker
See MH R&B, MH World

Del Amitri
See MH Rock

Del Fuegos
See MH Rock

The Del Lords
See MH Rock

Dan Del Santo
See MH World

Del tha Funkee Homosapien
See MH R&B

Geno Delafose
See MH Folk, MH World

John Delafose
See MH Folk

John Delafose & the Eunice Playboys
See MH World

Delaney & Bonnie
See MH Rock

Peter Delano
See MH Jazz

Paul DeLay
See MH Blues

The Delevantes
See MH Country

The Delfonics
See MH R&B

Issac Delgado
See MH World

Delinquent Habits
See MH R&B

The Dells
See MH R&B

The Delmore Brothers
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Swing

Victor DeLorenzo
See MH Rock

Iris DeMent
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Barbara Dennerlein
See MH Jazz

Bernardo Dennis
See MH Blues

Cathy Dennis
See MH Rock

Wesley Dennis
See MH Country

Martin Denny
See MH Lounge

Sandy Denny
See MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

John Denver
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Depeche Mode
See MH Rock

The Derailers
See MH Country

Derek & the Dominos
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Joe Derrane
See MH Folk

Rick Derringer
See MH Rock

Dervish
See MH Folk, MH World

Descendents
See MH Rock

The Deseret String Band
See MH Folk

The Desert Rose Band
See MH Country, MH Rock

Jackie DeShannon
See MH Rock

Paul Desmond
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Des'ree
See MH R&B

Jimmy Destri
See MH Rock

Det Syng
See MH World

Marcella Detroit
See MH Rock

William DeVaughn
See MH R&B

Willy DeVille
See MH Rock

The Devlins
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Devo
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Howard DeVoto
See MH Rock

Dexy's Midnight Runners
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Dennis DeYoung
See MH Rock

D'Gary
See MH World

Dharma Bums
See MH Rock

Al Di Meola
See MH Jazz

Abdoulaye Diabaté
See MH World

Sékouba "Bambino" Diabaté
See MH World

Toumani Diabaté
See MH World

The Diablos
See MH R&B

Alpha Yaya Diallo
See MH World

Neil Diamond
See MH Country, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Diamond D
See MH R&B

Diamond Rio
See MH Country

The Diamonds
See MH Rock

Diblo Dibala
See MH World

Manu Dibango
See MH R&B, MH World

Dick & Dee Dee
See MH Rock

Hazel Dickens
See MH Country, MH Folk

Little Jimmy Dickens
See MH Country

Walt Dickerson
See MH Jazz

Whit Dickey
See MH Jazz

The Dickies
See MH Rock

Bruce Dickinson
See MH Rock

The Dictators
See MH Rock

Bo Diddley
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH R&B, MH Rock

Marlene Dietrich
See MH Lounge

Different Shoes
See MH Folk

Joe Diffie
See MH Country

Ani DiFranco
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Diga Rhythm Band
See MH World

Digable Planets
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Steve Diggle
See MH Rock

Digital Underground
See MH R&B

Henri Dikongué
See MH World

The Dillards
See MH Country, MH Folk

Dwight Diller
See MH Folk

John "Seven Foot Dilly" Dilleshaw
See MH Folk

Dimitri from Paris
See MH Lounge

Pat DiNizio
See MH Rock

Dino, Desi & Billy
See MH Rock

Dinosaur Jr.
See MH Rock

Ronnie James Dio
See MH Rock

Dion
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Celine Dion
See MH Rock

Vieux Diop
See MH World

Wasis Diop
See MH World

Joe Diorio
See MH Jazz

Dire Straits
See MH Rock

Dirty Dozen Brass Band
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Dirty Three
See MH Rock

disappear fear
See MH Folk

Dishwalla
See MH Rock

Disposable Heroes of Hiphoprisy
See MH R&B

Dissidenten
See MH World

Diva
See MH Jazz

Divine Comedy
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Divine Styler
See MH R&B

Divinyls
See MH Rock

The Dixie Chicks
See MH Country

The Dixie Cups
See MH Rock

The Dixie Dregs
See MH Rock

Bill Dixon
See MH Jazz

Don Dixon
See MH Rock

Floyd Dixon
See MH Blues

Willie Dixon
See MH Blues

Lefty Dizz
See MH Blues

DJ Honda
See MH R&B

D.J. Jazzy Jeff & the Fresh Prince
See MH R&B

DJ Kool
See MH R&B

DJ Krush
See MH Jazz, MH R&B, MH Rock

DJ Quik
See MH R&B

DJ Red Alert
See MH R&B

DJ Shadow
See MH R&B

DJ Towa Tei
See MH Rock

Djavan
See MH World

Djur Djura
See MH World

DK3
See MH Rock

Oscar D'Leon
See MH World

DM3
See MH Rock

DMZ
See MH Rock

DNA
See MH Rock

The D.O.C.
See MH R&B

Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band
See MH Rock

Dr. Didg
See MH World

Dr. Dre
See MH R&B

Doctor Dre and Ed Lover
See MH R&B

Doctor Ganga
See MH World

Dr. Hook & the Medicine Show
See MH Rock

Dr. John
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH R&B, MH Rock

Dr. Loco's Rockin' Jalapeño Band
See MH World

Dr. Nico
See MH World

Dr. Octagon
See MH Rock

Deryl Dodd
See MH Country

Baby Dodds
See MH Jazz

Johnny Dodds
See MH Jazz

Dodgy
See MH Rock

Anne Dodson
See MH Folk

John Doe
See MH Rock

Tha Dogg Pound
See MH R&B

Bill Doggett
See MH Jazz

Dogma
See MH Rock

The Dogmatics
See MH Rock

Dog's Eye View
See MH Rock

Dogstar
See MH Rock

John Doherty
See MH World

Dokken
See MH Rock

Felix Dolan
See MH World

Thomas Dolby
See MH Rock

Morris Dollison Jr.
See MH Blues

Eric Dolphy
See MH Jazz

Domino
See MH R&B

Fats Domino
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

The Dominoes
See MH R&B

Lou Donaldson
See MH Jazz

Dorothy Donegan
See MH Jazz

Lonnie Donegan
See MH Folk, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Donovan
See MH Folk, MH Rock

The Doobie Brothers
See MH Rock

The Doors
See MH Rock

Dordán
See MH Folk, MH World

Kenny Dorham
See MH Jazz

Bob Dorough
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Arnold George "Gerry" Dorsey
See MH Lounge

Jimmy Dorsey
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Lee Dorsey
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Thomas A. Dorsey
See MH Blues

Tommy Dorsey
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Dos
See MH Rock

Double Clutchin'
See MH Folk

The Double Decker String Band
See MH Folk

Double XX Posse
See MH R&B

David Doucet
See MH Folk

Michael Doucet
See MH Country, MH Folk

Dave Douglas
See MH Jazz

Jerry Douglas
See MH Country, MH Folk

K.C. Douglas
See MH Blues

Lizzie Douglas
See MH Blues

Mike Douglas
See MH Lounge

Wilson Douglas
See MH Folk

Douglas, Barenberg & Meyer
See MH Country

Dove Shack
See MH R&B

Connie Dover
See MH Folk, MH World

Down
See MH Rock

Will Downing
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Downtown Science
See MH R&B

Downy Mildew
See MH Rock

Arthur Doyle
See MH Jazz

Nick Drake
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Pete Drake
See MH Country

Dramarama
See MH Rock

The Dramatics
See MH R&B

Robin and Barry Dransfield
See MH Folk

Robert Drasnin
See MH Lounge

Mikey Dread
See MH World

Dread Zeppelin
See MH Rock

Dreadful Snakes
See MH Country

The Dream Academy
See MH Rock

The Dream Syndicate
See MH Rock

Dream Theater
See MH Rock

Dream Warriors
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Mark Dresser
See MH Jazz

Kenny Drew
See MH Jazz

Kenny Drew Jr.
See MH Jazz

The Drifters
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Paquito D'Rivera
See MH Jazz, MH World

Drivin' N' Cryin'
See MH Rock

Pete Droge
See MH Folk, MH Rock

D.R.S. (Dirty Rotten Scoundrels)
See MH R&B

Dru Down
See MH R&B

Dru Hill
See MH R&B

Drugstore
See MH Rock

The Drummers of Burundi
See MH World

Billy Drummond
See MH Jazz

Ray Drummond
See MH Jazz

Roy Drusky
See MH Country

Dry Branch Fire Squad
See MH Country, MH Folk

Chris Duarte
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Lucky Dube
See MH World

The Dubliners
See MH Folk, MH World

Dubstar
See MH Rock

George Ducas
See MH Country

Dave Dudley
See MH Country

Dan Duggan
See MH Folk

Duice
See MH R&B

Lorraine Duisit
See MH Folk

George Duke
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Ted Dunbar
See MH Jazz

Stuart Duncan
See MH Country, MH Folk

Slim Dunlap
See MH Rock

Holly Dunn
See MH Country

Francis Dunnery
See MH Rock

Champion Jack Dupree
See MH Blues

Stanley Dural Jr.
See MH Folk

Duran Duran
See MH Rock

Jimmy Durante
See MH Lounge

Ian Dury
See MH Rock

Garrett Dutton
See MH Blues

Dyke & the Blazers
See MH R&B

Omar Dykes
See MH Blues

Bob Dylan
See MH Blues, MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

The Dynatones
See MH World

E
See MH Rock

E-40 and the Click
See MH R&B

The E-Types
See MH Rock

Dominique Eade
See MH Jazz

The Eagles
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Fred Eaglesmith
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Fird Eaglin Jr.
See MH Blues

Snooks Eaglin
See MH Blues

Jim Eanes
See MH Country, MH Folk

Ronnie Earl
See MH Blues

Charles Earland
See MH Jazz

Steve Earle
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Earth, Wind & Fire
See MH R&B

John Easdale
See MH Rock

Bill Easley
See MH Jazz

Eastern Eagle Singers
See MH World

Madeline Eastman
See MH Jazz

Amos Easton
See MH Blues

Sheena Easton
See MH Lounge, MH R&B

Clint Eastwood
See MH Lounge

Easy Tunes
See MH Lounge

The Easybeats
See MH Rock

Eazy-E
See MH R&B

Cliff Eberhardt
See MH Folk

Bob Eberly
See MH Swing

Ebin-Rose
See MH Folk

Echo & the Bunnymen
See MH Rock

Echobelly
See MH Rock

Echoes of Incas
See MH World

Peter Ecklund
See MH Jazz

Billy Eckstine
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Ed O.G. and Da Bulldogs
See MH R&B

Eddie & the Hot Rods
See MH Rock

Eddie from Ohio
See MH Folk

Duane Eddy
See MH Country, MH Rock

Nelson Eddy
See MH Lounge

Judith Edelman
See MH Country, MH Folk

Eden's Bridge
See MH World

Harry "Sweets" Edison
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Dave Edmunds
See MH Country, MH Rock

Ed's Redeeming Qualities
See MH Folk

David "Honeyboy" Edwards
See MH Blues

Dennis Edwards
See MH R&B

Don Edwards
See MH Country, MH Folk

Jonathan Edwards
See MH Country, MH Folk

Jonathan & Darlene Edwards
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Marc Edwards
See MH Jazz

Stoney Edwards
See MH Country

Teddy Edwards
See MH Jazz

Tommy Edwards
See MH Lounge

Eek-a-Mouse
See MH World

eels
See MH Rock

Effigies
See MH Rock

Mark Egan
See MH Jazz

Seamus Egan
See MH Folk, MH World

The Egg
See MH Rock

Kat Eggleston
See MH Folk

The Egyptians
See MH Folk

Marty Ehrlich
See MH Jazz

8 1/2 Souvenirs
See MH Swing

Eight Bold Souls
See MH Jazz

808 State
See MH Rock

Eightball & MJG
See MH R&B

Einstürzende Neubauten
See MH Rock

Either/Orchestra
See MH Jazz

Mark Eitzel
See MH Rock

Jason Eklund
See MH Folk

El Chicano
See MH Rock

Hamza El Din
See MH World

The El Dorados
See MH R&B

El-Funoun
See MH World

El Vez
See MH Rock

Elastica
See MH Rock

Betty Elders
See MH Folk

Roy Eldridge
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Electrafixion
See MH Rock

Electric Bonsai Band
See MH Folk

Electric Hellfire Club
See MH Rock

Electric Light Orchestra
See MH Rock

The Electric Prunes
See MH Rock

Electro Funk
See MH R&B

Electronic
See MH Rock

Robert "Big Mojo" Elem
See MH Blues

Elements
See MH Jazz

The Elevator Drops
See MH Rock

Eleventh Dream Day
See MH Rock

Mark Elf
See MH Jazz

Danny Elfman
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Larry Elgart
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Les Elgart
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Eliane Elias
See MH Jazz, MH World

Kurt Elling
See MH Jazz

Duke Ellington
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Swing

Mercer Ellington
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Cass Elliot
See MH Lounge

Richard Elliot
See MH Jazz

Ramblin' Jack Elliott
See MH Country, MH Folk

Bill Elliott Swing Orchestra
See MH Swing

Alton Ellis
See MH World

Big Chief Ellis
See MH Blues

Dave Ellis
See MH Jazz

Don Ellis
See MH Jazz

Emmit Ellis Jr.
See MH Blues

Herb Ellis
See MH Jazz

Lisle Ellis
See MH Jazz

Tinsley Ellis
See MH Blues

Tony Ellis
See MH Folk

John Ellison
See MH Blues

Tony Elman
See MH Folk

The Elvis Brothers
See MH Rock

Joe Ely
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Elysian Fields
See MH Rock

Kahil El'Zabar
See MH Jazz

The Embarrassment
See MH Rock

Emergency Broadcast Network
See MH Rock

Billy "The Kid" Emerson
See MH Blues

Emerson, Lake & Palmer
See MH Rock

EMF
See MH Rock

Emilio
See MH Country, MH World

The Emotions
See MH R&B

En Vogue
See MH R&B

Enchantment
See MH R&B

Ty England
See MH Country

The English Beat
See MH Rock, MH World

Norma Delores Engstrom
See MH Lounge

Jeremy Enigk
See MH Rock

Enigma
See MH Rock

Lyman Enloe
See MH Folk

Séamus Ennis
See MH Folk, MH World

Brian Eno
See MH Lounge, MH Rock, MH World

Luis Enrique
See MH World

Bobby Enriquez
See MH Jazz

Ensemble Galilei
See MH Folk

John Entwistle
See MH Rock

Enuff Z'Nuff
See MH Rock

Enya
See MH Folk, MH World

Epic Soundtracks
See MH Rock

EPMD
See MH R&B

Epstein Brothers Band
See MH World

Erasure
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Wayne Erbsen
See MH Folk

Kudsi Erguner
See MH World

Eric B. & Rakim
See MH R&B

Roky Erickson
See MH Rock

Eric's Trip
See MH Rock

Peter Erskine
See MH Jazz

Booker Ervin
See MH Jazz

Ron Eschete
See MH Jazz

Alejandro Escovedo
See MH Country, MH Rock

Pete Escovedo
See MH Jazz

Ellery Eskelin
See MH Jazz

ESP Summer
See MH Rock

Tom Espinola and Lorraine Duisit
See MH Folk

Esquerita
See MH Swing

Juan Garcia Esquivel
See MH Lounge

David Essex
See MH Rock

Victor Essiet
See MH World

Gloria Estefan
See MH R&B, MH Rock, MH World

Maggie Estep
See MH Rock

Sleepy John Estes
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Etchingham Steam Band
See MH Folk

Melissa Etheridge
See MH Rock

The Ethiopians
See MH World

The Ethnic Heritage Ensemble
See MH Jazz

étoile de Dakar
See MH World

Ruth Etting
See MH Swing

E.U. (Experience Unlimited)
See MH R&B

Kevin Eubanks
See MH Jazz

Robin Eubanks
See MH Jazz

Eugenius
See MH Rock

Eunice Playboys
See MH World

Euro Boys
See MH Rock

Eurythmics
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Eva Trout
See MH Rock

Bill Evans
See MH Jazz

Gil Evans
See MH Jazz

Terry Evans
See MH Blues

Gerald Evans & Joe Mullins
See MH Country

Everclear
See MH Rock

Everlast
See MH Rock

The Everly Brothers
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Everything but the Girl
See MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Rock

Cesaria Evora
See MH World

Douglas Ewart
See MH Jazz

Skip Ewing
See MH Country

Exile
See MH Country

Extreme
See MH Rock

Fabian
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Bent Fabric
See MH Lounge, MH Lounge

The Fabulous Thunderbirds
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Face to Face
See MH Rock

The Faces
See MH Rock

Jon Faddis
See MH Jazz

Chaba Fadela
See MH World

Eleanora Fagan
See MH Blues, MH Lounge

Donald Fagen
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

John Fahey
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Barbara Fairchild
See MH Country

The Fairfield Four
See MH Folk

Fairground Attraction
See MH Rock

Fairport Convention
See MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

Adam Faith
See MH Rock

Percy Faith
See MH Lounge

Th' Faith Healers
See MH Rock

Faith No More
See MH Rock

Marianne Faithfull
See MH Folk, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Joseph Falcon & Cleoma Breaux Falcon
See MH Folk, MH World

The Falcons
See MH R&B

Jason Falkner
See MH Rock

The Fall
See MH Rock

Charles Fambrough
See MH Jazz

Georgie Fame
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Fania All-Stars
See MH World

Fantcha
See MH World

Farafina
See MH World

Donna Fargo
See MH Country

Richard and Mimi Fariña
See MH Folk

Mary Ann Farley
See MH Rock

Tal Farlow
See MH Jazz

Chris Farlowe
See MH Rock

The Farm
See MH Rock

Farm Dogs
See MH Rock

Art Farmer
See MH Jazz

Farmer Not So John
See MH Rock

Farmer's Daughters
See MH Folk

Allen Farnham
See MH Jazz

Joe Farrell
See MH Jazz

Dionne Farris
See MH Rock

Farside
See MH Rock

Majek Fashek
See MH World

Fastbacks
See MH Rock

Fastball
See MH Rock

Zusaan Kali Fasteau
See MH Jazz

Fat Boys
See MH R&B

Fat Joe Da Gangsta
See MH R&B

Fatala
See MH World

Fatback Band
See MH R&B

John Faulkner
See MH World

Faust
See MH Rock

Pierre Favre
See MH Jazz

Pura Fé
See MH World

Fear
See MH Rock

Stephen Fearing
See MH Folk

Charlie Feathers
See MH Country, MH Rock, MH Swing

John Fedchock
See MH Jazz

Danny Federici
See MH Rock

The Feelies
See MH Rock

Michael Feinstein
See MH Lounge

Jerome Felder
See MH Blues

Lee Feldman
See MH Rock

Jose Feliciano
See MH Lounge, MH World

Narvel Felts
See MH Country

Freddy Fender
See MH Country

Mike Fenton
See MH Folk

H-Bomb Ferguson
See MH Blues

Jay Ferguson
See MH Rock

Maynard Ferguson
See MH Jazz

Fernhill
See MH World

Ferrante & Teicher
See MH Lounge

Rachelle Ferrell
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Melissa Ferrick
See MH Rock

Glenn Ferris
See MH Jazz

Ferron
See MH Folk

Bryan Ferry
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Garrison Fewell
See MH Jazz

Fiddle Fever
See MH Folk

Arthur Fiedler
See MH Lounge

Dale Fielder
See MH Jazz

The Fifth Dimension
See MH Lounge, MH R&B

54.40
See MH Rock

Fig Dish
See MH Rock

The Figgs
See MH Rock

Figgy Duff
See MH Folk

Fight
See MH Rock

Fiji Mariners
See MH Rock

Filé
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH World

Film Orchestra of Shanghai
See MH World

Filter
See MH Rock

Fine Young Cannibals
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Sally Fingerett
See MH Folk

Fingerprintz
See MH Rock

Cathy Fink and Marcy Marxer
See MH Folk

Alec Finn
See MH Folk, MH World

Neil Finn
See MH Rock

Tim Finn
See MH Rock

Finn Brothers
See MH Rock

Firefall
See MH Country, MH Rock

fIREHOSE
See MH Rock

Firewater
See MH World

The Firm
See MH Rock

First Edition
See MH Lounge

Fish
See MH Rock

Fishbone
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Archie Fisher
See MH Folk, MH World

Eddie Fisher
See MH Lounge

Matthew Fisher
See MH Rock

Steve Fisher
See MH Folk

Ella Fitzgerald
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Swing

David Fiuczynski
See MH Jazz

The Five Americans
See MH Rock

Five Chinese Brothers
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Five Keys
See MH R&B

The "5" Royales
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Fixx
See MH Rock

Roberta Flack
See MH R&B

The Flamin' Groovies
See MH Rock

The Flaming Lips
See MH Rock

The Flamingos
See MH Rock

Tommy Flanagan
See MH Jazz

Fred Flange
See MH Lounge

Flash Cadillac
See MH Rock

The Flashcats
See MH Rock

The Flashcubes
See MH Rock

Flat Duo Jets
See MH Rock

The Flatlanders
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Flatlinerz
See MH R&B

Lester Flatt
See MH Country

Flatt & Scruggs
See MH Country, MH Folk

Flattop Tom & His Jump Cats
See MH Swing

Béla Fleck
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Jazz

Mick Fleetwood
See MH Rock

Fleetwood Mac
See MH Blues, MH Rock

The Fleetwoods
See MH Lounge

The Fleshtones
See MH Rock

Flim & the BB's
See MH Jazz

Matt Flinner
See MH Folk

Benton Flippen
See MH Country, MH Folk

Flipper
See MH Rock

A Flock of Seagulls
See MH Rock

Flop
See MH Rock

Myron Floren
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Bob Florence
See MH Jazz

Rosie Flores
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Swing

Flotsam & Jetsam
See MH Rock

Robin Flower
See MH Folk

Eddie Floyd
See MH Blues, MH R&B

The Fluid
See MH Rock

Flying Burrito Brothers
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Frank Emilio Flynn
See MH World

Focus
See MH Rock

Dan Fogelberg
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

John Fogerty
See MH Country, MH Rock

Foghat
See MH Rock

Ben Folds Five
See MH Rock

Red Foley
See MH Country, MH Folk

Sue Foley
See MH Blues, MH Folk

The Folk Implosion
See MH Rock

Folk Scat
See MH World

David Folks
See MH Folk

Fong Naam
See MH World

Frank Fontaine
See MH Lounge

Wayne Fontana & the Mindbenders
See MH Rock

Canray Fontenot
See MH Folk, MH World

Foo Fighters
See MH Rock

For Against
See MH Rock

For Squirrels
See MH Rock

Steve Forbert
See MH Folk, MH Rock

The Forbes Family
See MH Country, MH Folk

Force M.D.'s
See MH R&B

Aleck Ford
See MH Blues

Frankie Ford
See MH Rock

Lita Ford
See MH Rock

Mary Ford
See MH Country, MH Lounge

Ricky Ford
See MH Jazz

Robben Ford
See MH Blues

Tennessee Ernie Ford
See MH Country

Charles Ford Band
See MH Blues

Ford Blues Band
See MH Blues

Julia Fordham
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Foreigner
See MH Rock

The Foremen
See MH Folk

Forest for the Trees
See MH Rock

The Forester Sisters
See MH Country

Juan Carlos Formell
See MH World

Helen Forrest
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Jimmy Forrest
See MH Jazz

Joel Forrester
See MH Jazz

John Forster
See MH Folk

Robert Forster
See MH Rock

Fort Apache Band
See MH Jazz

Fortuna
See MH World

Jesse Fortune
See MH Blues

Sonny Fortune
See MH Jazz

The Fortunes
See MH Rock

Frank Foster
See MH Jazz

Gary Foster
See MH Jazz

Radney Foster
See MH Country

Foster & Lloyd
See MH Country, MH Rock

Fotheringay
See MH Folk, MH Rock

The Foundations
See MH Rock

Pete Fountain
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Fountains of Wayne
See MH Rock

James Founty
See MH Blues

Four Bitchin' Babes
See MH Folk

The Four Dukes
See MH Lounge

The Four Freshmen
See MH Lounge

The Four Lads
See MH Lounge

Four Men & a Dog
See MH World

The Four Preps
See MH Folk, MH Lounge

4 Runner
See MH Country

The Four Seasons
See MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Rock

The Four Tops
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Fourmost
See MH Rock

Fourplay
See MH Jazz

Kim Fox
See MH Rock

Samantha Fox
See MH Rock

The Fox Family
See MH Country

Jeff Foxworthy
See MH Country

Frå Senegal Til Setesdal
See MH World

Michael Fracasso
See MH Country, MH Folk

Amy Fradon and Leslie Ritter
See MH Folk

J.P. & Annadeene Fraley
See MH Country, MH Folk

Peter Frampton
See MH Rock

Carol Fran & Clarence Hollimon
See MH Blues

Connie Francis
See MH Country, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Franco
See MH World

Jackson C. Frank
See MH Folk

Keith Frank
See MH Folk

The Frank & Walters
See MH Rock

Bob Franke
See MH Folk

Frankie Goes to Hollywood
See MH Rock

Aretha Franklin
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Kirk Franklin & the Family
See MH R&B

Michael Franks
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Rebecca Coupe Franks
See MH Jazz

The Frantic Flattops
See MH Swing

Alasdair Fraser
See MH Folk, MH World

Gail Fratar
See MH Folk

Rob Fraynor
See MH Jazz

Calvin Frazier
See MH Blues

Frazier River
See MH Country

Freakwater
See MH Country, MH Rock

Stan Freberg
See MH Lounge

Freddie & the Dreamers
See MH Rock

Freddy Jones Band
See MH Rock

Henry St. Claire Fredericks
See MH Blues

Free
See MH Rock

Free Hot Lunch!
See MH Folk

Free Music Quintet
See MH Jazz

Nnenna Freelon
See MH Jazz

Alan Freeman
See MH Folk

Bud Freeman
See MH Jazz

Chico Freeman
See MH Jazz

George Freeman
See MH Jazz

Russ Freeman
See MH Jazz

Von Freeman
See MH Jazz

Freestyle Fellowship
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Freewill Savages
See MH Folk

The Freight Hoppers
See MH Folk

Gary Frenay
See MH Rock

John French
See MH Rock

French, Frith, Kaiser & Thompson
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Frente!
See MH Rock

Doug E. Fresh
See MH R&B

Gideon Freudmann
See MH Folk

Glenn Frey
See MH Folk

Freyda and Acoustic AttaTude
See MH Folk

Janie Fricke
See MH Country

Gavin Friday
See MH Rock

Don Friedman
See MH Jazz

Kinky Friedman
See MH Country, MH Folk

Friends of Dean Martinez
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Friends of Distinction
See MH R&B

Johnny Frigo
See MH Jazz

Robert Fripp
See MH Rock

Bill Frisell
See MH Jazz, MH Rock

David Frishberg
See MH Jazz

Lefty Frizzell
See MH Country

David Frizzell & Shelly West
See MH Country

The Front Porch String Band
See MH Country, MH Folk

Front Range
See MH Country, MH Folk

Front 242
See MH Rock

Jack Frost
See MH Rock

Frank Frost & Sam Carr
See MH Blues

John Frusciante
See MH Rock

Fu-Schnickens
See MH R&B

Fugazi
See MH Rock

Fugees
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Fugs
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Robbie Fulks
See MH Country

Full Force
See MH R&B

Full Time Men
See MH Rock

Blind Boy Fuller
See MH Blues

Curtis Fuller
See MH Jazz

Jesse Fuller
See MH Blues, MH Folk

The Bobby Fuller Four
See MH Rock

Lowell Fulson
See MH Blues

Fun Boy Three
See MH Rock

Fun Lovin' Criminals
See MH Rock

John Funchess
See MH Blues

Anson Funderburgh & the Rockets Featuring Sam Myers
See MH Blues

Funkadelic
See MH Rock

Funkdoobiest
See MH R&B

Funkmaster Flex
See MH R&B

Richie Furay/Richie Furay Band
See MH Rock

Tret Fure
See MH Folk

Tony Furtado
See MH Country, MH Folk

Billy Fury
See MH Rock

Future Sound of London
See MH Rock

Fuzzy Mountain String Band
See MH Folk

Kenny G
See MH Jazz

Warren G
See MH R&B

G. Love & Special Sauce
See MH R&B

Reeves Gabrels
See MH Rock

Charles Gabriel
See MH Jazz

Ethel Gabriel
See MH Lounge

Peter Gabriel
See MH Rock, MH World

Steve Gadd
See MH Jazz

Chris Gaffney
See MH Country

Slim Gaillard
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Jon Gailmor
See MH Folk

Earl Gaines
See MH Blues

Grady Gaines
See MH Blues

Rosie Gaines
See MH R&B

Serge Gainsbourg
See MH Lounge

Galaxie 500
See MH Rock

The Galaxy Trio
See MH Lounge

Eric Gale
See MH Jazz

Rory Gallagher
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Les & Gary Gallier
See MH Folk

Gallon Drunk
See MH Rock

Annie Gallup
See MH Folk

Hal Galper
See MH Jazz

James Galway
See MH Lounge, MH World

Frank Gambale
See MH Jazz

Beppe Gambetta
See MH Folk

Game Theory
See MH Rock

Gamelan Son of Lion
See MH World

Ganelin Trio
See MH Jazz

Gang of Four
See MH Rock

Gang Starr
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Gordon Gano
See MH Rock

Cecil Gant
See MH Blues, MH Swing

Gap Band
See MH R&B

Garbage
See MH Rock

Jan Garbarek
See MH Jazz

Garcia Brothers
See MH World

Carlos Gardel
See MH World

Art Garfunkel
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Greg Garing
See MH Rock

Hank Garland
See MH Country

Judy Garland
See MH Lounge

Red Garland
See MH Jazz

Garmarna
See MH World

Erroll Garner
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Larry Garner
See MH Blues

Kenny Garrett
See MH Jazz

Nick Garvey
See MH Rock

John Gary
See MH Lounge

George Garzone
See MH Jazz

Giorgio Gaslini
See MH Jazz

Djivan Gasparyan
See MH World

Edith Giovanna Gassion
See MH Lounge

Marvin Gaster
See MH Country, MH Folk

Gastr del Sol
See MH Rock

David Gates
See MH Country, MH Rock

Gateway
See MH Jazz

The Gathering Field
See MH Rock

Larry Gatlin & the Gatlin Brothers
See MH Country

Keith Gattis
See MH Country

Danny Gatton
See MH Rock

Dick Gaughan
See MH Folk, MH World

Frankie Gavin
See MH Folk, MH World

Marvin Gaye
See MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Rock

Charles Gayle
See MH Jazz

Crystal Gayle
See MH Country

Gloria Gaynor
See MH R&B

Gazoline
See MH World

Gear Daddies
See MH Rock

George Gee & His Make-Believe Ballroom Orchestra
See MH Swing

J. Geils Band
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

The Ray Gelato Giants
See MH Swing

Howe Gelb
See MH Rock

Bob Geldof
See MH Rock

Gene
See MH Rock

General Humbert
See MH Folk

General Public
See MH Rock

Generation X
See MH Rock

Genesis
See MH Rock

Genius/GZA
See MH R&B

Gentle Giant
See MH Rock

The Gentle People
See MH Lounge

Bobbie Gentry
See MH Country

Frank George
See MH Folk

Georgia Satellites
See MH Rock

Christopher Geppert
See MH Lounge

Geraldine Fibbers
See MH Rock

Gerardo
See MH R&B

Paul Geremia
See MH Folk

Lisa Germano
See MH Rock

Mark Germino
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Germs
See MH Rock

Alice Gerrard
See MH Country, MH Folk

Lisa Gerrard
See MH Rock

Gerry & the Pacemakers
See MH Rock

George & Ira Gershwin
See MH Lounge

Bruce Gertz
See MH Jazz

Getaway Cruiser
See MH Rock

Geto Boys
See MH R&B

Stan Getz
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Ghazal
See MH World

Bikram Ghosh
See MH World

Ghost Face Killa
See MH R&B

Giant Sand
See MH Rock

Gerry Gibbs
See MH Jazz

Terri Gibbs
See MH Country

Terry Gibbs
See MH Jazz

Banu Gibson
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Bob Gibson
See MH Folk

Clifford Gibson
See MH Blues

Debbie Gibson
See MH Rock

Don Gibson
See MH Country

Harry "The Hipster" Gibson
See MH Swing

Lacy Gibson
See MH Blues

Gibson Brothers Band
See MH Folk

The Gibson/Miller Band
See MH Country

Kathie Lee Gifford
See MH Lounge

Gigolo Aunts
See MH Rock

Gilberto Gil
See MH World

Ronnie Gilbert
See MH Folk

Vance Gilbert
See MH Folk

Astrud Gilberto
See MH Lounge, MH World

João Gilberto
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH World

Johnny Gill
See MH R&B

Vince Gill
See MH Country

Dizzy Gillespie
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Steve Gillette & Cindy Mangsen
See MH Folk

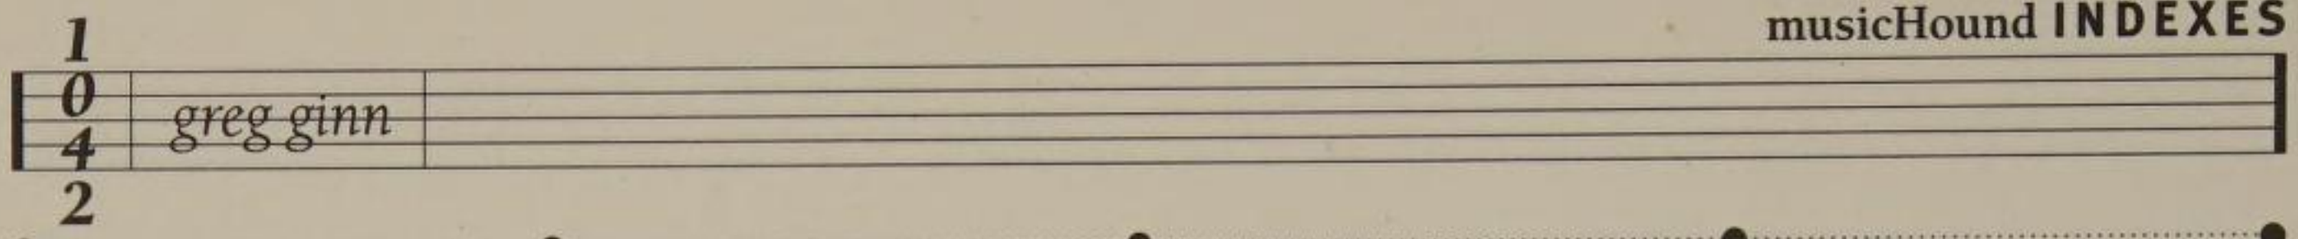
Mickey Gilley
See MH Country

Bill "Jazz" Gillum
See MH Blues

Jimmie Dale Gilmore
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

David Gilmour
See MH Rock

Gin Blossoms
See MH Rock



Greg Ginn
See MH Rock

The Gipsy Kings
See MH World

Girls Against Boys
See MH Rock

Girls of Angeli
See MH World

Regis Gisavo
See MH World

Egberto Gismonti
See MH Jazz, MH World

Jimmy Giuffre
See MH Jazz

Gjallarhorn
See MH World

Paddy Glackin
See MH World

Gladhands
See MH Rock

Gladiators
See MH World

Glass Eye
See MH Rock

Jackie Gleason
See MH Lounge

Gary Glitter
See MH Rock

Glitterbox
See MH Rock

Globe Unity Orchestra
See MH Jazz

The Glove
See MH Rock

Corey Glover
See MH Rock

The Go-Betweens
See MH Rock

The Go-Go's
See MH Rock

Go West
See MH Rock

Goats
See MH R&B

God Street Wine
See MH Rock

The Godfathers
See MH Rock

The Goins Brothers
See MH Country

Julie Gold
See MH Folk

Barry Goldberg
See MH Blues

Ben Goldberg
See MH Jazz, MH World

Samuel Goldberg
See MH Lounge

Golden Earring
See MH Rock

Golden Gate Orchestra
See MH Swing

Golden Gate Quartet
See MH Folk

The Golden Palominos
See MH Rock

Golden Ring
See MH Folk

Golden Smog
See MH Country, MH Rock

Goldfinger
See MH Rock

Goldie
See MH Rock

Larry Goldings
See MH Jazz

Vinny Golia
See MH Jazz

Mac Gollehon
See MH Jazz

Benny Golson
See MH Jazz

Eddie Gomez
See MH Jazz

Paul Gonsalves
See MH Jazz

Gonzaguinha
See MH World

Celina Gonzaléz
See MH World

Rubén González
See MH World

Jerry Gonzalez & the Fort Apache Band
See MH Jazz, MH World

Goo Goo Dolls
See MH Rock

Good Ol' Persons
See MH Country, MH Folk

Goodie Mob
See MH R&B

Cuba Gooding
See MH R&B

Benny Goodman
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Steve Goodman
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Mick Goodrick
See MH Jazz

Ron Goodwin
See MH Lounge

Bobby Gordon
See MH Jazz

Dexter Gordon
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Robert Gordon
See MH Country, MH Rock, MH Swing

Berry Gordy Jr.
See MH R&B

Lesley Gore
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Martin Gore
See MH Rock

John Gorka
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Gorky's Zygotic Mynci
See MH Rock

Skip Gorman
See MH Country, MH Folk

Eydie Gorme
See MH Lounge

Steve Gorn
See MH World

Vern Gosdin
See MH Country, MH Folk

Danny Gottlieb
See MH Jazz

Susan Gottlieb
See MH Folk

Barry Goudreau
See MH Rock

Morton Gould
See MH Lounge

Robert Goulet
See MH Lounge

Gov't Mule
See MH Rock

Lawrence Gowan
See MH Rock

Dusko Goykovich
See MH Jazz

The GP's
See MH Folk

Davey Graham
See MH Folk

Graham Central Station
See MH R&B

Lou Gramm
See MH Rock

Grand Daddy I.U.
See MH R&B

Grand Funk Railroad
See MH Rock

Grandmaster Flash & the Furious Five
See MH R&B

Grandpa Jones
See MH Country

Jerry Granelli
See MH Jazz

Amy Grant
See MH Rock

Bill Grant
See MH Folk

Darrell Grant
See MH Jazz

Eddy Grant
See MH World

Grant Lee Buffalo
See MH Rock

Grant Street
See MH Folk

The Grapes of Wrath
See MH Rock

Stephane Grappelli
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

The Grass Is Greener
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Grass Roots
See MH Rock

Lou Grassi
See MH Jazz

The Grassy Knoll
See MH Jazz, MH Rock

The Grateful Dead
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Blind Roosevelt Graves
See MH Blues

Josh Graves
See MH Folk

Milford Graves
See MH Jazz

Gravity Kills
See MH Rock

David Gray
See MH Rock

Dobie Gray
See MH R&B

Henry Gray
See MH Blues

Wardell Gray
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Glen Gray & the Casa Loma Orchestra
See MH Swing

Grayhorse Singers
See MH World

Great Big Sea
See MH World

Great Plains
See MH Country

Great White
See MH Rock

Buddy Greco
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Al Green
See MH Blues, MH R&B

Benny Green
See MH Jazz

Cal Green
See MH Blues

Cornelius Green
See MH Blues

Grant Green
See MH Jazz

Peter Green
See MH Blues

Green Day
See MH Rock

The Green Fields of America
See MH World

Green Jellÿ
See MH Rock

Green on Red
See MH Rock

Green River
See MH Rock

Greenberry Woods
See MH Rock

The Greenbriar Boys
See MH Country, MH Folk

Bruce Greene
See MH Folk

Dodo Greene
See MH Jazz

Jack Greene
See MH Country

Richard Greene
See MH Country, MH Folk

Phillip Greenlief
See MH Jazz

Greg Greenway
See MH Folk

Lee Greenwood
See MH Country

Ricky Lynn Gregg
See MH Country

Clinton Gregory
See MH Country

Clive Gregson & Christine Collister
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Adie Grey
See MH Folk

Al Grey
See MH Jazz

Sara Grey
See MH Folk

Sylvan Grey
See MH World

Grianan
See MH Folk

David Grier
See MH Country, MH Folk

James Griffin
See MH Rock

Johnny Griffin
See MH Jazz

Patty Griffin
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Grace Griffith
See MH Folk

Nanci Griffith
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Marcia Griffiths
See MH World

The Grifters
See MH Rock

John Grimaldi
See MH Blues

Henry Grimes
See MH Jazz

Lloyd "Tiny" Grimes
See MH Jazz

David Grisman
See MH Country, MH Folk

Don Grolnick
See MH Jazz

Groove Collective
See MH Jazz

Groove Theory
See MH R&B

Stefan Grossman
See MH Folk

Steve Grossman
See MH Jazz

Marty Grosz
See MH Jazz

Group Home
See MH R&B

Groupa
See MH World

Grubbs Brothers
See MH Jazz

Solomon Grundy
See MH Rock

Joe Grushecky
See MH Rock

Dave Grusin
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Gigi Gryce
See MH Jazz

Gu-Achi Fiddlers
See MH World

Guadalcanal Diary
See MH Rock

Vince Guaraldi
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Juan Luis Guerra
See MH World

The Guess Who
See MH Rock

Guided by Voices
See MH Rock

Guild of Temporal Adventures
See MH Rock

Ida Guillory
See MH Folk

Kristi Guillory
See MH Folk

Guitar Gabriel
See MH Blues

Guitar Shorty
See MH Blues

Guitar Slim
See MH Blues

Guitar Slim Jr.
See MH Blues

Frances Gumm
See MH Lounge

Gun Club
See MH Rock

Russell Gunn
See MH Jazz

Jo Jo Gunne
See MH Rock

Guns N' Roses
See MH Rock

The Guo Brothers & Shung Tian
See MH World

Tom Guralnick
See MH Jazz

Trilok Gurtu
See MH World

Adam Gussow
See MH Blues

Les Gustafson-Zook
See MH Folk

Arlo Guthrie
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Jack Guthrie
See MH Country, MH Folk

Woody Guthrie
See MH Country, MH Folk

Guy
See MH R&B

Buddy Guy
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH R&B

Phil Guy
See MH Blues

GWAR
See MH Rock

The Gyuto Monks
See MH World

Hackberry Ramblers
See MH Folk

Charlie Haden
See MH Jazz

Idjah Hadijah
See MH World

Sammy Hagar
See MH Rock

Nina Hagen
See MH Rock

Marty Haggard
See MH Country

Merle Haggard
See MH Country, MH Swing

Bob Haggart
See MH Jazz

Richard Hagopian
See MH World

Al Haig
See MH Jazz

Haircut 100
See MH Rock

Hassan Hakmoun
See MH World

Bill Haley
See MH Country, MH R&B, MH Rock, MH Swing

Ed Haley
See MH Folk

Jim Hall
See MH Jazz

Jimmy Hall
See MH Blues

Kristen Hall
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Terry Hall
See MH Rock

Tom T. Hall
See MH Country, MH Folk

Hall & Oates
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Lin Halliday
See MH Jazz

Pete Ham
See MH Rock

Hamell on Trial
See MH Rock

Chico Hamilton
See MH Jazz

Jeff Hamilton
See MH Jazz

Scott Hamilton
See MH Jazz

Hamilton Pool
See MH Folk

Hammer
See MH R&B

Oscar Hammerstein II
See MH Lounge

John Hammond Jr.
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Lorraine (Lee) Hammond
See MH Folk

Gunter Hampel
See MH Jazz

Thomas Hampson
See MH Folk

Col. Bruce Hampton
See MH Rock

Lionel Hampton
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Slide Hampton
See MH Jazz

Hampton Grease Band
See MH Rock

Butch Hancock
See MH Country, MH Folk

Herbie Hancock
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B

Wayne Hancock
See MH Country

Handsome
See MH Rock

John Handy
See MH Jazz

W.C. Handy
See MH Jazz

The Hang Ups
See MH Rock

The Hangdogs
See MH Rock

Sir Roland Hanna
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Robbie Hannan
See MH World

Hanoi Rocks
See MH Rock

Kip Hanrahan
See MH Jazz

Beck Hansen
See MH Blues

Hanson
See MH Rock

Happy Mondays
See MH Rock

Fareed Haque
See MH Jazz

Paul Hardcastle
See MH Jazz

Wilbur Harden
See MH Jazz

Tre Hardiman
See MH Blues

Tim Hardin
See MH Folk, MH Rock

John Wesley Harding
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Françoise Hardy
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Jack Hardy
See MH Folk

Roy Hargrove
See MH Jazz

Joy Harjo & Poetic Justice
See MH World

Bill Harley
See MH Folk

Larry Harlow
See MH World

James Harman
See MH Blues

Harmonica Fats & Bernie Pearl
See MH Blues

Harmonica Slim
See MH Blues

Everette Harp
See MH Jazz

Ben Harper
See MH Folk, MH R&B, MH Rock

Billy Harper
See MH Jazz

Harpers Bizarre
See MH Rock

Slim Harpo
See MH Blues

Bill Harrell
See MH Folk

Tom Harrell
See MH Jazz

Edward Harrington
See MH Blues

Dick Harrington & Victoria Young
See MH Folk

Allan Harris
See MH Jazz

Barry Harris
See MH Jazz

Beaver Harris
See MH Jazz

Bill Harris
See MH Jazz

Corey Harris
See MH Blues

Craig Harris
See MH Jazz

Eddie Harris
See MH Jazz

Emmylou Harris
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Gene Harris
See MH Jazz

Joey Harris
See MH Rock

Major Harris
See MH R&B

Phil Harris
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Richard Harris
See MH Lounge

Shakey Jake Harris
See MH Blues

William Harris
See MH Blues

Wynonie Harris
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Swing

George Harrison
See MH Rock, MH World

Wilbert Harrison
See MH Blues

Deborah Harry
See MH Rock

Alvin Youngblood Hart
See MH Blues

Antonio Hart
See MH Jazz

Billy Hart
See MH Jazz

Freddie Hart
See MH Country

Grant Hart
See MH Rock

Lorenz Hart
See MH Lounge

Mickey Hart
See MH World

John Hartford
See MH Country, MH Folk

Johnny Hartman
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Mick Harvey
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

PJ Harvey
See MH Rock

Harvey Danger
See MH Rock

Tony Hatch & Jackie Trent
See MH Lounge

Hater
See MH Rock

Juliana Hatfield
See MH Rock

Donny Hathaway
See MH R&B

Lalah Hathaway
See MH R&B

Havana 3 A.M.
See MH Rock

Richie Havens
See MH Folk, MH R&B, MH Rock

Hampton Hawes
See MH Jazz

Hawk Project
See MH World

Ginny Hawker & Kay Justice
See MH Folk

Buddy Boy Hawkins
See MH Blues

Coleman Hawkins
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Dale Hawkins
See MH Rock

Erskine Hawkins
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Hawkshaw Hawkins
See MH Country

Jamesetta Hawkins
See MH Blues

Ronnie Hawkins
See MH Country, MH Rock

Screamin' Jay Hawkins
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Sophie B. Hawkins
See MH Rock

Ted Hawkins
See MH Blues, MH Country, MH Folk, MH R&B, MH Rock

The Edwin Hawkins Singers
See MH R&B

Hayden
See MH Rock

Lili Haydn
See MH Rock

Isaac Hayes
See MH Lounge, MH R&B

Louis Hayes
See MH Jazz

Martin Hayes
See MH Folk

Wade Hayes
See MH Country

Dick Haymes
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Graham Haynes
See MH Jazz

Roy Haynes
See MH Jazz

Justin Hayward & John Lodge
See MH Rock

Ofra Haza
See MH World

Hazard
See MH Rock

Hazel
See MH Rock

Hazel & Alice
See MH Country, MH Folk

Roy Head
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Topper Headon
See MH Rock

The Jeff Healey Band
See MH Rock

The Health & Happiness Show
See MH Country, MH Rock

Bill & Bonnie Hearne
See MH Folk

Heart
See MH Rock

The Heartbeats
See MH R&B

Johnny Heartsman
See MH Blues

The Reverend Horton Heat
See MH Rock

Jimmy Heath
See MH Jazz

Percy Heath
See MH Jazz

Tootie Heath
See MH Jazz

Heatmiser
See MH Rock

Heatwave
See MH R&B

Heaven 17
See MH Rock

Heavy D. & the Boyz
See MH R&B

Bobby Hebb
See MH R&B

Hedgehog Pie
See MH Folk

Michael Hedges
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Hedningarna
See MH World

The Hee Haw Gospel Quartet
See MH Country, MH Folk

Neal Hefti
See MH Lounge

Horace Heidt
See MH Swing

Gail Heil
See MH Folk

Mark Helias
See MH Jazz

Helicon
See MH Folk

Helium
See MH Rock

Richard Hell & the Voidoids
See MH Rock

Hellbenders
See MH Folk

Jonas Hellborg
See MH Jazz

The Hellecasters
See MH Country, MH Rock

Neal Hellman
See MH Folk

Levon Helm
See MH Rock

Helmet
See MH Rock

Heltah Skeltah
See MH R&B

Jessie Mae Hemphill
See MH Blues

Julius Hemphill
See MH Jazz

Bill Henderson
See MH Jazz

Eddie Henderson
See MH Jazz

Fletcher Henderson
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Horace Henderson
See MH Swing

Joe Henderson
See MH Jazz

John William Henderson
See MH Blues

Michael Henderson
See MH R&B

Mike Henderson
See MH Blues, MH Country, MH Rock

Wayne Henderson
See MH Folk

Jimi Hendrix
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Nona Hendryx
See MH R&B

Mel Henke
See MH Lounge

Don Henley
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Margo Hennebach
See MH Folk

Clarence "Frogman" Henry
See MH Blues

Ernie Henry
See MH Jazz

Joe Henry
See MH Country, MH Rock

Priscilla Herdman
See MH Folk

Herm
See MH R&B

Woody Herman
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Herman's Hermits
See MH Rock

Ty Herndon
See MH Country

Fred Hersch
See MH Jazz

Kristin Hersh
See MH Rock

Monika Herzig
See MH Jazz

Hesperus
See MH Folk

Carolyn Hester
See MH Folk

Howard Hewett
See MH R&B

Richard X. Heyman
See MH Rock

Nick Heyward
See MH Rock

Hi-Five
See MH R&B

The Hi-Lo's
See MH Lounge

Hi Records
See MH R&B

John Hiatt
See MH Rock

Al Hibbler
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Sara Hickman
See MH Folk

Dan Hicks
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

John Hicks
See MH Jazz

Otis Hicks
See MH Blues

Robert Hicks
See MH Blues

Billy Higgins
See MH Jazz

Joe Higgs
See MH World

High Llamas
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

High Noon
See MH Country

Highway 101
See MH Country

The Highwaymen
See MH Country, MH Folk

Highwoods String Band
See MH Country, MH Folk

Andrew Hill
See MH Jazz

Buck Hill
See MH Jazz

Faith Hill
See MH Country

Jessie Hill
See MH R&B

Kim Hill
See MH Country

King Solomon Hill
See MH Blues

Lester Hill
See MH Blues

Michael Hill
See MH Blues

Noel Hill
See MH Folk

Z.Z. Hill
See MH Blues, MH R&B

Harriet Hilliard
See MH Swing

Chris Hillman
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

The Hillmen
See MH Country

Anne Hills
See MH Folk

Peter Himmelman
See MH Rock

Earl "Fatha" Hines
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Tish Hinojosa
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH World

Milt Hinton
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Hipster Daddy-O & the Handgrenades
See MH Swing

Hiroshima
See MH Jazz

Al Hirt
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

His Name Is Alive
See MH Rock

Robyn Hitchcock
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Don Ho
See MH Lounge

Fred Ho
See MH Jazz, MH World

Hoarse
See MH Rock

Becky Hobbs
See MH Country

Hobo Jim
See MH Folk

Art Hodes
See MH Jazz

Johnny Hodges
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Roger Hodgson
See MH Rock

Hoelderlin Express
See MH World

Kristian Hoffman
See MH Rock

Holly Hofmann
See MH Jazz

Silas Hogan
See MH Blues

Robin Holcomb
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Jazz

Roscoe Holcomb
See MH Folk

Hole
See MH Rock

Dave Hole
See MH Blues

Billie Holiday
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Swing

Dave Holland
See MH Jazz

Greg Holland
See MH Country

Jerry Holland
See MH Folk

Holland, Dozier & Holland
See MH R&B

Major Holley
See MH Jazz

Jennifer Holliday
See MH R&B

The Hollies
See MH Rock

Clarence Hollimon
See MH Blues

Tony Hollins
See MH Blues

Hollow Rock String Band
See MH Folk

Ken Holloway
See MH Country

Red Holloway
See MH Jazz

Ron Holloway
See MH Jazz

Buddy Holly
See MH Country, MH Rock

Holly & the Italians
See MH Rock

Christopher Hollyday
See MH Jazz

The Hollyridge Strings
See MH Lounge

Bill Holman
See MH Jazz

Joe Holmes
See MH Blues

Richard "Groove" Holmes
See MH Jazz

Rupert Holmes
See MH Lounge

The Holmes Brothers
See MH Blues

Peter Holsapple
See MH Rock

David Holt
See MH Folk

Morris Holt
See MH Blues

Holy Barbarians
See MH Rock

The Holy Modal Rounders
See MH Country, MH Folk

Adam Holzman
See MH Jazz

Home Service
See MH World

Homer & Jethro
See MH Country, MH Folk

Homesick James
See MH Blues

The Honeycombs
See MH Rock

The Honeydogs
See MH Country, MH Rock

The Hoodoo Gurus
See MH Rock

Earl Hooker
See MH Blues

John Lee Hooker
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH R&B, MH Rock

Sol Hoopii
See MH World

The Hoosier Hot Shots
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Hooters
See MH Rock

Hootie & the Blowfish
See MH Rock

Jamie Hoover
See MH Rock

Hooverphonic
See MH Rock

St. Elmo Hope
See MH Jazz

Hadda Hopgood
See MH Blues

Mary Hopkin
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Claude Hopkins
See MH Swing

Lightnin' Hopkins
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Sam Hopkins
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Telma Louise Hopkins
See MH Lounge

Horch
See MH World

Glenn Horiuchi
See MH Jazz

Shirley Horn
See MH Jazz

Lois Hornbostel
See MH Folk

Lena Horne
See MH Lounge

Bruce Hornsby
See MH Rock

Ted Horowitz
See MH Blues

The Horseflies
See MH Folk

Horslips
See MH World

Big Walter Horton
See MH Blues

Johnny Horton
See MH Country

Ronnie Horvath
See MH Blues

Bill Horvitz
See MH Jazz

Wayne Horvitz
See MH Jazz

Hot Chocolate
See MH R&B

Hot Club of Cowtown
See MH Swing

Hot Rize
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Swing

Hot Rod Lincoln
See MH Swing

Hot Tuna
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH Rock

Hothouse Flowers
See MH Folk, MH Rock

James House
See MH Country

Son House
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH R&B

The House Band
See MH Folk, MH World

The House of Love
See MH Rock

House of Pain
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Housemartins
See MH Rock

Cisco Houston
See MH Country, MH Folk

David Houston
See MH Country

Penelope Houston
See MH Rock

Whitney Houston
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Hoven Droven
See MH World

Eddy Howard
See MH Lounge

George Howard
See MH Jazz

Harlan Howard
See MH Country

Noah Howard
See MH Jazz

Peg Leg Howell
See MH Blues

Howlin' Maggie
See MH Rock

Howlin' Wolf
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

H2O
See MH Rock

Freddie Hubbard
See MH Jazz

Ray Wylie Hubbard
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Hucklebucks
See MH Swing

David Hudson
See MH World

The Hudson Brothers
See MH Rock

Hues Corporation
See MH R&B

Huevos Rancheros
See MH Rock

Huffamoose
See MH Rock

Joe "Guitar" Hughes
See MH Blues

Hui Ohana
See MH Folk, MH World

Hum
See MH Rock

Human League
See MH Rock

Humble Pie
See MH Rock

Helen Humes
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH Swing

Marcus Hummon
See MH Country

Engelbert Humperdinck
See MH Lounge

Percy Humphrey
See MH Jazz

Willie Humphrey
See MH Jazz

Hundred Watt Smile
See MH Folk

Alberta Hunter
See MH Blues, MH Jazz

Charlie Hunter
See MH Jazz

Ian Hunter
See MH Rock

Ivory Joe Hunter
See MH Blues, MH R&B

Long John Hunter
See MH Blues

Hunters & Collectors
See MH Rock

The Cornell Hurd Band
See MH Country

Michael Hurley
See MH Folk

Hurricane #1
See MH Rock

Robert Hurst III
See MH Jazz

Mississippi John Hurt
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Lida Husik
See MH Rock

Hüsker Dü
See MH Rock

Ferlin Husky
See MH Country

Zakir Hussain
See MH World

Willie Hutch
See MH R&B

Bobby Hutcherson
See MH Jazz

Ashley Hutchings
See MH Folk, MH World

Frank Hutchison
See MH Folk

J.B. Hutto
See MH Blues

Betty Hutton
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Sylvia Hutton
See MH Country

Huun-Huur-Tu
See MH World

Walter Hyatt
See MH Country, MH Folk

Hyenas in the Desert
See MH R&B

Brian Hyland
See MH Rock

Dick Hyman
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Phyllis Hyman
See MH Lounge, MH R&B

Janis Ian
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Ian & Sylvia
See MH Folk

Jimmy Ibbotson
See MH Rock

Abdullah Ibrahim
See MH Jazz, MH World

Ice Cube
See MH R&B

Ice-T
See MH R&B

Icehouse
See MH Rock

The Icicle Works
See MH Rock

Rob Ickes
See MH Folk

I.C.P. Orchestra
See MH Jazz

Idaho
See MH Rock

Billy Idol
See MH Rock

Julio Iglesias
See MH Lounge

James Iha
See MH Rock

Ill Al Skratch
See MH R&B

The Ill-Mo Boys
See MH Folk

Illegal
See MH R&B

Natalie Imbruglia
See MH Rock

Immature
See MH R&B

Immigrant Suns
See MH World

Impact All Stars
See MH World

Imperial Teen
See MH Rock

The Impressions
See MH R&B

Incognito
See MH R&B

Incredible String Band
See MH Folk

Indigenous
See MH World

Indigo Girls
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Indigo Swing
See MH Swing

Infectious Grooves
See MH Rock

Keith Ingham
See MH Jazz

Jack Ingram
See MH Country

James Ingram
See MH R&B

Luther Ingram
See MH R&B

The Ink Spots
See MH Lounge, MH R&B

Inkuyo
See MH World

The Innocence Mission
See MH Rock

Insane Clown Posse
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Inspiral Carpets
See MH Rock

Intelligent Hoodlum
See MH R&B

The International Beat
See MH Rock

The Interpreters
See MH Rock

Inti-Illimani
See MH World

The Intruders
See MH R&B

INXS
See MH Rock

Irakere
See MH World

Irish Rovers
See MH Folk, MH World

The Irish Tradition
See MH Folk, MH World

Iron Butterfly
See MH Rock

Iron Maiden
See MH Rock

Andy Irvine
See MH Folk, MH World

Gregory Isaacs
See MH World

Barney Isaacs & George Kuo
See MH Folk

Chris Isaak
See MH Rock

The Isley Brothers
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Israel Vibration
See MH World

Chuck Israels
See MH Jazz

The Itals
See MH World

Isidore Israel Itzkowitz
See MH Lounge

Eileen Ivers
See MH Folk, MH World

Burl Ives
See MH Folk

Ivy
See MH Rock

David J
See MH Rock

Alan Jackson
See MH Country

Arthur Jackson
See MH Blues

Bullmoose Jackson
See MH Blues, MH Swing

Carl Jackson
See MH Country, MH Folk

Chuck Jackson
See MH R&B

D.D. Jackson
See MH Jazz

Freddie Jackson
See MH R&B

Janet Jackson
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Javon Jackson
See MH Jazz

Jim Jackson
See MH Blues

J.J. Jackson
See MH R&B

Joe Jackson
See MH Lounge, MH Rock, MH Swing

John Jackson
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Mahalia Jackson
See MH R&B

Michael Jackson
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Millie Jackson
See MH R&B

Milt Jackson
See MH Jazz

Paul Jackson Jr.
See MH Jazz

Ronald Shannon Jackson
See MH Jazz

Scott Jackson
See MH Folk

Stonewall Jackson
See MH Country

Tommy Jackson
See MH Country, MH Folk

Walter Jackson
See MH R&B

Wanda Jackson
See MH Country, MH Swing

Willis "Gator Tail" Jackson
See MH Jazz

Jackson 5
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Kate Jacobs
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Marion Walter Jacobs
See MH Blues

Illinois Jacquet
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Jade
See MH R&B

Allan Jaffe
See MH Jazz

Mick Jagger
See MH Rock

Jaguares
See MH World

Jai
See MH Rock

The Jam
See MH Rock

Jimmy Jam & Terry Lewis
See MH R&B

Ahmad Jamal
See MH Jazz

James
See MH Rock

Bob James
See MH Jazz

Brett James
See MH Country

Colin James
See MH Blues

Elmore James
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Etta James
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Harry James
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Michael James
See MH Country

Rick James
See MH R&B

Skip James
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Sonny James
See MH Country

Steve James
See MH Blues

Tommy James & the Shondells
See MH Rock

Jamiroquai
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Jan & Dean
See MH Rock

Jandek
See MH Rock

Jane's Addiction
See MH Rock

Jon Jang
See MH Jazz, MH World

Horst Jankowski
See MH Lounge

Denise Jannah
See MH Jazz

Bert Jansch
See MH Folk

Japan
See MH Rock

The Japanese Koto Consort
See MH World

Victor Jara
See MH World

Joseph Jarman
See MH Jazz

Maurice Jarre
See MH Lounge

Al Jarreau
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B

Tommy Jarrell
See MH Folk

Keith Jarrett
See MH Jazz

Jars of Clay
See MH Rock

Duane Jarvis
See MH Country

Jason & the Scorchers
See MH Country, MH Rock

Jawbox
See MH Rock

Jawbreaker
See MH Rock

Jay & the Americans
See MH Rock

Jay-Z
See MH R&B

Miles Jaye
See MH R&B

The Jayhawks
See MH Country, MH Rock

The Jazz Composers Alliance Orchestra
See MH Jazz

The Jazz Passengers
See MH Jazz

Jazzmatazz
See MH R&B

Wyclef Jean
See MH World

Nemours Jean-Baptiste
See MH World

Blind Lemon Jefferson
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH R&B

Eddie Jefferson
See MH Jazz

Paul Jefferson
See MH Country

Jefferson Airplane
See MH Rock

Jefferson Starship
See MH Rock

Garland Jeffreys
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Herb Jeffries
See MH Country, MH Jazz

Jellyfish
See MH Rock

Ella Jenkins
See MH Folk

Gordon Jenkins
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Leroy Jenkins
See MH Jazz

John Jennings
See MH Country, MH Folk

Waylon Jennings
See MH Country

Ingrid Jensen
See MH Jazz

Michael Jerling
See MH Folk

Jeru the Damaja
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

The Jesus & Mary Chain
See MH Rock

Jesus Jones
See MH Rock

The Jesus Lizard
See MH Rock

Jet Set Six
See MH Swing

Jethro Tull
See MH Rock

The Jets
See MH R&B

Joan Jett
See MH Rock

Jewel
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Jim & Jesse
See MH Country, MH Folk

Don Santiago Jimenez
See MH World

Flaco Jimenez
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH World

Santiago Jimenez Jr.
See MH World

J.J. Fad
See MH R&B

Antonio Carlos Jobim
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH World

Beau Jocque
See MH Folk, MH World

Jodeci
See MH R&B

Joe
See MH R&B

Billy Joel
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

David Johansen
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Elton John
See MH Rock

John & Mary
See MH Rock

Johnnie & Jack
See MH Country, MH Folk

Evan Johns & His H-Bombs
See MH Rock

Big Jack Johnson
See MH Blues

Blind Willie Johnson
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Budd Johnson
See MH Jazz

Buddy Johnson
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH Swing

Bunk Johnson
See MH Jazz

Earl Johnson
See MH Folk

Earl Silas Johnson IV
See MH Blues

Eric Johnson
See MH Rock

Henry Johnson
See MH Jazz

Howard Johnson
See MH Jazz

James P. (Price) Johnson
See MH Jazz

James "Super Chikan" Johnson
See MH Blues

Jimmy Johnson
See MH Blues

J.J. Johnson
See MH Jazz

Johnnie Johnson
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Larry Johnson
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Leslie Johnson
See MH Blues

Linton Kwesi Johnson
See MH World

Lonnie Johnson
See MH Blues

Luther "Georgia Boy" Johnson
See MH Blues

Luther "Guitar Junior" Johnson
See MH Blues

Luther "House Rocker" Johnson
See MH Blues

Marc Johnson
See MH Jazz

Mark Johnson
See MH Folk

Marv Johnson
See MH R&B

Michael Johnson
See MH Country, MH Folk

Mike Johnson
See MH Rock

Pete Johnson
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH Swing

Prudence Johnson
See MH Folk

Robert Johnson
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH R&B

Syl Johnson
See MH Blues, MH R&B

Tommy Johnson
See MH Blues

Johnson Mountain Boys
See MH Country, MH Folk

Daniel Johnston
See MH Rock

Freedy Johnston
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Phillip Johnston
See MH Jazz

Randy Johnston
See MH Jazz

Tom Johnston
See MH Rock

The Johnstons
See MH Folk, MH World

Jolene
See MH Country

Jolly Boys
See MH World

Al Jolson
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Casey Jones
See MH Blues

Curtis Jones
See MH Blues

Eddie Lee Jones
See MH Blues

Edward Jones
See MH Blues

Elvin Jones
See MH Jazz

Etta Jones
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Floyd Jones
See MH Blues

George Jones
See MH Country, MH Folk

Glenn Jones
See MH R&B

Grace Jones
See MH R&B

Grandpa Jones
See MH Folk

Hank Jones
See MH Jazz

Howard Jones
See MH Rock

Isham Jones
See MH Swing

Jack Jones
See MH Lounge

Jo Jones
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Johnny Jones
See MH Blues, MH Blues, MH Swing

Linda Jones
See MH R&B

Little "Sonny" Jones
See MH Blues

Marti Jones
See MH Rock

Mick Jones
See MH Rock

Oliver Jones
See MH Jazz

Paul "Wine" Jones
See MH Blues

"Philly" Joe Jones
See MH Jazz

Quincy Jones
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Swing

Rickie Lee Jones
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Robert Lewis Jones
See MH Blues

Ruth Lee Jones
See MH Blues

Sam Jones
See MH Jazz

Spike Jones
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Steve Jones
See MH Rock

Thad Jones
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Tom Jones
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Tutu Jones
See MH Blues

Diane Jones and Hubie King
See MH Folk

Carol Elizabeth Jones & James Leva
See MH Folk

Betty Joplin
See MH Jazz

Janis Joplin
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Scott Joplin
See MH Jazz

Al Jordan
See MH Lounge

Charley Jordan
See MH Blues

Clifford Jordan
See MH Jazz

Duke Jordan
See MH Jazz

Esteban "Steve" Jordan
See MH World

Louis Jordan
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Swing

Marlon Jordan
See MH Jazz

Montell Jordan
See MH R&B

Ronny Jordan
See MH Jazz

Sheila Jordan
See MH Jazz

Stanley Jordan
See MH Jazz

Margie Joseph
See MH R&B

Pleasant "Cousin Joe" Joseph
See MH Blues

Scott Joss
See MH Country

Journey
See MH Rock

Joy Division
See MH Rock

Joyce
See MH World

JPP
See MH World

JT the Bigga Figga
See MH R&B

Judas Priest
See MH Rock

Cledus "T." Judd
See MH Country

Wynonna Judd
See MH Country

The Judds
See MH Country

Judybats
See MH Rock

Jules & the Polar Bears
See MH Rock

Juluka
See MH Rock

Jump with Joey
See MH Lounge

Jumpin' Jimes
See MH Swing

Jungle Brothers
See MH R&B

Jungular Grooves
See MH World

Junior
See MH R&B

Junior M.A.F.I.A.
See MH R&B

Junk Monkeys
See MH Rock

Junoon
See MH World

Vic Juris
See MH Jazz

Just Ice
See MH R&B

Barbara K
See MH Rock

Paul K
See MH Rock

Ernie K-Doe
See MH R&B

Ledward Kaapana
See MH Folk, MH World

Bert Kaempfert
See MH Lounge

Brenda Kahn
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Si Kahn
See MH Folk

George Kahumoku Jr.
See MH Folk, MH World

Moses Kahumoku
See MH Folk, MH World

Henry Kaiser
See MH Jazz

Kajagoogoo
See MH Rock

Kalama's Quartet
See MH World

Maria Kalaniemi
See MH World

Connie Kaldor
See MH Folk

Kayhan Kalhor
See MH World

Pépé Kallé
See MH World

Cindy Kallet
See MH Folk

Kathy Kallick
See MH Country, MH Folk

Kam
See MH R&B

Rev. Dennis Kamakahi
See MH Folk, MH World

Michael Kamen
See MH Lounge

Ini Kamoze
See MH World

Kanda Bongo Man
See MH World

Candye Kane
See MH Blues, MH Swing

Kieran Kane
See MH Country, MH Folk

Ray Kane
See MH Folk, MH World

Cisse Diamba Kanoute
See MH World

Kansas
See MH Rock

Mory Kanté
See MH World

Paul Kantner
See MH Rock

Dominic Kanza & the African Rhythm Machine
See MH World

Kaoma
See MH World

Kapelye
See MH World

Lucy Kaplansky
See MH Folk

Doris Kappelhoff
See MH Lounge

Kara's Flowers
See MH Rock

Mick Karn
See MH Rock

Karnataka College of Percussion
See MH World

Kashif
See MH R&B

Kashtin
See MH World

Kassav'
See MH World

Kathleen Turner Overdrive
See MH Rock

Katrina & the Waves
See MH Rock

Bruce Katz
See MH Jazz

Mickey Katz
See MH Lounge

Steve Kaufman
See MH Folk

Jorma Kaukonen
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Connie Kay
See MH Jazz

Sammy Kaye
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

KC & the Sunshine Band
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Dolores Keane
See MH Folk, MH World

James Keane
See MH Folk, MH World

Seán Keane
See MH Folk

William David Kearney
See MH Blues

John P. Kee
See MH R&B

James Keelaghan
See MH Folk

Robert Earl Keen Jr.
See MH Country, MH Folk

Tommy Keene
See MH Rock

Geoff Keezer
See MH Jazz

Garrison Keillor
See MH Folk

Katell Keineg
See MH Rock

Salif Keita
See MH World

Toby Keith
See MH Country

Roger Kellaway
See MH Jazz

Gene Kelly
See MH Lounge

Jack Kelly
See MH Blues

Paul Kelly
See MH Folk, MH Rock

R. Kelly
See MH R&B

Sean Kelly
See MH Rock

Vance Kelly
See MH Blues

Wynton Kelly
See MH Jazz

Chris Kelsey
See MH Jazz

Hal Kemp
See MH Swing

Scott Kempner
See MH Rock

The Kendalls
See MH Country

Rodney Kendrick
See MH Jazz

Eddie Kendricks
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Kenickie
See MH Rock

The Kennedys
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Willie Kent
See MH Blues

Stan Kenton
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

The Kentucky Colonels
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Kentucky HeadHunters
See MH Country

Kentucky Standard Band
See MH Folk

Freddie Keppard
See MH Jazz

Ken Keppeler
See MH Folk

Jerome Kern
See MH Lounge

Nancy Kerr
See MH Folk

David Kersh
See MH Country

Doug Kershaw
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH World

Nik Kershaw
See MH Rock

Sammy Kershaw
See MH Country

Barney Kessel
See MH Jazz

Robin Kessinger
See MH Folk

Barbara Kessler
See MH Folk

Peter Kessler & Gail Fratar
See MH Folk

Hal Ketchum
See MH Country

Will Keys
See MH Folk

Khac Chi Ensemble
See MH World

Khaled
See MH World

Ali Akbar Khan
See MH World

Badar Ali Khan
See MH World

Chaka Khan
See MH R&B

Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan
See MH World

Salamat Ali Khan
See MH World

Steve Khan
See MH Jazz

Ustad Imrat Khan
See MH World

Ustad Vilayat Khan
See MH World

Khenany
See MH World

Talib Kibwe
See MH Jazz

Kid Capri
See MH R&B

Kid Creole & the Coconuts
See MH R&B, MH Rock, MH World

Kid Frost
See MH R&B

Kid 'n Play
See MH R&B

Kid Rock
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Angélique Kidjo
See MH World

Peter Kienle
See MH Jazz

Franklin Kiermyer
See MH Jazz

Greg Kihn
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Dave Kikoski
See MH Jazz

Kíla
See MH World

Steve Kilbey
See MH Rock

Rebecca Kilgore
See MH Jazz

Killah Priest
See MH Rock

Killbilly
See MH Country

Killing Joke
See MH Rock

Jin Hi Kim
See MH World

Frank Kimbrough
See MH Jazz

Junior Kimbrough
See MH Blues

Royal Wade Kimes
See MH Country

Shoukichi Kina
See MH World

Kindred Spirit
See MH Rock

Albert King
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH R&B, MH Rock

B.B. King
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH R&B, MH Rock

Ben E. King
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Carole King
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Charlie King
See MH Folk

Dee Dee King
See MH Rock

Diana King
See MH World

Earl King
See MH Blues

Evelyn "Champagne" King
See MH R&B

Freddie King
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

James King
See MH Country, MH Folk

Little Jimmy King
See MH Blues

Pee Wee King
See MH Country

Shirley King
See MH Blues

Sid King & the Five Strings
See MH Country, MH Rock, MH Swing

King Changó
See MH World

King Crimson
See MH Rock

King Curtis
See MH Jazz, MH R&B, MH Rock

King Missile
See MH Rock

King Pleasure
See MH Jazz

King Sun
See MH R&B

King Tee
See MH R&B

King Tubby
See MH World

King's X
See MH Rock

Kings of Calicutt
See MH Folk

Gershon Kingsley
See MH Lounge

The Kingsmen
See MH Rock

The Kingston Trio
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

The Kinks
See MH Rock

Alison Kinnaird
See MH Folk, MH World

Kevn Kinney
See MH Rock

Lester "Big Daddy" Kinsey
See MH Blues

Kinsey Report
See MH Blues

Kinvara
See MH Folk

Kips Bay Ceili Band
See MH Folk

Beecher Kirby
See MH Country

Bill Kirchen
See MH Rock

Andy Kirk
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Rahsaan Roland Kirk
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Eddie Kirkland
See MH Blues

Kenny Kirkland
See MH Jazz

Bob Kirkpatrick
See MH Blues

John Kirkpatrick
See MH Folk

Kiss
See MH Rock

Kitchens of Distinction
See MH Rock

Eartha Kitt
See MH Lounge

Klaatu
See MH Rock

John Klemmer
See MH Jazz

Dana & Karen Kletter
See MH Rock

The Klezmatics
See MH Folk, MH World

Klezmer Conservatory Band
See MH Folk, MH World

Klezmer Plus!
See MH World

The Klezmorim
See MH Folk, MH World

Earl Klugh
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

KMD
See MH R&B

KMFDM
See MH Rock

The Knack
See MH Rock

Knapsack
See MH Rock

Jimmy Knepper
See MH Jazz

The Knickerbockers
See MH Rock

Cheri Knight
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Jean Knight
See MH R&B

Gladys Knight & the Pips
See MH Lounge, MH R&B

The Knitters
See MH Rock

Mark Knopfler
See MH Blues

Buddy Knox
See MH Country, MH Rock

Chris Knox
See MH Rock

Cub Koda
See MH Rock

Kodo
See MH World

Ray & Glover Koerner
See MH Blues

"Spider" John Koerner
See MH Folk

Koerner, Ray & Glover
See MH Folk

Charlie Kohlhase
See MH Jazz

Habib Koité & Bamada
See MH World

Walt Koken
See MH Country, MH Folk

Steve Kolander
See MH Country

Fred Koller
See MH Country, MH Folk

Ken Kolodner
See MH Folk

Lee Konitz
See MH Jazz

Alhaji Bai Konteh
See MH World

Kool & the Gang
See MH R&B

Kool Ass Fash
See MH R&B

Kool G Rap and D.J. Polo
See MH R&B

Kool Keith
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Kool Moe Dee
See MH R&B

Al Kooper
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Peter Koppes
See MH Rock

KoRn
See MH Rock

Kornog
See MH World

Kenny Kosek
See MH Country

Andre Kostelanetz
See MH Lounge

Ozzie Kotani
See MH Folk

Kotoja
See MH World

Leo Kottke
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Peter Kowald
See MH Jazz

Dave Koz
See MH Jazz

Jake Krack
See MH Folk

Kraftwerk
See MH Rock

Diana Krall
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Wayne Kramer
See MH Rock

Billy J. Kramer & the Dakotas
See MH Rock

Alison Krauss
See MH Country, MH Folk

Phil Krauth
See MH Rock

Lenny Kravitz
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Chantal Kreviazuk
See MH Rock

Kris Kross
See MH R&B

Kris Kristofferson
See MH Country, MH Folk

Ernie Krivda
See MH Jazz

The Kronos Quartet
See MH Jazz, MH World

krosfyah
See MH World

Gene Krupa
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

K's Choice
See MH Rock

K7
See MH R&B

Ali Hassan Kuban
See MH World

Smokin' Joe Kubek Band with Bnois King
See MH Blues

Ed Kuepper
See MH Rock

Joachim Kuhn
See MH Jazz

Steve Kuhn
See MH Jazz

Kukuruza
See MH World

Kula Shaker
See MH Rock

Umm Kulthum
See MH World

George Kuo
See MH Folk, MH World

Tuli Kupferberg
See MH Rock

Kurious
See MH R&B

Fela Kuti
See MH Jazz, MH World

Femi Anikulapo Kuti
See MH World

Leonard Kwan
See MH Folk, MH World

Forward Kwenda
See MH World

Jim Kweskin & the Jug Band
See MH Folk

Kwest Tha Madd Lad
See MH R&B

Kay Kyser
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Kyuss
See MH Rock

The L.A. Four
See MH Lounge

L.A. Guns
See MH Rock

La India
See MH World

Lá Lugh
See MH Folk, MH World

La Mafia
See MH World

La Muscagña
See MH World

La Sonora Dinamita
See MH World

La Sonora Matancera
See MH World

Sleepy LaBeef
See MH Country, MH Swing

Patti LaBelle
See MH R&B

Abraham Laboriel
See MH Jazz

Rube Lacy
See MH Blues

Steve Lacy
See MH Jazz

Lady Bianca
See MH Blues

Lady of Rage
See MH R&B

Ladysmith Black Mambazo
See MH World

Scott LaFaro
See MH Jazz

Jimmy LaFave
See MH Country, MH Folk

Francis Lai
See MH Lounge

Laika
See MH Rock

Cleo Laine
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Frankie Laine
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Greg Lake
See MH Rock

Oliver Lake
See MH Jazz

Tim Lake
See MH Folk

Lakeside
See MH R&B

Lamb
See MH Rock

Barbara Lamb
See MH Country, MH Folk

Lambchop
See MH Country, MH Rock

Lambert, Hendricks & Ross
See MH Jazz

Mary Jane Lamond
See MH Folk, MH World

Nancy LaMott
See MH Lounge

Major Lance
See MH R&B

Harold Land
See MH Jazz

Art Lande
See MH Jazz

Sonny Landreth
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Hollis Landrum
See MH Folk

James A. Lane
See MH Blues

Mary Lane
See MH Blues

Ronnie Lane
See MH Rock

Mark Lanegan
See MH Rock

Jonny Lang
See MH Blues, MH Rock

k.d. lang
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Jonboy Langford & the Pine Valley Cosmonauts
See MH Country, MH Rock

Lester Lanin
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Daniel Lanois
See MH Rock, MH World

Lard
See MH Rock

Largo
See MH Rock

Patty Larkin
See MH Folk

Ellis Larkins
See MH Jazz

Nick LaRocca
See MH Jazz

Mary LaRose
See MH Jazz

Nicolette Larson
See MH Country

The La's
See MH Rock

Denise LaSalle
See MH R&B

Grit Laskin
See MH Folk

James Last
See MH Lounge

Last Exit
See MH Jazz, MH Rock

Last Poets
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

The Last Roundup
See MH Country, MH Rock

Bill Laswell
See MH R&B, MH Rock, MH World

Yusef Lateef
See MH Jazz

Latimore
See MH R&B

Latin Playboys
See MH Rock, MH World

Stacy Lattisaw
See MH R&B

Jim Lauderdale
See MH Country

Laughing Hyenas
See MH Rock

Cyndi Lauper
See MH Rock

The Laurel Canyon Ramblers
See MH Country, MH Folk

Andy LaVerne
See MH Jazz

Christine Lavin
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Law
See MH Rock

Azar Lawrence
See MH Jazz

Tracy Lawrence
See MH Country

Steve Lawrence & Eydie Gorme
See MH Lounge

Hubert Laws
See MH Jazz

Johnny Laws
See MH Blues

Ronnie Laws
See MH Jazz

Doyle Lawson
See MH Country, MH Folk

Hugh Lawson
See MH Jazz

Lawson Square Infirmary
See MH Rock

Lazy Lester
See MH Blues

Bernadette Lazzaro
See MH Lounge

Le Mystère des Voix Bulgares
See MH World

Leadbelly
See MH Blues, MH Folk

The Leaders
See MH Jazz

Leaders of the New School
See MH R&B

The League of Crafty Guitarists
See MH Rock

Leahy
See MH World

Paul Leary
See MH Rock

The Leaves
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Led Zeppelin
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Chris LeDoux
See MH Country

Arthur Lee
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Brenda Lee
See MH Country, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Bryan Lee
See MH Blues

Frankie Lee
See MH Blues

Irma Lee
See MH Blues

Johnny Lee
See MH Country

Lorraine Lee
See MH Folk

Lovie Lee
See MH Blues

Peggy Lee
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Rick Lee
See MH Folk

Tracey Lee
See MH R&B

Lee Press-On & the Nails
See MH Swing

Raymond Lefevre
See MH Lounge

The Left Banke
See MH Rock

Brad Leftwich
See MH Folk

Lefty Frizzell
See MH Folk

Johnny Legend
See MH Swing

Legendary Blues Band
See MH Blues

The Legendary Jim Ruiz Group
See MH Rock

Legendary Stardust Cowboy
See MH Country, MH Rock

Adrian Legg
See MH Folk

Michel Legrand
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Tom Lehrer
See MH Lounge

Keri Leigh
See MH Blues

Peter Leitch
See MH Jazz

John Leitham
See MH Jazz

Eddie LeJeune
See MH Folk, MH World

Iry LeJeune
See MH Folk, MH World

Ray Lema
See MH World

Peter Lemer
See MH Jazz

The Lemon Pipers
See MH Rock

Lemonheads
See MH Rock

Overton Lemons
See MH Blues

Ute Lemper
See MH Lounge

Ricardo Lemvo & Makina Loca
See MH World

John Lennon
See MH Rock

Julian Lennon
See MH Rock

The Lennon Sisters
See MH Lounge

Annie Lennox
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

J.B. Lenoir
See MH Blues

Lotte Lenya
See MH Lounge

Kim Lenz
See MH Swing

The LeRoi Brothers
See MH Country

Les Go de Koteba
See MH World

Les Têtes Brulées
See MH World

Less Than Jake
See MH Rock

Sonny Lester
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Let's Active
See MH Rock

The Lettermen
See MH Lounge

James Leva & Carol Elizabeth Jones
See MH Folk

Level 42
See MH Rock

Keith Levene
See MH Rock

Dan Levenson & Kim Murley
See MH Folk, MH World

Levert
See MH R&B

Barrington Levy
See MH World

Lou Levy
See MH Jazz

Ron Levy
See MH Blues

Furry Lewis
See MH Blues, MH Folk

George Lewis (clarinet)
See MH Jazz

George Lewis (trombone)
See MH Jazz

Jerry Lewis
See MH Lounge

Jerry Lee Lewis
See MH Country, MH Rock, MH Swing

John Lewis
See MH Jazz

Laurie Lewis
See MH Country, MH Folk

Linda Gail Lewis
See MH Country

Meade "Lux" Lewis
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Mel Lewis
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Ramsey Lewis
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Smiley Lewis
See MH Blues

Ted Lewis
See MH Swing

Tom Lewis
See MH Folk

Walter Lewis
See MH Blues

Huey Lewis & the News
See MH Rock

Gary Lewis & the Playboys
See MH Rock

The Lewis Family
See MH Country, MH Folk

Yungchen Lhamo
See MH World

Lhasa
See MH World

Liberace
See MH Lounge

Ottmar Liebert
See MH Jazz

Dave Liebman
See MH Jazz

Annbjørg Lien
See MH World

Life of Agony
See MH Rock

Lifers Group
See MH R&B

Jimmy Liggins
See MH Blues, MH Swing

Joe Liggins
See MH Blues, MH Swing

Enoch Light
See MH Lounge

Lightcrust Doughboys
See MH Swing

Lighter Shade of Brown (LSOB)
See MH R&B

Gordon Lightfoot
See MH Folk, MH Lounge

Lightnin' Slim
See MH Blues

The Lightning Seeds
See MH Rock

Kirk Lightsey
See MH Jazz

Lil' Ed & the Blues Imperials
See MH Blues

Lil' Kim
See MH R&B

The Lilly Brothers
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Limeliters
See MH Folk, MH Lounge

Limp Bizkit
See MH Rock

Lincoln
See MH Rock

Abbey Lincoln
See MH Jazz

Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra
See MH Jazz

Colin Linden
See MH Folk

Lindisfarne
See MH Rock

David Lindley
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Arto Lindsay
See MH Rock, MH World

Mark Lindsay
See MH Rock

Hip Linkchain
See MH Blues

Lipps, Inc.
See MH R&B

Mance Lipscomb
See MH Folk

Liquid Soul
See MH Jazz

Liquorice
See MH Rock

Lisa Lisa & Cult Jam
See MH R&B

Melba Liston
See MH Jazz

Booker Little
See MH Jazz

Little Anthony & the Imperials
See MH Rock

Little Charlie & the Nightcats
See MH Blues

Little Eva
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Little Feat
See MH Rock

Little Joe
See MH World

Little Milton
See MH Blues, MH R&B

Little Richard
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Little River Band
See MH Rock

Little Sonny
See MH Blues

Little Steven
See MH R&B, MH Rock, MH World

Little Texas
See MH Country

Little Village
See MH Rock

Little Walter
See MH Blues

Little Willie John
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Johnny Littlejohn
See MH Blues

Live
See MH Rock

Live Skull
See MH Rock

Living Colour
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Living Strings
See MH Lounge

LL Cool J
See MH R&B

A.L. Lloyd
See MH Folk, MH World

Bill Lloyd
See MH Rock

Charles Lloyd
See MH Jazz

Richard Lloyd
See MH Rock

Andrew Lloyd Webber
See MH Lounge, MH Lounge

Cheikh Lô
See MH World

Ismaël Lô
See MH World

Local H
See MH Rock

Joe Locke
See MH Jazz

Kevin Locke
See MH Folk, MH World

Hank Locklin
See MH Country

Robert Junior Lockwood
See MH Blues

Lisa Loeb
See MH Rock

Nils Lofgren
See MH Rock

Cripple Clarence Lofton
See MH Blues

Giuseppi Logan
See MH Jazz

Jack Logan
See MH Folk

Loggins & Messina
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Guy Lombardo
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Julie London
See MH Lounge

Lone Justice
See MH Country, MH Rock

Lonesome River Band
See MH Country, MH Folk

Lonesome Standard Time
See MH Country, MH Folk

Lonesome Strangers
See MH Country

Lonesome Sundown
See MH Blues

Lonestar
See MH Country

Roy Loney
See MH Rock

Larry Long
See MH Folk

Claudine Longet
See MH Lounge

Mike Longo
See MH Jazz

Longview
See MH Folk

The Looters
See MH World

Jennifer Lopez
See MH World

Trini Lopez
See MH Lounge

Jeff Lorber
See MH Jazz

Mary Lou Lord
See MH Rock

Lord Finesse
See MH R&B

Lord Kitchener
See MH World

Lord Melody
See MH World

Lords of Acid
See MH Rock

Lords of the New Church
See MH Rock

Lords of the Underground
See MH R&B

Lordz of Brooklyn
See MH R&B

Los Amigos Invisibles
See MH World

Los Bravos
See MH Rock

Los Camperos de Valles
See MH World

Los de Abajo
See MH World

Los Fabulosos Cadillacs
See MH World

Los Incas
See MH World

Los Lobos
See MH Rock, MH World

Los Muñequitos de Matanzas
See MH World

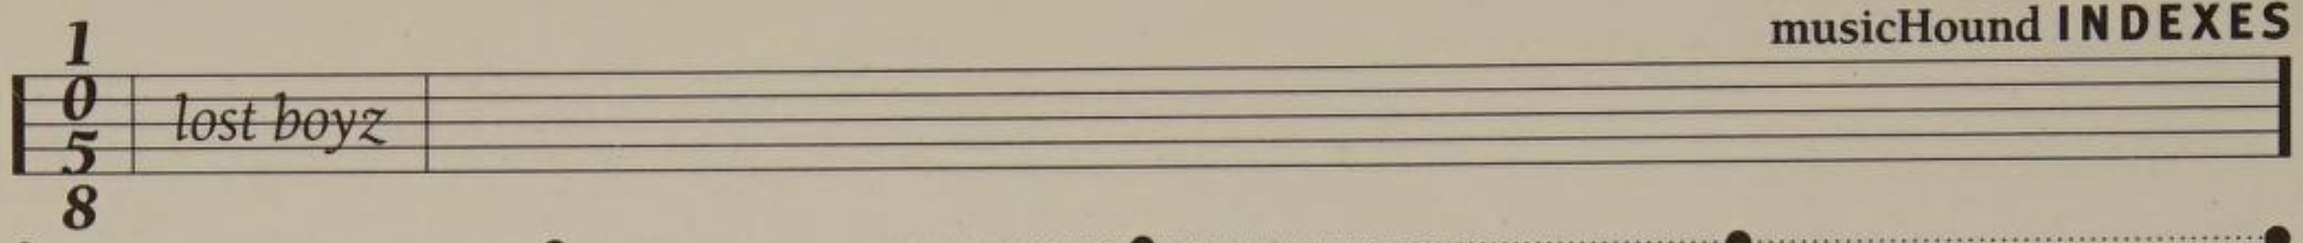
Los Pleneros de la 21
See MH World

Los Straitjackets
See MH Rock

Los Super Seven
See MH World

Los Tigres del Norte
See MH World

Los Van Van
See MH World



Lost Boyz
See MH R&B

The Lost Continentals
See MH Swing

Lothar & the Hand People
See MH Rock

Lotion
See MH Rock

Loud Family
See MH Rock

John D. Loudermilk
See MH Country, MH Folk

Joe Hill Louis
See MH Blues

Louisiana Red
See MH Blues

The Lounge Lizards
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Louvin Brothers
See MH Country, MH Folk

Joe Lovano
See MH Jazz

Love
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Darlene Love
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Laura Love
See MH Folk

Willie Love
See MH Blues

Love & Rockets
See MH Rock

G. Love & Special Sauce
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Love Delegation
See MH Rock

The Love Dogs
See MH Swing

Love Jones
See MH Lounge

Love Spit Love
See MH Rock

Love Tractor
See MH Rock

Love Unlimited Orchestra
See MH R&B

Patty Loveless
See MH Country

Lovemongers
See MH Rock

Loverboy
See MH Rock

Lyle Lovett
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Ruby Lovett
See MH Country

Lene Lovich
See MH Rock

The Lovin' Spoonful
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Frank Lowe
See MH Jazz

Jez Lowe
See MH Folk

Nick Lowe
See MH Rock

L7
See MH Rock

L.T.D.
See MH R&B

L'Trimm
See MH R&B

Albert Luandrew
See MH Blues

Norman Luboff Choir
See MH Lounge

Lucas
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Trevor Lucas
See MH World

Luciano
See MH World

Jon Lucien
See MH Jazz

Steve Lucky & the Rhumba Bums
See MH Swing

The Lucky Strikes
See MH Swing

Lulu
See MH Rock

Luna
See MH Rock

Jimmie Lunceford
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Carmen Lundy
See MH Jazz

Luniz
See MH R&B

Dónal Lunny
See MH Folk, MH World

Bascom Lamar Lunsford
See MH Country, MH Folk

Evan Lurie
See MH Rock

John Lurie
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Luscious Jackson
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Lush
See MH Rock

Luxuria
See MH Rock

L.V.
See MH R&B

Annabella Lwin
See MH Rock

John Lydon
See MH Rock

Arthur Lyman
See MH Lounge

Frankie Lymon & the Teenagers
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Brian Lynch
See MH Jazz

Claire Lynch
See MH Country, MH Folk

George Lynch/Lynch Mob
See MH Rock

Cheryl Lynn
See MH R&B

Loretta Lynn
See MH Country

Jeff Lynne
See MH Rock

Shelby Lynne
See MH Country

Lynyrd Skynyrd
See MH Country, MH Rock

Jimmy Lyons
See MH Jazz

The Lyres
See MH Rock

Johnny Lytle
See MH Jazz

Paul Lytton
See MH Jazz

M-Base Collective
See MH Jazz

Baaba Maal
See MH World

Harold Mabern
See MH Jazz

Willie Mabon
See MH Blues

Mabsant
See MH Folk, MH World

Joel Mabus
See MH Folk

Sipho Mabuse
See MH World

Margaret MacArthur
See MH Folk

Ewan MacColl
See MH Folk, MH World

Kirsty MacColl
See MH Rock

Jeanette MacDonald
See MH Lounge

Laurel MacDonald
See MH World

Pat MacDonald
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Rod MacDonald
See MH Folk

Shane MacGowan & the Popes
See MH Rock

Machito
See MH Jazz, MH World

Ashley MacIsaac
See MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

Craig Mack
See MH R&B

Mack 10
See MH R&B

Kate MacKenzie
See MH Country, MH Folk

Talitha MacKenzie
See MH World

Bryan MacLean
See MH Rock

Dougie MacLean
See MH Folk, MH World

Tara MacLean
See MH Rock

Kate MacLeod
See MH Folk

Buddy MacMaster
See MH Folk

Natalie MacMaster
See MH Folk, MH World

Madeline MacNeil
See MH Folk

Jeep MacNichol
See MH Rock

Uncle Dave Macon
See MH Country, MH Folk

Gordon MacRae
See MH Lounge

Mad Lion
See MH R&B, MH World

Mad Professor
See MH World

Mad Pudding
See MH Folk, MH World

Madd Skillz
See MH R&B

Joanie Madden
See MH Folk, MH World

Madder Rose
See MH Rock

The Maddox Brothers & Rose
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Swing

Madness
See MH Rock, MH World

Madonna
See MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Rock

Madredeus
See MH World

Magazine
See MH Rock

Alan Mager
See MH Folk

Samuel Maghett
See MH Blues

Magic Sam
See MH Blues

Magic Slim
See MH Blues

Magical Strings
See MH Folk

Magnapop
See MH Rock

Magnolia Sisters
See MH Folk

Magnum Band
See MH World

Magpie
See MH Folk

Taj Mahal
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH R&B, MH World

Mahavishnu Orchestra
See MH Jazz

Big Joe Maher
See MH Swing

Mahlathini & Mahotella Queens
See MH World

Kevin Mahogany
See MH Jazz

Boncana Maiga
See MH World

The Main Ingredient
See MH R&B

Main Source
See MH R&B

Mike Mainieri
See MH Jazz

Pandit Kamalesh Maitra
See MH World

Charlie Major
See MH Country

Miriam Makeba
See MH World

Tommy Makem
See MH Folk, MH World

Makgona Tsohle Band
See MH World

Adam Makowicz
See MH Jazz

The Ilyas Malayev Ensemble
See MH World

Malika
See MH World

Mac Mall
See MH R&B

Mallard
See MH Rock

The Mallet Playboys
See MH World

David Mallett
See MH Folk

Yngwie Malmsteen
See MH Rock

Michelle Malone
See MH Rock

Russell Malone
See MH Jazz

Mama Sana
See MH World

The Mamas & the Papas
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Cheb Mami
See MH World

Mamou Playboys
See MH Folk

Man or Astro-Man?
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

ManBREAK
See MH Rock

Junior Mance
See MH Jazz

Melissa Manchester
See MH Rock

Henry Mancini
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

The Mandators
See MH World

Harvey Mandel
See MH Blues

Ahdri Zhina Mandiela
See MH World

Mando Mafia
See MH Folk

Barbara Mandrell
See MH Country

Mandrill
See MH R&B

Joe Maneri
See MH Jazz

Mat Maneri
See MH Jazz

Kante Manfila
See MH World

Albert Mangelsdorff
See MH Jazz

Chuck Mangione
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Cindy Mangsen
See MH Folk

Sam Mangwana
See MH World

The Manhattan Transfer
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

The Manhattans
See MH R&B

Manic Street Preachers
See MH Rock

Barry Manilow
See MH Lounge

Manitoba's Wild Kingdom
See MH Rock

Aimee Mann
See MH Rock

Carl Mann
See MH Country

Herbie Mann
See MH Jazz, MH World

Manfred Mann
See MH Rock

Shelly Manne
See MH Jazz

Mannheim Steamroller
See MH Lounge

Manolín, El Médico de la Salsa
See MH World

Joseph "Wingy" Manone
See MH Jazz

Ray Mantilla
See MH Jazz

Mantovani
See MH Lounge

Machanic Manyeruke
See MH World

Phil Manzanera
See MH Rock

Samba Mapangala & Orchestra Virunga
See MH World

Thomas Mapfumo
See MH World

The Mar-Keys
See MH R&B

The Marcels
See MH R&B

Steve Marcus
See MH Jazz

Rick Margitza
See MH Jazz

Bob Margolin
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Kitty Margolis
See MH Jazz

Tania Maria
See MH Jazz

Mariachi Cobre
See MH World

Charlie Mariano
See MH Jazz

Teena Marie
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Marillion
See MH Rock

Marilyn Manson
See MH Rock

The Mark-Almond Band
See MH Rock

Marky Mark
See MH R&B

Rita Marley
See MH World

Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers
See MH R&B, MH Rock, MH World

Bob Marley & the Wailers
See MH R&B, MH Rock, MH World

Marley Marl
See MH R&B

Marley's Ghost
See MH Folk

Marmalade
See MH Rock

Dodo Marmarosa
See MH Jazz

Marry Me Jane
See MH Rock

Chris Mars
See MH Rock

Johnny Mars
See MH Blues

Branford Marsalis
See MH Jazz

Delfeayo Marsalis
See MH Jazz

Ellis Marsalis
See MH Jazz

Wynton Marsalis
See MH Jazz

Warne Marsh
See MH Jazz

Amanda Marshall
See MH Rock

Evan Marshall
See MH Folk

Mike Marshall
See MH Folk

The Marshall Tucker Band
See MH Country, MH Rock

Martha & the Vandellas
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Claire Martin
See MH Jazz

Dean Martin
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Freddy Martin
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Jimmy Martin
See MH Country, MH Folk

Mel Martin
See MH Jazz

Ricky Martin
See MH World

Tony Martin
See MH Lounge

Narciso Martinez
See MH World

Al Martino
See MH Lounge

Pat Martino
See MH Jazz

John Martyn
See MH World

The Marvelettes
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Richard Marx
See MH Rock

Masada
See MH Jazz, MH World

Steve Masakowski
See MH Jazz

Miya Masaoka
See MH Jazz

Hugh Masekela
See MH World

Dave Mason
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Mila Mason
See MH Country

Nick Mason
See MH Rock

David Massengill
See MH Folk

Cal Massey
See MH Jazz

Zane Massey
See MH Jazz

Massive Attack
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Masta Ace
See MH R&B

Master Musicians of Jajouka
See MH World

Master P
See MH R&B

Matchbox 20
See MH Rock

Material
See MH Jazz, MH Rock

Material Issue
See MH Rock

Johnny Mathis
See MH Lounge, MH R&B

Jas. Mathus & His Knock-Down Society
See MH Rock

Kathy Mattea
See MH Country, MH Folk

Eric Matthews
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Iain Matthews
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Dave Matthews Band
See MH Rock, MH World

Matthews Southern Comfort
See MH Folk

June Maugery
See MH Folk

The Mavericks
See MH Country

Maxwell
See MH R&B

David Maxwell
See MH Blues

Maxwell Street Klezmer Band
See MH World

Billy May
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Brian May
See MH Rock

John Mayall
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Curtis Mayfield
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Percy Mayfield
See MH Blues, MH R&B

Maypole
See MH Rock

Bill Mays
See MH Jazz

Lyle Mays
See MH Jazz

Maze
See MH R&B

Mazz
See MH World

Mazzy Star
See MH Rock

Prince Nico Mbarga
See MH World

Jimi Mbaye
See MH World

M'Boom
See MH Jazz

Mzwakhe Mbuli
See MH World

MC Breed & the DFC
See MH R&B

MC Eiht
See MH R&B

M.C. Hammer
See MH R&B

MC Lyte
See MH R&B

MC 900 Ft. Jesus
See MH R&B, MH Rock

M.C. Shan
See MH R&B

MC Solaar
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Mac McAnally
See MH Country, MH Folk

Kimberly M'Carver
See MH Folk

Christian McBride
See MH Jazz

Martina McBride
See MH Country

McBride & the Ride
See MH Country

Jerry McCain
See MH Blues

Edwin McCain Band
See MH Rock

Cash McCall
See MH Blues

C.W. McCall
See MH Country

Darrell McCall
See MH Country

Les McCann
See MH Jazz

Cormac McCarthy
See MH Folk

Paul McCartney
See MH Rock

Kathy McCarty
See MH Rock

Mary McCaslin
See MH Country, MH Folk

Scott McCaughey
See MH Rock

Charly McClain
See MH Country

Mighty Sam McClain
See MH Blues

Debby McClatchy
See MH Folk

Tommy McClennan
See MH Blues

Delbert McClinton
See MH Blues, MH Country, MH Rock

Carol McComb
See MH Folk

David McComb
See MH Rock

Billy McComiskey
See MH Folk

Rob McConnell
See MH Jazz

Marilyn McCoo
See MH Lounge

Susannah McCorkle
See MH Jazz

Maureen McCormick
See MH Country

The Del McCoury Band
See MH Country, MH Folk

Neal McCoy
See MH Country

Van McCoy
See MH R&B

The McCoy Brothers
See MH Blues

Jimmy McCracklin
See MH Blues

Larry McCray
See MH Blues

Mindy McCready
See MH Country

Rich McCready
See MH Country

Ian McCulloch
See MH Rock

Robert Lee McCullum
See MH Blues

John McCutcheon
See MH Folk

Ellas McDaniel
See MH Blues

Floyd McDaniel
See MH Swing

Mel McDaniel
See MH Country

Michael McDermott
See MH Rock

Country Joe McDonald
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Michael McDonald
See MH Rock

Megon McDonough
See MH Folk

Mississippi Fred McDowell
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Ronnie McDowell
See MH Country

Jack McDuff
See MH Jazz

Reba McEntire
See MH Country

John McEuen
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Eleanor McEvoy
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

McFadden & Whitehead
See MH R&B

Bobby McFerrin
See MH Jazz

MC5
See MH Rock

Andy McGann
See MH World

Eileen McGann
See MH Folk, MH World

Kate & Anna McGarrigle
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Dennis McGee
See MH Folk

Sam & Kirk McGee
See MH Folk

Sterling McGee
See MH Blues

Brownie McGhee
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Howard McGhee
See MH Jazz

Stick McGhee
See MH Blues

Maureen McGovern
See MH Lounge

Tim McGraw
See MH Country

Chris McGregor
See MH World

Freddie McGregor
See MH World

Jimmy McGriff
See MH Jazz

Roger McGuinn
See MH Folk, MH Rock

McGuinn, Clark & Hillman
See MH Country

Barry McGuire
See MH Rock

Kalaparusha Maurice McIntyre
See MH Jazz

Ken McIntyre
See MH Jazz

Duff McKagan
See MH Rock

Andy McKee
See MH Jazz

Maria McKee
See MH Rock

Dave McKenna
See MH Jazz

Loreena McKennitt
See MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

Susan McKeown
See MH World

Susan McKeown & the Chanting House
See MH Folk

McKinney's Cotton Pickers
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Brian McKnight
See MH R&B

Sarah McLachlan
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Ian McLagan
See MH Rock

Denny McLain
See MH Lounge

Malcolm McLaren
See MH Rock

John McLaughlin
See MH Jazz

Pat McLaughlin
See MH Rock

Peter McLaughlin
See MH Folk

Don McLean
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Jackie McLean
See MH Jazz

Rene McLean
See MH Jazz

Grant McLennan
See MH Rock

Jeannie McLerie
See MH Folk

Declan Patrick McManus
See MH Lounge

James McMurtry
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Ian McNabb
See MH Rock

Big Jay McNeely
See MH Blues, MH Swing

Jim McNeely
See MH Jazz

Brian McNeill
See MH Folk

Michael McNevin
See MH Folk

Marian McPartland
See MH Jazz

Clyde McPhatter
See MH R&B

Joe McPhee
See MH Jazz

Charles McPherson
See MH Jazz

Carmen McRae
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Jesse McReynolds
See MH Folk

Jay McShann
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH Swing

Blind Willie McTell
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Ralph McTell
See MH Folk

Christine McVie
See MH Rock

MD .45
See MH Rock

Me Phi Me
See MH R&B

Russell Means
See MH World

Meat Beat Manifesto
See MH Rock

Meat Loaf
See MH Rock

Meat Puppets
See MH Rock

Medeski, Martin & Wood
See MH Jazz, MH Rock

Meditations
See MH World

Joe Meek
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Mega City Four
See MH Rock

Megadeth
See MH Rock

Brad Mehldau
See MH Jazz

The Mekons
See MH Rock

George Melachrino
See MH Lounge

Melanie
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Myra Melford
See MH Jazz

La Sonora Meliyara
See MH World

Gil Melle
See MH Jazz

John Mellencamp
See MH Rock

Ken Mellons
See MH Country

Mellow Man Ace
See MH R&B

Harold Melvin & the Blue Notes
See MH R&B

The Melvins
See MH Rock

Memphis Jug Band
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Memphis Minnie
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Memphis Slim
See MH Blues

Men at Work
See MH Rock

Men Without Hats
See MH Rock

Doris "D.L." Menard
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH World

Sergio Mendes
See MH Lounge, MH World

Mendes Brothers
See MH World

Margareth Menezes
See MH World

Misha Mengelberg
See MH Jazz

E.T. Mensah
See MH World

Menswear
See MH Rock

Johnny Mercer
See MH Lounge

Natalie Merchant
See MH Rock

Daniela Mercury
See MH World

Freddie Mercury
See MH Rock

Mercury Rev
See MH Rock

Mercyland
See MH Rock

Charles Merick
See MH Blues

Ethel Merman
See MH Lounge

The Mermen
See MH Rock

Helen Merrill
See MH Jazz

Big Maceo Merriweather
See MH Blues

The Merry-Go-Round
See MH Rock

Jim Messina
See MH Rock

Jo Dee Messina
See MH Country

Metallica
See MH Rock

Metamora
See MH Folk

The Meters
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Pat Metheny
See MH Jazz

Method Man
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Hendrik Meurkens
See MH Jazz

Liz Meyer
See MH Country

Richard Meyer
See MH Folk

Mezz Mezzrow
See MH Jazz

MFSB
See MH R&B

Miami Sound Machine
See MH Rock

Mic Geronimo
See MH R&B

George Michael
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Walt Michael
See MH Folk

Lee Michaels
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Mickey & Sylvia
See MH Rock

Bette Midler
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Midnight Oil
See MH Rock

Midnight Star
See MH R&B

The Mighty Blue Kings
See MH Rock, MH Lounge, MH Swing

The Mighty Diamonds
See MH World

Mighty Joe Plum
See MH Rock

Mighty Lemon Drops
See MH Rock

Mighty Mighty Bosstones
See MH Rock

The Mighty Sparrow
See MH World

Mike & the Mechanics
See MH Rock

Pablo Milanés
See MH World

Amos Milburn
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Swing

Buddy Miles
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Lynn Miles
See MH Folk

Michael Miles
See MH Folk

Robert Miles
See MH Rock

Ron Miles
See MH Jazz

Bobby Militello
See MH Jazz

Mill Run Dulcimer Band
See MH Folk

Milla
See MH Rock

Milladoiro
See MH World

Bill Miller
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

Buddy Miller
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Ed Miller
See MH Folk

Emmett Miller
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Swing

Glenn Miller
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Julie Miller
See MH Rock

Marcus Miller
See MH R&B

Mitch Miller
See MH Lounge

Ned Miller
See MH Country

Rice Miller
See MH Blues

Roger Miller
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Steve Miller
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Jo Miller & Laura Love
See MH Country, MH Folk

Milli Vanilli
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Lucky Millinder
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Frank Mills
See MH Lounge

Stephanie Mills
See MH R&B

Mills Blue Rhythm Band
See MH Swing

The Mills Brothers
See MH Lounge, MH R&B

Ronnie Milsap
See MH Country

Roy Milton
See MH Blues, MH Swing

Charles Mingus
See MH Jazz

Mingus Big Band
See MH Jazz

Mingus Dynasty
See MH Jazz

Ministry
See MH Rock

Mink DeVille
See MH Rock

Liza Minnelli
See MH Lounge

Áine Minogue
See MH World

Kylie Minogue
See MH Rock

Minor Threat
See MH Rock

Sugar Minott
See MH World

Mint Condition
See MH R&B

Iverson Minter
See MH Blues

Bob Mintzer
See MH Jazz

The Minus Five
See MH Rock

Minutemen
See MH Rock

Robert Mirabal
See MH World

The Miracles
See MH Rock

Carmen Miranda
See MH Lounge, MH World

Marlui Miranda
See MH World

The Misfits
See MH Rock

Missing Persons
See MH Rock

Mission of Burma
See MH Rock

The Mission U.K.
See MH Rock

Mississippi Heat
See MH Blues

Mississippi Sheiks
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Mrs. Elva Miller
See MH Lounge

Mr. & Mrs. Swing
See MH Swing

Mr. Big
See MH Rock

Mr. Bungle
See MH Rock

Mr. Fox
See MH Folk

Mr. Mister
See MH Rock

The Mr. T Experience
See MH Rock

Blue Mitchell
See MH Jazz

Guy Mitchell
See MH Lounge

Joni Mitchell
See MH Folk, MH Rock

McKinley Mitchell
See MH Blues

Roscoe Mitchell
See MH Jazz

Waddie Mitchell
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Chad Mitchell Trio
See MH Folk

Robert Mitchum
See MH Lounge

Jackie Mittoo
See MH World

Mlimani Park Orchestra
See MH World

Keb' Mo'
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Mobb Deep
See MH R&B

Hank Mobley
See MH Jazz

Moby
See MH Rock

Moby Grape
See MH Rock

Modern English
See MH Rock

Modern Jazz Quartet
See MH Jazz

Modern Lovers
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Modest Mouse
See MH Rock

moe.
See MH Rock

Hugh Moffatt
See MH Folk

Katy Moffatt
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Moffatts
See MH Country

Charles Moffett
See MH Jazz

Charnett Moffett
See MH Jazz

Mohave 3
See MH Rock

The Mojo Men
See MH Rock

Tony Mola
See MH World

The Moles
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Joey Molland
See MH Rock

Matt Molloy
See MH Folk, MH World

Molly & the Heymakers
See MH Country

Molly Hatchet
See MH Rock

The Mollys
See MH Folk, MH World

Mick Moloney
See MH Folk, MH World

Bruce Molsky
See MH Folk

The Moments
See MH R&B

Mommyheads
See MH Rock

Grachan Moncur III
See MH Jazz

Buddy Mondlock
See MH Folk

Eddie Money
See MH Rock

Monie Love
See MH R&B

Thelonious Monk
See MH Jazz

T.S. Monk
See MH Jazz

The Monkees
See MH Rock

Monks of Doom
See MH Rock

Monks of the Dip Tse Chok Ling Monastery
See MH World

Mono
See MH Rock

The Mono Men
See MH Rock

Matt Monro
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Charlie Monroe
See MH Folk

Marilyn Monroe
See MH Lounge

Vaughn Monroe
See MH Lounge

Bill Monroe & His Blue Grass Boys
See MH Country, MH Folk

Monroe Brothers
See MH Folk

Billy Montana
See MH Country

Country Dick Montana
See MH Rock

Patsy Montana
See MH Country, MH Folk

Montana Slim
See MH Country

Machel Montano
See MH World

Marisa Monte
See MH World

Hugo Montenegro
See MH Lounge

J.R. Monterose
See MH Jazz

Chris Montez
See MH Lounge

Buddy Montgomery
See MH Jazz

Eurreal Wilford Montgomery
See MH Blues

John Michael Montgomery
See MH Country

Little Brother Montgomery
See MH Blues

Melba Montgomery
See MH Country

Monk Montgomery
See MH Jazz

Wes Montgomery
See MH Jazz

Tete Montoliu
See MH Jazz

Coco Montoya
See MH Blues

Montrose
See MH Rock

James Moody
See MH Jazz

The Moody Blues
See MH Rock

The Moog Cookbook
See MH Lounge

Keith Moon
See MH Rock

Jemeel Moondoc
See MH Jazz

John Mooney
See MH Blues

The Moonglows
See MH R&B

Abra Moore
See MH Rock

Chante Moore
See MH R&B

Christy Moore
See MH Folk, MH World

Gary Moore
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Hamish Moore
See MH Folk, MH World

James Moore
See MH Blues

Johnny B. Moore
See MH Blues

Kevin Moore
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Melba Moore
See MH R&B

Ralph Moore
See MH Jazz

Thurston Moore
See MH Rock

Whistlin' Alex Moore
See MH Blues

Moose
See MH Rock

Morcheeba
See MH Rock

Beny Moré
See MH World

Airto Moreira
See MH Jazz, MH World

Joe Morello
See MH Jazz

The Morells
See MH Country, MH Rock

Blake Morgan
See MH Rock

Frank Morgan
See MH Jazz

George Morgan
See MH Country

Lee Morgan
See MH Jazz

Lorrie Morgan
See MH Country

Russ Morgan
See MH Swing

Teddy Morgan
See MH Blues

Morgan Heritage
See MH World

McKinley Morganfield
See MH Blues

Ikue Ile Mori
See MH Rock

Alanis Morissette
See MH Rock

Morphine
See MH Rock

Ennio Morricone
See MH Lounge

Gary Morris
See MH Country

Joe Morris
See MH Jazz

Lawrence "Butch" Morris
See MH Jazz

The Lynn Morris Band
See MH Country, MH Folk

Van Morrison
See MH Folk, MH R&B, MH Rock

Morrissey
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Bill Morrissey
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Ella Mae Morse
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Morse Playboys
See MH Folk

Jelly Roll Morton
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Pete Morton
See MH Folk

Lisa Moscatiello
See MH Folk

Bob Moses
See MH Jazz

Pablo Moses
See MH World

Bob Mosley
See MH Rock

The Motels
See MH Rock

Bennie Moten
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Mother Earth
See MH Rock

Mother Love Bone
See MH Rock

Mother's Finest
See MH R&, MH Rock

Paul Motian
See MH Jazz

Mötley Crüe
See MH Rock

M.O.T.O.
See MH Rock

Motorcaster
See MH Rock

Motörhead
See MH Rock

The Motors
See MH Rock

Motown
See MH R&B

Mott the Hoople
See MH Rock

Tony Mottola
See MH Lounge

Bob Mould
See MH Rock

Paul Mounsey
See MH World

Mountain
See MH Rock

Nana Mouskouri
See MH Lounge

Mouth Music
See MH Folk, MH World

Alphonse Mouzon
See MH Jazz

The Move
See MH Rock

Moving Cloud
See MH Folk, MH World

Moving Hearts
See MH Folk, MH World

Judy Mowatt
See MH World

Moxy Früvous
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Famoudou Don Moye
See MH Jazz

Alison Moyet
See MH R&B, MH Rock

George Mraz
See MH Jazz

Bheki Mseleku
See MH Jazz

Tshala Muana
See MH World

Abdel Aziz El Mubarak
See MH World

Mud
See MH Rock

Mudhoney
See MH Rock

Karen Mueller
See MH Folk

The Muffs
See MH Rock

Ann Mayo Muir
See MH Folk

Mujician
See MH Jazz

Ephat Mujuru
See MH World

Maria Muldaur
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH R&B

Muleskinner
See MH Country, MH Folk

Joe Mulholland
See MH Jazz

Heidi Muller
See MH Folk

Moon Mullican
See MH Country, MH Swing

Gerry Mulligan
See MH Jazz

Peter Mulvey
See MH Folk

Brendan Mulvihill
See MH Folk

The Mumps
See MH Rock

Alan Munde
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Hugh Mundell
See MH World

Jerry Murad's Harmonicats
See MH Lounge

Lee Murdock
See MH Folk

Shirley Murdock
See MH R&B

The Murmurs
See MH Rock

Michael Martin Murphey
See MH Country, MH Folk

Colm Murphy
See MH Folk

David Lee Murphy
See MH Country

Eddie Murphy
See MH R&B

Elliott Murphy
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Mark Murphy
See MH Jazz

Matt "Guitar" Murphy
See MH Blues

Peter Murphy
See MH Rock

Turk Murphy
See MH Jazz

Anne Murray
See MH Country, MH Lounge

David Murray
See MH Jazz

Keith Murray
See MH R&B

Sunny Murray
See MH Jazz

Maryam Mursal
See MH World

Junior Murvin
See MH World

Music Explosion
See MH Rock

Music Machine
See MH Rock

Music Revelation Ensemble
See MH Jazz

Musical Knights
See MH Swing

Musical Youth
See MH World

Musicians of the Nile
See MH World

Charlie Musselwhite
See MH Blues

Sabah Habas Mustapha
See MH World

Mutabaruka
See MH World

Muzsikás
See MH World

My Bloody Valentine
See MH Rock

My Drug Hell
See MH Rock

My Life with the Thrill Kill Kult
See MH Rock

Alicia Myers
See MH R&B

Amina Claudine Myers
See MH Jazz

Dave Myers
See MH Blues

Louis Myers
See MH Blues

Heather Myles
See MH Country

Mynta
See MH World

Mysteries of Life
See MH Rock

The Mystic Moods Orchestra
See MH Lounge

Mystikal
See MH R&B

Jim Nabors
See MH Lounge

Mark Naftalin
See MH Blues

Naftule's Dream
See MH World

Arnie Naiman & Chris Coole
See MH Folk

Najee
See MH Jazz

Najma
See MH World

R. Carlos Nakai
See MH World

Naked City
See MH Jazz

Naked Eyes
See MH Rock

Naked Raygun
See MH Rock

Ray Nance
See MH Jazz

Nancy Boy
See MH Rock

Andy Narell
See MH Jazz

Nas
See MH R&B

Milton Nascimento
See MH Jazz, MH World

Graham Nash
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Johnny Nash
See MH R&B, MH World

Lewis Nash
See MH Jazz

Ted Nash
See MH Jazz

The Nashville Bluegrass Band
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Nashville Mandolin Ensemble
See MH Country

The Nashville Super Guitars
See MH Country

The Nashville Superpickers
See MH Country

Nashville Teens
See MH Rock

Nat Adderley
See MH Jazz

Pandit Pran Nath
See MH World

Nathan & the Zydeco Cha Chas
See MH Folk, MH World

Native Flute Ensemble
See MH World

Naughty By Nature
See MH R&B

Joel Nava
See MH Country

Emilio Navaira
See MH Country, MH World

Theodore "Fats" Navarro
See MH Jazz

Nazareth
See MH Rock

Me'Shell Ndegéocello
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Youssou N'Dour
See MH World

Kenny Neal
See MH Blues

Raful Neal
See MH Blues

Neal & Leandra
See MH Folk

Holly Near
See MH Folk

Ned's Atomic Dustbin
See MH Rock

Negativland
See MH Rock

Buell Neidlinger
See MH Jazz

Fred Neil
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Vince Neil
See MH Rock

Ben Neill
See MH Jazz, MH Rock

Nelson (pop-metal)
See MH Rock

Nelson (calypso)
See MH World

Bill Nelson
See MH Rock

L.F. Nelson
See MH Blues

Mark Nelson
See MH Folk

Oliver Nelson
See MH Jazz

Ozzie Nelson
See MH Swing

Rick Nelson
See MH Country, MH Rock

Shara Nelson
See MH Rock

Tracy Nelson
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Willie Nelson
See MH Country, MH Folk

Peter Nero
See MH Lounge

Ann Nesby
See MH R&B

Michael Nesmith
See MH Country, MH Folk

Neurotic Outsiders
See MH Rock

Neutral Milk Hotel
See MH Rock

Aaron Neville
See MH Country

The Neville Brothers
See MH Country, MH R&B, MH Rock

Al Nevins
See MH Lounge

New Bohemians
See MH Rock

The New Bomb Turks
See MH Rock

The New Christy Minstrels
See MH Folk

The New Colony Six
See MH Rock

The New Coon Creek Girls
See MH Country

New Edition
See MH R&B

New Golden Ring
See MH Folk

The New Grass Revival
See MH Country, MH Folk

New Jersey Casino Orchestra
See MH Swing

New Kids on the Block
See MH R&B, MH Rock

New Kingdom
See MH R&B

New Kingston Trio
See MH Folk

The New Lost City Ramblers
See MH Country, MH Folk

New Model Army
See MH Rock

The New Morty Show
See MH Swing

New Order
See MH Rock

The New Orleans Klezmer All Stars
See MH World

New Power Generation
See MH R&B

New Riders of the Purple Sage
See MH Country, MH Rock

The New St. George
See MH Folk

The New Tradition
See MH Country

New Vintage
See MH Country

New York Composers Orchestra
See MH Jazz

The New York Dolls
See MH Rock

New York Jazz Quartet
See MH Jazz

Hambone Willie Newbern
See MH Blues

Phineas Newborn Jr.
See MH Jazz

Newcleus
See MH R&B

Carrie Newcomer
See MH Folk

Martin Newell
See MH Rock

Anthony Newley
See MH Lounge

David "Fathead" Newman
See MH Jazz

Jimmy C. Newman
See MH Country, MH Folk

Joe Newman
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Randy Newman
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Juice Newton
See MH Country

Wayne Newton
See MH Lounge

Olivia Newton-John
See MH Country, MH Lounge, MH Rock

NG La Banda
See MH World

Mbongeni Ngema
See MH World

Samba Ngo
See MH World

Maire Ní Chathasaigh
See MH Folk, MH World

Maighread Ní Dhomhnaill
See MH World

Tríona Ní Dhomhnaill
See MH Folk, MH World

Nice & Smooth
See MH R&B

Herbie Nichols
See MH Jazz

Joe Nichols
See MH Country

Stevie Nicks
See MH Rock

Nico
See MH Rock

The Nields
See MH Folk

Night Ranger
See MH Rock

Robert Nighthawk
See MH Blues

Nightnoise
See MH Folk, MH World

Willie Nile
See MH Rock

Harry Nilsson
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Leonard Nimoy
See MH Lounge

Nine
See MH R&B

nine inch nails
See MH Rock

Nineteen Wheels
See MH Rock

Nirvana
See MH Rock

The Nitty Gritty Dirt Band
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Nitzer Ebb
See MH Rock

Bern Nix
See MH Jazz

Mojo Nixon
See MH Rock

The Nixons
See MH Rock

West Nkosi
See MH World

No Doubt
See MH Rock

No Strings Attached
See MH Folk

Noa
See MH World

Ray Noble
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Nocy
See MH World

NOFX
See MH Rock

Nomos
See MH World

The Nonce
See MH R&B

Nonchalant
See MH R&B

Jimmie Noone
See MH Jazz

Sugar Ray Norcia
See MH Swing

Nordan Project
See MH World

Ken Nordine
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Chris Norman
See MH Folk

Norman & Kolodner
See MH Folk

Walter Norris
See MH Jazz

Alex North
See MH Lounge

Northampton Harmony
See MH Folk

Northern Lights
See MH Folk

Kevin Norton
See MH Jazz

Red Norvo
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Notorious B.I.G.
See MH R&B

The Notting Hillbillies
See MH Country

Heather Nova
See MH Rock

Nova Mob
See MH Rock

Billy Novick
See MH Folk

NRBQ
See MH Country, MH Rock

NRG Ensemble
See MH Jazz

N2Deep
See MH R&B

The Nudes
See MH Folk

Ted Nugent
See MH Rock

Nuisance
See MH Rock

Darrell Nulisch
See MH Blues

Gary Numan
See MH Rock

Clara Nunes
See MH World

Nuno
See MH Rock

N.W.A.
See MH R&B

Scott Nygaard
See MH Country, MH Folk

Sven Nyhus
See MH World

The Nylons
See MH Folk, MH Lounge

Sally Nyolo
See MH World

Laura Nyro
See MH Folk, MH R&B, MH Rock

The Oak Ridge Boys
See MH Country

Oasis
See MH Rock

Ebenezer Obey
See MH World

Oblivion Express
See MH Rock

Oblivious
See MH Rock

Hod O'Brien
See MH Jazz

Tim O'Brien
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Swing

O'Bryan
See MH R&B

O.C.
See MH R&B

Ric Ocasek
See MH Rock

Billy Ocean
See MH R&B

Ocean Colour Scene
See MH Rock

Phil Ochs
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Helen O'Connell
See MH Swing

Maura O'Connell
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

Robbie O'Connell
See MH World

Mark O'Connor
See MH Country, MH Folk

Martin O'Connor
See MH Folk

Sinéad O'Connor
See MH Lounge, MH Rock, MH World

Odadaa!
See MH World

Anita O'Day
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Molly O'Day
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Odds
See MH Rock

St. Louis Jimmy Oden
See MH Blues

Odetta
See MH Folk

Andrew "B.B." Odom
See MH Blues

Eugene O'Donnell
See MH Folk

Off Broadway usa
See MH Rock

The Offspring
See MH Rock

Liam O'Flynn
See MH Folk, MH World

Ayub Ogada
See MH World

O.G.C. (Originoo Gun Clappaz)
See MH R&B

Betty O'Hara
See MH Jazz

Helen O'Hara
See MH World

Jamie O'Hara
See MH Country

Mary Margaret O'Hara
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Patrick O'Hearn
See MH Rock

The Ohio Express
See MH Rock

The Ohio Players
See MH R&B

Oingo Boingo
See MH Rock

The O'Jays
See MH R&B

The O'Kanes
See MH Country

Sonny Okosun
See MH World

Ol' Dirty Bastard
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Victor Olaiya
See MH World

Babatunde Olatunji
See MH World

Old 97's
See MH Country, MH Rock

Old & in the Way
See MH Country, MH Folk

Old & New Dreams
See MH Jazz

Old Blind Dogs
See MH Folk

Mike Oldfield
See MH Rock

Will Oldham
See MH Rock

Olive
See MH Rock

Joe "King" Oliver
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Olivia Tremor Control
See MH Rock

Jane Olivor
See MH Lounge

David Olney
See MH Folk

Olodum
See MH World

Kristina Olsen
See MH Folk

Olympic Death Squad
See MH Rock

Omar & the Howlers
See MH Blues

OMC
See MH Rock, MH World

Omni Trio
See MH Rock

Kongar-ool Ondar
See MH World

The 101 Strings
See MH Lounge

One Riot One Ranger
See MH Country

One Way
See MH R&B

One World Ensemble
See MH Jazz

Alexander O'Neal
See MH R&B

Shaquille O'Neal
See MH R&B

Remmy Ongala
See MH World

Junko Onishi
See MH Jazz

The Only Ones
See MH Rock

Yoko Ono
See MH Rock

Oku Onuora
See MH World

Onyx
See MH R&B

Opal
See MH Rock

OP8
See MH Rock

Open House
See MH World

Orange Juice
See MH Lounge

Orange 9mm
See MH Rock

The Orb
See MH Rock

Roy Orbison
See MH Country, MH Rock

Orbit
See MH Rock

William Orbit
See MH Rock

Orbital
See MH Rock

Orchestra Baobob
See MH World

Orchestra Marrabenta Star de Moçambique
See MH World

Orchestra Virunga
See MH World

Orchestral Manoeuvres in the Dark
See MH Rock

Orchestre National de Barbès
See MH World

Oregon
See MH Jazz

Organized Konfusion
See MH R&B

Peadar Ó Riada
See MH World

Seán Ó Riada
See MH World

Oriental Brothers
See MH World

Original Dixieland Jazz Band
See MH Jazz

The Original Harmony Ridge Creek Dippers
See MH Rock

Orion
See MH Country, MH Rock

Orion the Hunter
See MH Rock

Tony Orlando
See MH Lounge

Jim O'Rourke
See MH Rock

The Orphan Newsboys
See MH Jazz

Orquesta Aragon
See MH World

Orquestra Was
See MH Rock

Benjamin Orr
See MH Rock

Robert Ellis Orrall
See MH Country

Orrall & Wright
See MH Country

A. Paul Ortega
See MH World

Kid Ory
See MH Jazz

Geffery Oryema
See MH World

Chief Steven Osita Osadebe
See MH World

Joan Osborne
See MH Rock

The Osborne Brothers
See MH Country, MH Folk

Ozzy Osbourne
See MH Rock

Greg Osby
See MH Jazz

Paul Oscher
See MH Blues

Osibisa
See MH R&B, MH World

K.T. Oslin
See MH Country

Marie Osmond
See MH Country

The Osmonds
See MH Rock

Ossian
See MH Folk, MH World

Peter Ostroushko
See MH Country, MH Folk

Gilbert O'Sullivan
See MH Rock

Other Dimensions in Music
See MH Jazz

Johnny Otis
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH R&B, MH Rock

Shuggie Otis
See MH R&B

Ottopasuna
See MH World

Our Lady Peace
See MH Rock

The Out-Islanders
See MH Lounge

The Outfield
See MH Rock

OutKast
See MH R&B

The Outlaws
See MH Country, MH Rock

The Outsiders
See MH Rock

Paul Overstreet
See MH Country

Orlando "Doctor Ganga" Owah
See MH World

Buck Owens
See MH Country, MH Rock

Jack Owens
See MH Blues

Jay Owens
See MH Blues

Tony Oxley
See MH Jazz

O'Yaba
See MH World

The Oyster Band
See MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

The Ozark Mountain Daredevils
See MH Country

Talip Ozkan
See MH World

Ozomatli
See MH World

Makoto Ozone
See MH Jazz

P
See MH Rock

Augustus Pablo
See MH World

Johnny Pacheco
See MH World

Oran "Hot Lips" Page
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Patti Page
See MH Country, MH Lounge

Paul Page
See MH Lounge

Richard Page
See MH Rock

Page & Plant
See MH Rock, MH World

Cyril Pahinui
See MH Folk

Gabby Pahinui
See MH Folk, MH World

James "Bla" Pahinui
See MH Folk

The Pahinui Brothers
See MH Folk, MH World

Pailhead
See MH Rock

Palace
See MH Rock

The Paladins
See MH Swing

Pale Saints
See MH Rock

Tom Paley
See MH Folk

Jeff Palmer
See MH Jazz

Robert Palmer
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Tena Palmer
See MH Jazz

Charlie Palmieri
See MH World

Eddie Palmieri
See MH Jazz, MH World

The Pan-African Orchestra
See MH World

Korla Pandit
See MH Lounge

The Pandoras
See MH Rock

Pansy Division
See MH Rock

Pantera
See MH Rock

Papas Fritas
See MH Rock

Ivo Papasov
See MH World

Paperboy
See MH R&B

Paris
See MH R&B

Mica Paris
See MH R&B

Park Central Squares
See MH Rock

Billy Parker
See MH Country

Bobby Parker
See MH Blues

Caryl Mack Parker
See MH Country

Charlie Parker
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Evan Parker
See MH Jazz

Graham Parker
See MH Rock

Junior Parker
See MH Blues

Leon Parker
See MH Jazz

Maceo Parker
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Ray Parker Jr.
See MH R&B

William Parker
See MH Jazz

Van Dyke Parks
See MH Rock

Horace Parlan
See MH Jazz

Parliament/Parliament-Funkadelic
See MH Rock

Parlor James
See MH Country, MH Rock

David Parmley, Scott Vestal & Continental Divide
See MH Country

Lee Roy Parnell
See MH Country

Alan Parsons
See MH Rock

Gene Parsons
See MH Country

Gram Parsons
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Niamh Parsons
See MH Folk, MH World

Terry Parsons
See MH Lounge

Dolly Parton
See MH Country

Stella Parton
See MH Country

The Partridge Family
See MH Rock

Abida Parveen
See MH World

Margareta Paslaru
See MH World

Alan Pasqua
See MH Jazz

Joe Pass
See MH Jazz

Passengers
See MH Rock

Passion
See MH R&B

Deb Pasternak
See MH Folk

Jaco Pastorius
See MH Jazz

Patato
See MH World

Mandy Patinkin
See MH Lounge

John Patitucci
See MH Jazz

Sandy & Caroline Paton
See MH Folk

Patrick Street
See MH Folk, MH World

Don Patterson
See MH Jazz

Charley Patton
See MH Blues, MH Folk

John Patton
See MH Jazz

Billy Paul
See MH R&B

Ellis Paul
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Gayla Drake Paul
See MH Folk

Les Paul
See MH Country, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Pat Paulsen
See MH Folk

Pavement
See MH Rock

Mario Pavone
See MH Jazz

Paw
See MH Rock

Tom Paxton
See MH Folk

Johnny Paycheck
See MH Country

Cecil Payne
See MH Jazz

Freda Payne
See MH R&B

Jim Payne
See MH World

Nicholas Payton
See MH Jazz

Peach Union
See MH Rock

Peaches & Herb
See MH R&B

Gary Peacock
See MH Jazz

Minnie Pearl
See MH Lounge

Pearl Jam
See MH Rock

Duke Pearson
See MH Jazz

Peatbog Faeries
See MH World

Pebbles
See MH R&B

Herb Pedersen
See MH Country, MH Folk

Don Pedi
See MH Folk

Gnonnas Pedro
See MH World

Ann Peebles
See MH Folk, MH R&B

Peg Leg Sam
See MH Blues

Bob & Carole Pegg
See MH Folk

Dave Pegg & Friends
See MH Rock

George Pegram
See MH Folk

Dave Pell
See MH Lounge

Pell Mell
See MH Rock

Paco Peña
See MH World

Teddy Pendergrass
See MH R&B

The Penguins
See MH R&B

CeCe Peniston
See MH R&B

Michael Penn
See MH Rock

J.P. Pennington
See MH Country

Pentangle
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Tommy Peoples
See MH Folk, MH World

Ken Peplowski
See MH Jazz

Art Pepper
See MH Jazz

Percussion Incorporated
See MH World

Pere Ubu
See MH Rock

Ivo Perelman
See MH Jazz

Chris Perez
See MH World

Danilo Perez
See MH Jazz

Lourdes Perez
See MH World

Perfect
See MH Rock

Perfect Stranger
See MH Country

Perfect Thyroid
See MH World

Carl Perkins
See MH Country, MH Jazz, MH Rock, MH Swing

Larry Perkins
See MH Country, MH Folk

Pinetop Perkins
See MH Blues, MH Swing

Itzhak Perlman
See MH World

Ken Perlman
See MH Folk

Permanent Green Light
See MH Rock

Tom Peron/Bud Spangler Quartet
See MH Jazz

Jean-Jacques Perrey
See MH Lounge

Perrey & Kingsley
See MH Lounge

Lee "Scratch" Perry
See MH World

Steve Perry
See MH Rock

Cliff Perry & Laurel Bliss
See MH Folk

Rufus Perryman
See MH Blues

William Perryman
See MH Blues

Eric Person
See MH Jazz

Houston Person
See MH Jazz

The Persuasions
See MH R&B

Pet
See MH Rock

Pet Shop Boys
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Pete Rock & C.L. Smooth
See MH R&B

Peter & Gordon
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Peter, Paul & Mary
See MH Folk

Bernadette Peters
See MH Lounge

Gretchen Peters
See MH Country

Mike Peters
See MH Rock

Sir Shina Peters
See MH World

James Peterson
See MH Blues

Judge Kenneth Peterson
See MH Blues

Lucky Peterson
See MH Blues

Oscar Peterson
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Ralph Peterson Jr.
See MH Jazz

Petra
See MH Rock

Michel Petrucciani
See MH Jazz

Ed Pettersen
See MH Folk

Al Petteway
See MH Folk

Pierce Pettis
See MH Folk

Tom Petty & the Heartbreakers
See MH Rock

Robert Petway
See MH Blues

Cornel Pewewardy
See MH World

Madeleine Peyroux
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Liz Phair
See MH Rock

Phalanx
See MH Jazz

Phantom, Rocker & Slick
See MH Rock

Pharcyde
See MH R&B

Arthur Phelps
See MH Blues

Kelly Joe Phelps
See MH Folk

Philadelphia International
See MH R&B

Regis Philbin
See MH Lounge

Brewer Phillips
See MH Blues

Bruce U. "Utah" Phillips
See MH Folk

Dewey Phillips
See MH R&B

Esther Phillips
See MH R&B

Flip Phillips
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Sam Phillips
See MH Rock

Todd Phillips
See MH Folk

Utah Phillips
See MH Folk

Washington Phillips
See MH Folk

Stu Phillips/Stu Phillips Singers
See MH Lounge

Peter Phippen
See MH World

Phish
See MH Rock

Phranc
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Edith Piaf
See MH Lounge

Piano C. Red
See MH Blues

Piano Red
See MH Blues, MH Swing

Rod Piazza
See MH Blues

Astor Piazzolla
See MH World

Greg Piccolo
See MH Blues

Dan Pickett
See MH Blues

Wilson Pickett
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Picketts
See MH Country

Pieces of a Dream
See MH Jazz

The Pied Pipers
See MH Lounge

Enrico Pieranunzi
See MH Jazz

Billie and De De Pierce
See MH Jazz

Billy Pierce
See MH Jazz

Jo Carol Pierce
See MH Country, MH Folk

Webb Pierce
See MH Country

Pigpen
See MH Jazz

Billy Pilgrim
See MH Rock

John Pinamonti
See MH Folk

Mike Pinder
See MH Rock

Courtney Pine
See MH Jazz

Pine Valley Cosmonauts
See MH Swing

Piney Creek Weasels
See MH Folk

Pink Floyd
See MH Rock

Pinkard & Bowden
See MH Country

Pirates of the Mississippi
See MH Country

Pistoleros
See MH Rock

Lonnie Pitchford
See MH Blues

Gene Pitney
See MH Country, MH Rock

The Pixies
See MH Rock

Pixinguinha
See MH World

John Pizzarelli
See MH Jazz

Pizzicato Five
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

The Plaid Family
See MH Folk

Plainsong
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Plank Road
See MH Folk

Robert Plant
See MH Rock

Planxty
See MH Folk, MH World

Plastikman
See MH Rock

The Platters
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Pleasure Barons
See MH Rock

The Plimsouls
See MH Rock

Dan Plonsey
See MH Jazz

PM Dawn
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Poco
See MH Country, MH Rock

Poe
See MH Rock

The Pogues
See MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

Poi Dog Pondering
See MH Rock

Buster Poindexter
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Noel Pointer
See MH Jazz

The Pointer Sisters
See MH R&B

Poison
See MH Rock

Martti Pokela
See MH World

Ed Polcer
See MH Jazz

The Police
See MH Rock, MH World

Ben Pollack
See MH Swing

Robert Pollard
See MH Rock

Steve Poltz
See MH Rock

Polytown
See MH Rock

Doc Pomus
See MH Blues, MH R&B

Jean-Luc Ponty
See MH Jazz

The Poodles
See MH Folk

Pooh-Man
See MH R&B

Charlie Poole
See MH Country, MH Folk

Poor Righteous Teachers
See MH R&B

The Poozies
See MH Folk

Iggy Pop
See MH Rock

Pop Will Eat Itself
See MH Rock

Popa Chubby
See MH Blues

Odean Pope
See MH Jazz

Porno for Pyros
See MH Rock

Portastatic
See MH Rock

Art Porter
See MH Jazz

Cole Porter
See MH Lounge

Portishead
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Jerry Portnoy
See MH Blues

Portrait
See MH R&B

Sandy Posey
See MH Country

The Posies
See MH Rock

Positive K
See MH R&B

Robert Poss
See MH Rock

Possum Dixon
See MH Rock

Poster Children
See MH Rock

Chris Potter
See MH Jazz

Steve Pottier & Sandy Rothman
See MH Folk

MC Potts
See MH Country

Bud Powell
See MH Jazz

Dick Powell
See MH Lounge

Dirk Powell
See MH Folk

The Power Station
See MH Rock

Power Tools
See MH Jazz

Powerman 5000
See MH Rock

Johnny Powers
See MH Rock

Perez Prado
See MH Lounge, MH World

Prairie Oyster
See MH Country

Tom Prasada-Rao
See MH Folk

Preacher Boy
See MH Blues

Preacher Jack
See MH Swing

Prefab Sprout
See MH Rock

Presence
See MH Rock

The Preservation Hall Jazz Band
See MH Jazz

The President
See MH Jazz

The Presidents of the United States of America
See MH Rock

Elvis Presley
See MH Blues, MH Country, MH Lounge, MH Rock, MH Swing

Billy Preston
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Pretenders
See MH Rock

Pretty & Twisted
See MH Rock

Pretty Things
See MH Rock

Andre Previn
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Bobby Previte
See MH Jazz

Lloyd Price
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Ray Price
See MH Country

Sam Price
See MH Blues, MH Jazz

Toni Price
See MH Country

Charley Pride
See MH Country

Gertrude Pridgett
See MH Blues

Maxi Priest
See MH World

Julian Priester
See MH Jazz

Louis Prima & Keely Smith
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Prima Materia
See MH Jazz

Primal Scream
See MH Rock

Primeaux & Mike
See MH World

John Primer
See MH Blues

Gary Primich
See MH Blues

Primitive Characters
See MH Folk

Primus
See MH Rock

Prince
See MH R&B, MH Rock

John Prine
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Marcus Printup
See MH Jazz

Maddy Prior
See MH Folk, MH World

P.J. Proby
See MH Rock

The Proclaimers
See MH Rock

Procol Harum
See MH Rock

Prodigy
See MH Rock

Professor Griff
See MH Rock

Professor Longhair
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH R&B

Professor X
See MH R&B

Profile Records
See MH R&B

Projekct Two
See MH Rock

Prong
See MH Rock

Chuck Prophet
See MH Rock

Willis Prudhomme
See MH Folk, MH World

Snooky Pryor
See MH Blues

Arthur Prysock
See MH Jazz

The Psychedelic Furs
See MH Rock

Psychograss
See MH Country, MH Folk

Public Enemy
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Public Image Ltd.
See MH Rock

Riley Puckett
See MH Country, MH Folk

Gary Puckett & the Union Gap
See MH Rock

Tito Puente
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH World

Puff Daddy
See MH R&B

Roberto Pulido
See MH World

Don Pullen
See MH Jazz

Pulp
See MH Rock

The Pulsars
See MH Rock

Jimmy Purcey
See MH Rock

Bernard Purdie
See MH Jazz

Pure Prairie League
See MH Country, MH Rock

Bobby and James Purify
See MH R&B

Flora Purim
See MH Jazz, MH World

Elaine Purkey
See MH Folk

The Purple Outside
See MH Rock

The Pursuit of Happiness
See MH Rock

Quad City DJ's
See MH R&B

Quarterflash
See MH Rock

Suzi Quatro
See MH Rock

Finley Quaye
See MH Rock

Ike Quebec
See MH Jazz

Queen
See MH Rock

Queen Ida
See MH Folk, MH World

Queen Latifah
See MH R&B

Queensryche
See MH Rock

The Queers
See MH Rock

Quest
See MH Jazz

? and the Mysterians
See MH Rock

Quicksilver Messenger Service
See MH Rock

Quickspace
See MH Rock

Quiet Riot
See MH Rock

Robert Quine
See MH Rock

Paul Quinichette
See MH Jazz

The Quintet of the Hot Club of France
See MH Jazz

Eddie Rabbitt
See MH Country

Ann Rabson
See MH Folk

Yank Rachell
See MH Blues

Bobby Radcliff
See MH Blues

Radio Kings
See MH Blues

Radio Tarifa
See MH World

Radiohead
See MH Rock

Boyd Raeburn
See MH Swing

Gerry Rafferty
See MH Folk

Raffi
See MH Folk

Rage Against the Machine
See MH Rock

Rail Band
See MH World

Railroad Jerk
See MH Rock

Railway Children
See MH Rock

The Rain Parade
See MH Rock

Rain Tree Crow
See MH Rock

Rainbow
See MH Rock

The Raincoats
See MH Rock

Ma Rainey
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH R&B

Raise the Rafters
See MH Folk

Bonnie Raitt
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH Rock

John Raitt
See MH Lounge

RAM
See MH World

The Ramones
See MH Rock

Willis Alan Ramsey
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Hossam Ramzy
See MH World

Lee Ranaldo
See MH Rock

Ranch Romance
See MH Country, MH Folk

Rancid
See MH Rock

Jon Randall
See MH Country

Boots Randolph
See MH Country, MH Lounge

Jimmy Raney
See MH Jazz

Wayne Raney
See MH Country

Ernest Ranglin
See MH World

Rank & File
See MH Country, MH Rock

The Rankin Family
See MH Folk

Ranking Roger
See MH Rock

Shabba Ranks
See MH R&B, MH World

Enzo Rao
See MH World

Rappin' 4-Tay
See MH R&B

Rara Machine
See MH World

Rare Earth
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Rarely Herd
See MH Country

Ras Kass
See MH R&B

Moses Rascoe
See MH Blues

Rasha
See MH World

The Raspberries
See MH Rock

Rasputina
See MH Rock

Ratt
See MH Rock

Ravel
See MH World

Eddy Raven
See MH Country

Lou Rawls
See MH Lounge, MH R&B

Johnnie Ray
See MH Lounge, MH Rock, MH Swing

Kenny "Blue" Ray
See MH Blues

Michael Ray
See MH Jazz

Sean Ray
See MH Rock

Ray, Goodman & Brown
See MH R&B

Ray J
See MH R&B

The Raybeats
See MH Rock

Collin Raye
See MH Country

RBX
See MH R&B

Chris Rea
See MH Rock

David Rea
See MH Folk

"Cheese" Read
See MH Folk

Eddi Reader
See MH Rock

Ready for the World
See MH R&B

Bernice Johnson Reagon
See MH Folk

Toshi Reagon
See MH Folk

Real Live
See MH R&B

Mac Rebennack
See MH Blues

The Rebirth Brass Band
See MH Folk, MH Jazz

Recoil
See MH Rock

The Records
See MH Rock

Red & the Red Hots
See MH Swing

The Red Clay Ramblers
See MH Country, MH Folk

Red Hot Chili Peppers
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Red House Painters
See MH Rock

Red Mountain White Trash
See MH Folk

Red Plastic Bag
See MH World

Red Tail Chasing Hawks
See MH World

Leon Redbone
See MH Folk

Redd Kross
See MH Rock

Otis Redding
See MH Folk, MH R&B, MH Rock

Helen Reddy
See MH Lounge

Redman
See MH R&B

Dewey Redman
See MH Jazz

Don Redman
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Joshua Redman
See MH Jazz

Redneck Greece
See MH Country

Rednex
See MH Rock

Jean Redpath
See MH Folk, MH World

Dizzy Reece
See MH Jazz

A.C. Reed
See MH Blues

Blind Alfred Reed
See MH Folk

Dalton Reed
See MH Blues

Eric Reed
See MH Jazz

Francine Reed
See MH Blues

Jerry Reed
See MH Country

Jimmy Reed
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Lou Reed
See MH Rock

Eddie Reed Big Band
See MH Swing

Reef
See MH Rock

The Reegs
See MH Rock

Della Reese
See MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Swing

Del Reeves
See MH Country

Dianne Reeves
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Jim Reeves
See MH Country

Ronna Reeves
See MH Country

The Refreshments
See MH Rock

Elis Regina
See MH World

Regina Regina
See MH Country

Harvey Reid
See MH Folk

Lou Reid
See MH Country

Rufus Reid
See MH Jazz

Vernon Reid
See MH Rock

Django Reinhardt
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

John Reischman
See MH Folk

Relativity
See MH Folk

R.E.M.
See MH Rock

The Rembrandts
See MH Rock

Cheikha Remitti
See MH World

Emily Remler
See MH Jazz

Renaissance
See MH Rock

John Renbourn
See MH Folk

Henri Rene
See MH Lounge

Rene & Angela
See MH R&B

Renegades
See MH Folk

Johnny Reno
See MH Blues, MH Swing

Don Reno & Red Smiley
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Rentals
See MH Rock

REO Speedwagon
See MH Rock

The Replacements
See MH Rock

Republica
See MH Rock

The Residents
See MH Rock

Restless Heart
See MH Country

Return to Forever
See MH Jazz

Paul Revere & the Raiders
See MH Rock

Revolting Cocks
See MH Rock

The Revolutionary Ensemble
See MH Jazz

Alvino Rey
See MH Lounge

Debbie Reynolds
See MH Lounge

The Rezillos
See MH Rock

Emmit Rhodes
See MH Rock

Kimmie Rhodes
See MH Country, MH Folk

Sonny Rhodes
See MH Blues

Melvin Rhyne
See MH Jazz

Rhythm Rats
See MH Folk

Marc Ribot
See MH Jazz, MH Rock

Tim Rice
See MH Lounge

Tony Rice
See MH Country, MH Folk

Rice Brothers
See MH Folk

Buddy Rich
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Charlie Rich
See MH Country, MH Lounge

Tony Rich Project
See MH R&B

Cliff Richard
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Willie Richard
See MH Blues

Zachary Richard
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH World

Keith Richards
See MH Rock

Sue Richards
See MH Folk

The Richards
See MH Rock

Kim Richey
See MH Country, MH Rock

Lionel Richie
See MH R&B

Richie Rich
See MH R&B

Jonathan Richman
See MH Folk, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Dannie Richmond
See MH Jazz

Mike Richmond
See MH World

Ricochet
See MH Country

Leslie Riddle
See MH Folk

Nelson Riddle
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Ride
See MH Rock

Bonnie Rideout
See MH Folk, MH World

Riders in the Sky
See MH Country, MH Folk

Andrew Ridgely
See MH Rock

Tommy Ridgley
See MH Blues

Amy Rigby
See MH Country, MH Rock

Will Rigby
See MH Rock

Richard Riggins
See MH Blues

The Righteous Brothers
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Odd Riisnaes
See MH Jazz

Billy Lee Riley
See MH Country, MH Swing

Jeannie C. Riley
See MH Country

Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys
See MH Folk, MH World

LeAnn Rimes
See MH Country

Jim Ringer
See MH Folk

Minnie Riperton
See MH Lounge, MH R&B

The Rippingtons
See MH Jazz

Paul Rishell
See MH Blues

Rising Sons
See MH Rock

Brian Ritchie
See MH Rock

Jean Ritchie
See MH Folk

Lee Ritenour
See MH Jazz

Rites of Spring
See MH Rock

Tex Ritter
See MH Country, MH Folk

Ritual Trio
See MH Jazz

Jimmie Rivers
See MH Country

Johnny Rivers
See MH Rock

Sam Rivers
See MH Jazz

Sam Rizzetta
See MH Folk

Archie Roach
See MH Rock, MH World

Max Roach
See MH Jazz

Steve Roach
See MH World

Roachford
See MH R&B

Roaring Lion
See MH World

Marty Robbins
See MH Country

Howard Roberts
See MH Lounge

Kathryn Roberts
See MH Folk

Kenny Roberts
See MH Country

Luckey Roberts
See MH Jazz

Marcus Roberts
See MH Jazz

Rick Roberts
See MH Rock

John Roberts & Tony Barrand
See MH Folk

Clarence "Herb" Robertson
See MH Jazz

Kim Robertson
See MH Folk, MH World

Lonnie Robertson
See MH Folk

Robbie Robertson
See MH Rock, MH World

Paul Robeson
See MH Folk, MH Lounge

Duke Robillard
See MH Blues, MH Swing

Joseph "Butch" Robins
See MH Folk

Fenton Robinson
See MH Blues

Ikey Robinson
See MH Blues

Jimmie Lee Robinson
See MH Blues

Ray Charles Robinson
See MH Blues

Tad Robinson
See MH Blues

Tom Robinson
See MH Folk

Smokey Robinson & the Miracles
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Tom Robinson Band
See MH Rock

Carson Robison
See MH Country, MH Folk

Robyn
See MH Rock

Betty Roche
See MH Jazz

Tabu Ley Rochereau
See MH World

The Roches
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Rock en Español
See MH Rock, MH World

Lee Rocker/Lee Rocker's Big Blue
See MH Rock

Rocker's Hi-Fi
See MH Rock

Rocket from the Crypt
See MH Rock

Rockin' Dopsie
See MH Folk, MH World

Rockin' Sidney
See MH Folk, MH World

Rockpile
See MH Country, MH Rock

Jerry Rockwell
See MH Folk

Rocky Boy Singers
See MH World

Judy Roderick
See MH Folk

Jimmie Rodgers
See MH Country, MH Folk

Paul Rodgers
See MH Rock

Richard Rodgers
See MH Lounge

Claudio Roditi
See MH Jazz

Red Rodney
See MH Jazz

Rodney O & Joe Cooley
See MH R&B

Amália Rodrigues
See MH World

Virginia Rodrigues
See MH World

Arsenio Rodríguez
See MH World

Johnny Rodriguez
See MH Country

Silvio Rodríguez
See MH World

Tito Rodríguez
See MH World

Tommy Roe
See MH Rock

Aldus Roger
See MH Folk, MH World

Gamble Rogers
See MH Folk

Garnet Rogers
See MH Folk

Ginger Rogers
See MH Lounge

Jimmy Rogers
See MH Blues

Kenny Rogers
See MH Country, MH Lounge

Roy Rogers (blues guitarist)
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Roy Rogers (cowboy singer)
See MH Country, MH Folk

Sally Rogers
See MH Folk

Shorty Rogers
See MH Jazz

Stan Rogers
See MH Folk

Tammy Rogers
See MH Country, MH Folk

S.E. Rogie
See MH World

Rolley Polley
See MH Lounge

The Rolling Stones
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Adrian Rollini
See MH Swing

Henry Rollins
See MH Rock

Sonny Rollins
See MH Jazz

The Romantics
See MH Rock

Romeo Void
See MH Rock

Ruben Romero & Lydia Torea
See MH World

Ron Sunshine & Full Swing
See MH Swing

The Ronettes
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Wallace Roney
See MH Jazz

Mick Ronson
See MH Rock

Linda Ronstadt
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Lounge, MH Rock, MH World

Rooftop Singers
See MH Folk

The Rooks
See MH Rock

Roomful of Blues
See MH Blues, MH Swing

The Roots
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

The Roots Radics
See MH World

Lazaro Ros
See MH World

David Rose
See MH Lounge

Doudou N'Diaye Rose
See MH World

Rose Royce
See MH R&B

Anders Rosén
See MH World

Phil Rosenthal
See MH Folk

Michele Rosewoman
See MH Jazz

Renee Rosnes
See MH Jazz

Annie Ross
See MH Jazz

Diana Ross
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Isaiah "Doc" Ross
See MH Blues

John Rossbach
See MH Folk

Rossy
See MH World

Nino Rota
See MH Lounge

Rotary Connection
See MH Lounge

David Lee Roth
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Kevin Roth
See MH Folk

Patti Rothberg
See MH Rock

Ned Rothenberg
See MH Jazz

Sandy Rothman & Steve Pottier
See MH Folk

Rottin Razkals
See MH R&B

Charlie Rouse
See MH Jazz

Rova Saxophone Quartet
See MH Jazz

Peter Rowan
See MH Country, MH Folk

Dennis Rowland
See MH Jazz

Roxette
See MH Rock

Roxy Music
See MH Rock

Badal Roy
See MH World

Billy Joe Royal
See MH Country

Royal Crescent Mob
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Royal Crown Revue
See MH Lounge, MH Rock, MH Swing

Royal Flush
See MH R&B

Royal Trux
See MH Rock

Tom Rozum
See MH Folk

RTZ
See MH Rock

Gonzalo Rubalcaba
See MH Jazz

Vanessa Rubin
See MH Jazz

The Rubinoos
See MH Rock

ruby
See MH Rock

Roswell Rudd
See MH Jazz

David Rudder
See MH World

Rude Girls
See MH Folk

Adam Rudolph
See MH Jazz, MH World

David Ruffin
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Jimmy Ruffin
See MH R&B

Kermit Ruffins
See MH Jazz

Rufus
See MH R&B

The Rugburns
See MH Rock

Hilton Ruiz
See MH Jazz

Run-D.M.C.
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Run On See MH Rock

The Runaways
See MH Rock

Todd Rundgren
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Runrig
See MH Folk, MH World

RuPaul
See MH Lounge

Rurutu Choir
See MH World

Kate Rusby
See MH Folk

Rush
See MH Rock

Bobby Rush
See MH Blues

Ed Rush
See MH Rock

Otis Rush
See MH Blues, MH R&B

Tom Rush
See MH Folk

Patrice Rushen
See MH R&B

Jimmy Rushing
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH Swing

Brenda Russell
See MH R&B

George Russell
See MH Jazz

Hal Russell
See MH Jazz

Johnny Russell
See MH Country

Kelly Russell
See MH World

Leon Russell
See MH Country, MH Rock

Pee Wee Russell
See MH Jazz

Tom Russell
See MH Country, MH Folk

Russell Family
See MH Folk

Rustavi Choir
See MH World

Rusted Root
See MH Rock

Rusty & Doug
See MH Folk

The Rutles
See MH Rock

Sonia Rutstein
See MH Folk

Cathie Ryan
See MH Folk, MH World

Matthew Ryan
See MH Rock

Tommy Ryan
See MH Lounge

Bobby Rydell
See MH Rock

Mitch Ryder
See MH Rock

Terje Rypdal
See MH Jazz

Saafir
See MH R&B

The Sabri Brothers
See MH World

G.S. Sachdev
See MH World

Sade
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B

Saffire—The Uppity Blues Women
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Balwinder Safri
See MH World

Bally Sagoo
See MH World

Doug Sahm
See MH Blues, MH Country, MH Rock

Yan Kuba Saho
See MH World

Sainkho
See MH World

St. Etienne
See MH Rock

Kate St. John
See MH Rock

Buffy Sainte-Marie
See MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

The Saints
See MH Rock

Ryuichi Sakamoto
See MH Rock, MH World

Salala
See MH World

Salamander Crossing
See MH Country, MH Folk

Salamat
See MH World

Walter Salas-Humara
See MH Rock

Curtis Salgado
See MH Blues

Salt-N-Pepa
See MH R&B

Dino Saluzzi
See MH Jazz, MH World

Sam & Dave
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Sam-Ang Sam Ensemble
See MH World

Sam the Sham & the Pharaohs
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Richie Sambora
See MH Rock

Samhain
See MH Rock

Samiam
See MH Rock

Samite
See MH World

Joe Sample
See MH Jazz

The Samples
See MH Rock

Les Sampou
See MH Folk

David Sanborn
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

David Sanchez
See MH Jazz

Poncho Sanchez
See MH Jazz, MH World

Sand Rubies
See MH Rock

Deion Sanders
See MH R&B

Pharoah Sanders
See MH Jazz

Randy Sandke
See MH Jazz

Arturo Sandoval
See MH Jazz, MH World

Tommy Sands
See MH Folk, MH World

Oumou Sangare
See MH World

Maria Sangiolo
See MH Folk

Trichy Sankaran
See MH World

Maggie Sansone
See MH Folk, MH World

Mongo Santamaria
See MH Jazz, MH World

Santana
See MH Rock, MH World

Santo & Johnny
See MH Lounge

Henry Sapoznik
See MH World

Gray Sargent
See MH Jazz

Satan & Adam
See MH Blues

Satchel
See MH Rock

Erik Satie
See MH Lounge

Joe Satriani
See MH Rock

Sausage
See MH Rock

Savage Garden
See MH Rock

Save Ferris
See MH Rock

Savoy Brown
See MH Blues, MH Rock

The Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH World

Savuka
See MH Rock

The Saw Doctors
See MH Folk

Sawyer Brown
See MH Country

Sax Maniacs
See MH Swing

Saxon
See MH Rock

Leo Sayer
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Stefan Scaggiari
See MH Jazz

Boz Scaggs
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Rock

Scandal
See MH Rock

Scartaglen
See MH Folk

The Scene Is Now
See MH Rock

Peter Scherer
See MH Rock

Lalo Schifrin
See MH Lounge

John Schlitt
See MH Rock

Claudia Schmidt
See MH Folk

Adam Schmitt
See MH Rock

David Schnaufer
See MH Country, MH Folk

John Schneider
See MH Country

Maria Schneider
See MH Jazz

Steve Schneider
See MH Folk

Rob Schneiderman
See MH Jazz

Helen Schneyer
See MH Folk

Neal Schon
See MH Rock

School of Fish
See MH Rock

Schoolly D
See MH R&B

Schooner Fare
See MH Folk

The Schramms
See MH Rock

Paul Schütze
See MH Rock

Diane Schuur
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Tracy Schwarz
See MH Folk, MH World

Tracy Schwarz & Ginny Hawker
See MH Folk

Irene Schweizer
See MH Jazz

Carla Sciaky
See MH Folk

John Scofield
See MH Jazz

Scorpions
See MH Rock

Buddy Scott
See MH Blues

Darrell Scott
See MH Folk

Dred Scott
See MH R&B

Jack Scott
See MH Country, MH Rock

Jimmy Scott
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Mike Scott
See MH Folk

Raymond Scott
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Shirley Scott
See MH Jazz

Stephen Scott
See MH Jazz

Tony Scott
See MH Jazz

Gil Scott-Heron
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Screaming Trees
See MH Rock

Screeching Weasel
See MH Rock

Scritti Politti
See MH Rock

Earl Scruggs
See MH Country, MH Folk

Gary & Randy Scruggs
See MH Country

The Scud Mountain Boys
See MH Country

Seal
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Dan Seals
See MH Country

Son Seals
See MH Blues

Seals & Crofts
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Seam
See MH Rock

Sean Nua
See MH World

The Searchers
See MH Rock

Marvin Sease
See MH R&B

Sebadoh
See MH Rock

John Sebastian
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Márta Sebestyén
See MH World

Jon Secada
See MH Rock

Mansour Seck
See MH World

Curly Seckler
See MH Country

Sector 27
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Neil Sedaka
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

The Seeds
See MH Rock

Mike Seeger
See MH Folk

Peggy Seeger
See MH Folk, MH World

Pete Seeger
See MH Folk

Jeannie Seely
See MH Country

Seelyhoo
See MH World

Jonathan Segel
See MH Rock

Bob Seger
See MH Rock

Mitch Seidman
See MH Jazz

Geoff Seitz
See MH Folk

The Seldom Scene
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Selecter
See MH Rock, MH World

Selena
See MH World

Pete Selvaggio
See MH Jazz

Semisonic
See MH Rock

The Senders
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

The Sentinels
See MH Lounge

Sepultura
See MH Rock

Charlie Sepulveda
See MH Jazz

Brian Setzer/The Brian Setzer Orchestra
See MH Rock, MH Swing

Seven Mary Three
See MH Rock

Seven Nations
See MH World

Sevendust
See MH Rock

Doc Severinsen
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

The Sex Pistols
See MH Rock

Ron Sexsmith
See MH Rock

Sexteto Boloña
See MH World

Sexteto Habanero
See MH World

Charlie Sexton
See MH Rock

Martin Sexton
See MH Folk

Morgan Sexton
See MH Folk

Phil Seymour
See MH Rock

S.F. Seals
See MH Rock

Sha-Key
See MH R&B

Shadow
See MH World

The Shadows
See MH Rock

The Shadows of Knight
See MH Rock

Shady
See MH Rock

Robert Shafer
See MH Country

Paul Shaffer
See MH Lounge

Shaggy
See MH World

Simon Shaheen
See MH World

Shakespear's Sister
See MH Rock

Shakira
See MH World

Shakti
See MH Jazz, MH World

Tupac Shakur
See MH R&B

Shalamar
See MH R&B

Sham & the Professor
See MH R&B

Sham 69
See MH Rock

The Shams
See MH Rock

Mark Shane
See MH Jazz

The Shangri-Las See MH Rock

Shanice
See MH R&B

Bob Shank
See MH Folk

Bud Shank
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Anoushka Shankar
See MH World

L. Shankar
See MH World

Lakshmi Shankar
See MH World

Ravi Shankar
See MH World

Del Shannon
See MH Rock

Mem Shannon
See MH Blues

Sharon Shannon
See MH Folk, MH World

Roxanne Shante
See MH R&B

Jamshied Sharifi
See MH World

Feargal Sharkey
See MH Rock

Shiv Kumar Sharma
See MH World

Dave Sharp
See MH Rock

Elliott Sharp
See MH Rock

Kevin Sharp
See MH Country

Sonny Sharrock
See MH Jazz

William Shatner
See MH Lounge

Billy Joe Shaver
See MH Country

Artie Shaw
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Eddie Shaw
See MH Blues

Marlena Shaw
See MH Jazz

Robert Shaw
See MH Blues

Sandie Shaw
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Tommy Shaw
See MH Rock

Victoria Shaw
See MH Country

Woody Shaw
See MH Jazz

Lauchlin Shaw & A.C. Overton
See MH Folk

Shaw-Blades
See MH Rock

Jules Shear
See MH Rock

George Shearing
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Shegui
See MH Folk

Duncan Sheik
See MH Rock

Sheila E.
See MH R&B

Shellac
See MH Rock

Pete Shelley
See MH Rock

Ricky Van Shelton
See MH Country

Shenandoah
See MH Country

Joanne Shenandoah
See MH World

Shep & the Limelites
See MH R&B

Jean Shepard
See MH Country

Vonda Shepard
See MH Rock

Kenny Wayne Shepherd
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Archie Shepp
See MH Jazz

T.G. Sheppard
See MH Country

Cosy Sheridan
See MH Folk

John Sheridan
See MH Jazz

Lonnie Shields
See MH Blues

Richard Shindell
See MH Folk

Shinehead
See MH R&B, MH World

Johnny Shines
See MH Blues

Matthew Shipp
See MH Jazz

The Shirelles
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Shivers
See MH Country

Michelle Shocked
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Shoes
See MH Rock

Jon Sholle
See MH Folk

Shonen Knife
See MH Rock

Shooglenifty
See MH Folk, MH World

Dinah Shore
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Bobby Short (tuba)
See MH Jazz

Bobby Short (vocalist)
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

J.D. Short
See MH Blues

Wayne Shorter
See MH Jazz

Showbiz & A.G.
See MH R&B

The Showmen
See MH R&B

Shriekback
See MH Rock

Shu-De
See MH World

Shudder to Think
See MH Rock

Shyheim
See MH R&B

Jane Siberry
See MH Folk, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Sick of It All
See MH Rock

The Sidemen
See MH Country

The Sidewinders
See MH Rock

Paul Siebel
See MH Folk

Dick Siegel
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Sierra Maestra
See MH World

Sileas
See MH Folk

Silk
See MH R&B

Garnett Silk
See MH World

Silkworm
See MH Rock

Silly Sisters
See MH Folk

Silly Wizard
See MH Folk, MH World

The Silos
See MH Rock

Alan Silva
See MH Jazz

Horace Silver
See MH Jazz

Silver Jews
See MH Rock

J. Reuben Silverbird
See MH World

Perry Silverbird
See MH World

silverchair
See MH Rock

Shel Silverstein
See MH Country, MH Folk

Terrance Simien
See MH World

Kim Simmonds
See MH Rock

Patrick Simmons
See MH Rock

Sonny Simmons
See MH Jazz

Carly Simon
See MH Folk, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Joe Simon
See MH R&B

Paul Simon
See MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

Simon & Garfunkel
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Nina Simone
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Mark Simos
See MH Folk

Simple Gifts
See MH Folk

Simple Minds
See MH Rock

Simply Red
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Martin Simpson
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Martin & Jessica Simpson
See MH Folk

Frankie Lee Sims
See MH Blues

Zoot Sims
See MH Jazz

Frank Sinatra
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Frank Sinatra Jr.
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Nancy Sinatra
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Singers Unlimited
See MH Lounge

Talvin Singh
See MH World

Daryle Singletary
See MH Country

Sintesis
See MH World

Siouxsie & the Banshees
See MH Rock

Sir Douglas Quintet
See MH Rock

Sir Julian
See MH Lounge

Sir Mix-a-Lot
See MH R&B

Noble Sissle
See MH Swing

Sister Carol
See MH World

Sister Hazel
See MH Rock

Sister Sledge
See MH R&B

Sister Souljah
See MH R&B

Sisters of Mercy
See MH Rock

Six Nations Women Singers
See MH World

Six Shooter
See MH Country

6 String Drag
See MH Rock

16 Horsepower
See MH Rock

Sixteen Ninety-One
See MH Folk, MH World

The 6ths
See MH Rock

Roni Size
See MH Rock

Ricky Skaggs
See MH Country, MH Folk

SKAndalous All-Stars
See MH World

Skara Brae
See MH World

The Skatalites
See MH World

Skee-Lo
See MH R&B

Skeeter & the Skidmarks
See MH Folk

The Skeletons
See MH Country, MH Rock

Skid Row
See MH Rock

The Skillet Lickers
See MH Country, MH Folk

Skinny Puppy
See MH Rock

Skunk Anansie
See MH Rock

Patrick Sky
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Sky Cries Mary
See MH Rock

Sky King
See MH Rock

Skyedance
See MH Folk, MH World

Skylark
See MH Folk

Skyy
See MH R&B

Slade
See MH Rock

Steve Slagle
See MH Jazz

Slash's Snakepit
See MH Rock

Slave
See MH R&B

Slayer
See MH Rock

Sleater-Kinney
See MH Rock

Percy Sledge
See MH Blues, MH R&B

Sleeper
See MH Rock

Sleeping Bag/Fresh Records
See MH R&B

Grace Slick
See MH Rock

Slick Rick
See MH R&B

Abdel Ali Slimani
See MH World

The Slits
See MH Rock

Sloan
See MH Rock

P.F. Sloan
See MH Rock

Carol Sloane
See MH Jazz

Slowburn
See MH Rock

Slowdive
See MH Rock

Sly & Robbie
See MH World

Sly & the Family Stone
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Drink Small
See MH Blues

Fred Small
See MH Folk

Judy Small
See MH Folk

Small Faces
See MH Rock

Smash Mouth
See MH Rock

Smashing Pumpkins
See MH Rock

Smif-N-Wessun
See MH R&B

Arthur "Guitar" Smith
See MH Country

Barkin' Bill Smith
See MH Blues

Bessie Smith
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH Jazz, MH R&B

Betty Smith
See MH Folk

Billy & Terry Smith
See MH Country

Byther Smith
See MH Blues

Carl Smith
See MH Country

Cecilia Smith
See MH Jazz

Clarence Smith
See MH Blues

Clarence Edward Smith
See MH Blues

Connie Smith
See MH Country

Curtis Smith
See MH Rock

Darden Smith
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Debi Smith
See MH Folk

Elliott Smith
See MH Rock

George "Harmonica" Smith
See MH Blues

Hal Smith
See MH Jazz

Huey "Piano" Smith
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Jabbo Smith
See MH Jazz

Jerry Read Smith
See MH Folk

Jimmy Smith
See MH Jazz

J.T. "Funny Paper" Smith
See MH Blues

Keely Smith
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Kendra Smith
See MH Rock

Leo Smith
See MH Jazz

Lonnie Smith
See MH Jazz

Lonnie Liston Smith
See MH Jazz

Louis Smith
See MH Jazz

Lynn "Chirps" Smith
See MH Folk

Marvin "Smitty" Smith
See MH Jazz

Michael Smith
See MH Folk

Patti Smith
See MH Rock

Pine Top Smith
See MH Blues

Sammi Smith
See MH Country

Stuff Smith
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Warren Smith
See MH Swing

Willie "The Lion" Smith
See MH Jazz

Lavay Smith & Her Red Hot Skillet Lickers
See MH Swing

Christina Smith & Jean Hewson
See MH World

Smith Sisters
See MH Folk

Chris Smither
See MH Blues, MH Country, MH Folk

The Smithereens
See MH Rock

The Smiths
See MH Rock

Paul Smoker
See MH Jazz

The Smokin' Armadillos
See MH Country

Smoking Popes
See MH Rock

Smoothe Da Hustler
See MH R&B

Smothers Brothers
See MH Folk

Gary Smulyan
See MH Jazz

Patty Smyth
See MH Rock

Sneaker Pimps
See MH Rock

The Sneakers
See MH Rock

Todd Snider
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Jim Snidero
See MH Jazz

Snoop Doggy Dogg
See MH R&B

Snow
See MH R&B

Hank Snow
See MH Country

Phoebe Snow
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Jill Sobule
See MH Rock

Social Distortion
See MH Rock

The Soft Boys
See MH Rock

Soft Cell
See MH Rock

Soft Machine
See MH Jazz, MH Rock

Leo Soileau
See MH Folk, MH World

Sol y Canto
See MH World

Liu Sola
See MH World

Martial Solal
See MH Jazz

Solar Records
See MH R&B

Solas
See MH Folk, MH World

James Solberg
See MH Blues

Solo
See MH R&B

Solomon Grundy
See MH Rock

Solomon's Seal
See MH Folk

The Someloves
See MH Rock

Jimmy Somerville
See MH Rock

Son of Bazerk
See MH R&B

Son Volt
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Stephen Sondheim
See MH Lounge

Songhai
See MH World

Sonic Youth
See MH Rock

Jo-El Sonnier
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH World

Sonny & Cher
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Sons of Champlin
See MH Rock

Sons of the Never Wrong
See MH Folk

Sons of the Pioneers
See MH Country, MH Folk

Sons of the San Joaquin
See MH Country

Rosalie Sorrels
See MH Folk

Sorten Muld
See MH World

The S.O.S. Band
See MH R&B

Mercedes Sosa
See MH World

Soto Koto Band
See MH World

David Soul
See MH Lounge

Soul Asylum
See MH Rock

Soul Brothers
See MH World

Soul Coughing
See MH Rock

Soul Stirrers
See MH R&B

The Soul Survivors
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Soul II Soul
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Soundgarden
See MH Rock

Sounds of Blackness
See MH R&B

Sounds of Life
See MH Rock

Epic Soundtracks
See MH Rock

The Soup Dragons
See MH Rock

Source Direct
See MH Rock

Joe South
See MH Rock

Souther-Hillman-Furay Band
See MH Country, MH Rock

Southern Culture on the Skids
See MH Rock

Southern Pacific
See MH Country

Southern Rail
See MH Country

Southern Scratch
See MH World

Southside Johnny & the Asbury Jukes
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Red Sovine
See MH Country

Space
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Spacehog
See MH Rock

Spacemen 3
See MH Rock

Spacetime Continuum
See MH Rock

Clarence Spady
See MH Blues

Spain
See MH Rock

Charlie Spand
See MH Blues

Spandau Ballet
See MH Rock

Spanic Boys
See MH Country, MH Rock

The Spaniels
See MH R&B

Muggsy Spanier
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Spanish Fly
See MH Jazz

Otis Spann
See MH Blues

Sparklehorse
See MH Rock

Sparks
See MH Rock

Larry Sparks
See MH Country, MH Folk

Sparrow
See MH World

Spearhead
See MH Rock, MH World

Glenn Spearman
See MH Jazz

Billie Jo Spears
See MH Country

Special Consensus
See MH Folk

Special Ed
See MH R&B

The Specials
See MH Rock, MH World

Speckled Red
See MH Blues

Dave Specter
See MH Blues

Phil Spector
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Ronnie Spector
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Speech
See MH Rock

Spell
See MH Rock

Bill Spence
See MH Folk

Joseph Spence
See MH Folk

Skip Spence
See MH Rock

Jon Spencer Blues Explosion
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Sphere
See MH Jazz

The Spice Girls
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Spice 1
See MH R&B

Spill
See MH Rock

Davy Spillane
See MH Folk, MH World

Spin Doctors
See MH Rock

Spinal Tap
See MH Rock

The Spinanes
See MH Rock

The Spinners
See MH R&B

Spirit
See MH Rock

Spirit of Life Ensemble
See MH Jazz

Spirit of the West
See MH Folk

Spiritual Cowboys
See MH Rock

Spiritualized
See MH Rock

Victoria Spivey
See MH Blues, MH Jazz

Splash
See MH World

Splatter Trio
See MH Jazz

Split Enz
See MH Rock

Sponge
See MH Rock

The Spongetones
See MH Rock

Spooky Tooth
See MH Rock

Spoonfed Hybrid
See MH Rock

Douglas Spotted Eagle
See MH World

Dusty Springfield
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Rick Springfield
See MH Rock

Springhouse
See MH Rock

Bruce Springsteen
See MH Rock

Dáithí Sproule
See MH World

Tobin Sprout
See MH Rock

Spyro Gyra
See MH Jazz

The Squadronaires
See MH Lounge

Squeeze
See MH Rock

Billy Squier
See MH Rock

Squire
See MH Rock

Squirrel Bait
See MH Rock

Squirrel Nut Zippers
See MH Lounge, MH Rock, MH Swing

U. Srinivas
See MH World

Stabbing Westward
See MH Rock

Houston Stackhouse
See MH Blues

Jim Stafford
See MH Country

Jo Stafford
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Terry Stafford
See MH Country

Jeanie Stahl
See MH Folk

Bill Staines
See MH Folk

Carl Stalling
See MH Lounge

Mary Stallings
See MH Jazz

Chris Stamey
See MH Rock

Marvin Stamm
See MH Jazz

Joe Stampley
See MH Country

The Standells
See MH Rock

Sunita Staneslow
See MH World

Ralph Stanley & the Clinch Mountain Boys
See MH Country, MH Folk

The Stanley Brothers
See MH Country, MH Folk

Lisa Stansfield
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Staple Singers
See MH R&B

Pops Staples
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Rigo Star
See MH World

John Starling
See MH Country

Edwin Starr
See MH R&B

Kay Starr
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Ringo Starr
See MH Rock

The Statler Brothers
See MH Country

Andy Statman
See MH Folk, MH World

Candi Staton
See MH R&B

Dakota Staton
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Status Quo
See MH Rock

Stax-Volt
See MH R&B

Red Steagall
See MH Country, MH Folk

Stealers Wheel
See MH Folk

Jody Stecher & Kate Brislin
See MH Folk

Steel Pulse
See MH World

Davy Steele
See MH Folk

Tommy Steele
See MH Rock

Steeleye Span
See MH Folk, MH World

Steely Dan
See MH Rock

Rafe Stefanini
See MH Folk

Keith Stegall
See MH Country

Jeremy Steig
See MH Jazz

Stellamara
See MH World

Steppenwolf
See MH Rock

Steps Ahead
See MH Jazz

Stereo MC's
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Stereolab
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Mike Stern
See MH Jazz

Stetsasonic
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Steve & Eydie
See MH Lounge

April Stevens
See MH Lounge

Cat Stevens
See MH Folk, MH Rock

John Stevens
See MH Jazz

Ray Stevens
See MH Country

Shakin' Stevens
See MH Rock

Al Stewart
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Andy M. Stewart
See MH Folk, MH World

Bill Stewart
See MH Jazz

Billy Stewart
See MH Blues

Dave Stewart
See MH Rock

Gary Stewart
See MH Country

John Stewart
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Larry Stewart
See MH Country

Rex Stewart
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Robert Stewart
See MH Jazz

Rod Stewart
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Wendy Stewart
See MH Folk

Wynn Stewart
See MH Country

Chris Stills
See MH Rock

Stephen Stills
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Sting
See MH Rock

Sonny Stitt
See MH Jazz

Alan Stivell
See MH Folk, MH World

Frank Stokes
See MH Blues

Doug Stone
See MH Country

The Stone Poneys
See MH Rock

The Stone Roses
See MH Rock

Stone Temple Pilots
See MH Rock

Fred Stoneking
See MH Folk

Ernest Stoneman
See MH Country, MH Folk

Stoney Lonesome
See MH Folk

The Stooges
See MH Rock

Noel Paul Stookey
See MH Folk

Stories
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Stormtroopers of Death
See MH Rock

The Story
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Storyville
See MH Rock

Don Stover
See MH Folk

Izzy Stradlin
See MH Rock

Straight Ahead
See MH Jazz

George Strait
See MH Country

Strange Cargo
See MH Rock

Strange Creek Singers
See MH Folk

The Strangeloves
See MH Rock

The Stranglers
See MH Rock

Syd Straw
See MH Folk, MH Rock

The Strawberry Alarm Clock
See MH Rock

The Strawbs
See MH Rock

Stray Cats
See MH Rock, MH Swing

Billy Strayhorn
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Mel Street
See MH Country

Chic Street Man
See MH Folk

Sarah Streeter
See MH Blues

Barbra Streisand
See MH Lounge

Strength in Numbers
See MH Country, MH Folk

The String Trio of New York
See MH Jazz

Stringbean
See MH Country, MH Folk

Strings & Things
See MH Folk

John P. Strohm & the Hello Strangers
See MH Rock

Percy Strother
See MH Blues

Frank Strozier
See MH Jazz

Joe Strummer
See MH Rock

Strunz & Farah
See MH Jazz, MH World

Dave Stryker
See MH Jazz

Dan Stuart
See MH Rock

Marty Stuart
See MH Country

John Stubblefield
See MH Jazz

Studebaker John
See MH Blues

Cinderella G. Stump
See MH Lounge

Rolf Sturm
See MH Jazz

Style Council
See MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Rock

The Stylistics
See MH R&B

Styx
See MH Rock

The subdudes
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Sublime
See MH Rock

Dr. L. Subramaniam
See MH World

Subrosa
See MH Rock

Suede
See MH Rock

Sugar
See MH Rock

Sugar Blue
See MH Blues

Sugar Hill Records
See MH R&B

Sugar Ray
See MH Rock

Sugarcubes
See MH Rock

The Sugarhill Gang
See MH R&B

Suicidal Tendencies
See MH Rock

The Suicide Machines
See MH Rock

Sukay
See MH World

Sukia
See MH Rock

Ira Sullivan
See MH Jazz

Jerry & Tammy Sullivan
See MH Country

Joe Sullivan
See MH Jazz

Maxine Sullivan
See MH Jazz

Yma Sumac
See MH Lounge, MH World

Hubert Sumlin
See MH Blues

Donna Summer
See MH R&B

Andy Summers
See MH Rock

Elaine Summers
See MH Rock

Sun Ra
See MH Jazz, MH Rock

The Sundays
See MH Rock

Sundown Playboys
See MH Folk

Sunny Day Real Estate
See MH Rock

Sunnyland Slim
See MH Blues

Sunshine Skiffle Band
See MH Folk

Ron Sunsinger
See MH World

Super Cat
See MH World

Super Chikan
See MH Blues

Super Deluxe
See MH Rock

Super Furry Animals
See MH Rock

Super Rail Band of Bamako
See MH World

Superchunk
See MH Rock

Supergrass
See MH Rock

Doug Supernaw
See MH Country

Supersax
See MH Jazz

Supertramp
See MH Rock

The Supremes
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Al B. Sure!
See MH R&B

Surf Music
See MH Rock

Surface
See MH R&B

John Surman
See MH Jazz

Foday Musa Suso
See MH World

Susquehanna String Band
See MH Folk

Pete Sutherland
See MH Folk

Kirk Sutphin
See MH Folk

Ralph Sutton
See MH Jazz

Steve Swallow
See MH Jazz

Swamp Dogg
See MH Rock

Billy Swan
See MH Country, MH Rock

Swans
See MH Rock

Dave Swarbrick
See MH Folk, MH World

Keith Sweat
See MH R&B

The Swedish Sax Septet
See MH World

Sweeney's Men
See MH Folk, MH World

The Sweet
See MH Rock

Matthew Sweet
See MH Rock

Rachel Sweet
See MH Rock

The Sweet Baby Blues Band
See MH Jazz

Sweet Honey in the Rock
See MH Folk, MH World

Sweet 75
See MH Rock

Sweethearts of the Rodeo
See MH Country, MH Folk

Steve Swell
See MH Jazz

Swervedriver
See MH Rock

Swing out Sister
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Swingerhead
See MH Swing

The Swinging Blue Jeans
See MH Rock

The Swingle Singers
See MH Lounge

The Swingtips
See MH Swing

Switch
See MH R&B

SWV
See MH R&B

Roosevelt Sykes
See MH Blues

The Sylvers
See MH R&B

Sylvester
See MH R&B

Sylvia
See MH Country

David Sylvian
See MH Rock

Sylvian & Fripp
See MH Rock

Symposium
See MH Rock

Synergy
See MH World

Syreeta
See MH R&B

Gabor Szabo
See MH Jazz

T. Rex
See MH Rock

Lew Tabackin
See MH Jazz

Philip Nchipe Tabane
See MH World

June Tabor
See MH Folk

Tabou Combo
See MH World

Jamaaladeen Tacuma
See MH Jazz

Russ Taff
See MH Country

Tag Team
See MH R&B

Rachid Taha
See MH World

Tahitian Choir
See MH World

Takadja
See MH World

Aki Takase
See MH Jazz

Take 6
See MH R&B

Tom Talbert
See MH Jazz

Dellareese Taliaferro
See MH Lounge

Talk Show
See MH Rock

Talk Talk
See MH Rock

Talking Heads
See MH Rock, MH World

Tall Dwarfs
See MH Rock

James Talley
See MH Country, MH Folk

Tam Tam 2000
See MH World

Tamarack
See MH Folk

Tambu
See MH World

Tampa Red
See MH Blues

TanaReid
See MH Jazz

Tangerine Dream
See MH Rock

Tannahill Weavers
See MH Folk, MH World

Horace Tapscott
See MH Jazz

Tar
See MH Rock

Tar Babies
See MH Rock

Taraf de Haïdouks
See MH World

Vladimir Tarasov
See MH Jazz

Tarheel Slim
See MH Blues

Tarika
See MH World

Al Tariq
See MH R&B

Tarnation
See MH Country, MH Rock

Dave Tarras
See MH World

Barry & Holly Tashian
See MH Country, MH Folk

Tasso
See MH Folk

A Taste of Honey
See MH R&B

Baby Tate
See MH Blues

Buddy Tate
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Grady Tate
See MH Jazz

Art Tatum
See MH Jazz

Tau Moe Family
See MH World

Tavares
See MH R&B

Andy Taylor
See MH Rock

Art Taylor
See MH Jazz

Billy Taylor
See MH Jazz

Cecil Taylor
See MH Jazz

Earl Taylor
See MH Country

Eddie Taylor
See MH Blues

Eric Taylor
See MH Folk

Hound Dog Taylor
See MH Blues

James Taylor
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

John Taylor
See MH Rock

Johnnie Taylor
See MH R&B

Koko Taylor
See MH Blues, MH R&B

Les Taylor
See MH Country

Little Johnny Taylor
See MH Blues

Livingston Taylor
See MH Folk

Melvin Taylor
See MH Blues

Roger Taylor
See MH Rock

S. Alan Taylor
See MH Country

James Taylor Quartet
See MH Rock

Bram Tchaikovsky
See MH Rock

John Tchicai
See MH Jazz

Te Vaka
See MH World

The Tea Party
See MH Rock

Jack Teagarden
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Team Dresch
See MH Rock

The Tearaways
See MH Rock

The Teardrop Explodes
See MH Rock

Tears for Fears
See MH Rock

The Techniques
See MH World

Teenage Fanclub
See MH Rock

Richard Teitelbaum
See MH Jazz

Omar Faruk Tekbilek
See MH World

Television
See MH Rock

Carol Lo Tempio
See MH Lounge

Johnnie "Geechie" Temple
See MH Blues

Temple of the Dog
See MH Rock

The Temptations
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Ten Foot Pole
See MH Rock

10,000 Maniacs
See MH Rock

Ten Years After
See MH Blues, MH Rock

10cc
See MH Rock

Jimi Tenor
See MH Lounge

Terem Quartet
See MH World

Terminator X
See MH Rock

Jacky Terrasson
See MH Jazz

Clark Terry
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Sonny Terry & Brownie McGhee
See MH Blues, MH Folk

John Tesh
See MH Lounge

Tesla
See MH Rock

Joe Tex
See MH R&B

Texas
See MH Rock

The Texas Tornados
See MH Country, MH Rock, MH World

Jimmy Thackery
See MH Blues

Rosetta Tharpe
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH Jazz that dog.

See MH Rock

That Petrol Emotion
See MH Rock

The The
See MH Rock

Hans Theessink
See MH Folk

Thelonious Monster
See MH Rock

Them
See MH Folk, MH R&B, MH Rock

Mikis Theodorakis
See MH World

Therapy?
See MH Rock

They Might Be Giants
See MH Rock

Toots Thielemans
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Chris Thile
See MH Country, MH Folk

Thin Lizzy
See MH Rock

Thin White Rope
See MH Rock

3rd Bass
See MH R&B

Third Eye Blind
See MH Rock

Third Eye Foundation
See MH Rock

3rd Party
See MH Rock

IIIrd Tyme Out
See MH Country, MH Folk

Third World
See MH R&B, MH World

.38 Special
See MH Rock

Thirty Ought Six
See MH Rock

This Mortal Coil
See MH Rock

Anthony Thistlewaite
See MH Folk

Beulah Thomas
See MH Blues

B.J. Thomas
See MH Country

Buddy Thomas
See MH Folk

Carla Thomas
See MH R&B

Gary Thomas
See MH Jazz

Henry "Ragtime Texas" Thomas
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Irma Thomas
See MH Blues, MH R&B

James "Son" Thomas
See MH Blues

Jesse Thomas
See MH Blues

Luther Thomas
See MH Jazz

Mickey Thomas
See MH Rock

Rufus Thomas
See MH R&B

Tabby Thomas
See MH Blues

Linda Thomas & Dan DeLancey
See MH Folk

Butch Thompson
See MH Jazz

Carol Thompson
See MH Folk

Charles W. Thompson
See MH Blues

Dave Thompson
See MH Blues

Eric & Suzy Thompson
See MH Folk, MH World

Hank Thompson
See MH Country, MH Swing

Jimmy Thompson
See MH Blues

Linda Thompson
See MH Folk

Lucky Thompson
See MH Jazz

Malachi Thompson
See MH Jazz

Richard Thompson
See MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

Sue Thompson
See MH Country

Sylvester Thompson
See MH Blues

Tony Thompson
See MH R&B

The Thompson Brothers Band
See MH Country

Thompson Twins
See MH Rock

Paul Thorn
See MH Rock

Kathryn Jewel Thorne
See MH Blues

Claude Thornhill
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Bianca Thornton
See MH Blues

Big Mama Thornton
See MH Blues, MH R&B

George Thorogood & the Destroyers
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Roger Thorpe
See MH Lounge

Simon Thoumire
See MH World

Thrasher Shiver
See MH Country

Henry Threadgill
See MH Jazz

Three Dog Night
See MH Rock

311
See MH Rock

Three Fish
See MH Rock

3 Leg Torso
See MH World

3 Mustaphas 3
See MH World

The Three O'Clock
See MH Rock

The Three Suns
See MH Lounge

Three Times Dope
See MH R&B

Throbbing Gristle
See MH Rock

Throwing Muses
See MH Rock

Rick Thum
See MH Folk

Thunderclap Newman
See MH Rock

Tianjin Buddhist Music Ensemble
See MH World

Kathryn Tickell
See MH Folk, MH World

Tiffany
See MH Rock

'Til Tuesday
See MH Rock

Mel Tillis
See MH Country

Pam Tillis
See MH Country

Floyd Tillman
See MH Country

Johnny Tillotson
See MH Country

Steve Tilston & Maggie Boyle
See MH Folk

Tim Dog
See MH R&B

Timbalada
See MH World

Timbuk 3
See MH Folk, MH Rock

The Time
See MH R&B

Bobby Timmons
See MH Jazz

Tin Machine
See MH Rock

Tindersticks
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Tiny Tim
See MH Lounge

Aaron Tippin
See MH Country

The Billy Tipton Memorial Saxophone Quartet
See MH Jazz

Wayman Tisdale
See MH Jazz

T.J. Kirk
See MH Jazz

Cal Tjader
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

TLC
See MH R&B

Toad the Wet Sprocket
See MH Rock

Toast String Stretchers
See MH Folk

Jeremy Toback
See MH Rock

Toenut
See MH Rock

The Tokens
See MH Rock

Tony Toliver
See MH Country

Charles Tolliver
See MH Jazz

Tommy Boy
See MH R&B

Tommy Tutone
See MH Rock

Tone-Loc
See MH R&B

Tones on Tail
See MH Rock

Tonic
See MH Rock

Tony D
See MH R&B

Tony! Toni! Tone!
See MH R&B

Too Much Joy
See MH Rock

Too $hort
See MH R&B

Tool
See MH Rock

Willie Toors
See MH World

Toots & the Maytals
See MH World

Torch Song
See MH Rock

Mel Tormé
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Tornados
See MH Rock

Yomo Toro
See MH World

Roberto Torres
See MH World

Tortoise
See MH Rock

Peter Tosh
See MH R&B, MH World

Toto
See MH Rock

Touchstone
See MH Folk

Ali Farka Touré
See MH World

Touré Kunda
See MH World

Allen Toussaint
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Tower of Power
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Ralph Towner
See MH Jazz

Henry Townsend
See MH Blues

Pete Townshend
See MH Rock

The Tractors
See MH Country

The Traditional Grass
See MH Country

Traffic
See MH Rock

The Tragically Hip
See MH Rock

Horace Trahan
See MH Folk, MH World

The Trammps
See MH R&B

Trance Mission
See MH Jazz, MH World

Tranquility Bass
See MH Rock

Transglobal Underground
See MH Rock, MH World

Transister
See MH Rock

Translator
See MH Rock

Trapezoid
See MH Folk

Artie Traum
See MH Folk

Happy Traum
See MH Folk

The Traveling Wilburys
See MH Rock

Mary Travers
See MH Folk

Travis
See MH Rock

Merle Travis
See MH Country, MH Folk

Randy Travis
See MH Country

Tre
See MH Blues

Treadmill Trackstar
See MH Rock

Treat Her Right
See MH Rock

Treble Charger
See MH Rock

Trebunia Family Band
See MH World

The Tremeloes
See MH Rock

The Treniers
See MH Rock

Jackie Trent
See MH Lounge

Ralph Tresvant
See MH R&B

Rick Trevino
See MH Country

Trian
See MH Folk, MH World

Tribal Tech
See MH Jazz

A Tribe Called Quest
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Ed Trickett
See MH Folk

Tricky
See MH Rock

The Triffids
See MH Rock

Trillium
See MH Folk

Trio
See MH Rock

Trip Shakespeare
See MH Rock

Tony Trischka
See MH Country, MH Folk

Lennie Tristano
See MH Jazz

Travis Tritt
See MH Country

Triumph
See MH Rock

The Troggs
See MH Rock

Trouble Funk
See MH R&B

Trout Fishing in America
See MH Folk

Robin Trower
See MH Rock

John Trudell
See MH World

True Believers
See MH Rock

Frankie Trumbauer
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Susan Trump
See MH Folk

Jennifer Trynin
See MH Rock

Assif Tsahar
See MH Jazz

Daniel Tshanda
See MH World

Tsunami
See MH Rock

Tuatara
See MH Rock

Ernest Tubb
See MH Country, MH Folk

Justin Tubb
See MH Country

The Tubes
See MH Rock

Tuck & Patti
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Bessie Tucker
See MH Blues

Leslie Tucker
See MH Folk

Luther Tucker
See MH Blues

Maureen Tucker
See MH Rock

Mickey Tucker
See MH Jazz

Tanya Tucker
See MH Country

Tommy Tucker
See MH Swing

Tuff Crew
See MH R&B

Turn On
See MH Rock

Babe Karo Lemon Turner
See MH Blues

Big Joe Turner
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH R&B, MH Rock, MH Swing

Buck Turner
See MH Blues

Ike Turner
See MH Blues

Ike & Tina Turner
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Norris Turney
See MH Jazz

Steve Turre
See MH Jazz

Stanley Turrentine
See MH Jazz

Turtle Island String Quartet
See MH Jazz

The Turtles
See MH Rock

Shania Twain
See MH Country

29th Street Saxophone Quartet
See MH Jazz

23 Skidoo
See MH World

20/20
See MH Rock

Dwight Twilley
See MH Rock

The Twinkle Brothers
See MH World

The Twinz
See MH R&B

Twisted Sister
See MH Rock

Twister Alley
See MH Country

Conway Twitty
See MH Country

Two
See MH Rock

2 Live Crew
See MH R&B

2Pac/Thug Life/Makaveli
See MH R&B

Charles Tyler
See MH Jazz

T. Texas Tyler
See MH Country

The Tymes
See MH R&B

McCoy Tyner
See MH Jazz

Type O Negative
See MH Rock

Ian Tyson
See MH Country, MH Folk

UB40
See MH R&B, MH Rock, MH World

Udi Hrant
See MH World

Ugly Kid Joe
See MH Rock

Áine Uí Cheallaigh
See MH World

The Ukrainians
See MH World

Ulali
See MH World

Tracey Ullman
See MH Rock

James Blood Ulmer
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Peter Ulrich
See MH Rock

Ultra Vivid Scene
See MH Rock

Ultramagnetic MC's
See MH R&B

Ultravox
See MH Rock

The UMCs
See MH R&B

Uncle Bonsai
See MH Folk

Uncle Tupelo
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

The Undertones
See MH Rock

Underworld
See MH Rock

The Undisputed Truth
See MH R&B

Jay Ungar & Molly Mason
See MH Folk

Union Springs
See MH Folk

Unrest
See MH Rock

Up with People
See MH Lounge

The Upper Crust
See MH Rock

Upsetters
See MH Blues

Midge Ure
See MH Rock

The Urge
See MH Rock

Urge Overkill
See MH Rock

Uriah Heep
See MH Rock

Urubamba
See MH World

Us3
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

U.T.F.O.
See MH R&B

Jai Uttal
See MH Jazz, MH World

U2
See MH Rock

The V-Roys
See MH Country

Warren Vache Jr.
See MH Jazz

Vadå
See MH World

Vadya Lahari
See MH World

Steve Vai
See MH Rock

Joe Val & the New England Bluegrass Boys
See MH Country, MH Folk

Bebo Valdes
See MH Jazz, MH World

Carlos "Patato" Valdes
See MH World

Chucho Valdes
See MH Jazz, MH World

Jerry Vale
See MH Lounge

Ritchie Valens
See MH Rock, MH World

Dino Valente
See MH Rock

Justin Vali
See MH World

Rudy Vallee
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Frankie Valli
See MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Rock

Guy Van Duser
See MH Folk

Leroy Van Dyke
See MH Country

Van Halen
See MH Rock

The Randy Van Horne Singers
See MH Lounge

Sally Van Meter
See MH Country, MH Folk

Dave Van Ronk
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Ricky Van Shelton
See MH Country

Townes Van Zandt
See MH Country, MH Folk

Ken Vandermark
See MH Jazz

Luther Vandross
See MH R&B

Vanguard Jazz Orchestra
See MH Swing

Vanilla Fudge
See MH Rock

Vanilla Ice
See MH R&B

The Vapors
See MH Rock

Carlos Varela
See MH World

Varnaline
See MH Rock

Tom Varner
See MH Jazz

Värttinä
See MH World

Vas
See MH World

Nana Vasconcelos
See MH Jazz, MH World

The Vaselines
See MH Rock

Väsen
See MH World

Jimmie Vaughan
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Sarah Vaughan
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Swing

Stevie Ray Vaughan
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Ben Vaughn
See MH Country, MH Rock

Billy Vaughn
See MH Lounge

Bobby Vee
See MH Rock

Ray Vega
See MH Country

Suzanne Vega
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Glen Velez
See MH World

John Veliotes
See MH Blues

Velo-Deluxe
See MH Rock

Velocity Girl
See MH Rock

Caetano Veloso
See MH World

Velvet Crush
See MH Rock

The Velvet Underground
See MH Rock

The Ventures
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Joe Venuti
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Verbow
See MH Rock

Veritas
See MH World

Tom Verlaine
See MH Rock

The Verlaines
See MH Rock

Versus
See MH Rock

Veruca Salt
See MH Rock

The Verve
See MH Rock

The Verve Pipe
See MH Rock

The Vibrators
See MH Rock

Sid Vicious
See MH Rock

Harold Vick
See MH Jazz

The Vidalias
See MH Country

Vigilantes of Love
See MH Rock

Frank Vignola
See MH Jazz

The Village People
See MH R&B, MH Rock

T.H. "Vikku" Vinayakram
See MH World

Gene Vincent
See MH Country, MH Rock, MH Swing

Holly Vincent
See MH Rock

Rhonda Vincent
See MH Country

Rick Vincent
See MH Country

Joyce Vincent-Wilson
See MH Lounge

Walter Vincson
See MH Blues

Leroy Vinnegar
See MH Jazz

Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH Swing

Bobby Vinton
See MH Lounge

Vinx
See MH R& B, MH World

Violent Femmes
See MH Rock

Visage
See MH Rock

The Visitors
See MH Jazz

Roseanna Vitro
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Viva la Musica
See MH World

Carlos Vives
See MH World

Vocal Sampling
See MH World

Voice of the Beehive
See MH Rock

The Voice Squad
See MH Folk

Volo Bogtrotters
See MH Folk

Volume 10
See MH R&B

Eric Von Schmidt
See MH Folk

Chris von Sneidern
See MH Rock

Jane Voss
See MH Folk

Vowel Movement
See MH Rock

Vulgar Boatmen
See MH Rock

Waaberi
See MH World

The Waco Brothers
See MH Country, MH Rock

Stephen Wade
See MH Folk

Wagon
See MH Country

Porter Wagoner
See MH Country

Mohamed Abdel Wahab
See MH World

Bunny Wailer
See MH World

Wailing Souls
See MH World

Loudon Wainwright III
See MH Folk

Sloan Wainwright
See MH Folk

John Waite
See MH Rock

The Waitresses
See MH Rock

Freddy Waits
See MH Jazz

Tom Waits
See MH Folk, MH Lounge, MH Rock

Frank Wakefield
See MH Folk

Dave Wakeling
See MH Rock

Jimmy Wakely
See MH Country

Rick Wakeman
See MH Rock

Narada Michael Walden
See MH R&B

Mal Waldron
See MH Jazz

Walela
See MH World

The Walkabouts
See MH Rock

Billy Walker
See MH Country

Charlie Walker
See MH Country

Clay Walker
See MH Country

Jerry Jeff Walker
See MH Country, MH Folk

Joe Louis Walker
See MH Blues

Lawrence Walker
See MH Folk

Phillip Walker
See MH Blues

Robert "Bilbo" Walker
See MH Blues

Scott Walker
See MH Lounge

T-Bone Walker
See MH Blues, MH R&B, MH Swing

Junior Walker & the All-Stars
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Walker Brothers
See MH Rock

Chris Wall
See MH Country

Dan Wall
See MH Jazz

Wall of Voodoo
See MH Rock

Bennie Wallace
See MH Jazz

Jerry Wallace
See MH Country

Kate Wallace
See MH Country, MH Folk

Sippie Wallace
See MH Blues

Fats Waller
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

The Wallflowers
See MH Rock

Doug & Jack Wallin
See MH Folk

George Wallington
See MH Jazz

Vann "Piano Man" Walls
See MH Blues

Winston Walls
See MH Jazz

Wally's Swing World
See MH Swing

Jack Walrath
See MH Jazz

Don Walser
See MH Country, MH Folk

Joe Walsh
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Jamie Walters
See MH Rock

Cedar Walton
See MH Jazz

Cora Walton
See MH Blues

Mercy Dee Walton
See MH Blues

Wandering Ramblers
See MH Folk

Walter Wanderley
See MH Lounge

Wang Chung
See MH Rock

The Wannabes
See MH Rock

War
See MH R&B, MH Rock

The Marty Warburton Band
See MH Country

Chris Ward
See MH Country

Helen Ward
See MH Swing

Robert Ward
See MH Blues

Kendra Ward & Bob Bence
See MH Folk

Monte Warden
See MH Country

David S. Ware
See MH Jazz

Wilbur Ware
See MH Jazz

Steve Wariner
See MH Country

Jennifer Warnes
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Warrant
See MH Rock

Baby Boy Warren
See MH Blues

Robert Henry Warren
See MH Blues

The Warrior River Boys
See MH Country

Wartime
See MH Rock

Dionne Warwick
See MH Lounge, MH R&B

Was (Not Was)
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Washboard Sam
See MH Blues

Dinah Washington
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B, MH Swing

Grover Washington Jr.
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Isidore "Tuts" Washington
See MH Blues

Keith Washington
See MH R&B

Walter "Wolfman" Washington
See MH Blues

Rob Wasserman
See MH Jazz

The Waterboys
See MH Folk, MH Rock, MH World

Linda Waterfall
See MH Folk

Benny Waters
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Crystal Waters
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Ethel Waters
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH Swing

Muddy Waters
See MH Blues, MH Folk, MH R&B, MH Rock

Patty Waters
See MH Jazz

Roger Waters
See MH Rock

Jack Waterson
See MH Rock

Norma Waterson
See MH Folk

Waterson:Carthy
See MH Folk, MH World

The Watersons
See MH Folk, MH World

Jody Watley
See MH R&B

Bill Watrous
See MH Jazz

Bobby Watson
See MH Jazz

Dale Watson
See MH Country

Doc Watson
See MH Country, MH Folk

Gene Watson
See MH Country

Johnny "Guitar" Watson
See MH Blues

Mike Watt
See MH Rock

Charlie Watts
See MH Jazz

Ernie Watts
See MH Jazz

Noble "Thin Man" Watts
See MH Blues

Eunice Waymon
See MH Lounge

WC and the MAAD Circle
See MH R&B

Weather Report
See MH Jazz, MH Rock

Carl Weathersby
See MH Blues

Curley Weaver
See MH Blues

"Boogie" Bill Webb
See MH Blues

Chick Webb
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Harry Roger Webb
See MH Lounge

Jimmy Webb
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Eberhard Weber
See MH Jazz

Ben Webster
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Katie Webster
See MH Blues

Dave Weckl
See MH Jazz

The Wedding Present
See MH Rock

Ted Weems
See MH Swing

Ween
See MH Rock

Weezer
See MH Rock

Scott Weiland
See MH Rock

Kurt Weill
See MH Lounge

George Wein
See MH Jazz

The Weirdos
See MH Rock

Bob Welch
See MH Rock

Gillian Welch
See MH Blues, MH Country, MH Folk

Kevin Welch
See MH Country, MH Folk

Casey Bill Weldon
See MH Blues

Lawrence Welk
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Paul Weller
See MH Rock

Valerie Wellington
See MH Blues

Junior Wells
See MH Blues, MH R&B

Kitty Wells
See MH Country, MH Folk

Mary Wells
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Dick Wellstood
See MH Jazz

Paula Joy Welter
See MH Folk

Papa Wemba
See MH World

Wendy & Lisa
See MH Rock

Kenny Werner
See MH Jazz

Susan Werner
See MH Folk

Pete Wernick
See MH Swing

Paul Wertico
See MH Jazz

Kelly Werts
See MH Folk

Fred Wesley
See MH Jazz, MH R&B

Frank Wess
See MH Jazz

Camille West
See MH Folk

Dottie West
See MH Country

Leslie West
See MH Rock

Mae West
See MH Lounge

Speedy West & Jimmy Bryant
See MH Country

West, Bruce & Laing
See MH Rock

Floyd Red Crow Westerman
See MH World

Western Flyer
See MH Country

Kim Weston
See MH R&B

Paul Weston
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Randy Weston
See MH Jazz, MH World

Westside Connection
See MH R&B

Kirk Whalum
See MH Jazz

Wham!
See MH Rock

Peetie Wheatstraw
See MH Blues

Cheryl Wheeler
See MH Country, MH Folk

Erica Wheeler
See MH Folk

James Wheeler
See MH Blues

Kenny Wheeler
See MH Jazz

Onie Wheeler
See MH Country

Dan Wheetman
See MH Folk

Bill Whelan
See MH World

John Whelan
See MH Folk

Whipping Boy
See MH Rock

Whirligig
See MH Folk

Whiskeytown
See MH Country, MH Rock

The Whispers
See MH R&B

Whistlebinkies
See MH Folk

Rodney Whitaker
See MH Jazz

Ian Whitcomb
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Barry White
See MH R&B

Bryan White
See MH Country

Buck White
See MH Folk

Bukka White
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Clarence White
See MH Folk

Jeff White
See MH Country

Josh White
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Josh White Jr.
See MH Folk

Karyn White
See MH R&B

Lari White
See MH Country

Lavelle White
See MH Blues

Lynn White
See MH Blues

Roland White
See MH Country, MH Folk

Tony Joe White
See MH Country

White Hassle
See MH Rock

White Zombie
See MH Rock

Mark Whitecage
See MH Jazz

Fredrick Whiteface
See MH World

Paul Whiteman
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

The Whites
See MH Country, MH Folk

Whitesnake
See MH Rock

Mark Whitfield
See MH Jazz

Weslia Whitfield
See MH Jazz

James Whiting
See MH Blues

Margaret Whiting
See MH Lounge, MH Swing

Chris Whitley
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Dwight Whitley
See MH Country

Keith Whitley
See MH Country

Slim Whitman
See MH Country

The Whitstein Brothers
See MH Country, MH Folk

Hudson Whittaker
See MH Blues

Roger Whittaker
See MH Lounge

The Who
See MH Rock

The Why Store
See MH Rock

Widespread Panic
See MH Rock

Jane Wiedlin
See MH Rock

Wig
See MH Rock

Gerald Wiggins
See MH Jazz

John & Audrey Wiggins
See MH Country

Phil Wiggins
See MH Blues

Bob Wilber
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

The Wilburn Brothers
See MH Country

Wilco
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

David Wilcox
See MH Folk

Wild Cherry
See MH R&B

Wild Jimbos
See MH Folk

Wildcats
See MH Folk

Kim Wilde
See MH Rock

Webb Wilder
See MH Country, MH Rock

Barney Wilen
See MH Jazz

David Wilkie
See MH World

Jack Wilkins
See MH Jazz

Robert Wilkins
See MH Blues, MH Folk

Andy Williams
See MH Lounge

Big Joe Williams
See MH Blues

Brooks Williams
See MH Folk

"Buster" Williams
See MH Jazz

Charles "Cootie" Williams
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Clarence Williams
See MH Jazz

Claude Williams
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Daoud-David Williams
See MH Jazz

Dar Williams
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Deniece Williams
See MH R&B

Don Williams
See MH Country, MH Folk

"Fiddler" Williams
See MH Jazz

Hank Williams
See MH Country, MH Folk

Hank Williams Jr.
See MH Country

James Williams
See MH Jazz

Jason D. Williams
See MH Country

Jessica Williams
See MH Jazz

Joe Williams
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

John Williams
See MH Lounge

Larry Williams
See MH R&B

Lee "Shot" Williams
See MH Blues

Lucinda Williams
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Mars Williams
See MH Jazz

Mary Lou Williams
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Mason Williams
See MH Folk, MH Lounge

Nathan Williams
See MH Folk, MH World

Robert Pete Williams
See MH Blues

Robin & Linda Williams
See MH Country, MH Folk

Roger Williams
See MH Lounge

Tex Williams
See MH Country, MH Swing

Tony Williams
See MH Jazz

Vanessa Williams
See MH R&B

Victoria Williams
See MH Folk, MH Rock

Walter Williams
See MH Blues

Maurice Williams & the Zodiacs
See MH R&B

Cris Williamson
See MH Folk

Homesick James Williamson
See MH Blues

Robin Williamson
See MH Folk

Sonny Boy Williamson I
See MH Blues

Sonny Boy Williamson II
See MH Blues

Steve Williamson
See MH Jazz

Willie & Lobo
See MH Jazz, MH World

Aaron Willis
See MH Blues

Chick Willis
See MH Blues

Chuck Willis
See MH Blues, MH R&B

Kelly Willis
See MH Country

Larry Willis
See MH Jazz

Little Sonny Willis
See MH Blues

The Willis Brothers
See MH Country

Bob Wills
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Swing

Mark Wills
See MH Country

Michelle Willson
See MH Blues, MH Swing

Al Wilson
See MH R&B

Brian Wilson
See MH Lounge, MH Rock

Cassandra Wilson
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge

Chris Wilson
See MH Rock

Gerald Wilson
See MH Jazz

Hop Wilson
See MH Blues

Jackie Wilson
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Joemy Wilson
See MH Folk, MH World

Murry Wilson
See MH Lounge

Nancy Wilson
See MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH R&B

Smokey Wilson
See MH Blues

Steve Wilson
See MH Jazz

Teddy Wilson
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

U.P. Wilson
See MH Blues

Wilson Phillips
See MH Rock

Marty Wilson-Piper
See MH Rock

Wimme
See MH World

Angie & Debbie Winans
See MH R&B

BeBe & CeCe Winans
See MH R&B

The Winans
See MH R&B

Vickie Winans
See MH R&B

Angela Winbush
See MH R&B

Jesse Winchester
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Lem Winchester
See MH Jazz

Kai Winding
See MH Jazz

Winger
See MH Rock

Wings
See MH Rock

George Winston
See MH Lounge

Edgar Winter
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Johnny Winter
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Paul Winter
See MH World

Hugo Winterhalter
See MH Lounge

Steve Winwood
See MH Rock

The Wipers
See MH Rock

Wire
See MH Rock

Wire Train
See MH Rock

Reverend Billy C. Wirtz
See MH Country

Chubby Wise
See MH Country, MH Folk

Mac Wiseman
See MH Country, MH Folk

Wishbone Ash
See MH Rock

Bill Withers
See MH R&B

Jimmy Witherspoon
See MH Blues, MH Jazz, MH Lounge, MH Swing

Jah Wobble
See MH Rock, MH World

Kate Wolf
See MH Folk

Peter Wolf
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Wolfgang Press
See MH Rock

Wolfstone
See MH Folk, MH World

Wolga Balalaika Ensemble
See MH World

The Wolverines
See MH Swing

Bobby Womack
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Lee Ann Womack
See MH Country

Womack & Womack
See MH R&B

Stevie Wonder
See MH R&B, MH Rock, MH World

The Wonder Stuff
See MH Rock

The Wondermints
See MH Rock

Francis Wong
See MH Jazz

Anthony Wonsey
See MH Jazz

Jeff Wood
See MH Country

Ron Wood
See MH Rock

Roy Wood
See MH Rock

Rickey Woodard
See MH Jazz

Wooden Leg
See MH Folk

Bob Woodruff
See MH Country

Mitch Woods
See MH Blues

Phil Woods
See MH Jazz

Sylvia Woods
See MH Folk

Mitch Woods & His MH Rocket 88's
See MH Swing

Woodshed All-Stars
See MH Folk

The Woodstock Mountain Revue
See MH Folk

Reggie Workman
See MH Jazz

World Party
See MH Rock

World Saxophone Quartet
See MH Jazz

Link Wray
See MH Rock

Wreckless Eric
See MH Rock

Wreckx-N-Effect
See MH R&B

Big John Wrencher
See MH Blues

Betty Wright
See MH R&B

Billy Wright
See MH Blues

Chely Wright
See MH Country

Curtis Wright
See MH Country

Erica Wright
See MH Lounge

Frank Wright
See MH Jazz

Gary Wright
See MH Rock, MH World

Michelle Wright
See MH Country

O.V. Wright
See MH Blues, MH R&B

Rick Wright
See MH Rock

Charles Wright & the Watts 103rd Street Rhythm Band
See MH R&B

Wu Man
See MH World

Wu-Tang Clan
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Robert Wyatt
See MH Rock

Wylie & the Wild West Show
See MH Country

Tammy Wynette
See MH Country

Steve Wynn
See MH Rock

Wynonna
See MH Country

X
See MH Rock

X-Clan
See MH R&B

X-Ray Spex
See MH Rock

Stavros Xarhakos & Nicos Gatsos
See MH World

XC-NN
See MH Rock

Xit
See MH World

XTC
See MH Rock

Xymox
See MH Rock

Yabby You
See MH World

Yagg Fu Front
See MH R&B

Yosuke Yamashita
See MH Jazz

Stomu Yamash'ta
See MH World

Yamo
See MH Rock

Jimmy Yancey
See MH Swing

Frankie Yankovic
See MH Lounge

Weird Al Yankovic
See MH Rock

Glenn Yarbrough
See MH Folk

Yarbrough & Peoples
See MH R&B

The Yardbirds
See MH Blues, MH Rock

Peter Yarrow
See MH Folk

Yat-Kha
See MH World

Yaz/Yazoo
See MH Rock

Eva Ybarra
See MH World

Trisha Yearwood
See MH Country

Yello
See MH Rock

The Yellowjackets
See MH Jazz

Yellowman
See MH World

Yes
See MH Rock

Yo La Tengo
See MH Rock

Yo Yo
See MH R&B

Dwight Yoakam
See MH Country, MH Rock

Asa Yoelson
See MH Lounge

Yosefa
See MH World

Masakazu Yoshizawa
See MH World

Yothu Yindi
See MH World

You Am I
See MH Rock

Faron Young
See MH Country

Jesse Colin Young
See MH Folk, MH Rock

John Young
See MH Jazz

Johnny Young
See MH Blues

Johnny Lamar Young
See MH Blues

Larry Young
See MH Jazz

Lester Young
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Mighty Joe Young
See MH Blues

Neil Young
See MH Country, MH Folk, MH Rock

Paul Young
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Rusty Young
See MH Rock

Snooky Young
See MH Jazz, MH Swing

Steve Young
See MH Country, MH Folk

Young Black Teenagers
See MH R&B

Young Fresh Fellows
See MH Rock

Young-Holt Unlimited
See MH R&B

Young Lay
See MH R&B

Young Marble Giants
See MH Rock

Young M.C.
See MH R&B

The Young Rascals
See MH R&B, MH Rock

Young Tradition
See MH Folk

Mary Youngblood
See MH World

Yum-Yum
See MH Rock

Atahualpa Yupanqui
See MH World

Z
See MH Rock

Rachel Z
See MH Jazz

Pia Zadora
See MH Lounge

Zaiko Langa Langa
See MH World

Zamfir
See MH Lounge, MH World

Robin Zander
See MH Rock

Dan Zanes
See MH Rock

Bobby Zankel
See MH Jazz

Zap Mama
See MH World

Zapp
See MH R&B

Dweezil Zappa
See MH Rock

Frank Zappa
See MH Jazz, MH Rock

Joe Zawinul
See MH Jazz

Hukwe Zawose
See MH World

Tom Zé
See MH World

Diane Zeigler
See MH Folk

Denny Zeitlin
See MH Jazz

Martin Zellar
See MH Rock

Radim Zenkl
See MH Folk

Benjamin Zephaniah
See MH World

Warren Zevon
See MH Rock

Zhane
See MH R&B

Zimbabwe Legit
See MH R&B, MH World

Rusty Zinn
See MH Blues

Jalal Zolfonun
See MH World

Soheil Zolfonun
See MH World

The Zombies
See MH Rock

Zony Mash
See MH Jazz

John Zorn
See MH Jazz

Tappa Zukie
See MH World

Zulu Spear
See MH World

Zumpano
See MH Rock

Zuzu's Petals
See MH Rock

Zydeco Force
See MH Folk, MH World

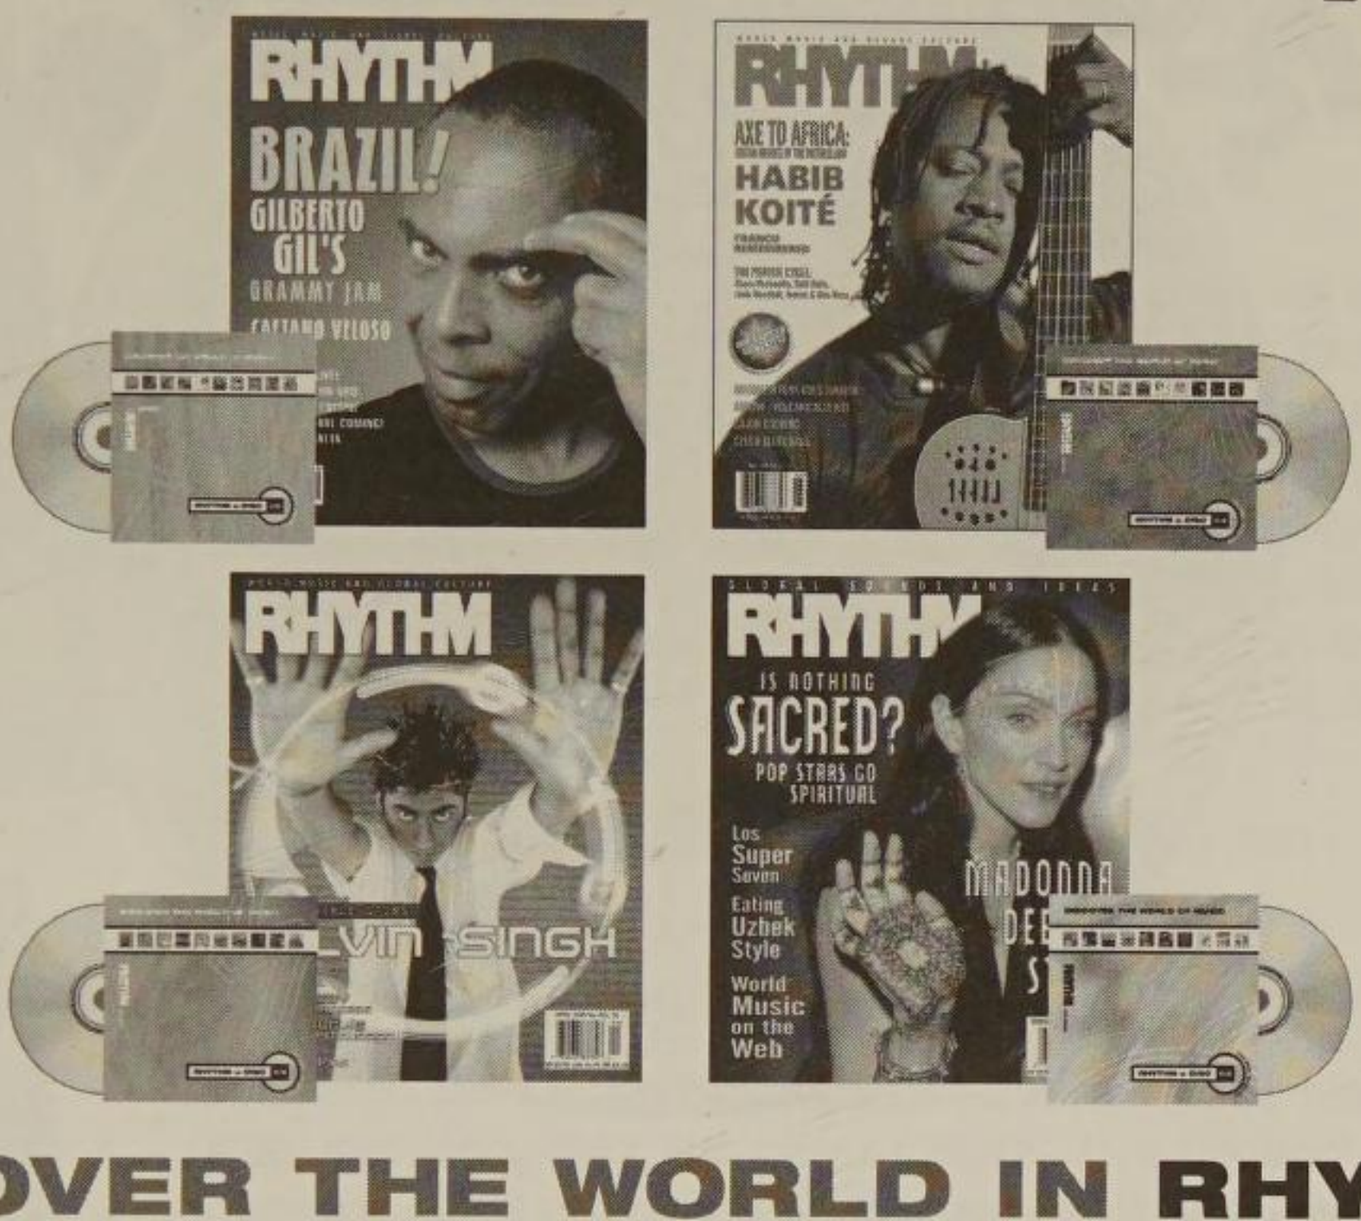
Zydeco Hi-Rollers
See MH Folk

Zydeco Hurricanes
See MH World

ZZ Top
See MH Blues, MH Rock

"THE ROLLING STONE OF WORLD MUSIC"

– FOX 25



DISCOVER THE WORLD IN RHYTHM!

RHYTHM IS NORTH AMERICA'S LEADING MAGAZINE DELIVERING THE WORLD OF MUSIC IN PRINT AND ON CD. WHY NOT MAKE THE SMART CHOICE IN STAYING ON TOP OF NEW TRENDS IN MUSIC? SUBSCRIBE TO RHYTHM AND RECEIVE A FREE WORLD MUSIC CD COMPILATION EACH MONTH.

RHYTHM covers a broad range of musical styles from World Beat to Latin Jazz and from Indian Chant to Contemporary Celtic and from Afro-pop to Brazilian Samba. We bring the World to you each month by capturing the moment and the meaning behind the music.

Read about charting artists, new films, fine cuisine and adventurous travel. In every issue: Over 30 CD reviews, a guide to new releases, news reports, political commentary, concert listings, clubs and radio shows.

Every issue of RHYTHM is unique, with our monthly limited-edition collector's CD called RHYTHM ON DISC.
RHYTHM ON DISC features 10 new tracks and over 40 minutes of music.

For subscription orders within the United States and Canada call:

1-800-464-2767

or send payment by mail to RHYTHM Magazine Attn: Subscriptions, 928 Broadway, Suite 204, New York, NY 10010-6008

For subscription orders overseas call: 212-253-6271

e-mail: subscribe@gorhythm.com website: www.gorhythm.com

Subscription Rates: U.S. (1 year) $49.95 11 issues/11 CD's Canada (1 year) $59.95 11 issues/11 CD's • Foreign (1 year) $79.95 11 issues/11 CD's

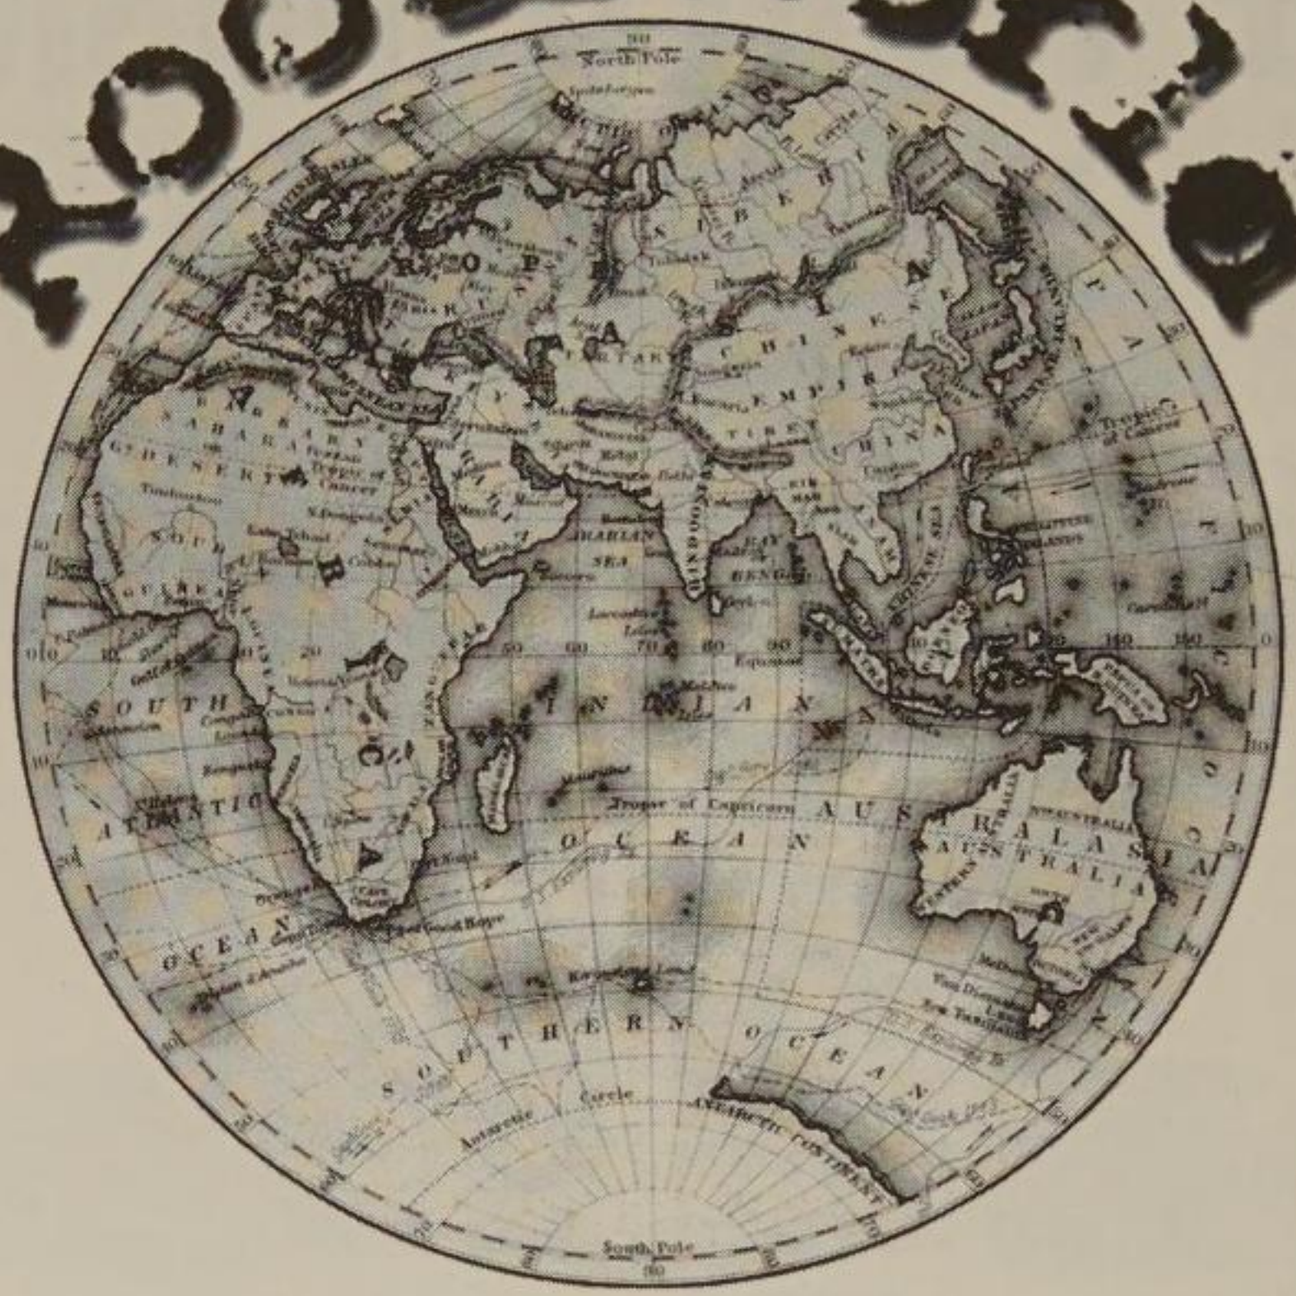
RootsWorld



The Comprehensive Magazine of World and Roots Music on the Internet

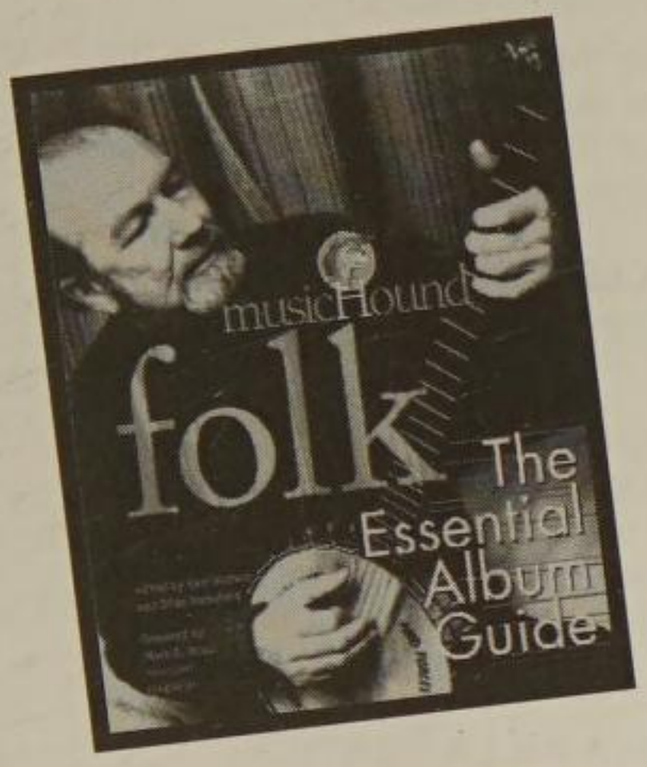
RootsWorld is the most in-depth collection of interviews, reviews and information about the world's music available online.

Subscribers to RootsWorld get a regular e-mail newsletter, free CDs and special audio features throughout the year

www.RootsWorld.com

Hear no evil, see no evil!

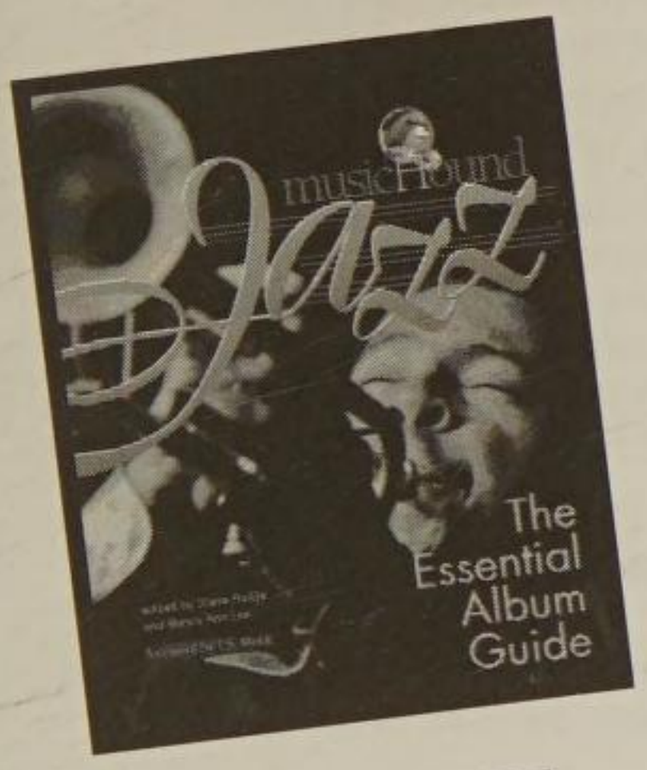
These Hounds won't monkey around with your leisure time.



MusicHound Folk

The original buyer's guide to the entire folk genre will satisfy both baby boomers and younger fans just discovering folk music. The 1,120 artists whose work is critiqued in these pages include the legends and the lesser knowns, current acts as well as up-and-comers. This all-inclusive coverage, with a band's influences and the acts they've inspired, will have fans adding to their collections. For each artist you'll find suggestions for what to buy, what to avoid and why. MusicHound Folk also offers a substantial resource section, packed with information on folk music publications, Web pages, record labels and more. A free music CD sampler is included.

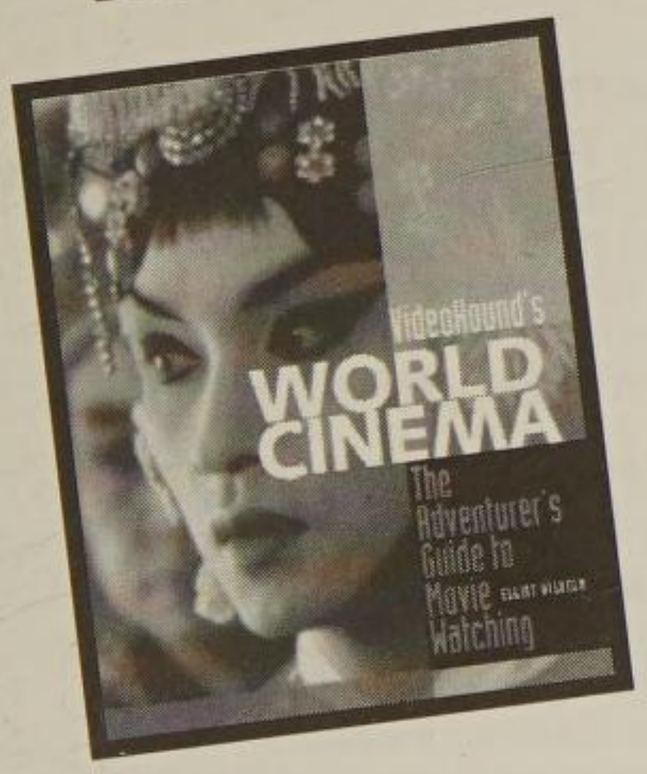
Neal Walters and Brian Mansfield • 1998 • 1,030 pp. • ISBN 1-57859-037-X



MusicHound Jazz

Following the format that MusicHound has made famous, collectors and fans alike can enjoy jazz like never before. MusicHound Jazz reviews the works of nearly 1,300 prominent performers and is unparalleled in its comprehensiveness. This guide rates the recordings of the artists and recommends what to buy and what to avoid. One hundred photos, resource information, indexes and a free music CD sampler make this an essential album guide.

Steve Holtje and Nancy Ann Lee • 1998 • 1,400 pp.• ISBN 1-57859-031-0



VideoHound's World Cinema
The Adventurer's Guide to Movie Watching

World Cinema wanders the globe in search of great moviemaking and wonderful viewing. More than 800 significant movies are reviewed. Coverage spans Asia, Australia, Britain, France, Italy, Africa, Europe, Russia, Canada and everywhere else films are made outside of the U.S. World Cinema is the only foreign film guide geared toward the increasingly adventurous video renter. It is also the only one offering 9 indexes, including director, cast, title translation, country of origin, writer and others.

Elliot Wilhelm • 1999 • 550 pp. • ISBN 1-57859-059-0

Available at fine bookstores everywhere, or at your favorite online bookseller.

VISIBLE INK PRESS

FREE MUSIC from Wicklow Records

1. Alpha Yaya Diallo "Duniya"
(From The Message, Wicklow 09026-63407-2)

Originally from Guinea, Diallo's own unique hybrid of West African idioms and modern world influences is definitive world music for the millennium, and is perfectly captured on this infectious opening track, driven by the sublime kora (African harp-lute).

2. Juan Carlos Formell "Palo De Guayaba"
(From Songs from a Little Blue House, Wicklow 09026-63452-2)

This Cuban expatriate and son of Juan Formell (leader of the legendary Los Van Van) has re-invigorated the roots of Cuban music with modern compositions, a distinct world view, breathtaking melodies, and thoughtful lyrics—often, as here, concerning humans' troubled relationship with nature (and by implication, with each other).

3. Mary Jane Lamond "A Mhairi Bhoidheach"
(From Fire in the Kitchen, Wicklow 09026-63133-2)

Lamond's youthful discovery of the ancient Gaelic spinning songs that crossed the sea to her native Cape Breton aboard immigrant ships from Ireland and Scotland are what inspired her to become a singer. Performing here with members of the Chieftains, her passion and dedication to the Gaelic language comes shining through on every note.

4. Värttinä "Neitonen"
(From Vihma, Wicklow 09026-63262-2)

Ten members and seven albums strong, Värttinä have always been at the forefront of Nordic neo-folk. Based largely on the ancient folk music of Finland's storied Karelia region, Värttinä's style is ever evolving. With dense vocal harmonies and masterful playing, their sound is surprising, yet filled with infectious and instantly familiar melodies.

5. Yat-Kha "Kaldak-Kamar"
(From Dalai Beldiri, Wicklow 09026-63351-2)

The strange and beautiful "throat-singing" of Tuva has only recently found its way into the West, but even those familiar with its otherworldly tones will find something unique in the sound of Yat-Kha. Started in 1991 by Albert Kuvezin (a founder of Tuvan sensation Huun-Huur-Tu), the band has emerged as a brave new voice on the world-music scene.

6. Laurel MacDonald "Òran Na h-Eala"
(From Chroma, Wicklow 09026-63270-2)

With influences that run from avant-garde composition to medieval liturgical poems, Canada's MacDonald conjures up sounds that speak of the future but are rooted deeply in the past. Her cinematic journeys into Celtic mysticism have made her a favorite of modern dance groups and contemporary audiences alike.

7. Sacred System "Black Lotus"
(From Nagual Site, Wicklow 09026-63263-2)

The brainchild of New York dub producer and bassist Bill Laswell, Sacred System was conceived to explore the deep roots of Sufi mysticism in a thoroughly modern context. Featuring luminaries like Gulam Mohamed Khan of Pakistan's devotional qawwali tradition, and the inimitable Zakir Hussain on Indian tabla drums, this track is a sonic odyssey across worlds seen and unseen.

8. Alpha Yaya Diallo "Badenma"
(From The Message, Wicklow 09026-63407-2)

Growing up in Guinea, Diallo had the chance to study under some of West Africa's finest griots (oral historians and troubadours)—and guitarists. Featured here on both balafon (African xylophone) and guitar, his rock-solid rhythm playing shines through on this infectious Mandinka-culture workout.

9. Värttinä "Laulutyttö"
(From Vihma, Wicklow 09026-63262-2)

This song catches the Finns at their high-flying best, as the band's crackerjack playing and jazz-influenced arrangements provide the perfect counterpoint for the singers' incomparable four-part harmonies and classic good-time message.

10. The Bulgarian Voices Angelite
"Hei Lassie" (From Christmas in Rome, Wicklow 09026-63250-2)

From Grammy nominations to the world's greatest stages, this phenomenal choir has defined its own unique voice and made an indelible mark on the world of music. Their lilting Christmas carol here was specially commissioned for the album Christmas in Rome in collaboration with Paddy Moloney and the Vatican Choir and Orchestra.

11. Bill Laswell "Déjala En La Puntica/ Habana Transmission #2: Cuban Evolution" (From Imaginary Cuba: Deconstructing Havana, Wicklow 09026-63514-2)

Leave it to jack-of-all-styles Laswell to turn the recent American/Cuban music explosion on its head. Starting with a series of field recordings with the likes of Clave Guaguanco, Tat Guinnes, and Frank Emilio, Laswell took his tapes home to New York and emerged five months later from his Orange Studios with a totally cutting-edge take on Cuban rhythms.

12. Juan Carlos Formell "Mango Mangüey"
(From Songs from a Little Blue House, Wicklow 09026-63452-2)

With his instantly recognizable style, Formell has no problem making this Latin classic his very own—he even re-wrote the verse lyrics.

13. La Bottine Souriante "Le Lys Vert"
(From Fire in the Kitchen, Wicklow 09026-63133-2)

Without losing any of their distinct French-Canadian flare, this legendary Quebecois show band combines big-band jazz, Celtic reels, Cajun stomps, and even polkas into an unstoppable and heady musical stew. Joined here by members of the Chieftains, the resulting worldbeat big bang is a force that can't be denied.

Wicklow Records
www.wicklowrecords.com

Launched in the summer of 1997, Wicklow Records has a vision of a world brought closer together through music. Centered on the creative instincts of eminent musician/ producer/composer Paddy Moloney, the label present artists from around the world, giving them the opportunity to reach a broader audience. By developing a roster of both new and established artists performing traditional and contemporary styles, Wicklow is committed to breaking down barriers and bringing fans a wider world of music.

NO POSTAGE NESSESSARY
IF MAILED IN THE
UNITED STATES

BUSINESS REPLY MAIL

FIRST CLASS MAIL PERMIT NO. 1752 FARMINGTON HILLS, MI

POSTAGE WILL BE PAID BY ADDRESSEE

VISIBLE INK PRESS
MARKETING DEPARTMENT
PO BOX 9187
FARMINGTON HILLS MI 48333-9981

WITHDRAWN BY WILLIAMSBURG REGIONAL LIBRARY

WILLIAMSBURG REGIONAL LIBRARY
3 1688 00951 3149

Cover photo of Oumou Sangare
© Jack Vartoogian

"I would like to imagine that if I am deeply moved by a song originating from some place other than my own hometown, then I have in some way shared an experience with the people of that culture."

—David Byrne, from his foreword

All th
Time to get acquainted with its performers

WORLD

"Everybody knows the world has two types of music," quips David Byrne, "My kind, and everyone else's."

And here in the Western world we define "everyone else's" as world music, but the dichotomy is disappearing. It's a small world with a huge record collection. MusicHound World is the only travel guide your ears will need. It reviews and recommends thousands of CDs and provides pertinent bio and background information on 1,000 artists. You'll also discover styles, instruments and cultures in scores of informative sidebars and enjoy nearly 200 photographs (captured by the lens of renowned world music photographers, Jack and Linda Vartoogian).

Open the pages and explore the sounds of: King Sunny Adé • Altan • Marc Anthony • Beausoleil • Asha Bhosle • Mary Black • Bloque • Boukman Eksperyans • Eliza Carthy • Sheila Chandra • Cherish the Ladies • Elvis Crespo • George Dalaras • Gloria Estefan • Cesaria Evora • Peter Gabriel • Rubén González of the Buena Vista Social Club • Gyuto Monks • Huun-Huur-Tu • Irakere • Eileen Ivers • Flaco Jimenez • Kassav' • Salif Keita • Khaled • Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan • Klezmatics • Kodo • Fela Kuti • Ladysmith Black Mambazo • Yungchen Lhamo • Los Super Seven • Baaba Maal • Bob Marley • Ricky Martin • The Mighty Sparrow • Youssou N'Dour • Ozomatli • Maxi Priest • Virginia Rodrigues • Oumou Sangare • Márta Sebestyén & Muzsikás • Selena • Ravi Shankar • Sister Carol • The Skatalites • Tarika • Carlinhos Brown's Timbalada • Ali Farka Touré • Värttinä • Caetano Veloso • Walela • Papa Wemba • Yothu Yindi • Zap Mama, and many more

Newcomer or connoisseur, expand your CD collection with MusicHound World. We'll get you started with the MusicHound World disc from Wicklow Records, featuring the Chieftains, Värttinä, Alpha Yaya Diallo, Mary Jane Lamond and much more. With MusicHound World in hand, you'll successfully navigate this universe of incredible noise.

MusicHound means never singing the "Can't-believe-I-bought-that-CD blues" again.

FREE CD sampler from WICKLOW RECORDS

Music/Entertainment
ISBN 1-57859-039-6
$26.95 U.S.

ISBN 1-57859-039-6
52695
9 781578 590391